Lincoln's Address at Gettysburg

Though printed every year all over this great land of ours, the beautiful words of Abraham Lincoln at Gettysburg will never become old to the American people; nor can any true American read them without a feeling of reverence for our dead hero, and a feeling pride that he, too, is an American.

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who gave their lives that that nation might live It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we connot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add to or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they, who fought here, have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining for us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

Need New Histories.

Historians are a conservative set. Some day they will come around to giving New Mexico's first settlers some credit as pioneers fully as brave and a good deal earlier than the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, or the English at Jamestown. The school histories the future in addition to pages on the mounds in the Ohio valley will find room for telling of the cliff dwellings of the southwest, and of the Pueblo Indians who had towns and farms in the Rio Grande valley even in the days of discovery of the Northmen who antedated Columbus by half a thousand years.—Santa Fe New Mexican.

Folk a Suffragette.

"Yes, along with the initiative and referendum and the recall system state and municipal government. I believe firmly in woman suffrage," says ex-Governor Folk of Missouri, in an interview in the St. Paul Pioneer Press. "Woman Suffrage could not help but be beneficial in municipal, state and nation politics. It will not only raise the social and economic status of women themselves, but it will make for cleaner and better politics."

Professor Todd is positive that civilization in Mars is far in advance of our own modern civilization.

NATIONAL GEOLOGIST VISITS WHITE SANDS

Secures Samples of the Famous Alamogordo White Sands for the Geological Bureau at Washington—Hears Story of Extinct Crater—Some Other Things Not Generally Known.

Edward E. Free of the Geological Bureau at Washington visited Alamogordo last Saturday and Sunday for the purpose of securing samples of the white sands near this place. The trip to the sands was made Sunday in company with Col. J. R. DeMier and a quantity of samples were secured and shipped to Washington.

Mr Free made no special statements, nor authorized anything for publication as coming from him as a geologist in the sercice of the Unted States.

In conversation with Mr. Free it was learned that, so far as is known to geologists, there is no other deposit of white sands in the world like those near Alamogordo.

Mr. Free learned from us the Indian story of the extinct crater north of the white sands, and the probable changing of the Rio Grande river from its source down this valley to the west side of Organ and San Andreas mountains by reason of the volcanic eruption.

Mr. Free also obtained from us the evidence of the one time timber on our foothills, the pieces of Aztec pottery, and the facts concerning the ancient cemetery nere here, which the editor has visited, and with his own hands taken out bones of long ago Indian folk.

The extinct volcano mentioned in the foregoing selection from the Otero County News is located about twelve miles seuth of Carrizozo, and is plainly visible, as are also the lava beds. This lava flowed from the volcano to the southward, through the valley to a distance of seventy to one hundred miles, terminating somewhere near Alamogordo. The lava beds are a moulten mass of iron, containing holes or burned out places, sometimes large enogh to bury a house. They reach a width of six or seven miles. The only pass is at Oscuro, and was made by the Government many years ago, it being the route of an old stage line—probably about the time that soldiers were garrisoned at Malagga Spring near Oscuro.

We learn further that about 20 miles north of the crater may be found the ruins of an old Spanish town called Tabira. The ruins are said to be the most imposing in America.

Men have bored for one hundred feet or more into solid bedrock in search of buried treasure.

It is said that the myth of Gran Quivira originated in this locality, and that the original population of Tabira numbered at least 1500.

The sepulcural ruin is more than thirty miles from water at an elevation of more than 6047 feet.

Some have thought that the inhabiranta of Tabira perished during the eruption of the volcano, as hundreds of skeletons have been found, some in caveos and wells many feet beneath the earth, and it is also conjectured that that the springs that supplied the city with water were also destroyed.

Some day we hope to visit these ancient ruins, and will then give our readers an account of the same. There are many places of interest in New Mexico which we hope to visit sometime in the near future.

Cattle Dying By Thousands.

Conditions in the cattle business are the worst known for 20 years. The long drouth in the southwest has caused the death of thousands of head, and those that are still living are in an almost unmarketable condition. A loss of 25 per cent. between range and market is reported in some shipments.

