JICARILLA MAN ALMOST KILLED

L. M. Stubbs of Jicarilla had what is considered to be a miraculous escape from death Monday when twenty sticks of dynamite exploded within three feet of him. Mr. Stubbs was working in the shop and twenty-four sticks of dynamite were being thawed out from a frozen condition only a yard from where he stood at work, sharpening tools. The dynamite exploded without warning and while the concusion tore the shop to atoms and tore the crown of Stubbs' hat off, it is stated that he seems to have escaped any permanent injury. Dirt and cinders were ground into his flesh and he was bruised by flying sections of the building but at this time there seems to be no further effect from the shock than to cause him to be laid up for two or three weeks Those being familar with the facts consider it a very remarkable fact that he escaped with his life.

WHITE OAKS WHIFFS

Mr. O. N. Vaughn, of Talpa, Tex. died here quite suddenly last Saturday evening. He came here only a short time ago to care for his son W. D. Vaughn, who is a tuberculosis patient under the care of Dr. Whitsore. He took a severe cold on his trip but it was not considered serious until Saturday morning when his lungs became congested and he passed away the same day. Mr. Vaughn, who was sixty-nine years of age was a man of considerable prominence in his home town, having led an active business life and accumulated a fair amount of property. The sad news of his death was telegraphed to his family in Texas and two of his sons came at once. The body was embalmed by Mr. B. Kojar of Carrizozo and taken by the sons to his old home for burial. Another son, S. L. Vaughn, of Amarillo, Texas remains here to look after the comfort of his sick brother. The people here have shown much solicitude in this severe affliction.

Dr. H. E. Whitacre is proving very satisfactory in his White Oaks practice as well as in the surrounding country. The doctor is young, energetic and ambitious and deserves to succeed and there is no doubt but what he will.

S. S. Smith, who has made his home for sometime past with his daughter and son-in-law, James Lee and family was joined here by Mrs. Smith and a younger son last week. They will probably make their home here in the future.

Mariano Torres and Magdalena Sanchez were securely hooked up in brand new matrimonial harness at the brides parents home here by Father Gierma last Saturday morning, music and dancing later, particularly on the part of the groom (Yo no say.)

Paul Mayer has returned from a protracted trip through the south and settled down here like a married man. After sampling the grub at some of the crack hotels and the famous French Markets in New Orleans and taking a side glance or two at the beautiful scenery along the Creole quarter he hiked across the low wet country of the gulf coast to Tampa, Florida; thinking no doubt like his more or less illustrious predecessor Ponce de Leon, that where there was so much water he ought to be able to find the Fountains of Perpetual Youth. Hereafter traveling around on stilts viewing the orange groves, taking a joy ride across the bay on the corrugated deck of an alligator besides doing several other tourist stunts, while all the time the mystic harp of the gossimer winged mosquito was making myrthsome music in his unaccustomed ear, he took a straight scoot to the mountains of New Mexico, glad to get a mile high and yet feel as if there was something solid beneath him.

CONVENTION MONDAY

The Republican County convention will be held at Capitan Monday to elect eight delegates to the State Convention at Santa Fe, March the 8th. Little or no contest is expected in the county as the Progressive movement is not organized here Primaries will be held in the various precincts of the county to-morrow. (Saturday) to elect delegates to the county convention.

MRS. ULRICK ENTERTAINS

The ladies of the old Carrizozo Whist Club will be entertained at the home of Mrs. Geo. Ulrick today, Mrs. C. F. Rolland of Fenton, Michigan, who is visiting her son A. J. Rolland this winter, being the honoree. The social, while it is impromptu, bids fair to be one of the most enjoyable of the ladies parties this season. The members of the old club are: Mrs. F. J. Sager, Miss Loraine Sager, Mrs. Hoeck, Mrs Jack Kimball, Mrs J. E. Bell, Mrs. H. B Dawson, Mrs. F. F. Madge, Mrs S. C. Jones, Mrs. A. J. Rolland, Mrs. J B. French, Mrs. H. S Fairbanks, Mrs. Frank Elliott and Mrs. Stanley Sqiures.

BAPTIST AID WEDNESDAY

Mrs. Ira O. Wetmore entertained the ladies of the Home Mission Society at the home of Mrs Humphrey B Hamilton last Wednesday afternoon. The house was decorated with carnations and smilax and chocolate, coffee and cake were served as refreshments to those who called. A free will offering was given by those present to the church fund totaling about nine dollars. This is the first of a series of similar affairs to be given by the ladies of the Baptist Church. The afternoon was a splendid success and very enjoyable in every way. Even some of the men braved the 'fray' and dropped in during the afternoon There was music by Mrs. Forrest, Mrs. Geo. Dingwall and Mrs. Wm. Loughrey.

THE MEISTERSINGERS

With voice harmony that was perfect and with team work on the organ chimes that is seldom excelled anywhere the Meistersingers entertained the people of Carrizozo Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week at the Methodist Church Those in attendance have nothing but praise for the boys and their musical feats. It is not often that four voices are found which blend finer in harmony then did those of these young men and their musical selections were excellent It was with extreme regret that the audience heard them anuounce their farewell piece, "Good Night."

The Meistersingers, was the last number of the J. S White Lyceum course presented here this winter and a movement is now on foot to put Carrizozo on the booking list for next season which is hoped can be done.

—The Girls of Carrizozo will give a Leap Year dance, February 20th They refuse to divulge the secrets of the stunt but promise something unusual.

ORGANIZE CIVIC LEAGUE

Ladies of Carrizozo Making a Commendable Effort to Beautify the City

TO MEET FRIDAY, MARCH 1ST

All the ladies of Carrizozo who are interested in the improvemet, the beautifying and the good housekeeping of the village are urgently requested and expected to meet at the Methodist Church next Friday afternoon March the first at three P. M to help organize a Carrizozo Civic League. The benefits and purposes of such an organization are so numerous we will not attempt to describe them Every woman who is interested in seeing a cleaner, better city should respond and take a hand.

Mrs. George Ulrick is instrumental in the organization and has had considerable previous experience having been one of the charter members of the El Paso Civic League years ago and the work accomplished by the women of that organization still stands nobly out in the progressive Texas city. The Plaza in that city is but one sample of their work and there is no reason Carrizozo women cannot do as much for our town as women organizations are doing elsewhere We are not necessarily advocating woman suffrage but we will have to admit that the women of Carrizozo are the ones who do things, and not always as Kipling says "more deadly than the Male".

HAMILTONS ENTERTAIN

The young folks were delightfully entertained last night at the home of Mr. and Mrs Humphrey B. Hamilton. The main game of the evening was progressive cinch, Mrs. Ira O. Wetmore winning the honor prize, a beautiful book, and L B. Chase the 'booby' prize, a shovel Delicious refreshments ware served during the games and music and the young folk wandered homeward in the wee sma' hours bubbling over with enjoyment. Among those present were: Mrs. and Dr. E. B. Walker, Mrs. and Mr. Henry Lacey, Mrs and Mr. Harry Dawson, Mrs I. O. Wetmore, Mrs. Williams, Mrs J. B Forest, Miss Hilderbrandt, Miss Johnson, Miss Lesnett, Miss Sager, Oscar Bamberger, S. L Northlane, A. T. Blair, T. E Kelley, Jerry Kelley and L B. Chase.

FOUND DEAD ON TRAIN

Dietrick Zum Mallen died on train No. 2 Wednesday evening as it approached Carrizozo, the cause being stated by Railroad Physician Paden as Bright's disease. Mr Zum Mallen was returning from Tuscon, Arizona, where his health had not improved, to his home at Chicago Heights, Ill., when the end came. He was accompanied by a sister The body was taken from the train here and embalmed by B. Kolar, the local undertaker, and prepared for its onward trip to Illinois.

HOME MISSION SOCIETY

The Ladies of the Home Mission Society held another of their series of Teas at the home of Mrs A. J Rolland yesterday afternoon and had the usual enjoyable time. Mrs. Rolland was assisted by Mrs. Squire Mrs. Bixler and Mrs. Schaeffer and the affair was one of most successful of the season's events.

The Ladies of the Home Mission Society have changed their meeting day to Wednesday afternoon of alternating weeks and business meetings will be held on that day hereafter.

WILL REPEAT PLAY FEB. 28TH.

After solicitations on the part of many people who either did not witness the performance on February 9th, or wish to see the show again the members of the Carrizozo Amateur Dramatic Club have agreed to reproduce their four act drama, "Because I Love you," at Reals Hall in Carrizozo, Wednesday evening, February 28th. The show will be better than ever and several new specialties between acts will be features of the repetition. The reserve seat sale will commence Saturday noon at Ro[illegible]d Bros. store and those wishing the choice reserved seats are urged to secure their reservations early.

