ORGANIZATION MEETING

County-Wide and Local Publicity Organization Perfected Monday Evening

EVERYTHING RUNNING NICELY

The special meeting called by the Chairman and Secretaries for organization of the Lincoln County Improvement Association met in Carrizozo at eight o'clock Monday evening, the meeting was called to order by Chairman pro tem. F. J. Sager, Secretaries pro tem. J. A. Haley and L. B. Chase being present.

The committee appointed at the former meeting to take charge of the Experimental Farm at Carrizozo composed of F. W. Gurney, J. D. Wilson and Chas. A. Stevens, reported fully on the work accomplished by the body and that $1600.50 had been subscribed for the maintainance of the Farm. Letters were embodied in the report from various sources and the report was accepted with thanks.

A letter received by a local party from the Department of Extension of Irrigation of the State Agricultural College was read to the meeting and outlined that $1000 would be subscribed through a certain bureau in Chicago providing certain conditions were adhered to.

The committee was authorized to continue its work to devise means of incorporation and to start the Experimental Farm in action.

The committee composed of Chairman Sager, Secretaries Haley and Chase, Messrs. Campbell, Ziegler, Rolland, Thurar and Taylor on County-wide organization reported the work that had been done by that committee and submitted a constitution for the approval of the meeting.

The committee's report was unanimously accepted and the Constitution as prepared was taken up section by section and also approved without change. The Constitution is printed elsewhere in this issue.

It was moved by Mr. Haley that a nominating committee of three be appointed by chair to report back to the meeting a list of officers for the association; motion seconded and carried, and Messrs. Campbell, Haley and Chase were appointed.

The committee reported back the following names who were unanimously elected to the respective offices.

1st V-President, John E. Bell
2d V-President, Eugene F. Jones, Oscuro
3d V-President, J. M. Holloway, Holloway, N. M.
Secretary, A. J. Rolland
Treasurer, F. W. Gurney.

Two members of the Executive Committee for delegates, Jas V. Tully, of Glencoe and Dr. G. Ranniger, Oscuro.

ROSWELL MAIL LINE

Bids have been asked for Auto Mail Line from Carrizozo to Roswell. Daily Service

SIXTEEN POSTOFFICES ON LINE

The proposition for a automobile mail line from Carrizozo to Roswell had been put upon definite lines this week when bids were asked for the carring of mails in daily service between the two points.

The Roswell Chamber of Commerce is agressively pushing the proposition and sent representatives over the proposed route this week. Messers Rockfellow and Farnworth arrived in Carrizozo last Saturday evening as the representatives of the Roswell Club and a meeting was called in a hurry at Harvey & Chase office to talk the matter over with the Roswell representatives. About twenty citizens turned out to the impromptu call and the people here talked the matter over extensively with the Roswell representatives and appointed a committee of three composed of Messers Gurney, Wilson and Haley to draw up petitions for the people to sign. These petitions were freely circulated and signed unanimously early in the week and addititional political endorsements for the proposition were secured. It is thought that it is quite likely that the automobile line will be established.

The route would pass through Nogal, Capitan, Fort Stanton, Lincoln, Hondo and Picacho and would distribute mail to Parsons, Angus, Alto, Richardson, Ruidosa, Glencoe, San Patricio and Arabela making in all Carrizozo and Roswell sixteen postoffices that would be greatly benefited by this great improvement in the service.

The only objection to over come in the Postoffice department is that the automobile service daily would be more expensive to the government than the old stage routes but it has been strongly pointed out and endorsed that the improved service would more than warrant this. This proposition would put all of Lincoln County practically together without long drawn out delays between mails. As it now is scheduled; letters leaving Carrizozo do not reach Lincoln until the following noon and at a much later time at all postoffices not on the main line. The auto service would provide for service to all postoffices the same day as mail left Carrizozo. The many advantages are too well known for us to go into detail and these have all been pointed out to the department in petitions from the various points along the line. These petitions were universally signed and a united effort is being made to impress upon the department the advantages of an automobile route from Carrizozo to Roswell.

COMISSIONERS MEET SATURDAY

The Board of County Commissioners will meet in special session Saturday the 30th on a hurriedly called meeting. The commissioners will take up the matter of the corrections of the error in the tax levy of the county for the year, the Board of Equalization having ordered several small changes to conform with the laws. Twenty-four out of the twenty-six counties in the state were corrected in the same manner.

MUCH BOOST SPIRIT

Lincoln County is Waking up to the Value of Telling the World of her Resources

ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING HELD

The boosting spirit seems to have come to stay with the citizens of Lincoln County and well it may.

Last Monday evening a called meeting of the new Lincoln County Development Association was held in Carrizozo with an enthusiastic turnout at the gathering. The meeting had little time for anything but business but all present seemed properly imbued with the spirit of 'pushing' and were keen to have the organization perfected along the lines planned.

Not as many of the outside communities were represented at this meeting as had been hoped for, but letters from many individuals explained that the people had not had sufficient time in which to organize and send delegates.

It was clearly explained at the meeting that the County-wide organization was solely for the purpose of boosting the resources of the entire county and that the local experimental project was merely a local proposition along the same line and was not directly under the county-wide association but wholly for the purpose of showing what can be done on this flat, in the agricultural line.

Agricultural resources, which are of course, very slightly developed, are not the only resources to be boosted by the county organization. Mining, manufacturing, water power, coal, stock raising, and in fact all industries are to share alike in the movement to show the outer world what Lincoln county can do and would do with a little more capital and more people.

The local experimental project, supported solely by the people of Carrizozo, is going forward by leaps and bounds. The subscription papers now show $1650.00 a year has been guaranteed and there are others yet to be seen The committee in charge of the work is planning to organize the farm under an incorporation plan. This will protect the subscribers and give the officers authority to transact business for the organization. The incorporation will put the scheme on a strictly business bases, which of course, is essential to its success.

All in all Lincoln County is healthy with the spirit of boosting, and if it will only remain until results can be accomplished there is no limit to the benefits to be gained

Frost on the ragweed is poetical enough for hay fever sufferers.

A Brooklyn judge decided that it was not cruel treatment for a wife to throw the breakfast dishes at her husband. He probably went on the well-known fact that a woman never hits anything at which she aims.

OFFERED AS A SUGGESTION

Various Ideas That May Be of Use to Those Who Intend Future Entertainments.

Broiled Birds—Small birds are exceedingly nice to broil. Dress, divide the birds in half, butter the gridiron (a double gridiron is best) and broil carefully so that both sides are a delicate brown; put on a hot platter, season with butter, salt and pepper and serve with buttered dry toast.

Smothered Birds—Prepare as for broiling Put in boiling water for 10 minutes, remove, arrange in baking pan and season highly with salt and pepper, putting a lump of butter on each bird; pour in the pan a little water, to which has been added enough vinegar to give it a slightly sour taste; dredge the whole lightly with flour; cover with another pan and bake until done.

Roast Wild Duck—Parboil with an onion in each to remove the fishy flavor; use a carrot unless there is to be onion in the dressing; stuff with dressing for mallard; roast until tender, basting at first with melted butter, and then with the gravy in the pan. Weaken the gravy with boiling water, thicken with brown flour and stir in one tablespoon of currant jelly. Serve separately.

Frogs—Skin and dress the frogs, removing the head and feet; wipe dry with a towel; roll in seasoned cracker or bread crumbs; fry in butter to a light brown.

Frog Legs—Scald the frog legs for just a moment, drain and dry; dust with salt and pepper, dip in beaten egg, then in rolled cracker crumbs, and fry quickly in hot oil.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

When sweeping a room open all windows and sweep toward the center of the room. This keeps dust from woodwork and walls.

To clean white and light colored plumes that are only slightly soiled gently rub them in a pan of equal parts of salt and flour.

When the tips of shoe laces pull off, twist the ends of the strings and dip into the glue bottle. When dry they are as good or better than when new.

Add a sliced banana to the white of one egg and beat until stiff. The banana will entirely dissolve, and you will have a delicious substitute for whipped cream.

To insure a good light from oil lamps wicks must be changed as often as they become clogged and do not permit a free passage of oil. Soaking wicks in vinegar twenty-four hours before placing them in lamps aids in getting a clear flame.

Sea Foam Candy.

A homemade candy that "melts in your mouth" is sea foam. It is not hard to make, nor is it expensive.

For sea foam candy cook three cupfuls of light brown sugar, a cupful of water and a tablespoonful of vinegar until the syrup forms a hard ball when dropped into cold water. Pour it slowly over the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, beating continually until the candy is stiff enough to hold its shape. Then work in half a cupful of chopped nuts and half a teaspoonful of vanilla. Drop in small pieces on waxed paper.

Ham and Egg Sandwiches.

Chop fine one cupful of cold boiled ham, put three fresh eggs into boiling water and let simmer one-half hour. Place them in cold water to remove the shells easily, chop fine and add to the ham. Season with a mustpoonful of dry mustard and a dash of cayenne pepper. Slice thin bread a day old, cut it in rounds with a biscuit cutter, spread with butter, then with the ham and eggs mixture, covering with another buttered round. The crusts and pieces of bread may be browned in a slow oven and rolled to be used for croquettes.

Raised Rolls.

Warm raised rolls may be placed on the luncheon table that were mixed in the morning; they may even be baked and cooled before serving Scald two cups of milk, add a level teaspoon of salt, three-quarters cup of butter and cool. When luke-warm add one whole yeast cake dissolved in a little cold water and flour enough to make a fairly stiff dough. Knead long and well, then cover and let rise very light. Mold and shape into rolls place in a buttered pan and let rise Bake in a rather hot oven.

Liver Dumplings.

One-half pound liver, two and one-half cups of bread crumbs, one onion, two eggs, two tablespoons flour, two tablespoons butter, salt, pepper and sage to taste. Chop liver very fine, taking pains to remove all the skin. Fry bread crumbs in the butter until brown, then remove from stove. Mix liver, bread crumbs, onion, salt, pepper, sage, flour and eggs together, then press into balls, using a little flour on the outside of them. Boil 40 minutes in beef soup.

GOOD JOKES

MADE A DIFFERENCE.

It was kit inspection and the different companies of the battalion were standing with their kits on the ground in front of them. The sergeant major was making the examination, when his eagle eye detected the absence of soap in the kit of Private Flinn, and he demanded what excuse the man had to give.

"Plaze, sor, it's all used," said Flinn.

"Used!" shouted the sergeant major. "Why, the first cake of soap I had served me for my kit lasted me three years, while you are not a year in the ranks yet. How do you account for that?"

Flinn's eye had the faintest suspicion of a twinkle as he replied:

"Plaze, sor, I wash every day."

