A postoffice permit has been allowed with Claranoe R. Jeffries as postmaster The postoffice building will be erected at once and several other important building contacts have been let.

Sheriff C. A. Stevens, County Treasurer, Dr. H. W. Watson and Mr. Hunt have acquired tad entire stock the Carrizoco Automobile Co. and are arranging to give good auto service to the public between Carrizozo and all inland points at reasonable prices. This enterprize deserves the loyal support all citizens as its establishment will result in invaluable service to the community.

The Commercial Metal Company of Carrizozo, has been incorporated for the purpose of developing great deposits of ore in the west slope of the White Mountains, six miles southeast of Carrizozo. The movement in the enterprise is George C. Hopkins, the well known promoter who says the Company has 60,000 tons of ore in sight with high values in copper and lead.

Carrizozo, is a pretty industrious little city at present and the unlimited mining resources of the surrounding mountains are coming into greater prominence then ever before. The rich Sacrameto valley has wonderful agricultural resources which are also coming into development and the day is rapidly approaching when every acre of land will be tilled and the country will be populous and prosperous.—Spec. to Cor. The attention of the Department has been called to the last clause of paragraph 41 of the mining regulations, aproved March 29, 1909, which provides as follows:

"The vein or lode must be fully described, the description to include staatement as to the kind and character of mineral, the extent thereof, whether ore has been extracted and of what amount and value and such other facts as will support the applicants' allegation that the claim contains a valuable mineral deposit."

It seems that the expression, "the extent thereof" is being construed as meaning that the applicant must affirmatively show by proof of exploration that the vein exists in fact throughout the whole length of the claim.

This construction of the paragraph is erroneous. By the words quoted it was intented to require the claiment to show the existence of a vein in such workings as he relied on to establish a discoveay.

By the extent of the vein was meant its size and quality as disclosed. That being done, the presumption exists that the vein extends on its strike throughout the whole length of the claim as located.

The sole purpose of that part of paragraph 41 quoted was to enable the land department to know, so far as applicant can reasonably show, the definite facts upon which the right to the patent is predicted so as to determine whether a valuable mineral deposit exists in the land claimed.

It is a courtesy that you owe your guests to see that their names appear in the local newspaper. It is due to your friends and yourself that when visiting, the fact should be noticed in the paper. Someone in the family should inform the newspaper of sickness in the home. Remember that a newspaper is made by very human hands and brains, and if the item concerning yourself does not appear, it is largely your fault. No newspaper worker is omnipresent, and a very few are telepathic readers.

The long looked for, refreshing rain has visited our neighbors, Capitan, Bonito, and Ruidoso, but we are still in doubt as to what will become of this part of the dountry.

Mr L. A. Huss has again been employed by the railroad to tramp the lake to stop the leakage. Mr. Hust gets so much per head of cattle, and as he herds them on soot, the railroad comdany pays him the same as any cow.

Mr Frank Collins who is hauling coal for the American Mine has moven his good wife and children to a camp in the mountains where they will soon regain their health.

This newspaper wants a correspondent from every town in Lincoln county. The Southwestern Outlook shall be a newspaper devoted to the interests of all the people. Surely there is in every community one citizen who is public spirited enough to boost for his town.

A would be lawyer from Oklahoma came into our office one morning last week in a rage and said he would "fix the newspapers" because we would not pay an account that he is owing us. After talking loud enough to raise the roof he staggered to his office and wrote out an unlawful summons for our appearence in court but he had the costs to pay even if he is "a good republican" This man's son was recently deposed as editor.

A party of automobilists were traveling across Norun Dacota, where the Swedes composed a large proportion of the population. Conserve the Land

Along with the conservation of forests, waters, fuels minerals and other natural resources, which has taken hold of this country suddenly and forcibly, is the paramount question of conserving the land.

