NAME STATE LINCOLN?

How Would You Like to Change the Name of the State of New Mexico

COMMENT ON THE SUBJECT

There are a great many people in the state who are strongly in favor of changing the name of the state. They believe that the name "New Mexico" is too suggestive of the republic of Mexico, and that so long as they bear this appellation they will be looked upon as a sort of a minor edition of Mexico, and with the reputation the neighboring republic is acquiring for strife and lawlessness, it is not surprising that New Mexico would change her name to the state of Lincoln, or almost anything else that happens to be lying around handy.

The El Paso Times in commenting on the matter says:

"And yet, would New Mexico by any other name carry with it the honor and glory that has been achieved under the present appellation? When a man says 'I am a citizen of the state of Lincoln,' for instance, would it convey the idea that this man is a pioneer of the great new state which struggled and strived for years before it was admitted into the sisterhood of states—whose history is that of the most glorious achievement—whose civilization is the most ancient in the entire southwest, and whose citizenship may well be proud of the achievements to their credit as citizens of the great and promising state of New Mexico.

Call New Mexico by any other name if you please, and it will not change the contour of the country. It will add nothing to the riches of her marvelous valleys, nor augment the precious minerals so abundantly stored in her hills and mountains. There is nothing to be gained from a change in the name of the state except to pander to a questionable sentimentality that is incapable of bestowing any beneficient results. As New Mexico the great new state has won her present progress and prosperity, and as New Mexico she should be content to work out her future destiny.

"Those of us who know and love the Great Southwest realize that Salt river does not carry oceans of salt, but oceans of life giving water. We know that Whiskey creek, in Grant county, New Mexico, does not carry whiskey, but principally sand. We know that all the dead men have been buried in Dead Man's gulch, at Bisbee, and that Tombstone, Arizona, is not a city build in the form of a monument to stand as a marker for all the dead who have been laid away in Cochise county.

"So it is with thousands of other names that are familiar in this country—names [illegible] may be misleading, but none the less names that are associated indelibly with Southwestern history, progress and development, which it would almost be criminal to now supersede.

—The court house building is progressing nicely under the Contractor [illegible]'s direction. H. B. Hamilton's new garage is about completed as is Dr. T. W. Watson's garage. Their homes will be built at a very early date.

We deeply sympathize with the Lees in their sad bereavement.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM

The Experimental Farm Committee are booming at a healthy rate this week. The farm is very nicely fenced with hog wire and barbed wire on top. Nine acres are plowed and are being planted today. Six of the acres are going into products that will be tried by the dry farm method, the other three acres will be planted to crops requiring irrigation. A quarter acre each of many different varieties of western hays, grasses and small grains are being put in. The well is fitted with casing and the pump; the engine is also due to arrive. W. W. Chrisenberry has been awarded a contract for the construction of a 26 feet square, cement irrigation tank which will hold 26,000 gallons of water.

We will give a detail report of the farms progress next issue.

On Tuesday Night at the Methodist Church, May 27, Matter to Come up

TO BE THOROUGHLY DISCUSSED

The matter of incorporation of the village of Carrizozo, which is causing some discussion will be thoroughly talked over from all points of view at a special Public Mass Meeting which has been called to meet at the Methodist Church on Tuesday night, May 27th.

At this meeting expressions from the citizens of the town will be invited, and the law governing the incorporation of the villages will be read in full.

It is hoped and expected that it will be possible to have several prominent speakers who are familiar with the law and the subject to address the meeting. Among those who will be asked to speak will be Judge Edward L. Medler, Col. Geo. Prichard, Edwin Mechem, H. B. Hamilton and John Y. Hewitt.

Everyone is urged to be present at this meeting.

MARCIAL ST. JOHN IS DEAD

After a sickness of but nine days, Marcial St. John, one of the best known Spanish-American citizens of Lincoln County passed away at his home in Carrizozo on Monday night, May 12th. Dr. E. B. Walker, pronounced the cause as Erysipelas.

Marcial St. John was born at Las Cruces, New Mexico September 20, 1871 and came to Lincoln County on February 8, 1886 and has lived here ever since. He was married to Miss Pulidora Chavez at Lincoln in 1891 and from this union there have been seven children born all of whom with the mother survive deceased. The childrens names are Ramon, Marcial, Reydesel, Christoval, Elvira, Cliotilde and Juanita. Two sisters also survive deceased, Mrs. H. S. Chavez and Mrs. E. M. Gurule both residing in Carrizozo.

Funeral Services were held Tuesday at the Evergreen cemetery. Marcial St. John was a good and loyal citizen, a faithful father and husband and the sympathy of the entire community goes out to the family in their bereavement.

A BANK AT CORONA

The Stockmens State Bank was formally opened at Corona, on May 7th, 1913, and is the second banking institution now in operation in the county. H. B. Jones is President of the bank, A. B. McDonald, Vice President and E. M. Brickley is Cashier. The bank is in the center of a prosperous stock country, a part of this county and will undoubtedly do a very nice business.

Mr. and Mrs. James Lee.

COUNTY ROAD MEETING

Big Get-To-Gether Meeting Planned for June 2d at Carrizozo for Good Roads.

ALL COUNTY URGED TO COME

At a meeting of the Carrizozo Commercial Club on Monday night a committee composed of L. B Chase, H. S. Campbell and John A. Haley were appointed to arrange for a large size, County, Get-To-Gether Good Roads Meeting at Carrizozo for June 2d.

This date is the same one on which the County Road Commission composed of the Dr. John W. Laws, Paul Mayer and Jose Vega will be in regular session at Carrizozo as will the Board of County Commissioners

The object of the meeting will be to have a general assembly of the citizens of the county to talk over, and make suggestions as to the making of good roads within the Lincoln County borders. It is expected that the Committee will arrange a banquet for the event and a smoker to follow with something doing all the time.

It is strongly urged that every part of the county send just as many representatives as is possible to this meeting.

The meeting is called at the suggestion of Chairman James W. Laws, of Lincoln, who has been named as organizer by the State Association.