RECAPTURE DESPERADO

Young Outlaw Who Escaped Lincoln County Jail Apprehended at Deming

AGAIN CONFINED AT LINCOLN

Frank Williams, alias Francisco Luciano, a much sought after fugitive from justice who broke the Lincoln County jail a couple of months ago and who has terrorized parts of this county since then, was captured at Deming, New Mexico, by Luna county officers when he rode into that town last Friday. Information had been furnished by Lincoln county authorities as to the description of Luciano and he did not resist arrest. Deputy Sheriff Albert Roberts of Carrizozo left immediately for Deming and returned with the prisoner to Carrizozo Sunday whence he was hurried by automobile to the county jail at Lincoln where he is securely retained

It will be remembered that Williams or Luciano is the character who has stolen many horses, saddles and the like in this vicinity and was captured after a long chase by Deputy Sheriffs Wm Barnett and Chas Lemmons in November. After he was lodged in jail at Lincoln he broke out with several other prisoners a couple of months ago and while he has been heard of repeatedly in the county since that time in his pillaging and robbing expeditions he had not been arrested although several futile efforts had been made to do so.

CARRIZOZO OUTLOOK

CARRIZOZO, - - NEW MEXICO

It's almost as easy to give good advice as it is not to follow it.

Among the things that we were not thinking of ordering is a new alphabet.

Persons with no other form of amusement can watch the days grow longer.

It is difficult for some men to be good when they have a good chance to be otherwise.

A fresh egg of the season comes straight from a fresh chamber of the cold storage warehouse.

St. Louis girl, twelve years old, wants a divorce. Some of them certainly acquire the habit early.

Germany has seventeen dirigible war balloons and England is fortunate in being too busy to worry.

A Connecticut woman found a diamond in a leg of lamb. And she wasn't anywhere near Winsted at the time.

A girl umpired a baseball game in California the other day. Those California women certainly are heroines.

An imperial edict in Pekin orders the cutting off of queues. Switches and rats ought to be cheaper next year.

A divorce law has been passed in the Philippines, but it will be a long time before Manila achieves the fame of Reno.

Every time a Mexican patriot tires of work and longs for a little easy money, he organizes a new "revolution."

Many a man who believes in doing the greatest good to the greatest number regards number one as the greatest number.

It has been decided by a court that collecting tips is begging. Thus the democratization of the bench proceeds delightfully.

A Philadelphia physician says that mince pie, taken in moderation, will cure insomnia. About how many triangles, doctor?

New York's new "whispering whistle" for trains would be a great institution to introduce to Willie, the gifted office boy siffleur.

The trouble with the man who goes to see a doctor generally is that he wishes to be cured in a day of ills it has taken him years to acquire.

The Bostonian who claims that the earth is flat would have been considered a wise and conservative man in the days of Christopher Columbus.

Jack rabbits with horns are said to be plentiful in the grand old state of Texas. Since when has Winsted, Conn., been transplanted to Texas?

Vesuvius has been throwing mud again. And yet people who live in the neighborhood probably think that Home, Sweet Home is a great little song.

If you are a hotel guest, don't give your only pair of trousers to a bellboy, and then go to bed, for a cry of "fire!" would put you in a predicament.

"An eastern highbrow asserts that we are losing our sense of smell." From which we may infer that he doesn't live in a boiled cabbage neighborhood.

The household furniture of the future may be made of concrete, as Tom Edison says, but it will be necessary to hire a derrick and a freight train on moving day.

A jury awarded $100 damages to a woman who sued because a man failed to marry her after sixty proposals. That places a handy and exact price upon a proposal.

The irony of fate appears to have been demonstrated in the case of the famous surgeon who was operated on for appendicitis when his trouble was caused by gallstones.

It is announced that shoes are to cost more, and the family man will perhaps feel grateful that a long succession of such announcements has made him somewhat callous.

Reindeer meat is to be shipped from Alaska to Chicago, so that it may be served in the restaurants in Chicago. Unless it is going to be a good deal cheaper than steak it will not be likely to cause much of a sensation.

Gathered Smiles

HIS INNING.

The waitress at the Littlehat inn smoothed her apron and turned, giggling, to her assistant. "There's a regular old countryman just come in," she whispered. "He's ordered a chowder first, the way they always do. When it comes to dessert I'm going to have some fun. You listen."

The old countryman was taking his last spoonful of chowder from his tilted plate when he became aware that the waitress was hovering near him. He looked up, and she spoke in a clear, carrying tone.

"We've got four kinds of pie," she said. "Which will you have?"

The shrewd old eyes twinkled up into the pretty, impertinent face.

"I'll have a piece o' the last," said the old countryman, gravely.—Youth's Companion.

A Fair Offer.

She was strong minded and meant to have her rights at any cost, and when she was hauled up before the justice of the peace for exceeding the speed limit she demanded to be represented by counsel.

"I just tell you one thing, judge," she said, whacking the table with her right hand, "I'd rather pay a lawyer $25 than give this court $10 for a fine."

"All right, madam," said the judge. "I'm th' only lawyer hereabouts, and if ye'll just hand over that $25, I'll guarantee to appear before myself and get ye off."—Harper's Weekly.

A DIFFERENCE.

The Preacher—Why don't you put more stock in honesty?

The Millionaire—Can't. All my money is tied up in railroad stocks.

Subtle Flattery.

"Dibbles is what I would call a diplomatic man."

"In what particular?"

"Mrs. Dibbles asked him to make out a list of ten of the world's greatest women, and whom do you think he put at the head of the list?"

"I can't imagine."

"Mrs. Dibbles!"

Praise or Condemnation.

Author (cheerfully) — Couldn't I take my call now? They're shouting "Author."

Manager (doubtfully)—If you like. But I'm not quite sure whether it's "author" they're shouting or "awful."—Bystander.

Mystified.

A balky mule is bad enough
When harnessed to a rig,
But the hardest thing on earth to drive
Is a bottle-fed blind pig.

The Mightier One.

"Pop, what is the female of the species?"

"It's the lady on the silver dollar, my son."

His Use for Soap.

"Lady," said Meandering Mike, "would yer lend me a cake of soap?"

"Do you mean to tell me you want soap?"

"Yes'm. Me partner's got de hiccups an' I want to scare him."

At Study.

Dolce—Your dogs are fighting upstairs!

Scherzo—No; that is my husband. He is opera singing, and is practicing the role of Mime in "Siegfried."—Musical Courier.

His Business.

"I know a man, a good business man, too, who always takes people, no matter who they are, on their face value."

"Is he a fool?"

"No; he's a photographer."

A New List.

Teacher—How many zones has the earth?

Pupil—Five.

Teacher—Correct. Name them.

Pupil—Temperate zone, intemperate, torrid, horrid, and c—Life.

THINKS IT A BLUFF.

Mickey—Say, Chimmie, it's wrong ter ill-treat a woman, but if me gull ever says to me wot some golls says ter dere fellers I know I'll lose me temper.

Chimmie—Wat's dat?

Mickey—Why, when I proposes to her an' she says dis is so sudden.

Considerate.

Though humble are his labors,
He's sit to sit with kings.
Because he loves his neighbors,
He never, never sings.

Clearly Unfitted.

"Your son isn't with you in the real estate business any more, is he?"

"No, I advised him to get out of it. He never was intended by nature for the real estate business. I sent him out to show a place to a man the other day and he let the fellow get away without buying, merely because it wasn't the kind of place he wanted."

Craving for Variety.

The servant girl who had been given an afternoon off to attend a matinee, returned unusually early.

"Why," said her mistress, "you can't have waited to see the whole performance?"

"No, ma'am," was the reply; "it said on the program that Act III. was the same as Act I., and I don't want to see it again."—London Opinion.

Provoking.

Clara—While I was playing whist with Mrs. Singleton last evening, she asked me what was the trump at least six times.

Maude—Weren't you provoked?

Clara—I should say so! As if I knew!—Puck.

CALLED HIM.

Her Father—But can you support my daughter?

Her Suitor—I have expectations, sir.

Her Father—See here, young man, I am not nearly as rich as people say I am.

Dead.

Uncle Ezra—How's business in New York, Eben?

Uncle Eben (lately returned)—Awful dead! I was on Broadway one whole day and I didn't see a single load of hay moving anywhere.—Judge.

His Standing.

"You see that man at the door? Well, he is a nitrate king."

"What are you talking about? He's a cabman."

"Exactly. That's where his slight rate kingship comes in."

Consistent.

"Was that entertainment what you'd call a consistent piece of work?"

"It was," replied the theater manager. "The scene was located on a mythical island and we played to mythical audiences and drew mythical salaries."

A Sure Thing.

"There is one great advantage in being a matinee idol."

"What is that?"

"If you hit a miss, you are sure of not missing a hit."

TOO EXCITING FOR CROKER

Ex-Tammany Chief, Like So Many Others, Succumbed to the Fascination of Stevenson.

The ideas of Richard Croker do not run on bookish lines. Regretting this circumstance and considering that a taste for literature, once inculcated, might be a source of pleasure in his advanced years, a journalistic friend who crossed the Atlantic with the one-time chieftain of Tammany hall not long ago cornered him in the steamship's library one evening and obtained a reluctant permission to read "Treasure Island" to him.

Much to his friend's encouragement, Mr. Croker listened with unfeigned interest until the lights went out and apparently enjoyed the narration of the exciting events of John Morgan, Billy Bones, Black Dog, John Silver and the others. Wherefore, finding Mr. Croker in the library the next evening, the journalist again produced his volume of Stevenson and drew up a chair. But the one-time Tammany chieftain lifted a protesting hand.

"Don't read that book to me any more," he said. "I couldn't get to sleep last night for thinking about those fellows."

