Hound Ex-Thief Going Straight

Prey of Crooks Who Know He Dare Not Refuse Demands.

Philadelphia.—The owner of the great drug store was on the point of bankruptcy. There had been a time when he had considered himself a good business man, capable of holding his own with the best. In the last year, however, something, he knew not what, had come over his capabilities. Something was wrong. He was not making any money; indeed, he was slowly slipping backward. And yet his methods of business had not changed from those employed during his money-making years.

The problem was incomprehensible. In his more prosperous moments the drug-store owner vowed that the finger of God was raised against him.

Then one day suspicion struck like an arrow into his breast. The drug clerk! He noticed that he had not rung up the full amount of a sale. A few days later a new employee—a detective—was installed in the store.

What amazing truths were revealed! A man would come into the store—one of a notorious neighborhood gang—and buy $10 worth of stuff, or maybe $20 worth. He would lay a dollar down upon the counter and say:

"Charge it!"

"But we sell only for cash," the clerk would reply.

"For a fine one to tell me what to do. A crook like yourself," replied the man grandiloquently.

An ashen pallor would attend to the face of the clerk. He did not dare say another word. With his nervous eyes glued upon the retreating form of the customer he would ring up the dollar in the register. The crooks and thieves of the underworld had learned that the drug clerk had once been crooked and that he was stealing from his employer, says the Philadelphia Record. What an opportunity for blackmail!

A Well-Recognized Evil.

Such are the way of the "vultures," a well-recognized and overgreedy class of crooks, according to Edward H. Bryant, detective. Sometimes they watch an employee whom they think dishonest until they catch him in the act of stealing. At other times they know the past of the clerk and threaten exposure and consequent ruin. Perchance the clerk has reformed and would return to the paths of righteousness, but the black and menacing past holds him rooted in his tracks. Imagine the fate of a shop or store when the vultures lay hold of it!

Sometimes this brand of crook works with a greater guile and cunning. Frequently he is a person of some position who, while maintaining an appearance of responsibility and usefulness, is a thief.

Consider the story of a large Philadelphia electrical wholesaler, an employee and an electrical contractor.

Mr. Manda did considerable business and bought all of his supplies from the large firm of Wire, Socket & Dowling, electrical wholesalers. For a time he was content to go along like any contractor, buying his goods, executing his jobs, taking a fair share of profit along with the others. But he wanted to outbid his competitors. He wanted to make more money.

In the course of his business relationship with the electrical wholesalers Mr. Manda had come to know almost every one in the whole establishment, from the president down to the old man who swept up around the place. Mr. Manda was very liberal with his gifts. He knew how to purchase good will and favor by dispensing cigars and other small tips. Every one knew him as a good fellow.

One man in the shipping room especially basked in the electrical contractor's beams of favor. One time he had dropped all other things to get out a rush order for Mr. Manda and had received a $5 tip in recognition of the favor. At other times he had done other small things for money—in short, he could be bought. Jarvis was one of those fellows who wavered upon the borderline between honesty and crookedness.

A Free Show.

One day Mr. Manda called into the shipping room and after greeting the entire force got Jarvis off to one side.

"My wife's sick," he confided. "I've bought a couple of tickets for a show tonight. How would you like to have one of them? Just a little favor, you know; you've done lots of things for me," explained the contractor.

Needless to say, Jarvis accepted the favor. That night found the two men in contiguous seats. During the intermission and following the show Manda tempted Jarvis.

"You're not making as much money as you ought to—doing the work you do for me. Why don't you make a little extra dough? I tell you what you do. Let me have some stuff and we'll fix up the thing between us! Nothing easier; they don't know how much stuff they have around that place. Their inventories are a joke."

Jarvis did not decide to the plan at once, but he was too weak-willed to resist long. A few days later one of Manda's trucks drove away from the electrical appliance wholesalers. Upon it was $300 worth of stuff, for which he had given up but 400 iron men, and the iron men didn't go to the wholesalers, either, Jarvis got them.

And so things went on. Manda's trucks bore away stuff every few days. In six months $8,000 worth of goods had been stolen. Then the detectives descended upon the crooks and their game was up. Jarvis, once he had allowed the first $500 worth of stuff to leave the place of the wholesalers, was completely in Manda's hands. Manda needed only to make threats to have his puppet jump as he willed. In a short time Jarvis was getting only ten cents on each dollar's worth of stuff removed. He could not squeal, he could not even give up his job, as he so often threatened, for Manda threatened exposure if he did so. He had sold himself body and soul to Manda.