And the sergeant major walked on, while the whole company grinned.—Tit-Bits.

Feminine Diplomacy.

"Yes, I finally got rid of him," she said, "without having to tell him in so many words that I never could learn to love him. I didn't want to do that, because he's an awfully nice fellow, and I should have been very sorry to cause him pain."

"How did you manage it?" her friend asked.

"Why, you see, he's subject to hay fever, so I decorated the house with golden rod whenever he sent word that he was coming."

SOME DIFFERENCE.

Mr. Saphead—I certainly admire an athletic girl.

Miss Fort—But you married just the opposite.

Mr. Saphead—Oh! I didn't say I'd marry an athletic girl.

Vindictive.

The comical boarder
Is fond of his joke;
His landlady hopes,
In her heart, he will choke.

At a Summer Resort.

"Really, we mustn't stand here talking like this. My husband may come along at any minute."

"Well, we can talk in some other way if he comes, can't we?"

"But he is jealous of you."

"Do you think he has any cause to be?"

"Oh, if that's the way you feel about it we may as well go into the casino."

He Begins to See.

"When I first hit town," remarked Farmer Hook, "I uster stand on a corner and wonder how all these city people managed to live."

"Well?"

"Well, seeing as they have got $38 out of me in four days, it ain't such a mystery after all."

Lack of Tact.

"Why did you jilt Percy?"

"He is lacking in tact."

"Why, I thought he always said nice things!"

"He does—but not always the right things. He was protesting his love yesterday when we passed an old woman. I saw my one and said:

"Will you love me when I get old and look like that woman?"

"'Of course I will, darling!' he cried.

"So I dismissed him. The idea of his consenting to think that I could ever get to look like that horrid old thing!"

Women are so particular.

Expensive.

"How often is your motor overhauled, Blake?" asked Dusenberry.

"Four times last month," said Blake.

"Four times in one month? Great Jerusalem! What for?" demanded Dusenberry.

"Speeding," said Blake. "Twice by the bicycle cops, once by a deputy sheriff and once by a plain, common, garden, village constable."—Judge.

POOR WOMAN.

Mrs. Wise—Well, there may be some things that a woman don't know.

Mr. Wise—Yes; but no man can tell her what they are.

The Point of View.

"This section is almost mountainous," remarked the pedestrian to his companion as they trudged along a country road one summer's day carrying heavy grips.

"Yes, it's a bit hilly," said the farmer a few minutes later as he drove his guest from the station in the big buckboard.

"Nice, rolling country, this," observed the automobilist to his chauffeur as they whizzed by in a big touring car.

"Gee, what a flat, uninteresting region," thought the aviator, looking down as he sailed over it in his majestic biplane.—Life.

Easy.

A New Yorker had occasion to 'phone from one suburb to another while visiting in a western city. Upon asking what the charge was, he was told 50 cents.

"Fifty cents! For that distance? Great Scott! In New York you can call hell up for 50 cents."

"Possibly," coolly answered the operator. "It's in the city limits."—Argonaut.

He'll Learn.

Minister—What a pity your brother is so depraved and idle. Have you any other brothers at home like him?

Billy—Oh, no; I've one brother who niver swears, niver drinks, niver plays cards, niver 'its me, niver steals, niver——

Minister—Oh, indeed?

Billy—Yes, an' he's only six months old.—Tit-Bits.

ON THE LINKS.

Evelyn—I just met Clarence. He is a conversational foozle.

George—How's that?

Evelyn—He makes love when he ought to play golf, and he talks golf when he ought to make love.

Objected to Plural.

"Does she pay very much for her hats?" she asked.

"Hats?" she retorted. "Why do you say 'hats' when you know as well as I do that one a year is the best she ever gets?"

All He Could Think Of.

Fisherman—Here comes another dead fish, Pat; the river's full of them. What's the meaning of it?

Pat—Sure, I cannot tell at all, sorr; unless it's this terrible fat and mouth disease.—Punch.

Name It!

"You will probably refuse to believe I'm telling the truth, but——"

"But what?"

"It is a fact that I recently picked up a magazine which didn't have an article on the Panama Canal."

Where From?

"Where did the girl come from who has such breezy manners?

"From the Windy City."

"And the one with such a mobile face?"

"From Alabama."

A Sick Man

R. B. Hartman, M. D.

Writes Dr. Hartman About Kidney Disease.

A gentleman writes me: "I was greatly interested in your article describing the Kauffman case of serious disease of the kidneys. The description of his case exactly outlines my condition. I am sure if Peruna cured him as you say, it would cure me also. I am losing flesh rapidly and the doctors say I have every symptom of Bright's disease of the kidneys. If you think I would be benefited by Peruna I will certainly try some as the doctors have practically given me up, the same as they did him."

In reply I wish to say, first, that I never make any promises as to what Peruna will cure. No physician can make positive statements of that sort. I can say this much, however, if I were in your place I should certainly give Peruna a trial. I know of no other remedy that would be so likely to be of use to you in your present condition as Peruna. Take a tablespoonful before each meal and at bedtime. Continue this for two or three weeks and then if there is anything you wish to ask me further write me and I will give your letter prompt attention.

If I find that the Peruna is not helping you I will be perfectly frank and tell you so, for I would not have you take Peruna unless it was really helping you. But it has rescued so many cases of kidney disease that I am quite confident you will find it exactly suited to your case.

Kidney disease begins with catarrh of the kidneys. Peruna is a catarrh remedy. Unless the destruction of the kidneys is already too great Peruna relieves the catarrh and the cause of the kidney disease is removed.

I shall anxiously await a report of your case. Remember, all letters are sacredly confidential. I never use any one's name or address without his written consent. My correspondence is absolutely private.

Pe-ru-na, Man-a-lin and La-xa-tiv manufactured by the Pe-ru-na Company, Columbus, Ohio. Sold at all drug stores.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Many persons inquire for The Old-time Peruna. They want the Peruna that their Fathers and Mothers used to take. The old Peruna is now called Katarno. If your druggist or dealer does not keep it for sale write the Katarno Company, Columbus, Ohio, and they will tell you all about it.

The CITY OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

COLONNADE THAT ENCIRCLED THE BROW OF THE HILL

THE GATE OF ANCIENT SAMARIA

"AND he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver and built on the hill and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria." So speaks the Hebrew chronicler of Omri, captain of the host, who began to reign over the little principality of Israel about the end of the tenth century B. C. His better-known successor Ahab, confirmed the new capital and built there a house to Baal of the Syrians. Samaria had this great advantage over the capital of Judah, that it lay on the main north and south road of Syria. If this situation caused it to be visited rather too often by passing invaders, it brought a more active commerce than Jerusalem ever enjoyed, and, when the Romans came to control Palestine, obtained for it, under the new name, Sebasteia, administrative superiority, and enrichment with the usual public architecture by which the remoter provincial chief places were externally Hellenised. But Sebasteia never attained to the second or third rank of Roman provincial cities, just as, before Roman times, Samaria had failed to become one of the great cities of Syria. The poverty of Palestine has always condemned even its chief settlements to comparatively mean estate. Harborless, rocky, thinly clad, possessing but one stream which is worthy the name of a river, and that sunk so deep below the general level as to be a curse rather than a blessing, the "Promised Land" could only have allured a people long condemned to the awful aridity of Sinai. Excavations in Palestine have always illustrated its poverty, and if it were not for the religious associations of its sites, they would probably never have attracted the spade of the western archaeologist at all. Compared with the products of excavation in any of the surrounding lands, in North Syria, Asia Minor, Cyprus, Crete, Egypt, or Mesopotamia, those found hitherto in Palestine are so rustic that if the "treasure" of either the first or second temple in Jerusalem were ever to come to light, one would expect it to fall far short of the traditional estimate of either its intrinsic or its artistic value. We commend this consideration to the ardent searchers in the Hill of Ophel, should they be permitted to resume their interrupted burrowings—though there is little enough chance that either they or anyone else will ever be in a position to reduce the Judean values of pious tradition to the hard facts of a sale at auction!

It is not likely, however, that Dr. Reisner has undertaken, on behalf of Harvard University, to excavate in Palestine under any illusions of this kind. Having long dug in Egypt, on the rich sites of a great civilization, he is now clearing Samaria for the good and sufficient reason that new light on the history of the Hebrew monarchies (whose importance bears no relation whatever to their scale) is to be expected most confidently from the sites of their capitals. Samaria is a favorable spot for such scientific investigation; for although it can claim nothing like the antiquity of Jerusalem, its site is not, as is the latter's, overbuilt with a modern city, which has disturbed its stratification with intrusive foundations, appropriated its stones, and rendered many parts inaccessible. Modern Samaria lies on a small portion only of the hill which Omri bought, and the rest is occupied by gardens, orchards and fields. The extant remains are, of course, for the most part, those, not of Ahab's Samaria, but of Herod's Sebasteia; but below these, at various points, Greek and pre-Greek strata have been found going down to virgin rock. So far as the excavations have proceeded up to now, they confirm the inference, which would naturally be drawn from the Biblical chronicle, that the hill Samaria was a vacant site before Omri's time. Dr. Reisner has found ruins of a considerable structure of good masonry bedded on the rock itself, and preserved in places to the height of several feet, and this he identifies with the Palac of Omri and Ahab. Within its area occurred the four-score inkwritten potsherds—so-called ostraka—about which a good deal has been heard. They are not, as it turns out, documents which convey any historical information, but just labels or tallies of wine and oil stores, which mention no king's name, and contain no indication of their date except so far as this may be inferred from their handwriting. The script is Hebrew of an early sort, hardly distinguishable from Phoenician, and nearly related to the epigraphic character used for the Siloam Inscription in the age of Hezekiah. Even if they are no part of the archives of Omri or Ahab (as they were once reported to be), and even if the building, in which they were found, is not the palace of those kings (its severely undecorated and unfurnished character raises a doubt), they constitute a find of very great interest to Semitic scholars.

Very little else of the pre-captivity time seems to have rewarded Dr. Reisner, but it is not safe to say this certainly until he has said it himself. He is a seasoned digger, not at all given to advertising his successes. uBt of one thing we can be sure—whatever there was in the ground which he has dug over, he will have found. No one engaged in the digging trade has a sounder method than he or devotes himself more whole-heartedly to putting his method into practice. In the meantime, the photographs of the American colony at Jerusalem, which are published herewith, can show us the remains of Roman Sebasteia, which overlay Samaria—for instance, the ruined colonnade of monolithic pillars which ran round the crest of the hill from the gate to the Forum; the broad stairway which led down from the summit to the altar of Roma Dea; and the Basilica. The singular interest of the place, however, is lost by Herod's time, and unless Dr. Reisner can promise more light on Ahab and Omri, we hope, for our part, that he will transfer his energy and experience to some other site. If underground Jerusalem cannot be adequately explored, a Philistine or a Phoenician city would probably repay excavation more than any of the Hebrew cities.

