How To Help Your Town

Praise it.
Improve it.
Talk about it.
Write about it.
Trade at home.
Be public spirited.
Take a home pride in it.
Tell of its business resources.
Tell of its natural advantage.
Trade and induce others to trade here.
When strangers come to town, use them well.
Dont call your best citizens frauds and impostors.
Support local institutions that benefit the town.
Support a good fast base ball team of local players.
Look ahead of self when all the town is concerned.
Help your public officers do the most good for the most people.
Don't advertise in the local paper to "help the proprietor" but advertise to help yourself.
Let's get together and keep thingg moving, hustling all the time waiting for the good time coming for the old town. It is better to say that our town is on the hum than to keep telling it's on the bum
Le's try it.

Night Watchman Herrin Shoots And Fatally Wounds Man In a Quarrel At The Depot.

Last Sunday nighh between ten and eleven o'clock, Night Watchman Herrin of the E. P. and S. W. K. R. shot and fatally wounded Wm. Hart, an employe of the railroad pipe line in a row at the depot.

Hart, in company with four other pipe line men had come to Carrizozo to spend the day. They embibed of "booze" quite freely and at night went to the depot and after buying tickets for Coyote where they were employed, laid down to sleep in the waiting room. Here watchman Herrin found them while making his usual rounds. He awakened them and told them to sit up, a quarrel ensued. The men closed in around Herrin and he shot fatally wounding one. The men were arrested and in the trial held Wednesday Herrin was released under $1500 bond. One pipe line man was dismissed and the others held under $300 bonds.

Two Mexicans engaged in a stabbing affray, Thursday mornihg. They were brought before Justice Perry and fined $5 and costs.

GET OUT OF DOORS.

Trudeau's classic experiment points us in the right direction. After inoculating a number of rabbits with tuberculosis, he confined a number of them indoors and turned the others outdoors. The latter all recovered, while the former all died.

This experiment shows that a rabbit, living upon its natural food and under a natural environment, is proof against tuberculosis. There is abundant reason to believe this equally true of man.

In other words, tuberculosis is not a necessary evil of human life, but is a natural consequence of erroneous habits and departure from natural conditions. Man is naturally an outdoor animal. A mole lives a healthy life in a burrow. A man must live in the fresh air and the sunshine.—Medical Record.

Nogal Correspondence.

Nogal voted wet again and Mr J. P. Walker opened the saloon formerly occupied by Arthur May.

T. J. Moore is improving his property by building corrals, stables and wagon sheds.

Duke and Kelsey have gone into the poultry business very extensivly They have a very fine brand of chickens known as the E er Readys We speak for them a grand success.

The Vera Cruz mine has resumed operation again. We hope it will will continue. It gives employment to many of our people.

The big pump at the American mine is a hummer and the mine will soon be drained of water so that it can be worked again.

J. C. Bender has struck a vein of quartz in his mine ajoining the American mine which looks very promising, in fact it is exactly similer to the quartz in the rich streak found in the American mine. Mr. Bender is expecting to break into gold every shot.

—We now have on our exchange table the Southwestern Outlook, Formerly the Carrizozo Outlook, published at Carrizozo. The editor is Mrs. Anna M. DeBoer and he improved appearranse of the paper spells success. Thanks. It is our wish that the Southwestern Outlook shall no longer be identified with the old Outlook. We intend to deal honorably with the people and promised Mr Hall that we would advance the subscriptions for which he and Mr. Fred had collected cash in advance The amount of subscriptions we must advance under this contract amount to about $150. Is'tn that doing enough for the old managers and is it reasonable for them to expect us to divide the collections for the month of May, the month we took charge of the old office.

Owing to a mistake in counting out the blank papers last week not enough papers were printed to supply our many subscribers; and we are reprinting the first installment of the story that we began last week.

A plan to unite the Western states in a gigantic reclamation project has been started in Colorada by the chamker of commerce Congress will be asked for an appropriation of $25.000,000 and the petition will be brought to the attention of the National Irrigation Congress.

UNAFRAID.

