BOOST FOR A RAILROAD

Citizens Meet to Urge Capital to Build Railroad to The White Oaks Coal

ENGINEER URGES THE PLAN

A representative bunch of Carrizozo and White Oaks citizens met last Monday evening at the bank building to discuss ways and means of developing the great resources of the White Oaks district. After the organization of the meeting Mr T. B. Weatherby, a mining engineer and coal expert who was formerly in the government employ and who came to this country as their representative, outlined the great possibilities that a railroad would have from Carrizozo to White Oaks. Mr. Weatherby, who has prospected the coal fields of many states, has gone over the White Oaks field and is enthusiastic over the investigation. The idea of the meeting was to provide a way of gathering data on the proposition of putting in a railroad the twelve miles from Carrizozo up to the gold city and the meeting appointed a committee of the following White Oaks and Carrizozo business men to meet and arrange the matter: A H. Harvey, chairman; S. R. Perry, John Y. Hewitt, Ed. Queen, Wm. Watson, Sam Wells, Dr. M. G. Paden, Frank Gurney and T. B. Weatherby. This committee will call another mass meeting after it is ready to report.

In describing the possibilities of the White Oaks district in his address Monday evening Mr Weatherby said in part:

"The White Oaks coal field which has at least an area of 3000 acres of coal, the vein averaging a thickness of four to five feet would mean over 25,000,000 tons of coal. This amount of coal with a daily output of say, 500 tons, would last 200 years. An output of 500 tons, each day, would mean over $500 every day placed in the hands of the laboring people of the district. There is also another seam of coal in the district which is near the above area but not included in the above estimate. The formation is on a pitch of 18 to 20 degrees nevertheless it is uniform and there is very little indication of faulty measure".

"Everything is favorable to the development of the field in a mining and commercial way. This coal which is of a good domestic grade and better than the coal now sold on the market at El Paso can be layed down in El Paso at a total cost of $2.25 if the present railroad rate prevails. The price there for Gallup coal, which is a linnite and not a bituminous as this White Oaks coal is, is sold there at $4.50 a ton by the the car, so to meet this compitition means a profit of $2 25 a ton while the coal companies in the east consider 25c a ton a fine profit. The Dawson coal which costs $3.00 at the mine and $3 05 freight to Carrizozo and is a lesser grade of coal would not be a competive proposition, in the El Paso market. As for good domestic coal there seems to be very little or none in the new state."

"White Oaks also has an inexhaustable deposit of high grade Portland cement rock and a shale that makes an excellent brick. The gold and coal measures in that district come together and the gold mines have been operated there for years on a paying bases. All the resources would aid in getting in a railroad to develop this vicinity."

"There is no other place in the country so rich in natural resources, so close to a railroad that hasn't railroad facilities now, to say nothing of the cheap railroad construction possible to that point, a distance not exceeding 12 miles. The revenue on such a railroad line would be comparatively enormous and railroad companies are looking for such sources of revenue; capital is looking for such investments, and I believe all that is needed is to place the proposition before such people in a tangible form."

"There would be many other developments possible for Carrizozo and vicinity thru the development of the coal at White Oaks. for instance the coal could be used to operate a central electric power plant which could supply power to the homesteaders and farmers of the vicinity for pumping purposes so that water could be put on the surrounding land at comparatively low cost. It would also mean power for the other mining propositions of the vicinity and electric lighting for all surrounding towns."

"The E. P and S. W, road was orginally known as the White Oaks line and that city was the objective point, we understand. Circumstances however, well known here changed the route of the road and White Oaks was passed up at the last minute although three surveys have been run to that place. If the resources of White Oaks were worth going 150 miles after twelve years ago, it surely would be logical to assume that it would be worth while to build 12 miles of railroad to White Oaks in this present day and age when the market for her product is much greater."

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

The Lincoln County Democrats held a harmonious meeting at Lincoln Tuesday of this week and the following were elected delegates to the Santa Fe Convention for the nomination of the state ticket; John Y. Hewitt, White Oaks; W. C. McDonald, Carrizozo; Dr. G. Ranniger, Oscuro; Porfirio Chavez, Lincoln; Frank Salazar, Lincoln; Martin Chavez, San Patricio and Paul Mayer, White Oaks.

A committee was appointed to inform W. C. McDonald of Carrizozo who is State Chairman that they favored him for the governorship. The Delegates were instructed also as Judicial, Legislative and Senatorial convention representatives.

TWO BASEBALL GAMES

Arrangements have been made for two baseball games to be played by the Browns, one Saturday and one Sunday. Saturday the Browns will again meet Jim Woodlond's Outlaws, which were beaten by the local team two months ago and the next day Sunday the El Paso team which is one of the few which have beat Carrizozo this year will meet the Browns on the local diamond. Captain Dingwall is making a strenuous effort to get a team together and it is expected two good games will result.

FOR PROBATE CLERK

After solicitation of a number of friends Albert H. Harvey of Carrizozo has decided to seek the nomination for the office of Probate Clerk and Ex-officio Recorde on the Republican ticket. Mr. Harvey is well know in the county having acted as Commissioner of the U.S. Land Office a number of years at Carrizozo and has been prominently associated with the business interests of that town. Mr. Harvey was born in Illinois and came to New Mexico in 1903 and has been a resident of Lincoln County ever since.

Under the new constitution of the new state the office of County Clerk carries with it the duties also Clerk of the District Court and the requirements the office are such that the encumbent must possess a careful clerical training and be familiar with the transaction of business by modern methods. It remains without dispute that Mr. Harvey possesses every requirment and qualification for the office and would make a thoroughly efficient officer if elected.

Notice the several new announcements of candidates in this weeks issue.

"SISTER MASONS" SUCCESS

Real's Opera house was crowded to its fullest capacity last Friday evening by a large crowd of Carrizozo people to listen to the entertainment given by the Ladies Home Mission Society of the M. E. church. The seats had all been sold out in advance and the S. R. O. sign had to be put up early in the evening. The program was mostly vaudeville and musical numbers and a playlet called Sister Masons in which Mrs. George Ulrick acted the title role like a real suffraget. The entertainment was given entirely by home talent and none but the ladies took part in the affair. There was not a dull moment during the play and the several participants received generous applause. Mrs. W. F Whittingham in animated song sheet was a decided success and the vocal solos by Mrs. R. E Forrest were exceptionally good. The initiation of the new candidates was very funny and especially appealed to the gallery. Piano solos were played by Miss Lorena Sager and also Miss Belle Lutz which were much appreciated by the audience. A ladies chorus sang "Silver Threads Among The Gold".

As Carrizozo is not over supplied with good entertainments it is a treat to the community to witness as good an entertainment as this one proved to be. The following is a list of names of the other ladies that took part in the entertainment: Mrs H. B. Dawson, Miss Frances McDonald, Mrs John E. Bell, Mrs. Hattie Pons, Mrs Stanley Squier, Mrs D. Tennis, Miss Grace Spence, Mrs. J. B Garvin, Mrs. Elias Jones and Miss Mildred Peters.

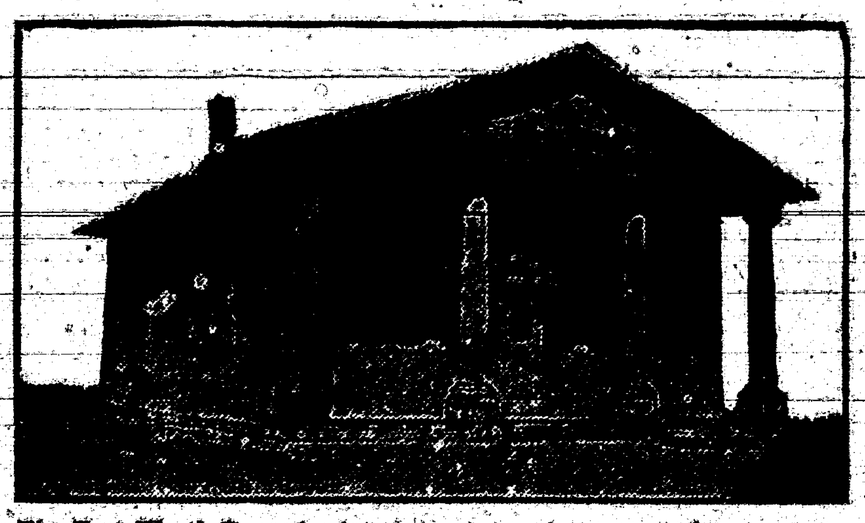
The New M. E. Church, Recently Completed



The Fort Worth Record printed the above picture and had the following to say of the new Carrizozo M E Church.

"Rev. B. W Allen formerly of Texas, but now of Carrizozo, New Mexico, has just completed the church there, of which the above is a fairly good picture. Rev. Mr. Allen is a brother of Wilber P. Allen, head of the Texas league and is one of those militant preachers with a bug fo getting the devil's goat. Every once in a while he slips one over and captures a "goat," a feat which causes him divers and sundry joys.

"The baseball brother of this New Mexico Parson occasionally helps him land a "goat" and when they are working as a team the prince of darkness might as well stand and deliver."

EGRETS IN THEIR ROOKERY

NEAR the top of a mangrove tree three baby egrets lay in a nest made carefully of twigs. They were not beautiful to look upon. Their scrawny bodies had scarcely a sign of feathers. Their heads were too big for them and their legs were too long and so wobbly and weak that the poor little babies could only lie still and wait for their parents to feed them. But, oh, how hungry they were! When their mother came to the nest with a fish or a frog, three yawning throats awaited her, and she had to decide to which she would give the morsel. It seemed impossible that from such poor beginnings anything beautiful could grow. But Mother Nature had given them wonderful appetites, and in such a few weeks the frogs and the fish and the snails would be changed to feathers and bone and flesh. The weak little babies would get strong and able to walk and fly and to catch fish for themselves. For those few weeks the mother and father bird must work early and late to bring food for their babies.

Away up in the air the mother egret came flying to her nest. Her legs were held close to her body, her long neck was folded over itself and lay flat on her back, her snowy plumes floated in the air. She was as beautiful as a white-robed angel. Straight she came to the nest where three yellow throats were opened wide and three little birds called a welcome. Perhaps she was already trying to decide to which baby she would give the green frog in her beak. Up tipped her wings, out went her neck and her feet were thrust down to take hold of the edge of the nest. Her lovely plumes waved in the air. She was just reaching out to drop the green frog down the throat of——, when bang! went a gun. A terrible pain in her breast, a dizzy feeling and she fell, fell, fell to the ground.

