TALES OF THE OLD FRONTIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

(©, 1923, Western Newspaper Union.)

THE BRAVEST WOMAN IN ALL FRONTIER HISTORY

SHE was the mother of Col. Richard M. Johnson, a hero of the War of 1812, and later a vice president of the United States, but Kentucky knows her best as Mrs. Jemima Suggett Johnson, the heroine of Bryan's station and performer of the bravest deed in all frontier history. She was in that stockaded fort one hot August day in 1782, when a force of 400 Indians led by the notorious white renegades, Girty, McKee and Campbell, appeared before it.

The settlers were accustomed to get their water from a bubbling spring several rods distant, but they had carelessly let the supply in the fort run low. The Indians concealed their main force in the woods around the spring and sent a small skirmishing party before the gates to tempt the settlers into making a sortie.

Knowing the vital need for water in the hot fighting soon to begin, Capt. John Craig, the commander of the fort, resorted to a desperate expedient to get it. He assembled the women and children and told them that if the men tried to go for the water, the Indians, knowing that they did not usually do this work unless danger was near, would immediately attack them. But if the women and children went as usual, the savages in their desire to keep the presence of the large ambushing party concealed probably would not harm them, although there was no positive assurance that they would not.

Immediately Mrs. Johnson laid baby Richard in his log cradle, told his sister Sally to look after him and volunteered for the duty. Other women quickly followed her example and in a few minutes a party of twelve women and sixteen of the older children strolled down toward the spring. They were laughing and chatting as though totally unconscious of danger, but at the thought of the possibility of capture their hearts almost stopped beating.

At the spring they filled their pails and with no visible signs of haste prepared to return. Although conscious of the savage eyes glaring at them from the bushes barely an arm's length away, so well did they play their part that the Indians were completely deceived and allowed them to start back undisturbed. Then began a struggle within themselves to keep from making a mad dash for safety. But their superb will power won, and it was not until they were under the very walls of the fort that their steps quickened and a few drops of the precious water was spilled.

The men of Bryan's station defeated their enemies. They could not have done otherwise and been the sons and husbands of such women as these.

Fire Company Organized

At a meeting held in the office of town clerk W. W. Stadtman on Monday night, a fire company was organized and the following officers elected:

Chief, J. M. Beck; 1st assistant, M. J. Barnett; 2nd assistant, J. B. Dinwiddie; 3rd assistant, E. M. Brickley; secretary, W. W. Stadtman.

The new organization will have charge of the town fire equipment and a truck will soon be added, according to what was learned from the new officers.

Newsom, Grand Master

Alamogordo News:

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Newsom, Miss Minnie B Wahl and Fred M. Bradford, returned last Friday from Albuquerque where they attended the Grand Lodge of New Mexico Odd Fellows and the Rebekah Assembly.

Mr. Newsom was honored by the Grand Lodge of New Mexico in being elected as its Grand Master for the coming year. He has been an enthusiastic Odd Fellow for years and has been one of the stalwarts of the home lodge during all of his residence here. It is a certainty that he will give New Mexico Odd Fellowship a splendid administration for 1924-'25. Alamogordo appreciates the honor conferred on one of her citizens.

Will T. Coe Has Immigration Job

Alamogordo News:

A. M. Smith of the Immigration service, who has been stationed at Alamogordo for the past few months, has been superceded by Will T. Coe of Lincoln county. Mr. Coe was appointed to the Immigration office at El Paso several months ago, and was transferred from here to Alamogordo. Will is well and favorably known in Alamogordo, having lived here a few years ago.

The election of Prager Miller as Commissioner of Public Lands will mean much to the stockmen and farmers of New Mexico. His administration will be fair, honest and square dealing. No more Zinn oil land lease scandles. No favoritism.

Patronize Our Home Town Entertainments

As "coming events cast their shadows before," let us be mindful of the fact that the promoters and those who are to take part in the home entertainments are looking to us, not only for patronage, but for encouragement as well. Two of these are to be given shortly; first will be the Hallowe'en Dance to be given by the Rebekahs, the second, the musical program and picture by the Eighth Grade of the Carrizozo school. While these two will differ widely in the way of entertainment, each one is essential in that it fills a want and has its place to satisfy the desires of lovers of different forms of amusement.

The Rebekahs have established a reputation for giving dances which are carefully managed, properly conducted and as hostesses to those who are fond of this pastime, their record is of the very best. November 1, is the date: don't forget it.

The Eighth Grade entertainment on November 5, the program of which will be found in another place in this paper, will include community talent of which Carrizozo and our neighboring towns are justly proud. Mr. Brickley of the First National Bank who created the Carrizozo Entertainers and gave us such delightful musical programs from time to time, is behind the last named movement, managing, encouraging and giving a portion of his valuable time with unselfish effort in the interest of the local talent. The night of Nov. 5, should see the theatre filled to overflowing. Remember your home town.

The card party which was to have been given at the Wetmore building by the Ladies' Guild of the Episcopal Church, has been postponed to November 14.

The election returns will be received and given to the public at the Republican Headquarters all night on Tuesday, November 4. Refreshments will be served. The public is cordially invited.

Republican Central Committee.
Republican Women's Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas M. Carr and baby daughter arrived home today from a trip to Mineral Wells, Texas, where they visited Mrs. Carr's parents and afterwards visiting Mr. Carr's mother in Arkansas. They found Sammy's mother ill, but her condition improved rapidly during their stay.

OUR NEXT LAND COMMISSIONER, PRAGER MILLER

The Republican meeting last night at Lutz Hall was the best attended of any meeting held here since the boys were leaving for the war. The candidates were presented by H. B. Hamilton and each in a manner befitting the occasion, logically defined their stands and qualifications for their respective positions. No bombast, nothing vague or indefinite, no ungracious allusions to their opponents, but each showing a full knowledge of the office to which they aspire. Mrs. Blaney for school superintendent and Mr. Kelsey for sheriff, also Judge Hulbert for treasurer and others on the county ticket, Dr. E. C. Lee for the Senate, Oliver Lee, gave brief outlines of needs of revisions and amendments to laws placed on our statutes by the democratic legislature.

The real discourse of the evening was delivered by Hon. Prager Miller, a native son of Lincoln County and the republican candidate for state land commissioner, and also state chairman of the republican party. Mr. Miller intelligently and sufficiently covered the main issues of the campaign confronting the voters of New Mexico, also national issues, including an instructive exposition of the tariff issue. In mentioning his candidacy, he referred to statements of Carl Magee, who like Joseph, wears a coat of many colors—politically—to the effect that he is the advisor and administrative mentor of Justiniano Baca, the present land commissioner and candidate on the democratic ticket for re-election and Mr. Baca has Magee completely under his control. Mr. Miller assured his audience that should he be elected, Magee's frequent visits to the land office would cease. A dance was given after the meeting.

Railroad News

Dispatcher S. L. Northlane was honorably retired Wednesday for life under pension. He had served the company for over 30 years. This will give the first trick to Harry Dixon and will give Harry's former trick to D. A. Saunders. Walter LaFleur will stay on the "graveyard" trick as a matter of choice.

Engineer W. C. Wack has transferred to this district from Tucumcari.

30 car loads of cattle belonging to T. A. Spencer arrived here from Mexico last Friday night, 20 more came last night and with 30 car loads more tonight, all of the Spencer cattle which have been on the Mexico ranges for the past two years will have returned.

Mrs. Wm. McLean of El Paso is the guest of Mrs. A. V. Swearingen for the week-end.

Two more of the new mountain type engines passed through here yesterday enroute for El Paso. Two more are to come shortly, making six which are to be used between El Paso and Tucumcari.

Brakeman C. B. Wells, wife and son, returned home the latter part of last week from an extended trip through California.

As a result of another turn being put in on the chain gang, brakemen Bigelow and Bailey have been placed on the extra board.

Night foreman L. T. Bacot, has been transferred to the A. & S. M., and will leave for Alamogordo to enter service by Nov. 1. Mrs. Bacot with her daughters, Louise and Jeanne leave tomorrow for Silver City where they will spend the winter and the girls will attend school.

Fort Stanton News

Hallowe'en is to be an event long to be remembered at the Fort if decorations and other preparations are significant. H. L. Andrews, the Harry Lauder of the southwest, will sing.

Next in order is duck hunting. Forty-two ducks secured by Bailey and coast guard Anderson, were served to the patients in the wards last week and it will be a long time before the memory of the event fades or the praise ceases. At No. 1, the Misses Kinan and Kincannon, Dr. Reed, Messrs. McNeff and Clark, enjoyed a duck dinner on Tuesday evening, the result of their hunt on Sunday. Dr. Anderson, Thurlow Kincheloe, Alfred McNeff, and Bruce Anderson went hunting Saturday and returned on Sunday.

Dr. and Mrs. Warner have returned from a pleasant visit with friends in Chicago; Miss Hester Kendrick is enjoying a few days visit in El Paso; Dr. and Mrs. Stewart and Sam, are also in El Paso visiting relatives; Mr. and Mrs. Howson and Mr. Mitchelmore returned from El Paso, after which Mr. Mitchelmore attended the teacher's convention at Corona, where he delivered an address on his work with young men and boys.

Mr. and Mrs. Kersey took a motor trip to Roswell on Saturday.

Messrs. Byrne and Hendren were in Carrizozo on Monday, shopping and meeting K. of C officials.

Mr. Tarbell, material officer at the leper marine hospital at Carville, La., has returned to his post with one car load of range cattle and one of dairy cows selected from the stock at the Fort.

At the home of Mrs. Brockwell are frequently assembled, Mr. and Mrs. Hobbs, Mrs. D. J. Parker and daughters, Messrs Pitts, Mitchelmore and others who pass pleasant hours in singing.

The Fort Stanton basket ball team, James Darby, Tom Howard, William Cox, Henry Hale and Earl Parker, are to play Capitan on Saturday of next week.

Our new nurse, Miss Webb, from St. Louis, is a most welcome addition to the force.

Mrs. J. W. Sellers of Mescalero, spent two days of last week with her daughter, Mrs. Cavanaugh.

In the four-roomed California bungalow built by our esteemed local builder, Skorownski, dwells Professor and Mrs. Copeland at Capitan. He also has a garage under course of construction.

Watson of License Row has a new Chevrolet and his friends are happy.

Mr. Ewing of the forest service visited the Fort on Monday as also did Dr. and Mrs. Galloway and Mrs. Reed of Roswell. They brought fruit, jelly and many other dainties for the patients which kindness was much appreciated.

We all mourn the passing of Oscar Liljestrom, who died after a brave struggle. He had many warm friends.

If Prager Miller had been at liberty to make a campaign like some on the democratic ticket have had, he would be elected by a majority to far exceed the handsome majority he will receive next Tuesday. The more the people see of him the more they are impressed with his honesty and stright-forwardness.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

PURPOSE

"AND Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself by eating the king's meat," the story goes, and Daniel was a strong, healthy young fellow who no doubt would have enjoyed a good steak as well as anyone. It was not that he liked spinach and dandelion greens so much, that kept him religiously to pulse, but because he was determined to do what he had been taught was right, what he knew was his duty. When Daniel made up his mind that a thing was right or his duty to do he went ahead in the execution of his purpose even if the path he was following lead him into the lion's den.

The trouble with a good many people has been and is now that they have no special and definite purpose. Obligation rests on them lightly; duty has a strange and unfamiliar sound in their ears; purpose is a thing with which they have never had much intimate connection. Present comfort and pleasure concerns them most. Sometimes men seem to have a purpose, but it apparently does not get as far as their hearts.

Wetherill was not that sort. When in knickerbockers he was running about the dirty mining town in which his father worked he was determined to have an education.