Pausing in his labors the gravedigger refreshed himself with a nip from a black bottle. At that moment the minister passed by.

"Your action causes me pain," expostulated the minister. "Are you not afraid you will fill a drunkard's grave?"

The gravedigger smacked his lips twice, replaced the black bottle in his hip pocket, and replied:

"There is nothing to be afraid of, sir. I ought to know. I've filled many a one."

L. C. Berlow and Mrs Sears of Vera Crues Mines spent last Monday in Carrizozo.

"Happy Hosier" of Vera Cruz Mines spent a few days visiting friends in this city.

Mr and Mrs. E. W. Bell, Mr and Mrs. Anderson DeLacey and Mr and Ers Ira O. Wetmore left today for a fishing trip and short vacation in the mountains.

Dance at White Oaks.

The White Oaks Dancing Club, will give a Grand Ball at the skating rink Friday night, June 25th. Everybody come- Good music and refreshments at 12 o'clock.

Wm. Kelt, Sec. Treas.

Mrs Snow of Ft. Worth, Texas is visiting with her sisier, Mrs Jim Hubbard of this place.

Ira O Wetmore and wife returned to this city last Monday night.

The Lodge at Cloudcroft burned early last Sunday morning. It is said that the loss will be about $100,000. The guests escaped in their night clothes and found shelter in adjoining cottages. It is thought that the fire originated in a defective chimney. The lodge was owned by the El Paso and Southwestern R.R., and it is expected that it will be rebuilt upon a much larger scale.

Jack Morton, of Tucumcari, representing the Jackson Loan and Trust Company, of Jackson, Tenn., is doing considerable business in our city. Do you own a home? If not then consider their plan for secureing one and stop paying rent

Mr and Mrs Bash, Mrs Tomilinson, Mr. Jones and Miles and Elmer Jackson, all homsteaders and neighbors of ours from Oscura were transacting business in this city yesterday.

The Southwest is to have another railroad. The contract has been let for the construction of a line from Clovis, N. M. to Coleman, Texas. And there is talk of another that J.J. Hill will build to Dawson and connect with the Southwestern.

Thomas Henley of Nogal and Clement Hightower, U. S. Court Commissioner of Capitan were very pleasant callers Saturday afternoon Both gentlemen are prominent people of the southwest. Mr Henley has been a resident of Lincoln County for 17 years. He fought as a confederate soldier in the Civil war.

Secretary of the Interior Ballinger has just designated 270,000 a of land in New Mexico as coming under the provisions of the 320 acre homestead law. The lands are semi arid and while fertile must be farmed according to the dry farming methods. The government's idea in giving large farms is to made possible biennial farming. Soil should be broken up and cultivated and the moisture conserved for the next year's crop. Such farming is being done with splendid results in the semi-arid districts of Montana and Colorado.

Editorials

The rejection of Christ as King in the two chief functions of the state, in business and politics has wrought almost incalculable harm.

In a conversation with a very prominent business man some time ago he declared that the golden rule and the method of Jesus were simply impossible in the business world of today and that the man who tried it would be forced to the wall. In the place of the rule of love in business they have accepted Barrabas in the shape of the rule of David Harum: "Do unto the other fellow as he would do to you and do it first."

The rejection of the golden rule has given to us the remorseless methods of the great corporations. No one can read the history of their movements without knowing that the golden rule was the last rule of their operations.

Not long ago a man in Chicago was arrested for stealing a loaf of bread for his starving children. What right have we to complain when we see men who have corrupted courts, bribed legislatures juggled with their accounts and misappropriated millions, go untouched and unpunished. There is no hope for our country until we dethrone David Harum and his pagan rule and reenthrone Jesus and the Golden rule as the law of business life.

Jesus is not a discredited economist. Jesus is not an outclassed social teacher. Jesus is not a blind enthusiast. The issue is clearly drawn today and it is simply this;

Whether the spirit of Christ shall be king in our modern business world or whether we shall continue to serve the devil and reap his prolific harvest, a harvest of criminals ranging from the respectable highwayman on Wall street to the petty thief and sandbagger, a harvest of destroyed confidence in our commercial system and a harvest of jails destroyed homes and shipwrecked lives.