Eight thousand dollars' worth of stuff cannot be removed even from the largest establishment without causing suspicion and Jarvis and Manda received their rewards.

Employ Corrupt Customer.

This was a case of a customer who corrupted an employee, but here is a true story of an employee who corrupted half a score of customers:

In the shipping room of a great automobile accessory establishment selling at wholesale to garage owners and supply stores, one Nolan held forth. He was an old employee and did pretty much as he pleased. Now, you can't always tell an honest man from a crook and Nolan, though no one suspected it, was an old fox.

Whenever a shipment was made up Nolan would include therein a few extra articles. If the customer was honest and wanted to return the stuff Nolan would say: "Never mind, just keep it and say nothing about it." Those who would take the extra articles and say nothing about them were tried further.

In this fashion Nolan drummed up about ten private customers of his own, who bought goods as low as ten cents on the dollar. In the end the company began missing stuff and detectives brought retribution upon the crooks. The customers were forced to make good to the extent of $7,500.

There have been a number of incidents within recent years of employees being planted in establishments by gangs of crooks. A very interesting case of this kind took place in a large textile manufacturing plant. The inventories began to show hundreds of dollars' worth of missing stuff. For months the detectives worked upon the mystery without getting the slightest clue that might lead to a solution. The stuff was not getting away via the shipping department, nor was it being taken out piecemeal by the employees. The detectives were unanimous upon this point. How, then, was it disappearing?

One day one of the sleuths working in the plant under the guise of an operator of a machine saw a bundle being thrown from a window. Some one on the street picked it up and disappeared down the street.

Subsequent developments showed that the man responsible for the articles stolen had a long criminal record, and that the gang with whom he was working had gotten away with thousands of dollars' worth of stuff from various establishments. The man was a very willing worker and took especial pains to ingratiate himself into the favor of the boss. He didn't let the whistle interfere with the completion of a job, neither did he watch the clock. The establishment thought they had a jewel of a workman until they found out differently.

This Is a Funny One.

Mr. Bryant declares that in all his years of experience with dishonest employees nothing ever so nearly developed into an opera bouffe as a case featuring the disappearance of bars of soap from a factory.

For weeks the loss of property was reported to the head of the concern. He employed every means at his command to fathom the mystery of the disappearing soap, but without avail. Then he turned the matter over to detectives. Men were placed in the shipping room, but they could find nothing wrong. All the soap delivered there was done up in cartons and was sealed and wrapped according to Hoyle. Then they turned their attention more closely to the other employees to learn whether they were carrying off the stuff in their dinner pails or by other means. Again there was nothing doing.

The detectives were at a complete impasse. They were beaten. Then one day an accident completely cleared up the mystery. It was dinner hour, and one of the detectives happened to be passing through the drying room. Suddenly he heard a tremendous racket in the yard beneath. Two women had come out to the rear of their dwellings and were staging a fierce battle. They seemed to be belting each other upon the heads with brooms, but, contrary to the rules of logic and common sense, neither of them fell unconscious to the ground. At closer inspection the detective was able to see that the women were merely slamming.

At the first sound of battle the employees of the soap factory had rushed to the windows. They enjoyed the thing with great glee, good humoredly shying bars of soap down on the heads of the combatants. By the time the women were exhausted and retreated to their houses 30 or 40 bars of soap were lying upon the ground.

The detective watched to see what would happen next in the yard below. When the one o'clock whistle blew and the soap people had resumed work, the women came out with baskets and garnered in the swag. A few hours later the detective saw the two women sitting together upon their doorstep chatting amicably.

Quarrel Was Make-believe.

The next day the detective led the owner of the plant to a window overlooking the yards of houses near by. Promptly at twelve o'clock the women rushed from their houses and began the spectacle of belting each other with brooms. And again the soap began to fly. Some months before the women actually had had a fight, and the profits from the soap thrown at them had been so large that they had decided to stage a combat every now and then for the profit of it.

A good detective brings creative thought and imagination to his work. Each case presents a new problem that must be solved in its own especial way.

Stamps for Stolen Seeds

Kansas City.—Some one's guilty conscience got the better of him, and S. Bryson Ayres, florist, received an anonymous letter with ten 2-cent stamps inclosed. The writer stated he had "helped himself to a half teaspoonful of seeds from Ayres' floral gardens at the edge of the field on Blue Ridge road." The stamps were in payment for the seeds.

