INAUGURATION MONDAY

Governor McDonald Will Be Inaugurated January 15, At Santa Fe

'TIS TO BE A GREAT EVENT

BY ARTY FICIAL

President Taft did it!

Great bodies move slowly you know.

Wonder will the style of presidents change in 1912?

It isn't likely. Embonpoint retains its popularity and unless some presidential possibility tends toward the severity of the straight front, we shall continue right on having fat presidents.

Who said, 'Nobody loves a fat man?''

But this is digression To return President Taft signed the proclamation and the date of the first state inauguration is January 15.

The controversial imbroglio—the more recent developments were but the tardy going off of petards after the real fireworks were over—is ended.

The women failed to find good and sufficient reason for the long delay. The female species are given to fits of imperviousness, you know, when the things done by officialdom seem unduly perhaps, nonsensical.

The women folk were most concerned about the gowns for the inauguration which had "builded" for inaugural ceremonies, January I, and which might in the kaleidoscopic changes of fashion, get out of style before the big' doings. But all's swell that ends well.

January 15, only next Monday, is an excellent date, (the committee will, no doubt, feel greatly relieved at this expressed approval.)

It's up to us to show the interested U.S.A., that New Mexico is undeserving of the famous and resented epithet "Wild and Woolly." This inauguration is going to make the effete east sit up and take notice, I wager.

That it will be something extremely out of the ordinary is evidenced by the lavish preparations which will be on with a whoop and a rush now that the date is set.

The decorations alone make one shudder to think of the bills, and the gowns may have a like effect upon masculine purchasers. Its almost certain that there will be more beautiful costumes than I can describe in a year.

'Tis to be a great event—this first state inauguration. No expense is being spared and if electrics and flowers by the thousand, lively women and dry champagne go to make a brilliant inaugural, success is assured.

And of course, everybody will be full—of enthusiasm, I mean—thrilled with the vast significance of the occasion and proud to honor Governor McDonald and his wife.

Visitors will be attracted to the historic capital by the hundreds, from every part of the state and from various portions of the United States.

Crowded and gaily decorated, the Ancient City will be a right good place to be, for those who love excitements. There will be something doing every minute, from the time the ceremonies start in the morning, till the sumptous ball ends in the wee sma' hours of the morning after.

SCHOOL NOTES

Friday afternoon, Jan. 19, 1912, will be "Patron's Day" in the local schools. On that day we will hold "open house" and all patrons of the school are cordially invited to visit the various rooms.

The teacher's reports for the fourth month of school which closed Jan 5th, show a total enrollment for the month of 209 pupils, a larger number than reported in any previous month of the term.

Late reports from the County Treasurer seem to indicate that the school fund is now in better shape than it has heretofore appeared this year and present indications are that we can have as many as four more months of school if teachers are willing to wait until August for the money on their last warrants.

Thursday morning of this week we had the pleasure of listening to two very helpful and interesting talks from the Rev. Homer T. Wilson who had given the fourth number of the lecture course at the Methodist church on the preceding evening. Mr Wilson spoke first to the intermediate and higher grades in the assembly room and afterward to the primary grades in Miss Laws room.

Rev. C I. Walker and Rev R B Evans accompanied him in his round visits to the rooms.—C. L. S.

ANCHO ENTERTAINMENT

Mr. and Mrs. W. McWilliams entertained quite a number of their friends at their home Jan the 5th, 1912. One of the interesting and laughable features of the evening was the apron and necktie contest. Miss Bella Thompson and Master Bryan Hightower won the prizes for quickest and neatest sewing.

Mrs. McWilliams in her charming way arranged a unique manner of selecting partners. A couple of bon bon dishes of half-paper-hearts were passed around with inscriptions or verses on each. The broken hearts were matched by comparing ends and the guests then partook of sumptous refreshments which were followed by more games until the "wee sma' hours" of the morning, when the hostess was reluctantly bade good bye.

TRAINS FROM EAST DELAYED

Traffic from the east on the Rock Island was at a standstill from Friday last until Tuesday on account of heavy snows in Kansas. All passenger trains were stalled on either one side or the other of the blockade and the towns along the Southwestern were without through mail for five days. The Southwestern ran stub trains out of Tucumcari however, each night to take care of the local travel to El Paso and thru traffic was resumed Tuesday.

WEEKS' LOCAL EVENTS

Happenings In Carrizozo and Vicinity During The Past Week.

HOMER T. WILSON

Wednesday evening the people of Carrizozo were treated to a lecture by Homer T. Wilson, of the J. S. White Lyceum course, at the M. E. Church. The subject was "Sparks from the Anvil."

His lecture was a gem. It abounded in happy wit, lofty sentiments of love, loyalty and patriotism, a bright optimism, good advice that lacked the element of preaching, and a devoted attachment to the boys that simply carried the audience away in an ecstacy of delight. He showed the growth of character of the boy, "the stuff that men are made of," and the man who heard his lecture and did not benefit by it morally and otherwise would indeed be a hardened reprobate. He has a pleasing stage presence, a splendid voice, and an enunciation as clear as a bell each syllable being distinct. He is magnetic in his manner, exquisite and heart-touching in painting of word pictures and sublime in his apotheosis of the barefoot boy.

Dr. Wilson found that he could remain and deliver his second lecture entitled, "America's Uncrowned Queens" Thursday night and still keep his next appointment.

MISSION TEAS

The Ladies of the Home Mission held their first Good Will Offering Tea at the home of Mrs Clarance Spence yesterday afternoon and a pleasant time was participated in by all who called. Mrs. Spence was assisted by Mrs Sam Miller, Mrs Doc. Lacey, Mrs Farley and Mrs John Bell.

This was the first of a series of teas to be given on the alternating Thursday afternoons. The next one to be given by Mrs. Ulrick, Mrs D. B Tennis, Mrs. E B Walker, Mrs. Hoock on January 25th. Followed by a committee of Mrs. Kolar Chas Jones W. Miller and Mrs. Forrest on Febuary 8th. Mrs J. E. A FEDERAL HEALTH BOARD.

It is gratifying to note that the bill for the creation of a federal health board will not be allowed to pass without a protest. Reports of organized resistance come from all parts of the country, and it may be that the opposition will soon be sufficiently solidified to defeat a project that promises infinite mischief for the community, and suffering and injustice for the individual.