A score or more of young girls at Beaverville, Ind., have formed a league to promote refinment among young men, and among other things have resolved to marry no man who drinks, smokes or chews and who does not take the home paper.

Drinking is considered the chief evil smoking and chewing come next while the young woman assert that when a man does not take the home paper it is evidence of a want of intelligence and that he will will prove to stingy to provide for a family, educate his children and encourage institutions of learning in the community.

We sometimes wonder if newspaper people genely appreciate the old subscriber at his true value. We mean the old standby who takes the home paper year after year, through evil as well as through good report, and pays his subscription regularly just the same as he would any other honest debt. As a general thing the old subscriber is patient and slow to wrath. He will overlook many little slights from the editor, slights which the man who borrows his neighbors paper would not stand for a minute.

CHAPTER I.

Carrington folded the document and thoughtfully balanced it on his palm. What an ironical old world it was! There was a perpendicular wrinkle about his nose, and his lips had thinned into a mere line which drooped at the corners. The drone of a typewriter in the adjoining room sounded above the rattle-tattle of the street below. Through the open windows came a vague breath of summer redolent of flowers and grasses; for it was but eleven o'clock of the morning, and the smell of sun-baked brick and asphalt had not yet risen through the air. Far beyond the smoking, ragged sky-line Carrington could see the shifting, glittering river and the great ships going down to the sea. Pregnantly the ashes from his dead cigar fell in a gray cascade down his coat and tumbled across his knees, but he gave no heed.

Ironical old world, indeed! Here, suddenly and unexpectedly, he found himself upon the battlefield of love and duty, where all honest men find themselves, sooner or later. To pit the heart against the conscience, impulse against calculation! Heigh-ho! Duty is an implacable goddess, and those who serve her most loyally are most ruthlessly driven. She buffets us into this corner and into that, digs pitfalls for the hesitant foot, and crushes the vacillating.

As all men will, Carrington set about to argue down his conscience; the heart is an insistent counselor. Why should he give up the woman he loved, simply because duty demanded he should? After all, was not duty merely social obligation? What was it to him that the sheep were sheared? Was it right that he, of all men, should divide the house, throw the black pall of dishonesty over it, destroy his own happiness and hers, when so simple a thing as a match would crumble into nothingness this monument to one man's greed and selfishness? The survival of the fittest; if he put aside Self, who would thank him? Few, and many would call him a fool or a meddler. So many voices spoke that he seemed to hear none distinctly.

He alone had made these astonishing discoveries; he alone had followed the cunningly hidden trail of the serpent. He could stop where he was and none would be the wiser. To be sure, it was only a question of time when the scandal would become public through other channels; but in that event he would not be held responsible for bringing about the catastrophe. Besides, the ways of the serpent are devious and many, and other investigators might not come so close to the trail.

He had gone about his investigations without the least idea where they would lead him. At the beginning he had believed that the guilty ones were none higher than petty officials; but presently he found himself going over their heads, higher and higher until, behold! he was at the lair of the old serpent himself. A client had carelessly dropped a bit of information, and it had taken seed with this surprising result. Henry Cavenaugh, millionaire promoter, financier, trust magnate, director in a hundred money-gathering concerns; Henry Cavenaugh, the father of the girl he loved and who loved him! Could it be he, indeed? It seemed incredible.

It was not a case of misappropriation of funds, such as a man may be guilty of when temporarily hard pressed. It was a bold and fraudulent passing of dividends that rightfully belonged to the investors; of wrongfully issuing statements of bolstered assets, lack of markets, long strikes (promoted by Cavenaugh and his associates), insufficient means of transportation. An annual dividend of seven per cent. of many millions that had been dishonestly passed over. The reports that there would be no dividends encouraged a slump in the listed price of the stock, and many had sold under par value, thereby netting to Cavenaugh and others several millions. And the proof of all this lay in his hands!