Dr. Laws states in a letter to this paper the objects of the meeting more fully as follows:

"I would also suggest that citizens from every precinct and vicinity in the county be invited to attend a Good Roads Meeting to be held at a suitable building in Carrizozo on the night of June 2nd That the object of such Good Roads Meeting be to ascertain from the people of each vicinity what is needed to improve road conditions in their locality and the improvement of the roads in the county.

"Getting together in the form of a smoker, an experience meeting, or some informal gathering such as may suggest itself to your Commercial Club would no doubt result in good."

ROAD COMMISSIONERS TO MEET

Chairman John W. Laws, of the Lincoln County Road Commission announces that the Board will meet in Carrizozo on Monday, June 2nd. 1913, to take up all road matters for the county.

The Board will at that time pay bills properly sworn to and presented if due and all road foremen are requested to be present at the said meeting to report and make suggestions of work to be done.

The Board will be glad to have suggestions also at the meeting from any persons interested in good roads.

TOURISTS SEE CANAL

More Than 20,000 Americans Are "Doing" Panama.

Interesting and Curious Throng Spend Their Time Riding Over the Isthmus in Sightseeing Cars.

Colon, Panama.—The rush of tourists to the isthmus is in full blast. No doubt, the record will go higher than last year, or any year, but there are no signs that it will total the figures given in the forecasts of the steamship managers working their special brand of enthusiasm. Panama was to see 40,000 Americans "doing the canal;" the tourists probably will exceed 20,000, but that number puts a strain on the accommodations there.

And who are the tourists? Naturally they are mostly well-to-do citizens out for a holiday "taking in" the canal. They are not the fashionable people in its New York sense of the word. The latter have barely, it would seem, heard of it. They can only move in little certified flocks.

Sightseeing Car in Panama.

The great bulk, however, is made up of successful business men and their wives and families, for whom nothing is too good.

A surprising number, too, are farmers who have been fattening on prosperous seasons in fat lands.

On our steamer we had men and women from Illinois—Peoria, if you please—Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, Colorado, Virginia, Pennsylvania. One Rhode Islander was in his ninety-first year.

Everybody has made preparation for tropical temperature—crash, alpaca and immaculate linen suits among the men and every wonderful and expensive dress and waist conceivable in lace and linen and light fabrics, with reserves of silks and satins and jewels for gala nights.

All of which may be preface to a few words on the marvel of the woman tourists. Probably their greatest labor is writing postal cards.

When not writing postal cards they are taking snapshots. Let any one say "Look at that," and a hundred of the pestilential machines are pointed in the direction indicated. After the shot the invariable question is, "What was it?"

The girls of all ages are, however, pleasantly fluttery and positive about this modern industry.

"I don't bother a bit what it is," said one. "I just snap it. 'Stand a moment, please,' and another art sin is added to her beadroll. Of course their paradise is the sightseeing train. And what is a sightseeing train?

You must know the passage from Colon to Panama across the isthmus brings you within measurable view of the whole canal—just enough to irritate you. Hence excursions three in number are provided to widen and deepen your knowledge. These trains start on alternate days from Colon and Panama. The first takes you to the great triple locks—one behind the other—at Gatun on the Atlantic side and to the great Gatun dam and spillway; the second takes you to the Pedro Miguel single lock and the Miraflores double locks at the Pacific end; the third takes you down through the nine miles of Culebra cut. The train consists of three show cars with the cross seats ranged in rising tiers. On the lowest level stands a guide, who talks gently through a megaphone, retailing the wonders which the audience is witnessing—three cars, three megaphones, three lectures.

The trains by using the working tracks are enabled to go close to the locks, and so forth. The train stops; the lecturer quits, having invited the audience to alight and to take a close look, and everybody is on foot, scrambling to the front more or less decorously, for they are a polite and good natured folks. Thus you pass over dizzy heights in safety; you gaze down or look up; you snap everything with your camera and, exclaiming everything from "My!" to "How perfectly wonderful" you pass on to the next wonder.

PEARY SEES U. S. TAKE ARCTIC

Rear Admiral Believes Government May Try to Make Use of Polar Lands.

New York.—Rear Admiral Robert E. Peary predicted the United States government would send an expedition to the arctic to see if use could be made of the large tracts of unexplored territory there.

The admiral added that he would not head such an expedition, he said, because he felt too old now to make more polar explorations.

Rear Admiral R. E. Peary.

Raold Amundsen, who expects to explore the arctic in the Fram, would take "a big chance" if he allowed his ship to be frozen in the ice and drift, Mr. Peary believed. The ship might remain frozen in four or five years and drift anywhere.

CHURCH WITH SEVEN MEMBERS

Methodist Conference Is Unable to Solve the Problem of Extending Usefulness of Institution.

New Haven.—One of the smallest churches in this country is the Parker (Conn.) A. M. E. Zion church of Meriden, its membership numbering but seven regular members with an average attendance at church of about fifteen persons.

The smallness of the congregation has always been a puzzle to those interested in the church. It has been organized since [illegible], but never seems to grow any larger despite the efforts of specialists and well-known colored organizers who have visited the church for the purpose of building it up.

During its twenty-two years of existence many preachers have been assigned to the pastorate, but owing to the smallness of the congregation of late years it has been impossible to raise enough money to pay the preacher for his services.

At the last meeting of the Methodist conference the question of the Parker church was discussed at length by the delegates. Scheme after scheme for the building up of the impoverished treasury, and the congregation, were discussed, but none seemed feasible. W. C. Andrews, a lay preacher holding a pastorate in Providence on a salary, then came forward and offered his services as a preacher.

Leaving his family behind, the preacher went to Meriden, where he assumed charge. Inasmuch as he had no income, it became compulsory upon him to provide a roof for himself. Securing some old boards and timbers, the preacher built a small room on the rear of the church. For weeks he labored from morning to night until at last he had for himself a cozy home at no expense to the church.