He got himself through high school—a very poor high school it was, too—by selling newspapers at first and doing odd jobs about the mine. After he was fifteen he did a man's work in the mine, though he was not a husky boy. He got into college by examination—not the easiest method as things are done these days. He had no friends, he had no money, he had no special talents excepting a willingness to work at anything, honesty, and a determined purpose to fight his way through.

He was often discouraged, for he was only sixteen, and he knew very little of the world. He confesses now that sometimes at night when the lights were out and he was hungry and tired, his pillow was wet with tears. But his purpose triumphed; he fought it out, he made friends, he won the respect of everyone who knew him, and he got a better job, and he made every honor society to which he was eligible.

That was a good many years ago and Wetherill is head of a big, prosperous corporation today.

"What a fortunate fellow Wetherill is," one of his friends said to me not long ago. "Soft job, big salary, wide influence. Some fellows seem to be born lucky."

"You're right," I answered. "Anyone is lucky who, like Wetherill, when he is young develops a definite purpose and has the courage and the determination to carry it through."

Footprints of Bath House John

The Republican headquarters of the state claims to have reliable information that the democrats are considering a proposition to put into practise the time-worn scheme of voting repeaters. The scheme is to have motor car loads of floaters rushed from one precinct to another and vote on forged certificates as absent voters. Election boards and challengers should exercise diligence to prevent an attempt at such corrupt acts.

"Through the Years"

"Through the Years," a novel by I. L. Allison, written in and concerning the Hermit's Peak regions of Las Vegas, will be published in the spring of 1925 by a New York publisher.

The story is a gripping one. It deals with a girl born half way up Hermit's Peak. In her lonliness, she meets Richard, a young Easterner. They fall in love and her life, partly alone, partly with her lover, finds a paralell in the trail up to the summit of the Peak.

This old world is made up of joys and sorrows. After elections.

The San Francisco Chronicle recently moved into its new 1½-million-dollar home at Fifth and Mission streets, one of the most complete newspaper plants in the world.

Kid McCoy, former pugilist, held in Los Angeles under indictment for the murder of Mrs. Theresa W. Mora last August, is "malingering and feigning insanity," according to a report made to the district attorney's office by two alienists who examined the prisoner.

The Sand Point, Wash., aviation field is the logical north Pacific base for heavier-than-air machines and the Camp Lewis, Wash., field the most feasible location for a dirigible hangar, Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of the naval bureau of aeronautics said, in Seattle after an inspection of the two sites.

Three Mexicans pleaded guilty in Superior Court at Prescott, Ariz., to charges of attempting to wreck a Santa Fe passenger train south of Prescott and were sentenced to serve terms of five years in the state prison. The wreck was averted when a work train, proceeding slowly, found the track obstructed with railroad tools and junk and then removed the barrier.

The opening session of the government's suit against the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport Company to cancel the Elk Hills naval reserve oil leases granted the E. L. Doheny interests flooded Federal Judge J. McCormack's court in Los Angeles with crowds that outnumbered those attending the sensational criminal trials held in Los Angeles in the past several months. The government's amended bill of complaint charges conspiracy between Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior, and E. L. Doheny involving the payment of $100,000 by Doheny to Fall, which was followed by granting of oil leases in the naval reserve to the Doheny interests, whose value in possible profits have been estimated by Doheny at $100,000,000. Owen J. Roberts stated the government's case briefly.

WASHINGTON

After a two-year investigation Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has announced a complete reorganization of the United States bureau of engraving and printing, the world's greatest money-making plant.

Ensign William A. Engemans of Flemington, N. J., was killed when his seaplane crashed in Pensacola, Fla., bay, the navy department was advised a few days ago. The body was recovered. He was a pilot of the student class of 1921.

Approximately 1,220 Klamath Indians of Oregon will share about $122,000 as a result of a per capita payment of $100 authorized by the interior department to help tide them through the winter. The money is derived from sale of timber belonging to the Indians, which, it is estimated, will yield them at least $500,000 annually for the next twenty years.

In order to vote in the presidential election, Mrs. John D. Sherman, the new president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, left Washington for her home in Estes Park, Colo. This is believed to be the record trip anyone will make in order to cast a ballot at this election.

Financial involvements to the extent of nearly $1,000,00 preyed heavily on the mind of the late Senator Frank B. Brandegee of Connecticut and led to his suicide, friends said after a check-up of his affairs. Brandegee's properties were heavily mortgaged. Friends say he overreached himself in trying to finance real estate deals and ultimately came under pressure for interest and taxes.

The iron and steel industry, in magnitude of operations and production, recorded its most remarkable peace-time year during 1923, the interior department announced on the basis of figures compiled by the geological survey. Production of iron ore for the year was 47 per cent greater than in 1922, and shipments were 38 per cent more. This exceeded any year since 1918, and was the fourth largest year's output on record.

A total of 14,412 deaths from accidents during 1923 caused by automobiles and other motor vehicles, excluding motorcycles, is shown in statistics assembled by the census bureau covering the death registration area of the United States, which includes 87.6 per cent of the total population. This total represents a death rate of 14.9 per 100,000 population, compared with 12.8 in 1922, 11.8 in 1921, and 10.4 in 1920. California topped the list with a rate of 22.6 deaths per 100,000 population and Wyoming was second with a rate of 24.1.

FOREIGN

Seventy-two thousand persons are in prison in the Russian republic, according to a report made in Moscow by the commissar of justice.

Two villages near Shankhai were burned by defeated Chekiang troops, who have nothing to do, little to eat, and no money with which to return to their homes.

The news that President Ebert had decreed the dissolution of the reichstag came as a surprise to a great majority of the deputies who either were in Berlin or on the way to attend the session of parliament.

Reports that from eight to thirteen persons had been killed and about 100 injured when the tropical storm struck the town of Arroyos de Mantau, in Pinar Del Rio, were received in Havana, Cuba, a few days ago.

Martial law, which was declared in Canton, China, owing to the recent fighting between the merchants' volunteer corps and so-called "red soldiers" has been lifted and all soldiers ordered to the outskirts of the city. The city gates have been demolished.

The state of Sinaloa, in Mexico, one of the most powerful northern states in the republic, has refused, through its governor and congress, to recognize the election of Plutarco Elias Calles as president of Mexico and has flung out the banner of revolt, according to copies of El Universal, a newspaper of Mexico City.

Brazil and Chile have signed the protocol for the pacific settlement of international disputes elaborated at the recent session of the league of nations assembly. This makes the number of signatories twelve. League officials in Geneva state that the previous announcement that Belgium had signed the protocol was incorrect.

Ten thousand Georgian men, women and children, who were accused in connection with the recent Georgian revolution, have been sentenced by the soviet government to exile in Siberia, according to dispatches received in Berlin from Constantinople. The list of these exiles is said to have been made up by the Cheka, the secret police organization.

Public interest in the Prince of Wales was so great, members of his staff said in Montreal, that certain newspapers have not hesitated to indulge in the creation of fabrications concerning him when no actual news existed. It was said that these publications take advantage of the prince's position and the fact that he is a visitor in a foreign land to say things about him which an ordinary citizen could meet by court action. They know that the prince will take no notice of their falsehoods, rather than intensify the focus himself.

GENERAL

Thousands sleeping in Spartanburg and Greenville counties, South Carolina, were awakened a few days ago by an earthquake whose tremors were distinctly felt in the city and at points within a radius of seventy-five miles from Spartanburg.

A verdict for the defendant was ordered by Judge MacLeod in Superior Court at Boston in a suit brought by Michael Crowley of Boston, to recover from the estate of Mrs. Emma J. Sinclair $10,000 and interest claimed to be due on a promise made by the late Frank Jones, Portsmouth, N. H., brewer. The plaintiff contended that Jones promised to pay him this sum if he remained sober for ten years.

A six months' old litter of fifteen pigs with a total weight of 3,401 pounds, grown in Indiana county, Pennsylvania, stands good chances of being the worlds' heaviest litter for this year, according to announcement from the Pennsylvania State College agricultural extension service. The litter belongs to Thomas M. Strong of Blairsville, and his weight is the highest yet reported in the United States.

Plans for a trust fund that may be used after his death to oppose any efforts to free Nathan Leopold, Jr., and Richard Loeb, has been announced in Chicago by Jacob Franks, father of the boy they killed. "The murderers must never get freedom," he declared.

Truth in journalism and advertising was the theme of speakers in Chicago at the joint dinner of the Audit Bureau of Circulations and the American Association of Advertising Agents. Those addressing the gathering were Dr. John Gabbert Bowman, chancellor of the University of Pittsburg; former Judge Kenesaw M. Landis, Chicago; Edgar A. Guest, Detroit, and Edward Price Bell of the Chicago Daily News.

Eight dead, two in a critical condition and fourteen more or less seriously injured, completed the casualty list resulting from an unexplained explosion in the forward twin gun mount of the new scout cruiser Trenton. The ship was engaged in target practice on the southern drill grounds off Cape Henry when the accident occurred and rushed immediately to Hampton Roads. Eight of the most severely burned were transferred by tug to the naval hospital at Portsmouth.

Cozy Dolan, former New York Giant coach, who was banned from baseball with Jimmy O'Connell on charges of attempted bribery, will bring suit against Commissioner Landis and organized baseball for alleged slander, according to announcement in New York by W. J. Fallon, noted criminal attorney, who has been engaged by Dolan to handle the case.

President Ebert of the German republic recently signed a decree dissolving the German reichstag. This means a new parliament and a general election.

No. 3 white oats, Chicago, 60½c to 61½c; Minneapolis, 46½c.

Dairy Products

Butter markets weak. Scarcity of fancy butter has been a supporting factor, but heavy storage surplus makes for lack of confidence. Exports light, approximating about 4,500 tubs shipped during the week. Closing wholesale prices on 92 score butter: New York, 38c; Chicago, 37c; Philadelphia, 39c; Boston, 38½c.

Cheese markets about steady following declines last week. Trading rather quiet with buyers operating only as occasion demands. Wholesale prices at Wisconsin primary markets: Flats, 19½c; twins, 19c; single daisies, 19½c; double daisies, 19½c; longhorns, 19½c; square prints, 26½c.

Live Stock and Meats

Chicago hog prices range from 60c to $1 lower than a week ago, at $11.25 for the top and $9.50 to $10.60 for the bulk. Medium and good beef steers steady to 25c lower at $8.85 to $11.40; butcher cows and heifers 25c lower to 10c higher at $3.25 to $11; feeder steers 10c lower at $4.65 to $7.75; light and medium weight veal calves, 25c to 75c lower at $8.75 to $10. Fat lambs 50c lower at $12.75 to $13.75; feeding lambs steady to 10c higher at $11 to $13.40; yearlings, 25c lower at $8.25 to $11, and fat ewes $1 to $1.50 higher at $5 to $8.75.

In eastern wholesale fresh meat markets beef and mutton are firm to $1 higher; veal $1 lower to $1 higher; lamb, $1 to $2 up, and pork loins $1 to $2 lower. Prices good grade meats: Beef, $18 to $17; veal, $15 to $18; lamb, $26 to $32; mutton, $11 to $14; light pork loins, $21 to $23; heavy loins, $18 to $24.

DENVER MARKETS

Cattle

No load lots of cows sold above $6 and many went from $3.25 to $3.75. Grass heifers did not pass $4.75 andither common to medium stock sold from $3.25 to $4.50. Fairly desirable mixed cows and heifers cleared at $4.50 and $4.75. Canners and cutters were from $1.75 to $2.75 with fleshy cutters up to $3. Bull sales were limited. Desirable vealers cleared at $8.50, but the bulk of calves were below $8. Choice feeder steers over 1,000 pounds made $7.50, others were held at $7.25, and several loads made $7.15 including a four-car string. Many others went at $6.25 to $6.75 and some sold at $5.65. Best yearlings brought $6.50 and were in the feeder class. Stockers usually sold below $6; in-between kinds of feeder heifers cleared around $4, and better cows were taken on country account from $3 up.

