FORT STANTON REPORT

Interesting Review of the Big Government Sanitorium in this County.

MEAN MUCH TO THIS COUNTY

The following selections are taken from the report compiled by the officers in charge at Fort Stanton Marine Hospital to the United States Government for the past fiscal year, and the facts contained therein, being authentic, are of much interest to the people of this county.

The Marine Hospital expends nearly fifty thousand dollars each year for supplies purchased in the county, and also furnishes employment to many Lincoln county people. It is one of the largest if not the largest individual enterprise in the county and in consequence is of much importance to all residents of the community. We will not give the report in full, but have selected the extracts of most interest from the same and the extracts will be published in three installments.

HISTORICAL NOTES.

The United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service was first established in 1790 to care for sick and disabled seamen from the vessels of the American merchant marine. To this duty has at different times been added various others, among which are national quarantine in the United States and territorial possessions; examination of immigrants; suppression of epidemics; researches in the Hygienic Library in Washington and the Leprosy Investigation Station at Molokai: the inspection and licensing of establishments manufacturing vaccines, antitoxins and serums, and the dissemination of information relative to the public health through Service publications. The establishment of the Marine Hospital Sanatorium for tuberculosis at Fort Stanton, N. M., by the Service in 1899, was in line with its duties related to the care of seamen and also directly related to the larger consideration of the public health.

The Sanatorium reservation comprises forty-three square miles, all inclosed in fence. About 200 acres are under cultivation, ten acres in garden, the remainder in forage crops. The station has a central power plant from which the machinery in kitchens, carpenter shop, laundry, dairy and sterilizers. All buildings, including tent houses, are lighted by electricity.

No new building has been constructed since the United States army abandoned this post in 1895, the present ones, thirty or more, having been remodeled when necessary for sanatarium purposes. Eighty-seven tent-houses, so-called, have been constructed, however, each of which houses two patients.

LOCATION.

Patients sometimes think that this altitude, 6,200 feet, is too high for thir particular case, but this is an infrequent complaint. During the past year only one patient has been recommended for transfer to other stations on this account, and in no others have ill effects been noted The patient transferred was one who came to the Sanatorium at his own expense, without seeking advice of the officer at his local station This indicates that the cases recommended by the Service officers for transfer to this station are carefully selected and that untoward effects of this altitude on such cases are not frequent. Reviewing the experience at this station for the thirteen years of its existence there is no room to question the wisdom of selecting this location The increased expense due to its isolation is probably much more than offset by the advantages of removal from sources of acute infection and from the temptations which nearby cities afford for desertions and other discretions. The location as regards the United States as a whole is fairly central, and while the relative importance of this climate in the treatment of tuberculosis has lessened in recent years, there is no disposition to deny its considerable benefits to those who can also secure the other essentials of treatment.

GENERAL POLICY.

Tuberculous seamen and other beneficiaries admitted to any of the twenty-two Marine-Hospitals on the coasts and rivers of the United States are, if considered suitable cases for transfer, sent to this sanatorium at government expense. Cases of pulmonary tuberculosis considered unsuitable for transfer are those whose pulse rate and temperature remain elevated in spite of rest in body, chronic fibroid cases and those complicated by asthma, by uncompensated valvular disease of the heart, chronic alcoholism, and by advanced tuberculous involvement of other vital organs. Such regulations as have been made against the transfer of unsuitable cases have had in view only the welfare of the individual patient No attempt has been made to make a record of cures, but on the other hand a patient once admitted is encouraged to remain if his disease is seen to be taking an unfavorable course. Over 10 per cent of our cases are far advanced on admission and only a small proportion incipient. Since the institution was opened in 1899, until June 30, 1912, 1937 patients have been discharged with the following results:

Cured	51
Apparently cured	178
Arrested	291
Improved	565
Unimproved	184
Dead	608

NEW AUTO LIVERY

Chas. A. Stevens the progressive Livery man has purchased a new thirty horse power E. M F. car and put the same into service as a livery car for trips out of Carrizozo. Mr Stevens saw the necessity of having an auto in connection with his livery business and is prepared to make trips to all parts of the county and will undoubtedly receive a liberal patronage. His car has made several demonstration trips this week and has proven its efficiency for comfort and speed as well as a faculty of getting to whatever point it starts for.

CAPITAN RACE MEET

Successful Tournament Last Saturday with Many in Attendance.

NEXT MEETING SEPTEMBER 4.

The second event of the series of racing meets at Capitan, was held on Saturday, August 10th, and was in every respect a success.

The committee in charge of the arrangements had put the track in good condition the horses were in better training than they were at the first meet; and the weather being favorable a large number of people were present.

The first race was a 250 yards dash for a purse of $25 there were three entries: "Capitan", Mr. S T. Grays stallion; "Steamboat Bill" owned by W. W Slack of Alto, and "Black Tom," a promising young horse entered by Will Marr of Alto.

Considerable difficulty was had in getting the horses started, as the starter, Mr. Watt Gilmore of Alto, was careful to see that no advantage should be gained in the breakaway The word was at last given and the race was on with "Capitan" slightly in the lead, the black however, soon closed in and took the lead with the Slack horse, whose rider had lost one stirrup in the first few jumps, some distance behind; "Steamboat" William soon got in the race however, but the slight checkup, incident to his rider's mishap, was enough to keep him in the third position. At 200 yards "Capitan" forged ahead like a rocket, fairly devouring the space between him and the black, but the distance was too short for him to win; the race was awarded to Black "Tom" by the narrow margin of one foot.

The next race was a sweepstakes for saddle ponies, for a purse of $15, with four entries. A sorrel "Bar W" horse, entered by George Austin of Nogal, a sorrel horse owned by J. R. Coleman, of Capitan entered by Perry Humphrey, a little bay horse owned and entered by Robt. Lacey of White Oaks and a bay filley belonging to Frank Purcella of Tinnie—the distance 300 yards.

This quartet got away from the score in a bunch, but the "Bar W" sorrel led the way with the Purcella filley a close second, the Lacey horse bringing up the rear In point of interest the third and last of the purse races was the principal event of the meet. The entries were the same as in the first race run, viz: Capitan, Steamboat Bill and Black Tom; as in the former race great difficulty was experienced in getting the horses started, finally after the patience of the crowd was about exhausted, it was agreed between the owners that the horses should toe the line and start, but the black horse not being accustomed to this way of staring failed to go when the word was given and was not in the running. This race was easily won by Capitan.

A number of matched races were run after the regular program was concluded.

The crowd was orderly and good natured, and all present appeared to have had an enjoyable time. In the evening the young people—and many of the older ones spent a few hours in dancing.

The next meeting will be held Monday September 4th, Labor Day, when a more varied and interesting program will be carried out.

GOOD ROADS CONVENTION.

At a mass meeting of citizens of Lincoln county held at Capitan on Saturday; August 10, a call was issued for a good Roads Convintion to be held at Capitan on Monday September 2, at 1 p. m. It is hereby requested that in every precinct of the county those most interested in good roads call a meeting and select delegates to the county convention. Select one delegate for every 20 votes or fraction thereof over 10 based on the combined votes cast in the last election for Governor, It is suggested that the precinct meetings be called for Saturday, August 24

The object of this convention is to consider the whole question of a Good Roads system for Lincoln County and to take such action in regard to the same as may express public sentiment. The new road law will be explained and discussed and also the proposed bond issues for road construction This movement is nonpartisan and the attendance of all the tax payers is earnestly requested.

MRS. MUDGE ENTERTAINS.

Mrs F. F. Mudge very pleasantly entertained the old Carrizozo Whist Club at the home of Mrs Wm. F Whittingham last Saturday evening. The pretty home of Mrs. Whittingham which is finished in Early English style was daintily decorated with cut flowers and ferns; each room in a different color scheme. Delectable refreshments were served The whist game proved very interesting and the prize was awarded to Mrs. Truman Spencer; a silver tomato spoon. The consolation prize was awarded to Mrs. F. W Jones; the prize being a bolt of ribbon. After the cards a game of 'darts' was participated in by the ladies which proved both exciting and pleasant. The high score being made by Mrs H. S. Fairbanks, a Haviland China olive dish was awarded. Mrs. Mudge's guests included: Mesdames H B. Hamilton Wm Hoeck, Frank Elliott, J B French, F. W. Jones, F. J. Sager, T A. Spencer, H. B Dawson, W. C McDonald, H. S Fairbanks, G. L. Ulrick, S S. Squier, A. J. Rolland, A H Harvey; Misses, Chase, Sager and Lutz.