SPIDER A FRIEND OF MANKIND

Really Undeserving of the Enmity That Is Felt Toward Him by the Average Housewife.

Aside from snakes, there is probably no living thing which can look to mankind for friendship with so little hope as the spider, yet when the spider is fairly brought to trial it is rather hard to prove anything against him except his appearance and a few cobwebs. Apart from furnishing an example of industry and patience from which we might well profit, the spider feeds exclusively upon freshly killed insects, all of them being of the kind denounced by sanitary authorities, the house fly being its favorite quarry. As the actual destruction of a few hundred house flies means that several hundred thousand that would otherwise have spent gay lives transmitting typhoid and other diseases will not come into existence, and as almost any spider should be able to account for as many as three hundred in the course of a summer, to say nothing of stray mosquitoes and black gnats, we surely owe him something more than a slap with a slipper when we happen to catch him out of his hole. A spider can bite, of course, but he seldom does except in self-defense, and even then the bite is not worse than would have been received from any one of the several hundred mosquitoes he has probably dined upon, or will, if let alone. In the light of present scientific knowledge, the story of the spider and the fly that was invited into the pretty parlor does not cause such a surge of sympathy for the fly as it once did.—Harper's Weekly.

Futility of a Visit to Lang.

They were telling stories of the late Andrew Lang in one of the London clubs the other night.

One man told a story of a dinner invitation given by Mr. Lang. He was staying in Marlowes Road, Earl's Court, a street away at the end of that long Cromwell road, which seems to go on forever. The guest was not very sure how to get to Marlowes Road, and Lang very kindly explained.

"Walk right along Cromwell Road," he said, "till you drop dead, and my house is just opposite!"

BACKACHE "GETS ON THE NERVES"

Many who suffer from backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable, fretful and nervous. Not only does constant backache "get on the nerves", but bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, and uric acid irritates the nerves, keeping you "on edge" and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains. Doan's Kidney Pills cure these ills by curing the kidneys. Here's proof:

A California Case:

Mrs. E. Walsh, 1846 Tenth Avenue, San Francisco, Cal. says: "I had such sharp, shooting pains through my kidneys it seemed that a knife were being thrust into me. My back was so lame I could hardly stoop. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me after doctors failed. I have had no trouble since."

England's Motto.

"Dieu et Mon Droit"—God and My Right"—the royal motto of England, was the parole of the day given by Richard I. (he of the Lion Heart) to his army at the battle of Gisors, in France, on the 20th of September, 1198, when the French army was signally defeated. Dieu et Mon Droit appears to have been first assumed as a motto by Henry VI., 1422-1462. Semper Idem—"Always the Same"—was one of the mottoes of Queen Elizabeth; also adopted by Queens Mary and Anne.

"PROUD AND GLAD"

Because Mother Looked So Well After Quitting Coffee.

An Ohio woman was almost distracted with coffee dyspepsia and heart trouble.

Like thousands of others, the drug —caffeine—in coffee was slowly but steadily undermining her nervous system and interfering with natural digestion of food. (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the poisonous drug found in coffee.)

"For 30 years," she writes, "I have used coffee. Have always been sickly—had heart trouble and dyspepsia with ulcers in stomach and mouth so bad, sometimes, I was almost distracted and could hardly eat a thing for a week.

"I could not sleep for nervousness, and when I would lie down at night I'd belch up coffee and my heart would trouble me. It was like poison to me. I was thin—only weighed 125 lbs., when I quit coffee and began to use Postum.

"From the first day that belching and burning in my stomach stopped. I could sleep as soundly as anyone and, after the first month, whenever I met any friends they would ask me what was making me so fleshy and looking so well.

"Sometimes, before I could answer quick enough, one of the children or my husband would say, 'Why, that is what Postum is doing for her'—they were all so proud and glad.

"When I recommend it to anyone I always tell them to follow directions in making Postum, as it is not good to taste if weak, but fine when it has the flavor and rich brown color." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Human Nature.

Socrates used to say, that if any crier made proclamation in the theatre, "Stand up cobblers!" "Stand up, weavers!" etc., only those named would do so; but if "stand up, men of sense!" were the order, not one would remain sitting. The most damaging mistake in life, he added, is this, that the majority are fools, and yet believe themselves to be wise."

The Frogs and the Bulls.

A frog one day sitting at the edge of a pond, saw two bulls fighting in a meadow. He cried to his companion:

"Look at that dreadful fight! What will become of us?"

"Do not frighten yourself," replied the other. "How can their quarrels affect us? They are quite different from us in every way."

"Perhaps," said the first frog, "their life is different from ours; but, as one of them will certainly get the better of the other, he who is beaten will take refuge here in the marshes and perhaps tread upon some of us. You see, therefore, we are more concerned in their quarrel than you think."

When the rich quarrel the poor are usually the greatest sufferers.

As He Understod It.

A young Canadian came to Washington last winter and was making a social call upon a very pretty young woman whom he met for the first time.

"Do you have reindeer in Canada?" asked the young lady.

"No, darling," he answered, "at this season it always snows."

The Minister's Usefulness.

Among the members of a fashionable country club of Washington are a doctor and a minister, who delight in the exchange of repartee touching their respective professions.

As they met one day, the minister observed that he was "going to read to old Cunningham," adding (as he was aware that the old man was a patient of his friend, the doctor), "Is he much worse?"

With the gravest of expressions, the physician replied:

"He needs your help more than mine."

Off his guard, the minister exclaimed anxiously: "Poor fellow! Is it as bad as that?"

"Yes, he is suffering from insomnia."

THE INITIAL "M"

Romance in a Lady's Shopping Bag.

By BRYANT Z. C. ROGERS.

"And as for Royal being in love," had the widow Rexford, to the caller, "it is not true, though I wish it were. I should dearly love to know that he was settled down in his own home."

"But he is not a cynic?"

"Oh, dear, no. It is just that—that—well I can hardly explain. He wants rousing up, as it were. Admiring, courtship and marriage seem proxy events to him. There will have to be adventure with his falling in love."

Royal Rexford, only son of the widow, had reached the age of twenty-four without ever having fallen in love. It couldn't even be said that he had flirted. He could waltz and play bridge and render himself agreeable at "afternoons" and week-ends, but it stopped there. He didn't favor woman suffrage, and he didn't say a word against it. It was just that he was not interested beyond a mild and pardonable curiosity. His intimates often wondered what would arouse his emotions, but they had waited in vain.

On a certain afternoon Mr. Rexford left New York for Hartford. He was neither elated nor cast down. He didn't care whether he went or stayed. He didn't care whether he went beyond Fall River or got off there. Every chair in the car was taken, but he didn't care to size up his fellow-passengers. In an indifferent sort of way he acquired the knowledge that there were three or four young ladies among the travelers, but what of it? There were also ladies and fat men and lean men.

Mr. Rexford passed most of the time in reading. When he reached journey's end he was in no rush to leave the car. It thereby happened that he was the last one out, and as he passed down the aisle he saw a shopping-bag reposing in one of the chairs. They have been left behind hundreds of times by hundreds of women. According to rule and law and several other things, Mr. Rexford should have passed on and left the porter to find the bag and turn it in to the lost property office. If not that, then he should have turned it in himself.

But Mr. Rexford didn't do any such thing. The sight of that bag with its silver "M" on the side aroused a faint interest in his breast. It seemed to say to him: "Please take care of me," and he walked out of the depot with the bag cuddled up under his arm. He expected to meet the loser any minute, but she did not return. The treasure went with the finder to a hotel for the night, and reached New York with him the next day.

Most persons would have opened that bag within an hour, but Mr. Rexford didn't. He waited until his return, and then he only took a peek—just enough to discover a roll of false hair and a powder-puff. There were other things further down, but he kept hands off.

Mr. Rexford had not intended to appropriate anything. What he meant to do was to find the owner, but in his own way. That way was by advertisement in the papers and when it came out it read:

"Found, on the Hartford train, on the 15th, a ladies' shopping bag bearing the initial 'M.' Address Box 42."

The brief advertisement was placed in four papers, and the loser would be almost certain to see it. She did see it. She lived just outside of Hartford, and would be greatly obliged, and so forth.

Mr. Rexford didn't follow the usual mode of procedure in such cases. He was not a bit curious, but with that bag nicely wrapped up in scented paper he made his way back to Hartford and to the surburb where was located the home of the loser. It was so kind of him, said the spinster of forty, and it was so careless of her. Her name was Morgan, and that accounted for the initial. Excuse her for a moment, please. Miss Morgan left the room to inspect the bag, and when she returned she fairly threw it at Mr. Rexford's head along with the exclamation:

"Sir, you are no gentleman!"

"What—what is it?"

"I repeat it, sir, and if my brother were here you would have to pay for this insult!"

"He is here, sister!" replied a deep voice from the front hall, and in walked a man looking for trouble.

"Really, I don't understand," said Mr. Rexford.

"Then take time out on the corner to think it over," answered the brother; and he threw the caller out doors and the bag after him.

There was a mistake somewhere, and Mr. Rexford began to feel the emotion of curiosity. There was no mistake about his having landed in a heap at the foot of the steps, but why should Miss Morgan's bag have followed him? He had come all the way from New York to restore it; and now she would not have it. It was no use to ring the bell and ask for explanations. The brother lingered in the hall and had his coat off. Mr. Rexford did the right thing by returning to New York and discovering another letter in answer to his ad. This answer was from a Miss Merritt, and lo! she also lived near Hartford and was entitled to use the initial "M." He would think her a very careless girl, and she would admit she was, but as an offset wasn't it simply beautiful to discover that there were a few honest people still left in the world? Regretting the trouble she would put him to, and thanking him a million times in advance, he might express the bag to——and so forth.

Many men would have done so and said the matter could go hang, but Mr. Rexford didn't. A faint sniff of romance was in the air. He was aware of emotions to which he had heretofore been a total stranger. Back he went to Hartford. It was eight o'clock in the evening when he gazed into Miss Merritt's eyes and wondered whether she was fifty-five or sixty.

Simpers and so glads! So sorry he had gone to all the trouble he had. She was sure that he was one man out of a thousand. She had read of such gallant actions in books, but never expected to meet the hero of them. She had hesitated to write him, not knowing but he might be a confidence man, or want a missive from her to levy blackmail. She now saw that she had wronged him and must beg his pardon a million times over. Once she had written a letter to a man about investing in silver mine stock, and in her ignorance of the wiles of the world she had poured out her heart so effusively that it had cost her $300 to get her letter back. It was because of this sad experience that she had written so formally to Mr. Rexford. Now that they had met and he had seen her and she had seen him, she was sure he would forgive.