Hogs

A top of $10.70 was marked up but much desirable stock went at $10.50 and $10.25 with plainer offerings down to $9.85. A load of good to choice scored $10 on the lower tendency. Desirable packing sows made $9 and plainer kind $8.50 and $8. Fat pigs were weak at $8.35. Stock pigs were scarce, but quotable around $7.50.

Sheep

A top of $13.15 flat was paid for two loads of desirable grades, and others moved at the same figure on a freight paid basis. Other choice lambs were at $13.10 to $13.15. Fat ewes made $6.50, or strong. Higher values seem inevitable. Ewe prices in the feeder section were steady to strong with feeder ewes making $6.25. Breeders brought $6.75. CONSUL'S DEATH IS DESCRIBED

New York.—How Robert Imbrie, American consul at Teheran, was stoned to death by natives as he lay unconscious upon an operating table was related by Joseph F. Kornfeld, United States minister to Persia, just resigned, who returned on the Leviathan with a report of the tragedy which he will submit to the State Department at Washington.

"In Teheran as in most Persian cities," Mr. Kornfeld related, "there are numerous drinking fountains where are stationed self-constituted attendants who, in the name of a Mohammedan saint, Abbas, solicit alms. At the time of the Imbrie affair, there had gained wide circulation the story of a miracle that was reputed to have occurred at one of these fountains only a few weeks before.

"The story was that a native approached the fountain to fill a gourd with water.

"'In the name of Abbas?' asked the alms solicitor. 'No, in the name of Bahai,' replied the gourd bearer. Straightway he was stricken blind for the blasphemy; then, when he dropped to his knees and recanted with a prayer of apology directed to the Saint Abbas, his sight was restored.

"The fountain became the gathering place of thronged thousands who fled themselves to it and lapped up the trickling water, or fought their way toward it and prayed.

"Imbrie heard of this. One day he strapped on a camera and, with his aide, named Seymour, drove in a barouche to the miracle spot. Imbrie forced his way through the crowd to take a picture. The natives surged around him clamoring, and he fled to the barouche and drove away.

"Behind the carriage the infuriated natives ran shouting 'stop him. The infidel has killed four of the faithful and poisoned the waters of the fountain.'"

Although he was not wholly informed of the events that immediately followed, said Mr. Kornfeld, the gist of conflicting reports was that the natives believed Imbrie's camera to be a weapon which silently dispatched death.

"They overhauled Seymour in an alleyway where he had taken refuge and mauled him," he continued. "They pursued Imbrie into a tea shop, they clubbed and stoned him until the police rescued him and carried him to a hospital.

"Even then the outraged natives were not satisfied. They clamored for Imbrie's life in atonement to their Mohammedan saint, Abbas. They stormed the hospital, battered down the doors, and finding Imbrie unconscious upon an operating table, took the tiles from the floor and crushed out his life with them."

The state department already was in possession of evidence supporting the story he related, said Mr. Kornfeld. As for reports that Imbrie's death was the result of a long drawn conflict between oil interests of several nations, he declared, it was "fanaticism, not oil" that lay at the bottom of the tragedy.

After representing at Washington, Mr. Kornfeld will go to Toledo, Ohio, to assume charge of a synagogue.

Two Colorado Pioneers Dead

Denver.—William Gray Evans, [illegible] years old, Colorado empire builder, political leader and financier, who, with his father, the late Gov. John Evans, was responsible for much that has made Colorado's progress possible, died suddenly following a heart attack at his home here. Dr. Henry Augustus Buchtel, chancellor emeritus of the University of Denver, former governor of the state of Colorado and a leader in the state's educational and religious work for more than two decades, died at his home here after a lingering illness.

Dies from Football Injuries

Omaha, Neb.—Harold Bruce Watkins, 19, of Crofton, Neb., died at a local hospital from injuries received in a scrimmage between the first and second teams of the Crofton High school. Watkins, it is said, was kicked in the head and death was caused by persistent hemorrhages, said physicians.

Miss Mary Maloney, aged 17, of Las Vegas, died from concussion of the brain at the Las Vegas hospital, following a fatal accident when a motorcycle, driven by William Mooteman and ridden by three others, including the dead girl, her brother, John Maloney and Clarence Roberts, crashed into a Ford touring car, driven by Louis Lorenza, of West Las Vegas.

Charging that the sum was withdrawn from the now defunct State National Bank of Albuquerque just before it closed its doors and "appropriated to the individual use and benefit of the defendant," F. A. Chapman, receiver of the bank, has filed suit in the Federal Court at Santa Fe against George A. Kaseman, former stockholder and director in the bank, for $100,000.

The San Pedro mines, eighteen miles north of Stanley, have recently reopened and development work has already been started. A new vein has been uncovered which it is reported will run 60 to 70 per cent lead, two or three ounces of silver and from $15 to $18 gold to the ton. Plans are now under way for the installation of a concentrator early in the spring and a full crew of miners will soon be employed to take out the ore. The mine officials recently contracted for the entire output of the Homero coal mine which will run about 10 tons daily.

Contracts for the building of a road and the necessary bridges between Tucumcari and Cap Rock were let the last week by the state highway department and the work is to be started as soon as the equipment can be placed on the ground. This, when completed, will be one of the most important stretches of highway in that section of the state and will open up a large territory through which the roads have been almost impassable for a part of the year. A total of over $53,000 will be spent on the road and bridges and if the specifications are carried out it will be one of the finest highways in the country.

If the plans of a committee of the Rotary club of Las Cruces are carried out, the largest game protective association in the southwest will soon be formed in that city. Charles S. Loomis, chairman of the committee, is in charge of the work of forming the organization and the plans call for the entire Mesilla Valley to be included. Nine refuges have been formed in the middle section of the Rio Grande valley.

September proved to be the record month for the year in the shipping of cattle from New Mexico, over 72,000 being shipped, according to the report of the cattle sanitary board. THE KISS

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, orphans, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose invites Ellen to a Thanksgiving house party and the girl is delighted. On the way from the station to Mrs. Rose's Ellen rides with a remarkably attractive young woman and a much older man. She takes them for father and daughter, but they are introduced as Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Ellen does not "fit in" with the younger members of the party, and is miserable. Leaving for her home next morning, Ellen meets Gibbs Josselyn, son of her fellow guest. He has disapproved of his father's wedding and is not on speaking terms with the couple. Declining to stay at Mrs. Rose's, Gibbs drives Ellen to the station. They miss the train and Gibbs undertakes to drive the girl to Port Washington. Their auto is wrecked. Ellen is hurt, but it is not thought to be serious, and she and Gibbs part. He has been attracted by the girl, and she by him. Ellen's injury proves to be severe and for months she is an invalid. Recovered, she is taking part in the town's Memorial day festivities when Gibbs Josselyn, of a yachting trip with a friend, George Lathrop, meets her again. The feeling of mutual attraction has strengthened since they parted. They leave Port Washington man and wife. Nearly seven years later Gibbs and Ellen Josselyn, with their son Tommy, come back from France to New York. They are welcomed by Josselyn, Senior, and his beautiful wife, Lillian, the old ill-feeling forgotten. Gibbs and Ellen make their home with the elder Josselyns, at Wheatley Hills, just outside New York. Gibbs idles, ostensibly looking for a studio in which to assume his portrait painting. Ellen sees that her husband is attracted by his youthful stepmother's beauty. Joe Latimer, Ellen's brother, is tentatively engaged to marry Harriet, George Lathrop's daughter. Gibbs secures a studio. The rift between the younger Josselyns widens.

CHAPTER VII

Gibbs had set up his easel in his father's study, and was keeping his hand in, as he expressed it, by making a pastel sketch of Josselyn, Senior. The study was a small room so cunningly concealed by the mazes of the house that the occupant might be sure of privacy whenever he desired it there.

Ellen loved this room, and sometimes spent a happy evening here, if Gibbs were kept in town by any especial affair at the club, playing cribbage with her father-in-law. Lillian, drowsing beside the fire, would listen half-smiling t their war of words and points, open her book, and shut it idly again. She would be quite frankly bored on these occasions, but Ellen loved the quiet and peace, and suspected that the old man was never so happy as in this environment.

It was his whim never to allow strangers in this room. Ellen, with his permission, had taken Joe there, and marveled with him over its various contents. Tommy was a privileged visitor, and came and went with royal contempt for restriction. He deeply amused his grandfather by calling it "our room," indeed all the "villino dell' Orto" was to Tommy now "my house."

* * * * * * *

There was no formal reconciliation between Gibbs and his wife, but after a few days they began to speak to each other again. The breach did not entirely heal, however, and Ellen felt a change in their relationship from that day. Gibbs went to the city three or four times a week. Sometimes Ellen went with him, and they hunted for a studio together. But the old spirit of comradeship seemed gone.

He came back from town one day and announced that he had found his atelier, describing a place that sounded near enough to his ideal. But Ellen's heart turned to lead as she heard him. It was not to be a home—just a workshop! His home life was still to be here. It was on Fifty-sixth street, flooded with north light, one enormous room, one tiny room, and a bath, and the rent was twelve hundred a year.

"And janitor service included," Lillian added unthinkingly. Ellen and Josselyn, Senior, looked at her in surprise, for her tone was not that of question. "I suppose?" she said, quickly glancing at Gibbs, and Ellen saw her color rise. Instantly she knew, with a shock of almost prostrating jealousy, that Lillian had seen the studio. The elder woman had been in town all day, and had picked up Gibbs at the club to bring him home. They had done this before—there was no harm in that—

"Certainly!" Gibbs answered smoothly. His color swept up, too. Ellen felt an agony in her heart that was almost unbearable. He had taken Lillian to see it—he had poked about it first with her—opening doors, discussing advantages and disadvantages—

There were guests at the table, and she must keep her self-control. Dazedly she laughed and talked, and dazedly she somehow got through the evening. There were six of them, and they played a game of bridge, interspersed with music from the phonograph, with the passing of candy, and the little discussion of the new magazines. It was midnight when the younger Josselyns went upstairs.

"Gibbs," said Ellen then, from a bursting heart, "Did you take Lillian to see the studio?"

She knew him so well; she could see the irresolution in his eyes. Denial?—no, he would not lie unnecessarily to her.

"Yes, I did," he said reluctantly. If she knew him well, he knew her, too. He had been watching Ellen uneasily all evening, he was ready for this. "Yes," he went on innocently. "Do you mind? She came for me at the club, at four, and we had to go right up into that neighborhood—I'm sorry if you mind?"

"If you thought I wouldn't mind, why didn't you say so straight out?" Ellen demanded. She thought she had him, but Gibbs, hanging his tie on the rack, merely looked thoughtful.

"If I tell you, will you please not mention it?" he surprised her by asking. "It's this; dad hates her to go anywhere with any other man, even with me. He's perfectly decent about it in public, and he gives her the deuce in private! He was to be with us today, you know or she never would have come for me at all—she's awfully sweet about it, and as usual, she humors him!"

"She's—clever!" Ellen said briefly. If Gibbs did not like this enigmatic answer, he gave no indication of displeasure beyond a faint scowl. He was presently sound asleep, with no further reference to the matter.

But Ellen, twisting with wretched thoughts, lay awake for hours. At first she mused only upon the bitterness of the simple fact: Gibbs had selected a studio without any appeal to the judgment of his wife. Ah, how different that was from the choosing of the last studio, the blessed little apartment on "Madame la Montaigne": she had been on his arm then, exclaiming over rents, dimpling on the dark stairs they climbed and climbed and climbed after the concierges! How they had exulted over the boxes from home, over the placing of every chair and rug, and how they had sallied forth, hungry and tired, to be fed and soothed and amused by the city of romance and beauty!