WILL CARRY THE STATE

Republican Chances are Very Good in New Mexico This Fall.

DON'T FEAR THE BULL MOOSE

The Republican committee had a rather enthusiastic meeting in spite of the Bull Moose shadow. All but four or five of the counties were represented, a majority of them by committeemen, and as there was no business but the selection of the convention place and date, the representation was considered good. There were no formal reports from the various counties, but the members came in with voluntary statements and in almost every case these were hopeful. Republican leaders say that every stand-pat county of the past will be found in the Taft column in November; that Wilson will not get the united support the Democrats expect; that Roosevelt will draw equally from the violently progressive in both parties and that he will cut down the Democratic total almost as heavily as the Republican. Estimates of the Roosevelt vote, given by Republicans at the meeting here, varied from 3,000 to 9,000 for the state. The Progressives laugh at these estimates, but the stand-pat men stoutly maintain that 6,000 is the outside limit In addition to the expected Taft vote in Bernalillo county, the Republican leaders say that the condition which brought about the revolution in Sandoval county last fall no longer exists, that there are no county officers to slice; that the liberal outpouring of campaign sinews is not likely to be repeated and that Republicans will vote for Taft. They express confidence, in fact, that the Republican vote will stand pat in November, save for that part of it which went to the Democrats in the first state election. This vote, they say, will now go to the Bull Moose, leaving Taft a safe majority. Plans are being laid for a very vigorous campaign in every county in the state.

The Republican committee will be reorganized This has been given out without any trimmings. Chairman Venceslao Jaramillo will be replaced and the Albuquerque convention is expected to introduce a considerable number of new faces into the membership of the committee. Herbert W. Clark is likely to remain as secretary of the committee.

There is lively speculation as to the Republican candidate for congress. The Bull Moose candidate, whoever he may be, is not being considered as a serious factor, although the Progressives say that this is a bad break The effort will be at Albuquerque to find a man who can "beat Fergusson" and at the meeting here Nathan Jaffa of Roswell seemed to stand as an unquestioned favorite. When he retired from the secretary's office Mr Jaffa it is to be know that he was retiring also from active political life. His business interests are large and so far as is known there has been no indication from him that he desires the nomination. There are a number of men who are said to desire the nomination, but it is probable that Mr. Jaffa can have it if he desires to make the race.

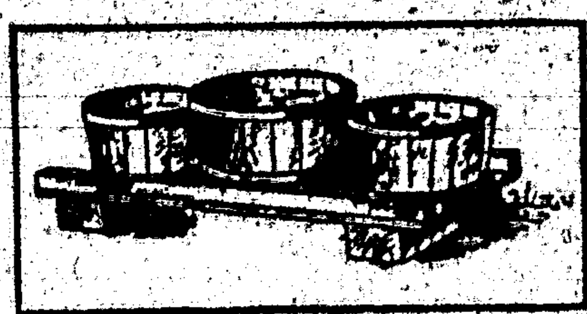
WATERING TANK FOR STOCK

Small Stream of Water May Be Kept Flowing by Use of Barrels as Shown.

Some animals like to splash the water after they have quenched their thirst. This will render the water unfit for use of other animals, and also causes a muddy place near the tank.



Water Tank.

I have prevented this, says a writer in the Popular Mechanics, by making the arrangement shown in the illustration. Iron-hooped barrels were used for tanks. They were sawed in the center and the half-barrels set on a board platform made of several planks. The one shown is made of three half barrels, the center one being a little larger than the other two. They were held in place on the planks with a piece of two by four inch material bolted at each end. Their inner surfaces were notched to fit the barrels. Two short pieces of pipe connect the center tank to the other two. The center tank receives the water from the source of supply. A small stream of water, keep flowing in and out all the time, keeps the water from becoming stagnant.

The earth can be kept dry about water tanks of any kind by preparing the base as shown. The overflow or leakage will drain away and prevent a mud hole. Many times ashes or dirt are thrown about a tank to absorb the moisture, which makes the leakage flow back under the tank. Constant dampness rots the wood and renders the foundation insecure.

Buying Fertilizers.

The matter of plant food is all important in purchasing fertilizers. When a farmer invests in a ton of an average commercial fertilizer he buys, in reality, only about 200 pounds of actual plant food. If he buys a high-grade fertilizer, he may receive as much as 600 pounds. It costs as much to mix a ton of fertilizer containing 200 pounds of plant food as it does one containing 600 pounds. The cost of sacking, hauling and freighting is the same.

Health of All Animals.

In the future all horses, swine, and other animals imported into the United States will have to stand an examination at quarantine, and their owners will have to present a certificate of health for them. Veterinary inspectors and examinations will be made at the port of entry of all imported animals, by an inspector of the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

Worth of Buck Lambs.

It is a mistake to send the buck lambs to market as they are never desirable and bring down the average of the shipment. When a buck lamb is about three months old it begins to develop coarseness and a disposition to fight.

Best Horses in America.

Recognizing the fact that America produces the best horses in the world the Japanese government has recently sent a special agent to this country for the purpose of buying a number of breeding horses.

Changing Feed Suddenly.

A great many farmers do not realize that grass supplies a food entirely different from corn, and that it is a bad practice to change entirely and suddenly from one to the other.

Give the Horse Salt.

It is a mistake to deprive a horse of salt. Large lumps of rock salt should always be kept in a box in a corner of the manger, where the horse can help himself.

INDIVIDUAL HOUSE FOR HOGS

Something New That Proves More Satisfactory Than Old Style "A" Shaped Building.

For 20 years the A style of individual house has been in use. We were well satisfied with them, writes John M. Jamison, in the American Swineherd, until we saw a neighbor using something that we liked better. Then we were anxious for some of the old ones to go to pieces so we could build a few of the new ones to give them a trial.

Recently we built three, and liked them so well that we shall take, to pieces the balance of the old-style ones and make them go as far as they will in building the new ones.

The most satisfactory dimensions are as follows: Six feet square, two and one-half feet high at the back and five and one-half feet at front. The front always to the south. The creep door, eighteen inches wide and two feet high, cut in the east end, six inches from the southeast corner. The large door, eighteen inches wide and four and one-half feet high, cut in south side at east corner. Should be built of the best matched lumber, battened or tongued and grooved of best quality. If metal is used for roof, it should be laid over paper or felt of some kind to prevent moisture forming on the under side of the roof, which keeps the floor wet.

It should be built as close as possible. The only ventilation and sunshine needed can be had at the doors. When the weather is too cold for safe farrowing, a lantern can be hung to a rafter on the high side with a short hurdle across the floors. There is no need of crawfishing to get away from an angry sow.

Best Feed for Sheep.

Four pounds of Dwarf Essex rape sown broadcast, or three pounds drilled in, will give a crop in six or seven weeks. This is one of the best feeds for sheep.

Pen for the Mule.

A mule should never be kept in a stall, but in a large roomy pen. An open lot with a shed for shelter is better.

Burn Dead Hogs.

If a hog dies on the farm, no matter from what cause, take no chances, but remove the body a long distance from the feeding lot and burn it.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Cleanliness adds much to the appearance of a hog.

Hogs require attention regardless of conditions, age or sex.

A hog once stunted can never be fed so economically afterwards.

Barley has practically the same feeding value as oats for work horses.

Pure bred stock fed liberally and handled right will surely make a profit.

Farming on a business basis eliminates small mules just as it displaces small horses.

It is conducive to health to feed hogs when they can have the range of the pasture field.

Bran is worth more pound for pound as a part of a ration for a work horse than alfalfa meal.

Dusty feeding places are very injurious and lack of sunshine for early pigs is detrimental.