The proposal is based upon those specious claims that are notoriously hard to controvert. If a federal health board were to confine its activities to the promulgation of salutary advice upon hygienic matters, to the abatement of quackery, and to the purity of drugs, it might be possible to say much in its favor, although it would still be difficult to say that such an organization is needed. But we know that it will attempt to do far more than this, seeing that its adherents have loudly proclaimed their intentions. Indeed, there is no secrecy about them. It is confidently expected that the board will consist of advocates of one school of medicine only and that the methods of that school will be not only recommended, but enforced upon the nation. Indeed a board that was in any way representative of the medical profession as a whole would be stultified by its own disagreements. Outside the domain of simple hygiene, for which we need no federal board at all, there is no single point of medical practice upon which allopaths, homeopaths, eclectics and osteopaths could be in unison. Any board that could be devised by the wit of man must be composed of representatives of one school only, and this means that all other schools are branded as of an inferior caste, even though nothing worse happened to them. And something worse would happen to them. If we are to establish a school of medicine, if we are to assert that the government of the United States favors one variety of practice more than others, why not establish also a sect of religion and bestow special authorities upon Baptists, Methodists and Episcopalians? An established school of religious conjecture seems somewhat less objectionable than an established sect of pseudo-scientific conjecture.

Those who suppose that a federal board of health would have no concern with individual rights are likely to find themselves undeceived. It is for the purpose of interfering with individual rights that the proposal has been made. We need no special knowledge of conditions to be aware that what may be called unorthodox methods of healing have made sad inroads into the orthodox. Homeopathy claims a vast number of adherents who are just as well educated and just as intelligent as those who adhere to the older school. Osteopathy, eclecticism, and half a dozen other methods of practice are certainly not losing ground. Beyond them is the vast and increasing army of those who may be classed under the general and vague name of mental healers. Those who are addicted to any of these forms of unorthodoxy need have no doubt as to the purposes of the federal health board. Those purposes are to make it difficult for them to follow their particular fads and fancies, to lead them; and if necessary to drive them, from medical unorthodoxy to medical orthodoxy.

Now the Argonaut holds no brief for any of the excesses and the superstitions connected with the care of the body in which this age is so rife. But it does feel concerned for the preservation of human liberty and for the rights of the individual to doctor himself in any way he pleases so long as he does not indubitably threaten the health of the community. He may take large doses or small ones, or no doses at all; he may be massaged, anointed with oil, or prayed over, just as the whim of the moment may dictate, and probably it makes no particle of difference which he does. But he has the right to choose, just as he chooses the color of his necktie or the character of his underclothing. It is not a matter in which any wise government will seek to interfere. This is precisely the liberty that the health board intends to take from him. Orthodox medicine, conscious of its losses, is trying to buttress itself by federal statute, to exalt allopathy to the status of a privileged caste, and to create an established school of medicine just as some other countries have allowed themselves to create an established school of religion. It is for the common sense of the community to rebuke that effort and to repel an unwarranted invasion upon elementary human rights.—San Francisco Argonaut.

TELLS OF HARDSHIPS

Alaska Gold Miner Sends Plea to Judge.

William R. Miller of Glacier Creek Implores Jurist Not to Grant a Diverse to Wife for Desertion—Writes of Struggle.

Spokane, Wash.—William R. Miller, a placer gold miner of Glacier Creek, Alaska, gives an inkling of the struggles of prospectors in the North country in a pathetic letter to the probate judge of the Spokane county superior court, protesting against the granting of a decree to his wife, Mrs. Jane Miller, a nurse, in Spokane, who instituted proceedings for divorce, charging desertion in 1897 and failure to provide for his family.

Miller says in his letter that he has received no notice of the pendency of the divorce case from his wife or her attorneys, but heard of the case from roundabout sources. He recites numerous reasons why the divorce should not be granted and makes a pathetic plea for the preservation of his home and fireside. To combat the charge of neglecting to provide for his family he has sent postal receipts to show that he has sent $800 at various times. Part of the letter follows:

"I have slaved and worked for years as no other man in the Yukon has ever labored, always looking forward to the time when I could again join my family in circumstances that would assure our independence in the declining years of our lives.

"Four years I worked in the ditch to build a canal to my claim, and when I had finished the work and was about to start to wash out the gold a terrible flood came and washed away a good part of my labors. Another year and a half was then spent in repairing this damage, when the news came last spring that my daughter had been accidentally shot and killed last February near Spokane. This news so upset me that it brought on heart trouble, and for months I was unable to do a thing. Last July I again began work, and when about to reap the reward of the years of my labors I hear the word from roundabout sources that my wife has sued for a divorce.

"I wish to impress upon your mind that my home has been my first and last thought every day since I first landed here, in 1898, and that I love my wife and family dearly. I visited home for some time in 1901, and again eighteen months ago, and had I thought then that there was anything of this kind in her mind I would have given up my claim and suffered the loss of all my hard work rather than see my family rent asunder. I cannot help but believe there is some kind of conspiracy or some one has persuaded my wife to do as she is doing, or that her mind has become confused through the loss of her daughter.

Miller had negotiated a sale of a half interest in his claims to a syndicate of Seattle, but says his wife wrote to the Seattle firm handling the trade and spoiled the deal. He asserts his claims are valuable, and that he expects soon to see them turning out gold.

Miller requests that if a divorce must be granted the court make it an interlocutory decree, forbidding the remarriage of his wife, so that he may, after his accession to wealth and return to civilization, again have a chance to win her back.

FOX TURNS AND CHASES DOGS

Delaware Party Enjoy Reverse Hunt, in Which Quarry Escapes From Hounds.

Wilmington, Del.—A party of Delaware fox hunters, who included Joseph Becker, Edward Nehar, John M. Hance, John B. Traitt and others, unearthed a fine specimen near Newcastle.

The hounds ran well for a time, but suddenly wheeled around and sought cover, with the fox after them.

Hunters joined in the reverse chase. It continued for several miles. Finally other dogs joined the pack and frightened Reynard away. The fox then escaped.

Man Buried Second Time

Hopkins, Recluse, Was Once Thought Dead, Is Put in Grave for Good.

Hopkins, Mo.—For the second time in a quarter of a century James H. Magee, a recluse, has been lowered into a grave in a coffin.

A quarter of a century ago, in Burlington, Ia., he was stricken with cholera. He was thought dead, was placed in an old board coffin and was being lowered into a grave when a friend stopped the proceedings, declaring that he believed Magee was alive.