Prospective Candidates.

Prospective candidates for the various county offices as reported to us are as follows:

Brack Sloan, R. A. Duran and Allie Stover Republicans for sheriff, and Eck McCamant, A. J. Coffey, Harry Straley, Bill Read, Newt Kemp and Jake Cole Democrats for for sheriff. We have also heard it said that Sherwood Corn would make a fine sheriff. As to Mr. Corn entertaining the idea of running for Sheriff we don't know, we are not sure of which party claims him, but we are under the impression he is a Republican. In case this is so in regard to his politics—Sherwood Humsido Duran, Allie Stover and Brack Sloan would in case either of these citizens received the nomination at their party's hand, it is a fore gone conclusion they would be hard to beat.

On the Democratic side, A. J. Coffey of Capitan is strong man, and is very popular with all who know him with few exceptions and would be Sheriff for all the people—no "big outfit" could over influence him. He comes from a family of sheriffs and he would run mighty strong—he knows how to meet the Hickory Shirt Boys and the Brass Collars too.

These other Democrats are considered strong men—have lots of friends and no doubt if any one of them were elected he would make a good sheriff.

It seems almost an assured fact that E. V. Hobbert of Carrizozo will ask for the Republican nomination for County Treasurer.

There is always a large class of people who like to hear news of this kind and we are playing no favorites and are merely saying nice things about all of these gentlemen.

A Constitutional Office.

The Attorney General's Office has ruled that the office of County Supt. of Schools is an elective office and not an appointive office and that 1923 Legislature acted contrary to the State Constitution when they incorporated in the new School Code that the School Superintendent should be appointed. Wonder if Mr. Brickley could smile a little for the audience.

Owners of Coffee Rooms Thrown Into the Sea

Coffee came first out of Arabia and Abyssinia, according to the best information available. The first reference to it in literature was made by Avicenna, a Mohammedan physician, who died in 1037. "It fortifies the members," he wrote; "it cleanses the skin and drives up the humidities that are under it and gives an excellent smell to all the body."

The "kaveh kanes" of Mecca were the first coffee houses. Kair Bey, the governor, discovered that those who met in the coffee houses discussed politics and religion, sometimes critically. So he ordered the kaveh kanes closed. The sultan at Cairo disapproved of the governor's indiscreet zeal and had him executed.

But in Constantinople, where plots against the oppressive government were hatched over the coffee, the public houses were closed and reopening meant that the proprietor was sewed in a sack and thrown into the Bosporus.—Detroit News.

Embarrassing Moment

A shy young hostess, in an effort to be genial, led aside the comparative stranger, whose name somehow eluded her.

"Look," she said, "I've paired you off with that lady in the corner. Will you take her in to dinner? My husband, naughty man, says she's a bit of an old frump, but she's got lots of money, and one of his clever friends has just married her for it, so we must be nice to her."

"I am sorry, madam," said the guest, "but I am the clever friend in question."

Metal Star Marks Spot Where Abe Lincoln Stood

In front of Independence hall in Philadelphia, stands a statue of George Washington. It replaces the marble statue of the great American which was placed there by the contributions of the school children of Pennsylvania.

The weather was causing the marble to disintegrate and for that reason it had been removed to a corridor on the second floor of the city hall. On the sidewalk, near the new statue, in front of the cradle of liberty, is a metal star which marks the spot where Abraham Lincoln stood to raise a new American flag during the Civil war. The body of Lincoln reposed in state in Independence hall during the period when it was being conveyed to its place of burial in Springfield. The bodies of Henry Clay, John Quincy Adams and others were accorded similar honor.—Detroit News.

Long Hike on Stilts

The people of the department of Landres, in France, mostly farmers and shepherds, spend the greater part of their lives on stilts, owing to the dampness of the soil and continuous floods. Naturally they become experts in their use. The stilts are strapped below the knees, the feet being fastened in a kind of stirrup raised five feet from the ground. A pole, which the stilt walker carries in place of the ordinary walking stick, serves as a rest, the user propping himself against it when halting. The women of the district are as skillful as the men in the use of stilts, and a courting couple striding off to their trysting place on stilts is a common sight. A famous stilt walker of the district, Silvain Dornon, a baker, walked on stilts from Paris to Moscow, a distance of 1,550 miles, in 59 days.

After your sleepless night from coffee drinking and your friends say it's all imagination, remember the sleepless night.