Determined still further that the church would not have to support him, he cast around for a suitable position whereby he could earn enough to live on. Mr. Andrews was not afraid of work, and prominent business men of Meriden who had heard of his efforts and his sacrifice secured for him a position with the Meriden Gas company as a porter.

Here six days in the week the preacher toils as a porter. In the afternoons and evenings he gets out and works among his parishioners, performing all the duties of a minister, such as visiting the sick and officiating at marriages and funerals.

"Because," he said, kindly, "I'm a boy and you're a girl."

BADLY BURNED ON LEG

200 Fuller St., Redwood, Cal.—"My two-year-old daughter tipped a basin of hot water on her leg between knee and ankle. She was burned so badly, in places as large as a man's hand, that the skin was loose. The appearance of the leg was dark red. I applied the Cuticura Ointment at once and put on a bandage. I removed the bandage twenty-four hours later, opened the water blisters, applied more Cuticura Ointment and bandaged again. The skin did not come off and I did this until she was completely cured. I did not let her walk much until it was healed. She did not complain after the first day, and after the Cuticura Ointment was put on, slept as usual. The scars are gone; Cuticura Ointment entirely cured her." (Signed) Mrs. E. O. Chapman, Mar. 12, 1912.

SPORT on the SENEGAMBIAN RIVERS

by Russell Roberts

OUR CAMP BENEATH THE PALMS

THE FRUIT OF THE PALM

THE STALKER OUTSTALKED.

ON the banks of the river near our camp were great plains, separated from the river itself by a belt of dense bush mixed with long grass, standing any height up to fifteen feet. Palms marked the course of the river. They were of a kind which is of greater girth half way up than at the bottom. These palms grow fruit which look like cocoanuts, but are really very different. During the unripe stage the natives obtain them for the water contained in three little partitions in the middle. Later on, when full ripe, they present an irresistible fascination for the elephant, who feeds largely on them, swallowing them almost whole, stones and all. They are then of an orange yellow within, the outer layer being of a pulpy consistency with a flavor like pineapple. The natives also are very fond of them, but they are said to make a white man sick, and from what I have seen, this appears to be true.

This camp was in a magnificent belt of palm trees. The plains which border the river are usually well stocked with game, and hundreds of Buffon's Kob can frequently be seen at one time. This is a handsome antelope of a brilliant red color, carrying a longish coat (for Africa), and strong, much-annulated horns, growing lyre-shaped, to a length of twenty inches. These plains are covered during the wet season with high grass, which gradually gets burnt off, leaving the plain bare, black and parched. The kob are out on the open parts mostly till ten o'clock and after three.

When alarmed they run to the grass or to the bush country. I used to stalk them for hours, armed with a telephoto camera, and the annexed herd of mine is a fairly typical example of a small herd. The buck is seen standing on the left, the does being very much more on the alert. The latter have no horns. I got this photograph with a lot of trouble, stalking being out of the question. I merely walked alongside of the herds, edging in very gradually. As the afternoon advanced, they seemed to get more accustomed to me, and would stand and stare for a little longer each time. This photograph was taken at about one hundred and seventy yards, and the larger herd at two hundred yards.

On one occasion I nearly got a photograph of a lion. I was following along the edge of a bit of raised ground, from which I got a good view over the plain, when I came across a single female kob, browsing contentedly beside a small ditch containing water. All at once she became alarmed, and presently made off. I was at a loss to know what had scared her, as it was impossible she could have got my wind. However, on looking over the edge a little higher up, I saw a lioness only one hundred yards off, just below me, stalking along the edge of the high grass.

Unfortunately, she saw me as I was trying to take her photograph, and retired into the long grass, where she so harmonized with the surrounding color that I could see nothing of her at all. All I could make out was what looked like some little black birds jumping about just where the lioness ought to have been. Taking the glasses, however, I at once saw that what I had taken for birds were the black tips to her ears and the black tuft on her tail. So I got a steady shot with the .350 rifle at an imaginary spot a foot below the ears, and scored a hit, judging by the sound, but nothing moved for some time, until I saw a lion creeping away a little further on; but it was gone before I could shoot. It was growing late, so we had to go at once and see what had happened. This was by no means a pleasant job, as the grass was very high and one could not see a yard ahead.

I sent a man up a tree to look, but he could see nothing, so I advanced with two men close to me, throwing in stones and sticks. Getting no response, I thought that the lion I had seen disappearing was the one I had shot at and that it had got away wounded. By this time we had got to the grass itself, and after a trial shower of missiles, in we went, hoping the brute would not bounce out at us from two yards away.

One of the coast porters whom I had with me showed himself a very plucky fellow. Though unarmed, he was all for going in in front of me. We came quite suddenly on the lioness only about six feet away, luckily stone dead. The bullet had caught her in the neck, and it must have been her lord and master whom we saw slinking away. The lioness was a fine yellow one in good condition. The porters ate the whole of the meat, not only because they believed that it would make them very strong, but also because they liked the flavor.

There were a good many hippos near this camp. If one went down to the river during the heat of the day, one might wait for hours, but no sign of any such creature would appear. But towards evening they were to be seen and heard all the time. I think a hippo must be able to stay for hours under water, though he may get breath unseen by putting up the tip only of his nose under cover of something.

The natives rarely succeed in killing them. When they do, it is generally by moonlight, when the hippos come out of the water and roam about on land. The native hunter conceals himself beside one of the well-worn tracks and shoots the poor animal at a range of about two yards. It is lucky that the natives have no better guns, as in the dry season the river is so shallow in parts that when they (the hippos) sink one can see their every movement under water.

Marabout storks and vultures were in great numbers, and betook themselves regularly to the river at midday.

IN OTHER PEOPLE'S WINDOWS

Most of Us, It Would Seem, Find a Certain Fascination in Gazing Into Them.

Reading some books is like looking into people's houses in the evening after the lights are turned on and before the shades are pulled down, declares a well-known writer.