DISFIGURED WITH CRUSTS

"Some time ago I was taken with eczema from the top of my head to my waist. It began with scales on my body. I suffered untold itching and burning, and could not sleep. I was greatly disfigured with scales and crusts. My ears looked as if they had been most cut off with a razor, and my neck was perfectly raw. I suffered untold agony and pain. I tried two doctors who said I had eczema in its fullest stage, and that it could not be cured. I then tried other remedies to no avail. At last, I tried a set of the genuine Cuticura Remedies, which cured me of eczema when all else had failed, therefore I cannot praise them too highly.

"I suffered with eczema about ten months, but am now entirely cured, and I believe Cuticura Remedies are the best skin cure there is." (Signed) Miss Mattie J. Shaffer, R. F. D. 1, Box 8, Dancy, Miss., Oct. 27, 1910.

"I had suffered from eczema about four years when boils began to break out on different parts of my body. It started with a fine red rash. My back was affected first, when it also spread over my face. The itching was almost unbearable at times. I tried different soaps and salves, but nothing seemed to help me until I began to use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. One box of them cured me entirely. I recommended them to my sister for her baby who was troubled with tooth eczema, and they completely cured her baby." (Signed) Mrs. F. L. Marberger, Dreherville, Pa., Sept. 6, 1910.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Escaped.

Gillet—So you've just come from Henpecked's funeral. How did the old boy look? Natural?

Perry—No—relieved.

Father—Why did my little boy send his papa a letter with only a capital T written on the page when he was away?

Little Son—Because I thought you'd go around among your friends with it and say, "My boy is only four years old, and just see the capital letter he writes!"

The Neglectful Cook.

At Sunday dinner the other day a little fellow was picking the drumsticks of a chicken and swallowed one of the tendons. After much difficulty it was removed from his throat, when he looked ed and said:

"Oh, mamma, it wasn't the chickabiddy's fault; it was because cook forgot to take off its garters."

One on the Teacher.

"Now in order to subtract," the teacher explained, "things have always to be of the same denomination. For instance, we couldn't take three apples from four pears, nor six horses from nine dogs."

"Say, teacher," a little lad excitedly interrupted, "you can take four quarts of milk from three cows."

Lost!

"Well, Tommie," said the joyous Slithers, "you must congratulate me. I am going to marry your sister."

"O! thunder!" growled Tommie.

"Why, Tommie," protested Slithers, "don't you like me?"

"Oh, yes; I like you well enough," said Tommie, "but I bet Mabel a pound of candy you wouldn't be fool enough to ask her, and she bet you would!"

The New and the Old.

Governor Foss of Massachusetts tells of a well known divine who was visiting a state prison when he came across a prisoner whose features were familiar to him.

"What brought you here, my poor fellow?" he asked.

"You married me to a new woman a little whole ago, sir," the prisoner replied, with a sigh.

"Ah, I see," said the parson, "and she was domineering and extravagant, and she drove you to desperate courses, eh?"

"No," said the prisoner, "my old woman turned up."

Poor Tommy.

Tommy had been spanked by Miss Manners, his first grade teacher, but his next teacher had not reached the point where she felt she could do justice to him in spite of all his naughtiness.

"Send him to me when you want him spanked," said Miss Manners one morning, after her colleague had related his many misdemeanors.

About 11 o'clock Tommy appeared at Miss Manners' door. She dropped her book, grasped him firmly by the hand, led him to the dressing room, turned him over her knee and administered punishment.

When she had finished she said, "Now, Tommy, what have you to say?"

"Please, miss, my teacher wants the scissors," was the unexpected reply.

The Trust Test.

"Mother," said Bobby, after a full week of obedience, "have I been a good boy lately?"

"Yes, dear," replied his mother. "A very, very good boy."

"And do you trust me?" he continued.

"Why, of course, mother trusts her little boy!" she answered.

But the chastened child was not pacified.

"I mean, really, really trust me, you know," he explained.

"Yes, I really, really trust you," nodded his mother. "Why do you ask?"

"Just because," said Bobby, diving his hands into his pockets and looking at her meaningly in the face, "if you trust me like you say you do, why do you go on hiding the jam?"

Their Slender Income.

On his way homeward from the shop where he toiled at his daily vocation Mr. Billiger McSwat, carrying into effect a stern and sinister purpose he had cherished for months, stopped at a barber shop and had a portion of his beard removed.

Half an hour later he entered the humble dwelling which, in bristling defiance of newspaper style cards, he called his home.

Mrs. McSwat was sitting in an easy chair and gazing pensively at the fire that burned cheerfully, but economically, in the grate.

"Lobelia, my dear," he said, "look at me!" She arose to her feet and looked at him. Then she sank back nerveless into the easy chair.

During the twenty years of their married life, as it may be necessary to explain, sinking nervelessly into chairs had been one of Mrs. McSwat's leading specialties.

"Billinger," she gasped, "we never can live up to that pair of side whiskers."

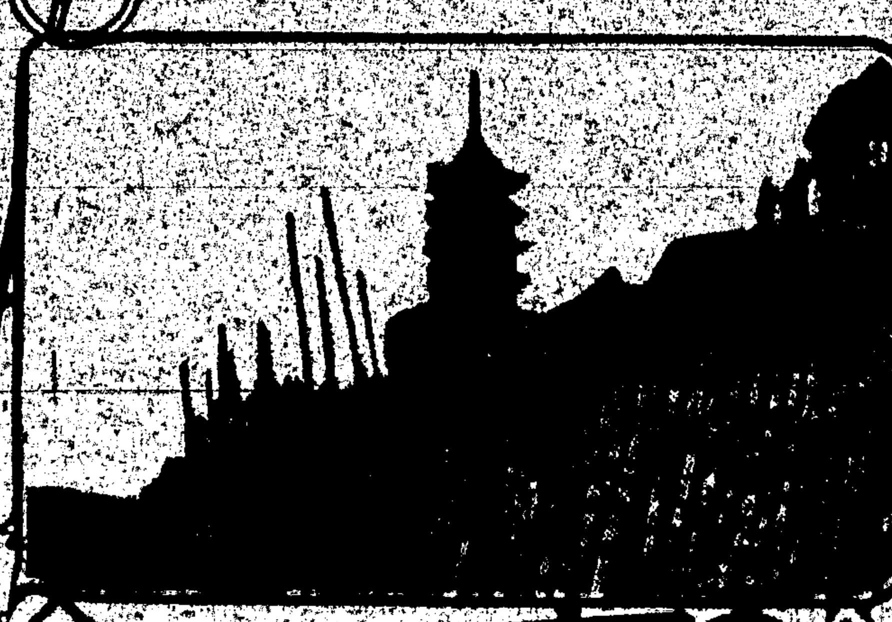
ONE OF CHINA'S WONDERS
THE GREAT BORE OF HANGCHOW

THE BUTTRESS ON THE SEA-WALL AT HAINING



THE SEA-WALL AND PAGODA AT HAINING

THE Great Bore of Hangchow, which is reckoned among the three wonders of China, is caused by the great flood tides from the Pacific surging up the funnel mouth of Hangchow bay and into the swift-flowing Tsientang beyond. The entrance to Hangchow bay is 50 to 60 miles wide and narrows down to 2.4 miles opposite Haining in the Tsientang river, where the bore reaches its full force. The bay and the river are filled with sand flats, which impede the incoming tide, and consequently when it gets over these sand flats and in the river the tide has been backed up until it forms a wall of rushing water from five to ten feet high. This is the bore. It can be seen coming about half an hour before it reaches one, and as it approaches the foam looks like a white line extending across the bay. In places where the tide dashes on the sand flats one can see how the bore in its rage at these opposing obstructions flings up the mud in huge black masses twenty feet high. On it comes, making a peculiar dull roar which is awesome and impresses one with a sense of great force. The highest part is in the center of the river, where it is about ten feet high, whereas near the wall on the shore it is only about six feet high. The bore has a sloping front, and this is agitated into foam extending a long way behind. Behind the bore there is no declivity but a continuously increasing depth of water, and within a quarter of an hour after the passing of the bore the tide is about fourteen feet high, and in three hours reaches its maximum of nineteen feet. This huge volume of water only takes three hours to fill the estuary, and is then nine hours running out in a strong current. This strong outgoing current is actually running at the time the bore arrives and impinges against the bore, and so forms the curved appearance in the center. The bore travels about ten miles per hour, and travels thirty-five to forty miles before losing its height and strength.

THE HANGCHOW BORE FOAMING ALONG ITS FORTY MILE COURSE

A remarkable point is that the country to the north of the Tsientang river is two to six feet below high-water mark, and the Chinese in ancient times built a huge embankment to keep out the tides. This embankment extends a distance of 130 miles, and further inland there are previous and much older embankments. These are made of mud, but in order still further to resist the force of the tide the Chinese in A. D. 911 built the present sea wall of stone. The top of the wall is 22½ feet above the river at low water. In order to facilitate loading and unloading junks, a platform has been made on which the junks rest during low water and float after the bore has passed. This platform is eight feet high, and the junks are floated at the first rush of the water, when there is a big bore, i. e., a high tide.