Two canoes slowly pushed their way through the mass of lily pads that marked the slough leading from the Glades to the head of the river. A man stood in the stern of each and with a long pole forced the heavy craft ahead. The one in the forward canoe was not an especially heroic figure. Face, neck and hands were tanned to the copper color of the Seminole. His feet were bare, the brim of his old straw hat was ragged and one side hung down until it hid the side of his face. Across the heap of camping supplies, Indian specimens and tins of food, sprawled a man burned even darker than his companion. He was stripped to a sleeveless undershirt and a pair of khaki trousers. A small canvas hat that once had been white rested upon his head and completed the picture of disreputableness. His face was redeemed by a pair of gold-rimmed spectacles. Not handsome, by any standard, but alert, receptive and thoughtful. In a word, a German student-scientist. To supply a vacancy in the collection of representative aboriginal tribes, this curator had invaded the Big Cypress swamp and explored the Everglades of Florida to their innermost recesses. He had followed the Seminoles to their camps and beguiled from them costumes, implements and ornaments. He had risked his life [illegible]

"Through the crookedest creek you ever saw. Over logs and under trees until you all'd wish we hadn't come."

The canoe turned toward the north, crossed a little circular bay and entered a patch of woods. There was no sign of creek or passageway from the bay. Trees were as thick and hung as low as elsewhere on the green-encompassed shore. The men lay on the bottom of the canoe and pulled themselves forward by the branches overhead. Bump! went the canoe on a hidden log. Both men got out and, balancing on the log, worked the canoe across it. A swarm of mosquitoes settled down on them. Not a breath of wind could reach them and the perspiration poured from their bodies. Pushing, pulling, poling and paddling, they advanced their craft. Lifting it over sunken logs and forcing it under low-hanging branches, they gained ground by inches. And all this time they were fighting a cloud of vicious, blood-hungry insects. The handle of the professor's paddle hit a limb just over his head and, from a hornet's nest at its further end poured forth a war party of these merciless fighters.

"Overboard, quick!" yelled Frank, and both men tumbled into the water and sank out of sight, rising again just enough to keep nose and mouth above the surface, while the angry hornets buzzed around the canoe and crawled over its contents.

"Donnerwetter! Let's go back, Frank!" exclaimed the dripping man at the bow of the canoe as he climbed aboard. "Isn't there some other way to the rookery?"

"Nope. The plume hunters keep the creek blocked up, so's to shut out other fellers. We're over the worst now; we'll soon be in the bay."

Even obstructed creeks of corkscrew tendencies have a beginning and an end. We finally emerged in a bay about a mile in diameter. In the middle were two small mangrove keys, over which a multitude of birds were soaring. The shores of the bay were an unbroken line of green; neither entrance nor exit was visible, for the mangrove trees extended to the water's edge.

Even as we looked a puff of smoke came from the little island, followed a second later by the report of a gun. We saw a stricken bird fall to the water and a cloud of white, blue and pink ones rise suddenly from the trees of the key.

"Gosh! The plume hunters 're here now!" exclaimed Frank, excitedly; "look's like we mought have trouble. You-all better get in t'other canoe and lemme go alone and talk to 'em."

Frank paddled toward the island. A charge of shot spattered the water ahead of him.

"Heigh, Jackson! Don't you know me? I'm Frank Brown. Put up yo' gun, we're not after you!" shouted Frank, standing up in his canoe with arms outstretched.

At last Frank appeared paddling his craft over our way.

"Fellers, it's all right. They say we can come and camp with 'em one night, but I'll be a sight easier in my mind when we're clear of 'em. I didn't expect to find 'em here or I wouldn't 'a' come. That's the livin' truth. That feller Jackson is wanted by the sheriff fer somethin' fierce, and he's a bad 'un all right. However, we're four and they ain't likely to do nothin' foolish. [illegible] mind, Jackson, and then invite you to grub," said Frank.

"'Tain't no use rustlin' any more wood that I knows of. Go ahead and use it. If you fellers has got airy milk and sugar 'n' will pass out some coffee with 'em I'll be mighty glad yer come. Hog and hominy's all right fer a spell, but it gets sickenin'. Got er plug o' terbaccy?"

Not only did Frank get out the canned cow and sugar, but he made biscuits in the Dutch oven and the eyes of the hunters fairly glistened at visions of the feast.

"Come ahead, grub's ready," said he; "bring your cups, we haven't enough to go 'round."

Never before in any warm country have I seen such appetites.

"I've got ter go over ter th' island now," said Jackson, after eating until there was nothing more to eat. "I'd ask you fellers ter grub with us ef we had anythin' fer yer."

As his boat approached the island a cloud of birds filled the air. Two shots were fired and two birds fell to the water. At intervals through the afternoon the sound of shots floated over us, and after each one there was a sudden burst of flying birds from tree tops.

That evening we sat in the lee of the camp fire, for the mosquitoes were legion and the smoke less of an evil.

The professor repeated his question of the morning, this time to Jackson.

"Are the mosquitoes always as bad as this?"

"Nope, not al'ers, but som'times they is a heap worse'n this 'ere. Redbugs worries us sometimes, too, and b'tween 'em things is tough."

"I don't like the killing of birds, but I sure think you earn the money if you live through this sort of thing," replied the professor.

"Yep, we do, every cent."

"Can't you get an easier job?"

"They ain't no other way fer me ter make er livin' an' I do it thisaway. I ain't erlowed ter do it out'r this beastly place, so I does it here. No, sir, I want ter live jes's much as you do!"

"If you can't leave the place, how can you carry on the trade?" asked the curator. There was genuine sympathy in his tone, and softened by this and the spell of the camp fire, the man went on:

"Why, I'm staked fer this work. A man comes down here and puts this gun inter my hand, gives me hog 'n' hominy, a little coffee 'n' a lot er shells. Then he pays me fer the plumes I brings him. 'Tin't healthy fer me ter go none outside, so he arranges things, so's I don't have ter."

"Rotten business—who's at the bottom of it anyhow?"

"Yer wimmen folk. What does they keer fer us fellers livin' in this hell down here, er fer the little birds that starve ter death because I've shot their pappys and mammys? I swear I'd like nothin' buetter'n to show them wimmen how us fellers got them plumes. But Lor' 'tin't no manner er use, they gotter look purty, and they's goin' ter do it. Let th' young-'uns starve ter death."

"I'm dead set against the whole business, Jackson, but when I get back home I'm going to tell some people where I think the trouble lies—and it's not with you hunters, either!"

MUNYON'S WORK TALK OF CITY

Big Success Shown by Numbers of Callers at Philadelphia Headquarters.

LOCAL MAN TELLS OF REMARKABLE RELIEF FROM RHEUMATISM IN YEAR'S TIME.

The apparent success with which Professor James M. Munyon, the world-famous health authority, has been meeting has started much discussion. Every street car brings dozens of callers to his Laboratories at 53d and Jefferson Streets, Philadelphia, Pa., and every mail brings thousands of letters from people inquiring about Munyon's Famous Health Cult. Professor Munyon's corps of expert physicians is kept busy seeing callers and answering the mail. Peculiar to say, these physicians prescribe no medicine at all for 50 per cent. of the callers and mail inquiries; health hints, health advice and rules for right living are given absolutely free. Medical advice and consultation absolutely free.

Munyon's followers seem to be enormous. Those who believe in his theories seem to think he possesses the most marvelous powers for the healing of all sorts of diseases. Munyon, himself, laughs at this. He says: "The hundreds of cures which you are hearing about every day in Philadelphia are not in any way due to my personal skill. It is my remedies, which represent the combined brains of the greatest medical specialists science has ever known, that are doing the work. I have paid thousands of dollars for a single formula and the exclusive right to manufacture it. I have paid tens of thousands of dollars for others of my various forms of treatment. This is why I get such remarkable results. I have simply bought the best products of the best brains in the world and placed this knowledge within the reach of the general public."

Among Munyon's callers yesterday were many who were enthusiastic in their praise of the man. One of these said: "For six years I suffered with rheumatism. My arms and legs were afflicted so badly that I could hardly work, and I could not raise my arms to my head. The pain was most severe in the back, however, and I was in perfect torture. I tried in many ways to get cured, or even to secure temporary relief, but nothing seemed to help me until I was persuaded by a friend to try Dr. Munyon's Uric Acid Course. It was the most marvelously acting remedy I ever saw, within a week the pain had most gone and inside of a month I considered myself entirely cured. I can now go out in the worst weather—cold, wet or anything else, and I have not felt any suspicion of a return of the disease. I think that every person who has rheumatism and does not take the Uric Acid Course is making a great mistake."

The continuous stream of callers and mail that comes to Professor James M. Munyon at his laboratories at 53d and Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa., keeps Dr. Munyon and his enormous corps of expert physicians busy.

Write today to Professor James M. Munyon personally. Munyon's Laboratories, 53d and Jefferson Sts., Philadelphia, Pa. Give full particulars in reference to your case. Your inquiry will be held strictly confidential and answered in a plain envelope. You will be given the best medical advice, and asked more questions. Remember there is no charge of any kind for consultation, or medical advice. The only charge Munyon makes is, when his physicians prescribe his remedies you pay the retail selling price. It is immaterial whether you buy from him or from the nearest druggist.

To Cheer Her Up.

An old Scotswoman, who had put herself to considerable inconvenience, and gone a long way to see a sick friend, learned on arriving that the alarming symptoms had subsided.

"An' hoo are ye the day, Mrs. Crawford?" she inquired in breathless anxiety.

"Oh, I'm quite weel noo, thank ye, Mrs. McGregor," was the cheerful answer.

"Quite weel!" exclaimed the visitor, "an' after me haein' come sae far to see ye!"

TOY FOR TESTING THE LUNGS

Weight Is Wound Up as Wind Wheel Is Blown Around—Markings Indicate Relative Strength.

A device for testing the lung capacity that can be made at home has been designed by a Delaware man. A long piece of strong wire is bent to

A QUESTION.

"I say, gran'pa, how d'you know just how far up to wash your face?"

YOUTH AND AGE.

I asked my pa a simple thing,
"Where holes in doughnuts go."
Pa read his paper then he said:
"Oh, you're too young to know."

I asked my ma about the wind,
"Why can't you see it blow?"
Ma thought a moment, then she said:
"Oh, you're too young to know."

Now, why on earth do you suppose
They went and licked me so?
Ma asked, "Where is that jam?" I said,
"Oh, I'm too young to know."