These thoughts were sad enough, and tears began to creep down Ellen's cheeks, and her head to ache with her efforts at self-control. But presently a fresh thought came, and the tears dried, and Ellen's heart began to beat hard again with agony and fear.

Lillian had gone into town the night before, Tuesday night, to dine and spend the night with friends, and Gibbs and his father were to take the car in, on Wednesday morning, and meet her for lunch. Ellen had been originally included in this plan, but had excused herself because Tommy's nurse was not well, and his mother was enjoying a monopoly of his care for a few days. And on Wednesday morning, Josselyn, Senior, had asked Gibbs to go to the city without him, he had really preferred the idle country day with Ellen and Tommy. He had telephoned Lillian at her friend's hotel that Gibbs had the car, if she wanted it she was to telephone Gibbs at the club. Now Ellen writhed with the sudden conviction that they had met in the morning, and lunched together, and hunted for studios all afternoon.

She dared not ask him; it was to ask him to confess to a lie. More than that, it was to kill her confidence in him with one blow. But Ellen never knew a moment's ease after that. She looked at Lillian's beautiful, sphinxlike face the next day, vainly trying to read it. Her heart began to beat suffocatingly when her father-in-law chanced to ask his wife, at luncheon, how she had spent the previous day. Was it mere accident that took Lillian's splendid eyes to Gibbs' before she answered? She had shopped with Mildred, and had sent her off at one o'clock, and had had a sort of luncheon-for-one all by herself.

"You should have come straight home; that was a tiring visit," the old man said. Lillian smiled at him affectionately for her only answer. Ellen felt that she never appreciated the safety and the power of silence.

"You had no trouble getting hold of the car?" Josselyn, Senior, pursued suddenly.

"No." Again she glanced at Gibbs, again was silent. Gibbs was the next speaker, with a cheerful and general inquiry:

"Who's doing what this afternoon?"

* * * * * * *

The studio was formally opened in September, with a tea. The artist's pretty, blue-eyed little wife was present on this occasion, suitably, nay, charmingly, dressed, chatting with neglected guests, keeping a watchful eye upon tea-cups, playing her part well. His father was also there, a handsome and dignified figure, erect, white-haired, obviously full of pride in his son. And the little, dark-haired boy was there, for a few minutes, keeping close to the musicians, amusing the ladies with his pretty French.

But it was his beautiful young stepmother who shared with Gibbs Josselyn the interest of his guests, who was with him the romantic and fascinating center of attraction. Lillian was at her loveliest, radiant and smiling, the mysterious and astonishing perfection of her face enhanced by the Juliet-like little cap of pearls that held her glorious hair in place, and by the rich colors of her gown. She wore a marvelous garment of old brocade, in which fruity colors were mingled with gold and silver threads, and from her shoulders a filmy black overgarment floated loose, caught with a bracelet of pearls at either wrist, and weighted loosely at its hem by dull embroideries in pearls. Lillian said that she had had this robe for years without an opportunity to wear it; this was her opportunity, and she made the most of it. Anything more lovely than the picture she made in it, even heartsick Ellen had to admit she could not imagine.

Wherever Lillian moved, the crowd swayed with her, and in it was always the silver head, and the tall, trimly built figure of the hero of the hour. Her rich, amused voice, with its undercurrents of mystery, of suggestion, was the foundation of the conversation. And when she turned to Gibbs, as she was constantly turning, and asked him a simple question and received his answering monosyllable, it would have been an obtuse observer indeed who did not instantly perceive the thrilling current of awakening passion that ran between the two. His lightest word to her was fraught with it, his most fleeting glance betrayed it. At the end of the long three hours, when the guests had lingered out, one by one, and she stood by the fireplace, tired, drooping, superb, barely raising her eyes as she spoke to him, they might have been alone in the world. What did he say as he bent toward her, what did his smiling eyes say?

Ellen did not know, or care. The words were nothing, the look was nothing, it was the trembling intensity with which they charged them that ate into her soul like acid upon a plate. None of them was sane now. Ellen perhaps the least of the three. She was burning with an agony of jealousy and doubt and anger far more painful than any actual fire would have been. She was conscious of Gibbs and Lillian every instant of the day.

They were not often alone together, after all. A moment in the long drawing room, before dinner, a few sentences murmured in her ear as Gibbs crossed the tennis court at Lillian's side, perhaps a stolen tea-hour once a week in the city; this was the most. Even for this there must be endless contriving and tireless intrigue. Ellen could not tell what was suspicion, what fact, what was mere innocent chance, and what was deliberate arrangement.

Sometimes, watching, watching, watching, forlorn and lonely, she longed to tear aside the veil of kindness and happiness in which her life was wrapped, and fling herself sobbing upon her husband.

"Gibbs, Gibbs, my darling! How much of it is true—how much of it is my wretched imagination? Have you let yourself come to care for her—have you forgotten me? I am your life—I am your past and present—I alone! Let us leave all this behind us and go somewhere where we may be poor again, and you shall paint, and I will mend and cook, and all the old joy will come back to us again!"

She dared not say it. What woman ever did dare? She had lost so much, she dared not risk more. Ellen never had had much self-confidence, she lost it all now. She became afraid. Lillian could take Gibbs' love away from her, perhaps Lillian could make him leave her and Tommy completely. Perhaps Lillian wanted more than his passing admiration. Well, and if so, what could a tearful, disheartened, crushed little Ellen do?

Gibbs was entirely unconscious of her suffering, because he was almost unconscious of her existence. He had never forgotten his wife for his business or his art, as many men do, but in the intensity of his new passion Ellen was completely lost to him. So might a man feel if he were suddenly stretched upon the rack.

Gibbs knew that Ellen was there, just as Tommy and Lizzie and his father were there, in the house at Wheatley Hills, but his senses responded to nothing but Lillian. He talked to his father, to Lizzie, to Ellen, and he read books to Tommy and even played with the child, but all the time his veins ran fire, and all the time his mind was busy anticipating the next moment he might have alone with her, or remembering the last.

A moment came when he had her in his arms. Only a moment, but it left its scar on them both. They were in the studio, Lillian and her husband had called to bring him home, and Lillian had run up the stairs, and come in upon him in the dusk. His subject, one of the winter's prospective debutantes, had gone away with her maid, and he was alone. Lillian, with her bright hair trimly covered by her motor-hat, and her figure lost in the folds of a loose, soft, mustard-colored coat, had come close to him, had stood staring at the picture with her mysterious eyes.

"Gibbs—it's too wonderful!"

"Like it?" Gibbs asked, trying to seem indifferent to her praise.

"What you might have done—what you might have done in a different environment!" Lillian said, as if to herself. "To tie you down to domesticities—you!"

The soft, deep voice died away into silence. It was twilight in the studio, the end of a wonderful Indian summer day was dying in the park. A cooler breeze than the city had known for many hours drifted in through the open studio windows, faintly the strains of a hurdy-gurdy came gaily from the street: "Where the River Shannon's Flowing—"

Gibbs was perhaps a little tired. The day had been long and hot and dirty. He glanced at Lillian, all fragrance and freshness, ready to whirl him away into another world of greenness and silence and beauty. Her frail white blouse was open at the throat, a faint perfume disengaged itself from her, and, through his sleeve, he felt the delicious warmth of the hand she had laid, as if unconsciously, upon his arm.

Suddenly he put his arms about her, crushed her to him, and kissed her hungrily. She did not resist him, but brushed her lovely face aside, so that his second kiss fell on her white temple, where the golden-brown hair was swept back. He felt her breast rise in a quick breath against his heart, and the fingers on his arm suddenly tightened.

When, after a dizzy moment, they stood facing each other, breathing hard, and still with fingers locked, she seemed as confused as he. She did not smile, there was a half-frightened, half-questioning look in her magnificent eyes.

"I'm sorry!" Gibbs said, in a whisper. "I'm awfully sorry!"

Lillian did not speak. She released her hands, and went slowly toward the door. Gibbs remained standing where he was, motionless.

At the door she hesitated, her back toward him in its loose coat of mustard color. Suddenly she turned, and over her shoulder gave him a swift, half-sad, half-mischievous smile. Then she was gone.

A vista seemed to open before Gibbs with that smile. For days he saw nothing else, for days there rang in his head only a bewildered question.

After this episode Lillian quite pointedly avoided him. She was seriously trying to get her thoughts in order. She was bewildered, herself. Lillian had begun her flirtation with Gibbs just as she began a flirtation with every other eligible man. Her way with no two of them was the same, but she rarely failed. Upon such men as Joe and George she wasted no time. Honest, simple, blue-eyed Ellen might have them unchallenged, and might discuss with them the proper culture of hollyhocks, and the weather, and Tommy's latest precocity. But Gibbs had been marked for her steel from the moment when her eyes found his silver head next to Ellen's, on the steamer deck.

Nothing but a kiss, of course, but that way trouble lies. What next?

Broadcast Beetle's Song

The broadcasting of a beetle's love-song to his mate was the feature of a recent radio program sent out from the London station of the British Broadcasting company. The occasion was a natural history lecture, in which the life cycle and habits of the beetle were discussed. At the appropriate moment the beetle, which had a special microphone to himself, was permitted to give his call. Many radio fans complimented the beetle on his performance.

Twilight of the Campaign

With but a few more days between this and election day, the forces on all sides are lined up for battle. In no campaign for years past has there been more interest manifested nor will there be a more intelligent vote cast.

Nationally, the Republican party has been assailed and condemned by the opposition on errors of a few of its members, but to the reasoning minds of the people of this great nation, we look for a rebuke to such fallacious attacks which will seat Mr. Coolidge by a safe and handsome majority.

The Democratic party has waged one of the most bitter and malicious campaigns known to ancient or modern politics. The President of the United States has been assailed in every conceivable manner, last of which and one the most deplorable, was an attack on this gentleman's personal appearance and ability and has acted as a boomerang to those who threw it.

Everything said by this paper during the campaign was proven by prominent members of Mr. Davis' own party, thus using words and making mention of acts of those in his own camp as means for his condemnation. The Outlook believes that a man who has served such gigantic corporations as the Standard Oil Co. and the Pierpont Morgan interests as their confidential attorney for years is not a fit man to place at the head of this government.

As to the local campaign, the Outlook has been fair and neighborly to those of the opposing side. No man or woman can truthfully say that it has offered one word detrimental to his or her character, ability or made an unfair attack on any candidate on the other ticket. Its position in public life is far apart from malicious and offensive partizanship.

We have dwelt on the merits of our own candidates while we have refrained from attacks on those who think differently. The die is cast and we are about to enter a new page to our political history. People have made up their minds and all that is said or done between now and election day will avail nothing. As the twilight deepens we will await the result with a clear conscience and with a knowledge of the fact that we have done no man or woman a willful injury.

To Ease Their Minds

Believing it would hurt the candidacy of Manuel B. Otero for Governor, the Democrats are circulating the report that I am to be appointed Warden of the state penitentiary if Manuel B. Otero is elected. I have received no promise of that or any other appointment from any member of the Otero family nor have I ever discussed the matter with them. I am not a candidate for any position and would not accept it, if it were offered me. I hope this will set at rest these unfounded rumors.

(Signed) Placido Jaramillo.

Rebekahs Will Entertain On Hallowe'en

The Rebekahs are planning to give one of the biggest dances of the season which will be called a hallowe'en dance, although it will be given on Saturday night, Nov. 1, so that the following day will be one on which tired patrons may rest after the good time. This is one of the coming events which will be looked forward to with much pleasure on account of the record this organization has made for itself in the past for entertaining. Good music and a grand good time for all who attend. Mark it down as a place for an evening's enjoyment at Lutz Hall on Nov. 1.