The coffin was raised, a doctor sent for and Magee was revived. He was nursed back to health. For more than a year, however, he had been in poor health, and there was no doubt of his death when he passed away this week.

"Old Mack" was the name under which Magee was best known in the vicinity of Hopkins. He was born in Ireland in 1830 and came to America with his parents when he was three years old. He lived in New York and New Jersey until manhood and learned the trade of a plasterer when a youth.

He went from New York to Bushnell, Ill., in 1862, and there married Hester Ann Pierce, daughter of a wealthy land owner. After his wife died he became a wanderer and traveled over much of the United States. He took up the work of contractor and built a number of the Harvey eating-houses along the Santa Fe, between Newton, Kan., and Albuquerque, N. M.

Although he was an avowed free thinker, shortly before his death he asked that a minister be called and he died praying that his sins be forgiven.

Mute Offered $50 to Speak

Beggar Suspected of Shamming Scorns Tempter and Goes to Jail.

Cleveland, O.—How to determine whether a man is deaf or is merely pretending to be is the problem that has engaged the attention of Police Judge Levine and Probation Officer Vining since John G. Grownest, 46, was arrested on the charge of being a common beggar.

For Grownest used the plea when he was begging that he was deaf and dumb, the police say. When the patrolman who arrested him brought him into the station to enter his name on the blotter, Grownest whipped out a pad and pencil and wrote his name on that. All efforts on the part of the police to surprise him into speaking failed. At every attempt Grownest would shake his head and rapidly scribble [illegible]

In court Grownest still stuck to his character of mute and defied all attempts on the part of the judge to trap him into speech. Not able to decide whether or not the man was an imposter, the judge sent him back to jail and sent for Mrs. Elmer Bates, president of the Society for the Deaf, and asked her to talk to him.

After trying in vain to talk to him through the sign language, Mrs. Bates came to the conclusion also that the man was faking. In court the judge sentenced the man to $50, costs and thirty days in the workhouse.

"If you will speak one word I will throw off the $50 from the sentence," Levine told Grownest.

The man's face grew red and his lips moved as though he were about to speak. Then his jaws snapped shut and he shook his head. He was sent to Warrensville farm.

AMERICAN INGENUITY GOOD

How Horticulturist Managed to Fill Seemingly Impossible Order.

London.—An interesting experiment in horticulture was described the other day by Prof. William B. Bottomley of King's College, London, when addressing the members of the Women's Agricultural and Horticultural Union at Lord Brassey's residence in Park Lane.

"An eminent American horticulturist," he said, "received an order to supply a large number of prune seedlings within nine months. As eighteen months are required to raise prune seedlings, the task seemed impossible. However, he planted some almond seeds, which germinated and at the end of six months had grown so rapidly that he was able to graft prune buds on to them and to deliver the prune seedlings within the specified time.

"The orchard," [illegible] Bottomley, "is now one of the [illegible] in California."

Good Jokes

BRILLIANT IDEAS.

"I've found a new use for those gramophone records you bought last week, and which cost such a lot of money," said his wife.

"How clever you are!" he exclaimed. "What is your latest?"

"In the first place," she began, "I hold a skein of wool over my arms, tie one end of the wool on a reel place the reel on the gramophone pin, and then start the machine. The wool is wound up in no time!"

The fond husband gaped in admiration.

"But that is not all," she continued "Tomorrow I shall place a little bath brick on one end of the records, start the gramophone, and so clean the knives."

He is still gaping.

Thought it was Stone.

"Professor Blinker is getting more absent minded every day."

"What's his latest break?"

"Why, his oldest daughter is just out of cooking school, you know, and he's been showing his class a cruller she made. He told them it was proof of the fact that the men of stone age played the game of ring toss."

Copernicus had proclaimed his discovery that the sun stood still and the earth moved around it.

"This doesn't necessarily prove that General Joshua was a faker," he said, "but he had to accommodate himself to the popular understanding. It was a much easier task for him to stop the earth than it would have been to stop the sun."

Ah, yes; Copernicus was a great man. His theory of the universe persisted for more than 300 years. Then came the Rev. John Jasper and smashed it into smithereens.

PLOWING FOR WATER

Must Be Done Deeply and at the Right Time.

Experiment Stations Find That When Work Is Done In Fall It Proves Water Conserving and Has Many Other Advantages.

It is not alone sufficient to plow and to plow deeply; it is also necessary that the plowing be done at the right time. In the very great majority of cases over the whole dry farm territory, plowing should be done in the fall. There are three reasons for this; first, after the crop is harvested, the soil should be disturbed immediately, so that it can be exposed to the full action of the weathering agencies, whether the winter be open or closed. If for any reason plowing cannot be done early, it is often advantageous to follow the harvester with a disk, and to plow later when convenient. The chemical effect on the soil resulting from the weathering made possible by fall plowing, as will be shown in chapter IX., is of itself so great as to warrant the teaching of the general practice of fall plowing. Secondly, the early stirring of the soil prevents evaporation of the moisture in the soil during late summer and the fall. Thirdly, in the parts of the dry-farm territory where such precipitation occurs in the fall, winter or early spring, fall plowing permits much of this precipitation to enter the soil and be stored there until needed by plants.

A number of experimental stations have compared plowing done in the early fall with plowing done late in the fall or in the spring, and with almost no exception it has been found that early fall plowing is water-conserving and in other ways advantageous. It was observed on a Utah dry-farm that the fall-plowed land contained to a depth of 10 feet 7.47 acre-inches more water than the adjoining spring-plowed land—a saving of nearly one-half of a year's precipitation. The ground should be plowed in the early fall as soon as possible after the crop is harvested. It should then be left in the rough throughout the winter, so that it may be mellowed and broken down by the elements. The rough land further has a tendency to catch and hold the snow that may be blown by the wind, thus insuring a more even distribution of the water from the melting snow.

A common objection to fall plowing is that the ground is so dry in the fall that it does not plow up well, and that the great dry clods of earth do much to injured the physical condition of the soil. It is very doubtful if such an objection is generally valid, especially if the soil is so cropped as to leave a fair margin of moisture in the soil at harvest time. The atmospheric agencies will usually break down the clods, and the physical result of the treatment will be beneficial. Undoubtedly, the fall plowing of dry land is somewhat difficult, but the good results more than pay the farmer for his trouble. Late fall plowing, after the fall rains have softened the land, is preferable to spring plowing. If for any reason the farmer feels that he must practice spring plowing, he should do it as early as possible in the spring. Of course, it is inadvisable to plow the soil when it is so wet as to injure its tilth seriously, but as soon as that danger period is passed, the plow should be placed in the ground. The moisture in the soil will thereby be conserved, and whatever water may fall during the spring months will be conserved also. This is of especial importance in the Great Plains region, and in any district where the precipitation comes in the spring and winter months.