To protect this junk platform, however, the Chinese have erected a huge buttress at the east end, about 200 feet from the pagoda at Haining, and this breaks the full force of the bore as it rushes along the wall, and so saves the hawsers holding the junks from being broken. This buttress is 30 feet high, and is built of mud, enclosed by fascines. This formation is in some places made in front of the embankment. Twigs are stacked up, and these are then pinned down into a solid structure by poles about twelve feet long being driven down into the mud and sand. It only takes five minutes to drive a pole in. There are eight coolies on the frail scaffolding, who jerk up the stone by means of ropes, and two coolies there catch the block of stone in their hands above their heads, and then throw it down on the pole. These coolies say they get 300 cash a day for this work (about sixpence), and there are said to be about 1,000 always employed executing repairs.

The Chinese have a legend about the Hangchow bore. In the fifth century B. C. a general, Wu Tse Su, warned his sovereign, of the feudal state of Wu, of coming danger, but the prince of Wu was annoyed, and ordered him to commit suicide. He did this, but gave his son instructions to throw his body into the Tsientang river, so that he could come to Hangchow with every bore and gaze on the downfall of Wu.

The mid-autumn festival, on the eighteenth day of the eighth moon, is a Chinese holiday, and immense crowds visit Haining to see the bore, and also to worship at the temples. Most of the people arrive by boat, and they worship at the Hai Shen Miao, or Spirit of the Sea temple. This year a temporary pavilion was also erected on the buttress to enable the local officials to sacrifice to the Spirit of the Sea. In this pavilion was erected a table or altar on which were the various sacrificial dishes and wine, and at the side a cooked sheep and a cooked hog. On the sea wall there was a crowd of about 10,000 assembled, waiting for the bore, and about half an hour before the bore was due the officials arrived and performed the sacrifice. The ceremony only occupied about five minutes, and was simple but impressive, for here was a force of Nature which had hurled itself for ages against the land. Man has erected a shield to protect the land from the fierce, roaring, rushing and overwhelming torrent, but instead of showing pride in his victory he kneels down and worships Nature still unsubdued and powerful. The highest official in the locality, the father of the people, as the Chinese call him, the most successful man, the most learned man; the man who has had more honors, titles and degrees bestowed upon him than anybody else; he too must kneel down in the open air and worship the Spirit of the Sea, and while in the act be snap-shotted by a "foreign devil."

USEFUL FOR KITCHEN

ZINC-TOPPED TABLE IS A GREAT CONVENIENCE.

Ingenious Bride Contrives Home-Made Affair That Is Constant Delight—Is Wonderful Saver of Time and Labor.

A home-made zinc-topped table is a convenience that is a constant delight in the home of an ingenious bride. She carried out the idea very inexpensively, after admiring a costly metal-topped table with a raised border of the metal all around the edge to keep small objects from rolling off when the surface was wet and slippery. She had noticed in her girlhood home that the kitchen table in constant use caused considerable annoyance in keeping it clean and sightly after hard service. In spite of constant care, grease spots frequently penetrated the wooden surface and refused to be removed. Dish-washing stains from pots and pans resulted from mishaps when the dish-washer was too busy to take the usual precautions. Stains and marks from canning and preserving, knife-marks from careless bread cutting, meat stains and evidences of various forms of cookery left their mark, until it seemed almost impossible to keep the table presentable while in constant use.

The metal-topped tables (especially the desirable zinc-topped tables) proved out of the reach of the moderate pocketbook of the bride in search of novelties and convenient devices in kitchen furnishings. She determined, however, to improve on the old methods in furnishing her new kitchen, and to consider first of all every possible method of labor saving. She avoided the usual stumbling block of considering anything good enough for the kitchen—the cast-offs from other parts of the house usually relegated to kitchen limbo—and studied the developments of the newer science in housekeeping displayed in the attention paid to the construction of kitchen furniture and furnishings.

In her crowning achievement—of developing a home-made zinc-topped table—she chose the smallest of her kitchen tables, without drop leaves; and purchased a piece of zinc to exactly cover it, giving the dimensions of the table top, without allowing an edge for turning under. Then to give a smooth finish and prevent the slippery edge that turned-under zinc would give, and also to avoid the rough sharp edge, she nailed securely all around the edge of the zinc—flush with the extreme edge of the table—a bit of wooden beading well rounded and smoothed.

Lightning Cake.

One cup of sugar, one cup flour, one teaspoon of baking powder, half teaspoon salt. Put all together in flour sifter. Piece of butter size of an egg, put into a measuring cup and let melt. Drop in two eggs and fill cup up with milk. Add one teaspoon of flavoring and beat well into the dry ingredients.

Reeks.

One and one-half cups brown sugar, three eggs beaten separately, one cup butter, one and one-half pounds walnuts chopped, two and one-half cups flour, one pound raisins, one teaspoon cinnamon, three level teaspoons baking powder, pinch salt. Make in balls and bake a dark brown.

Wellesley Fudge.

Boil a quarter of a cake of chocolate, a pound of granulated sugar (2 cups), a cup of milk and a teaspoon of butter five minutes.

Then remove from the fire and add a pound of marshmallows cut into small pieces; beat it until it begins to stiffen and pour in buttered tins.

Jelly Cake.

Two cups of powdered sugar, one-half cup of butter, three eggs, one cup milk, three cups flour, two teaspoons cream of tartar, one teaspoon soda. Bake in shallow tins and when cold put jelly between.

Tea Cake.

One quart of flour, one cup of sour milk, one teaspoon soda, one-half pound lard, one-half pound chopped raisins or currants; roll two inches thick and bake in a quick oven. Split open, butter and eat while hot.

Pie Crust.

Good one cup shortening, lard and butter mixed, three cups flour and a little salt; rub the shortening smoothly in the flour; use enough cold water to mix and handle as little as possible. Enough for three ordinary pies.

When Sweetening Fruits.

Sugar loses a great deal of its sweetness when boiled with fruit, and much more is required to produce the same results than would be the case were the sweetening added just before the fruit is taken from the fire.

BAD CASE OF GRIP

Caused Sore Throat and Tonsilitis. Restored by Peruna.

Mr. W. H. Housley.

Mr. W. H. Housley, Greenville, Tennessee, writes:

"Five years ago I took a very severe cold which resulted in la grippe. I never was so bad off. I was in bed several weeks, and when I did get up I had tonsilitis and sore throat.

"I tried to cure this for eighteen months, but it gradually got worse. A doctor advised me to have my tonsils cut out, but I did not like the idea. Another doctor examined me, and told me the same thing. I finally got a bottle of Peruna, and after I had taken one bottle my throat was better. I bought and used a dozen bottles, and saw I was going to get well, and I did."

Ask Your Druggist for a Free Peruna Almanac for 1912.

Not Militant.

"The social function at Mrs. Comeup's the other afternoon ended in a drawn battle."

"What? Not a quarrel?"

"No, just a teafight."

A Feed of Hay.

"Once upon a time," C. M. Thurnauer served upon a murder jury. For hours and hours the body deliberated—11 agreed upon a verdict, but the twelfth obdurately refused to change his position. Finally a court officer rapped at the door and inquired as to the prospects of agreement.

"None in sight," responded the thoroughly disgusted C. M.

"Perhaps I had better bring in 12 suppers, then," suggested the officer.

"No," said Thurnauer, glaring viciously at the unpersuadable member, "bring in 11 suppers and one feed of hay.

After the Party.

"Well, George, I hope you are pleased with yourself."

"Suffering Samson, what have I done now?"

"Oh, nothing, of course. What did you say to that aristocratic Mrs. Pingleton?"

"Well, what did I say?"

"And right after I warned you against your awful breaks. You said to her: How time flies! I suppose your young hopeful will soon put on long trousers.'"

"Well, what's the matter with that? Friendly, wasn't it?"

"Friendly! Mrs. Pingleton has but one child, and she's a young woman of 20!"

SURPRISED DOCTOR.

Illustrating the Effect of Food.

The remarkable adaptability of Grape-Nuts food to stomachs so disordered that they will reject everything else, is illustrated by the case of a woman in Racine, Wis.

"Two years ago," she says, "I was attacked by a stomach trouble so serious that for a long time I could not take much of any sort of food. Even the various kinds prescribed by the doctor produced most acute pain.

"We then got some Grape-Nuts food, and you can imagine my surprise and delight when I found that I could eat it with a relish and without the slightest distress.

"When the doctor heard of it he told me to take several small portions each day, because he feared I would grow tired of it as I had of all other food.

"But to his surprise, (and that of everybody else), I did not tire of Grape-Nuts, and became better day by day, till, after some weeks, my stomach entirely recovered and I was able to eat anything my appetite craved.

"My nerves, which had become so weakened that I feared I would become insane, were also restored by the Grape-Nuts food in connection with Postum which has become our table beverage. I appreciate most gratefully and thankfully the good that your food preparations have done me, and shall be glad to answer any letters inquiring as to my experience." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

GATHERED SMILES

Such Men Are Dangerous.

"I don't like the looks of that juror with the big ears and the long pointed chin," the defendant in the case whispered to his lawyer.

"He has an ugly mug," said the lawyer, "that's a fact."

"It isn't altogether his looks, though," conceded the client; "he's paying too blamed close attention to the testimony."

Fearful Questions.

"Do you know how to manage a wife?"

"Good heavens, man! What makes you suspect I have ever been in an insane asylum?"

A Stab in It.