The young pig wants to be got out into the sunshine and on to the dirt, as early in life as possible.

If pigs are well fed they will usually wean themselves at the proper time, without any trouble.

A good way to make a start with the use of cement on the farm is to build a concrete feeding floor for hogs.

The general health and condition of work horses is greatly influenced by the regularity and manner of feeding.

One of the most common mistakes is to let the colt grow up big enough to work before bothering to teach him much.

Sheep are utilizers of waste. They clean fields of weeds, utilize to great advantage any kind of pasture and fit in well with farm practice.

The farmer who raises good live stock, whether a horse, cow, mule, sheep, hog, goat or chickens, will find a good market at good prices.

STATES AWAKING TO DANGER

Additional Hospital Beds for the Treatment of Tuberculosis Are Being Established.

Nearly 4,000 additional hospital beds for consumptives in 29 states were provided during the year ending June 1, according to a statement issued by the National Association for the Study and prevention of Tuberculosis. This makes a total of over 30,000 beds, but only about one for every ten indigent tuberculosis patients in this country.

In the last five years, the hospital provision for consumptives has increased from 14,428 in 1907, to over 30,000 in 1912, or over 100 per cent. New York state leads in the number of beds, having 8,250 on June 1; Massachusetts comes next with 2,800; and Pennsylvania, a close third, with 2,700. Alabama showed the greatest percentage of increase in the last year by adding 57 new beds to its 42 a year ago. Georgia comes next with 109 beds added to 240 a year ago. New York has the greatest numerical increase, having provided over 1,800 additional beds in the year.

Simple Explanation.

To illustrate a point that he was making—that his was the race with a future and not a race with a past—Booker T. Washington told this little story the other day.

He was standing by his door one morning when old Aunt Caroline went by.

"Good morning, Aunt Caroline," he said. "Where are you going this morning?"

"Lawsee, Mista' Wash'ton," she replied. "I'se done been whar I'se gwine."—Kansas City Star.

SALLOW FACES

Often Caused by Tea and Coffee Drinking.

How many persons realize that tea and coffee so disturb digestion that they produce a muddy, yellow complexion?

A ten days' trial of Postum has proven a means, in thousands of cases, of clearing up a bad complexion.

A Wash. young lady tells her experience:

"All of us—father, mother, sister and brother—had used tea and coffee for many years until finally we all had stomach troubles, more or less.

"We all were sallow and troubled with pimples, bad breath, disagreeable taste in the mouth, and all of us simply so many bundles of nerves.

"We didn't realize that tea and coffee caused the trouble until one day we ran out of coffee and went to borrow some from a neighbor. She gave us some Postum and told us to try that.

"Although we started to make it, we all felt sure that we would be sick if we missed our strong coffee, but we tried Postum and were surprised to find it delicious.

"We read the statements on the pkg., got more and in a month and a half you wouldn't have known us. We all were able to digest our food without any trouble, each one's skin became clear, tongues cleared off, and nerves in fine condition. We never use anything now but Postum. There is nothing like it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Her Ruling Passion.

The woman who had chased dust and dirt all her life finally reached St. Peter.

"Come in, you poor, tired woman," he said, and held the gate ajar.

But the woman hesitated.

"Tell me first," she said, "how often you clean house?"

The saint smiled.

Deliberating.

The Rev. James Hamilton, minister of Liverpool, while on holiday in Scotland, had a narrow escape from drowning. Accompanied by a boy, Mr. Hamilton was fishing for sea trout when he slipped on a stone, lost his balance, and being encumbered with heavy wading boots, had great difficulty in keeping his head above water. Finally he managed to get back to the shore, although in a very exhausted state, and said to the boy: "I noticed that you never tried to help me." "Na," was the deliberate response, "but I was thinkin' o't."

Making Cheese in Olden Days.

Cheese was made by the old-time farmers in the summer on the co-operative plan by which four cattle owners owning say 14 milch cows, received all the milk night and morning, according to the daily yield of their little herd. Thus given two families having five cows each, one with three and one with one, supposing that the average yield per cow was the same, in two weeks, two owners would make five cheeses each; one would press three, and one only one cheese, but this one would be as good and as large as any of the rest.—"Stability of the Grange—The Farmer," Charles Winslow Hall, in National Magazine.

A Rich Field for the Antiquarian

THE TRIOPIAN ISLAND—THE SILTED CAUSEWAY AND THE TWO HARBORS

THE SITE OF THE MAINLAND CITY.

COLLECTORS of antiques have always kept Cnidus well in mind. A curious document, which purports to be a marble-hunter's vade medum, drawn up by one Henry Petty, who scoured the Levant on behalf of noble virtuosi in the seventeenth century, sets down Cnidus as one of the likeliest spots; and various excavators have pecked at the place, from the Dilettanti in 1812 to an American party a few months ago; but no one has ever dug it deeply or widely. Perhaps the Germans, when they have finished with Miletus, may send Dr. Wiegand to do justice at last to Cnidus with his immense experience and his large resources; perhaps the Americans who have been foiled at Cyrene by the Tripolitan war, and are looking for a fresh field, may anticipate him. The British Athenian school, as it happens, is going to begin excavations within a day's ride of the place—at Datcha, the ancient Akanthos. One could wish it had taken its courage in both hands and gone for the greater city. The great sites demand, of course, more time and money and men; but it is in them that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the great works of art and the great historical records are found.

And Cnidus is a great site on all accounts. Its area is very large as Greek sites go; the scale of the visible remains is big, the indications of yet bigger things below ground are frequent. The place was always in the forefront of Asiatic Greek history; and treasures of art which it is known to have possessed were of the very first quality. Even what has already been found there by hasty diggers is out of the common. The great marble lion, which is supposed to have commemorated Conon's victory at Cnidus in 394 B. C., is not more remarkable as a historical monument than a work of art. The Cnidian Demeter is the finest extant statue which can reasonably be ascribed to the hand of an Asiatic Greek master. But splendid as is that figure of the mourning Mother—or, at least, as her head is, for her body is by an inferior hand—it would rank far below another Cnidian statues, were that still preserved for some one's lucky spade. We know the Aphrodite of Praxiteles only from coin types and copies, of which the best is that Vatican figure whose charms a prudish pope caused to be velled by metal drapery from the too earnest eye; but we know, too, that some ancient critics (among them Lucian) held the original the most beautiful of all Greek statues in the world which still knew a hundred masterpieces now lost. Probably that perfect type of feminine nudity was rapt long ago from Cnidus—though why more probably than that of Hermes should have been rapt from Olympia?—but, even so, is it not still well worth any art lover's while to dig the site of the town which put up at Delphi the "Treasury of the Cnidans" whose beauties the French school at Athens have revealed to our time?

All through the classical Greek age Cnidus was a capital city, the chief of five famous neighbors on the mainland and in Rhodes; and the Dorian games, which were the bond of the six cities, were held always on the Triopian headland beneath her walls. To dig Cnidus, therefore, would be to follow the best rule of excavators, which is to dig capitals. It was also a mother city, able to send out colonies of its citizens to the Adriatic and even the western Mediterranean. Its situation secured it wealth from the sea, for it lay just at the southern angle of Asia Minor in the track of every ship which beat up from the Phoenician and Egyptian seas into the Greek. The Triopian island, which is now Cape Krio, lay so near the mainland that it could be joined by a causeway, and the strait thus bridged gave the city two bays, one looking westward, one eastward, and both well screened. In the latter, whose old mole still breaks the southeast swell, a modern steamer of much larger tonnage than the average coaster can ride at ease. The site is a good English mile in length, and the walls which enclose it can be followed from sea to sea. The fine Greek masonry is especially well preserved where the fortification runs down to the water on the east, and a terminal tower was built out into the waves; but the older parts, constructed in the polygonal fashion, which made for strength, are on the Acropolis of the Triopian Island. Here were evidently at once the stronghold and the holy places of Cnidus. The mass of the city needed, however, the larger spaces of the mainland, and climbed terrace above terrace to the summit of a high rocky hill. Its main plan and the situation of many of its public buildings were made out of the Dilettanti expedition and by Newton, and even after years of neglect they can still be traced. The marble facings have been much damaged, partly by the builders of Rhodes, partly by native lime-burners; but even in such an obvious quarry as the Theater offers, a good deal of the finer material remains in place. There is a rich harvest to be reaped by any one who can induce the Ottoman government to expropriate the peasant cultivators, and thereafter will break down their terraced plots and search them systematically from the harbor's edge to the hill-top. Cnidus is the most promising and favorable Greek site which remains for a well-financed and well-equipped expedition to undertake. There is no modern village, no modern graveyard, to hamper diggers; communications with well-supplied centers—Rhodes, Cos, and Budrum—are easy, and labor could be procured in abundance from both the Tripolian peninsula itself and from the isles. Finally, there is no lovelier spot than Cnidus on one of the loveliest coasts of the Mediterranean.