POULTRY YARD AND PEN.

Let the chickens have plenty of free range.

Houses must be kept sanitary and the fowls free from vermin.

Lice are working havoc, and too severe measures cannot be adopted.

It is the even, steady thrift of our stock that makes them pay a profit.

In making an egg ration, do not forget a liberal allowance of sunshine.

The comb not only denotes egg laying, but the general condition of the hen.

Less grain is needed for fowls when bone and vegetables are fed in abundance.

A cold draft will stop hens laying as quickly as anything in the world—sure.

Early hatches do better than those brought off after the heat of the summer has begun.

To make the chick grow, first give plenty of good fresh air; don't allow them to crowd.

The hen is admitted to be one of the greatest financial factors in the country today, and she is also one of the most overworked.

GREAT DANGERS IN DISKING

Habit Comes From Humid States Where It Rains Often and Little Cultivation Is Needed.

(By M. R. BARBON.)

We have been watching the effects of shallow plowing and disking for nearly thirty years, and still we can see no good in it. Every dry year the same thing happens. In 1908 we went over thousands of acres where the crops had been disked in on stubble. We saw oats burned out six and eight inches high; spring wheat completely fired just beginning to head; winter wheat that went only five bushels to the acre; and fields of corn on shallow-plowed sod that yielded nothing but a handful of fodder.

The disking and shallow plowing habits come from the humid states, where it rains sometimes twice a week, and small crops can always be raised by simply cultivating enough to keep the weeds out.

Farmers will sometimes say: "We can raise more by disking than plowing." This is true, because a surface farmer seldom plows more than three inches, and he can do this equally well and more quickly with the disk. Or he may plow without harrowing, let the ground dry out as he goes, and plant in a poorly prepared seed bed.

An old friend of ours used to raise indifferent crops by plowing once in three years and disking in his seeds the two intervening years. The first year his oats would be about two to three feet high; the second year, 18 inches; and the third about a foot; but if a dry year happened, there was nothing doing. He always would persist that he could raise good crops without plowing to vary his cattle through the winter. I happened to meet him in 1909. "Well," I said, "how did you come out last year?" "Oh," he said, "I sold my cattle."

Thousands of head of cattle were sold in the fall of 1908 for the same reason. This put the market right down and the dry farmers lost heavily.

Supposing we plant a crop of spring wheat or oats on corn stubble, what happens? Ninety per cent. of the farmers put cattle on the stubble during the winter. The ground becomes hard and overpacked; we disk this on the surface and plant the seed. For awhile it does splendidly, and if the rains keep up will make a fair crop; but if dry weather comes and a crust forms on the surface or under the mulch, the crop is gone, for it is solid underneath. It has never been plowed.

It is the surface farmers who are always wailing about this crust under the mulch, but those who belong to the deep-plowing school pay no attention to it, for they still have plenty of room for the roots of their crops down below, and if the mulch above the crust is in proper shape there is no more evaporation than there is before.

A man wrote to me once and asked what he should do for the crust under the mulch. I wrote back and said: "Next year plow deep." His answer was: "How did you find out that I didn't plow deep?"

The worst consequence of disking without plowing is the effect it has on next year's crop. The ground being hard, the water penetrates very little; the available moisture is used up by the crop, and the surplus evaporates or runs off. Nothing is saved for next year.

In dry farming, if we work only for the present, we are living from hand to mouth. The very foundation of this branch of agriculture is to farm for the future. Store up moisture in the soil next year and the year after, keep track of it with the pick and shovel or with a ground augur, and you will soon find out which style of farming pays the best.

Loose Ground for Poultry.

Keeping fowls on hard runs will frequently cause swollen feet and legs. They need loose ground for scratching.

Profits in the Dairy.

A decided tendency to dry up early in the season is why many cows do not make satisfactory profits to their owners. This is brought about many times by their early training. Every heifer should be milked for a long period after dropping her first calf so that this habit may become fixed.

The common cow is the outgrowth of conditions that appear on the average farm. If she is to be preceded by a better cow she should be preceded by a better dairyman.

The dairy cow has worked the question of co-operation out among the farmers. She has shown them the great benefits of co-operation in the creamery business and this should suggest further advantages in the co-operation if properly managed.

False Farm Economy.

Bare land unstocked and unworked is unproductive. Farmers should remember this fact, and they will be less likely to destroy their chances of profit by unwise economy in farm labor.

"You could not have been ignorant, then, that the sheep belonged to your landlord, Sir Garnett Fitz-Maurice, as his brand, 'G. F. M.,' was on the animal."

"True for ye, me lord, but sure I thought the letters meant 'Good Fat Mutton!'"

"Now, old man, make yourself comfortable and let's talk over the good old times. We haven't seen each other since we were boys together. I told you I was married, didn't I? By the way, did you ever live in Painesville?"

"Yes, I lived there three years."

"Ever meet Miss Katish?"

"Ha! ha! Why, I was engaged to her! But that's nothing—all the fellows in my crowd were engaged to her at one time or another. I see you've lived in Painesville. Why did you ask about her, in particular? Come—confess?"

"Why, I—er—I married her."

THE WORLD—A BRIEF REVIEW

The record of the world during the year that has just closed, is not encouraging to evangels of peace.

Great Britain, France and Germany just escaped a devastating war which seemed imminent for several weeks

Italy has entered upon a war of conquest in North Africa, which has already measured up largely in bloodshed and cruelty.

Russia, sustained morally by Great Britain, has begun her conquest of Persia, and is carrying it on through the ancient Asian methods of pitiless cruelty.

China is convulsed by a civil war, fierce and merciless in execution, and the mighty empire seems on the verge of anarchy.

The king and queen of the United Kingdom have gone to India and amid a magnificent display of barbaric splendor have been crowned emperor and empress of that vast region

Austrialasia has been at peace and has enjoyed more prosperity than in any year for a decade passed

Canada—our Daughter of Snows—has been much in evidence during the year passed.