Conundrums.

Mr. James met three tramps this morning. To the first he gave five cents, to the second ten cents and to the third ten cents. What time was it? Do you all give up? It is easy enough to see that it was a quarter to three.

In the days when Dan Rice was at the height of his fame as a horseback rider he rode half a score of careering horses at once. What time was it then? Going on ten, of course.

Trains of Cantaloupes.

A cantaloupe train believed to be the longest the world has ever seen, passed through Tucson, Ariz., recently from the Imperial valley. The train consisted of 120 cars, was one and one-half miles in length, and contained more than 3,000,000 pounds of cantaloupes.

Be a good dog, and mind on sight.
After the lesson we'll both have fun;
I'll take you off for a splendid run.

ATHLETIC SUIT VERY USEFUL

Bloomers Under Skirt, Which Can Be Fastened Out of the Way—Convenient for Bicycle Riding.

Most girls prefer bloomers for wear in bathing or while indulging in other athletic exercises, but do not care to walk around in them. For their benefit a California man has designed a costume which combines both bloomers and skirt, but which provides for fastening the latter article out of the way. The skirt has a front flap which can be opened and fastened up to the waist, leaving the lower limbs free in the bifurcated garments and permitting much greater freedom of movement. The other part of the skirt is sewed fast to the seams of the bloomers and when th[illegible] swimming for[illegible]oat.

EAR the top of a mangrove tree three baby egrets lay in a nest made carefully of twigs. They were not beautiful to look upon. Their scrawny bodies had scarcely a sign of feathers. Their heads were too big for them and their legs were too long and so wobbly and weak that the poor little babies [illegible]uld only lie still and wait for their [illegible]rents to feed them. But, oh, how [illegible]ngry they were! When their moth[illegible] came to the nest with a fish or a [illegible]og, three yawning throats awaited [illegible]r, and she had to decide to which [illegible]e would give the morsel. It seemed [illegible]possible that from such poor be[illegible]innings anything beautiful could [illegible]ow. But Mother Nature had given [illegible]m wonderful appetites, and in such [illegible] one for cycling, as the skirt can be fastened up when she dismounts. The waistband of the costume is of elastic dimensions.

One on Father.

Herbert, aged 4½, had annoyed his father until that individual finally lost patience. Thinking to get rid of him for a few minutes by a simple ruse, he said:

"Hurry, son, to the window and see the big parade!"

The little fellow ran to the window and climbed upon a chair, while the father smiled at the success of his little lie.

The smile was still on his face when a tug at his coat-tail and a "Hurry, papa, quick!" caused him to start toward the window.

"What is the matter?" he asked.

"Come and see the elephant in the parade!" said the boy.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Thinking of Himself.

Little Elmer was riding on a hobby horse with a playmate. He was on the horse's neck, and did not feel comfortable. After a moment's reflection he said:

"Willie, I think if one of us gets off I could ride better."

Making Silhouette.

The making of silhouettes is made simple by means of the device shown in the illustration, says the Popular Mechanics. It consists of a set of panels attached to the back of a chair at the proper height, one panel being translucent to receive the shadow, and the other holding the paper while being marked. The person of whom the silhouette is to be made takes his or her position in the chair, and a lamp or candle is placed on a table a few feet away. A pantograph attached to the back of the panels makes it possible to reproduce on the paper the outline of the shadow thrown on the translucent panel.

Taught to Fletcherize.

A little girl was overheard talking to her doll, whose arm had come off, exposing the sawdust stuffing: "You dear, good, obedient dolly, I knew I had told you to chew your food fine, but I didn't think that you would chew it so fine as that."

In Russian schools, pupils have the option of learning French or German and 70 per cent. choose German.

DRY FARM PRINCIPLES

Opening Up Heretofore-Called American Desert.

Methods Can Be Used to Advantage in Region With Double Amount of Precipitation as That of Arid West.

In Campbell's dry farming or scientific soil culture we have the opening of the heretofore-called American Desert or the arid region of the west. Land which was formerly considered unfit for agricultural purposes because of the lack of water is now yielding fair crops to the man who is just learning the "whys" and "wherefores" of the proper tilage of the soil, writes Guy S. Ellis in the Breeder's Gazette. The fact that this land yields crops of a fair average has brought many to study the theory of dry farming. The subject might also have a direct bearing on the tillage of land in the humid region. In the humid region we usually find a time when during the summer months we wish to sow forage crops or turnips and there is not moisture enough to start the seeds or to supply the needs of growing crops. Here is where dry farming methods can be used to advantage in a region with double the amount of precipitation as that of parts of the arid west.

The first requisite is a firm subsoil. In firming the sub-soil, we break up the large lumps and compact the whole so that the particles of soil lie closer together, forming a perfect connection between the unbroken subsoil and the loose soil of the furrow. Capillary connection is established, that is, the very minute passageways are established through which the soil moisture can rise from the subsoil to the soil above. By using a harrow or disc a dust mulch can be made which will hinder the further upward passage of water and hold it within reach of the growing plants or sprouting seeds.

A firm sub-soil which is in good physical condition is favorable to holding large amounts of moisture, and to the most rapid movements of moisture by capillary attraction. It is also favorable to the development of the greatest amount of available fertility and the most prolific growth and development of lateral roots. We should therefore bear in mind that the soil is nature's laboratory, where the proportions of air and water may be combined in just the proper quantities. If the soils are too loose, then there is too much air for the water the soil can hold, and only under very ideal climatic conditions can a fair crop be grown. With a firm seed-bed in which the soil is in good tillage and the moisture near the surface, we have a good medium in which to plant seed. If the soil has been properly tended these conditions can be carried thus throughout the season.

The process of farming the sub-soil furnishes five aids in carrying the growing crops over long dry periods. We have more water in the soil. By destroying the many large non-capillary pores in the surface soil we bring its grains closer together and the water is aided in its upward passage.

We gain a stronger capillary movement of moisture. Prof. F. H. King of Wisconsin says, "In rolling the soil its water-lifting power is increased to such an extent that often within twenty-four hours after rolling, the upper 1 minute to 2 minutes beneath the firm ground contains more moisture, while the lower 2 minutes become dryer than soil adjacent which is left untreated."

We have a more rapid development of bacteria and nitrates. There is no time of the year, according to Campbell, when water held in the soil near the surface in sufficient quantities will bring about as many valuable chemical changes as in July and August. A large amount of bacteria and nitrates are developed then. This comes during the months when Iowa generally has her drouth, if she has any, and to get these valuable chemical changes we must study and use proper tillage methods which will put this moisture near the surface.

There is a more prolific growth of roots. Roots or rootlets will not penetrate air spaces in the soil so if we wish a strong vigorous root system we must first see that the ground is packed so as to break up the lumps and bring the surface soil particles closer together. Again the development of bacteria and nitrates aid in making vigorous root systems. The moisture arising from a stronger capillary attraction brings food into a soluble form and the rootlets spread out to gather in this supply of plant food.

We gain a larger percentage of available fertility during drouth. The growth of all plants depends upon the amount any energy of the available fertility. This is great or small in proportion to the physical or mechanical condition of the soil.

KEEP HORSE IN GOOD FLESH

It Does Not Pay to Keep Weak Animals That Cannot Do Good Day's Work Every Day.

Horses can be kept the most economically in good flesh. A fat horse will eat less than a poor one. The horse with his bones covered with good, hard flesh and muscle is stronger. It does not pay to keep thin, weak horses that cannot do a good day's work every day when it costs no more to keep good ones. I could never drive a team that did not have so much life that I had to restrain instead of urge them, and when I wanted to rush a job they were ready for it.

It is a sad fact that one of the worst things that can be said about farmers, as a class, that reflects on their character, is that they keep too many poor, weak and diseased horses that so many consider only as machines to do their work with. Surely the horse needs friends that will do some missionary work for him. Some one has said that when a man's animals know he has religion he has the right kind.

Disk Mold-Board Plow.

Speaking of the disk plow, the Colorado station says: The disk plow is capable of handling ground that has become too hard and dry for the mold-board plow. It is of somewhat lighter draft, does not require sharpening so often, cuts through trash easier and does not clog so easily.

The mold-board plow must be recommended as being able to do the best work in all places where the moisture conditions are favorable. In nearly all irrigated and humid sections, and often in dry farming sections this type of the plow is much better than the disk.

The disk can be recommended for the dry and hard condition of the soil.

POULTRY NOTES.

Ducks are good hatchers but poor mothers.

The Peking is the accepted breed in all large duck plants.

Dry feeding is best for al chicks. It is esential for the later hatches.

Ducks kept on land must be supplied with fresh water three times a day.

A sprayer that will force kerosene into all cracks of the poultry house is better than a brush.

There is as much science in the marketing of eggs as in any other branch of the poultry industry.

Geese must have freedom to do well. Two or three-year-old geese are more profitable than yearlings.

It is no sign that a hen is hungry just because she runs with outspread wings whenever called. A hen never knows when she has enough.

In Dry Weather.

In dry seasons I consider frequent tillage of hoed crops very essential, for retaining moisture. For tools I use a good plow of some kind, an American riding harrow, a common spring-tooth harrow, and by all means a cutaway. Could not get along without a weeder of some kind, says a writer in an exchange. The best treatment for worn-out fields I should say would be to turn the sod over with a good plow, then level the furrows with a harrow and put on what manure is necessary, and harrow until well pulverized. If the piece is to be seeded to grass and grain, and we are lacking in stable manure, I should use some kind of grass and grain fertilizer and work it in lightly.

Cooked Feed for Stock.

To learn the value of cooking feed for live stock, extensive trials were made at the experiment station of the North Dakota Agricultural college in feeding hogs and cattle raw feed and cooked feed. It was found that more pounds of gain were made from a given amount of feed when fed raw. Potatoes were an exception, as they gave the best returns when cooked.

Bokhara Sheep.

The department of agriculture is seriously considering the introduction into this country of Bokhara sheep, from which comes the fur called Persian lamb. All Astrachan fur is now raised on territory tributary to the Caspian sea. The best fur is taken from the lamb when it is only four or five days old. The Bokhara sheep also make good mutton.

Reduce Loss of Moisture.

Thorough drainage, well prepared seed beds and keeping the surface of the soil mellow and fine will reduce the loss of moisture from our soil to a minimum and prevent serious damage to our crops from summer droughts.

Overcome Drought.

Years of testing by various methods and systems have shown that drought is practically overcome when farmers select seed and carefully utilize proper methods of tillage.