How Professor Got Radium

Easterner Tells How He Obtained Enough of Precious Stuff for Experiments.

An eastern college professor was lecturing on radium.

"Radium is so valuable," he declared, "that most small laboratories have to get along as well as they can without the actual experiments. In fact, there are many colleges in this country which do not possess any radium at all, and all that can be learned of the element is from books on the subject. I will tell you how I secured the radium with which I have been performing experiments for a number of years.

"It was not long after the Curies made their discovery when a noted French scientist came over to this country with a small quantity of the newly discovered substance. He performed a number of the stock experiments before several hundred students in this lecture hall. When he concluded his discussion he took the small piece of paper on which the radium was lying and poured the precious grains back into their especially prepared receptacle. After doing that, he, with the utmost care, brushed the tiny dust from the paper, thereby causing his large class to burst into laughter at his seemingly exaggerated frugality.

"'You may laugh,' said the lecturer, 'but know that there are hundreds of institutions in this country that would give a great deal for that little coating of dust I have just saved. Many experiments could be performed with that alone for several years. I know what I am doing all right.'

"The class broke into applause after this rebuke had been administered and the gathering broke up. The French scientist went on his way lecturing and experimenting. A week later before one of my own classes I performed all the experiments we had had during the visit of the foreign physicist. Where did I get my radium? I didn't steal it as you may suspect. You will recollect that I mentioned the fact that the radium had been brushed from a small slip of paper. The Frenchman got his radium and threw the paper away. I picked up the paper and with the particles of radium still adhering to it I can now perform all of his experiments. I have been doing so for several years and will continue for several more, when I expect to buy a larger quantity after the price goes down."

Problems in Egg Culture

Scientific Experiments to Be Made to Demonstrate the Possibility of Improvement.

The Cambridge School of Agriculture is trying to make hens lay red eggs. There is always the best market for eggs which are of the richest red brown in color, and the problem is to develop the right kind of hen.

The Cambridge experimenters hope to produce a red egg-laying hen of prolific habit, just as they have produced a strong rust-resisting wheat of high yield by working on the curious law of Mendel. Hens have so far proved admirable examples of the working of this law. In respect of single and double combs and in respect of color they are perfectly obedient to the proper scientific principle. They "behave" as they ought, to use the technical verb. Why should not the eggs behave as well as the feathers and comb?

There is also the subsidiary question of food. It may be possible to alter the egg color by food as well as by hereditary influences. It has been done in the case of canaries.

If Cambridge achieves the poultryman's ideal of a hen that lays yearly 250 two-ounce red eggs, no one will then say that the universities are not practical or even commercial—New York Sun.

Sugar Cane Introduced by Jesuits.

Sugar was first made in Louisiana in 1751 by the Jesuit fathers from San Domingo.

The cane grew well, but all attempts to manufacture sugar from it were abortive, and it was not until 1791 that Don Antonio Mendes succeeded in extracting sugar from cane. Three years later Etienne de Bore made such a large crop of sugar that many were induced to go into the industry, and it is to him that the real credit of being the father of the industry belongs.

In common with all industries in the experimental stage, the sugar cane industry of Louisiana was at its inception a very crude and unimportant one, but by 1820 the crop approximated some 20,000,000 pounds of sugar.

TAKE PLACE OF MEAT

DELICIOUS VEGETABLE SOUPS FOR THE HOT WEATHER.

Something of a Novelty Is One Calling for Fresh Garden Peppers—Onion Soup Brought to Perfection in France.

An housekeeper whose family doesn't care very much for flesh food in summer can find any number of delicious vegetable soups to take the place of meat decoctions, and having once formed the habit of using them it is likely to be a lasting one.

The following soup, calling for fresh garden peppers, is a novelty: Mince three large peppers and three small onions together and stew them gently, till tender, in a little butter—about two tablespoonfuls—without browning. Then thicken to a paste with a generous tablespoonful of flour and gradually stir the mixture into a quart of boiling milk. Season with salt and pepper. Gradually add also, stirring well, the yolks of three eggs, and then remove from the fire immediately and serve very hot with croutons. Do not let it cool long or it may curdle. If one or two of the peppers are a bright red, instead of green, they will lend pretty tints to the soup.

For French onion soup, which returned travelers describe as food for the gods, fry four onions in two tablespoonfuls of butter or very nice soup fat. The latter is to be preferred because it is cheaper. When they are quite brown add a scant half cupful of flour, stirring all the time. When the flour is brown mix in carefully (a little at a time) about three pints of boiling water or stock. Season the whole with salt and pepper and put the soup near the back of the stove, where it will merely simmer for half an hour. Mash two potatoes and add enough warm milk to them to make a puree. Stir this puree into the soup and if too thick add a little fresh milk. Then strain and boil ten minutes. Serve very hot with croutons.

The following combination of rice and lettuce makes a delicious soup: Have ready the large leaves of three good-sized heads of lettuce. After draining, chop them up and put them in a saucepan with about a fifth of a pound of butter and cook for five minutes, stirring frequently. Stir the whole into two quarts of white stock. Season with a tablespoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of pepper, half a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg and a soup bouquet. Stir in also four ounces of well-cleaned rice. Cover the kettle and let it cook for three-quarters of an hour. Then strain the soup through a fine sieve. Let the soup heat once again, but do not let it boil. Stir in a pint of sweet cream, and serve very hot, with croutons.

Boiled Cider Sauce.

Delicious for fruit pudding. Rub to a light cream, two cups of white sugar and three-fourths cup butter; beat into it gradually one-half teacup boiled cider. Just before serving set into a kettle of boiling water; heat it hot, but do not let it boil. Pour over pudding made as follows: One cup buttermilk; one-half cup sugar; one tablespoon lard (melted), flavor vanilla, one egg. Put in enough flour to make cake batter; one teaspoon baking powder sifted in flour. Put cherries or any fruit in teacups, three tablespoonsful; fill cups to one-half full with batter. Put in steamer and steam one hour.

To Press Serge.

This popular fabric is even more of a favorite for suits than usual, and the only objection one can have to the material is its proneness to become shiny. Here is a way to overcome this objection. If it is sponged with hot vinegar and pressed in the usual manner the shiny appearance will entirely disappear.

Cook in Asbestos Cones.

Asbestos cones will be found invaluable to the open air camper. Roll a sheet of asbestos in cone shape and set the small end securely in the campfire. In it may be baked apples, potatoes, eggs, etc. A good sized cone will take the place of several cooking utensils.

Suet Pudding.

One cup molasses, one cup water, one cup chopped raisins, one cup chopped suet, 2½ cups flour, one teaspoon soda, salt; steam three hours.

Portuguese Birthday Pudding.

Boil half pound of rice in water until it begins to open. Then strain it from the water and boil it slowly with a quart of milk, half a pound of loaf sugar, and the peel of a lemon. When the rice is sufficiently boiled, remove from the fire and take out all lemon peel. Stir until cold. Then add four beaten eggs, stirring it all the while, and a wineglassful of orange flower water. When properly mixed, put into a flat dish, and sprinkle with cinnamon powder.

True to His Trust.

"Father," asked the beautiful girl, "did you bring home that material for my new skirt?"

"Yes."

"Where is it?"