To some of us, looking into people's houses is more interesting and even more exciting than the theater. When the darkness makes all things outside lonesome and strange we like to take one small, polite look into a sitting-room where there is a fire and a reading table and a family, or into a dining-room, where another family is eating supper, and where we can see the cups and plates marching in dusty array around the room on a plate rail. Usually we see only plain folk, doing the most ordinary things, and still we like to look at them and like to read the books that make us feel as though we were looking.

Of course, it is not at all fair to accuse Dickens of sneaking around and peering in at parties and fireside conversations, and nobody is going to believe that Longfellow spied upon his neighbors, or that Whittier was eavesdropping when he wrote Snowbound, or that Burns was watching the cotter's cottage that Saturday night or that Riley saw all he has told us about by looking through his folks' parlor or kitchen windows. But when we read the things these men wrote we feel as though we ourselves had been stealing glimpses into other people's houses.

It is very true that many of us prefer reading something thrilling, and fascinating about very fashionable society, or very Bohemian artists, or a very wild west, or something very troublesome about problems, or very sentimental about souls or states of mind. These things are so very different from anything that anybody really knows that they seem to be as eagerly read as easily written. But those of us who read these things can never know the peculiar, satisfied and comfortable enjoyment that the books which are like looking into people's windows give the rest of us.

Mussulmans of the World.

Turkish periodicals publish statistics of the Mussulman population of the world, and, although it is difficult to follow absolutely the statistics of a country where records are so imperfectly kept, the approximate results are as follows:

The Ottoman Empire contains 24,000,000 persons, of whom 6,000,000 live in Europe and 18,000,000 in Asia. But of these not more than one-half profess the faith of Mahomet.

The Russian empire has quite a proportion of the followers of Mahomet, numbering several millions. In India there are some 50,000,000 Mussulmans, while Persia, Afghanistan, Arabia and other independent countries in Asia have about 20,000,000 more. The Dutch colony of Java, with Borneo, the Philippines and other adjacent islands, contain several million besides.

All the northern and central part of Africa rests firm in the faith of the prophet.—Harper's Weekly.

INCORPORATION

The main issue of the day with a few of the people of Carrizozo seems to be "Incorporation" and it is a matter to which much thought should be given.

The Commercial Club at its Monday night meeting took exactly the right step when it recommended that a Public Mass Meeting, not under the auspices of the club, be held on May 27th, at the Methodist Church, at which time the matter could be thoroughly gone into and discussed The law can be read at that time and the question thrashed out from all points of view.

Some of the questions that do not seem to be clear are:

Can the town government tax all unimproved property as well as improved property for the up keep of a city government? (It is contended that a town cannot tax vacant lots, etc., for the up keep of the town government but for street and light improvements only in front of lots)

Will incorporation rid the town of the subscription form of government now maintained, and fully relieve the business men from continuously contributing to the upkeep of certain local enterprises? For instance, will incorporation enable the town government to levy a tax for the up-keep of a base ball team, the Experimental Farm, county festival expenses each fall, and other like contributions that the townsmen must pay and which amount to considerable each year? Of course incorporation would not relieve any of these expenses nor relieve many small contributions necessary each year. Incorporation can only improve the town, in the way of lights, streets, water and police.

Would the town incorporation tax on the people added to the state and county tax be so great that the town would be an undesirable place to live?

Would the occupation and taxes on improved property discourage business enterprises and the improving of town property. The present state and county tax is already excessive and would the addition of a town tax retard the progress of the town by discouraging the investment of capital.?

Would the benefits that are supposed to accrue from incorporation justify the additional expense?

What would the benefits of incorporation be?

These among other questions that have arisen should be thoroughly discussed before any definite action is taken as to the incorporation of the town. Of course everyone is for what will most benefit Carrizozo

That the confusing of Incorporation of the town with the action of the County Commissioners in ordering the enforcement of the empounding of domestic animal law is fatuious. The fact that the Commissioners prohibited the running at large of domestic animals on the Carrizozo townsites has any relation, connection, or bearing on the incorporation of the town is difficult to imagine.

THE HIGH SCHOOL AGAIN

The Outlook this week received a letter containing the opinion of the Attorney General, Frank W Clancy, on the high school situation who holds that an election will be necessary before Carrizozo can participate in the High School Fund.

We give below the opinion:

"Dear Sir: You letter of the 28th ult. was duly received; but it appeared to me only proper that I should consult with your District Attorney before expressing my own opinion on the subject about which you wrote me. Therefore, I immediately wrote to him, but received no answer until today, on account of his absence from home.

"You say that it is contended that Carrizozo will have to be elected as the seat for a county high school before it can have its share of the high school fund. From a careful reading of both acts on this subject, the first of which is Chapter 57 of the Laws of 1912, while the other is Chapter 20 of the Laws of 1913, I am of opinion that there can be no county high school unless it is established by an election in the manner prescribed in the statutes From what Mr. Hamilton writes, I understand that he is of the same opinion. The act of 1913 is a mere amendment of two sections of the act of 1912 and the last sentence is, "High schools now located and established in any county of the state shall be designated and established as county high schools as provided in this act."

Yours truly,
FRANK W. CLANCY,
Attorney General.

On the other hand we understand that the Deming, N. M., people are contending that no election is necessary under circumstances surrounding their high school which was being maintained at the time of the passage of the 1912 act, and that town is in the position as the town of Carrizozo.

SOLOMON E. BERRY DEAD

Parsons Correspondent

During the past year a number of the oldest settlers of Lincoln County have paseed away and the last to go was Mr Solomon E Berry who died at his home after a short illness Saturday morning, May 10th.