It had been a keen hunt. Many and many a blind trail had he followed, only to come back to the start again. All that now remained for him to do was to pass this document on to the hands of the intrepid district attorney, and justice would be meted out to the guilty.

Her father! The picture of him rose suddenly and distinctly in his mind. Tall, powerfully built, a hooked nose, keen blue eyes, an aggressive chin, a repellent mouth, Henry Cavenaugh was the personification of the modern Croesus. Immutable in purpose, dogged in perseverance, a relentless enemy, a Jesuit in that the end always justified the means, he stood a pillar in the world of finance, where there is sometimes justice, but never any mercy. Thirty-five years before he had been a messenger in a stock broker's office. Of his antecedents nothing was known until he broke one of the famous gold corners in the seventies, when a handsome, ruddy, cheeked little Irishman bobbed up serenely from nowhere in particular and claimed to be the great Cavenaugh's father. But his proofs were not convincing, and when the son showed a decided contempt for him, he gently subsided into oblivion and was heard of no more. From time to time Carrington gathered a small group of information regarding his sweetheart's grandfather; but whenever he broached the subject, however tactfully, everybody concerned headed the conversation for a different port.

Carrington had never laid eyes on the old gentleman, and, for all he knew to the contrary, he might be a myth. He reasoned that in all probability the grandfather was illiterate, uncouth, and rather an awkward piece of family furniture to handle, when the family proper were ingratiating themselves into the Chippendales of society. Unfortunately, Mother Cavenaugh, good hearted and amiable in her way, had been stung by the bee of the climbers and her one ambition was to establish herself and daughters in society; and had not he, Carrington, come of an aristocratic family (poor, it is true) the doors of the Cavenaugh mansion would never have opened to his knock. Even as it was, he was persona non grata to the millionaire, who was mad for a duke in the family. Besides C. Cavenaugh had his suspicions of any lawyer who grubbed outside the breastworks.

Some doves circled above a church spire a few streets over the way, breaking the sunbeams against their polished wings. Finally they settled on the slate roof and fell to strutting and waddling and swelling their breasts pompously. Carrington opened and re-read the document, but he did not take his eyes from the doves. What should he do? What ill wind had blown this thing into his doorway? Nothing had warned him of the impending tangle. Until two days ago Cavenaugh was at the other end of the world, so far as his investigations at that time were concerned.

He struck a match. The silver of pine flared palely in the sunshine, writhed and dropped, black and charred, to the floor. He shrugged his shoulders. Chivalry of this sort was not the order of the day. There was something stronger than the voice of duty, something stronger than the voice of the heart; it was the voice of pity, which urged its appeal for the hundreds of men and women who had invested their all in the Cavenaugh lay the whole thing very clearly before the girl herself, and whatever decision she made, he would stand or fall by it, for he knew her to be the soul of honor.

Poor girl! It was a heart-breaking business. How in the world should he begin, and where should he stop? Ah, that was it! He would lay the matter before her in a manner that would conceal the vital nearness of the case, as if it were some client of his who was unknown to her. And when she judged the case, he would speak the bald truth. It would be a cruel blow, but nevertheless he must deal it. She loved her father, and after his own peculiar fashion her father loved her. She was the only one in the family who could wheedle him out of a purpose; to the rest of the family his word was law immutable. It was very hard, sighed Carrington, concerns. The thought of their ultimate ruin, should Cavenaugh be permitted to pursue his course unchecked, bore heavily upon him. No, he could not do it. He must fight, even if he lost his all in the battle. It is a fine thing to right a wrong. All the great victories in the world have been won for others than the victors. That Cavenaugh was the father of the girl he loved must have no weight on the scales of justice.

Resolutely he thrust the document into his coat pocket, closed his desk and relighted his cigar. In that moment he had mapped out his plan of action. That very night he would [illegible] for the father he had neither pity nor sympathy; there were many ugly tales about his financial dealings; but his whole heart went out unreservedly to the girl.

When Carrington had gone to Cavenaugh's, his heart in his throat, to speak to his relative to his daughter's hand he unwittingly knocked off the top of a volcano.