Probably sooner tnan the question of fuel or minerals will the question of providing land for onr population be upon us. It is true beyond dispute that no longer can the farmers of evan the middle west afford to purchase homes for their sons as they grow into manhood, because the price of land is becoming too high. The young farmer of today is migrating to the west to New Mexico, to Arizona, to Texas and to the bleak wheat lands of Canada, always searching for cheap lands. Tne government is now alotting the very last of the agricultural Indian lands for many years to come, and before the present generation is many years older, land will double and treble in value.

By the conservation of farming lands, intensive agricultural methods, smaller acreages and a wider variety of crops, many more people can be accomodated in this country than at present, but it must be remembered that this conservation policy which is already being adopted on a small scale by wise farmers will result in boosting the price of every acre of land in the country.

The children of the present generation who will want cheaper lands as the younger people of today want them, must perforce seek fields anew.

It is interesting to read the advice given to the big men of today to the youth of this country. Some advocate learning a trade, Some give preference to commercial pursuits, some say simply, save your earnings, and others say begin small and grow. But the best advice to any young man today is buy land.

It matters not much where or what the land may be, the next twenty years will see all land in this country with a settled market value and good land will be priceless. This is the golden age in the ownership of land and the better the land today, the more it will be worth tomorrow.

The young father of today who does not desire to see his children struggling for a foothold on a new continent and in a strange country fifty years from now can make no better provision than to buy land.

There are thousands of acres of land all kinds of land in the southwest today which can be bought cheap and which is growing in value surely and steadily. "Have you got yours?"

—Albuquerque Citizen.

A Small Thing Singly But we Can't afford the Aggregation

Editor Southwestern Outlook
Carrizozo, N. M.

Dear Sir:

Your first issue of the Outlook just received. It is a great improvement on the old paper, and I hope you can keep it up to this standard.

When I landed in Carrizozo, Aug 1, 1907, I paid for the Outlook for one year, and later on I took one share of stock for $10. When I left in May, 1907, I told Mr Rose that I did not buy the stock for investment bnt only to help start the paper, so I gave him my share of stock for so many years subscription. Mr Rose will remember the transaction and I hope you will credit me by the subscription.

My wife's health has very much improved since she came to a lower altitude, but I would love to go back to Carrizozo again. Hope the town is still growing. Remember me to all my friends, especially those of the M. E Church.

Yours Truly
B. B. Bagby M. D.

The above is a very nice letter and we are sure the gentleman's friends will be very glad to hear from him and his estimable wife, however we are under no obligations whatever to pay the debts of Mr. Rose. This letter is only one of many letters we are receiving in regard to the business transactions of Mr Rose. The only supscription accounts we promised to assume were those turned over to us by Ray Hall, our immediate predecessor, and we are sorry we promised to assume evan those because he doctored up the list so much that we are the losers. If he put your name on the free list please ask him and his father, the would be lawyer to turn over the amount they collect to us.

An old darkey wanted to join a fashionable city church, says the Christian Register, and the minister knowing it was hardly the thing to do, and not wanting to hurt his feelings, told him to go home and pray over it. In a few days the darkey came back. "Well what do you think of it by this time?" asked the preacher. "Well sah, replied the colored man, "Ah prayed an' prayed an', the good Lawd, he said to me: 'Rastus, ah wouldn't bodder mah haid about dat no mo. Ah've b'en trying to git into that church mase'f for de last twenty yeahs, an' ah aint done had no luck.'"

If you sell groceries to Mr. Smith it is only natural that Mr. Smith should expect you to buy meat in his shop. Isn't that perfectly fair?

Well then, if you earn your living in Carrizozo, is it unfair to expect you to spend what you can of it here? Many of those who do their shopping out of town do so thoughtlessly.

If your brother sells furniture you wouldn't go into El Paso store to buy a chair just because it looks pretty and cheap in the show window, would you? Wouldn't you say to yourself: "My brother can buy just as cheap. I couldn't think of getting it from any one else."

If you have to live and earn a livelihood in Carrizozo, every other person who is similarly situated is your brother. He can get it for you just as cheap, no matter what it is. REMEMBER THIS.