"Let me see. Wait now. Don't be impatient! I didn't forget it. I'm sure I've got it in one of my pockets, somewhere."

If you wish beautiful, clear, white clothes, use Red Cross Bag Blue. At all good grocers.

A woman may not realize that she has a good figure until other women begin to find fault with it.

Garfield Tea is invaluable for all irregularities of the liver, kidneys and bowels. It is made from pure and wholesome herbs.

And the Lord also helps those who help others.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientist for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng., and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

RECENT LAND DECISIONS

The following decisions of interest to homesteaders have this month been handed down by the Secretary of the Interior:

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Section 4 of the enlarged homestead act of February 13, 1909, clearly indicates that an area equal to one-eighth of the entry under the act must be cultivated for four years, beginning from the second year of the entry and that one-fourth thereof must be cultivated for three years, beginning with the third year of the entry. Under section 2 of the act, all of the cultivation may be upon the original entry, provided a sufficient area thereof be cultivated to meet the requirements of both entries.

Residence and cultivation on the additional may be completed by residence and cultivation on either entry for such time and such area as is required by the enlarged homestead act.

Although the general rule is that when a patent has been issued for public land, the land department loses all jurisdiction over the matter, and cannot grant another patent until the former one is cancelled, yet if a patent is a nullity it conveys no title and the land described in such patent continues to remain public land.

CONTESTS

The only right acquired by one who contests and procures the cancellation of a homestead entry is the right as against any other person to make entry on the land within thirty days from date of notice of such cancellation.

A contestant who avails himself of this right by presenting an application to enter within the period designated secures all the benefits accorded him by statute. If, therefore, he presents an application to enter, in the exercise of a preference right, he must comply with the same conditions and requirements respecting the land as would be exacted of any other applicant.

In other words, he, to the same extent as any other applicant, would be bound by the laws and regulations in force at the date application is actually filed, without regard to those that might have obtained at the time his preference right of entry accrued.

FINAL PROOF.

Section 2301 R. S., as a mended, provides for commutation proof after the expiration of 14 months from date of entry

This necessarily implies that the 14 months period of residence and cultivation must be the 14 months immediately preceding submission of commutation proof

Commutation proof cannot be established where the residence consisted of periods of from one to two weeks at a time at intervals of from two to three months

In order to commute a homestead entry the claimant must show substantially continuous personal presence on the land.

The Love Feud

IZOLA FORRESTER

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

Nan lightened the rein slightly, and Gypsy Belle paused. It was almost dark along the old mountain road. Over on the rail fence to the left had come a drawled hail for her to halt, and the click of a trigger pulled back.

"That you, Grift Taller?" called Nan, cheerfully. "What you doing there this time of night stopping folks on their way home?"

A laugh came from the gloom of the railing.

"I'm just squirrel hunting, Sis."

"Don't you call me Sis. You ain't so well acquainted as that. Do you call the schoolma'am down at the Bend Sis?"

"Bill does."

"Talking some, ain't you, Grift?"

"I'm going to do more'n talk tonight."

"If he don't get you first." Tauntingly.

"He won't get me first. He's had a taste by now already."

Nan's voice caught a little in her throat, but she was not afraid.

"I suppose there are Tallers sitting on fence rails all over Mount Scratchum tonight waiting for a shot at Bill Ames. Why don't you come out in the open road and fight like a man? You all up here have got so used to fighting Indians back awhile, you've forgotten how to face a white man, ain't you? You'll sit up there and shoot at Bill if he comes riding by here, and then go down to Potter's store, and boast of how you fought Bill Ames. You can't fight anyone man size. Guess all you can do is lick your little brothers, and give Molly Ann a clip side of her head now and then."

"I'll give you a clip some day, Smarty," said Grift, slowly. "You've got too much red pepper in that tongue of yours."

"You'll give me a clip some day?" Nan leaned back her head and laughed. "Why, you old, stingy, rail fighter, I wouldn't look at your shadow."

"Your pop signed papers for you today, just the same. You ain't of age yet, honey, so we settled it up between us. That's why I ain't going to have Bill Ames riding this road any more. He ain't got straight intentions anyhow. He's just a trifler. He's putting up one evening at the schoolma'am's, and the next up at your place, and boasting of his irresistible attractions down at Potter's Saturday nights."

"Don't believe a word of it." Nan started Gypsy Belle up again. "Don't get a night chill sitting on that rail, Grift."

"Say," called Grift, after her, "if you meet Bill and tell him I'm waiting for him, I'll take it out on your pop, understand. And he signed papers for you to me, honest he did, Nan. And they'll hold too, in law."

But Nan answered not. Straight up the road she went at a canter. The horse knew the way in the dark, and ever since they had left the main road far below in the valley, she had let the reins hang slack, while she sang to keep herself company.

She was not singing now. Not a mile was covered before she heard scrambling and stumbling ahead on the steep rocky road. Nobody lived higher up on Scratchum except her father and herself, and strangers never came that way. Nobody haunted the roads of Scratchum unless he was predestined to live there by landing on the county records before he had a chance to call his life his own.

Checking the mare, she drew to one side of the road. Lumbering down the road came Bill Ames on his white horse, head down, wheezing at every step. Bill stopped and slipped off the saddle with a smothered curse, as the horse crashed down on its shoulder heavily.

"What did you ride him so hard for?" called out Nan. "He'll just give one good wheeze, now, and pass over."

Bill had started back at the sound of a voice so near him, but laughed as he recognized the owner.

"Better loan me Gypsy Belle to go along on, Nan. I certainly need her tonight."

"What for?" Nan's tone was full of innocent surprise.

The traveler tried to pull his wits together. His brain was full of bursting lights and shooting agony. Some powers in the universe around his collar bone had a grudge against Bill. Another had chopped a tree down his back, and his ear rested on K. O. Market had landed.

"There's sport on Scratchum to night, Nan," he said, clumsily. "The Tallers are all out 'coon hunting."

"Don't go any further, Bill. Come along home with me."

"Why?" he retorted. "Do you care, Nan? Honest, do you care?"

"Don't touch me, Billie." She shrank back against the warm side of Gypsy Belle. "I can't care for anybody. I'm just old Nate Whippley's girl. Pop's promised me, and given papers on it, too."

"Promised you to who?"

"Grift Taller. Oh, Billie, don't."

His strong arms held her to him closely. Pressing one cheek against her thick braids of fair hair, he forgot all the Taller tribe, and their ways of ambush.

"What do you care for the old man, or any of that lot down in the valley, Nan, honestly?" he whispered. "We don't have to live here on old Scratchum the rest of our natural days. I can get work in any sawmill in the Cumberlands. Come along with me, and—"

Nan's fingers stole tenderly to his curly hair, stroking it back from his face, and then down to his coat, and stopped. There was a withered rose in the buttonhole of the lapel.

"Who gave you that rose, Billie?"

Bill, unused to the ways of the sex, told the simple truth.

"Got it this afternoon down at Rocky Bend."

"Schoolma'am gave it to you, didn't she? Don't you want another one on the other side from me, so you can show them both down at Potter's store Saturday night?"

Her hand came across his ears in a swift box, and Bill stood back.

"Nan, listen—"

"No, I won't listen to none of your lies, Billie. You jest get down that road, and take your medicine. I reckon it's coming to you when you ain't got any better sense than to come to me and talk a sweet streak, with that girl's rose still sticking in your buttonhole."

A voice came clearly out of the laurel thicket above her head.

"I'll try to hit it the first time, Nan."

There was a blinding flare, a puff of smoke, and Bill tried to push the girl behind him. His shoulder was filled with pain like red hot live wires, but he leveled his gun and fired up at the green laurel. Back came the swift answer, but not so surely. Bill wondered why there was the roar of surging waters in his ears like the Upper Bend in a spring freshet, why he could not see to aim, why Nan kept standing there beside him instead of beating to cover.

He fell forward at her feet, and Nan, her face dead white, lips drawn back from her pretty white teeth, seized his rifle, and lifted it to her own shoulder.

"You clear out of that laurel thicket, Grift Taller," she called. "I'm doing it this time, and I'll get you, too."