Yes, Mr. Rexford would forgive. He would even praise her maidenly discretion, but was that her shopping bag? Shopping bags with the initial "M" on them were so numerous that a mistake was easily made.

Oh, there was not a doubt in the world about ownership. That bag had called up too many sad thoughts for her to be mistaken in it. It had been a gift from a dear friend—a very dear friend. Indeed, she was not ashamed to admit that she and that very dear friend had been betrothed only the week before he had been run down by an auto. Yes, she had loved and lost, but——.

"Will you please make sure of the bag, Miss Merritt?"

She opened it and plunged in her hand and then stood up and shouted:

"You bold, bad man!"

"What is it?"

"Here—take it—go! I was right in thinking you a scoundrel of the blackest dye. Oh, if I were only a man!"

When Mr. Rexford got back to New York he had the bag with him, and he found a third letter awaiting him. The bag, so the writer said, was carelessly left behind when she left the train at Hartford, and she would be only too happy to pay any costs and get her property back.

Mr. Rexford started on his third journey. He was sure of the curiosity and romance now. He found Miss Merriweather at home. He found her petite and amiable. Almost her first greeting was a laugh as she said:

"The whole family will feel relieved now."

"Sure it's yours?"

"Of course. Here's some false hair for sister—a bottle of hair-dye for mother—a pipe and tobacco for father—a jimping-jack for bub, and—"

"My card tells you that I am Mr. Royal Rexford, of New York."

"Yes."

"And I want to—to——"

"You want to see father?"

"No—er—nor. That is not just now but soon!"

Miss Merriweather puzzled a moment and then the blushes came. She didn't exactly know what she was blushing for, but she keeps it up as often as Mr. Rexford lands in Hartford, and that is once a week. And his mother has had to explain to several friends:

"Oh, yes, there can be romance in a lady's shopping bag as well as in saving a maid from drowning."

Season on One Golf Ball.

To the ordinary golf enthusiast whose expenses for lost balls are usually the chief items unless he be a liberal patron of caddies or the club veranda, the feat of a member of the New York Newspaper Golf club may seem miraculous. This man began playing at Van Cortlandt park as soon as the grounds were opened last May, and he started the season with three balls. One of them was immediately "borrowed" by a friend. The second was stolen the next day by a prowling youth, who made off before the owner could recover his property. This left the golfer with one ball. Although he never failed to play at least five days a week since May 15, this man still has the identical ball with which he began the season and with which he has done all his playing so far. As a result of careful playing the ball is not "sliced" or stacked, and a good wash every two days and a coat of white enamel make the veteran piece of gutta percha look like new.

MAY PROLONG LIFE

Dr. Metchnikoff, Colaborer of Pasteur, Is Praised.

Humble Toiler in Field of Science Has Made Discovery Arousing Intense Interest—Took Serum From Dog.

Paris, France.—The hero of today in Paris is Dr. Elie Metchnikoff. His name is upon every tongue. Stimulated by his discoveries, Parisians, male and female, all have a vague hope of living to be as old as Methuselah.

Since Metchnikoff presented the result of his investigations on longevity to the Academy of Sciences his glory has increased tenfold. So also has respect for man's faithful friend, the dog. For the serum which is to revolutionize our length of days comes from the dog. This lionized, gold spectacled, long haired, grizzly bearded, unkempt man has forced his name into every study and every salon.

The name of professor still clings to him since those distant days when he taught biology in the University of Odessa. About 30 years ago he took up the study of medicine, particularly that part of it to which biology naturally led up. He came to Paris in 1888, or 24 years ago. Since that time he has been connected with the Pasteur institute, the immortal founder of which took him at once to his bosom.

For Pasteur had already read and admired the works of the learned Russian. Pasteur paid this savant the small salary of $500 a year. But we must remember, says a Paris letter to the St. Louis Republic, that the world famed institute which has grown to be a mighty force was then buly such a tiny concern that Dr. Metchnikoff declined for a time to accept even the pittance which Pasteur could ill afford to pay.

Only since 1910, when a legacy left by the philanthropist Osiris—the same who gave the Chateau de Malmaison to France—came into operation, has Metchnikoff begun to receive a salary of $3,000 a year. He was then, and is now, assistant manager of the Pasteur institute.

As vice president Metchnikoff's habits are of the simplest; he can afford to spend what he earns on philanthropic causes. His clothes cost a minimum.

During the day, while occupied in his laboratory at the Pasteur institute, he wears overalls. When he sallies forth to go home he is dressed in a shiny black coat, which at its best did not cost more than $10.

Metchnikoff's publications have raised a tempest on the other side of the Rhine. German science seems to have formed a coalition against them. In France his triumph is complete and Frenchmen, respecting the laws of hospitality, pay tribute to him.

HUGS AND KISSES POLICEMAN

With Appellation, "Oh, You Big Bear With the Brass Buttons," Gotham Woman Is Jailed.

New York.—A new form of torture for policemen, more sinister than graft investigations, more painful than winter wind whipping around a fixed post, and possessed of possibilities as deadly as the burglar's bullet, was put to the test on placid Washington court by a red-faced young policeman.

Facing the victim — Policeman Geiger of the West One Hundred and Fifty-second street station—as he told Magistrate House about it, was a handsome dark-haired woman who frequently blushed and murmured "Impossible! Oh, I couldn't have done that!"

"Yes, your honor, she kissed me," stammered Geiger. "Right out in the middle of Amsterdam avenue, at One Hundred and Fortieth street she kissed me, and there's nothing in the manual that says part of a policeman's duty is being kissed by strangers."

"Couldn't you have escaped if you didn't like it?" asked the court.

"I was on fixed post," your honor, groaned the youthful guardian of the peace.

"Oh," said his honor, "that's devotion to duty!"

"Yes, sir; it was like this: I was standing there all alone about 1:30, wondering where all the people were. Suddenly some one grabs me from behind and two strong arms are wrapped around my neck. The first thing I thought, of course, was 'gangsters!' It seemed whoever it was was trying to garrote me, and I started to fight for my life.

"But I couldn't shake off those powerful arms. The best I could do was to squirm around so that I faced the—the—er—the assailant. And, your honor, it was this lady.

"'Oh, honey, dear!' she says.

"'What do you mean by using such language to me?' I asks her.

"Then she kisses me, and that's not the worst of it, for by this time a big crowd had collected and women were yelling and men shouting: 'You brute, release that woman!' I pleaded with her to go home, but she wouldn't do anything but stay right there and kiss me. Then the man on the beat came around and rescued me. So I arrested her for—well, I couldn't think of anything to call it but extreme disorderly conduct."

Mrs. Margaret Hoeflatt, who said she was thirty and lived at 1071 Freeman street, the Bronx, smiled sweetly but incredulously as she paid a $10 fine. She said Geiger looked like a truthful young officer and she wouldn't dispute his word, though she didn't remember a thing about it.

ELECTRIC SLEEP IS LATEST

Doctor Turns Slumber On or Off by Button; Eliminates All Sense of Pain.

Berlin.—Electric sleep, which may be turned on and off at will, is the alluring prospect offered to people suffering from insomnia by Dr. Nagelschmidt. He asserts that he has devised a new form of electric current which, when applied to the base of the brain, will produce a narcotic effect, able to be maintained as long as is desired. It has been tried with the greatest success and without any injurious effects on dogs and rabbits. Dr. Nagleschmidt is convinced that it can be equally well applied to human beings. The application of the current also eliminates pain from any part of the body.

BRIDE USES WATER BOTTLE

Mrs. Silversvard Complains to Court That Her Recently Acquired Husband is Shy on Affection.

New York.—Mrs. Elizabeth Challinger Silversvard, who admits she is at least sixty years old and worth $20,000, and who lives at 1924 Webster avenue, sat on a hot water bottle in the Morrisania court while her husband, John Fabisk Silversvard, grandson of a Swedish count, told the magistrate the troubled story of their married life.

He had to marry, said the grandson of the count, in order to have his fare paid from Princes Bay, Staten Island, back to his home in the Bronx, otherwise he would have had to walk. The first day after his marriage he had to do a week's wash in the home of the coy bride, and then she bought him a suit of livery and made him play coachman on the box of her cute little surrey.

Mrs. Silversvard became so excited during the recital of her husband's marital woes that she sent the hot water bottle three times to a barber shop to be renewed. She confessed to the court that she had to sit on the hot water bottle to keep the evil spirits away.

The elderly bride of a few months appeared to answer a summons served on her at her husband's behest. He had sworn that when he tried to run away from his wife a week ago and live somewhere else where there would be no week's washing, she had locked up all of his clothes except what he stood in. All he wanted was to get his remaining wardrobe.

Then the magistrate heard the other side of the story. Mrs. Silversvard declared he had not been a true husband. "He has never given me the caresses a wife should receive from her husband," she said.

The couple left the courtroom together.

OLDEST IMAGE OF A CAMEL

Interesting Discovery by Dr. Hogarth in Ruins of Ancient Hittite City.

Berlin.—What is believed to be the oldest image of a camel has been discovered by Dr. Hogarth in excavating the ruins of Karchemisch, an ancient Hittite city.

He also found the image of a Hittite thunder god, the body of a scorpion, the feet of a bull and the wings of an eagle. He also uncovered the walls of a quay at the foot of a hill on which a citadel stood. The walls were covered with strangely wrought reliefs.

Tunnel to Protect Senators.

Washington.—To save senators from getting their tootsies damp on wet days, a seven-hundred-foot tunnel railroad of the monorail type is being installed from the capitol to the senate building. There's only one car, designed to carry twelve senators.

Some men would rather run for office than earn a decent living.

LINCOLN COUNTY NOTES

WHITE OAKS WHIFFS

The school will close Thursday and Friday for the holiday.

The young men of White Oaks announce a grand ball at the hall Thursday evening, presumably to settle dinners to be eaten during the day. Perhaps there is also enjoyment to be found in the pastime.

Miss Nicholas of the primary department of White Oaks school had a program for Tuesday of a two-fold purpose; to celebrate Turkey Day and incidentally assist the association that is doing so much for orphan children in N. M.

Dr. Walker of Carrizozo was called to White Oaks on account of the serious illness of Mrs. Samuel Kelsey, and thanks to his efficient services Mrs. Kelsey is recovering in a most satisfactory manner.