The range was practically ruined some weeks ago, and the only way the cattle are kept alive in some sections is by scattering tons of rock salt out on the range, after consuming which the cattle will eat many weeds and other range growth they would not otherwise touch

Not only weak cows and young stock are dyiny, but even the big steers. At one watering place east of Carlsbad there were counted one thousand dead cattle. All over the ranges there are hundreds of good animals down that can never get up.

In West Texas, after a number of good rain years, there has been a tendency to overstock, which makes the situation just that much worse.

In the sheep business the same tale is told.

Such experiences will go far to hasten the day when the old system of cattle raising will be abandoned. Most of the important cattlemen of the southwest have during the last few years developed water to take care of the needs of their stock, but this does not solve the range problem.

A prolonged drouth means fearful loss. Yet experience under just such conditions has shown that good farm crops, especially forage crops and roughage, can be raised even under exactly the same conditions now prevailing, provided the principles of scientific soil culture be persistently applied.

The next move of the big cattle men will no doubt be to Mexico, where there is still much open range left. But that can only afford temporary relief at best. The final solution will come when the ranges are turned into farms and food stuff of some kind in the southwest in sufficient abundance to put live stock in marketable condition right at home, leaving nothing more than the final fattening and finishing to be done in the north.

The losses in the stock business this spring are going to hit the southwest very hard. The sale of stock is one of the principal channels for the influx of outside capital and there will be less money from this source to invest and spend this year than there has been for a long time.—El Paso Herald.

MEMORIAL DAY

"Long years of peace have stilled the battle's thunder.
Wild grasses quiver where the fight was won;
Masses of blossoms, lightly blown asunder,
Shower down white petals on the silent gun".

Memorial Day! How sadly sweet to remember, and worse than hate to forget. Once more as a reunited people we decorate the graves of our dead.

"Love and tears for the blue;
Tears and love for the gray"

We cherish as a common inheritance the valor and self sacrifice of the great conflict that for so many years separated the people of the north and south.

Of Lincoln's enlistment of 2,500,000, 2,000,000 were under the age of 21; 1,000,000 under the age of 18 and 100,000 under the age of 15 years. No wonder that the mother hearts of the nation wept in anguish over the dreadful conflict when brother fought against brother and their native land was red with the blood of the slain.

No wonder the great soul of Lincoln was tried almost beyond endurance. Had he ever fully counted the cost, or was it because a great principle was involved and his soul saw no way of escape that he precipitated the awful conflict? We know not. We know only that his great heart was broken. He gave himself as a sacrifice for his country and he could do no more.

The suffering of that great conflict brought a new birth of freedom, yet, ere the surviving veterns of those stirring times have answered to the last roll call another grave danger confronts our nation. Today, in our land there are millions of industrial slaves, shackled in a slavery more merciless than that for which the great heart of Lincoln bled. No color line shall precipitate a national strife, but the throbbing hearts that are daily, yes hourly being offered up as a sacrifice to the god of greed, shall someday demand that another wrong shall be made right.

It is sad to think that Right only triumphs over the graves of the slain, but, it may be, that in the great eternity of God, all the broken threads of life, will be taken up and woven again in one beautiful pattern to complete the Master's design.

Today, as we gather to decorate the hallowed graves of our dead, may we remember the lesson of that great conflict and pray that never again shall such a sacrifice be demanded, and, that "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the face of the earth."

When Swinebourne died the other day, many journals speaking of the extravagance which his earlier works received, added that what was then rejected by cultured readers would be thought nothing of now. We expect that is at least in part true, but that it is, may be put down to the fact that modern works of fiction of one class are filled with suggestions which are certainly having their effect upon readers, especially young readers as baneful as the more open depravity of one type of French uovels which parents would not knowingly admit into their homes. And they are having their effect as can be seen in the infelicities in the homes of the rich, especially the newly rich people in this country. We refer to these especially because the children in the rich homes of this country are not as a rule trained to necessary work, many who only work when they please, and with idleness the door is open at once for all kind of temptations.