Mr. Berry was apparently as well as ever Thursday morning, ate a hearty dinner at noon and returned to his work. Soon afterwards he was taken violently ill with acute indigestion. Dr. Lucas of Carrizozo was called Friday and although seriously ill no one considered his illness dangerous. Saturday morning, however, he was taken suddenly worse and died at 10:30. Mr. Berry had just passed his seventy-fourth birthday which was celebrated by a family dinner party. Although a native of Iowa Mr. Berry had lived for thirty years on the Bonito and was loved and respected by every one who knew him. The funeral services were held at the Angus school house Monday, at two p. m, and were conducted by the Baptist minister, Rev. Dodson who resides there Many friends of Mr. Berry from Carrizozo, Capitan, Parsons and the surrounding country attended the services and burial, paying their last respects to one who had always proved a good friend and neighbor. Mr. Berry was laid to rest beside his little grand daughter in the Angus cemetery and his grave was covered with flowers and greens. Besides Mr. Berry's wife daughter, son-in-law T. J. Grafton and four grand children who were with him when he died, he is survived by two sons and two daughters in Iowa

NOGAL NOTES

(Too late for last week)

The Nogal school is progressing nicely.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Gatewood last week a son, and all are doing well.

Bowen Zumwalt has sold his farm on the Mesa to L. R Hust and has bought the old Billie Lea place.

Mr. Cox our postmaster has moved the Jack Greer house on to a lot in the front of the Anderson building.

The freeze last week did not kill all the fruit in Nogal as was supposed There will be quite a crop of apples here and some peaches.

ALTO "ALLUSION"

Alto is not cutting up much just now; the people seem to know when they are doing well and the only kick is when the Carrizozo Real Estate gets high enough to come over Mount Blanco.

School is closed and most of the people here are busy farming and some of the crops are just being gathered from last season which makes us think of Old Mexico where they gather and plant at the same time.

We understand that the E. P. & S. W. R. R. Company have had men in these parts to get prices on all lands that have water rights on Eagle Creek with a view of buying same. They seem to be trying to get some more of Uncle Sam's mountain water, regardless of the suit now pending. The people seem to want to wait and see how things are going to turn out, there are several reasons advanced for the move on the part of the Railroad company.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

HOPE FOR THE SODOMITES.

Genesis 19:12-17, 23-29.—March 9.

"Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch no unclean thing."—2 Corinthians 6:17.

WHEN Abraham was ninety-nine years old—in 2021 B. C.—his encampment was at Hebron. There the Lord and two angels appeared to him as men. He knew them not, but entertained them. (Hebrews 13:2.) The one called the Lord was doubtless the Logos, subsequently man's Redeemer. The Lord on this occasion told Abraham that Ishmael would not be the heir of the Promise, but that shortly Sarah would have a son. The next year Isaac was born.

As Abraham walked a little distance with his visitors, he learned who they really were, and that the destruction of Sodom was imminent. Nobly and generously he petitioned God's Mercy on the Sodomites. The Lord gave assurance that if there were even ten righteous in Sodom, it would be spared.

"Sarah shall have a son."

Thus of the Sodomites and the antediluvians God made illustrations of the great lesson, "All the wicked will He destroy." We are to remember that these are not illustrations of eternal torment, but of destruction. These merely passed into destruction a few years sooner than ordinarily; for the death sentence passed upon humanity in Adam. But since "Jesus Christ by the grace of God tasted death for every man," all of Adam's children will eventually come from the tomb.

"And Delivered Righteous Lot."

St. Peter informs us that Lot was not in sympathy with his surroundings. (2 Peter 2:7, 8.) The flight of Lot, with his wife and two unmarried daughters, is simply told in our lesson. The intimation of verse 29 is that God's Mercy toward Lot was because of his relationship to Abraham. This view is consistent with all Scriptural statements on the subject.

Adam's entire race was condemned to death in him. Hence Divine Justice owed them nothing. Divine Mercy had entered into a special Covenant with Abraham, but that Covenant extended to none others, except Abraham's seed Therefore Lot's relationship to Abraham was the only reason why God should favor him.

"There's a Wideness in God's Mercy."

This does not signify that God is merciless, but that, having provided a way by which He will exercise Mercy, He rarely exercises it outside of that channel. The channel of God's Mercy is Christ Jesus, who declared, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." St. Peter substantiates this statement. See Acts 4:12. The Scriptures clearly teach that none were saved until Jesus died. This is the key which unlocks the wonders of God's grace even though to some the statement may seem astounding.

We should rid ourselves of the thought that the holy men of the past went to Heaven, and the remainder of mankind to eternal torture. The Bible most distinctly declares that all, both good and bad, "slept with their fathers." They still sleep, awaiting the time when Abraham's Seed (Galatians 3:16, 29) will be completed, and set up God's Kingdom on earth, overthrow sin and death, and deliver the captives from the tomb.

The First, or Chief Resurrection.

The First Resurrection began with our Lord Jesus and is not yet complete; for all the Elect are to share both His sacrificial death and His Resurrection. These will reign with Christ a thousand years, and as the Seed of Abraham, fully empowered, will bless all those redeemed by the precious blood of Calvary.—Revelation 20:4.

St. Paul emphasizes this point in Hebrews 11:38-40, declaring that while the Ancient Worthies received indications of God's favors, nevertheless that favor can come only through Christ. Consequently they cannot reach everlasting life until the Spiritual Seed of Abraham shall have been completed. Jesus also attested that they had not gone to Heaven, saying, "No man hath ascended up to Heaven."—John 3:13

SYNOPSIS.

Harding Kent calls on Louise Farrish to propose marriage and finds the house in great excitement over the attempted suicide of her sister Katharine. Kent starts an investigation and finds that Hugh Crandall, suitor for Katherine, who had been forbidden the house by General Farrish, had talked with Katharine over the telephone just before she shot herself. A torn piece of yellow paper is found, at sight of which General Farrish is stricken with paralysis. Kent discovers that Crandall has left town hurriedly. Andrew Elser, an aged banker, commits suicide about the same time as Katharine attempted her life. A yellow envelope is found in Elser's room. Post Office Inspector Davis, Kent's friend, takes up the case. Kent is convinced that Crandall is at the bottom of the mystery. Katharine's strange outcry puzzles the detectives. Kent and Davis search Crandall's room and find an address, Lock Box 17, Ardway, N. J. Kent goes to Ardway to investigate and becomes suspicious of a "Henry Cook." A woman commits suicide at the Ardway Hotel. A yellow letter also figures in this case. Kent calls Louise on the long distance telephone and finds that she had just been called by Crandall from the same booth. "Cook" disappears. The Ardway postmaster is missing. Inspector Davis arrives at Ardway and takes up the investigation. He discovers that the dead woman is Sarah Sacket of Bridgeport. Louise telephones Kent imploring him to drop the investigation. Kent returns to New York to get an explanation from Louise. He finds the body of a woman in Central Park and more yellow letters.