Mrs. Lalone who has been ailing for some time, met with a very serious accident last Saturday. A severe attack of pain seized her as she was passing from a chair to the bed, causing her to fall, and in so doing she had the misfortune to break one of her limbs just below the right hip. Dr. Walker came up and set the broken member. Mrs. Lalone is sixty-five years old, which of course, makes the accident of a more serious nature

We read with bewilderment of the numerous tragedies reported from various points where game and would-be hunters abound, and now let us see what White Oaks can scare up in that line. It wouldn't do to mention names, but three distinguished citizens, including an ex-liveryman, a boss of a coal mine and one who has recently entered the mercantile business, while returning from a hunting trip were during the night suddenly awakened by the gale that so nearly demolished our useful county courthouse.. Imagine the camp fire still burning and the beds of repose on the side toward which the windblateth and you can guess the story; beds burned, whiskers singed and ears scorched.

Mr. Wayne Van Schoyck has purchased the stock of merchandise formerly owened by Treat & Kelt. He will conduct the old stand.

REPORT FROM THE NEW MEXICO STATE CONVENTION

After the organization at Clovis in June into one body of the two Baptist bodies working in New Mexico (one assisted by the Northern and the other by the Southern Board,) the first gathering took place at Alamogordo last week, where messengers came from churches in all parts of the State. The representation was gratifying, notwithstanding the great Texas Convention met at the same time which meant that all the speakers at Alamogordo were from within the bounds of our own state. Seven years ago when the old Convention met at Alamogordo the were 1500 Baptist in the State; the statistics show that now there are over 5000. Then 5 churches were represented at the Convention; this time messengers came from 25 churches. Then there was a feeling and effort for two organizations, now a feeling of Unanimity exists; then a small number of converts and additions were reported, now that number has quadrupled. All this proves that in the right sort of united effort, or in true union, there is strength, and good results.

The messengers appreciated a visit to the Institude for the Blind, and the President of the Convention, H. F. Vermillion, of Las Cruces, assured the Superintendent of loyal support and full co-operation from the Baptists of New Mexico

Besides the good spirit that prevailed among the messengers perhaps the most touching scene was the faithful and truly sacrificial attitude of the missionary Pastors toward two great debts hanging over from the two old conventions, on which, in the sum of more than $1000, was wiped out almost entirely by the Pastors and Missionaries themselves.

There are only a few Baptist churches in New Mexico that do not receive some help either from the State Convention or from the Southern Baptist Convention, or both; and while several offices were dispensed with and no new ones created, yet the plans and the outlook for the coming year is good, and spells earnest effort for God and humanity in this fair State; a good asset to any community.

The Carrizozo messengers derived great benefit from the Convention, but think that Clovis is not quite the best place in which to live, even if the wind does blow in Carrizozo.

Pastor Herbert, Haywood.

Warm Floors Insure the Children's Health

Cole's Hot Blast Draft on top of the fire burns the coal from the top—burns the gas, which is wasted with all other stoves.

The force of this down draft forces the heat to the base which is made of steel—cannot burn out—and heats the floor.

Thousands of testimonials have been written regarding the base heating qualities of

Cole's Original Hot Blast Heater

The ideal heating stove is one which radiates all the heat thrown off from the fire—into the rooms—instead of letting it go up the chimney.

The durable heater is the one which will withstand the severe use, year after year, which a heating stove is necessarily subjected to. Sheet steel is the quickest radiator of heat and is used as radiating surface only in Cole's Hot Blast heater. Wherever the fuel comes in contact with the linings—only first quality gray cast iron is used.

Cast iron withstands the wear of the heat from active combustion better than any other material, and the large, sensitive, sheet metal body and base radiate all the heat into the rooms.

Burns Soft Coal, Slack, Lignite, Hard Coal, Wood and lighter fuel.

GUEST OF TROOPS

How Soldier's Sweetheart Saved His Life.

By HAROLD CARTER.

"Impossible!" shouted old Colonel Saunders, chewing at his steel-gray mustache; and for the first time during forty years of active service he actually trembled. The horror of this was more overpowering than the hiss of the Moro bolos when, drunk with bhang, they closed in upon the skirmish line. "Impossible!" he muttered, and sank back into his chair.

Outside the hot sun of the Philippines burned the parched land, sending its scorching rays into the white-washed house in which he sat. Upon the table in front of him his orderly had placed a closely-typed document of five pages. It was the findings of the court-martial which had sat on the preceding day. It had passed sentence of death upon a certain William Gilfoy for having joined the Moro forces and fired upon his former comrades. If Colonel Saunders affixed his signature to the document the death sentence would be carried out—not a year hence, nor a month hence, nor a day hence, but now.

There was death in the quiet air, in the hushed expectancy of the camp; in the rows of white-washed cells in the barracks also, and in the barrack yard, where a grim post, like an enormous carpenter's square set upright, creaked as the executioner tested the mechanism of the trap.

"His sweetheart!" muttered the colonel again. "I can't see her—I won't see her, Walters. Tell her——"

"May I come in?" inquired a gentle voice outside, and a girl entered—a typical American girl, such as is to be met in thousands in the little towns and villages of the New England states. She might have been twenty-five; her face had lost the sweet immaturity of youth and had been replaced by that gentle and half maternal look that is to be seen sometimes on the faces of good women.

"I am Miss King," she said, smiling happily at Colonel Saunders. "I suppose William has told you that—that we are to be married here, now that his term has ended." A slight blush

"May I Come In?"

suffused her face. "But they told me in the barracks that Mr. Gilfoy had gone to Manila to meet me there," she said. "It seems a dreadful mistake, doesn't it?"

Inwardly the colonel blessed the forethought of his men. But he might have known that there was not one man under his command who would have told her—he might as well have killed her.

"But I am so glad that he has served his country with honor, and has come safely through these terrible dangers," Miss King continued. "He was—well, a little wild. But he has redeemed himself, as I knew he would. Congressman Lathrop—" she hesitated. Then, seeing the colonel's look, and mistaking it, she continued:

"He told my father that William would be safe under your care, Colonel Saunders. That is what everyone says about you at home. They call you"—she hesitated—"well, the 'Father of the Regiment.'"

In the brief moment that elapsed before he answered her a thousand thoughts rushed through the colonel's brain. A minute ago he had actually dipped his pen into the ink preparatory to signing the death warrant. Now the act seemed impossible. He thought of Gilfoy—he had been wild, but a good and brave soldier, conspicuous in many engagements until the devil of loneliness that was eating out his heart summoned the drink devil to his aid and the two together addled the boy's brains until he turned traitor and disgraced the regiment and his country. And Gilfoy, crazy from the villainous native potations, had been like a man in a nightmare; he had remembered nothing from the day he deserted until he was captured, firing his rifle wildly into the air, alone in the deserted hut.

He might have saved him by a few kindly words. Instead he had committed him to the punishment cells for his first offenses, had bullied him, disciplined him, let him go to perdition—he, the "Father of the Regiment."

"Excuse me, Miss King," he said abruptly. "Pray be seated. I will be back in a few minutes." And he strode away under the blazing sun in the direction of the barracks.

Inside the yard the executioner was still fumbling with the trap, over which a dummy hung suspended, a hideous bound thing of a man's weight, dangling grotesquely from the cord. The colonel turned his eyes away.

Inside his cell William Gilfoy was seated beside his cot, staring vacantly through the bars at a wisp of blue. When the colonel entered he started as a man awakening out of a dream. The colonel sat down beside him upon the plank bed.

"Gilfoy," he said quietly, "your sweetheart is here."

Gilfoy looked hard at him.

"She hasn't been told?" he said impassively.

"Not yet, Gilfoy."

The boy smiled bravely. "I think it would be best to have it done as soon as possible," he said. "But, sir—must she know?"

"She shall never know," answered the colonel. Then he bent forward and took the boy's hand in his.

"Gilfoy," he said, "you have taken no life. It was not you who betrayed your country—it was your devil, your own personal, private devil, the one who lies in wait for each man to trap him when he revolts against the dominance of his better nature. A cavalry troop leaves for Santos this evening. You will accompany it and there take the train for Manila."

Gilfoy half rose, and suddenly sat down again and burst into tears.

"I ought to die," he sobbed. "She will never—"

"She will never know anything," the colonel answered, completing the sentence. He called to the jailer.

"Private Gilfoy is pardoned," he said. "Bring him his uniform and set him free."

"Yes, Miss King, you will have to go back to Manila," said Colonel Saunders five minutes later. "If we had known you were coming—well, we might have made different arrangements. There will be a cavalry troop leaving for Santos, the terminal, tomorrow afternoon. Till then you must be the guest of the regiment."

He passed his hand over his eyes, and, suddenly seizing his pen, he scrawled "Verdict disapproved" across the paper. He looked up. "Tell Congressman Lathrop that I shall try to live up to my reputation henceforward," he continued.

TRANSLATION A HARD MATTER

Few Make Success of Work, but There Are One or Two Instances Quite Recently Brought to Light.

Reading Shakespeare in a foreign language is generally a weird experience not without its amusing side. It matters little what language one selects, for Shakespeare has been translated into all of them, and the translations are in all grades of badness, Arthur Bennington writes in the North American Review. Similarly a Frenchman reading Corneille in English is moved to laughter or tears, and an Italian reading Dante in English scarcely recognizes the divine poet.

Good translations are rare. For a faithful rendering of mere words much thought, backed by intimate knowledge of the subtle shades of meaning of the words of both languages is a primary requisite. But more than words are to be translated; thoughts, spirit, atmosphere, art, are more important than words. And it is in this that most translators are an exemplification of the old Italian epigram, traduttore, traditore.

This is not to say that every translator is a traitor. Among the cases in the desert are one or two of the more recent translations of Shakespeare. Continental Europe—Germany excepted—is really only just beginning to know Shakespeare as we know him. Italy is ringing with praises of Diego Angeli's version, of which four volumes—"The Tempest," "Julius Caesar," "Hamlet" and "Macbeth"—have already appeared. France was thrilled two years ago by Maeterlinck's translation of "Macbeth" and applauded De Gramont's "Julius Caesar" in 1906.

Willing Panhandler.

Archbishop Ryan, of Philadelphia, was accosted one day by a drunken panhandler, who asked for a dime. The archbishop gave him the dime and said: "My friend, don't you think it would be possible for you to walk in the straight and narrow path?" The panhandler straightened up. "What? me?" he asked. "Show it to me. I used to be a tight-rope walker."—Saturday Evening Post.

DOES AWAY WITH KNEADING

Old Bread-Making Recipe Surely a Labor-Saver and Possibly Worth a Trial.

Bread making without kneading seems somewhat of a novelty, but this recipe is over fifty years old, and comes from the housekeeping book of an old lady who was a noted cook. The recipe is called "Aunt Mary's Bread," and runs as follows:

Take one quart of milk and water, half of each (blood warm); two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, one tablespoonful each of butter and sweet pure lard, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cake of compressed yeast and enough twice sifted flour to make a soft, smooth dough.