Bill's gun sang merrily until Grift yelled for quarter. His face showed faintly in the gloom as he peered out at her.

"I called quits, didn't I? Stop your shooting."

"Take back what you said about Billie and the schoolma'am, and give me that paper pop signed," ordered Nan, calmly.

Grift hesitated, looked at her again, and dug for the paper. He tossed it down at her feet as she held him covered.

"Take it. I wouldn't marry you now anyhow, you little wildcat. And it looks like he wouldn't neither. He's dead, ain't he?"

"I don't care whether he's dead or not," Nan cried back, passionately. "I won't be anybody else's, I know that."

She stood motionless as Grift rode away. He was hurt, she guessed rightly, and a great gladness swept down over her. She had fought like one of the pioneer women, shoulder to shoulder with her mate. Now she knelt beside him, and felt for his heart to see if it was beating.

The mare lowered her head and whinnied anxiously.

"It's all right, Gypsy Belle," Nan told her, the quick sobs coming at last thick and fast. "Billie, can't you hear me one bit?" She lifted his head on her shoulder, smoothing back his rough curly hair tenderly, pressing her face to his. "Billie, I've got the paper away from him. He can't hold dad one bit now. And I'll go up into the Cumberland with you, dear. Ah, Billie, can't you hear me?"

Her voice broke in a low sob, and she bowed her face on his breast. Somewhere out of the gray mist her voice reached him, and opened his eyes.

"Hush your crying, honey," he whispered. "I'm just winged a bit. We'll take the Cumberland trail next week, you and me."

"Gypsy Belle, too," Nan insisted.

"Sure. She'll carry the bride." Bill grinned feebly. Then Nan and Gypsy Belle were both silent, the mare nipping at the laurel branches, and Nan with her cheek pressed close to the wall shoulder.

Explained.

"Why is it the conservative women agree to Teddy's demands?"

"Really, I haven't. Because they are conservatives."

RESCUERS OF TORNADO VICTIMS

AFTER a tornado struck the town of Regina, Saskatchewan, and killed several hundred persons and razed scores of business houses and residences, squads of the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police, who have headquarters there, did heroic work in alleviating the distress among the victims of the tornado and immediately put the devastated area under martial law. Our illustration shows a squad of these efficient policemen, photographed at Regina.

IS 100 YEARS OLD

Famous Dormitory at Harvard Was Built in 1812.

Money to Put the Hall Up Was Raised by a Lottery, Which Made a Profit of $29,000.

Cambridge, Mass.—Not only every Harvard man but every visitor who has crossed the classic yard of the old university will be interested in the fact that Holworthy hall, one of the dormitories facing on the elm-shaded quadrangle, celebrates its centenary this year. For a full hundred years it has been occupied by successive generations of students.

The history of Holworthy is interesting. Before it was built the college had faced out over Cambridge common, turning its back on what is now the yard. The three oldest buildings, Harvard (1672-82), the original Stoughton (1699) and Massachusetts hall (1720), formed three sides of a square open to the west. Later (1763) Hollis was built in line with Stoughton and, with the help of Holden chapel, three sides of another square were thus formed, this one also opening to the west.

These western faces were the front of the building. Behind them in what is the present yard were wood houses, the brewhouse and other outbuildings. Stoughton was finally taken down in 1780 and a different plan of arrangement then became possible. Still the present Stoughton, built in 1803, was placed on a line with Hollis and it also faced the west.

In 1811, however, another dormitory being needed, it was voted in the first place "that the corporation will proceed to erect a new college for the habitation of students on the site of old Stoughton hall," and Mr. Lowell and Loammi Baldwin were appointed a committee to make necessary contracts and superintend the erection of the building. If this plan had been carried out it would have effectually blocked the development of the present college yard.

Fortunately better counsels prevailed, says the Harvard Graduates' Magazine. On March 11, 1811, Mr. Baldwin presented a plan for the new college, and it was voted "that the committee appointed to contract for the erection of the new college be requested to cause the same to be erected to the eastward of new Stoughton and extending its front southerly, nearly east and west, and that the same be built upon the principles of the plan exhibited by L. Baldwin, with single rooms in the front and two studies in the rear, and to form the north side of a quadrangle which, when completed, may be nearly equilateral."

The money with which to build the new hall was not derived from the Holworthy bequest received many years before, as might be inferred from the name, but came from the proceeds of a lottery which had been authorized by act of the legislature March 14, 1806. The treasurer's books show that the lottery produced about $29,000, of which sum $24,500 was spent on Holworthy hall. This was a not unusual way of raising money for public purposes and no ill opinion was attached to it at that time. Stoughton hall had been built in like manner by a lottery authorized in 1794.

In the corporation records it was specified that the rent of rooms in Holworthy should be $26 a year.

EXTRA HEADS ON STALKS

Government Becomes Interested in Grain and Orders an Inspection of Method.

Chico, Cal.—Barley and oat growing experiments by G. W. Overton of Chico have developed grains that may be adopted throughout the United States.

The experiments are considered so remarkable that the government has ordered an inspection of his process with a view of establishing his methods throughout the country.

The feature of the new barley is that from two to five heads grow on each stalk, the principal head ripening first and becoming easily twice as large as the others, which are of normal size. The combined heads are about nine inches long, while the stalk is tough and about as large as an ordinary lead pencil, standing against a heavy wind.

His tame oats has an average of three heads to the stalk.

Pig's Quarters Too Small.

Philadelphia.—For keeping a pig confined in a small chicken coop, measuring three by three feet, Roman Robinski was fined $10 and costs.

PAIR MUST MARRY AT SEA

Japanese Swain Can't Wed Woman in America—His Love Letters Yards Long.

Spokane.—Love letters by the yard are the kind S. Kono, proprietor of a Japanese restaurant, receives regularly from his sweetheart of the flowery kingdom. He exhibited one with considerable pride with the assurance that no one would read its sacred contents, as it is written in the Japanese language. Kono, with a bashful grin that extended from ear to ear, admitted that he was going to marry the little Japanese lass next September.

"Me show something," he said, as he drew forth a crumpled mass of what looked like tissue paper from his inside coat pocket. Carefully smoothing it out, Kono displayed several sheets of Japanese silk paper delicately inscribed with the native characters on one side. Each sheet was about four feet long and the width of ordinary writing paper. Kono explained that it was a letter from his bride-to-be, and gleefully pointed out his name and the girl's on the paper.

Kono, who has been in America twelve years, speaks English fluently. He explained that the girl was 22 years old, although she was just a little girl of 11 when he left her in Japan. Kono will bring his bride to Spokane when he complies with all the immigration requirements.

Kono will not be allowed to bring the girl to this country until he marries her. To overcome legal obstacles he will meet her ship outside American waters and the ceremony will be performed on board ship. The marriage ceremony will have to be performed at least three nautical miles from shore.

Hermit Faces Old Murder Charge.

Florence, Ala.—John Legg is in jail charged with a murder committed twelve years ago. A month after the crime Legg reached the Ozark mountains, in Missouri, where he made his home in a cave, subsisting by trapping and shooting, and clothing himself with the skins of the slain animals. Confiding his story to a stranger resulted in his arrest.

CREW OF OIL BOAT DESERTS

Lascar Sailors From India Say Stench of Cargo Was Unbearable, So They Quit.

New York.—The picturesque Lascar sailors, clad in outlandish costumes, such as is commonly supposed to be the garb of pirates, are taken before Magistrate McFarland of the night court and sentenced to 20 days each on the charge of attempting to desert the British oil steamer Indra, which is lying at Point Breeze. Captain Grann, master of the vessel, and Chief Officer Kennedy appeared against them, declaring the men started a row because they were refused shore leave. Mohan Ali, the only one of the men who could speak English, was spokesman for his companions. He defended their action, saying that the captain ordered them to remain in the forecastle, where the stench of oil was so intolerable that they could really breathe.

Arraigned in the dock, the prisoners presented a novelty to the night court, so different were they from the usual types of prisoners. Most of them wore vivid colored handkerchiefs on their heads; some were garbed in wide trousers which extended only to the knees, and others were half naked. One man wore a yellow turban.