The Democratic Record of Economy and Efficiency

Decrease of state cash on hand, $1,921,003.11—from $3,317,443.17 to $1,396,450.06

Loss on bank deposits by state not less than $200,000

Loss on bank deposits by counties about $200,000

Loss on bank deposits by cities and towns, about $50,000

Loss on sale of state land at Gallup, $150,000

Loss on timber lands and timber, $150,000

Loss on highway equipment given state by government, about $700,000—worth $730,000 sold for $30,000

Loss by state, cities and counties of amounts expended for political audits, about $100,000

Loss on sale of state lands in large tracts to keep out small bidders, about $250,000

Loss on leases for oil at 1 per cent per acre instead of 5 cents, 10 cents or 25 cents, $250,000.

The present administration has cost the state Four Million Dollars that a republican administration would have saved. Hannett pledges himself to continue the policies.

Sam Kelsay, candidate for sheriff, taught school in Lincoln county twelve years and many of his former pupils who are "first voters" are looking forward to the time when they can cast their first votes for their former teacher. This is a most excellent recommendation for any candidate.

The Republican candidate for county clerk, Mrs. Ivy Lindsay Adams, asks the support of the tax-paying citizens of Lincoln county in return for efficient service to be rendered. That's all.

Two years ago the Oteros took no active part in the state campaign, then the democrats were loud in their praise of the Otero family, lauding them to the skies. Now, that Manuel Otero is a candidate for governor, they can say nothing too mean or low of the "Otero gang."—Consistency, thou art a jewel—not found in the democratic circles.

Twilight of the Campaign

With but a few more days between this and election day, the forces or all sides are lined up for battle. In no campaign for years past has there been more interest manifested nor will there be a more intelligent vote cast.

Nationally, the Republican party has been assailed and condemned by the opposition on errors of a few of its members, but to the reasoning minds of the people of this great nation, we look for a rebuke to such fallacious attacks which will seat Mr. Coolidge by a safe and handsome majority.

The Democratic party has waged one of the most bitter and malicious campaigns known to ancient or modern politics. The President of the United States has been assailed in every conceivable manner, last of which and one the most deplorable, was an attack on this gentleman's personal appearance and ability and has acted as a boomerang to those who threw it.

Everything said by this paper during the campaign was proven by prominent members of Mr. Davis' own party, thus using words and making mention of acts of those in his own camp as means for his condemnation. The Outlook believes that a man who has served such gigantic corporations as the Standard Oil Co. and the Pierpont Morgan interests as their confidential attorney for years is not a fit man to place at the head of this government.

As to the local campaign, the Outlook has been fair and neighborly to those of the opposing side. No man or woman can truthfully say that it has offered one word detrimental to his or her character, ability or made an unfair attack on any candidate on the other ticket. Its position in public life is far apart from malicious and offensive partizanship.

We have dwelt on the merits of our own candidates while we have refrained from attacks on those who think differently. The die is cast and we are about to enter a new page to our political history. People have made up their minds and all that is said or done between now and election day will avail nothing. As the twilight deepens we will await the result with a clear conscience and with a knowledge of the fact that we have done no man or woman a willful injury.

To Ease Their Minds

Believing it would hurt the candidacy of Manuel B. Otero for Governor, the Democrats are circulating the report that I am to be appointed Warden of the state penitentiary if Manuel B. Otero is elected. I have received no promise of that or any other appointment from any member of the Otero family nor have I ever discussed the matter with them. I am not a candidate for any position and would not accept it, if it were offered me. I hope this will set at rest these unfounded rumors.

Rebekahs Will Entertain On Hallowe'en

The Rebekahs are planning to give one of the biggest dances of the season which will be called a hallowe'en dance, although it will be given on Saturday night, Nov. 1, so that the following day will be one on which tired patrons may rest after the good time. This is one of the coming events which will be looked forward to with much pleasure on account of the record this organization has made for itself in the past for entertaining. Good music and a grand good time for all who attend. Mark it down as a place for an evening's enjoyment at Lutz Hall on Nov. 1.

The Democratic Record of Economy and Efficiency

Decrease of state cash on hand, $1,921,003.11—from $3,317,443.17 to $1,396,450,06

Loss on bank deposits by state not less than $200,000

Loss on bank deposits by counties about $200,000

Loss on bank dedosits by cities and towns, about $50,000

Loss on sale of state land at Gallup, $150,000

Loss on timber lands and timber, $150,000

Loss on highway equipment given state by government, about $700,000—worth $780,000 sold for $30,000

Loss by state, cities and counties of amounts expended for political audits, about $100,000

Loss on sale of state lands in large tracts to keep out small bidders, about $250,000

Loss on leases for oil at 1 per cent per acre instead of 5 cents, 10 cents or 25 cents, $250,000.

The present administration has cost the state Four Million Dollars that a republican administration would have saved. Hannett pledges himself to continue the policies.

Sam Kelsay, candidate for sheriff, taught school in Lincoln county twelve years and many of his former pupils who are "first voters" are looking forward to the time when they can cast their first votes for their former teacher. This is a most excellent recommendation for any candidate.

The Republican candidate for county clerk, Mrs. Ivy Lindsay Adams, asks the support of the tax-paying citizens of Lincoln county in return for efficient service to be rendered. That's all.

Two years ago the Otero took no active part in the state campaign, then the democrats were loud in their praise of the Otero family, lauding them to the skies. Now, that Manuel Otero is a candidate for governor, they can say nothing too mean or low of the "Otero gang."—Consistency, thou art a jewel—not found in the democratic circles.

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY years old on November 10, 1924, will be the United States Marine Corps—a unique organization adjudged by the military experts of all nations to be the most efficient fighting force in the world. The anniversary will be celebrated in Washington in connection with the Second National Assembly of the Marine Corps league, November 10, and the sixth anniversary of the signing of the Armistice, November 11. There will be a considerable attendance in addition to the delegates, as Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, national commandant of the league and commandant of the Marine Corps, has extended in his official call an invitation to those "who at some time may have worn the Globe, Anchor and Eagle." The Armistice day program includes a parade and a visit to the national shrine where lies the "Unknown Soldier" in the National cemetery at Arlington.

The history of the United States Marine Corps is briefly this: November 10, 1775, the Second Continental congress, actual hostilities of the Revolution having been begun, called for "good seamen or so acquainted with maritime affairs as to be able to serve to advantage by sea when required." The Marine Corps was formally established June 25, 1776, with a major, Samuel Nichols, in command. It served through the Revolution, and then disappeared, together with the navy. In 1798, when the navy was reorganized, the Marine Corps was re-established with 881 officers and men. That was also the year the War department was organized. So the Marine Corps is older than either the army or navy.

And the Marine Band is of course a national institution. It began with the Marine Corps—as a drum and fife corps. In 1800 the Marines on a United States frigate kidnaped some Italian musicians from a port near Naples. Sharp diplomatic correspondence resulted in an order for the return of the Italians, but they chose to stay with the Marines. Nowadays "The President's Own" is the official band of the American government—and world famous.

The Marine Corps grew in importance and strength as the years went by. In 1902, for example, the Corps numbered 180 officers and 6,000 enlisted men, with a brigadier general in command. When we entered the World war the strength was 877 officers and 9,047 men. By 1918 the Marines had been increased to 2,017 officers and 75,000 men. The Corps now has 1,098 officers and 27,400 enlisted men.

The Marines are out of the ordinary in many ways. For one thing, they don't really belong to either the army or the navy. They are practically an independent defense unit, though they are under the nominal direction of the secretary of the navy in time of peace and of the secretary of war in time of war. "Send for the Marines!" is a cry that often goes up from Americans endangered by hostilities in some foreign land. And the Marines can land and do their protection act without their presence being tantamount to a declaration of war against that nation. Usually they manage to get along without a fight, for they have established a reputation for diplomacy in difficult situations almost equal to their efficiency in actual hostilities. Anyway, the stereotyped message that quickly gets back to Washington is the world-famous, "The Marines have landed and have the situation well in hand."

The Marine Corps, as a whole, may be said to be Uncle Sam's "Handy Man" in times of peace. There seems to be nothing it cannot do and it appears to be doing a little of everything. Right now, for example, there are Marines in China and in Honduras for the protection of Americans and American interests. They are about finishing their withdrawal from Santo Domingo, after rehabilitating that republic, and are still in Haiti on the same kind of job. In Philadelphia, which borrowed him for the purpose, Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler of the Marines, trying to "bootlegger" the City of Brotherly Love, which nowadays is in sad need of rehabilitation. And what do you suppose the Marines are doing in Guam—why, nothing less than leading reaction of natives in a determined attack on Aspidiotous destructor, a new scale insect pest which is destroying the coconut palms, banana trees and the alligator pear trees of the island! You will find a Marine guard at times in front of the Treasury building in Washington. Arthur Whitcomb, a Marine Corps bugler, sounded "Taps" at the grave of Woodrow Wilson and of Calvin Coolidge, Jr., and so it goes—at home and abroad. Wherever there is a United States battleship, there is a detachment of Marines—"Semper Fidelis" and always ready for efficient action.

Don't make the mistake of thinking the Marines are merely fighting machines. It takes a real man to get into the Marines. He has to be young, able-bodied and of good character. And he has to pass stringent mental, moral and physical tests upon admission. His term of enlistment is four years—and he will know a lot more at the end of that four years than he did when he joined.

A cursory glance at recent numbers of the Leatherneck, the official organ of the Marines, one, finds mention of all sorts of activities in all parts of the world. Here are a few: Aviation training at Pensacola; re-enacting of the battle of Antietam of the Civil war, which attracted 50,000 spectators; formation of football teams for the fall battles; new courses of study in the Marine Corps institute; rifle practice at Guantanamo, Cuba; broadcasting of a program by the United States Marine Band at Washington; various baseball games, usually won by the Marines; rifle tournament victories, picnics, hikes and dances at various posts; successes at the water carnival at San Diego and the Atlantic City pageant; a consideration of the prospects for championship honors of C. J. Pratash, the latest heavyweight boxer developed by the Marines; letters from Marines all over the world detailing interesting experiences, especially one from a Marine who has just finished a cruise of 40,000 miles in 22 months on the Pittsburgh and Orion.

High officers in the Marine Corps get their places by working for them. Take, for instance, the career of "Johnny, the Hard," General Lejeune was born in 1867 in Louisiana, and is a graduate of Louisiana State university, United States Naval academy (1888) and Army War college (1910). He began his sea life as a naval cadet by being wrecked on the U. S. S. Vandalia in the hurricane at Apia, Samoa, in 1889. The next year he won his commission as second lieutenant and thereafter he moved steadily up until his appointment as major general in 1918. He has been in command of the Marines since July 1, 1920. During the intervening years we find him in command of a battalion in Panama during the year of excitement over the Panama canal (1903-4); of a brigade in the Philippines (1908-9); of a brigade and regiment during the taking and occupation of Vera Cruz in 1914. He arrived in France June 8, 1918, and was a participant in various engagements from St. Mihiel to the occupation of the Coblenz bridgehead. He returned in August of 1919 in command of the Second division. And with all that he has managed to be a husband and a father.

The high up officers of the Marines are from disciplinarians—and at the same time "Big Brothers" or "Uncles" or something of the kind to their men. Take Maj. Gen. Joseph H. Pendleton (retired). He's "Uncle Joe" to his men and his wife is "Aunt Mary." Uncle Joe's name has even been interpolated into the "Hymn of the Marines," which begins:

> From the Halls of Montezuma,
> To the shores of Tripoli,
> We fight our country's battles
> On the land and on the sea.