THE BEST MAN

(Copyright, by Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

Ah, if he had only attended to his own affairs! But he hadn't; and his inquisitiveness had plunged him into a Chinese tangle from which there seemed to be no exit. But there was an exit, only, if at that moment Cassandra had whispered the secret into his ear, it would have appealed to him as the most improbable thing under the sun. Moreover, there are no trustworthy Cassandras these sordid days; a single look into the future costs a dollar; and as for Greek choruses, they trundle push-carts on the East side.

He had broken bread and eaten salt at Cavenaugh's table and now it was decreed that he must betray him. It was not a pleasant thought. And still less pleasant was the thought of telling Kate (in a roundabout fashion, it is true) that her father was not an honest man. According to financial ethics, what Cavenaugh did was simply keen business instinct; nothing more. If you or I should happen to bend an odd cornice of the majestic pillar of law we'd be haled off to the county jail forthwith; but if we possessed the skill to smash the whole fabric, or, rather, to continue the metaphor, the whole pillar, the great world would sit up and admire us. What are old laws for, anyhow? Build you never so wisely your law, there will always be some one to come along and tack on a nice little amendment, subtly undoing in a moment what it took years of labor to accomplish. In this instance Cavenaugh had been careless; he had forgotten to introduce his amendment. An infinitesimal grain of sand will stop the best regulated clock. The infallible invariably die on the heels of their first victory.

On leaving the train, Carrington espied the Cavenaugh station carriage. The coachman was talking to a little wiry old man, whose gray eyes twinkled and whose complexion was mottled and withered like a wind-fall apple. Seeing Carrington draw nigh, the coachman touched his hat respectfully, while the little old man, who was rather shabbily dressed, stepped quickly around the corner of the platform. Evidently he did not wish to be inspected at close range. Carrington threw his suit-case and golf-bag into the carriage, and followed them. Thereupon the coachman touched the horses lightly, and they started westward at a brisk trot.

"Who's your friend?" asked Carrington, who, though never familiar, was always friendly toward his inferiors.

"He's no friend of mine, sir," answered the coachman, with well-bred contempt. "Miss Cavenaugh directed me to drive you straight to the club, sir."

"Very well," replied Carrington, lighting a cigar and settling back among the cushions.

Immediately he forgot all about the shabby old man, and began to inventory his troubles. He must hide the papers somewhere. All the evidence he had, together with the names of the witnesses, was on his person; for in making the whole he had prudently destroyed the numerous scraps. If this document fell into alien hands, the trouble would double itself. He pulled quickly at the end of the cigar put a smart on his tongue. He had nothing to do but wait.

On the steps of the club's porte-cochere he was greeted by Miss Cavenaugh, who was simply and tastefully dressed in white, at there was a sudden cardiac disturbance in Carrington's breast, the girl's tender beauty certainly justified it. The fresh color on her cheeks and lips, the shining black hair that arched a white forehead, the darkly fringed blue eyes, the slender, rounded figure, the small feet and shapely hands, all combined to produce a picture of feminine loveliness warranted to charm any masculine eye. Let the curious question Cavenaugh's antecedents, if they were so inclined, though Carrington here was abundant evidence of what a certain old poet called the splendid corpuscle of aristocracy.

Her sister went by the concrete name of Norah. She was 17, a bit of a tomboy, but of the same build and elegant carriage that distinguished Kate from ordinary mortals; only Norah's eyes were hazel-tinted and her hair was that warm brown of the heart of a chestnut burr. She was of merry temperament, quick to like or to dislike, and, like her sister, loyal to those she loved. Both girls possessed that uncommon gift in women, the perfect sense of justice. You never heard them gossiping about anybody; and when a veranda conversation drifted toward scandal, the Cavenaugh girls invariably drifted toward the farther end of the veranda. All the men admired them; they were such good fellows.

The mother of the girls was, as I have remarked, good-natured and smiling, inclined toward shortness, and a willing listener to all that was going on. She considered it her bounden duty to keep informed regarding the doings of her intimate friends, but with total lack of malice. At this moment she occupied her favorite corner on the club veranda, and was engaged in animated tittle-tattle. She nodded and smiled at Carrington.