She has drawn to her 100,000 American settlers from our northwestern states, the lure being her cheap lands. Her premier with our secretary of state and Great Britain's embassador to the United States arranged a reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States which our senate ratified, but when it was submitted to Canada a mighty excitement was worked up and it was rejected with scorn by our northern neighbors

That a vast majority of them did not know what they were voting for or against did not in the least marr the marvelous triumph which a great many of them are still hugging themselves for winning.

Mexico has been torn with war for a year past. Madero started a revolution which drove venerable Diaz from the presidency into exile An election was held and Madero elected president, but he is confronted with revolutions in half a dozen states which he is making the best fight he can to put down, and our belief is that if he escapes assassination he will eventually succeed, but the people of Mexico seem to be like the Mexican mountains—mostly of volcanic origin, and the tyranny and ignorance of two hundred years of misrule, have left Mexico in such a state that redemption seems almost hopeless.

A syndicate in the east has obtained a concession from Honduras and Nicaragua, the terms of which we have never been able to learn, but the matter has a look as though the syndicate has virtually agreed to maintain a stable government in those states.

In South America there have been rumors of war between Columbia and Equador, and between Peru and Chile. It is said that Castro, with a few followers, is trying to kindle a revolution in Venzuela, but he does not seem to be making much headway.

In the three stable states, Brazil, Argentina and Chile, much progress has been marked; the first two at least are taking on the attributes of nations Buenos Ayres and Rio are each becoming a most potential city.

Our own country has been signally blessed with health, and peace, and the harvest from field and orchard and mine has been astonishing to the world. All the same there has been a depression in business in every state, due to a most imperfect financial system, and to the failure on the part of our government to take effective measures to restore our flag to the sea, and to get in closer direct trade relations with the nations of the earth.

But great work has been preformed at home and the Panama canal has reached a point where the engineers can compute when it will be ready for use

The flag on next Fourth of July will have two added stars for Arizona and New Mexico, which have at last been added to the Union.

Alaska would be most prosperous if the government would give up certain of its feds and give that territory a chance. The coming year will witness another presidential election and we fear that congress is thinking more of that than of the immediate wants of the people.

But the year has accentuated the truth that there is no other land in all the world so blessed as our own.

SOME betrousered biped down in New York writes the sheriff of an Arizona county that he is looking for the "Perfect Woman" and is willing to marry her, which causes the Phoenix Republican to rise to remark:

"Think of the asinine conceit, the brainless stupidity, the unspeakable nerve, and the unthinkable egotism of the man who assumes that he is good enough to marry the perfect woman. Why, if he could get a gangrened-tempered squaw with gout, rheumatism and chilblains, and with a face like the crazy dream of a cocaine fiend, she would be too good for him.

"This pin-headed extract of personal vanity down in New York needs to take about a ten years' course in self effacement. Then he may be good enough for a slate colored Hottentot. He can hardly attain to even that standard otherwise."

COMMUNICATED

THE MENACE OF SOCIALISM

In a former article it was pointed out that the Socialist contemplated very large extensions of public activity, and this, of course, will necessitate a much larger income on the part of all the various branches of government.

It is the purpose in this article to expose the plans of the Socialists as to how this revenue shall be raised No attempt will be made to set forth the reasons they give for their plans, nor the argument by which they attempt to justify them.

Socialists are opposed to all forms of poll tax, and to any other tax that falls as heavily on the poor as on the rich, and they are opposed to tariffs even for revenue, advocating constant, gradual reduction of all duties till they are entirely eliminated

Socialists favor more or less, all forms of property taxes and expect that a Socialist government make no special effort to keep down the rate of taxation of this kind, but they intend as soon as they get the power, to raise the amount of property a man can hold except from all taxes, thus again shielding the pour man from payment of his share of property taxes.

The Socialist party platform proposes an inheritance tax graduated according to the amount of the bequest and the nearness of kin, but here as in property taxes, they propose a complete exemption on small bequests and only a small rate of taxation on those of moderate size, but a man of wealth could not leave his fortune to a distant relative, a good friend, or to charity without having most of it taken in taxes.

Socialists also favor a graduated income tax, One in which the rate will rise with the amount of the income, and they again propose that small incomes say under one hundred dollars per month shall pay no tax at all.

It will be observed that in their whole program the Socialists propose that the less prosperous members of society shall be exempt or nearly so, from all forms of taxation, and at the same time, they propose that taxation shall be so increased as to enable the various branches of our government to purchase all public utilities and many industries not now regarded as such.

From the above, almost any man ought to be able to find, out where he stands, and if his circumstances are such that he would come above the line of exemption proposed by the Socialists, and thus be subject to this proposed increase in taxation let him oppose with all his might the advance of the Socialists, for to him Socialism carries a menace.

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder.

CHAPTER III.—(Continued.)

"Well, so much for Blackstock—until the police get wind of him, at all events. They're trying to locate him by cable now; haven't heard of any success that way, however. Naturally . . . But a few days ago Dundas came to the surface."

Coast started violently. "Dundas!"

"Um-mm; full confession, exculpating you, incriminating Blackstock. Corroborative details; letters from Blackstock—all that sort of thing. Furthermore, Dundas told us why Blackstock feared Van Tuyl: Van knew something—some dirty business Blackstock had cooked up in the west. Immaterial now; tell you later. Also Dundas took us to the shop where Blackstock bought that gun—salesman recalled the transaction. You remember how we failed to prove the gun his?"

"Of course. Go on about Dundas."

"Well . . . it was Truax's doing; nailed Dundas on the street one day, somewhere east of Third avenue. The man had been in hiding ever since Blackstock cleared out; he was in a pretty bad way, broke and seedy; claimed Blackstock hadn't sent him a dollar since he disappeared. So Dundas, thrown back upon his pen for a means of livelihood, went all to pieces; couldn't work—had forgotten the trick—or wouldn't; drank up all he could raise by pawning things. . . . Truax staked him to a meal and drinks, plenty of drinks; and all that on an empty stomach made him maudlin. Confessed he was keeping a conscience—remorse gnawing at his vitals—whatever those are—everything like that. Then Truax bundled him into a taxi and brought him to my rooms. It was near midnight—got me out of bed; I caught a cold. However . . . I own it without compunction; we worked the poor devil through the third degree; simply browbeat and bullyragged him until I was ashamed of myself. But the truth oozed out finally, along with tears—whisky tears. We hadn't stinted the bottle. . . .