The more this kind of literature is accepted the broader it grows in its suggestions, and it does not require a great while to blunt the sensibilities and cast a film upon the bright shield of men' and women's integrity.—Goodwin's Weekly.

What the woman editor of the country needs is courage coupled with hard work. Coquetry will not count; fine clothes will not count; social connections will not count; only brain and work and courage will count. We already have the co-operation and encouragement of the best men of the country. Now we ask the co-operation of the best women, for with women themselves rests the complete emancipation of all future women.

One hears a good deal about the "dead towns" through the country, but no can refer to Carrizozo by that title—far from it. The sound of the carpenters' hammers and saws, mingled with the busy hum of the big shops, and the merry rattle of many wagons and drays dashing up and down the streets, speak strongly of the life and prosperity of our busy little city. The one thing needed to make it a big city is the county seat. With that will come many things that build up a town rapidly.

"Get out in automobiles; in carts on the curb stones, anywhere; only be sure you win men to the church," was the advice given the assembly of the Presbyterian church at Denver by John H. Converse of Philadelphia. This is new doctrine for members of this church. Surely the example set by the Salvation Army is bearing fruit.

PETRIFIED TREES

Beneath Barren West Texas Desert—Forest Evidently Grew There Once.

A petrified forest 75 feet underground, in a section that is now as barren of trees as the palm of a man's hand, has been discovered by Lanier Brothers, on their ranch about 25 miles north of Sierra Blanca. Samples of this wood, now turned to stone, have been presented to W. W. Turney of this city, and may be seen at his office.

The wood looks like cedar, and it is Mr. Turney's impression that it will take polish like marble.

"And if The Herald wants a task it might attempt to ascertain how long that wood has been buried there," said Mr. Turney.

T. W. Lanier and J. S. Lanier, who compose the ranching combination known as Lanier Brothers, have a 200,000 acre ranch, extending from Sierra Blanca almost to the New Mexico border, which they have stocked with steers, mostly threes and fours. At various places on this ranch they have developed water by means of deep driven wells instead of depending on the water holes made by throwing a dam across a gulley and catching the rain water.

About 45 miles south of Sierra Blanca they started to drill a well. At a depth of 1300 feet, sufficient water had not been encountered for the purposes desired, so they decided to dig a well to a stratum of water which they had encountered at the depth of 75 feet in the drilled well. This was started, and just as the water was encountered, the petrified trees were struck.

A reservoir was built at the bottom of the well, and about 250 to 300 feet of drifts were run, and in all of them were found the petrified wood. The stratum of water seemed to be just under the layer of trees, and in the roofs of the tunnel the trees, mady of them as big around as a man's body, may be seen like beams in a ceiling. A great many pieces have been taken out, out, according to J. W. Lanier, and two big pieces over six feet long were extracted entact and placed at each side of the gate at the ranch house.

The trees are not found growing nor piled in any regular order, but are strewn in miscellaneous order across each other. It is the opinion of Mr. Lanier that they were deposited there by some big prehistoric flood, as they are piled in such a manner as to indicate this.

In digging through strata of gravel, alluvial soil and soil of different characters were found ranging from eight to fifteen feet in width, and the draw has very evidently been filled in ages past by the action of water, presumably flowing down from the hill which was probably timber covered at one time.

Samples of the petrified wood will probably be sent to the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, and perhaps to other museums.

The petrified wood discovery has no practical value to the Laniers, but of vastly more importance is the water supply which they have developed. It is a splendid quality of water, and is the shallowest water supply obtainable for miles around. The quantity, too, is sufficient for all the needs to which it has been subjected as yet.—El Paso Herald.

WHY DONT YOU ADVERTISE

"Oh, Henry," said she blithely
As he sat him down to dine,
"I have bought the sweetest cushion
For a dollar ninety-nine!
"It was bargain day at Stanley's,
And they advertised it so
That the store was fairly crowded,
For the prices were so low."
"H'm!" he coughed a looked askewly,
"As sure as I'm alive,
We are selling that same cushion
At a dollar twenty-five."
Not a word then broke the silence
Till his wife, with many sighs,
Softly said in accents tearfull,
"And why don't you advertise?"