Norah was playing tennis. She waved her racket at the new arrival. Carrington was her beau-ideal.

He hurried into the dressing room and shortly reappeared in baggy flannels. He was a sturdy chap, not at all handsome, but possessing a countenance full of strong lines. He inspired your trust and confidence, which is far better than inspiring your admiration.

"I am not going to play to-day," said Kate, "so I'll follow over the course and watch you play. I haven't seen you for a whole week; and I can't talk and play, too," smiling.

"Forward, then!" cried Carrington, beckoning to his caddy.

He played a nervous, fidgety game that afternoon. Every time he teed his ball the document spoke from his pocket with an ominous crackle. There was not one brilliant stroke to his credit. This puzzled the girl, for only the previous week he had been runner-up in the annual tournament for crack amateurs. He made the ninth hole indifferently, then turned to the girl, smiling whimsically.

"You are not playing up to your form to-day, John," she observed.

"I admit it," he replied, tossing his club to the caddy, who, well-versed in worldly affairs, serenely shouldered the bag and made off toward the club house. "My heart isn't in the game, Kate. The fact is, I'm in a peck o' trouble." He determined to tell her at once. There might not be another opportunity like this.

"Why, John!" reproachfully.

"Oh, it came only yesterday. I haven't been hiding it. I'm in a kind of pocket, and can't exactly see my way out. I want your advice; and you must be the jury and judge rolled into one."

They were standing on a hill, so far away they could see the pale line where the shimmering summer sea met the turquoise bowl of heaven.

"Tell me what your difficulty is, John, and I will judge it the best I know how."

He never knew what a simple beautiful name John was till it fell from the lips of this girl. Many called him Jack; but only his mother and this girl called him John. He motioned toward the sandbox, and they sat down. The other players were well scattered about, out of hearing. He made out his case skillfully enough, giving his plaintiff and defendant fictitious names. The thing grew so real to him, as he went on that toward the end he rose to the dramatics. The girl listened, but with never a glance at him. Rather her gaze roved over the dancing gray waters and followed the lonely white sail that stood out to sea. And when he reached the climax, silence of some duration fell upon them.

"Should this man be punished?" he asked at length.

"He is guilty; he has broken two laws, the civic and human. Oh, the poor people!" pathetically. "They are never at peace; the wolf harries them, and the jackal; they are robbed, beaten and spurned. They are like sheep, not knowing how to fight. They arrest a man for his poverty; they applaud him for his greed. It is all very wrong."

The sail fell under the shadow of a cloud, and they both watched it till it flashed into the sunlight again.

"A woman's intuition is sometimes abnormally keen. You are strong enough to fight such things without the advice of a woman. Is there not something vital to me in all this? Is it not—is it not my father, John?"

Santa Fe, N. M., April 22, 1900.

Notice is hereby given that on the 13th day of April, 1900, in accordance with Section 28, Irrigation Law of 1907, A. M. Patten, of Denver, Colo., made application to the Territorial Engineer of New Mexico for a permit to appropriate from the public waters of the Territory of New Mexico.

Such appropriation is to be made from Bull Gap, Water Canon and other arroyos at points from which the NW corner of Sec. 19, Twp. 9 S, Range 9 E, bears 49° E, 5520 feet.

By means of diversion and storage 9000 ac. feet is to be conveyed to Secs. 16, 18, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 29, 30, 27, 31, 32, all in Twp. 9 S, Range 9 E.

By means of ditches, reservoir, etc.: and there used for irrigation of 5,000 acres.

All persons who may oppose the granting of the above application must file their objections, substantiated by affidavits (properly blanked) with the Territorial Engineer on or before four weeks from date of last publication hereof.

Vernon L. Sullivan,
5-7 Territorial Engineer.

STILL SERIOUS.

"I thought you expected Mr. M--- here to-night," said he, looking over her guests. "Why didn't he come?"

"He sent me word he was marrying to-night," she answered.

"Why should he stay away for a small matter like that?" asked he. "This is his third marriage, isn't it?"