"As I say, in the end Dundas owned up to the whole filthy affair, just as you told it—whimpered about selling his soul to Blackstock, price not deposed. We made him sign a brief confession, but I knew that wouldn't be sufficient, and it was then too late and Dundas too far gone to do more with him. So I called in a central office man I happened to know, and turned Dundas over to him to be taken to a Turkish bath and licked into shape; and it did the trick, with a hearty breakfast and plenty of black coffee for a chaser. He was pretty shaky next morning, but I coaxed him into a taxi and had him at the district attorney's office before he knew what was up. There he wanted to hedge, but his signature to the overnight confession took all the starch out of him, and he went all over it again, with a stenographer taking it down—typewritten deposition—all that sort of thing. . . .

"Meanwhile my friend the detective had ransacked Dundas' lodging—some cheap room just off the Bowery—and found a bundle of letters from Blackstock—mostly written during the trial, when they didn't dare be seen together—hints and orders as to the evidence Dundas was to give. That settled it. Dundas was rushed before a magistrate and jailed and the grand jury was asked to indict him for perjury. The poor fool was scared silly, as soon as he realized what he had done—declared Blackstock would get him sooner or later. So he saved him the trouble—killed himself in his cell half an hour after being committed—had a phial of morphia secreted in his clothing . . ."

After a pause Coast said slowly: "So Blackstock did 'get' him after all! That makes two at least—two we know of."

"Yes." Warburton assented uneasily, worried by the hard expression that fixed Coast's mouth; "looked at that way, yes. . . . Well, we added your trial judge into consultation—the district attorney and I—and between the three of us drew up a petition for your pardon, the district attorney being the first to sign it. Got off to Albany by the first train. There wasn't the slightest trouble, the governor prompt-ed the pardon without a murmur. . . . And here we are."

"And here we are," Coast repeated in a whisper. He was quiet for a time.

"You know I can't thank you, old man," he said at length, rousing.

Warburton's fat little hand rested a moment lightly upon his shoulder. "You don't have to. I feel too good about it myself. Always knew it would come out all right. Never lost faith in you, not for a second, Garrett."

He rattled on, Coast listening by fits and snatches. He heard a little of this matter and that, heard less of more. He replied at times abstractedly.

Katherine Thaxter? Had she heard? All Coast's thoughts focussed upon this: he must see her. . . .

There came a pause, made awkward by a constraint in Warburton's manner. Coast glanced at him inquiringly. The little lawyer licked his lips nervously.

"There's one thing," he said, "you won't like, perhaps."

Coast smiled. "I'm not in a mood for fault-finding. What is it?"

"Of course, you know it's desirable to get Blackstock."

"Well?"

"You won't be fully cleared, in the public mind at least, until he's convicted in your stead."

"That's true enough."

"So we're keeping it quiet, for the time being—the reasons for your release, I mean."

"Why? What's the sense of that?" Coast demanded, excitedly. "You said 'exoneration!' . . ."

"So it is, so it will be. But we don't want to scare Blackstock. If he hears that Dundas has confessed, he'll never be found. If we permit him to think, as the public will certainly think, that you are pardoned principally because of your social standing and 'pull' . . . then he won't be so wary. You see? So we're withholding the real reason. Be patient; it will only be for a little while. And in the end it will be exoneration, absolute and unquestionable. Will you stand for this?"

Coast nodded somberly at the dull haze hanging over the sweltering city toward which they raced. "I presume I must," he said wearily; "but it's hard—thundering hard. . . . I had hoped . . ."

"I know, old boy." Warburton's hand touched his again. "But it's for the best—for your best interests, believe me."

Coast's chin sank despondently upon his breast. "I must go away for a time," he said, or rather muttered; his accents so low that Warburton failed to distinguish them—"clear out for a time. . . ."

They passed a corner news stand where a man stood with a paper outspread before him, the width of its front sheet occupied by headlines in huge black type, heralding the sensation of the hour.

They who rode might read:

GARRETT COAST PARDONED!
AT THE ELEVENTH HOUR!!!

Coast shivered as if chilled and sank back, crouching, faint with dismay, in his corner of the tonneau. Publicity had him in its relentless clutches.

At two in the afternoon the car stopped before the building on Nassau street in which Warburton had offices. Coast alighted, sick with fear of recognition. The sidewalk throng passed him with blank looks, the elevator boy had a copy of the blatant sheet and a stare for Mr. Warburton's client. In Warburton's private room there was business to distract him; papers to be signed, details to be arranged, letters and telegrams of congratulation, already coming in by the score, to be opened and read. He was called on the telephone—Warburton fully satisfying himself as to the caller's identity before turning the receiver over to Coast. His hope was nipped with disappointment; it was merely Truax calling to offer his felicitations and demand Coast's presence at "a little dinner at the club—just a few of us, all friends of yours;" the hour, seven that night. Mechanically Coast promised and rang off. He was unable to refuse; in his heart he knew that he would be unable to go.

"What about my rooms?" he asked, suddenly.

Warburton beamed. "They're waiting for you, everything just as you left it. I kept track of both your old servants; they're there, too. Just walk in and hang up your hat."

Coast meditated. "That's like you, Dick," he said.

An office boy entered. "Reporter from the Joinal wants to see Mister Coast."

"I've left," said Coast.

He thought soberly, frowning for a moment. "That puts my place out of the question; they'll swarm there."

"Yes," agreed Warburton.

"I'll put up at some hotel tonight."

"Made up your mind which?"

"No; I'll call you up when I'm settled. . . . You'd better give me some money."

Warburton's pudgy features contorted themselves to express chagrin. "The one thing I forgot!"

"Then send somebody out for it."

"How much?" Warburton drew a cheque-book toward him. "A hundred?"

A long pause prefaced Coast's estimate. "Five thousand."

The lawyer whistled. "The devil you say! What d'you want with all that?"

"How can I tell?"

With a sigh and a shrug Warburton drew the check and rang for his head clerk. That person brought with him the information that representatives of the Times, the Sun and the Herald had foregathered with the Journal reporter in the outer office, and would not be denied.

"Get the money," said Warburton. "I'll tend to the rest."

He made a sortie into the reception room and returned crestfallen. "I've lied like a trooper," he confessed, "but they won't budge. You were seen to enter; you haven't been seen to leave."

"Then," said Coast, "I'll stop here tonight."