Also remember that Postum, the pure cereal beverage, contains nothing that can interfere with sleep. It has every desirable quality of a mealtime drink—cheering warmth, delightful flavor and wholesomeness that makes for health.

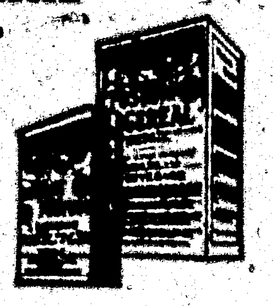
"There's a Reason"



Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum [in tins] prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal [in packages] for those who prefer the flavor brought out by boiling fifty-20 minutes. The cost of either form is about one half cent a cup.

New Mexico State Items

The cotton ginning season at Artesia closed last week with a total of 2,463 bales which was a little less than the highest estimate for the season. The total for the entire valley will run over 10,000 bales for the season. It is believed that this amount will be more than doubled this year.

The Chaves County League of Women Voters was organized at a big meeting held last week at the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce in Roswell, Miss Ruth McIntosh, regional secretary for the sixth region, president at the meeting and about fifty of the ladies of Roswell were present.

Miguel Vargas, a native farmer living in the vicinity of Malaga, passed away at the Sisters' hospital in Carlsbad as the result of a fall from a load of hay. Vargas was bringing the hay into Malaga and in some way fell from the top of the load and the wheels of the heavy wagon passed over his body.

The Layne-Interest operating the Spaulding dome oil well near Fort Sumner, have received all the eight-inch casing for the hole and drilling will again be resumed by the first of the month. Considerable trouble has been encountered at the well during the past two months and the drilling has progressed very slow.

Thomas Honey, one of the pioneer ranchmen of Clayton, together with oil men from Texas, is making plans to begin operations on the Cimarron field soon. It is known that the men associated in this deal have a large acreage located on a fine structure, and that negotiations are now under way to have a company drill for oil.

That illiteracy is one of the paramount problems of the day that is confronting the United States and is of importance to New Mexico, where the progress of the state is severely impaired by the large group of its citizens who are illiterates, was emphasized by Thomas V. Truder, assistant district attorney, in an address on "Americanism," before the Las Vegas Women's Club last week.

If the plans of J. B. Edwards of Sloton, Texas, are carried out Clovis will have a big cotton gin to take care of the 1924 crop. Mr. Edwards was in Clovis for several days looking over the ground and believes that there will be sufficient acreage to warrant the erection of a plant here. The matter of acreage and the cost of power will be gone over carefully and there is now every indication that the plant will be built.

According to reports of F. J. Eckman, agent for the Black Rock Zoni agency, the prospects for the crops during the year 1924 are splendid. Most of the wheat on the reservation has been planted and the Indians are now planning for the corn crop and there is now every indication of bumper crops in every line. The snows of the past winter have been abundant, and with the reservoir full of water there will be plenty of moisture in the soil the whole year.

An unusual number of teachers and students in the state are showing an early interest in the 1924 summer school of the Normal University, according to President Carroon. Something like 200 interested inquiries have been received thus far. Three thousand summer bulletins are now being distributed and the administration looks forward confidently to an attendance as large as can properly be cared for. The Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce has pledged its financial backing in case heavy enrollment requires a larger faculty than can be taken care of with the existing appropriation.

County Agent Ware of Alamogordo reports that the poultry industry in the county will nearly double during the coming year. Large shipments of both eggs and poultry are being made to El Paso and other large Texas cities.

The Silver City Home Protective Association is making plans to enforce the laws in every possible way in regard to the killing of does next year. It has been learned that twenty does were killed in the Gila country last fall and left in the woods.

A big campaign is soon to be started by the Las Vegas Chamber of Commerce for the raising of the $3,000 prize money for the Cowboys' reunion to be held this year. Previous years have found the association handicapped in staging the big three-day event due to the lack of prize money, and if the present plans are carried out this trouble will be eliminated during the coming year. The total cost of staging the big show each year is about $12,000, and it is urged that all contributions be made at the earliest date possible so that the necessary funds will be on hand at the time of the opening of the show.

The third annual meeting of the Eastern New Mexico Press Association was held last week in Clovis, all sessions being in the Elks' home. J. R. Hull presided over the meeting and many problems of the association were taken up and discussed by the many members present.