"Marry my daughter?" Cavenaugh roared, emphasizing his wrath and disapproval with a bang of fist upon palm. "My daughter shall marry only among her equals, not among her inferiors. A king is not good enough for my Kate." There was another bang of the fist, decided and final. "A lawyer? Not if I know myself. I wouldn't trust a lawyer out of sight," bluntly. "Kate shall marry a duke or a prince, if I can find one suitable."

Carrington would have smiled had the moment been less serious.

"No man can possibly appreciate her worth more readily than I, sir," he replied, "or love her more dearly."

"Love?" with a snort. "Twaddle out of story-books!"

"But you yourself love her."

"I'm her father," Cavenaugh returned complacently, adding a gesture which had the effect of describing the fact that it was perfectly logical for a father to love his daughter, but that it wasn't logical at all for any other man's blind to love her.

"I am sorry," said the disheartened suitor, rising. "I suppose that after this unpleasant interview—"

"Oh, you're a decent sort," interrupted Cavenaugh generously; "and if you are of a mind to behave yourself here after, you will always find a chair at my table. But my daughter is not for you, sir, emphatically not. That is all, sir;" and Cavenaugh picked up his evening paper.

After such a rebuff, most young men would have given up. But Carrington never gave up till there was no possibility of winning. Immediately after the interview he went to the higher court with his appeal.

"Let us have patience," the girl whispered. "I'll undertake to bring him to reason."

But Carrington went home that night without his love for the father increasing any.

And so the matter stood at the present time. The affair had gone neither forward nor backward.

Ah, were he less honest, how easily he could bring the old curmudgeon to terms! There was that in his pocket which would open the way to the altar quickly enough. But Carrington was manly and honest to the core, and to him blackmail stood among the basest of crimes. Many times during the past 48 hours the tempter had whispered in his ear that here was a way out of his difficulties; but the young man had listened unmoved.

During the summer and autumn months of the year the Cavenaughs lived at their country place over in New Jersey, and there Carrington spent the week-ends. There were horses to ride, golf and tennis, and a Saturday night dance at the country club. To be with the girl you love, even if you can't have her, is some compensation. Cavenaugh never joined the fetes and sports of the summer colonists, but he offered no objections to the feminine members of his household for selecting Carrington as their escort for the week-ends. Indeed, by now he began to consider Carrington as a harmless, sensible, well-groomed young man, who relieved him of all the painful duties to the frivolous. If the colonists insisted on coupling his daughter's name with Carrington's, let them do so; when the proper moment came he would disillusionize them. For himself, he always had some good old crony down to while away the dull Sundays; and together they consummated plans that gave the coup de grace to many a noble business galleon. This particular summer there were no dukes or princes floating around unattached and Cavenaugh agreed that it was a commendable time to lay devices by which to ambush the winter money.

There were nights when Cavenaugh did not sleep very well; but of this, more anon.

Shortly after his determination to tell Kate half a truth, Carrington left the office and made an early train into New Jersey. All the way over to the Cavenaugh station he was restless and uneasy. The fatal papers still reposed in his pocket. He had not dared to leave them in the office safe; his partner, who had had no hand in the investigation, might stumble across them, and that was the last thing in the world he desired. He knew not exactly what to do with them; for they burned like fire in his pocket, and seemed to scorch his fingers whenever he touched them to learn if they were still there. A thousand and one absurd suppositions assailed him. Supposing, for instance, there should be a wreck; supposing he should be robbed; supposing he should leave his vest on the links; and so forth and so forth. It was very depressing. If only he stood in the room, unhandicapped; if only he might throw the gauntlet at Cavenaugh's feet the moment that well

NOTHING DOING.

"I want to undertake a three weeks' trip. What salary would you give?"

"I can't afford any salary. But I don't mind paying for your keep!"

A GREAT MORAL LESSON.

"Why did they give that defaulter so heavy a sentence for taking such a small amount? Why, he had the chance of stealing thousands."

"That's what they did it for—to teach him a lesson about being a piker when he had the chance of his life to be a financier."