"'Hic jacet,'" quoted Miss Peckis, as they strolled through the cemetery, "what does that mean on all these old tombstones?"

"Wh—er—you see," began Stuffer, "that's an abbreviation for 'hickory jacket,' that is to say, 'hickory coffin.' That's the kind they used in old times, see?"—Catholic Standard and Times.

Routine Resumed.

Master—So you have friendly doings with your brother's people once more?

Pat—Yis, sir. His family and our'n do be scrappin' agin as if they'd niver bin parted.—Harper's Bazar.

At Last.

"Bill," said his long suffering sweetheart, "I'm tired of your shiftless ways. Got a job yet?"

"Nope" he grunted; "I'm still waitin' fur somethin' to turn up."

"Well, here it is, Bill. Take a good look at it and clear out."

Whereupon she turned up her nose at him.

A Broken Tale.

"Miss De Style is looking very badly."

"Yes. She went to pieces at the end of the season."

"Then no wonder she looks all broken up."

THE QUITTER

There was a fellow got a hunch
That he was very strictly "It;"
Just to get even with his boss,
He quit.

The boss, he bore it wondrous well;
He never wailed nor mourned nor swore,
But said, "As you go out don't slam
The door."

The other boys about the place
Did not go moping much that day;
They laughed and said good-by, and drew
Their pay.

He thought: "They do not realize
That I have left them to their fate.
So much the better; let them laugh;
But wait!"

And then he ambled down the street
And confidently told the town,
"Now fellows, watch and see the boss
Fall down."

Somehow or other things went on;
The business did not go to smash;
The boss went smiling as he grabbed
The cash.

And every day the fellow met
Some friend who didn't know he'd quit
And didn't care and wasn't sore
A bit;

It rather stunned him that the world
When booming on through day and night
As well as when he used to keep
It right

Somehow there isn't any man
For whom the whole creation squirms;
And good men cluster 'round a job
Like germs.

And when you up and leave your place
And think the whole blame work will quit,
The joker hollers, "Tag, old man;
You're it!"

The world goes plugging, plodding on,
As unconcerned as it can be;
If you are mentioned someone asks;
"Who's he?"

THE PUBLISHERS of a newspaper must live as well as the clothier, the dry goods man or the grocer. To get the wherewith to live he has one thing to sell and another to rent. He sells his paper and he rents the space in his coulmns; these are his principal sources of income and can anyone inform us why he is expected to give either away? He can, of course, do so if he chooses and as a matter of fact he does furnish a good deal of his space rent free, but it does not follow that he ought to be expected to do so as a matter of course, and further, when once he does it ought to be recognized as a contribution as much as the sugar or coffee given by the grocer. But it is not generally looked upon in that light, yet everybody knows that the very existence of a newspaper depends upon the selling of the paper and the rent of the space as much as a merchant's success depends upon the sale of his goods. There is just as much reason for the merchant giving his goods away free as there is for the publisher.

Trade at home with the home man, the man that resides at home, lives in your town, spends all his money at home, and see how much better you and he feels about it. Your money will stay at home then ten to one he will come in a few days later and spend more money in your house than you did in his. Don't let a man trade either with you a hundred years and not buy anything of him. If you don't commence some time to reciprocate he is liable to need something in your line get mad and walk clear down to New Orleans after it. Reciprocity is a good thing even in a small country hamlet.

CANNING IS ALWAYS THERE

A copy of the Perris, (Calif.) Progress has been received and we notice among the items the following about our former prominent merchant J., H. Canning, who seems to be prospering in California

"The Perris Chamber of Commerce met and elected officers Thursday. A C. Huff was elected Vice-President, Dr. Lanier, Treasurer and J H. Canning, Secretary. Before proceeding to elect officers all present were invited to sign the roll as members, and pay the necessary dollar which would apply to dues for four months in advance.

Mr. Glenn from Carrizozo, N. M. was in town Tuesday and visited his old friend, J. H. Canning now a Perris merchant, but recently from Carrizozo N. M. Mr. Glenn came to Perris to look at some land in the water belt. He now lives in Corona, where he owns two orange groves. He was in the cattle and sheep business in New Mexico."

MAD ENGINEER ON SOUTHWESTERN

About 9 o'clock yesterday morning a switch engineer at Duran jumped on his engine, pulled the throttle wide open and started south at a speed that made those who saw him stand with bulging eyes and wonder what would happen. As soon as possible the train dispatcher was notified and he wired every station from Duran to El Paso to clear the tracks, as a mad engineer was on the road.

The mad man passed Torrance, a distance of twenty five miles (?) in fifteen minutes and sped on by Corona, Tecolote and Gallinas increasing speed every minute, and by the time he reached the down grade at Ancho he was going two miles a minute. As he turned the curve at Coyote and slipped down the hill all the wheels on the upper side left the track entirely and the engine rounded the curve with only the wheels on the one side touching the track. From Ancho to Carrizozo a distance of nineteen miles, was made in eight minutes and as the engineer entered the Carrizozo yard he shut off steam and put on the brakes; his engine slid from the water tank to the depot and as the engine stopped the supposed mad engineer jumped off He was arrested at once by Special Officer Walker Hyde who asked him what the matter was and he said he was in a hurry to get up to Ziegler Brothers store and get one of those new spring suits all the railroad boys were buying and talking about so much. This not only proves the magnetic power of advertising good clothes at low prices but also shows that the Rock Island could give this country much quicker service from Kansas City

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 178 West Jackson boulevard, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

This house plan appeals to me as being one of the neatest and most interesting low-cost houses I ever built. The plan lends itself to a splendid arrangement of rooms, both upstairs and down. It is easy to arrange the necessary conveniences when the rear of the house is wider than the front, and this object is easily accomplished with a two-section roof on the three-gable plan—one of the most satisfactory roofs ever built. This style of roof dates back to the earliest American architecture. It originated in the efforts of builders to add a pleasing front to the old-fashioned long houses built with the side to the road; but this plan has been improved upon, until the completed house shows very little resemblance to the original efforts in this direction.

While the front part of the house is pleasing and the arrangement is almost perfect, the rear section is given up entirely to the dining room, kitchen and the accessories to these rooms. While we all like to see a pretty parlor and an attractive hall, we should remember that a house is built to live in next year and for a good many years to come. The work of getting meals is about the same, day after day and year after year. Meals are prepared in the kitchen and served in the dining room three times daily, and a little saving in work each time amounts to a great deal in the aggregate. A dining room 12 feet wide and 26 feet 6 inches long is unusual, even in a large house. This is not a large house, but there is room enough for a large dining room without encroaching on anything else.

The little square hall in the rear is really a vestibule. It is the right place for an ice-box, away from the heat of the kitchen, but not far enough away to be inconvenient. I like to see a refrigerator close to the outside entrance. Ice comes in dripping wet in warm weather, and the man who carries it usually has more or less mud and dirt on his boots. It is a great saving on a woman's nerves to have dirt left outside, or as near outside as possible. Then there is a saving of ice by having the refrigerator in a comparatively cool place. If we have our own ice-house, the work of getting the ice out, washing it, and putting it into the ice-box is considerable, so that the economy, even in this case, is advisable; but when ice is bought and paid for at prevailing summer prices, the necessity for being careful is much greater.

Sometimes it is not convenient to drain the ice-box into the sewer. When placed next to the outside wall, it is easy to bore a hole through the floor, install a piece of gas-pipe with an elbow, and run the pipe outside. One house that was built like this had the waste water from the melting ice carried outside of the wall and the drip carried to a bed of mint. We all know how to appreciate roast lamb with mint sauce; and when the mint is gathered fresh and clean at the side of the house, it is much more of a delicacy than when bought from the market and carted around through the dust for 24 hours before being delivered. Mint will grow fairly well in the garden if lightly shaded; but it is a water-loving plant, and does better when it gets a continual supply of moisture. If the pipe from the icebox is short, the water is likely to be rather cold. It is better to run the water along an open trough for a distance of eight to feet feet, to raise the temperature of the drip water. For this purpose an open trough is better than a pipe, for two reasons: the water is exposed to the atmosphere, and warms up much better in summer; and, if the ice-box is used in cold weather, a trough will not burst when the water freezes. Another drain for an ice-box that came under my observation, was carried to a porcelain dish for the benefit of the birds. It kept a constant supply of water in a shallow dish, and the birds enjoyed their daily bath during the warm weather. It was amusing to see them splash the water about. This was an occurrence that interested and delighted the children very much.

First Floor Plan.

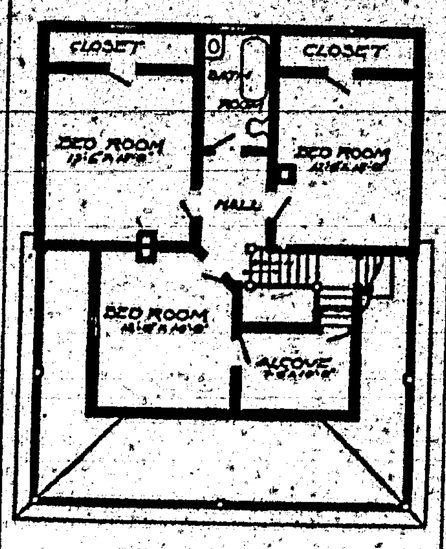
This style of house just suits a two-story porch, and the porch seems to fit the house as though it grew there.