And when Uncle Joe's nephews sing the hymn they add:

> The Marines in Nicaragua
> Were the boys to fill the bill,
> And Uncle Joe he was the lad
> Took Coyotepe Hill.

Coyotepe Hill figured in 1912, when he landed in the Central American republic with a detachment of Marines to find the revolutionists occupying a fortified hill believed to be impregnable and raining death and destruction on all the country around. High Uncle Joe led his men in the attack up Coyotepe Hill and [illegible] dispersed guerrilla. That ended the revolution.

General Pendleton entered the Naval academy in 1875 from Rochester, Pa., and retired last summer at sixty-four. His forty years of service have taken him pretty nearly all over the world: Alaska, Cuba, Mexico, Philippines, Guam, Hawaii, Samoa, Santo Domingo, Turkey, Algiers, Egypt. Aunt Mary, who was Mary Helen Fay of Annapolis when she married Uncle Joe in 1884, has always gone with him, whether his command was in San Francisco or Olongapo.

When Uncle Joe retired, the scene was affecting, and the ceremonies were greatly delayed because he and his men had to swap stories of the old days—many of which are not to be found in the military records of the United States of America; no, sir. Incidentally, he retired at San Diego, where he was in command of the Fifth brigade and Second Advanced Base Force of the United States Marines and in full charge of the $5,000,000 Marine Corps training station, for the scheme and construction of which he is largely to be credited. And here's a climax to his career which shows in what regard Uncle Joe is held. He was elected by acclamation commander of the San Diego post of the American Legion. Can you imagine a brigadier general of anything being elected commander of an American Legion post, let alone by acclamation!

There is an astonishing amount of "hero worship" in the United States for the Marines. Maybe it is in part due to the romance of adventure that surrounds the Corps. Why, a Marine of any experience can spin yarns that shame fiction. Let's take for example the career of Sergt. John L. Prater of Nutley, N. J., retired at forty-two, with a bungalow, a wife, a little daughter and a job as a bank guard in Newark. In his twenty years of service he's seen enough and done enough to fill 20 volumes.

Sergeant Prater was rejected as too young when he tried to get into the Rough Riders at sixteen. In 1903 he enlisted at Kansas City, the first Marine from Indian territory. And he certainly has lived up to the legend, "Join the Marines and see the world." He passed Christmas twenty years ago in the Holy Land. The Turks were killing the Syrians, and the Brooklyn was sent to prevent bloodshed. For many weeks Sergeant Prater stood guard over the Presbyterian School for Syrian Girls in Beirut. Then came orders to proceed to Abyssinia to make a treaty with King Menelik.

That same year, on the return trip, Sergeant Prater saw the then German emperor at Kiel. Next came the Perdicaris alive or Raisuli dead expedition to Africa by order of President Roosevelt. In 1905 Prater had a look at Edward VII in London. That was the year the United States decided to bring back the body of John Paul Jones from France. Prater was one of a detail of six Marines that escorted the body. Then Roosevelt picked him out for his personal orderly.

When the Marine Corps was called upon to furnish a guard for President Wilson, Prater was selected. He remained with the party when President Wilson visited King George and Queen Mary in Buckingham palace; when they visited King Albert in Brussels and Victor Emmanuel in Rome.

It should not be necessary here to dwell on the services of the Marines in the World war, where they lived up to their reputation and won new fame. Every good American knows that on all French maps what was once Belleau Wood at Chateau-Thierry is now "Wood of the Marine Brigade." When it was formally named and was consecrated last year as the final resting place of its Marine dead Marshal Foch proclaimed its battle "the turning point of the World war, the jumping off place of the final allied offensive and march across the Rhine."

That's a fair sample of the fighting qualities of the Marines. And it gives an American an added thrill to know that the Marines are so deadly largely because of their skill with the rifle. For we invented the rifle and with it we won our independence and achieved our march across the continent. It is our national weapon. And we have the most accurate and hardest-hitting rifle there is. We Americans lead the world in rifle shots and the Marine Corps leads our various military services. Every Marine is expected to be at least a qualified marksman, able to stop a man four times out of five, shooting offhand at 200 yards. Then comes the sharpshooter. The expert riflemen tops them all—and the rifle in his hands is sure death. As to the way the Marines shoot in time of peace, look up the records of the rifle tournaments. Commit Germany officially in the World war as to "battle, murder and sudden death" when the "Devil Dogs" go into action with rifle and bayonet.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

By Mary Graham Bonner

GOOD AND BAD

You know there are the twins who live in some of the story books and they have a perfectly wretched time of it.

They Must Be the Twins.

They have another home, too.

Their other home is a vine-covered house and there they are kept by vines which won't let them get away for real fun. They have everything so snarled up—they're not pretty vines at all.

They entangle themselves about everything, for they are the vines of untruth and they work quite unfairly.

The twins had once told their story to the boy and girl adventurers, but they wanted to tell it again, so when the Fairy Queen went a-calling one day she stopped to see them.

They had asked if she would come to see them and they had sent their message by Master Thoughtfulness.

They were not having quite such a hard time as they once had had and they were hoping before long to be free.

They thought perhaps they could get the Fairy Queen to send messages to grown-ups for them, and so they wanted to see her and ask her about it.

They had heard from Master Thoughtfulness how lovely she was and they felt sure she would take their messages for them.

She wandered along some distance until she found their house. It was so covered with these entangled, snarled vines that she could hardly see it at first.

Then she could discover from an upper window two children who looked almost exactly alike.

"They must be the twins," she said to herself. "And this is just where Master Thoughtfulness told me I'd find them."

"Are you the Fairy Queen?" one of the children called out.

"Here, come back here," said the other, and one twin gave the other a great push.

"I'm ready to help you, dear," the other said. "Don't be unkind to me. I'll forgive you."

The Fairy Queen thought the twins seemed very strange. She didn't like the one whose voice sounded so sweet, nor the one who had given the push.

The latter seemed so cross and the former seemed much too sweet.

But the Fairy Queen managed to get through the vines with the aid of her magic wand and she went upstairs to see the twins.

They looked nicer to her now.

"We're both sorry," they said together. "Now we'll tell you our story.

"We can't help acting like that at times. We don't want to, but we can't help it. It has become such a habit."

They both talked together a good deal of the time, or one spoke and then the other went on with the story. This was their story.

"You see," they said, "we are the good little child and the bad little child of the story books.

"We are kept here by vines of untruth and the only way we can be free is if people who tell our stories will only tell the truth about it.

"For so long we've had so wretched a time. One of us always has to be so very, very bad, and the other has to be so very, very good.

"Now we don't like that. If the one of us who is bad wants to be good it is not allowed. And the good one can't be bad.

"You know, Fairy Queen, that isn't fair. We're both good and bad—both of us. At heart we're quite natural.

"And oh, it is so unfair when these story books are made up and we're forced to do work we don't want to do. We're forced to be very good and very bad.

"We'd Both Be Sorry," They Said.

"You know children aren't like that—any more than grown-ups.

"There is bad and good all mixed in together—and no one feels like being better when they hear of anyone like the good twin who is so good that she just isn't natural! That isn't the way to make anyone want to become so good. Goodness shouldn't be so sugary and dull and pleased with itself. Goodness should have life to it and joyousness and all such things."

As the twins talked and the Fairy Queen promised she would do her best to see that they were given a fair chance, for she thought, too, that it wasn't fair to have them as they were—the poor good little child of the story book and the poor bad little child of the story book.

Troops Patrol Nogales, Mexico.

Nogales, Sonora.—Mexican troops continue to patrol the Chinese colony of this city in a drive against the members of the Chinese imperialistic faction who are sought by the government on charges of espionage.

Lincoln Must Stand Trial.

Geneva, Ill.—The jury which has been hearing evidence as to the mental condition of Warren J. Lincoln, who killed his wife and her brother and sealed their heads in a concrete block, returned a verdict finding Lincoln to be sane at this time. The verdict means that Lincoln, the Aurora, Ill., horticulturist-lawyer, who kept the authorities puzzled for months by confessions and repudiations before he finally led them to a dump pile where he pointed out the block of concrete containing the heads of his victims, must stand trial for the slayings.

Seal Skins Sold at Auction.

St. Louis.—Seventeen thousand government-owned seal skins from Alaska were offered for sale at an auction in the establishment of the Funke Fur Company. For the first time there were offered lots of dyed seal skins of a golden chestnut hue, while 14,000 were black and the remaining 1,000 were offered raw. Another government-owned lot ready for auction consisted of 787 blue fox skins, fifteen white fox and four sea otter.

Farm Implement Sales Increase.

Washington.—Recovering from the slump of 1920, farm equipment manufactures last year far surpassed 1920 with an increase of 74 per cent and were 11.3 per cent above the 1921 production. Census bureau statistics announced for the annual census of manufactures of farm equipment places the value of the output at $[illegible],701,357, as compared with $[illegible] in 1920 and $[illegible] in 1921. Manufacturers of furniture showed a marked increase.

Be Careful When Choosing Lining

Interior of Coat Should Be Soft, Attractive, Serviceable and Easy.

Did you ever "buy a coat for its lining?" inquires a fashion correspondent in the Kansas City Star.

Then you're probably a devotee of lovely linings. You know that if you buy a handsome lining for a wrap, you are sure to see that the wrap itself and the gown you wear under it do not cheapen the lining. Every garment you have, however simple in style, must "live up" to that lining.

So, as you pause at the lining counter, select your material with an eye to beauty as well as durability. It is generally economical, anyway, to get as good a lining as you can afford. But it is also quite possible to get an inexpensive one that will both look and wear well.

The best economy is to buy a guaranteed silk for your lining provided you can afford one of good quality. A good grade of some well-wearing and good-looking mercerized cotton cloth, however, is infinitely preferable to a cheap silk.

Foulards and crepe de chine are rather expensive, but they are among the best of lining silks, since they are usually durable as well as beautiful.

Satin, like silk, is lovely if it is good satin. But loosely woven satin "catches on everything." Here, again, if you cannot afford the best, you will do well to choose your lining from mercerized materials in satin weave. Sateen, for instance, will not only outwear many a coat, but may be had in quite handsome effects.

Since your lining should be comfortable as well as ornamental, you will avoid any material that would be rough or "scratchy" against the neck and arms. The durability of stiff linings is uncertain, too, so softness is, in general, the first thing to look for in linings.

Firm weave, which will not permit of "roughing up" and pulling, is next; and then, don't forget that your coat lining must have a fast color, for the protection of the gowns and blouses you wear underneath it. Test the fastness of the color by rubbing a white handkerchief over the cloth. If any color comes off on your handkerchief, you may be sure that friction and perspiration would mean the ruination of any garments that come in contact with the material.

All in all, the requirements of a desirable lining, whether expensive or not, are that it should be soft, attractive, serviceable, not easily crushed, and, above all, comfortable.

Tunic Blouse of Henna Faille, Scallop Trim

Displaying an attractive tunic blouse of henna faille. The trimming of rows of scallops in the same material goes to make up an outfit that will appeal to many women.

Australian Leopard and Beaver Make This Coat

Australian leopard and beaver, with bands of dark fur, affording an added jauntiness to the spotted pelt, combine to make a charming short garment.

Lingerie Ribbon Strap Gift for Bride's Shower

A lingerie strap made of ribbon will make an attractive gift for a bride's shower. The strap is put around the piles of lingerie, and keeps the different garments in neat separate piles in the drawer. It may also be used in the linen closet for keeping the linen pieces stacked together. To make the strap get a piece of ribbon two inches wide and a yard and three-quarters long. After forming a loop with the ribbon the ends are run through a casing which is made from two pieces of cardboard as follows: Cut two pieces of cardboard two inches long and an inch and a half wide. Cover these pieces on both sides with white ribbon or silk. Work a little cross-stitch pattern on the silk which is to form the top side in the same color as the ribbon from which the strap is made. Sew the two pieces of covered cardboard together by overcasting the edges at the top and bottom, leaving a casing through which to run the ends of the ribbon.