Men Iron Better Than Women.

That men are to take the place of women as hand ironers in St. Louis is predicted by some of the laundry men. It is said that the work can be done better by men and that they can stand the strain very much better than women.

The only way in which a man can have the last word with a woman is to say it over the phone, and then hang up.

Echo of Hayes-Tilden Affair

Intimation of Former President of Telegraph Company Was That Messages Existed Proving the Case of the Democrats.

The late Dr. Norvin Green, who succeeded William Orton as president of the Western Union Telegraph company in 1878 and whose brilliant management of that great corporation until his death in the early nineties justified the selection of this quiet Kentucky physician for that post, was one of the most unassuming and modest of men. Moreover he was an entertaining story-teller, relating his anecdotes in a quiet, sometimes whimsical way—for he had a keen sense of humor—and at other times speaking with real dramatic force. In a conversation which I had with him one evening in the spring of 1884 he spoke guardedly of one of the great secrets of the Western Union under Mr. Orton's management.

"You may remember," said Dr. Green, "that William Orton and his very warm and close personal friend, Senator Roscoe Conkling, were among the few conspicuous Republican leaders in 1876 who were convinced that Samuel J. Tilden had been lawfully elected president that year. Senator Conkling was so thoroughly convinced of this that he would take no part in the tactics adopted by congress by means of which an electoral commission was appointed as a sort of umpire or arbitrator to decide the disputed point as to whether Tilden or Hayes had received a majority of the electoral votes; and I have always strongly suspected that Senator Conkling's belief that Tilden had received a lawful majority of the electoral vote was based upon information which he obtained from his friend, William Orton.

"A short time before Mr. Orton's death he and I were speaking of the presidential controversy of 1876. Mr. Orton remarked that he could not understand why a more thorough investigation into the election had not been made by those who had charge of the controversy for Mr. Tilden up to the time of the establishment of the electoral commission in January of 1877.

"'Mr. Orton,' I said, 'you, as a Republican, are sincerely convinced that Mr. Tilden received a legal majority of the electoral vote. Of course I, as a Democrat, have never had any doubt of that.'

"'If Mr. Tilden's representatives,' replied Mr. Orton, 'had properly managed that part of their investigation which brought in the Western Union company, I have not the slightest doubt that the country would have been speedily persuaded that Tilden was lawfully entitled to the presidency.'

"'But, Mr. Orton,' I said, 'in the records of the company examined under subpoena nothing was found to justify, or legally to justify, the claim that telegrams had been sent by Republican leaders in New York to the returning boards in Louisiana and Florida practically offering bribes to the members of those boards for the delivery of the majority vote of those states to the Republicans.'

"Mr. Orton looked at me queerly for a moment, and then he said: 'Ah, the trouble was that they didn't look for evidence in the right place; the subpoenas simply called for telegrams sent to the returning boards of Louisiana and Florida. It was not the business of the Western Union to deliver any records excepting those that were called for by the subpoena.'

"Mr. Orton said not another word; he left me to infer that, while no telegrams were sent direct to the returning boards offering bribes, still such telegrams were sent, but to persons who would convey the messages to the parties most interested by word of mouth. However that may be, there are now no records in the telegraph office, so far as I know, which will shed any light upon the Hayes-Tilden controversy, but I have always felt that had there been a more careful scrutiny, a more thorough search, or a search in other directions than that taken by the Tilden investigators, something would have been found at the time which would explain the unshakable belief expressed by Mr. Orton that Mr. Tilden received a lawful majority of the electoral college."

Friend of Polish Women.

The women of Poland have just celebrated the semi-centennial of Pauline Kuczalaska, who started the woman's rights movement in that country. She taught poor girls to be her home and founded a committee on sewing, which grew into the Society of Women's Work. This became the Woman's Mutual Aid society, and she finally collected her women in the Women's Land Owners' association and the Association of Bookkeepers and kindred organizations. She organized the first woman's congress at the jubilee celebration of Orseskowa, and in 1895 obtained 4,000 signatures for municipal suffrage for women in Polish cities.

True Premonition of Death

Col. Alford B. Chapman Felt He Would Be Killed on First Day of the Battle of the Wilderness, and He Was.

The bravest soldiers sometimes acknowledge that they are possessed by superstition or that there come to them premonitions of what their fate is to be in battle. Although General Hancock was not a believer in these mysterious warnings, there was one incident in which he had a share that caused him at times to wonder whether there might not after all be a whispering voice unheard by any but those to whom the message was addressed, telling what their fate in battle was to be. This incident was associated with the death of Col. Alford B. Chapman, who, during the Civil war, was in command of the Fifty-second New York regiment, which took part in all the campaigns Grant made from the Rapidan to the Appommatox in 1864 and 1865.

Colonel Chapman was not a superstitious man. He was a born soldier, taking with perfect coolness all the chances of war, seeking only to do his duty. For example, his regiment was engaged in laying the pontoon bridge at Fredericksburg, in December, 1862, just before General Burnside, who was in command of the Army of the Potomac, ordered the advance to be made upon the Confederate position on the hills back of Fredericksburg. Although the bullets flew thick and fast, Colonel Chapman was utterly without fear, nor did he at the time he received a bullet know that he had been wounded. The ball passed through a memorandum book and some papers which were in his left vest pocket. The bulk of paper was sufficiently thick to cause the bullet to become practically spent when it reached his flesh. But for this interposition he would have been killed instantly, since the bullet was arrested directly over his heart.

General Hancock's attention had been called to Colonel Chapman and he had decided to place him in charge of a brigade and to recommend his appointment as brigadier general. In fact, Hancock had so much confidence in Chapman that he assigned Chapman's brigade to a forward position in the first day of the fighting in the battle of the Wilderness.

Shortly after the brigade went on to the skirmish line Colonel Chapman met General Hancock. The colonel's bearing was very soldierly. There was no doubt of his keenness or of his courage, but he said to General Hancock:

"General, this will be my last battle."

"Why do you think so, Colonel?" asked the general. "We must all take the chances of battle."

"I know that is a soldier's duty," Colonel Chapman replied. "But the feeling I now have is something unlike any I have ever experienced since the war began. Something tells me that this is going to be my last battle, but the warning does not disturb me in the least."

"Oh," Hancock replied, "you're simply a little over-excited. Don't pay any attention to it. I have no faith in premonitions."

Colonel Chapman smiled, gracefully saluted General Hancock, and said: "After this battle is over, general, you will find that my premonition was genuine."

Within an hour Chapman was leading his troops through the woods to form a skirmish line. At the first volley from the enemy he fell, mortally wounded. His brigade passed on over his body.

After his men had moved on Colonel Chapman with feeble movement took a note book and pencil from his pocket and with trembling fingers, wrote first his father's name and address and then these words: "Dear father, I am mortally wounded. Do not grieve for me." Here the fingers seemed for a moment almost palsied, but again, as though by desperate effort they wrote these words: "My dearest love to all. Alford."

The pencil dropped on the paper. With that brief message the soldier passed away. This communication is now held by relatives of Colonel Chapman.

Cameron Stood By the Scot

Pennsylvania Senator Used His Influence to Gain Admission to House of Kentuckian Elected Just After Close of War.

In 1866, the year that James Burnie Beck, who from 1876 until his death in 1890 represented Kentucky in the United States senate, was first elected to the national house of representatives, General Simon Cameron of Pennsylvania, who had been sent to the senate in 1845 as a Democrat and in 1856 as a Republican, for the third time in his political career became a member of that body.

"Of course Senator Cameron was instantly received into the senate on the day that the new congress was organized," said Senator Beck to me, "but it was far different with me. I had come to congress a stranger from a border state—and the war was just a year closed, and the passions and demoralizations of the war were not over. There was a great deal of suspicion as to the sincerity or loyalty of members of congress from the border states and the tests of loyalty put upon them by the northern members of congress were severe. I was fully prepared to take the test oath, but my credentials were held up nevertheless, and when congress organized I was left out in the cold.

"A few days later I chanced to meet for the first time in my life General Cameron at the home of a common friend. He looked at me intently for a moment, as though he were trying to read me through and through. Then he asked me if it were true that I had been born in Scotland, as he had heard.

"'Yes, senator,' I replied. 'I am a native of Dumfriesshire.'

"'You know that I, too, am Scotch, not by birth, but by descent,' he replied. 'I am as ardent a member of the clan Cameron as any of that clan that ever lived.'

"Then the senator took me by the arm and led me aside. We began to chat about Scotland. I told him that he knew more about Scotland than I did.

"'We Scotchmen are, after all, of one national clan,' he responded. 'We may fight among ourselves, but we stand with a united front against the world.'

"I saw that the senator was still studying me, taking my measure, while at the same time our common Scotch blood had kindled a recent acquaintanceship into something like friendship. At last he asked:

"'You were a law partner, were you not, of John C. Breckenridge when he was vice-president and when he was the south's candidate for president in 1860?'

"'Yes,' I said, 'I was General Breckinridge's law partner at that time.'

"'I suspect that's the reason why they have not admitted you yet as a member of the house,' remarked the general.

"I nodded acquiescence.

"'Well, now, brother Scotchman,' Senator Cameron declared, 'I have a little influence in the house and I am going to use it. You needn't give yourself any further anxiety about your admission to it. You'll be admitted in the course of a day or two. I'll see to that. As Scotchmen we'll stand together; but as Republican and Democrat we'll fight to the death.'

"His words proved true. A few days later I was received into the house of representatives."

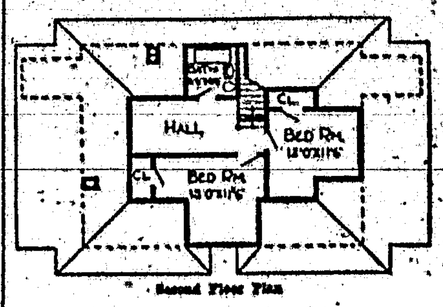
WILLIAM A. RADFORD Editor

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 173 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose two-cent stamp for reply.

If I were asked to sum up in a few words the advantages of owning a home over renting one, I am afraid I could hardly confine myself to the space allotted me for this article. But there are a few points that perhaps stand out with special prominence; and I will try to express as briefly as possible the reasons why, as it appears to me, the man who saves to build or buy a home for himself is the type of citizen of highest value to the community.