According to the testimony, the men were shipped in India, signing papers which stipulated that they were not to have any shore leave unless upon express permission of the captain. All said that the men had been deceived when these papers were signed, as they understood at the time that they were to be permitted ashore at all ports.

After completing their work yesterday the men demanded shore leave for the evening. The captain refused, and the Lascars threatened to desert. There was a wrangle on the deck, and one of the men jumped to the wharf, calling upon the others to follow him.

Meanwhile the captain sent word to the seventeenth District police station, and before the men could follow their leader Sergeant Duffy, with a detail of policemen, was on the scene and arrested them all. According to the police, the men submitted to arrest peacefully. The magistrate said that he had no option but to sentence the men, as their act had been plainly illegal, in view of the papers they had signed.

Girl Watched Lover Suicide.

New York.—Enrico Guida, twenty-two years old, shot and killed himself in his room, while Elsie Bogiski, a pretty girl, eighteen years old, whom he was to have married in a few days, looked on. He had been despondent of late because of long working hours. The girl had eloped with him and the pair was stopping at a boarding house.

Reduced Remorse by the Month.

Kittery, Me.—A laborer has for more than a year been sending monthly contributions to the federal treasury at Washington, D. C., for deposit in the conscience fund. In a letter to President Taft, the man said he was anxious for the money to reach its proper destination, as he had hard work saving it.

That Hole in the Fence

By GRACE KERRIGAN

(Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.)

"Now, then, my dear, tell me all about it."

Aunt Hetty had arrived from Michigan on a visit to her sister, and this was the second day after. She had asked her niece, Miss May Clyde, to take a seat with her under the blossoming apple tree, and she had put an arm around her as she said the words.

"All about what?" was innocently asked.

"Stuff! Don't pretend you don't know. You are twenty years old and haven't had a proposal yet. Why not?"

"I'm too homely."

"Shucks! If I had you out in Michigan I'd have you married off in a month. The fellows around here must be working for about a dollar a day."

"Do you want my reasons in chronological order, aunty?" May asked after a sigh had escaped on the blossom-laden air.

"We don't have that word out in Michigan, but you can go right ahead."

"Well, at the tender age of sixteen I fell in love with a boy that drew me on his hand-sled. I found he was also drawing other girls, and I banished him from my heart."

"That was what we call goose-love," said Aunt Hetty.

"Well, at seventeen I climbed a tree and couldn't get down. Great chance for romance, but it didn't come. The grocer's boy got a ladder for me, but charged 25 cents for his services. Under such circumstances I couldn't give him my heart, could I?"

"Of course not. I'd like to have that boy out in Michigan for a few weeks!"

"At eighteen I was in a field picking daisies when a bull took after me."

"Lands alive!"

"I ran screaming, and a young man in the road stopped and—"

"He scaled the fence and broke that bull's neck," finished the aunt.

"No. In running after me the bull stumbled and broke his own neck, and the young man went on without our having spoken a word to each other. Wasn't it a shameful case?"

"We'd surely call it so out in Michigan."

"Then at nineteen, at a summer resort, a canoe upset with me."

"You don't say!"

"Yes, aunty. I was paddling around and showing off before a lot of people when I got the flip-flop. Canoe just turned over and left me in the water."

"And it was a mile deep?"

"I thought so."

"And you couldn't swim?"

"Not a kick. Of course the people all saw it, and of course I screamed."

"And a dozen young men fell over each other to plunge in to rescue you?"

"No, aunty. All the young men had gone to a game of ball, and the only man present had a wooden leg and was bald-headed. He couldn't come to my rescue, but he hollered to me to wade ashore."

"But how could you?"

"Oh, the water was only two feet deep!"

"It wasn't, eh? I'd like to have that lake out in Michigan just one summer, and the old peg-leg with it!"

"And last fall I got to be twenty. I was riding out with a girl friend when the horse ran away. She jumped out and left me to be smashed up."

"The cowardly wretch!"

"After half a mile a young man dashed out into the highway and cried out that he would save me."

"And I'll bet a cookie to a cent that he was from Michigan!" exclaimed Aunt Hetty. "There ain't a young man in our state who wouldn't do it."

"Maybe he was a Michigander," sighed Miss May, "but I shall never know. He stubbed his toe and the horse and buggy ran over him, and father had to pay a $10 doctor bill for him. Nothing has happened since, and how am I to get married?"

"Don't they have spelling-schools around here?" was asked.

"Never heard of any."

"Nor camp-meetings?"

"No."

"Nor lasses candy-pulls?"

"No."

"What a benighted country! Why, how does a girl get a fellow?"

"I don't know. You asked why I wasn't married, and I've been telling you."

"Well, we wouldn't put up with such things in Michigan a minute. We give a girl a chance out there, and somebody's getting married every minute or two. There ain't an old maid nor an old bach within 20 miles of where I live."

"But do you think my time will come some day, auntie?"

"Got to, dear—got to. Don't you despair. Put on your hat and go up to the woods I see over there and see if you can find me some wintergreen berries. We Michiganders are mighty fond of 'em."

The woods were half a mile away down the road, and were not fenced in. When one had penetrated them about 200 feet, however, there was a barbed-wire fence, and it was on the far side of this fence that Miss May saw the red berries. Even a queen can climb a rail fence or clamber over a stone wall, but there isn't a lady the whole length of Fifth avenue that can negotiate a barbed-wire fence. It takes a brave man and a long-legged man.

Miss May went wandering along that fence until she found a place where a hog had crawled through, and bent one wire up and another down, and she sank to her hands and knees and tried the same game. The barbs caught and held her, and she was still there at the end of three long hours and after she had shouted herself hoarse.

Paul Ascott had come down from the city to revel in the balmy sunshine of early summer. He had promised to kill a few squirrels for a taxidermist friend, and it was on this very afternoon that he was out with a gun in search of the little fellows. He scented the wintergreens, and picked some and sat down to eat them and rejoice in the stillness around him. By and by a succession of queer sounds caused him to rise up and advance towards a certain point.

Poor May Clyde! The young man came face to face with her. He gave a start and rubbed his eyes. Never before had he seen a girl caught in the hog-hole of a fence, and he had to have time to recover. In two or three minutes he was unfastening the barbs caught in her shirtwaist and prying apart the wires, and when he finally gave her a hand to reach her feet she had to have his support for a time. She had almost lost her voice, but she managed to whisper:

"Did—did you ever do a fool thing like that?"

"We all do at times," he laughed. "I think you live in the village, and you must let me see you home."

There was no talking on the way—at least from Miss May. Mr. Ascott uttered a few words of consolation and left her at the gate, and she went in and had a good cry before she could make whispered explanations to her mother and aunt. It was the next day before her voice was strong enough to ask of the aunt:

"Wasn't it the awfulest kind of awful?"

"No, Mr. it wasn't!" was the prompt reply.

"But you see—"

"I see that he'll call here this afternoon to laugh over the matter with you, and that it's going to lead to love and marriage. May, every girl has got to be found before she can be loved. She may be found up a tree—in a cave—down the well—on a haystack. You was found in the hog-hole of a barbed-wire fence, and if that isn't romantic enough to bring about a marriage then I don't know how to put up pickled peaches."

Mr. Ascott is a frequent caller at the Clyde house, and the family cook has winked at the butcher's boy and hinted that there was something doing.

Pays Better.

RAILWAY WRECK WHICH COST MANY LIVES

HEAD IN IRON POT

Child Taken to Hospital to Prevent Suffocation.

Boy Pulls a Kettle Over His Ears in Play and Efforts of Ten Physicians Are Needed to Release Him.

New York.—It took physicians and nurses in Bellevue hospital more than half an hour to remove an iron pot from the head of Peter Szusca, two years old. Young Peter was pretending that the pot was a hat, when suddenly it slid over his ears and nose until the rim touched his neck. Then Peter began to yell.

His mother, Mrs. Jennie Szusca, heard the cries reverberating in the pot and ran into the room in which Peter had been playing. She could not see the lad's tears, for the pot covered his face, and so Mrs. Szusca thought at first he was laughing. She said it was hard to tell whether a person with a pot over his head was laughing or crying on account of the weird noise that echoes from the pot. So the mother laughed too.