Nightrobe De Luxe

The nightrobe de luxe is of blue silk crepe, with a sash of reversible. Tiny pink rosebuds are strewn the length of the sash and a large pink rose decorates each ribbon end.

Old Friends Are Found Among "New" Fabrics

Among the "new" fabrics for fall some are new and some are not. Some are very old friends with entirely new names. There are some also which are old friends, but so changed in their appearance that for a moment we seem to have merely a bowing acquaintance, until we examine them more closely. But whatever the appearance of the material we are sure to find on touching it that it is always softer and more pliable to the touch.

We seldom hear anyone say anything about blue serge now. It goes by a half-dozen different names, and, while it has lost none of its warmth, it seems much more closely woven, and is decidedly lighter in weight. Other weaves, like wool repe and wool crepes, have divided honors to some extent and tricotine has also appeared in the one-piece frocks that used to know only serge.

What is said of serge is equally true of the materials of suede-like surface. One seldom hears the word "duvetyn" say more and in reality there is very little of that fabric, as we knew it, seen anywhere. But some of the new fawn-skin fabrics know about a hair's breadth of change from duvetyn; they are thinner, lighter and more supple, while losing none of their warmth. Certainly there are all kinds of fabrics for coat and frock in the pile kinds, but that pile is not so high and not so thick. It looks as if it might have been clipped down and smoothed off. Even where there are checks or cords in the material the blocks do not rise so high from the surface, except in some of the sports materials.

Small Hat With High Square Crown Is Liked

Happily for all concerned, several new styles have taken the place of the little bell-shaped hat in the affections of the wearers. The tiny hat still rules supreme, and no wonder, for it seems to fit the tubular outline to perfection. The small hat with a high square crown is one of the newest and best liked hats of the moment, and these are seen with the brim turned up in front or in back, or with a brim that is straight.

Flexible Bracelet Is One of Newest Styles

Bracelets of any and every sort are the rage. They are wide, being of an antique design in gold, if one chooses, or composed of several strands of beads, imitation pearls, gold or silver.

Flexible bracelets are the newest style. These are narrow, fine in workmanship, in one of the metals, the more expensive being set with stones, real or semiprecious.

The "slave link" bracelet has become a glorious piece of jewelry in some of the metropolitan shops. The gold links alternate with rings of real jade, amber, chrysophrase, rose quartz or any one of the semiprecious stones that are now so popular. These rings are large, the size of a silver half dollar, and make a very showy ornament. Almost every woman one meets is wearing a "slave" bracelet with its attached "love link."

Plan to Protect Trees From Mice

Hungry Rodents Liable to Do Injury Any Time After November 1.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The far-sighted orchardist will make preparations to guard against possible injury to his trees by hungry field mice which gnaw the trunks and roots. Such injury is liable to occur at any time after November 1, although most of it is usually inflicted in midwinter or very early in spring under cover of heavy snow and when the more favored food supply is running low, according to the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Menace Made Greater.

That serious injury to orchard trees by mice occurs only at irregular intervals makes the menace the greater, for it usually catches the orchardist unprepared and wholly unaware of the damage being done until the melting snow in spring uncovers girdled trunks, or the wilting trees in midsummer betray the hidden work of the mice on the roots.

Preventive measures cost little in comparison with the protection afforded, and although frequently a girdled tree may be saved by timely bridge grafting, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Many progressive fruit growers realize this truth and each fall and several times during the winter examine their orchards carefully for mouse signs. If mice are present they prepare to destroy them or take steps to prevent their attacks upon trees.

Method of Prevention.

Methods of preventing mouse injury vary according to the species of mouse and the cultural practices followed. In much of the eastern United States pine mice are present, and their injury is usually inflicted below the surface of the ground. It is necessary to destroy such mice unless they are driven out by deep and clean cultivation of the whole orchard. Where meadow mice only are concerned, such methods as mechanical protectors and repellent washes are practicable, although the destruction of the mice is preferable.

General information relative to methods of coping with field mice is contained in Farmers' Bulletin 1307, "Mouse Control in Field and Orchard," and more specific information to meet questions not covered by the bulletin will be given to anyone describing details of their problems to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Surplus Vegetables and Fruits Should Be Saved

Fall seems to be the season of surplus fruits and vegetables, and we should make every effort to save them for winter use. Canning, drying, pickles, jams and preserves offer an infinite number of combinations and possibilities for these things. If you make more than the family can use, try and find a private market for them in town—homes, stores and hospitals. Many farm housewives have made quite an income in this way.

Cull fruits can be made into delicious jams, conserves, preserves, butters, spiced whole fruits, pickled fruits, jellies, etc. Underripe fruits make the best spiced and pickled fruits, while overripe ones make the best jams, and conserves.

Unripe vegetables—tomatoes, etc.—make excellent chopped pickles. Cucumbers, which get ripe, may be made into special sweet pickles. Apples are good in mixed pickles. The surplus green tomatoes, cabbage, onions, cauliflower, cucumbers, and even green beans may be used up in mixed pickles. Get some good recipes and try them out.

Soy Beans Are Superior to Alfalfa and Clover

Many people who have worked with soy beans find that the hay will keep for long periods in the cock without spoiling. In this respect it seems to be better than such legumes as alfalfa and clover. Great care must be taken to prevent the loss of leaves, as they are the most valuable part of the hay. A good quality of soy bean hay may be harvested by letting the hay stay in the swath until it is completely cured. It is then raked up while damp with dew and after a few hours of sunshine is ready to take in. Hay made in this way may be just as palatable as that cured in the cock, but does not look so well.

Building Laying Houses

Laying-houses should be finished as early as possible, as they are somewhat damp when first completed. It is safer to keep the pullets out until dry sunny days have taken out a lot of the moisture. When houses are built late in the fall it is difficult to do a good job if the lumber is constantly being soaked by fall rains. If you build with wet lumber many cracks are apt to appear when the hot sun begins to dry the boards.

Clean Houses Essential

Clean poultry houses are essential if the comfort of the fowls and their laying capacity are to be maintained. Now is a good time to clean up. Remove all manure, then scrape the walls and floor clean with a hoe or spade. Finally give the entire interior a coat of whitewash.

Corn Silage Hints Made by Experts

Prepare When the Moisture Content is 65 per Cent.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Corn silage is best prepared when the corn is cut at a stage containing about 65 or 70 per cent moisture, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture. This may be told when the lower leaves on the stalk are turning brown, about 90 per cent of the kernels are dented, and 75 per cent are so hardened that no moisture can be squeezed out.

The length to which the silage is cut should be from one-half to one inch. Silage cut this short will pack better and the silo will hold its maximum tonnage. Also the chances for the silage to spoil are considerably reduced.

In filling the silo packing is essential. The common practice is to keep the sides slightly higher than the center and to tramp the whole surface thoroughly.

If the silage is too dry to pack well, water should be added. This is best done by directing a hose in the blower. Well-packed and moistened silage is less likely to mold.

When the silo is filled the silage should be covered to prevent spoilage. A layer of cut corn or sorghum stalks from which the ears or grain have been removed does this effectively.

Unproductive Idle Land Made to Yield Profits

Idle land like idle labor is a detriment to any county. Taxes must be paid on all land. Why not grow a crop of timber on worn-out, sandy, broken, or wet lands not needed for agriculture? This pertinent question for farmers is answered by W. R. Mattoon, extension forester, with the United States Department of Agriculture, who reminds us that there are several million acres of such land which should be producing timber because it is the most profitable crop that can be grown on such lands.

Timberland that has been cut heavily and burned over usually has so few seed-bearing trees that it does not get well set in young growth. All sorts of "weed trees" come in, like sweet gums, sassafras, persimmon, and others, often preventing the more valuable trees from coming in.

Pines are easily propagated, and denuded lands can be made to grow a full crop of pine with a little effort. Experiments show that slash pine seed can be successfully sown on wet lands, such as savannah or crawfish lands. About two pounds of seed per acre should be used. Sowings on land with one year's grass have given better results than on freshly burned-over land.

Iobred Wheat Is Again Ready for Distribution

Iobred wheat is again ready for distribution in lots of sufficient size to seed one acre in comparison with some home-grown variety. This wheat is being distributed by the Iowa Agricultural Experiment association this year for a charge of $2.60 for 1½ bushels.

Reports received from a number of those receiving this wheat last fall indicate that it came through the winter in fine shape in all parts of the state. Its record at the experiment station during the past several years would indicate that it is an unusually hardy strain as well as a good yielder.

Iobred is a variety which can quite readily be distinguished from other varieties as it has a very plump berry and also a very distinct bronze-colored chaff which makes it rather distinct from the average variety of winter wheat.

Those interested in securing enough of this seed to try one acre of it should write to the Iowa Agricultural Experiment association, Ames, Iowa, sending $2.60 to cover cost of seed before the limited supply is exhausted. It is now ready for distribution.

Farm Hints

Lack of paint not only lets a building look ramshackle; it lets it rot.

* * *

It pays to fatten up your poultry for a week or ten days before shipping to market.

* * *

By keeping the barn clean and well ventilated much of the dirt and dust can be eliminated.

* * *

It pays to cull out non-producing chickens to save feed and labor and give the others a chance.

* * *

When the rush of farm work is over is a good time to make plans for improving the housing of farm poultry for the coming winter.

* * *

Where oats are planted for either soil improvement or hay, it is a good practice to plant 20 pounds of vetch seed per acre with the oats.

* * *

Although weeds may be young, they are never "young and innocent" for from the first they rob the ground of moisture and food which the vegetables need.

* * *

It's a good plan to have a fall clean-up around the farm premises and barnlot, before things freeze up for the winter. An orderly looking place gives the owner a feeling of pride.

NERVOUS & HALF-SICK WOMEN

Relieved by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

These Three Letters Prove It

Lowell, Mass.—"I am sending you a few lines to let you know what good your medicine has done for me. I want you to let every one know that it has helped me in nervous troubles. I have four children and you know there is a lot to do where children are. They would come in from school and they would start telling me about their little troubles but I could not stand it. I had to send them away. I could not even walk on the street alone I was so nervous. I found one of your books and read it and then I saw in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I got it and had taken one bottle when I saw a change in myself. I was surprised. The children can talk all they want to now and it does not bother me. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Joseph Lemieux, 84 South Street, Lowell, Mass.

Felt Like A New Woman

Springfield, Missouri.—"For four or five months I was run-down, nervous, my back ached and I did not feel like doing a thing. Sometimes my legs ached and felt like they would break and I had a hurting in my sides. I had been reading in the newspapers the letters of other women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the advertising of it appealed to me so I bought some and saw results in almost no time. I had hardly been able to do my own work and after taking the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I recommend it to my friends who have troubles like I did, and hope they will find the same results."—Mrs. M. Carpenter, 607 W. Chase Street, Springfield, Missouri.

40 Years Old, Feels Like 20

Hagerstown, Md.—"I was very bad off with backache, a bearing-down feeling in my body and a pain in my left side. I could not be on my feet at times and once I was so bad I walked bent over to one side for three weeks. My sister read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got me a bottle. I got so much relief that I took more until I was well. I am 40 years old and feel like 20. I am sure this medicine will help all women."—Mrs. Mary E. Sandy, 436 W. Franklin Street, Hagerstown, Md.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent of these replies are "Yes."

That means that 98 out of every 100 women who take this medicine for the ailments for which it is recommended are benefited by it.