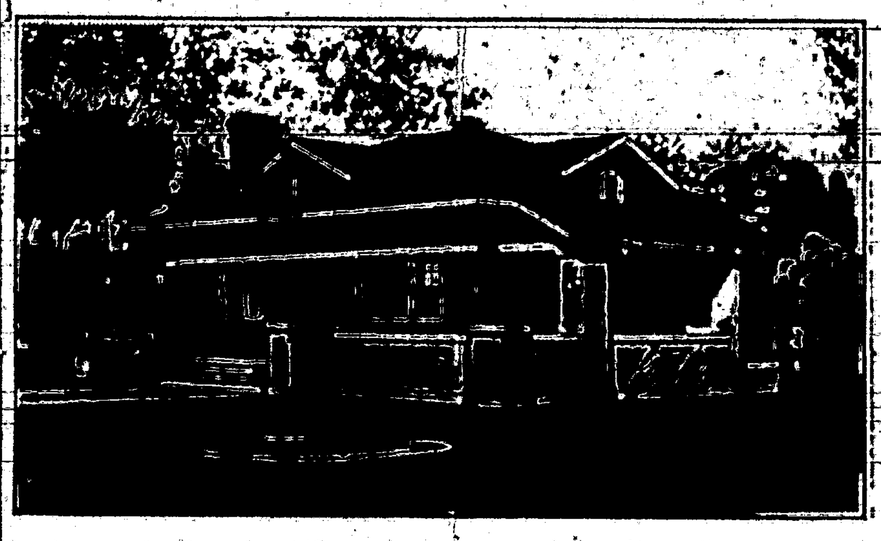
For the man of average income, the acquisition of a permanent home involves struggle—and, it may be, even sacrifice—for a few years; but he who is willing to undergo it, instead of shrinking continually in fear, demonstrates that he has the very qualities that make for success; and that is a large part of the battle. The man who owns his home can keep up to a better standard of living than if rent day took one-third to one-fourth of his income. The saving of the home-owner gives him a permanent buying power that the renting family seldom has; he is perpetually solvent, instead of dependent. He not only has better credit, but has every reason to live up to moral and material standards that make him a more desirable citizen than the transient renter. Ownership of the place one lives in is the first step toward financial stability and community respect. It is the fountain-spring of that sincere and honest pride in home and family which is one of the strongest elements in character building for both parent and children. It inspires business sense, and stimulates the cardinal virtue of thrift. It fosters an interest in public affairs—reasonable taxation, street and sidewalk upkeep, honesty of officials, etc.—that is very apt to be deficient or entirely lacking in the mere renter. Disreputable gang control is practically impossible in communities where people own their homes. Nathaniel Cotton sums up this subject admirably in the following lines:

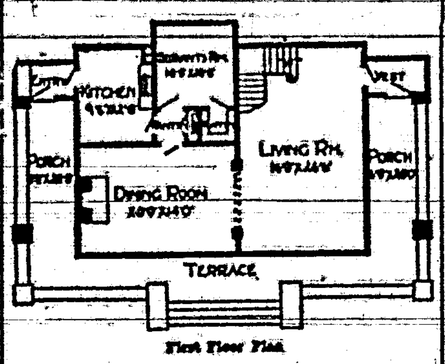


Second Floor Plan

"If solid happiness we prize,
Within our breast this jewel lies,
And they are fools who roam.
The world has nothing to bestow;
From our own selves our joys must flow,
And that dear hut, our home."

An example of an attractive little home that can be built for about $2,500 is illustrated in the accompanying perspective and floor-plans. Its dimensions are: Length, 31 feet 6 inches; width, 53 feet 6 inches. It is of the popular "bungalow" type, but has two bedrooms and bath on the second floor. A wide veranda runs around three sides. There are two entrances, one on each side at the back and end of the veranda. The greater portion of the ground floor is given up to the waking comforts of real home life. A large living room stretching from front to rear at the right connects through a cased opening with a commodious dining room extending across the remainder of the front of the house. At the end of the dining room is a large fireplace and inviting hearthstone. A servants' room is provided, opening off the same passageway which connects the dining room and kitchen.





First Floor Plan

The Essential Preliminary.

Miss Languish—Do you think the first step to a woman's marriage is love?

Miss Pert—No; I think the first step to her marriage is when somebody asks her.

Not Legal.

"The stranger yonder has a very distinguished air, and I must have seen him before, but I can't recall him."

"The law won't let you—he's a judge."

SIZE OF AMERICAN FAMILIES

Foreign Born Mothers Have the Largest, the Poles Leading, According to Investigations.

The immigration commission has been investigating the size of families of various nationalities as to parentage but born in this country. The investigation covered the entire state of Rhode Island, Cleveland, Minneapolis, rural Ohio and rural Minnesota.

Only those married women were included in the study who were under 45 years of age and had been married from ten to nineteen years. According to the independent the results show that for the total area tabulated there were 2.7 children born to the native white mothers of native parentage and 4.4 children to the white mothers of foreign parentage.

In Minneapolis the number of children born to native mothers was 2.4 number of children to mothers of specified foreign parentage was as follows: English, 3.4; English Canadian, 3.5; Scotch, 3.6; German, 4.2; French, 4.3; Irish, 4.4; Norwegian, 4.7; Italian, 4.9; Bohemian, 5; Russian, 5.4; French Canadian, 5.6, and Polish, 6.2.

He Forgot to Kneel.

A young lady was acting temporarily as hostess, and her time was much occupied. One of her admirers, a nervous and absent-minded lover, perceived that this would be the case, and to facilitate matters he determined to bring affairs to a point. He didn't get a chance.

"Afterward," says the object of his ill-starred devotion, "I found this memorandum on the floor, where he had dropped it in his agitation. It read thus:

"'Mention rise in salary. Mention loneliness. Mention pleasure in her society. Mention prospects from Uncle Jim. Never lover before. Propose.'"—Life.

CONAN DOYLE AT HIS BEST

The story-reading world seems to be unanimous in the verdict that Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is at his best in his Sherlock Holmes stories. The Chicago Record-Herald is now in the act of breaking another record by printing in its columns all the Sherlock Holmes stories ever written, both short and long. Some it has published in the past, but many of the best are still to come. It is the only paper in Chicago now running Sherlock Holmes stories.

The Record-Herald has only recently begun on the "Memoirs of Sherlock Holmes," a series of thirteen of these famous detective tales. The stories, which have been appearing only on Sundays, are now to run right along through every day of the week until completed. This series is to be followed by two long Sherlock Holmes serials—"A Study in Scarlet" and "The Sign of the Four." Many persons are taking advantage of this chance to read the world's best detective stories.

Sherlock Holmes has the honor of being the most widely known character in fiction. The fascination of his adventures and of his marvelous detective powers is felt by all classes of readers. You can always find some of the best popular fiction of the day in The Record-Herald, but this Conan Doyle series is something out of the ordinary, even for that enterprising paper.

BIG BOATS TO STAY

London Dispatch Regarding Warships Is Not Believed.

United States Naval Officers Doubt Report From England That Dreadnoughts Will Be Supplanted by Smaller Vessels.

New York.—Naval officers stationed at the Brooklyn navy yard are inclined to doubt the London dispatch, in which was predicted the passing of the dreadnought type of battleship in favor of smaller vessels of equally heavy armament.

In their opinion Great Britain and the other nations of the world will even enlarge the size of the present-day battleships.

Rear Admiral E. N. C. Leutze, U. S. N., retired, commandant of the Brooklyn navy yard, said:

"It is hard to believe England's future navy policy is to be toward the reduction in the size of its war vessel. We have found the dreadnoughts the most effective fighting machines yet produced and consequently we will continue to make our vessels in greater size.

"I can see no object unless it is for the purpose of economy in the report that England is to build vessels of smaller size. England may be listening to the demands of the persons who object to naval expenditures. Of course I can make no prediction of what our own future program will be, but from my personal viewpoint we will add to our fleet of dreadnoughts."

The man who has been sent to the Brooklyn navy yard to lay the hull of the battleship New York, Naval Constructor Robert E. Stocker, U. S. N., could not reconcile his experience in shipbuilding with the report from London.

"We need all the dreadnoughts we can get," he asserted. "In the dreadnought has been found a type which is an improvement over everything built before.

"The qualities of speed, gun strength and endurance cannot be contained in a bulk smaller than at present incloses them. Our engines give a maximum of power with a minimum of space; our guns are included in the narrowest expanse with possible safety.

"If we want greater speed and secure it in the size of the vessel, the armament must be sacrificed to a corresponding extent. Inversely, if we are to increase the armament of our dreadnoughts on a smaller vessel we would have to dispense with some of our speed."

Capt. G. E. Burd, U. S. N., in charge of the machinery department of the navy yard, said it is not possible with the present engines to economize space without losing elsewhere.

"The one thing that would help us spare some of the space now occupied by the boilers and engines of our battleships," he said, "would be a new engine that would improve on the turbine and the reciprocating engine we now carry."

Plague Kills Fish.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Blue pike, which form a large part of the catch in Lake Erie, are threatened with extinction. A plague is killing thousands of them. H. C. Crossley, special lake warden for Lake Erie, finds the small fish are dying from a fungus growth on the gills. The large fish are not affected. The unusually low temperature of the water is believed to be one of the causes.

Capture Great Sea Cow.

Galveston, Tex.—A manatee or sea cow measuring 20 feet and weighing about 2,000 pounds was captured in Laguna Madre on the Gulf of Mexico about three miles southeast of Brownsville. It required a ten-hours' struggle with about 20 men to land the monster.

Amazing Nap of a Tinsmith

Philadelphian Is Found Fast Asleep With His Head Hanging Over Roof of Tall Building.

Philadelphia.—Taken into custody while soundly sleeping on the roof of the house at 634 North Front street, with his head hanging over the front eaves, Robert Morris, 22 years old, of Merchantville, is in a quandary as to how he reached his elevated slumberland and has the wiseacres at police headquarters puzzling their wits endeavoring to solve the mystery.

Passing along the street early the other morning two pedestrians were startled when a derby hat dropped at their feet. Glancing up, they were amazed to observe the head of a man protruding over the eaves. Their calls in a vain effort to attract the attention of the owner of the head awakened most of the neighbors in the block, and when the situation was explained the phone wires into the city hall carried many requests for the presence of policemen.

The first district patrol wagon was sent to the scene, and when the crew gained the second story roof by means of the third story windows of the residence of Joseph Dowling, on the corner, the man was still in slumberland. Even vigorous shaking failed to arouse him, and with the assistance of Mr. Dowling the sleeper was dragged to the street via the Dowling home with many excited residents looking on in wonderment.