CHAPTER IX—(Continued).

I was puzzled beyond expression. Why should Louise refuse to see me? I was conscious of having done nothing to offend her. If only I could see her for just a minute to find out what was the matter! I felt that I must reach her. For an instant I was tempted to brush past the maid and force my way in. Surely Louise of her own accord would not treat me thus. She must be beside herself with grief. Perhaps she was under the same malign influence that so distressed her sister. Yet even in the depths of despair we observe the conventionalities.

"Will you ask Miss Louise when she can see me?" I found myself saying in calm tones to the maid.

Again she closed the door in my face. Again I waited.

"Miss Louise says that she will see you if you will return in an hour," was the message that was brought me.

I left the Farrish door and stumbled blindly up the street. The plight in which I found myself seemed inexplicable, maddening. I was sure Louise loved me. Had she not turned to me in the first hour of her distress? Had she not telephoned me when her sister shot herself? Had she not permitted me to take her in my arms? Had she not commissioned me to solve the mystery of the yellow letter? Yet why had she bade me discontinue my search? Why had she shut her door to me? What could be her motive? What could have influenced her against me?

Torn by a hundred conflicting emotions, I traversed street after street, not knowing or caring whither my feet were taking me. I must have retraced my steps, for I found myself in the block where the Farrishs lived. I looked at my watch and saw it was still half an hour before the time I had been told to return. I turned away from the house and wandered aimlessly on. There was some mystery in Louise's conduct I could not fathom. She refused to see me, yet just ahead of me some one else had been admitted to the house. A wave of jealousy swept over me. Who was this other man? I racked my brain, striving to recall his appearance, trying to remember what there was that was familiar about him.

All at once it came to me. A wild rage filled me. I knew now who he was. A picture of the office in that little hotel in New Jersey came to my mind, as it looked when I stood by the stove drying my clothes. A man had come to the desk and got his key and had walked past me as he went to his room. I knew now where I had seen that man who was admitted to the Farrish home. It was the man called Cook.

It was Hugh Crandall.

CHAPTER X.

Who Was the Thief?

An unbidden and unwelcome guest, jealousy came and sat by the altar of my heart, stirring the fires of my love for Louise into furious darts of flame that scorred my soul. That Crandall—for I was positive now that the visitor who had entered the Farrish home had been he—should have been admitted to the house with so many things pointed to his guilt, while I, an accepted lover, and certainly Louise's faithful partner, had been barred with such scant courtesy, filled me with dark, consuming rage. I felt that all claims of friendship and of service, even disregarding the still stronger claims of honest love, entitled me to far different treatment.

Yet even in the burst of anger that overwhelmed me there was not a single thought of harshness toward Louise. I felt that if I could but see her she would explain everything satisfactorily. It was toward Crandall that all my wrath was directed. Feeling as I did, sure that he was responsible for Katharine's attempted suicide and for her poor father's plight, I feared that his visit to the house boded ill for Louise. Undoubtedly his malign influence had persuaded her to bid me drop my efforts to solve the mystery. He must have realized that I was close on his trail, so dangerously close that with the effrontery of the daring criminal he had ventured to come to the house in one last effort to thwart my plans for his exposure.

As I became calmer I resolved on a course of action. Louise's strange request to me over the telephone must have been made because she was dominated by the fear of this villain who had brought disaster on her father and sister. Perhaps she feared that some evil might befall me if I persisted in trying to run him to earth. Possibly she was afraid that still greater evil might come to those she loved. I felt that for her own happiness it was necessary that I should continue my course. I would go on with my investigation and once for all free her from the crushing thrall of this hidden evil. I would wait where I was until Crandall had left the house, then I would insist on seeing her and telling her my resolve, nor would I permit her to dissuade me from it.

On the corner was a drug-store. Sheltered by its awning I took my stand to wait until Crandall left the house. I could see the Farrish door, yet my presence there under the awning would hardly be noticed. I had not long to wait. In about five minutes the door opened and the caller emerged. This time I had an opportunity to get a good look at him. I was right. His face was that of the man who had been registered in the Ardway hotel as Henry Cook, who had so abruptly left the room when the inquest was being held as I had begun to ask questions about the yellow letter, who had driven from the town behind the fastest horse obtainable.

He came swinging down the street past where I stood. As he came closer I was amazed to note that his face was not the unnatural color of the morphine user's that I expected, but ruddy with health. His eyes, however, wore a strained expression and his brow was knotted with wrinkles. I was strongly tempted to spring out from where I stood as he passed, to seize him by the throat and to make him tell me all I wished to know about the hideous mystery. Yet better judgment withheld my hand. After all, the evidence I had against him was not of the tangible sort that would convict. Even though I knew of his telephoning Katharine just before she shot herself, even though General Farrish had learned something about him that barred him from the house, even though we had found in his rooms a hypodermic syringe and the address in New Jersey where the third suicide had taken place, even though I myself had noted his suspicious actions there, there was nothing definite enough to warrant seizing him as yet. I watched him as far down the avenue as my eye could follow and then turned toward the Farrish house. This time I was admitted without delay. Apparently the maid had new instructions.

"I'll tell Miss Louise you are here," she said as she showed me into the reception-room.

As I waited I tried to think how I should greet Louise. While there was much that I might reproach her for, I felt that surely it had not been her fault. I knew she must be acting under compulsion. I was determined, though, to let her know that I knew that Hugh Crandall had been in the house.

Suddenly I heard a smothered scream up-stairs and a second later Louise burst into the room. There was terror in her face as she ran to me.

"Oh, Harding," she gasped, "it's gone—stolen!"

"What do you mean? What's stolen?" I cried, seizing her hands tightly in my own.