Second Floor Plan.

It is not always easy to arrange a porch on three sides of a house without making some of the rooms dark, but that objection is eliminated in this plan. This style of porch is a finish to the building and is a great protection to both front and side doors opening into the dining room.

I like an outside entrance to the dining room, especially where the room is large and not overcrowded with furniture. I think most housewives like this arrangement also. A dining room is not furnished usually so expensively as a front parlor. When there is a side entrance the immediate friends of the family usually step right into the inner circle without the formality of ringing the front door bell. There is an element of sociability in this sort of thing that induces comfort. I do not believe in furnishing a parlor in such a way that it is too nice to use. I believe in comfort first and show afterward; but at the same time it is considerable work to keep the front part of the house in first-class condition and have every member of the family running through it continually. A woman dislikes to order the children out of the parlor, to stay out, unless they have some other place to go, and there should be a comfortable place for the children in every home. The dining room in this house offers a solution of the problem. With a good grate and a cheerful fire in cold weather, the youngsters will be found in the dining room every time, unless the old folks are so selfish that they are obliged to find recreation at one of the neighboring houses.

The size of this house is 32 feet 6 inches wide by 34 feet long, exclusive of the porch, which is large enough to make six good rooms, besides numerous cupboards, bathroom, and an alcove that comes in very handy for a sewing room.

Engraving With Dynamite.

In the course of experiments to determine the strength of high explosives a curious effect was produced by placing freshly plucked flower leaves between two plates of panel steel and then exploding dynamite cartridges on the upper plate. The recoil drove the upper plate downward with such force as to catch exact impressions of the leaves before their delicate ribs had time to give way to the violence of the blow.

BRAIN EXERCISED AT HOME

Something Entertaining as Well as Instructive for Boys and Girls on Cold Winter Evening.

Often of a cold winter evening boys and girls like to spend the time in doing something entertaining and instructive as well. A good pastime that will prove instructive is that of solving problems. Distribute pieces of paper among those present and tell them to solve the following problems, the answers to which are given below:

1. What two numbers multiplied together will produce seven?
2. How may four fives be placed so as to make six and a half?
3. If five times four are thirty-three what will the fourth of twenty be?
4. What is the difference between twice twenty-five and twice five and twenty?
5. Divide the number fifty into two such parts that if the greater part be divided by seven and the lesser by three the quotient in each case will be the same.

Some may answer correctly and some will be caught, easy as the problems appear.

Here are the answers:

1. The two numbers are 7 and 1.
2. The figure 5, the fraction 5-5 and the decimal fraction .5.
3. Eight cents and one-fourth.
4. Twice 25 are fifty. Twice 5 and 20 are 30.
5. The two parts are 35 and 15.

EARLY USE OF ICE SKATES

Holland Conceded to Be Birthplace of Skating and Undoubtedly First Practiced There.

To "necessity's sharp pluck," not to a desire for amusement, says the New York Evening Post, we owe the invention of skates and their early use. Holland is conceded to be the home and birthplace of skating, and it was undoubtedly first practiced there and in the far north.

In a country of lakes and canals the necessity of walking and running on the ice must have been felt from the earliest days, and, indeed, they were found in one of the mounds on which a Friesland village was built. The skates were fastened to the feet by straps passed through holes made in the bones. A Danish historian mentions the sport in 1134.

The bone skates were also the kind first used in England. Fitzstephen, in his account of the amusements of the young people on the ice in London during the latter part of the twelfth century, notes that it was usual for them to fasten the leg bones of animals under the soles of their feet, by tying them around their ankles, and then taking a pole, they pushed themselves forward by striking against the ice.

of the glass place a silver quarter, and above it the dollar, which will fall only a little way into the glass; it will rest horizontally, like a lid upon it. Now tell your friends that without touching either glass or coin you have it in your power to make the quarter of a dollar jump from its position. All you have to do is to breathe strongly on the silver dollar. It will rotate and so assume a vertical position. At the same instant the compressed breath at the bottom of the glass will cause the quarter to skip from its position quite a distance on the table, after which the dollar will slowly go back to its former position. Sometimes this trick may be performed with a little port wine glass, but with the conical form it is still easier.—Magical experiments.

FORESTS HELP GIVE HEALTH

Mitigate Heat and Cold and Check Tendency of Earth to Excessive Dryness.

Forests contribute to the general health by breaking the force of steadily blowing winds. They mitigate the heat of summer by the vast amount of evaporation that occurs in their leaves by day. By night the corresponding condensation of moisture upon the leaves still further absorbs the heat on the evaporation of the moisture the next morning. They also promote rainfalls. Thus they check the tendency of the earth to too great dryness, which is almost as injurious to health as it is to vegetation, for epidemic diseases are sure to do their fatal work where the soil-water is below the ordinary standard.

Hence cholera often passes a wooded district and revels in a treeless one. There are numerous facts like the following: A certain road in India leads for sixty miles through a dense forest. Further on it runs for sixty miles through a barren plain. Hundreds of persons travel the entire road daily. Now, in the first or wooded section, cases of cholera seldom occur, while within the latter it has been of frequent occurrence. One year cholera raged in Allahabad. Soldiers whose barracks were on a hill suffered the most from the epidemic; those in barracks surrounded by four rows of trees much less; but not a single case occurred among the soldiers whose barracks were in a thicket. It was the same the next year.

Generous Reward.

J. Lazarus, head of a large manufacturing concern in New York, missed his pocketbook recently when he arrived at his place of business. The wallet contained $6,000 in cash and $15,000 in certified checks and securities. The night previous Mr. Lazarus and his wife had been to the theater and had had supper at the Hotel Traymore before returning to their home. Mr. Lazarus had no idea where he had lost his pocketbook and was trying to figure out a plan for its recovery when his telephone rang and he was told the wallet was in the possession of the manager of the hotel. Philip Loewe, a waiter in the hotel, found the wallet on the floor after the dining room was closed. A business card led to the identification of the owner. Mr. Lazarus gave the waiter a reward of $500.

Habits of Hedgehog.

The hedgehog passes the winter in sleep, with circulation almost suspended and body fires banked. It carries a reserve of glycogen and fat, however, and recent investigations have shown that soon after awakening it warms up by a rapid burning of glycogen. This carbohydrate proves to be the chief fuel, the fat being quite unimportant. The animal may be awake at a low temperature, for the awakening is distinct from the warming up, and whether the latter is voluntary or an automatic process is not yet determined.

Naturally So.

"All the parts in this play are fat parts."

"They have to be when the play itself is laid in Greece."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

NO MAN'S LAND ▼ A ROMANCE

By LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT, 1910, BY LOUIS JOSEPH VANCE

SYNOPSIS.

Garrett Coast, a young man of New York City, meets Douglas Blackstock, who invites him to a card party. He accepts, although he dislikes Blackstock, the reason being that both are in love with Katherine Thaxter. Coast fails to convince her that Blackstock is unworthy of her friendship. At the party Coast meets two named Dundas and Van Tuyl. There is a quarrel, and Blackstock shoots Van Tuyl dead. Coast struggles to wrest the weapon from him, thus the police discover them. Coast is arrested for murder. He is convicted, but as he begins his sentence, Dundas names Blackstock as the murderer and kills himself. Coast becomes free, but Blackstock has married Katherine Thaxter and fled. Coast purchases a yacht and while sailing sees a man thrown from a distant boat. He rescues the fellow who is named Appleyard. They arrive at a lonely island, known as No Man's Land.

CHAPTER VI.—(Continued.)

"Cleaning my pipe. Go on and sleep; your time's not up yet."

"What's o'clock?"

Appleyard mumbled something incoherent as he stepped out on deck; and Coast turned over and slept again.

It seemed hours later when he found himself abruptly wide awake, in a tremor of panic anxiety bred of a fancy that a human voice had cried out in mortal terror, somewhere within his hearing. He started up, informed by that sixth sense we call intution that conditions abroad the Echo had changed radically since the last time he had fallen asleep; and it seemed no more than a second from the moment his eyes opened until he found himself in the cockpit, gazing dazedly into the inscrutable heart of the fog.

At first, in his confusion, he could see nothing amiss. The Echo was riding on a quiet tide and an even keel, with scarcely any perceptible motion. The encompassing darkness was intense, unfathomable, profound; only the forward light showed a dim halo of yellow opalescence near the masthead, and the faint glow from the cabin lamp quivered on slowly swirling convolutions of dense white vapor, like smoke. The port and starboard lights had been extinguished, as they should be when a vessel comes to anchor.

What, then had interrupted his slumbers?

He turned, with a question shaping on his lips.

Appleyard was nowhere visible.

Coast required some minutes before he was convinced of the fact of the little man's disappearance. But the cabin proved as empty as the cockpit, and the tender was gone.

The cabin chronometer chimed the hour of four in the morning.

As the echoes died, as though they had evoked the genius of that place, a strange and dreadful cry rent the silence, sounding shrill across the waters, yet as if coming from a great distance.

CHAPTER VII.

Some moments elapsed, Coast's every nerve and sense upon the rack. Though he heard it no more, still that cry rang in his head, and he could but wait, smitten dumb and motionless, feeling his chilled flesh crawl, enthralled by fearsome shapes conjured up by an imagination striving vainly to account for what had happened—wait (it seemed) interminably; for what he hardly knew or guessed, unless it were for a repetition or some explanation of that inexplicable cry.