Waking up at the city hall, Morris revealed his identity, and was dumfounded when the circumstances leading up to his arrest were sprung on him. He said he had no recollection of going to the roof, and was unable to enlighten the police as to how he got there. Morris is a tinsmith by occupation and one of the theories of the police is that he shinned up a rain spout while laboring under the hallucination that he was in working togs making roof repairs.

Goddess Needs Gown.

New York.—The Goddess of Liberty, after a quarter of a century buffeting the winds of New York harbor from her pedestal on Bedloe's island, is in need of a new gown. A report by war department engineers shows that the bronze sheathing of the statue is disintegrating through action of water and air and that already the metal is eaten through in some places. It is believed that the perforated plates can be removed separately and replaced by duplicates.

Adapted.

"Ah," said the persistent householder as he crept up on the happy and unsuspicious fly buzzing at the window, "this is the pace that kills!"

Long Lost Wealth is Found

Persistent Mountaineer Rediscovers Gold Ledge After Twenty-Three Years—Others Gave Up.

Spokane, Wash.—A search of 23 years for what may prove to be a rich deposit of gold has at last been brought to a successful conclusion by a persistent prospector, F. A. Schnicke. He has come out of one of the wildest parts of the wild Cascade mountains with specimens of gold bearing ore that promises a fortune when the ledge from which he took them is developed. He has a chart of the route that will lead him back when he has formed the party to help him.

It was in the summer of 1888 that Amos White, a mountaineer and prospector, came staggering out of the Cascades in the vicinity of Mount Adams and showed ore like that which his successor is now showing. He got backing and tried to take a party in to new a way to his ledge. Deep snows the following winter stopped him, and when he tried to go in the summer forest fires raged and prevented him from carrying out his plans. This ill luck followed him for two years, and then exposure brought on illness that killed him.

Just before he died White gave a crude map of the location of the gold ledge to John Snyder, a close friend. This showed the ledge to be near the shore of a small lake somewhere on the western slope of the Cascades and under the shadow of Mount Adams. Snyder found that forest fires had wiped out some of the signs by which he was to be guided and he could not locate the lake. He pursued the quest for 12 years and then gave the chart to Marion Locke, a friend. Locke went out to find White's ledge and spent a long time in the search. He was equally baffled, but fortune was kind to him, for in his wanderings he discovered the McCoy Creek mines, which have since made him wealthy.

It was two years ago when the final effort was begun. Five men, including Schnicke, who called themselves "The Lucky Five," went into the wilderness. One by one all abandoned the search except Schnicke. Curiously he made the discovery at a place visited before by himself and others interested in the search but not recognized. It was a small body of water called Badger lake. He came upon it from a new angle and something about it struck him as being in accord with the chart. He searched for an old camp that White had marked and after some heavy work discovered it. He then had little difficulty in locating the ledge and finding the specimens of ore. He has filed his mining claims on all the outcroppings he could find and expects to go back and begin work before the summer is over.

Loses Bear Steps Spooning.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The usual large amount of spooning which takes place nightly in Wade park was dispensed with one night recently owing to the fact that a zoo bear got lost in the park.

A goat lives about ten years and will give about a quart of milk a day.

HELEN OF TROY

By ROYAL N. GREEN

Fred Erickson was heart-keen to the fact that he loved the girl, but, as yet, he had said nothing to her about it. In fact he had never spoken to her. They were not acquainted with each other.

It was what is called love at first sight—that is, as far as Fred was concerned. The first time he saw her she was sitting opposite him on a West line car going from Albany to Troy, and his susceptible heart had gone pit-a-pat. Chance thrust them together often after that, but without an opportunity to become acquainted.

Erickson, a young lawyer located in Albany, should have been giving his whole attention to the theories of a practice that was yet to come. Instead, he dreamed the long office hours through, and all his dreams were of the fair unknown.

This fascinating girl was, in points of beauty, a maid to marvel at. Her eyes were dusky wells of midnight with long, dark lashes that half hid the depths of them, and the black of these contrasted strangely with the white of her satiny skin. All in all, she was, from her daintily arranged hair to the tips of her tidy shoes, the sweetest girl creation that had ever come to the ken of Fred Erickson. He longed to meet her.

Here romance stepped in.

If Helen Landen—this was her name—had ever cast a calculating eye over the tall, serious faced youth who appeared so frequently to her, she did so without due knowledge of what Fates had in store.

Rington's circus, a mighty army of tents, opened in Albany to play two dates, afternoon and evening, with all the pomp and ceremony of that dignified institution. Erickson attended the evening performance. Spangled performers crowded the three rings in marvelous act after act. An army of clowns capered to queer pranks, and, as always, the circus was a pulsating success—a gaudy, glittering success.

After the concert, Erickson and a friend found themselves leisurely strolling through the menagerie tent. A mighty elephant, almost the peer of the famous Jumbo in size, interested them. Its crafty eyes were sparkling with intelligence. Its calm, calculating survey of the curious ones who gathered to do it honor, was majestic, regal. Its swaying trunk, vitally restless, raised itself above them occasionally as if delivering a benison.

A tinkling cadence of girlish laughter from behind the youth again caused the erratic heart vibrations in his breast, responsive to only one maid, and Erickson turned. His face flushed as he gazed at her. She was with an elderly person—evidently her father. Her nearness caused the youth to fear for himself. It seemed to him that he must turn and crush her in his arms.

"O, what a great beast!" The girl turned to her father. "I wonder if she is cross?"

The elderly person looked inquiringly toward a keeper who stood at some little distance.

"Not at all," answered the attendant. "Mildest mannered animal in captivity, and the largest. Bess here knows mor'n some folks, she does." The girl stepped daintily forward, a smile curving her red lips, and the pert little nose of hers wrinkled in amusement.

"I'm going to feed her," she said. The elephant graciously accepted an absurdly small bun, and seemed to wink a knowing eye at Erickson, who glared cautiously.

"The tiger is out!" A hoarse voice raised the cry and in an instant the tent was mob mad. Women screamed and fainted. Children wailed and men cursed. To add to the pandemonium, the gasoline lights flickered desperately in the wind created by the panic-stricken crowd—and went out. A feline scream rose above the noise, and an animal chorus quickly responded. Elephants trumpeted. Lions roared. The camels lifted their voices in uncanny shrieks, and excitement was the order of the moment.

Erickson, stricken dumb, suddenly recovered himself and reached out blind arms for the girl. His first thoughts were of her. She must be rescued at all hazards.

Just as his satisfied hands came in contact with her, a velvety something brushed curiously across his face, and then suddenly dropped to his waist—their waists—and the two were lifted high in the air to be placed gently on the back of the elephant.

The girl gave a frightened half scream, and her little hands convulsively clutched the arm of her companion.

"What-wha-what is it?" she gasped.

Erickson thrilled at her touch. "Don't be frightened," he said. "The big elephant has picked us up, and, for some reason, placed us on her back. Just at present, it is the safest place in the tent. We are out of the struggling crowd, and away from the tiger. Hello! What's happening?"

The elephant was beginning to move. Slowly, cumbersomely, like the heavy body that it was, the great mass of flesh began to get under way, and in a moment the two upon the beast's back found themselves under the starry sky. Save for a skurrying circus man, here and there, the stretch of green about the tents was deserted.

The girl still kept tight hold of the exultant youth, although the broad back and gentle motion of the now rapidly moving Bess were not calculated to precipitate a fall.

"O, I—I am so frightened," gasped the damsel. Her hands convulsively gripped the youth's arm. Erickson was not frightened. He was hilariously happy.

From behind them came hoarse shouts, and the elephant, hearing, quickened his pace. Had Erickson been a solitary rider, he would have slid to the ground, but now he was pleasantly impressed with the sense of guardianship.

"Keep up your nerve," came from the young attorney. "The elephant is running away with us, but he is not dangerous. We are safe enough. The keepers and circus men are trying to catch us."

Suddenly the beast plunged off the moon-lit road and into a lane, slowing up and stopping as it came to a tall tree. The sensitive trunk cautiously rose to investigate the lower branches, and then, with a despairing squeal, a long-tailed spider monkey was brought from a sheltering clump of leaves, and passed carefully back and into the very hands of Erickson.

The lawyer laughed.

"O, how sweet," ventured the girl, her fear suddenly gone. "And how do you suppose the elephant knew he was in this tree?"

"I'm sure I don't know. It seems to have been her sole errand for she is now going back."

Sure enough, the great beast was now retracing her footsteps.

In a few minutes she had come to the pack that had been following her. With the sang froid of a calculating human, the animal reached a careful trunk around and placed her passengers, one at a time, on the ground. Then the same impressable organ relieved Erickson of his chattering charge, and without waiting for her escort the elephant ambled on, turning a quizzical eye to her late riders as she did so.

It developed that the tiger was still a captive. The panic had been started by some mischief maker, but the rushing, scrambling crowd had alarmed the animals, and the monkey cage had been overturned by the crazy exit of the masses. The little simian rescued by the big pachyderm had been an especial pet of the trainer having Bess in charge. How she knew the monkey was hidden in the tree, no one knew.

"Well," said the girl, flushing as she turned to Erickson. "I am sure that I shall never care to see another circus."

"I shall always have a friendly feeling for them," answered the youth meaningly, and the flush on the girl's cheeks deepened to an alarming red.

"Inasmuch as it will be useless to attempt to find your escort, I must insist upon seeing you safely to your home."

"You don't have to—to insist," answered Helen Landen, softly.

Defining His Position.

"Is your husband in favor of the initiative and referendum?"

"Yes," replied the woman in the sunbonnet; "and the recall and local option and anything that'll enable him to go to the polls and miss a day's work."

HAD COME TO STAY, ANYHOW.

The stranger, who had been detained in the village by a washout on the railway, stepped into the office of the local newspaper.

"I see you call your paper the Experiment-Vindicator," he said. "It's a consolidation, I presume."

"No, sir," answered the editor; "this is the only sheet that ever has been published in the town. I gave it that name because I rather liked the sound of it."

"I see."

"Besides, I wanted to see if the people here would give me support enough to vindicate the experiment. If they don't, by gravy, sir, I'm going to change the name of it to the Snipe-Bag, edited by A. Holder!"

Thackeray's Reckless Feet.

It may be feared that some people will find proof of Thackeray's possession of a lively sense of humor in the story that he once put his feet out of a hack window while riding through a Boston street.

When we consider the narrowness and crookedness of those thoroughfares, it isn't the humor, but the wild recklessness of Thackeray's feet that most impresses us.