All druggists are having increased sales of this medicine.

New Words

According to compilers of a standard dictionary, the general use of the radio since its invention has added 5,000 new words and terms to the English language. Flapperdom has added several hundred more, and the poor compilers were just getting over the shock of having to define 7,000 words and terms which our participation in the unpleasantness in the late world mixup brought to the average vocabulary. Now what to do? We have been informed previously that women talk too much anyway—that "words is what they ain't got nothin' else but"—In the language of a popular writer of negro tales; yet it is proved by this company that less than 25 per cent of the new words discussed have been invented or coined by womenfolk, men having done the dastardly deed!—Kansas City Times.

Dalai Lama Lights Up

Lhasa, "Sacred and Forbidden" seat of the Dalai Lama, 12,000 feet up in the air amid the bleak crags of the Himalayas, is to have a modern hydro-electric plant. Already a specially designed turbine and generator and other necessary equipment are traveling toward Lhasa along perilous mountain trails on pack mules and soon the age-blackened temple walls and prayer wheels will glow with a new light from the western world. The installation will be made entirely by Thibetans, since white men may not enter the city.

G. A. Pearson, Silviculturalis in charge of the Southwestern Experiment Station near Flagstaff, Ariz., is in the Sacramento Division of the Forest on various silvicultural studies, and is accompanied by Mr. Salton of the local office. In addition to studying general forest conditions careful examination is being made of various cutover areas in the Penasco section and a trip probably will be made also over the blowdown areas of the Sacramento River country.

Ranger R. F. Hinchey has been permanently assigned to the Weed district in relief of Ranger Ray E. King and Supervisor Arthur is spending the week going over various district matters with him.

A report was recently received from Ranger R. B. Ewing covering a forest fire in the Turkey Canyon country of the White Mountain - Patos district which resulted from an attempt of two small boys to smoke a chipmunk out of a hollow stump. The parents of the boys as result of an interview agreed to pay the cost of the suppression of the fire and later held a woodshed conference in which the boys figured prominently as conferees.

Carrizozo High School Notes

(By Robert Pooge)

The boys' basket ball team went to Corona last Saturday, where the county teacher's Association was held and played with Corona. Our boys left here with the intention of winning and they won by a score of 15 to 11 The girls did not play on account of the Corona team not being properly organized. Both Carrizozo teams will play with the Capitan teams at this place Saturday next and a good attendance is desired. The sixth and seventh grades have made posters for the business portion of town to advertise the games, which is greatly appreciated by the teams and the high school. All the Carrizozo teachers attended the convention at Corona. There was a large crowd and the program was greatly enjoyed by all. Following is the Eighth Grade poem composed by Beatrice Treat.

We're just a bunch of girls and boys
In number about thirty-one
School work, we know each one enjoys
Though we're full of laughter and fun.

We do not boast, but you just bet
We fight and beat arithmetic.
We fight and never yet
Let work o'ercome us, 'cause we stick.
Each of us has great ambitions,
We've songsters, authors, orators,
Artists, and we have musicians,
We've presidents and senators.
High school by storm we plan to take,
Each one of our exams we'll pass,
Work and study we'll ne'er forsake,
We, the studious eighth grade class.

Corona Notes

(By Rena Williams.)

The Lincoln County Teachers' Association was held in Corona in the High School building and the school gymnasium last Friday and Saturday. Fifty-six teachers and speakers were present, besides this there were many visitors and guests. Instructive and interesting addresses were given by Hon. W. H. Robertson of Montezuma College, Miss Isabel Eckles, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Mr. Frank Caroon, president of the New Mexico Normal University, and Dr. H. L. Kent of the A. & M. College at Las Cruces.

The musical program was as follows: Several numbers by the Corona orchestra, a piano solo by Miss Merle McClure of Capitan, a clarinet solo by Ethel Mae Copeland, a vocal solo by Ruth Stuart, a piano solo by Mrs. Gladys Clements of Corona, "Roamin' in the Gloomin'" by the Carrizozo boys, and "Oh Fair New Mexico," by the Corona girls' glee club. Four Corona girls, trained by Mrs. Annabelle Vaughn, contributed an interesting folk dance.

Friday evening, the girls of the Domestic Science Class, assisted and supervised by their teacher, Miss Lillian Ashburn, served dinner in the domestic science room in the basement of the gymnasium. The class room was tastefully decorated in colorose and blue. The proceeds from the dinner will be used in this department of the school.

At noon, the ladies of Corona served a free barbecue dinner and the visitors were taken care of at the hotels and Corona homes.

Saturday evening, the Corona and Carrizozo boys battled for honors at basket ball, the result being 11 to 15 in favor of Carrizozo. After the game, a dinner was given to the players and visitors.

Miss Bertha Collins, who is teaching at Cedarvale, attended the Teacher's Association here last week and visited with her sister, Mrs. J. T. Stone and her many Corona friends.

Capitan School Notes

(Superintendent F. S. Copeland)

All the Capitan teachers attended the Corona convention. Miss McClure gave a piano selection and Mrs. Copeland played a clarinet solo.

Our county superintendent, Mrs. Coe, spent Tuesday in visiting the Capitan schools.

Some good geography talks were given Tuesday morning. George Bryan and Frances Gardenhire gave some first hand information on the meat packing industry, and Emelia Fritz told of her trip to Corona where she attended the teachers' convention.

Our Hallowe'en handiwork this season is exceptionally good. Music is going well in the grades under the direction of Miss McClure. Books have been secured in which the pupils are rapidly progressing.

On Thursday, Oct. 24, both the basket ball teams of Lincoln played the Capitan teams on the latter's court. The visitors' masculine aggregation showed much improvement but could not hold the more experienced Capitan five. The latter won 36 to 10. The girls' game was fiercely contested in more than one way and the final outcome vacillated back and forth until the time-keeper's whistle ended the tigerish and titanic struggle. The score for the first quarter was zero on each side and at the end of the half stood at 2 to 2. The exciting denouement revealed 10 to 8 in favor of Capitan.

The Capitan athletic teams go to Carrizozo for the return games this Saturday.

There will be a big Hallowe'en dance at Fort Stanton next Saturday night, Nov. 1. The dance will be given by the Entertainment Committee of the Seamen's Social Club which is a guarantee of success. You are respectfully invited.

Dr. and Mrs. F. S. Mann and Mrs. T. B. H. Anderson were over from Fort Stanton on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Burks, Mrs. Chloe Fisher and Mrs. Robert Hale were callers at this office on Wednesday from Capitan.

Woman's Missionary Society

The Women's Missionary Society of the M. E. Church will serve a chicken dinner and chili supper on election day at the room next door to the old Lincoln State Bank.

Mrs. A. V. Swearingen was a Tucumcari visitor last week, being the guest of Mesdames C. J. Clanel and E. A. Wells.

Program

Eighth Grade Entertainment, Crystal Theatre, Nov. 5, 1924.

The public will please be advised that in deference to the local teachers who will attend the State Teacher's Association meeting, we have moved the date for our entertainment up one night, showing on the 5th instead of the 6th of November. Also, we wish to announce, that in addition to the other numbers on the program made mention of below, we will give "The Highland Fling," by six boys from the Carrizozo High School.

Opening Chorus, "The Long, Long Trail" and "Back at the Old School House," Eighth Grade, Carrizozo, accompanied by Dingwall's orchestra, Noda May Igo, Lady Connell. Reading, Marie A. Tangeman. Dance, "Glow Worm" Helene Titsworth. Duet, Hilary Cooper, Eleanor Connell. Reading, "A Teller of Tales," Ethel May Copeland. Picture, "Broken Blossoms," D. W. Griffith production, starring Lillian Gish.

Yours very truly,
Maurice Lemon,
Sec. of Committee

His English Admirers Annoyed Bret Harte

It is said that Bret Harte used to become weary to exasperation at the foolish admirers who could not separate him from his characters, and who insisted on confounding their experiences and predilections with his own.

Since he wrote of pioneer mining camps in the early days of the gold fever, his characters were often heroic only in part; indeed, they were quite as often rogues as heroes. As he obviously could not be identified with the roughest types among them, the favorite notion seemed to be that he was, or had been, a gentleman gambler, says the Kansas City Star. With that idea in mind, a young Englishman once tried hard to get Harte to describe and explain poker, which he referred to as "your American game." Harte conveniently misunderstood him.

"So you say 'great game' over here?" he inquired amiably. "In the States, now, we call it 'big game'—grizzlies, catamounts, buffalo and big horns, don't you know. But we don't chase them with pokers. No, no. They're abundant, but they don't often come into the houses, really. It's usually necessary to go outside with a gun."

At another time he learned that a certain noted hostess, whose invitation to dine he had just accepted, had been concerned whether it were true he was a reformed gambler.

"Not reformed," said Harte, wearily. "Tell her that I am beyond reformation. Tell her that I was my own model for the gambler, Oakhurst, and that the scene of his suicide is pure autobiography."

Americans Accorded Honors by Britain

The first native American to be knighted by an English monarch was Sir William Pepperell, who was born in Kittery, Maine, June 27, 1696. His father was a Welshman who came to New England as an apprentice to a fisherman. The son became a merchant and amassed a large fortune. As a military leader he took part in several conflicts with the Indians and attained much distinction. For thirty-two years he was a member of the royal council of Massachusetts, and as chief justice of common pleas he won eminence as a jurist.

Since Pepperell's time many Americans have achieved knighthood and higher British honors, Lord Astor and Lord Shaughnessy, the former a native of New York and the latter of Milwaukee, being among the more prominent latter-day examples.

Easily Proved

At a mill in Boston the workers were having a discussion about who was the quietest man they knew.

They got a minder to act as judge. Then they got their thinking apparatus to work, to think who was the quietest man they knew. Many hundred names were mentioned. The judge was about to give his decision when he saw a minder who had never mentioned one.

The judge then said: "Neaw, Jack, does tha not know any quiet man?"

"Well," said the minder, "I think I know just one."

"Well, out with it," said the judge.

"Well, I think owd Bill Kite the quietest mon I know."

The minder looked surprised, and then they all exclaimed at once: "Why, mon, he's dead!"

"I know that. I think he's the quietest mon I know. He's never spoken to me for nearly twenty years!"—London Tit-Bits.

It Happened in Boston

There had been a visitor, and to the lad she said: "And so this is little Walter? My, my! What a big boy you've grown to be! I wouldn't have believed it possible."

"Mother," said Walter when the visitor was gone, "doesn't it pass your comprehension how persons in whom one would naturally expect an ordinary degree of intelligence appear to believe, all history and nature to the contrary notwithstanding, that the children of their acquaintance will always remain infants, and persist in expressing surprise when they observe the perfectly natural increase in one's stature?"—Washington Star.

Knew His Business

The storekeeper in a little country town was a smart business man, indeed. He knew just when to strike and just when the iron was hot enough. That was how he had built up such a prosperous business.

"Miss Smith," he said to one of his assistants, "do you know anything about the new minister who is coming to the town next week?"

"Yes," replied the girl, "he is a tall, good-looking man, about twenty-eight, and he isn't married."

"Is that so?" said the proprietor briskly. "Miss Smith, you may put all the new hats in the shop into the front window right away."

Old Mystic Ceremonies

The Orphic mysteries were mystic ceremonies in honor of Bacchus (Dionysus) Zagreus, conferred by the followers of Orpheus at a very early period in the Hamlet of Greece. Unlike Dionysian worshipers of Bacchus, however, did not practice the licentious rites usually characteristic of the "Dionysia" or "Bacchanalia," but aimed rather at an ascetic purity of life. They dressed in white linen garments and ate no animal food save what was yielded by the ox sacrificed to Dionysus.—Kansas City Star.