He received neither. His straining faculties detected none but familiar noises.

Insensibly he grew more calm. So silent was the world, seemingly so saturated with the spirit of brooding peace, that he was tempted to believe he had dreamed that first shriek, to which he had wakened, and that the second was but an echo of it in his brain: some hideous trick of nerves, a sort of waking hallucination, to be explained only on psychological grounds.

And yet . . .

Appleyard? What of him? Was there any connection to be traced between his mysterious disappearance from the Echo and that weird, unearthly scream? Was there really land near, and had the little man found it only to become the victim of some frightful, nameless peril? Could that have been his voice, calling for help . . . ? And in what dread extremity . . . ?

There was nothing he could do, no way to reach the man. The tender was gone, the shore invisible—and who could say how far distant? Otherwise he would not have hesitated to [illegible] . . .

Presently it occurred to him to [illegible] where the Echo lay off what land. Appleyard's responses to his inquiries, several hours back, returned to memory. The name, No Man's Land, intrigued. He interrupted his vigil to investigate such sources of information as he had at hand.

In the cabin again, with the lamp turned high, he dragged out a chart—number 112 of the admirable series published by the Coast and Geodetic Survey, delineating with wonderful accuracy the hydrography of Buzzard's Bay and Vineyard and Nantucket Sounds, together with the topography of the littoral and islands.

With pencil it was easy to trace the Echo's course from New Bedford harbor through Quick's Hole; a little to the east of which, say of Robinson's Hole, the fog had overtaken them. To the south and east of that point lay Martha's Vineyard, for all the world like a trussed fowl in profile. And there—yes, due south of Gay Head—was No Man's Land, its contour much that of an infant's shoe, the heel digging into the Atlantic. Comparison with the scale demonstrated it to be roughly a mile and five-eighths long by a mile wide—extreme measurements.

Coast stared at it with renewed interest, for the first time convinced of the existence of a spot so oddly named. A number of black dots along its northern shore seemed to indicate buildings—but Appleyard had distinctly said "uninhabited."

"Good God!" He Cried Aloud. "What—"

Coast turned out the lamp and went back to the deck.

There was nothing to be seen, nothing to do. . . .

He fidgeted.

Then out of the confusion of his temper, in which ennui stalked in singular companionship with perturbation, he chanced upon an odd end of thought, one of those stray bits of information, mostly culled from desultory reading, that clutter the back of every man's brain.

He happened to remember hearing, some time, some where, that fog rarely clings to the surface of moving water; that, by putting one's vision upon a plane almost horizontal with the water, it is ordinarily possible to see for some distance roundabout.

"There may be something in it. . . . No harm to try."

Forthwith he scrambled out upon the stern, from which, after some intricate maneuvering and by dint of considerable physical ingenuity, he managed to suspend himself, at peril of a ducking, with his head near the water.

He was promptly [illegible] of his point; the theory proved itself—in that one instance at least; between the slowly [illegible] floor, glassy and colorless, and the [illegible] fringe of fog, [illegible] . . .

Directly [illegible]

forty feet away, a shelving stretch of pebbly beach, softly lapped by low-voiced ripples, shut in the view. The Echo's tender, drawn up beyond the water's edge, bisected it.

"Good," said Coast, abstracted, recovering from his constrained position.

Curiosity gripped him strongly, caution contending vainly; he knew quite well that he would never bide content until he had probed for the cause and source and solved the mystery of that wild cry in the night just gone.

Moreover, he felt in a measure responsible for Appleyard. Surely there must be some strange reason for his protracted absence.

Abandoning himself, deaf to the counsels of prudence, Coast rose and stripped off his clothing.

He let himself gently into the water (fearing to dive because he did not know its depth) and found it warm—warmer than the air. He struck out cautiously, using the slow, old-fashioned but silent breast-stroke. In two minutes, however, he was wading up to the beach.

There was no sign of Appleyard: only the tender. Upon that stone-strewn shore the feet of the run-away had left no trail. Though Coast cast about in a wide radius, he found no sign of the missing man. The pebbles scratched and bruised his unprotected feet, and he began to shiver with cold. He gave it up, presently, returned to the tender, pushed off and sculled out to the Echo.

Then, having rubbed his flesh to a blush with a coarse towel, he dressed, took the small boat back to the beach, drew it up and, now fully committed to an enterprise the folly of which he stubbornly refused to debate, set off to reconnoiter along the water's edge, feeling his way.

After a time the beach grew more sandy, and emboldened by the knowledge that he would have his footprints to guide him back, he left the water and struck inland—but only to find his progress in that direction checked by a steep wall of earth, a cliff-like bluff of height indeterminable, its flanks ware-eaten and deeply seamed by rain.

At random, with no design, he turned again to his left and proceeded as before, but now along the feet of the bluff, trudging heavily through damp, yielding sand.

Still no sign of Appleyard.

He must have tramped, at a rude guess, several hundred yards before he discovered either a break in the bluff or any change in the general configuration of the shore. Ultimately, however, the one fell away inland and the other widened.

A moment later he came upon a small catboat careened above high tide mark, with a gaping wound in its starboard side, forward and below the water-line.

She lay stern to the water. Taking the point of her stem as his guide, Coast turned inland again, on a line as straight as possible considering the slanting lay of the land and the impossibility of seeing anything beyond a radius of a few feet.

He had not gone far upon this tack before he stumbled upon a path of hardpacked earth, obviously made by human feet. Then he found himself mounting a rather steep grade, and in another moment was face to face with a plain weather-boarded wall of a wooden building.

There were no windows that he could discover on this side, and though he listened keenly he heard no sounds from within.

Other buildings presented themselves successively, as like as peas to one another and to the first he had encountered: all peopled exclusively by the seven howling devils of desolation and their attendant court of rats—or so he surmised from sundry sounds of scurryings and squeaks.

He gathered that he was threading a rude sort of street, fringed on one side—to seaward—with the abandoned dwellings of what had apparently been a small fishing community.

"No Man's Land indeed!" he commented. "Certainly lives up to the name, even if it's some place else. It begins to look as if I'd drawn a blank. . . . But Appleyard . . . I"

He was moved vaguely to liken the place to the Cold Lairs of the Jungle Books. "Only infinitely sordid," he mused, at pause; "lacking the majesty and the horror . . . Wonder had I better go back?"

As he hung in the wind, debating what to do, whether to press on or to be sensible, swayed this way and that by doubts and half-formed impulses, somewhere near, seemingly at his very elbow, certainly not twenty feet away, suddenly a dog howled. Long drawn, lugubrious with a note of lamentation, the sound struck discordant upon his overtaut senses, shocking him (before he knew it) to outspoken protest.

"Good God!" he cried aloud. "What—?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Fault Brought Home.

Dr. James T. Dooking, the president of Rust university, once discussed, in a Fourth of July address at Holly Springs, Miss., the treason of Benedict Arnold.

"Arnold's fault," he said, "was as plainly brought home to him as the fault of Fenimore Cooper's friend.

"Fenimore Cooper gave a friend a copy of his last work, inscribing on the fly-leaf the words:

"'To John Blank, with the author's affection and esteem.'

"A few months later Cooper came upon this same book at a second-hand dealer's. He bought it in and sent it to his friends again with a second inscription:

"'This volume, purchased at a second-hand shop, is re-presented to John Blank with renewed affection and reiterated expressions of esteem.'"

Man's Many Wants.

How many ways there are in which our peace may be assailed, besides actual want! How many comforts do we stand in need of, besides meat and drink and clothing! Is it nothing to "administer to a mind diseased"—to heal a wounded spirit? After all other difficulties are removed, we still want some one to bear our infirmities, to impart our confidence to, to encourage us in our hobbies (nay, to get up and ride behind us), and to like us with all our faults.—Hazlitt.

Saves Clothes of Rider.

A saddle that a New Jersey man has patented includes a leather flap to cover the buckles that frequently wear out a rider's clothing.

"These Youthful Prodigies."

"Will wonders never cease?" said Jones to his wife. "Here is an account of a six-year-old boy who can work the most difficult problem in algebra."

"Remarkable!" admitted Mrs. Jones, "but I know a four-year-old girl that knows Greek. Where does your little wonder live?"

"In Boston. Where does your linguistic marvel live?"

Mrs. Jones gazed out of the window with a far-away look in her eye as she answered: "In Greece."—National Food Magazine.

THE PEEVISH CHILD NEEDS TREATMENT

When a child sulks drowsily, or is fretful, it is usually due to some slight disorder of the digestive organs, and a mild laxative is very often all that is necessary to restore cheerfulness and buoyancy of spirits.

In cases where the use of a gentle, effective laxative stimulant is indicated, many of the best physicians are now prescribing Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This preparation is admittedly the perfect laxative, being mild, yet positive in its action on the bowels, and far preferable to violent cathartics and purgative waters. It is very pleasant to the taste and is an ideal remedy to regulate and strengthen the stomach, liver and bowels. Its easy, natural action makes it especially desirable in the case of children, a dose at bed-time being sure to have the desired result next morning, with no attendant unpleasantness or discomfort.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sold by druggists everywhere in 50c and $1.00 bottles. If you have never tried this splendid remedy, write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., for a sample. He will be very glad to send a trial bottle without any expense to you whatever.