Risky.

"Is the lunch room you patronize well lighted?"

"Yes."

"That's good."

"Why do you say, 'That's good'?"

"Because I once heard of a fellow who went into a lunch room that was rather dark and mistook a cockroach for a lima bean."

The Last Word.

"You know that you simply ran after me until you got me to promise to be your wife," she said in a taunting manner.

"Well," he replied, "I didn't have to run very fast to overtake you."

"I was wearing a hobble skirt at the time," she defiantly retorted.

He Knew His Business.

Proprietor of Millinery Shop—Why didn't that lady buy anything?

New Assistant—Because we hadn't got what she wanted.

Proprietor—You'll kindly remember in future, miss, that you're here to sell what I keep, and not what people want!—London Opinion.

HITTING BACK.

Mrs. Diggs—I am a true daughter of Eve.

Mrs. Wiggs—I'd like to know in what way? You can neither cook nor wash dishes.

Mrs. Digs—Neither could Eve.

Evidently Maudlin.

Our cook got very drunk,
How is it that I know?
Why, she unpacked her trunk
And swore she'd never go.

His Reason.

The Piano Man—I suppose you go to church on Sunday when you don't play baseball.

The Worldly Man—My dear man, when the weather is too bad to play baseball it isn't fit to venture out at all.—Exchange.

Just as Good.

Suspicious Matron—Boy, have you whooping cough?

Youthful Fruit Peddler (of foreign extraction)—Not t'day, mum. But I got some fine cant'lopes.

Culinary Ability.

"Do they know anything about cooking in that family?"

"Do they? He cooks up the finest kind of stories, and when she finds them out, she prepares the hottest kind of a family stew."

A Morning Quarrel.

"You forgot something," called his wife from the window.

He came back.

"What did I forget?"

"You forgot to slam the door."

He slammed it.

The Same Old Story.

"It's curious how habits fasten themselves on people. You know Wappsley?"

"Yes."

"He's an enthusiastic fisherman, and always has a story to tell about some gigantic monster of the deep that he almost caught."

"I've heard him tell a lot of lies of that kind."

"Well, it seems that burglars broke into his house the other night and he got up and captured one of them—a little fellow—but you ought to hear him tell about the size of the one that got away."

SUMMER WORK.

[illegible] look warm and tired [illegible] walks, [illegible]

Sec[illegible] the [illegible]am. I've been busy all day [illegible] Christmas stuff.

[illegible] Perplexing.

A railroa[illegible] in ran off the track—
An acci[illegible] 'twas said;
But there was none to blame, alack,
Because no one was dead.

Halves, Mister.

It was at a theater in Dublin. The king, aged and infirm, was blessed with two sons. He was pacing up and down the stage with a wearied look, exclaiming aloud: "On which of those two sons shall I bestow the crown?"

The house was nearly brought down with laughter when a little man in the gallery stood up and said: "Treat 'em fair, guv-nor. Can't yer give 'em half a crown apiece?"—Ideas.

No Connection.

A boy was throwing stones at a noisy dog when a passerby stopped and addressed him.

"My boy," the stranger remonstrated, "don't you know you should be kind to dumb animals?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "but what's dumb animals got to do with yelping dogs?"—The Housekeeper.

No Buyers.

He (loftily)—I will marry no girl because she has money. I would not sell myself.

She (caustically)—Don't worry. A girl with money enough to buy any kind of a husband she wanted, would never pick you out for a bargain.

Atlas Remarks.

Atlas was bearing the world on his shoulders.

"It is easier to have everything my wife wants me to get on one spot," he explained.

Thus we see it was a labor-saving device.

One Punishment for Perjury.

Among the Sea Dyaks of Borneo lying is almost unknown; and the telling of a lie is shamefully recorded by heaping a pile of branches, to whom every passerby contributes—a punishment dreaded beyond all others.—London Saturday Review.

Ancestral Respect.

"The Chinese have great respect for their ancestors," said the distinguished oriental.

"Well," replied Mr. Cumrox, "haven't we? Some of us pay experts thousands of dollars to find out who they were."

An Accident.

Lady of the House—I know that your character has been blackened.

Applicant — Yes, ma'am; that's where my last missus spilt the ink on it.

Essence of Luxury.

"Yes, I welcome the era of high prices—one may live so much more luxuriously."

"Just how do you make that out?"

"Why, there are so many more things that one cannot afford."—Puck.

Mixed.

Customer (in bake shop)—Is this bread today's?

Counter Girl—Yes'm.

Customer—The reason I ask is because the bread I got here yesterday wasn't.

HE SAVED THE TRAIN

STATION AGENT'S PRESENCE OF MIND AND BRAVERY.

His Action Meant Imminent Risk of Life and Limb, but He Did Not Hesitate—Robbers Frustrated, but Escape.

"More often than not common sense and bravery are combined in railroad employes," writes H. L. Rennick in the Chicago Tribune. I once knew a station agent and telegrapher at a little town in Missouri, a number of years ago, who prevented fatalities and thwarted a gang of train robbers by his presence of mind and daring.

"His name was Wilson. He was working nights. It was a little after midnight, one morning in October, when Wilson, sitting at his instrument, glanced around at a masked man pointing a revolver at his head.

"Wilson took it rather calmly. 'What the h——,' he said. 'O, nothing,' said the robber, 'only you'd better disconnect all those instruments. I know the code and I know how to deaden every wire on the line. So don't try anything funny. Just pull out all those plugs.'

"Wilson obeyed. After he had finished the job of putting the wires out of business at his station, he was bound by the robber and a companion.

"Disconnect Those Instruments."

"He heard them discussing their plans outside the station and learned they had piled ties on the track a mile down the right of way and that they intended to rob and wreck the express train, which was due in a few minutes.

"Wilson struggled to loosen his bonds when he heard the robbers walking away toward the scene of the expected wreck. He succeeded in freeing himself just as he heard the whistle of the limited coming down the grade. He ran to the door, saw it would be too late to flag the train, as he could not reach a semaphore in time.

"Fortunately the engineer had slackened his speed down to twenty-five miles an hour or so, as he always did when going through the town where Wilson worked. He ran to the edge of the platform and just as the observation car passed, made a lunge for the brass railing—and held on.

"He afterwards told me that it nearly tore him to pieces, but he stuck, gained breath and pushed open the door. He didn't wait to call the conductor, but grasped the bell cord and jerked the signal for the engineer to stop.

"The express slackened its speed and finally came to a complete standstill. The conductor came running back through the cars to learn who had dared to pull the bell cord.

"Then the dispatcher explained. The conductor told the engineer, and, between them, they arranged a plan. The train would back into the station and Wilson would connect the wires and inform the superintendent, who would send a train from the other direction to trap the robbers.

"The plan worked—just so far. The other train was sent, but the robbers must have been 'wise' that something was wrong. They skipped. The relief crew found the pile of ties, but no train wreckers.

"Wilson's presence of mind got him a new job, twenty dollars a month more, I believe. He's chief dispatcher now."

WHERE RAILROADS CAN SAVE

New Method of Freight Handling Said to Be Worth One Hundred Millions a Year.

Railroad men who scoffed at the scientific management argument advanced by the shippers in last year's freight rate controversy are closely watching an experiment that is being tried at St. Louis.

Only a few years ago the railroads through almost hopeless congestion of freight at the crop moving periods were brought to a realization of the fact that in their haste to develop new territory too little attention had been paid to terminal facilities. Since then, tremendous sums have been spent to secure easy movement of trains in and out of yards, but in the method of loading and unloading cars there has been no change in a hundred years until today.

In remodeling its freight station at St. Louis, the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, as a substitute for the hand pushed truck, installed an overhead electric device for handling freight. That change, the first of its kind in the history of American railroading, was made on June 1. Recently the Alton and the Clover Leaf, two other Hawley roads, began to use the new freight station.

According to Missouri, Kansas & Texas officials, the net result has been an increase of over 300 per cent in terminal facilities, and a reduction from 45 cents to 20 cents in the cost of handling each ton of freight.

On the average, miscellaneous freight is moved by the railroads three times, at an average cost of 33 1-3 cents a handling. According to the last annual report of the interstate commerce commission, the railroads hauled 300,000,000 tons of miscellaneous freight. If by substituting machinery for hand pushed trucks one-third of the present cost can be saved, as in the case of the Hawley lines, the annual saving by all of the railroads should be $100,000,000. And that does not take into account the saving effected by increasing terminal facilities.

Conductor's Good Reasoning.

The street car conductor was about to be transferred to another line. Not his to reason why, yet on that occasion he did, and with the chief of the department.

"I don't like that line," he said.

"What's the matter with it?" asked the chief.

"It's commonplace," said the conductor. "I will lose my good manners if I go down there. The line I am on now is a well-dressed line and a liberal education for the railway employe. I am not the same man I was when I was moved up there two years ago from a downtown line. I am more polite, my voice is lower and I have spruced up in general appearance. It is that way with every man in the business. Put him on a line patronized by well-dressed people and he will fix up to fit his surroundings. If I go back on that other line I will lose polish."

All the chief said then was "Well, well"; but the conductor was not transferred.

Mono-Railways.

Railways with only one rail have been amongst the dreams of science for a good many years and appear to be feasible owing to the utilization of the gyroscope, which, on the principle of a boy's humming top, maintains its equilibrium by its speedy revolutions. A modification of the original design is just now coming into use, which gives a tolerably effective light railway at a very cheap rate, and may revolutionize country transportation entirely. It consists of a six inch rail of hard wood, or metal, supported on posts, five or six feet apart, with a subsidiary rail a couple of feet below it. The car sits astride the track, its bottom just above the snowline, one wheel running vertically along the top rail, and two horizontal wheels running, one each side of the subsidiary rail. The propulsion is by a gasoline, or if preferred, any other engine, set for convenience above the upper rail on the car. The horizontal wheels preserve the balance on which principle the system depends. Grades and curves are said to be easily negotiable. The average expense of building the track is said to be about $2,000 a mile. Two counties in Nova Scotia have voted bonuses of $1,000 a mile to companies which are about to build lines. There are short lines already in operation at Ottawa, and at Sherbrooke, Que.

The Perilous Years.

Justice Ford of New York was discussing his famous dictum: "In my opinion it takes about five years for the ordinary couple to learn to overlook each other's faults." He said: "After 5 years of marriage a spirit of gentleness and loving kindness manifests itself. But in the first two or three years a spirit of the bitterest disillusion prevails.