She was trembling all over and her breath came in quick, short jerks. She was dressed in an automobile hat and coat, but even through the thick folds of her coat I could feel the pulsating of her heart. The new mystery, whatever it was, had been too much for her already overstrained nerves. She was in a condition closely bordering on hysteria.

"Tell me about it, what was it?" I said.

"The yellow letter—it's gone, stolen!"

"Where was it?"

I had taken it with me the morning I went down to Inspector Davis' office, but after he had compared it with the Elser fragment he had returned it to me. I had reclosed it in Katharine Farrish envelope and I carried it in my pocket on my visit to Mrs. Trask's boarding-house. I had not gone it down that. My last recollection of it was placing it in her hand as Davis and I left the house.

"Let me think," she said, trying hard to regain her composure. "When you and Mr. Davis were here the other day you gave it back to me. I took it up-stairs and put it in a drawer in a little desk in my room. I locked the desk and hid the key in a vase on the mantel. I went to the desk just now to get it and it was gone."

"Was the desk locked?"

She nodded.

"Who could have taken it?" I asked. Even as I framed the question there came to me the thought of Crandall's visit. He had been in the hotel in Ardway where the woman committed suicide after reading a yellow letter and tearing it up. The scraps of that letter had disappeared. More likely he had come here just to get that scrap of yellow paper lest its evidence might bring home his crimes.

"Who has been in the house?"

"No one but the doctors and nurses and the servants," said Louise, flushing uneasily as she spoke.

I waited, expecting her to mention Crandall's visit, but though she hesitated for a second she said nothing of it.

"I wonder who could have taken it?" she said after an awkward pause.

"What motive could any one have?" I asked, determined to direct her thoughts to Crandall. "The only person who would have a reason for making away with it would be some one who feared that it might be used against him."

There was a silence while we both pondered the situation.

"You remember," said Louise suddenly, "the agitation my father showed at sight of that paper. If he were not lying paralyzed up-stairs I think he would have tried to gain possession of it."

"How is your father, and your sister?" I asked, suddenly recalling that I had asked after neither of them.

"Katharine is much better," said Louise. "She is entirely conscious, though very weak, but the doctor says that she will in all probability recover quickly. My father's condition remains the same, though he seems to have regained the use of his right hand. He wrote some brief directions to-day about his business."

"Are you sure of all the servants?" I asked.

"All of them have been with us for years; all but one, ever since before my mother's death. I would not think of distrusting any of them."

"Are you certain the house has not been entered in the night?"

I was asking these questions with a view of convincing her that it was impossible for any one but Crandall to have taken the yellow scrap—for any one else to have even a motive for taking it.

"That would be impossible," she said. "All the doors and windows are protected by burglar alarms and I know they are in working order or I would have heard about it."

"There is or there must have been," I said slowly, "some traitor in the house, some thief, some one who had an object in getting hold of that paper."

"There has been no one here," said Louise with a painful effort, "no one answering that description."

"How did you come to look for the paper in your desk?"

"I wanted—" she stopped short.

"Mr. Kent," she said, her entire manner toward me stiffening as she withdrew her hands from mine, "I asked you last night if you would not cease your inquiries at once."

"But—but—" I protestingly began.

"I asked you to do what I requested without any questions. You have told me that you loved me. If that is the case I know you will do what I ask without trying to force my confidence. Isn't it enough for you to know that I wish you to do it?"

"Louise, dear," I said firmly, "a mysterious trail of hidden evil in some way has crossed your home. It has stricken your sister and your father. You yourself asked me to try to find the secret and I vowed that I would. I don't know what your motive is in making this strange request, but I can't believe you are doing it of your own volition. I am certain that you are influenced by fear—fear lest some greater evil will befall, if my efforts to unmask the criminal are successful. Is it not so?"

"Don't ask me, Harding," she begged piteously. "I can't tell you. It is not my secret. I can tell you nothing. Please don't ask me."

More than ever now I was convinced that fear of Crandall dominated her. Quickly following on his telephone message he had come to the house and had cast over her the same mysterious spell as had fallen on her sister. More than ever was I determined to follow the trail of mystery to its end, no matter where it lay or what it cost. What was life to me if the woman I loved was to be for ever under a shadow, in the power of some hidden criminal who might prey on her as he had done on the other members of her family? I felt it my duty toward her to go on and, if I could, compel her to divulge something of what she was holding back from me.

"Why did you want that bit of the yellow letter? What were you going to do with it?"

"I can't tell you. Please don't ask me."

"Why do you want me to stop my inquiries?"

"I can't tell you. Please don't ask."

"What was Hugh Crandall doing here this morning?"

The question, direct and blunt as I put it, had almost the same effect as if I had fired a bullet at her. She caught her breath quickly and her face turned pale. I thought that she was going to faint. With a great effort she recovered, and looking me straight in the eye, she answered softly: "Mr. Crandall was not here this morning. What made you think he was?"

I did not try to conceal the open-eyed amazement with which I stared at her as she gave me this unequivocal reply. What could it mean? I could not, would not believe that this high principled, honorable girl would wilfully deceive me, yet I was as sure as that I was standing there that Hugh Crandall had been in the house that morning. Could it have been that he had entered without her knowledge? Was it possible that one of the maids in the Farrish home was in his pay and had permitted him to enter without Louise's knowledge? That might explain the rifling of the locked desk. The maid might know of Louise's habit of hiding the key in a vase. It began to look as if I had a solution of this new mystery. Yet it could hardly be possible for Crandall to have been in the house for fully half an hour without Louise knowing it.

Autograph Tells a Tale

There is always a certain amount of interest attached to the deductions drawn by graphologists from the signatures of eminent men. Here, for example, is an illuminating description of the kaiser's autograph, supplied by his eminent Berlin graphologist:

"To begin with, there is a crochet, a sign of pertinacity, followed by a vertical dash, showing fidelity, energy, regardless of any obstacle. Then there is an acute angle, a sign of dramatic and aggressiveness. The first stroke of the "W" indicates a feeling of superiority over the rest of the universe. The termination of the signature "W" suggests that the sovereign sometimes feels himself struggling with the multitude of his thoughts, or the power of his instincts.