Not a Lively Fish, at Best.

One of the porters on the train out of Salt Lake City was an impassive looking negro, who had a ready, if inaccurate, answer to almost any question put him by the passengers. It was hard to tell whether he believed all that he said or whether he was having fun with his questioners.

One man, on first catching sight of the lake, asked if there were any fish in it.

"No, sah," said the porters, "dere ain't no fishes in dat lake, sah. Dey done tried ter see ef dey couldn't have fishes in dare, but dey wouldn't stay alive. De fishes dat stayed alive de longest was salt mack'r'l, but dey wa'n't very prosp'rous, sah."—Youth's Companion.

Sea Value of Open-Air Schools.

During the year 1911 the greatest percentage of increase among the different forms of anti-tuberculosis work was among the open-air schools for anemic and tuberculosis children. On January 1, 1911, there were only 29 open-air schools in operation or provided for in the entire country. On January 1, 1912, there were 81, an increase of 214 per cent. Sixty-two new schools have been established or provided for this past year. This entire number of open-air schools have been established since January 1, 1907.

Tragedy of a Tomato Vine

Practical Person Makes Discovery After Neighbors Had Given Voice to Their Wonderment.

Now doth the amateur agriculturist flourish and wax proud at his Luther Burbank achievements, says the Brooklyn Eagle. One such nursed a lone tomato plant from delicate and sickly infancy to robust maturity. With all a mother's tender care he ministered to that plant. He watered it, brushed the dust off it, pleaded with it, encouraging it to better things. Then one day a member of the family rushed into the house with glad tidings. There was a real tomato on the vine.

What an assemblage there was about that plant! The block was depopulated temporarily. Amateur agriculturists climbed on each other's necks to view the wonder. The head of the house inspected it through a magnifying glass. His spouse clapped her hands and exclaimed: "At last we shall have our own salad from our own vine." [illegible] the gentleman from a row of empty houses nearby who called to look, and he remarked solemnly that he never saw such a large tomato on such a small vine.

Then came along one of those horribly practical persons, who said it couldn't be, and had to have a closer look. He spoiled it all by his discovery that the tomato had been tied on with a string, and if you want to know who tied it on ask the woman who lives next door.

When the Flag Looks Good.

I have been in countries where the laboring man had meat once a year; sometimes twice—Christmas and Easter. And I have seen women carrying upon their heads a burden that no man would like to carry, and at the same time knitting busily with both hands. And those women lived without meat; and when I thought of the American laborer I said to myself: "After all, my country is the best in the world." And when I came back to the sea and saw the old flag flying in the air, it seemed to me as though the air from pure joy had burst into blossom.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

IOWA WOMAN WELL AGAIN

Freed From Shooting Pains, Spinal Weakness, Dizziness, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ottumwa, Iowa.—"For years I was almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its dreadful forms; shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors. I feel it my duty to tell you these facts. My heart is full of gratitude to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my health."—Mrs. HARRIET E. WAMPLER, 524 S. Ransom Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Consider Well This Advice.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for nearly forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

COVER FOR THE SAP BUCKET

Few Pieces of Sheet Steel So Arranged to Keep Out Snow, Rain Water, Bark and Bugs.

An excellent and inexpensive plan for making a cover for the sap bucket is given by J. F. Ward of Massachusetts in the New England Homestead and is as follows:

Buy sheet steel, 28-gauge, in bundles of ten sheets each. It costs 33 cents per sheet and makes 14 covers. One sheet measures 28x98 inches. Cut into seven pieces 28 inches long, then you have sheets 14x13 5-7 inches. Then cut a three-quarter-inch hole in the end near the middle, three-eighths of an inch from the edge of the sheet, as shown in A. Then bend up 1½ inches of the end you have punched.

Homemade Sap Bucket Cover.

To hang on tree, place the hook on spout and drive the spout through the hole in the cover; hang on the bucket. Cover will turn on spout when you tip the bucket in gathering. A piece of three-quarter-inch iron pipe, B, filed on the outside to an edge, will be a good tool to cut out the hole. A pair of tinner's snips and hammer are the other tools needed. Your labor and 2½ cents for iron freight will furnish you with covers and will save you several days' labor cleaning out snow, emptying out rain water, bugs, bark, etc. This not to mention the sap you will save on rainy days, nor the better quality of goods you will make. The cover will not blow off, break nor hinder in gathering. Paint them and they will last years. They can be made of iron roofing. There's no better use for this kind of roofing. Now, my advice is to "get a move on you" and make these covers now.

Yellow Transparent Apples.

We had to pick five or six times last year in order to get the fruit in prime condition. We used the five-eights basket, but are going to try the box this year also. There is more money in the Williams early red, although the yellow transparent is certainly good. People demand a red apple, and we try not to give the dealer a red apple until the yellow is done, so do not ship both apples to the same dealer. All early varieties must be handled with great care, says a writer in an exchange. We expressed our early apples because we had not enough for a car on account of uneven ripening. We find summer apples more profitable than winter varieties. I do not advise planting an orchard without some early varieties. We can sell early apples anywhere. We shipped most of ours to New York, but Baltimore is all right on early fruit.

Protect Against Rabbits and Mice.

These animals may be kept from injuring the trunks of trees by boxing, or by placing a piece of galvanized wire screen around the tree trunk and covering it to the height of about 20 inches. This will also prevent sunscald, and it costs much less than to replace the trees after the rabbits have injured them. The snow should be well tramped about young apple trees to prevent mice from injuring the bark under the snow-crust.

Danger in Reckless Driving.

When a man sends his horse pell-mell down hill with loose rein he not only jars the shoulders, springs the knees, weakens the nerves, but runs the risk of breaking his horse's knees.

Success With Alfalfa.

Alfalfa can be grown on stiff lands with great success, but it is not a success on sandy soils unless the land is limed and inoculated.

Level Culture Best.

In general level culture is best. The modern cultivators and harrows make cultivation easy.

TRAP FOR LITTLE SPARROWS

More Than One Thousand Caught in Device in Use at Hawkesbury Agricultural College.

At the Hawkesbury Agricultural college in Australia the trap illustrated herewith has been found very effective in catching sparrows. During one year more than 1,000 birds were caught, sometimes at the rate of 20 or 30 a day. The birds enter at three small holes about two inches in diameter at the bottom of the V in the center and just three inches above the wire netting floor. This floor is Satisfactory Sparrow Trap.

thinly covered under the holes with soil on which a little food, such as bread crumbs or wheat is sprinkled. The mesh of the net is one inch. When once a few birds are inside sparrows are soon attracted and easily caught, says the Orange Judd Farmer. The frame is about three feet square and eight feet long, with doors at each end as shown. Originally the trap was fitted with a funnel-shaped exit ending in a bag and tied with a string, but this is not necessary. The birds can be driven out of the doors into a smaller cage and then disposed of.

back of the horse by means of the two pipes connecting it with the supply tanks.

HORTICULTURAL NOTES

Prepare land for a small fruit plantation next spring.

Thorough and constant spraying is the price of good fruit.

In Michigan the apple barrel is still the most popular package for this fruit.

Do you know that sifted coal ashes are good soil lighteners? Save them for this purpose and apply to heavy soil.

Are there any old apple trees in your orchard bearing desirable fruit? Easy to graft good varieties upon them.

Give plenty of sunshine these days. Curtains do not belong to windows where plants are kept. Roll up the shades; wash the glass.

Get ready to do some grafting. Top work that old seedling apple tree. The cherry comes first, then plum, apple, quince and pear.

Fruit trees should be planted in regular rows in the orchard, or fruit garden, so thorough culture can be given both ways of the orchard.

General farming, planting a variety of crops and keeping a variety of animals, is the safe way and withal the most successful for insuring a steady income.

Endive.

Endive is a most excellent salad plant which should be more generally grown, especially on farms and in home gardens where there are no facilities for growing winter lettuce. This vegetable may be replanted close together in cool, moist cellars with subdued light, and the endive will continue to grow and make beautiful blanched leaves which are tender and delicious in flavor.

Wool of the Sheep.

A farmer has to keep about 20 sheep a whole year to get wool enough to buy a suit of clothes. One sheep will produce wool enough to make the suit. The other 19 sheep are kept to pay the manufacturers, distributors and others.

PRACTICAL HELP FOR POOR

Man Undoubtedly Had Great Scheme, Although There Was a Slight Obstacle in the Way.

In the den which opened off the living room the man was roaring soulfully his own modernized version of an old song, "If I had but ten millions a year, Gaffer Green, if I had but ten millions a year—"

"What would you do with it?" his sister interrupted, less for purposes of information than in pursuit of quiet.

"One thing, anyhow, Sis," he broke off with unexpected earnestness. "I'd establish a system of free laundries for the poor. New Yorkers are wonderfully clean people, all things considered, but you can't go around much without realizing that more laundry work and bathing would be an immense benefit in some directions."

"But how would you manage it? Who would be the beneficiaries? How could you discriminate?"

"All that would have to be considered, of course. Now, you work out the details, Sis, and I'll go out and try to scrape up the ten millions."—New York Press.