John Eastwood, consulting engineer of Oakland, Calif., has been engaged to prepare plans for the big irrigation dam which it is to be built for the Blue-water project, and an election will be held early in April to vote on the $60,000 bonds to cover the cost.

Defining the Oyster.

It is a winding cave in Bethlehem, beneath the Church of the Nativity, built over it by the Empress Helena and the Emperor Constantine. This cave is the supposed birthplace of Christ. FARM STOCK

FEEDING FLOORS ARE EASY TO CONSTRUCT

No farmer would deliberately bury in the ground feed intended for stock.

But many a farmer lets the stock do this. The old-fashioned method of feeding animals in the open, muddy barn lot really is only a way of letting stock tramp from 10 to 60 per cent of the feed into the ground.

Any farmer who uses this method knows how he has had to transfer the green feed or grain from one place to another as the stock have tramped the feeding lot into a muddy area where the feed is quickly ground into the earth and wasted.

Concrete feeding floors such as shown in the illustration eliminate this waste.

Thousands of concrete feeding floors have been built by farmers throughout the country in the last few years. Every one of them has paid for its cost in a short time in the value of the feed saved.

One of the advantages of the concrete feeding floor is its simple construction. A farmer will not need to have a contractor to do the job for him. With the aid of his regular farm help he can build it himself very cheaply.

All he needs to do is level a piece of ground as large as he wants the feeding floor, then prepare the concrete and lay it, just as he would do if he were laying several sidewalks side by side. It is not necessary even to lay a cinder or gravel base.

The right mix of concrete for a feeding floor is in the proportion of one sack of portland cement to two cubic feet of sand and 3½ cubic feet of crushed rock or pebbles. The sand should pass through a screen with a quarter-inch mesh. Pebbles should be clean and should be from ½ to 1½ inches in diameter.

In mixing concrete one should be sure to use good water. Water that is not fit to drink is not likely to be fit for mixing concrete—for impure water is likely to cause chemical reactions which will detract from the strength of the concrete.

A feeding floor will be one made of layers of concrete four inches thick. Planks two inches by four inches held in place by stakes, will serve as forms. If there is to be a curb around the edge of the floor, it should be extended about a foot below the ground level. This will prevent hogs from rooting under it and rats will not burrow under it.

After the concrete has hardened for several hours it should be covered with a layer of damp earth several inches thick. This should be kept moist by frequent sprinkling to prevent the concrete from hardening too rapidly.

It is easier to lay a concrete feeding floor in sections, about six feet by ten feet. This also enables the builder to provide expansion and contraction joints.

Successful Feeder Lives With His Flock of Sheep

Last year the writer learned of a feeder who failed to give his sheep the care necessary to make the most out of the feed given to them. This young man has a knowledge of the theory of feeding, having at one time taken a course in it. While, according to report, other feeders around him made a profit his loss amounted to $3,000.

Close attention is necessary. Regular cleaning of the feed bunks, good water and lots of it, clean bed, salt and kind individual treatment are essentials in feeding. The successful feeder lives with his animals, watches over them and is always ready to provide better feed and other favorable conditions. No one can instruct him exactly. He must learn the details by doing and love for his animals is the first requisite. Animals soon learn a good caretaker. They enjoy to see him come and as he moves among them they take pleasure in his presence.

Feeding live stock is not all theory. The practical is equally important and the man who succeeds must think about his animals and be always ready to do what is necessary.—R. W. Clark, Colorado Agricultural college.

Protection for Hogs in Severe Winter Weather

If given the opportunity, hogs will seek protection from severe cold weather by burying themselves in steaming manure heaps where the temperature seems just right to them. They come out of this steaming heap into the cold for their feed, remaining long enough to thoroughly chill. Besides, they may be found in burrows in the strawstack where often too high temperatures prevail. In such places they crowd badly.

Make Fall Pigs Profitable.

To make fall pigs profitable it is absolutely essential to make them comfortable. The fall pig must be handled very differently in winter as compared to the spring pig in summer because the conditions are so different.

Mangels for Cattle.

Mangels have been more generally grown for feeding to cattle because they stand well out of the ground, are easily cultivated and harvested and keep better in winter than do sugar beets.

Missing Persons Found

One metropolitan newspaper which conducts a "Missing Persons Department" reports that in 1,200 cases in which aid was requested in finding missing persons, 163 inquiries were successful and that many persons were reunited with their relatives and friends. It is said, however, that this does not represent the total of the missing who are found, as many of the responses are made direct to the inquirer and the cases do not become public.