Warburton shook his head in cheerful dissent. "Not in the least necessary. I'll fix you up all right. You can slip out into the hall by this door—I'll make sure the coast's clear, first—dodge round into the Liberty street corridor, and take the elevator there. You're hardly liable to be recognized on either the subway or the L, if you're careful. Make your own selection of a hotel and call me up at the club any time after five. Meanwhile I'll send a boy to your rooms for whatever you want, and he'll bring everything to you at any hour you name."

Coast smiled agreement. "That's a wonderful head you wear, Dick, but I doubt if your scheme will work; it's too simple . . ."

Its very simplicity made it practicable, however; and a little after four Coast made his escape precisely as Warburton had planned.

The Sidewalk Throng Passed Him With Blank Looks.

True Enlightenment.

"When we get enlightened we find that the way to attain harmony with God is by conforming ourselves to him, not by seeking to conform him to us. By and by we find that there is a God of infinite perfection in power, wisdom, justice, love and holiness; and then we find that God needs no instruction, for he is all wise, and before the beginning he knew all which would happen in the history of the human race. He needs no appeasing to alter his affection, for he is all love, and has an infinite desire to confer the highest possible or conceivable blessing on the whole human race, and on each individual thereof. When we come to this conclusion we take pains to bring ourselves into harmony with God. All sacrifice disappears; all mutilation of the flesh or spirit, all ceremonies which do not grow out of the natural wants of mankind."—Theodore Parker.

Treasures in Chicago University.

The University of Chicago possesses the Oxyrhynchus fragment of the Gospel of Mark, found ten years ago, which dates back to the fifth century. It has also the first Greek New Testament given to the world, issued by Erasmus in 1516; also the first one printed, the Complutensian Polyglot, which came from a Spanish press in 1514, but was suppressed until 1521.

Both Deceived.

She—"You deceived me when I married you." He—"I did more than that. I deceived myself."—Boston Transcript.

Her Daily Habit.

"I've been courting a girl lately, but I think I'll stop seeing her, as I'm sure as a wife she won't do."

"Who is she?"

"She's a telephone girl."

"Ha! That's why she won't answer."

One on George.

"Oh, my!" she exclaimed impatiently. "We'll be sure to miss the first act. We've been waiting a god many minutes for that mother of mine."

"Hours, I should say," he replied rather tartly.

"Ours?" she cried joyfully. "Oh, George, this is so sudden!"

A Cruel Question.

Skeezick's car had turned turtle, and as he sat gloomily contemplating the situation Uncle Silas reined in his nag and stopped outside.

"Turned over, hain't she?" he observed.

"Yep, said Skeezick, shortly.

"Want to sell?" asked Uncle Silas.

"Yes," said Skeezick. "I'll sell out cheap."

"What's your upset price?" asked Uncle Silas with a grin.

A Captious Customer.

"I don't like these fuzzy hats," declared the man.

"Here's something nobby in a derby," said the salesman.

"I don't care for a derby the depth of a soup plate."

"These are the only models we have."

"Well, gimme a dozen of each. I'd better lay in a stock before the styles get any worse."

Grabbing the Plums.

"Did ye's notice, Pat, that Read Admiral Hugo Osterhaus was in command av the fleet that President Taft reviewed in New York the other day?"

"Yis."

"And the sicretary av the navy is a man be the name av Mayer?"

"Is he?"

"And Schulte got the autymobile for bein' the best player in the Naytional league? Dianis, the furriners are breakn' in everywhere over here."

Why He Wanted to Go Home.

A man who takes his vacation in northern Michigan every summer brought back to Cleveland the other day a man-servant who had never been in a city before. The sights and scenes along Euclid avenue impressed him peculiarly. Recently he went to his employer and said:

"Mr. Ebergardt, I guess I'll have to go back home."

"Why, Jim, haven't we treated you well here?"

"Yep—treatmetn's all right. But I'm scared about my health."

"Are you sick, Jim?"

"Nope. But I seen four funerals goin' past this house today, and I guess Cleveland ain't a healthy town."

To Be Taken Seriously.

Take advantage of your opportunities, but don't "take advantage" of them.

It seldom requires a very strong levee to withstand a flood of generosity.

You can't convince an average man that he isn't a little above the average.

He who knows who to make much of little generally has something to spare.

Sometimes when you say a writer is beyond his depth, it simply means he is beyond your depth.

When you begin to suspect a fault in yourself you may be sure it is quite plain to others.

Most of us feel that we could have done great things if it hadn't been for the little things.

His Escape Was Expensive

Globe-Trotter Haskin Keeps Storekeeper Good Natured While Chinese Mob Waits.

Frederick J. Haskin, globe-trotter, man of the world and humorist, on one occasion struck Shanghai when the feeling among the natives was strong against Americans. The people of the Celestial empire were boycotting American goods and stoning Americans whenever they could get away with it.

Haskin was warned not to take any risk.

"These people won't bother me," he remarked airily. "If any of them tries to hurt me, I'll hand him a swift wallop under the chin."

Ten minutes after he left his hotel he was hotfooting it down the street while a gang of Chinese used him as a target, and pelting him with anything they could lay hands on. Finally, out of breath, and feeling that it was time to turn he dashed into a store. The mob waited for him with admirable patience. At the end of every fifteen minutes the traveler would ask the owner of the store:

"Are they still there?"

They were there.

Then, just to keep his savior in good humor, Haskin would make a purchase. He started out on a $30 overcoat, but the mob waited so long that he dropped in his expenditures until the articles he bought were worth only a dollar or two apiece.

He was imprisoned for half a day and the price of his escape was nearly $200.—Popular Magazine.

METHOD OF GIVING DRENCH

Plan is Shown in Illustration That Will Be Found Great Improvement Over Ordinary Way.

The ordinary way of giving a drench is with a glass bottle, but one made of tin and flatboard is better. Make a loop at the end of rope and place in mouth as indicated in the illustration. Insert the neck of the bottle between the front and back teeth, keeping it up to the roof of the mouth and giving a little at a time. If the horse coughs, let the head down for a time.

DEVICE FOR FEEDING SWINE

Swill Poured Through Tube Eliminates Trouble Caused by Animals Trying to Get It.

The illustration shows a handy hog feeder which will save the farmer much trouble, says a writer in the Orange Judd Farmer. Make a tube with inch boards about three and one-half feet high. Place this at one end of trough. Pour swill through this tube and you will not be bothered by the hogs in their eagerness to get the swill.

Handy for Feeding Hogs.

Training the Colt.

On his early training entirely depends a colt's usefulness and value as a horse, and it should begin the day it is foaled.