"This bitter spirit was well illustrated in a dialogue wherein a young wife sobbed, 'And you used to say that you could hear the rustle of angels' wings whenever I drew near you!'

"'But I've found out now,' the husband sneered, 'that the sound was only the creaking of your broken corset bones.'"

Her Estimate of Books.

"What books have helped you most?"

"I don't rely on any books. There are some good bridge whist manuals. But experience is the best teacher."

The Pitfalls of English.

A Chinese student in England succeeded in giving a very brief paraphrase of the phrase, "out of sight, out of mind." He wrote, "invisible, insane."

Didn't Embrace the Opportunity

"Well, how are you getting on with your admirer, Alice?"

"Oh, I have given up all hope now. We got stuck in a lift for three hours yesterday, and even that didn't make him propose."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Self-Sacrificing.

"She's awfully self-sacrificing."

"How do you make that out?"

"Well, she stayed home from church Sunday, to sit up with a sick woman."

"Huh! She isn't a regular churchgoer. I don't see anything self-sacrificing in that."

"You don't? But, my dear, she had a new gown and a new hat that had just arrived Saturday night!"

Proper Behavior.

Mother—"Willie, you're eating like a pig. Why can't you behave properly?"

Willie—"Why, I thought this was a picnic."—Life.

Its Degree.

Mrs. Blowit—Are you planning an expensive gown?"

Mrs. Knowit—Well, it will take at least five courses and his favorite dishes to get it.

Wisdom.

The Inquisitive Guest—I suppose you would like to get a job in a restaurant patronized by millionaires, where you'd get big tips?

The Obsequious Waiter—No, sir; I'd rather have a job in a restaurant where four-flushers on $12 a week salaries bring the girls they are trying to make a hit with.

TO CURE A KICKING HORSE

Harness Arranged in Manner to Teach Animal Futility of Trying for Its Own Sweet Way.

Sooner or later domesticated animals learn that they cannot have their own way, but must bow to the law of humans. Every once in awhile, however, there is born a horse who thinks he is entitled to his own opinion, and his favorite way of asserting himself is kicking the dashboard to bits. Two Missouri men have devised a harness which is warranted to cure this habit. Straps cross the horse's back and breast and at their junctions are fastened the ends of ropes which engage the fetlocks of the animal's hind legs in running loops. The other end of the ropes are fastened to staples in the horse's stall or to some other stationary object in front of which he is tied. The result is that when a horse is trussed up in this manner, if he tries to kick he finds he cannot get his hind hoof beyond a certain point, and after making a number of ineffectual efforts he becomes discouraged. If he is a particularly bad kicker he can be goaded into making these attempts until his spirit is broken in that respect.

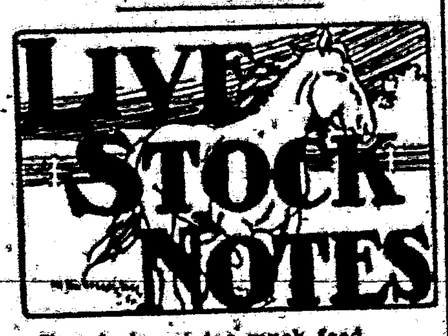
Defect in Wool.

A serious defect in the wool may not be strictly a disease, but it may be the result of a poor condition of the sheep due to some mistake or neglect in the management.



Few foals get too much feed.

It is not practical to take a horse out of the field to give water.

If the dam becomes heated the milk is injurious to the colt.

It is bad policy to select the brood sows from the feed lot.

The brood sow that is the best mother is never excessively fat.

The demand upon the foal's digestive system for nourishment is very great.

If a colt is worth raising at all he is worth raising well.

When ten days old, dock your lambs and castrate those not kept for rams at about two weeks old.

Silage makes cheaper beef than anything else. I can keep throughout the year or two or three years.

In breeding dairy cattle, the fact that they are destined for milk production must constantly be kept in mind.

A good ration of cottonseed meal or linseed meal is three pounds per day per 1,000 pounds of live weight of the animal.

In fattening hogs to the best advantage they should be graded; that is, the smaller ones should be in a pen by themselves.

In hunting a sire get one of the same strain as the mare unless she is a scrub. There is little to be gained in crossing.

Do not forget that hogs are grazing animals and that pastures offer a mighty cheap place to keep them during the summer.

In feeding a lot of pigs it is easy to get into the habit of giving a certain quantity of feed and calling it enough as long as they [illegible]

CEMENT BARN QUITE UNIQUE

Indiana Farmer Builds Stable Polygon in Shape and Contains Not One Single Piece of Wood.

M. S. Yoder, a farmer living at Shipshewanna, Ind., is the designer and builder of a unique cement barn. Besides drawing up the plans and superintending the construction, Mr. Yoder invented a hay carrying device that conveys hay from the mow to any part of the barn by gasoline power, says the Popular Mechanics.

The barn itself is remarkable in shape; as it is a polygon with 12 equal sides and contains in its structure not a stick of wood from ventilator to cellars. One of the unusual features of its construction is that the reenforcement in the concrete is simply old junk iron, mostly from an old bridge, but which served as well as the material made and sold for that purpose. This iron was wound with wire fencing to hold the cement to the beams and girders.

The roof in this barn is of concrete as well as the walls, and it conforms to the shape of the sides, giving the structure a pleasing appearance. The ground floor is arranged for cattle and houses 30 horses and cows. The second floor is a threshing floor and it approached by an old highway bridge used as reenforcement with the cement.

The barn completed cost $1,700, besides the work of the farmer and his horses and hands.

HORSESHOE FOR MARSH LAND

Directions Given and Illustration Shows How Device Can Be Made to Prevent Slipping.

Fit up the ordinary horseshoe with toe and heel, throwing the heels well out, says the Blacksmith and Wheelwright. Make the bottom of the marsh shoe of two thicknesses of one-half inch hard wood, crossing the grain of the boards to prevent splitting. Slots A and B are cut for the toe and heel calks to rest in. This will prevent the marsh shoe from slipping around on the horse's foot.

Marsh Land Horseshoes.

Make a staple of three-eighth inch round iron and thread each end about three inches long. The width of the staple will depend on the width of the shoe. The staple is fastened to the board by inserting the ends through holes bored at CC. Bend another piece of three-eighth inch round iron E in the shape shown to fit around the horse's foot about two inches below the half. The ends DD are bent up to fasten into the staple. Forge an eye on a bolt to fit over the rod E and attach to the board at F.

Save by Use of Silo.

The silo does away with the expense of shocking and the succulence of the silage feeds aids a more complete digestion of the dry feeds.

Tankage for Hogs.

Good tankage contains 60 per cent. protein and some of our stations have found it to be the cheapest protein carrier for hogs. It usually costs $40 per ton. Wheat bran costs from $25 to $30 per ton, and contains only 12 per cent. protein, then if it is protein we want tankage is what we should buy. It should be fed with cornmeal or some other ground feed. However, I have fed it alone with good results. I feed from one to two pounds per day, according to the size of the hog.

Feed for Calves.

Corn silage of good quality is one of the best feeds for calves I know of, says a writer in an exchange. My own are wintering on silage, buckwheat middlings and mixed hay. For calves four months of age a peck twice per day is about enough for best results, with two pounds of middlings daily and what hay they will eat.

Protection for Horse.

A blanket or heavy cloth fly cover is positive torture to a nervous and thin skinned horse. The old fashioned leather or cord nets are better.

A WONDERFUL CHANGE.

Mrs. R. Crouse, Manchester, Iowa, says: "For two years my back was weak. Rheumatic pains racked my lower limbs day and night. The passages of the kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular. When I started using Doan's Kidney Pills, these troubles soon lessened and the dull backache vanished. My kidneys now act normally and I give Doan's Kidney Pills credit for this wonderful change."

CHILD'S HEAD A MASS OF HUMOR

"I think the Cuticura remedies are the best remedies for eczema I have ever heard of. My mother had a child who had a rash on its head when it was real young. Doctor called it baby rash. He gave us medicine, but it did no good. In a few days the head was a solid mass, a running sore. It was awful; the child cried continually. We had to hold him and watch him to keep him from scratching the sore. His suffering was dreadful. At last we remembered Cuticura Remedies. We got a dollar bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, a box of Cuticura Ointment, and a bar of Cuticura Soap. We gave the Resolvent as directed, washed the head with the Cuticura Soap, and applied the Cuticura Ointment. We had not used half before the child's head was clear and free from eczema, and it has never come back again. His head was healthy and he had a beautiful head of hair. I think the Cuticura Ointment very good for the hair. It makes the hair grow and prevents falling hair." (Signed) Mrs. Francis Lund, Plain City, Utah, Sept. 19, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 12 L, Boston.

Deaths Due to Dust.

A warning against the dangers of dust was issued recently by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, in which it is shown that the percentage of deaths caused by tuberculosis in dusty trades is more than double that for all employed men in the registration area of the United States. While among males generally in the registration area of the United States 14.5 per cent. of all deaths are from consumption the mortality among grinders from this disease is 45.2 per cent., and in hardly any of the dusty trades is it below 25 per cent. The percentage of deaths from tuberculosis among all those exposed to metallic dust is 36.9 per cent.; to mineral dust, 28.6 per cent.; to vegetable fibre dust, 28.8 per cent.; to mixed animal and other forms of dust, 32.1 per cent.; to street dust, 25.5 per cent., and to organic, or dust coming from the article being manufactured, 23 per cent.

A Resulting Ambition.

"The English are a queer people, aren't they?"

"In what way?"

"I suppose it is a London man's day dream to become a knight mayor."

The next time you feel that swallowing sensation gargle Hamlins Wizard Oil immediately with three parts water. It will save you days and perhaps weeks of misery from sore throat.

Not so Much.

"Is he a captain of industry?"

"No—nothing more than a second lieutenant."

An Equivalent.

Calling people down is not a very uplifting process.

Particularly the Ladies.

Not only pleasant and refreshing to the taste, but gently cleansing and sweetening to the system, Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is particularly adapted to ladies and children, and beneficial in all cases in which a wholesome, strengthening and effective laxative should be used. It is perfectly safe at all times and dispels colds, headaches and the pains caused by indigestion and constipation so promptly and effectively that it is the one perfect family laxative which gives satisfaction to all and is recommended by millions of families who have used it and who have personal knowledge of its excellence.

Its wonderful popularity, however, has led unscrupulous dealers to offer imitations which act unsatisfactorily. Therefore, when buying, to get its beneficial effects, always note the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package of the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna.