Rub the butter and lard into the flour. Sift in the sugar and salt. Dissolve the yeast in a little water from the one quart and add. Begin with a small amount of flour, and mixing with a spoon, and beating thoroughly, gradually add more flour, until it is dry enough just not to stick to the pan. Do not touch it with your hands. When dry enough, set it to rise in a warm place.

The next morning, or when it is sufficiently risen, take it up on your floured hands, touching lightly and gently, just enough to mold it into loaves, and put it in pans to rise again from about fifteen minutes to half an hour. When it begins to blister put into a moderate oven.

This will make to medium size loaves that will out as smooth as cake. If it browns too rapidly, cover with paper, to prevent the crust from getting tough.

GOOD USE FOR LEFTOVERS

Meat Patties May Be Made of One Variety, or a Combination May Be Employed.

For these use either cold chicken and ham, or veal and ham, or even cold beef or a mixture of cold meats. One pound of good short crust pastry, two cupfuls of cold meat, one cupful of sauce, one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, salt and pepper, and one egg. Roll out the pastry to about a quarter of an inch in thickness, then stamp it into rounds slightly larger than the gem pans, allowing two rounds to each gem pan. Cut the meat into small dice; if chicken and ham, or veal and ham are being used, add white sauce; if dark meat, use brown sauce, stir the meat into the sauce, add the parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Grease the gem pans, line each with pastry, put on the lid, not forgetting to first wet the edges. Make a hole in the top of each, brush the top of the patty with beaten egg and bake them in a hot oven for 25 minutes. Put them on a sieve until cold.

The Cup That Cheers.

Women who pride themselves on their tea making assert that tea to be good, should be made in an earthen pot, never in a metal one.

Tea is never good when long standing, but in some cases it cannot be helped. It should be poured off the leaves into another heated pot and covered with a "cosey."

An old-fashioned idea is to drop a few shavings of dried orange peel into the pot in which the tea is made. Some like this, while others believe that it spoils the flavor of the beverage.

If cream is taken a less expensive grade of tea may be used than when lemon is preferred.

Tomato Omelet.

Peel two large tomatoes and cut in pieces. Cook slowly with one-third level teaspoonful of salt and a few grains of red pepper. Beat separately the yolks and whites of three eggs; mix and season with a pinch of salt and a very little pepper. Melt a rounding teaspoonful of butter in a pan, turn in the eggs, and as they begin to set lay the tomato around the top. Finish cooking, turn and serve with a parsley garnish.

Split-Pea Soup.

Half cup split peas, 1½ quarts water, one tablespoon chopped onion, one heaping tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, one-half teaspoon salt, pinch pepper, 1½ cups milk. Wash peas and soak over night in one pint of water. In the morning drain and rinse thoroughly, add quart and half cold water and the onion. Cook slowly until soft, rub through strainer. Make a white sauce, add this liquid to it and cook until it is of proper consistency. Cooking a small ham bone with peas improves the flavor.

Eggplant Patties.

Mold the eggplant pulp to make patties or croquettes. If necessary roll them in flour to hold them in shape. Dip them in egg, then in flour, then again in egg and finally in fine bread crumbs. Fry in hot oil or fat.

Barberry and Sweet Apple.

Take one gallon of molasses, four quarts barberries and a large pan of sweet apples, sliced. Put on to boil and cook in a large crock and serve. If it is cooked right it will not ferment.

IN THE HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

MOUNTAIN SCENE NEAR HONOLULU

IN June I returned from a month in the Hawaiian islands. Last year I spent six months there. My family, who went out with me last July on a month's vacation trip, all of us having return tickets back to New York, are still there—and what is more, do not want to return. From our experience I am sure that few people in the United States, even those on the Pacific coast, have any conception of the beautiful scenery, the glorious climate, the gorgeous sunrises and sunsets, the superb rainbows, the exquisite foliage and verdure and the entrancing conditions of life in a semi-tropical clime—where none of the rigors of winter are known and the delights of the tropics can be enjoyed with none of the tropical objections to detract from that enjoyment, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia Sunday Record.

To most of us the Hawaiian islands represent a few dots like pin-points on the map in the middle of the Pacific ocean and if we think of them at all it is to dimly recall something we learned in our school days about Captain Cook and the missionaries, and in our mind's eye we see some half-naked savages lolling under palm trees. Only here and there is a person who knows that Honolulu is as near Paradise as anything on earth; that its streets are paved like other cities, some good, some bad; that its buildings are modern, its parks splendid, its schools as good as in any city on the mainland, that Paris gowns can be bought in its shops, that more than a thousand automobiles run on its streets and that its people are among the most traveled, cultivated, hospitable and charming in the world. I have been over most of the map and if there is a more beautiful place or one with more natural opportunities for happiness, I have not yet discovered it.

Sunrise over Diamond Head, the old volcanic crater which dominates Waikiki Beach, seen when taking a morning swim in water that averages 78 degrees Fahrenheit the year round, is a delight to the eye. The pink flush of the dawn shading into the azure of a tropical sky and both reflected in water clear as crystal, touched here and there with white caps, together with the intense green of the tropical foliage, and sometimes all the colors blended in a rainbow in the west, make an impression not soon to be effaced.

Ever Changing Panorama.

In the early morning Mt. Olympus, Mt. Tantalus and the other mountains back of the city present an ever-changing panorama, sometimes dark green with overhanging gray clouds, their scarred sides lost in the mist, at other times the tops as clear as cut glass and the ridges outlined against the blue as sharp as the teeth of a saw.

These pictures are presented to the early riser even from the deck of a ship on the morning of its arrival off the shores of the island of Oahu and recollections of them recur to the memory for months afterward, bringing a longing for the place that seems to get into the blood.

Should one happen to be at Waikiki afternoon, under the rays of a tropical sun, and drowsy with the scent of tropical flowers, soothed by the singing of the birds, and lulled by the rustling of the palms and the murmur of the waves, yet dazzled by the sparkle on the water and charm of a sea grading from deep purple in the distance through all the colors of the spectrum to the light green of the breakers and the gray and white of the sand and foam—it is difficult to determine whether the dawn or the noon presents the most attractions, but a moonlight night at Waikiki Beach, with the soft trade wind rustling the palms overhead, the long rollers of the ocean breaking at one's feet and a full moon over Diamond Head casting a sheen on the water and throwing the serrated sides of the old brown crater which dominates the entire landscape into deep shadows, while the strains of "Aloha Oe" or "Una Like No a Like" sung softly by some native strolling under the palms to the accompaniment of strumming "Ukuleles" leaves a memory that will last forever. Verily, the place is rightly named "The Paradise of the Pacific," and the expression "The Lure of the Islands," which I have seen somewhere, fits the feeling that comes over one after leaving them. There are other beautiful places, but nowhere else have I felt the same call to "go back."

Comfort in Honolulu.

Honolulu presents every convenience and comfort for good living. Its hotels measure up to all requirements and fit every taste and purse. "The Young," a modern stone block, gives the usual good European service downtown. "The Royal Hawaiian" gives the beautiful surroundings of the old days; also downtown, "The Pleasanton," a fine old mansion about half-way between the business district and Waikiki remodeled to make a modern American plan hotel, is set in fine grounds surrounded with all of the vegetation of the tropics, while its outlying cottages and a swimming pool make it very attractive. At Waikiki "The Moana," a pretentious modern wooden building, fronts on the beach. It is of the type of many along the shores of both oceans and about what we of the east would expect to find at Atlantic City. It has some fine cottages, and is a fine hostelry.

But the charm of all is summed up in the so-called Seaside hotel at Waikiki, a collection of cottages set in a beautiful cocoanut grove right on the beach, which was formerly a part of the king's seashore estate. The main building, which is not very pretentious, was the royal cottage. Attached to it is a beautiful "Lanai" or porch used as a dining room, and this Lanai with its overhanging trees and its beautiful views and surroundings is architecturally the finest thing in Honolulu.

The schools at Honolulu and generally throughout the islands measure up to the best American standard. Undoubtedly it will surprise most people, as it did me, to learn that the first college west of the Mississippi river was at Honolulu, being established about eighty years ago by missionaries. This school is known as Oahu college or "Punahou" and with its attendant preparatory school is as good as there is on the mainland. My daughter, coming from one of the best schools of the east, entered the junior class and took up the same course in the same books as if she had continued in the high school near Philadelphia. Oahu certificates admit the holders to nearly all of the large eastern colleges, including Yale, Harvard, Wellesley, Vassar, etc.

SYNOPSIS.

Lieut. Harry Mallory is ordered to the Philippines. He and Marjorie Newton decide to elope, but wreck of taxicab prevents their seeing minister on the way to the train. Transcontinental train is taking on passengers. Porter has a lively time with an Englishman and Ira Lathrop, a Yankee business man. The elopers have an exciting time getting to the train. "Little Jimmie" Wellington, bound for Reno to get a divorce, boards train in maudlin condition. Later Mrs. Jimmie appears. She is also bound for Reno with same object. Likewise Mrs. Sammy Whitcomb. Latter blames Mrs. Jimmie for her marital troubles. Classmates of Mallory decorate bridal berth. Rev. and Mrs. Temple start on a vacation. They decide to cut loose and Temple removes evidence of his calling. Marjorie decides to let Mallory proceed alone, but train starts while they are lost in farewell. Passengers join Mallory's classmates in giving couple wedding hazing. Marjorie is distracted. Ira Lathrop, woman-hating bachelor, discovers an old sweetheart, Annie Gattle, a fellow passenger. Mallory vainly hunts for a preacher among the passengers. Mrs. Wellington hears Little Jimmie's voice. Later she meets Mrs. Whitcomb. Mallory reports to Marjorie his failure to find a preacher. They decide to pretend a quarrel and Mallory finds a vacant berth. Mrs. Jimmie discovers Wellington on the train. Mallory again makes an unsuccessful hunt for a preacher. Dr. Temple poses as a physician. Mrs. Temple is induced by Mrs. Wellington to smoke a cigar. Sight of preacher on a station platform raises Mallory's hopes, but he takes another train. Missing hand baggage compels the couple to borrow from passengers. Jimmie gets a cinder in his eye and Mrs. Jimmie gives first aid. Coolness is then resumed. Still no clergyman. More borrowing. Dr. Temple puzzled by behavior of different couples. Marjorie's jealousy aroused by Mallory's baseball jargon. Marjorie suggests wrecking the train in hopes that accident will produce a preacher. Also tries to induce the conductor to hold the train so she can shop.

CHAPTER XXVII.

The Dog-on Dog Again.