The training of a colt cannot be too thorough, a half-broken horse is not broken at all, and is always a dangerous animal.

There is no better or cheaper place to develop a young horse and put him in proper shape for market than on the farm.

A colt wants to be kept eating and growing and exercising and anything but fattening as long as he has a time assigned him by nature to grow.

When you begin to train a young horse, do it with mingled firmness and goodness.

Sheep Are Nervous.

Sheep are nervous animals and of rather delicate constitutions and suffer more from bad ventilation and overcrowding than any other animal on the farm; it is a mistake therefore to confine sheep during the winter in close quarters. If kept dry their fleeces will keep them warm. Who ever heard of sheep freezing to death?

Mistake of Breeders.

A great many breeders seem to think if they possess a pure-bred boar the quality of the sows does not count for much. This is a sad mistake indeed, and farmers cannot be too careful in the selection of well-bred sows.

Hay in the Ration.

A horse or a colt will thrive better upon a two-thirds ration of hay and one-third of straw than upon full ration of hay alone.

Raising Cattle.

English farmers raise fine young cattle by starting the calves on boiled linseed and whey with a run of clean grass.

TREATING HORSE FOR WORMS

Three Different Remedies Given, Any One of Which Will Be Found to Be Quite Effective.

This is one of the best worm destroyers for unthrifty colts and horses that we have ever tried: Mix together one pound each of sugar and salt; in this mix one-half pound of fine smoking tobacco, six ounces of powdered sulphate of iron. As a dose for a mature horse give a heaping tablespoonful in a wheat bran mash every morning for two weeks. Colts should be given in smaller proportion to size and age.

A veterinary supply house advises the following remedy for worms in horses: Give a teaspoonful of powdered copper sulphate every morning in feed for three or four days, then give two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil. Feed soft feed and keep the infected animal in the stable while under this treatment.

A veterinary physician, signing no name, suggests this treatment in an exchange: Clear the bowels by allowing the horse to fast over night and give in the morning two ounces of turpentine in a pint of raw linseed oil or gruel, followed in the course of an hour with a bran mash; repeat this for two or three mornings. Santosin in half or one ounce doses, made into powders, with linseed meal, may be given to valuable horses for two or three mornings in succession, followed by a cathartic.

RACK FOR FEEDING CATTLE

Excellent Method Described for Giving Roughage to Animals During Winter Months.

To make a rack to feed cattle hay or other roughage during the winter set a stake at what is desired to be the center of the rack, then describe a circle around the stake with a radius of ten feet, which may be done either by using a tape line or a ten-foot pole, says the Homestead. Begin on this radius and set posts eight feet apart, and to these posts securely nail two-by-twelves, one above and two below, leaving spaces between the two upper ones through which the cattle may put their heads and eat. A stack of hay may be put in the rack, if desired. After the stack is fed out several loads may be thrown into the rack and forked to the outside as the cattle eat it. The shape of the rack enables it to stand very much pressure by the cattle.

Rack for Feeding Cattle.

One Good Mutton Breed.

Mutton sheep should never be of mixed breeds on one farm. Get one good mutton breed, stick to it and develop it to the highest notch possible. A lot of mixed lambs never bring the highest price on the market. It is those of one breed, uniform in size, shape and condition that get the big money.

LIVE STOCK NOTES.

Horses with tender feet need lots of attention.

No domestic animals increase or decrease as rapidly as pigs.

Parasites common to sheep infest southern flocks just as elsewhere.

Keeping comfortable goes a long ways toward making cheap pork.

It is a mistake if the hog is not fed in a clean place free from dust and mud.

It should be remembered that a horse can do more than his feet will stand.

Failure to secure profits in hog raising are usually due to mismanagement.

To do their best, sheep should either have free access to salt or else be salted once or twice a week.

Feed well and keep good stock or else quit. Half way work never paid any one in the livestock or dairy business.

Good clean food, pure water, fresh air and clean surroundings such as stables and yards will keep stock healthy and increase the profits on the place.

Any work or exercise which produces severe strain on the muscles, especially of the hindquarters, is liable to cause abortion in mares.

One of the first essentials for the well-being and comfort of live stock is the water supply, which, upon the average farm, is entirely inadequate to the needs of the stock.

JUDGED BY THEIR CLOTHES

Smart Cigar Store Clerk Ready With Apology That by No Means Mended Situation.

Herman Fellner tells this story on himself, according to the New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Times Star. He was in Washington on business recently and met three or four friends on the street. After a moment's chat he beckoned them to come with him. "I'm off the stuff," said he, "but I want to buy you each a cigar."

They happened to be in front of a combination cigar and news stand at the moment. Led by Mr. Fellner, they all trooped in. The clerk hurried to the cigar case to wait upon them. Before Mr. Fellner could indicate his wishes the clerk had slapped a box on the glass case. "Here y' are," said he. "Best dime smoker in town."

Mr. Fellner is sort of fussy about his smokes. He looked at the cigar then shoved the box away. "Have you no other price?" he asked.

The clerk shoved the box in the case. "Sure thing," said he. "My mistake and your treat."

Having pulled off this time-worn witticism, he addressed Mr. Fellner confidentially. "Your clothes sort of fooled me," said he. "You fellers are a pretty well-dressed lot, you know." Then he put another box on the counter. "Here," said he, "is the best nickel smoker in the village."

ECZEMA DISFIGURED BABY

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags of cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He was very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctors at Chicago, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medicine of the two doctors without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to everybody." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 882, West Point, Neb., Oct. 26, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 14 L, Boston.

Housework Drudgery

Housework is drudgery for the weak woman. She brushes, dusts and scrubs, or is on her feet all day attending to the many details of the household, her back aching, her temples throbbing, nerves quivering under the stress of pain, possibly dizzy feelings. Sometimes rest in bed is not refreshing, because the poor tired nerves do not permit of refreshing sleep. The real need of weak, nervous women is satisfied by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

It Makes Weak Women Strong and Sick Women Well.

This "Prescription" removes the cause of women's weaknesses, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures those weaknesses so peculiar to women. It tranquillizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces restful sleep.

Dr. Pierce is perfectly willing to let every one know what his "Favorite Prescription" contains, a complete list of ingredients on the bottle-wrapper. Do not let any unscrupulous druggist persuade you that his substitute of unknown composition is "just as good" in order that he may make a bigger profit. Just smile and shake your head!

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cures liver ills.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.