When she thought Peter was becoming too hilarious she attempted to move the pot, and it wouldn't come off, and Peter yelled something that sounded, in infantile idiom, like "it hurts." The more Mrs. Szusca pulled at the pot the tighter the iron mask seemed to hold. Then she summoned George Dayer, a neighbor. Dayer's attempts were futile, and he suggested that a plumber should be summoned.

Meantime Peter's wails began to sound like stage thunder, and Mrs. Szusca became frightened. Some one was said to have sagely suggested that Peter should be taken to a cold storage plant, turned upside down and water poured into the pot; the water would freeze, and the pot would be broken by the bulging ice. But Mrs. Szusca said that the hospital was the place for Peter. She wrapped the pot up in a shawl, and took it, with Peter still attached, to Bellevue. In the hospital Dr. Savok took mother and child to a ward and tried to pull the pot off. The pot wouldn't budge. Several nurses came in to assist, but the pot was tenacious.

"We'll have to get a tinsmith at once," said the physician.

A tinsmith was not available. Then a nurse suggested that soap suds on the pot's insides might ease it off. Peter was placed on his head and suds and soft soap was poured into the pot. The pot remained obdurate for half an hour, but finally the soap had the proper effect and Peter was released from his iron prison.

Peter was none the worse for his experience, and soon went to sleep in his mother's arms.

STRIKE FOR HAM HALTS SHIP

Captain of Steamer Farragut Tied Up Whether He Fires the Cook or Not.

Philadelphia.—The steamer Admiral Farragut, owned by the United Fruit company, was unable to sail for Jamaica, because on the trip to Philadelphia the ship's cook served to the members of the crew corned beef when their bill of fare called for ham.

Just as Captain Mardar was about to give orders to cast off the hawsers at 10 o'clock in the morning the 15 firemen and 10 oilers of the steamship walked ashore and refused to return until John Considine, the Jamaica negro cook, who had worked for the line 27 years, had been discharged.

Walking delegates of both the firemen's union and the cooks' union have been in constant conference with Captain Mardar all day. If the cook is not fired, the firemen's delegates say, they will call a general strike, and the cooks' delegates say if he is fired they will call a strike of cooks and waiters. Captain Mardar has promised all hands that he will feed them both corned beef and ham at every meal, but the strikers say the proposition has come too late.

PRIEST ACTS AS POLICEMAN

Minister of the Gospel Is a Peace Officer in Los Angeles—First One in United States.

Los Angeles.—The city has a policeman-priest, the first official of the kind in California, and probably the first in the United States.

Continuing the selection of prominent men of affairs in the city for service with the citizens' auxiliary police, chief Sebastien has officially appointed Father Edward H. Brady a special policeman. The appointment was confirmed by the police commission, and Father Brady, who is one of the clergy of St. Viliana's cathedral, has received his badge of office.

This appointment, according to Chief Sebastien, is one of several that have been made toward the formation of a body of well-known citizens to assist the regular police in maintaining law and order.

FINDS CRYING BABY IN GRIP

Man in New York Unaware of Contents Until Infant Lets Out Howl.

New York.—A passer-by found a baby in a large grip at the corner of 42nd street and Lexington avenue shortly before daybreak. The infant, a week-old boy, was crying lustily.

John McAree, a builder, of Corona, L. I., happened to pass the corner, and the sight of the traveling bag and the nearness of the Grand Central station suggested that some traveler in his hurry for a train had set it down and forgotten it. Suddenly the infant began to make itself heard and McAree opened the grip and found the child.

Chases Marshal Up a Tree.

Noblesville, Ind.—When the wife of Marshal Messburg of Warren sought to convince him that she should have the $1.50 which he was toying teasingly in hand, the guardian of peace playfully climbed a tree. Mrs. Messburg gave chase. A twig snapped—marshal and money came tumbling down to her feet. One dollar and fifty cents' worth of restoratives eliminated all traces of the downfall, except one wry face and a painful limp.

Colt Drags Boy to Death.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Bert Pearson, twenty years old, was dragged to death by a wild colt. The young man was leading the animal by a rope which he had passed around his wrist. Suddenly the colt bolted. Unable to check the animal or loosen the rope, Pearson was carried off his feet and was dragged at the rope's end. The colt galloped close to a telephone pole, dashing the young man against the pole and knocking his brains out.

COUPLE END LIVES

James G. Smith, Former Broker, and Wife Drown.

Man Fills Pockets With Sand So They Will Sink, but Bodies Are Found With Their Wrists Tied Together.

Waukegan, Ill.—Their wrists bound together with a handkerchief, his left wrist tied to her right, the bodies of a man and a woman were found floating in the shallows at the shore of Lake Michigan near Waukegan. They were James G. Smith, formerly a wealthy real estate broker, and his wife.

They committed suicide Wednesday, the silver anniversary of their wedding, and all the silver they had left was in the man's pocket. There were two dimes.

Marks found on the shore told a graphic and pathetic story. On Wednesday afternoon the couple dressed carefully and walked to the lake shore. They were seen by C. F. Ingall strolling arm in arm along Sheridan road.

They sat down on the beach and removed their hats and looked out across the lake. As they talked together the man picked up handfuls of sand and filled his pockets with it, burying his two dimes in one pocket, and burying four pennies in another. There are little hollows in the beach, and finger marks that show where he scooped up the sand. Sand is heavy.

Mrs. Smith carried a parasol as the two set forth on their last stroll. When they reached the beach she stuck it upright in the sand, and it was found there, with her hat and her husband's lying beside it.

Mrs. Smith had no pockets to fill with sand. So her husband loaded his own pockets heavier, and then tied one corner of a large handkerchief to her wrist. She tied the opposite corner to his wrist. And they walked down into the water.

Footprints on the sand showed that the couple had not hesitated when once they started—the prints led a straight path to the water's edge.

It was a pact of death. It is believed that the couple had planned it long ago, when it first became apparent that Mr. Smith would be unable to retrieve his fortune.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith leave a son, Walter Smith, who is employed in a Chicago bank.

"Old Bill" Miner Loose Again.

Milledgeville, Ga.—For the second time in the last few months "Old Bill" Minor, the aged outlaw, serving a term for train robbery, has escaped from the state convict farm. He filed his shackles and left with a fellow prisoner.

Bees Sting Farmer to Death.

Parkersburg, W. Va.—Drury B. Badgely, a wealthy farmer residing at Pleasant Hill, near Parkersburg, was attacked by a swarm of bees, which settled in his hair and beard and stung him to death.

NOTICE TO PUPILS AND PARENTS.

Again it seems necessary to urge upon all pupils to enroll early. A number who should have reported this week have failed to do so. By reporting before the opening of school as requested much time will be saved in securing books and getting started on school work.

Today Friday, the 16th and next week the pupils of the different grades should report as follows:

5th grade,	Friday,	Aug. 15	from 2 to 7 pm
4th "	Monday,	" 19	" 2 to 4 p.m.
3d "	Tuesday,	" 20	" 2 to 5 p. m.
2d "	Wednesday,	" 21	" 2 to 4 p. m.
1st "	Thursday,	" 22	" 2 to 4 p. m.
	Friday,	" 23	" 2 to 4 p. m.

In most cases it will be well for pupils of 1st and 2nd grades, especially beginners of 1st grade to be accompanied by a parent or an older pupil when reporting.

Sixth, 7th and 8th grade and high school pupils who have not yet enrolled should report tomorrow, (Saturday 17th) between the hours of 10 and 12 a. m.

Parents are urged to send all children who will enter school to report for enrollment according to the above schedule.

Vaccination should also be looked after at once. Children who are not now immune to small-pox should be vaccinated immediately so that they may have time for recovery from the resulting soreness before school opens. Those who have already been vaccinated should present their old certificates or procure new ones.

Prompt attention to all these matters will save much inconvenience later to all parties concerned, parents as well as teachers and pupils and will be very much appreciated.

Chas L. Schreck,
Principal.