As the conductor left the Mallorys to their own devices, it rushed over him anew what sacrilege had been attempted—a fool bride had asked him to hop the Trans-American of all trains—to go shopping of all things!

He stormed into the smoking room to open the safety valve of his wrath, and found the porter just coming out of the buffet cell with a tray, two hollow-stemmed glasses and a bottle swaddled in a napkin.

"Say, Ellsworth, what in —— do you suppose that female back there wants?—wants me to hold the Trans-American while—"

But the porter was in a hurry himself. He was about to serve champagne, and he cut the conductor short:

"'Scuse me, boss, but they's a lovin' couple in the stateroom forward that is in a powerful hurry for this. I can't talk to you now. I'll see you later." And he swaggered off, leaving the door of the buffet open. The conductor paused to close it, glanced in, started, stared, glared, roared: "What's this! Well, I'll be—a dog smuggled in here! I'll break that coon's head. Come out of there, you miserable or'nary hound!" He seized the incredulous Snoozleums by the scruff of his neck, growling, "It's you for the baggage car ahead," and dashed out with his prey, just as Mallory, now getting new bearings on Marjorie's character, spoke across the rampart of his Napoleonically folded arms:

"Well, you're a nice one!—making violent love to a conductor before my very eyes. A minute more and I would have—"

She silenced him with a snap: "Don't you speak to me! I hate you! I hate all men. The more I know men the more I like—" this reminded her, and she asked anxiously: "Where is Snoozleums?"

Mallory, impatient at the shift of subject, snapped back: "Oh, I left him in the buffet with the waiter. What I want to know is how you dare to—"

"Was it a colored waiter?"

"Of course. But I'm not speaking of—"

"But suppose he should bite him?"

"Oh, you can't hurt those nigger waiters. I started to say—"

"But I can't have Snoozleums biting colored people. It might not agree with him. Get him at once."

Mallory trembled with suppressed rage like an overloaded boiler, but he gave up and growled: "Oh, Lord, all right. I'll get him when I've finished—"

"Go get him this minute. And bring the poor darling back to his mother."

"His mother! Ye gods!" cried Mallory, wildly. He turned away and dashed into the men's room with a curious: "Where's that damned dog?"

He met the porter just returning. The porter smiled: "He's right in yuh, sir," and opened the buffet door. His eyes popped and his jaw sagged: "Why, I lef' him here just a minute ago."

"You left the window open, too," Mallory observed. "Well, I guess he's gone."

The porter was panic-stricken: "Oh, I'm turrible sorry, boss, I wouldn't have lost dat dog for a fortune. If you was to hit me with a axe I wouldn't mind."

To his utter befuddlement, Mallory grinned and winked at him, and murmured: "Oh, that's all right. Don't worry." And actually laid half a dollar in his palm. Leaving the black lids batting over the starting eyes, Mallory pulled his smile into a long face and went back to Marjorie like an undertaker: "My love, prepare yourself for bad news."

Marjorie looked up, startled and apprehensive: "Snoozleums is ill. He did bite the darkey."

"Worse than that—he—he—fell out of the window."

"When!" she shrieked, "in heaven's name—when?"

"He was there just a minute ago, the waiter says."

Marjorie went into instant hysterics, wringing her hands and sobbing: "Oh, my darling, my poor child—stop the train at once!"

She began to pound Mallory's shoulders and shake him frantically. He had never seen her this way either. He was getting his education in advance. He tried to calm her with inexpert words: "How can I stop the train? Now, dearie, he was a nice dog, but after all, he was only a dog."

She rounded on him like a panther: "Only a dog! He was worth a dozen men like you. You find the conductor at once, command him to stop this train—and back up! I don't care if he has to go back ten miles. Run, tell him at once. Now, you run!"

Mallory stared at her as if she had gone mad, but he set out to run somewhere, anywhere. Marjorie paced up and down distractedly, tearing her hair and moaning, "Snoozleums, Snoozleums! My child. My poor child!" At length her wildly roving eyes noted the bell rope. She stared, pondered, nodded her head, clutched at it, could not reach it, jumped for it several times in vain, then seized a chair, swung it into place, stood up in it, gripped the rope, and came down on it with all her weight, dropping to the floor and jumping up and down in a frenzied dance. In the distance the engine could be heard faintly whistling, whistling for every pull.

The engineer, far ahead, could not imagine what unheard-of crisis could bring about such mad signals. The fireman yelled:

"I bet that crazy conductor is attacked with an epilettic fit."

But there was no disputing the command. The engine was reversed, the air brakes set, the sand run out and every effort made to pull the iron horse, as it were, back on its haunches.

The grinding, squealing, jolting, shook the train like an earthquake. The shrieking of the whistle froze the blood like a woman's cry of "Murder!" in the night. The women among the passengers echoed the screams. The men turned pale and braced themselves for the shock of collision. Some of them were mumbling prayers. Dr. Temple and Jimmie Wellington, with one idea in their dissimilar souls, dashed from the smoking room to go to their wives.

Ashton and Wedgewood, with no one to care for but themselves, seized windows and tried to fight them open. At last they budged a sash and knelt down to thrust their heads out.

"I don't see a beastly thing ahead," said Wedgewood, "except the heads of other fools."

"We're slowing down though," said Ashton, "she stops! We're safe. Thank God!" And he collapsed into a chair. Wedgewood collapsed into another, gasping: "Whatever are we safe from, I wonder?"

The train-crew and various passengers descended and ran alongside the train asking questions. Panic gave way to mystery. Even Dr. Temple came back into the smoking room to finish a precious cigar he had been at work on. He was followed by Little Jimmie, who had not quite rescued his wife when the stopping of the train put an end to his excuse for chivalry. He was regretfully muttering:

"It would have been such a good shamah to shave my life's wife—I mean my—I don't know what I mean." He sank into a chair and ordered a drink; then suddenly remembered his vow, and with great heroism, rescinded the order.

Mallory, finding that the train was checked just before he reached the conductor, saw that official's bewildered wrath at the stoppage and had a fearsome intuition that Marjorie had somehow done the deed. He hurried back to the observation room, where he found her charging up and down, still distraught. He paused at a safe distance and said:

"The train has stopped, my dear. Somebody rang the bell."

"I guess somebody did!" Marjorie answered, with a proud toss of the head. "Where's the conductor?"

"He's looking for the fellow that pulled the rope."

"You go tell him to back up—and slowly, too."

"No, thank you!" said Mallory. He was a brave young man, but he was not boarding the conductors of stopped expresses. Already the conductor's voice was heard in the smoking room, where he appeared with the rush and roar of a Bashan bull. "Well!" he bellowed, "which one of you guys pulled that rope?"

"It was nobody here, sir," Dr. Temple meekly explained. The conductor transfixed him with a baleful glare: "I wouldn't believe a gambler on oath. I bet you did it."

"I assure you, sir," Wedgewood interposed, "he didn't touch it. I was heah."

The conductor waved him aside and charged into the observation room, followed by all the passengers in an awe-struck rabble. Here, too, the conductor thundered: "Who pulled that rope? Speak up somebody."

Mallory was about to sacrifice himself to save Marjorie, but she met the conductor's black rage with the withering contempt of a young queen: "I pulled the old rope. Whom did you suppose?"

The conductor almost dropped with apoplexy at finding himself with nobody to vent his immense rage on, but this pink and white slip. "You!" he gulped, "well, what in— Say, in the name of—why, don't you know it's a penitentiary offense to stop a train this way?"

Marjorie tossed her head a little higher, grew a little calmer: "What do I care? I want you to back up."

The conductor was reduced to a wet rag, a feeble echo: "Back up—the train up?"

"Yes, back the train up," Marjorie answered, resolutely, "and go slowly till I tell you to stop."

The conductor stared at her a moment, then whirled on Mallory: "Say, what in hell's the matter with your wife?"

Mallory was saved from the problem of answering by Marjorie's abrupt change from a young Tsarina rebuking a serf, to a terrified mother. She flung out imploring palms and with a gush of tears pleaded: "Won't you please back up? My darling child fell off the train."

The conductor's rage fell away in an instant. "Your child fell off the train!" he gasped. "Good Lord! How old was he?"

With one hand he was groping for the bell cord to give the signal, with the other he opened the door to look back along the track.

"He was two years old," Marjorie sobbed.

"Oh, that's too bad!" the conductor groaned. "What did he look like?"

"He had a pink ribbon round his neck."

"A pink ribbon—oh, the poor little fellow! the poor little fellow!"

"And a long curly tail."

The conductor swung round with a yell: "A curly tail!—your son?"

"My dog!" Marjorie roared back at him.

The conductor's voice cracked weakly as he shrieked: "Your dog! You stopped this train for a fool dog?"

"He wasn't a fool dog," Marjorie retorted, facing him down, "he knows more than you do."

The conductor threw up his hands: "Well, don't you women beat—" He studied Marjorie as if she were some curious freak of nature. Suddenly an idea struck into his daze: "Say, what kind of a dog was it?—a measly little cheese-hound?"

"He was a noble, beautiful soul with wonderful eyes and adorable ears."

The conductor was growing weaker and weaker: "Well, don't worry. I got him. He's in the baggage car."

Marjorie stared at him unbelievingly. The news seemed too gloriously beautiful to be true. "He isn't dead—Snoozleums is not dead!" she cried, "he lives! He lives! You have saved him." And once more she flung herself upon the conductor. He tried to bat her off like a gnat, and Mallory came to his rescue by dragging her away and shoving her into a chair. But she saw only the noble conductor: "Oh, you dear, good, kind angel. Get him at once."

"He stays in the baggage car," the conductor answered, firmly and as he supposed, finally.

"But Snoozleums doesn't like baggage cars," Marjorie smiled. "He won't ride in one."

"He'll ride in this one or I'll wring his neck."

"You fiend in human flesh!" Marjorie shrank away from him in horror, and he found courage to seize the bell rope and yank it viciously with a sardonic: "Please, may I start this train?"

The whistle tooted faintly. The bell began to hammer, the train to creak and writhe and click. The conductor pulled his cap down hard and started forward. Marjorie seized his sleeve: "Oh, I implore you, don't consign that poor sweet child to the horrid baggage car. If you have a human heart in your breast, hear my prayer."

The conductor surrendered unconditionally: "Oh, Lord, all right, all right. I'll lose my job, but if you'll keep quiet, I'll bring him to you." And he slunk out meekly, followed by the passengers, who were shaking their heads in wonderment at this most amazing feat of this most amazing bride.

GOOD FRIEND OF THE FARMER

Valuable Work Done by Humble Earthworm Has Not Been Sufficiently Appreciated.

The humble earthworm is one of man's best friends. The farmer and the gardener could not spare him. Dr. J. Newton Friend tells about him in Science Progress. From Dr. Friend's observations it appears that worms aerate the soil in a variety of ways.

In burrowing through the soil the worms render it more porous and permeable to gases, not merely by virtue of the air spaces formed, but by reason of the fact that the soil is thus continually kept in gentle motion. Again, the soil passing through the bodies of worms is excreted in a finer condition, being ground by attrition through the intestines. Darwin estimated that no fewer than fifteen tons of soil annually pass through the bodies of worms for every acre.

Further, worms breathe in oxygen and exhale carbon dioxide, and the latter gas, as is well known, readily dissolves in water, forming an acid solution which will render alkaline earths and metallic oxides—e. g., iron—soluble.

Worms materially aid in producing soluble salts of iron in the soil when other agencies—e. g., dilute mineral acids—fail. The iron is eventually given back to the soil in a more soluble condition, and presumably in one which can be directly absorbed by plant roots.

No Decrease in Disease.

Speaking of disease, here is another deplorable confession from no less an authority that the Medical Record. In spite of the army of physicians, their discoveries, and their hecatombs of vivisected guinea pigs, we may doubt, says the Medical Record, whether the sum total of disease is any less than it was before the medical profession reached its present high standing. Preventive medicine has made "little headway," and "in the opinion of some medical men diseases are on the increase." In the deeper recesses of our consciousness we had suspected something of the kind ourselves, but such heterodoxy on the part of a layman would have exposed him to excommunication with bell, book, and candle, or at least with bacteria, serums, and antitoxins. But with the Medical Record behind us we can afford to creep out into the open.

Tracing the "Barber Shop Chord."

Barbers in the old days might well charge heavily, for theirs must have been a nerve-racking existence. Zithers were provided instead of newspapers, and customers used to strum on these while waiting for a vacant chair. Dekker, writing, refers to "a barber's cittern for every man to play on." The term "barber's music," was a common one in the days of Pepys, who on June 5, 1660, records: "After supper my lord called for the lieutenant's cittern, and with two candlesticks with money in them for symballs, we made barber's music, with which my lord was very well pleased."

A Chinese Puzzle.

Some days ago we published a conundrum from the Chinese, taken from a Paris contemporary, but as we have not received the correct answer we give it, together with the original question. The question ran: "Young I am green, old I am yellow; well beaten I become compliant; if I accompany a friend for long, he urges me to leave him; young I am honored, old I am despised." The answer is "Straw slippers."—London Globe.

BABY'S HAPPINESS DEPENDS ON HEALTH

When your baby is cross and fretful instead of the happy, laughing little dear you are accustomed to, in all probability the digestion has become disarranged and the bowels need attention. Give it a mild laxative, dispel the irritability, and bring back the happy content of babyhood.

The mother should make sure that the laxative used contains no opiate or narcotic drug. A mild, pleasant-tasting, harmless laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is ideal for children because of its natural composition and gentle action. A small dose of Syrup Pepsin at bedtime will bring easy, certain relief next morning, and with no distressful griping or other discomfort. You can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store. Your name and address on a postal to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 West St., Monticello, Ill., will bring a free trial bottle by return mail. Adv.

THE BEST TREATMENT FOR ITCHING SCALPS, DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR

To allay itching and irritation of the scalp, prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove crusts, scales and dandruff, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair, the following special treatment is most effective, agreeable and economical. On retiring, comb the hair out straight all around, then begin at the side and make a parting, gently rubbing Cuticura ointment into the parting with a bit of soft flannel held over the end of the finger. Anoint additional partings about half an inch apart until the whole scalp has been treated, the purpose being to get the Cuticura Ointment on the scalp skin rather than on the hair. It is well to place a light covering over the hair to protect the pillow from possible stain. The next morning, shampoo with Cuticura Soap and hot water. Shampoos alone may be used as often as agreeable, but once or twice a month is generally sufficient for this special treatment for women's hair.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

CLEAN ROOST FOR CHICKENS

Slope of Dropping Board Sufficient to Prevent Hens From Walking on Its Surface.

(By GEORGE B. FRAZER, Edmonton, Alberta.)

The illustrations represent a chicken roost of my own design, which I find to be both cleanly and economical. The dropping board requires a slope of 45 degrees or more, if the height of the henhouse will permit, and it is raised high enough to permit the use of all the floor space for scratching purposes. The trough at the bottom catches the droppings, and the slide door at one end enables these to be scraped out with a hoe or shovel into a box on the floor. I use a hoe to clean the dropping board and afterwards throw a shovelful or two of dry earth over its surface. The roosts should not have so great a slope as the board beneath, so as to enable one to use a hoe for cleaning off the board. The slope of the dropping board not only causes the droppings to collect in the trough beneath, but prevents the hens from walking on its surface. The space behind I utilize for nests. After trying various kinds, I find ordinary nail kegs the best. These should be filled two-thirds full of straw, and a wire loop inserted at the top. They may then be hung in a row, and touching each other to keep them steady, to nails driven into the wall behind. In this way they can be easily lifted off the nails to be cleaned. I chose kegs for nests as the hens are unable to eat their eggs in them and they are about the right size to accommodate one hen at a time. My henhouse has a very large window right opposite the hen roost, so in order to darken the nests I fasten a strip of old linoleum on a wire so as to hang just in front of the nests. The wire has a loop at one end which is fastened to a bent nail or hook driven into the dropping board. When gathering eggs this may be unhooked and the curtain allowed to drop out of the way. Anyone who has never tried using a dropping board, or has used the ordinary flat kind, will find this a decided improvement as far as cleanliness and economy of space is concerned.

A Good Egg Food.

Cowpeas are not eaily relished by hens, but it is excellent egg food for them. One successful poultryman gives his experience: The peas, after maturing, were harvested and stored in dry lofts, and thrown to the fowls in scratching pens, where they were scratched over and searched for during the day. After a few days the egg supply was visibly increased and within a few weeks almost doubled that from an equal number of hens kept in separate quarters and fed on other grains. The hens seemed to like the small branches and leaves, and would eat every particle except the hard, stiff stems. The general health of the flock was excellent, and not a single hen showed the least symptom of ailment during the winter season. Considering the ease with which cowpeas may be raised, it seems that everyone should give them a test as food for the poultry.

Get Turkeys Ready.

Prepare the turkeys for the Thanksgiving market. Feed generously the young growing stock that is to be marketed.

DONT'S IN POULTRY SHIPPING

Most Profitable to Use Clean, Fresh Boxes With Care and Neatness in Packing Fowls.

There are a number of "Don'ts" that should be observed by shippers of market poultry: Don't ship bony, skinny stock. Don't ship half-picked, flesh-torn poultry. Don't ship to every strange house that solicits your consignment. First look them up; investigate the references. Don't ship dressed stock in any old box that may be handy.

It pays to use clean, fresh boxes, using care and neatness in packing. Frequently the buyer is present when the box is opened, and a sale spoiled because of the packing. Don't pack poultry after dressing until all the animal heat is out. Don't let some little market fluster cause you to change houses.

Get a good, solid house and stick to it. That keeps the commission man interested in retaining your trade, and oftentimes he will pull you out of a hole caused by a glut. Don't fail to carefully inspect your shipment before closing the box.

Put in the memorandum on your own billhead, showing the amount and other data. Keep a duplicate yourself, thereby saving much annoyance and frequent loss.

TWO-STORY POULTRY HOUSE

Old Piano Box May Be Transformed Into Comfortable Building for Winter Use.

I recently visited a successful poultry raiser who was using a two-story piano-box house. It was not covered with roofing paper and there was only a dollar or two expense involved in transforming it into the present house. The breeder told me that he kept seven hens and a cockerel in one of these houses last winter and it proved very satisfactory, the hens laying well, writes Dwight Bronson of Chicago in the Farm and Home.

At about one-third of the height, the upper floor was laid. Six inches above the floor the roost extends from one end to the other. At one end of the floor at the back there is a 10x15 inch opening (long way opposite length of box) and a 10-inch slanting board extending to the lower floor. The chickens use this slatted slanting board in ascending or descending from their upstairs sleeping room. The nest box is at one end of the upper floor, and there is a dust box on the lower floor.

An opening 12 inches square covered with muslin for ventilation, is cut in one end. There are two hinged doors in front, and in warm weather both are kept wide open. The position of the doors shown in the illustration is the way they are propped open during a rain or light snow.

It is remarkable how poultry will thrive when housed in these small, yet well-ventilated houses. The owner says his birds come through the winter without so much as having a spike frozen. In their upstairs sleeping room huddled together in a few feet of space, which they would warm by natural heat, it can be truthfully said they are "snug as bugs in a rug."

POULTRY NOTES

A small pen for the market birds will hasten fattening.

Feed, care and hen sense decide what the profits shall be.

It is not too soon to put houses and coops in shape for winter.

The dull, listless bird cannot be removed from the flock too soon.

A little iron tonic in the drinking water is good during moulting.

In the fall and spring eggs should be marketed at least once a week.

"Clean the nest and not the egg," is the advice of a successful eastern egg farmer.

After dumping and burning the nesting material whitewash the inside of the nest box.

The early moulters are the early layers. It is a good plan to mark them for breeders.

To hasten feathering after the molt, give a tablespoonful of sulphur in a mash to every ten hens twice a week.

IN THESE DAYS OF DIVORCES

Really Nothing Remarkable in the Simple and Frank Explanation of the Small Boy.

We were walking down the street Sunday and we saw the most beautiful child sitting on the front steps of a pretty house, says Ted Robinson. His eyes were so big and blue, his curly head so golden, his innocent smile so frank and inviting that we could not resist the temptation to enter into conversation with him.

"Well, son," we said in the idiotically genial way with which an adult usually addresses a child, "how old are you?"

"Four," lisped the infant. (He didn't really lisp it, because you can't lisp when you say four; but that's the way children are supposed to do.)

"Isn't that fine!" (It would have been just as fine if he'd been three, though, or five. More idiocy.) "And whose little boy are you?"

"Mamma's li'l boy."

"Aren't you papa's little boy, too?"

"Nope."

"Why aren't you papa's little boy?"

"The decree gimme to mamma."

Then we went on our pleasant way.—Savannah Morning News.

After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Fable for Borrowers.

An Arab went to his neighbor and said: "Lend me your rope."

"I can't," said the neighbor.

"Why can't you?"

"Because I want to use the rope myself."

"For what purpose?" the other persisted.

"I want to tie up five cubic feet of water with it."

"How on earth," sneered the would-be borrower, "can you tie up water with a rope?"

"My friend," said the neighbor, "Allah is great and he permits us to do strange things with a rope when we don't want to lend it."—Boston Evening Transcript.