"The other letters forming the signature show similar characteristics," the graphologist proceeds. "The final 'n' is indicative of great diplomacy, which to the analyst suggests subtlety. The letter also suggests the impossibility of the suppression of the 'ego.' The fourth which terminates the imperial autograph shows a suppleness of spirit, a desire to be loved.

"The two terminating points indicate defiance and generally the characteristics are those of an extraordinary imagination."

Insect Pests.

One-fourth of all cultivated crops are destroyed by insects. This means that we pay 25 per cent more for them than we would but for their depredations. This condition increases in direct proportion to the decrease in the bird population which we are slaughtering for food, for millinery or for fun. The great bird army was one of this nation's greatest resources, but, like our forests and our fauna, it has been wasted for "fun," and we "pay the fiddler" by giving up, each year, one-fourth of the greatest farm crop produced by any nation. Such fun comes high.

Lessons in Housekeeping.

A young girl of fourteen whom I know plans and cooks the dinner at home one evening of each week, and her mother stays away from the kitchen entirely on this occasion. The girl's father gives her a small amount of money in the morning before he leaves home, and she does the marketing with this sum. The event is anticipated with great pleasure by all the members of the family as well as by the little cook, and the nourishing and appetizing dinner she serves is certainly surprisingly good.—Woman's Home Companion.

JUDGE CURED, HEART TROUBLE.

I took about 6 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills for Heart Trouble from which I had suffered for 5 years. I had dizzy spells, my eyes puffed, my breath was short and I had chills and backache. I took the pills about a year ago and have had no return of the palpitations. Am now 63 years old, able to do lots of manual labor, am well and hearty and weigh about 200 pounds. I feel very grateful that I found Dodds Kidney Pills and you may publish this letter if you wish. I am serving my third term as Probate Judge of Gray Co. Yours truly,

Alarmed for His Mother.

Little Harry, hanging about the kitchen, saw a stuffed fowl sewed up before roasting. He was much impressed by the sight. A few nights later his mother, hastily dressing to go out, found that a new frock had been sent home without the proper allowance of hooks and eyes. Summoning aid, her sister basted the frock together up the back.

"Grandma," said Harry, seeking the source of perennial sympathy and comprehension, "come and see what auntie's doing to mamma. I think she's going to roast her, for she's sewing her all up."

Who's Doing the Talking?

"A business man should never take his stenographer out to lunch."

"Why not?"

"Oh, it causes talk."

"Of course it causes talk, but if the business man will abstain from cocktails, he won't talk to her half as much as he might."

The Kind.

"I wonder if people in Mars have dogs."

"If they do, they must be moon-dogs."

The only people who have no regret for anything they ever said are those have who never said anything of importance.

Many a man fails to forge ahead because he has the looking backward habit.

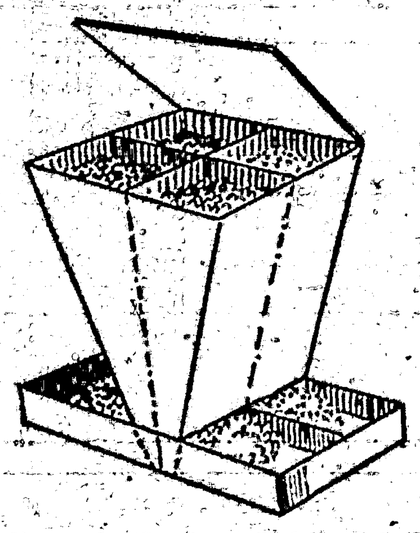
BREEDS OF CHICKENS

Expressions From Many Successful Poultry Raisers.

Some Favor Plymouth Rocks, While Others Incline to Leghorns—Proper Care of Birds Is of Great Importance.

The experience of successful poultry raisers in various parts of the country shows that every breed of fowls has its ardent admirers. Here is what some of them say:

"The Plymouth Rock (barred) has paid us best of any breed of chickens we have ever kept. We have tried various kinds, but several years ago we discarded all but the Plymouth Rock, and have had perfect satisfaction in a constant supply of fine, large eggs; large, fat broilers and a choice fat hen when wanted. We feed whole wheat, and the fowls have access to wheat bran, and in very cold weather, corn, twice a day. Keep broken crockery, well pounded, for them, and dust barrels and water of easy access. Feed young chickens five times a day on biscuit and egg, bread soaked in sweet milk, and when five weeks old, feed on sour milk and whole wheat and corn bread. Have a good, dry house and keep them free from vermin by using crumbled trash tobacco and powdered sulphur in nests, and occasionally saturate roosting poles with kerosene. Set them on end and set fire to kerosene and burn off from bottom to top. No disease for years.



Hopper for Dry Feed—Division Boards Should Reach Down to the Bottom, and Into These Different Compartments Should Be Placed Grit.

Have run of orchard. Turn out pullets of first hatching for winter layers."—Mrs. W. E. E., Kentucky.

"Black Spanish for eggs and Dorkings for sitters, are my favorites and they have made money for me."—W. F. A., Texas.

"We have discarded all but the Brown Leghorns and sell the eggs to a dealer in Washington, D. C., who makes a specialty of fancy Leghorn eggs and who pays an extra price for them."—A. E. B., Pennsylvania.

"I keep Rose Comb Brown Leghorns exclusively as the best for all purposes. I feed whole grain in the morning, one-half peck to 50 hens, and in winter wheat, corn and sorghum seed. On very cold days I give warm feed in the morning. Keep roosts and house absolutely free from lice."—G. C., Indiana.

"I keep Light Brahmas and raise them for market. When ready for market they dress eight pounds and sell for 15 cents per pound at wholesale, and they cost me only 5 cents a pound to raise."—G. M. W., Massachusetts.

"After repeated trial and observation of all breeds I have settled down to the White Plymouth Rocks exclusively. Cleanliness and a dust bath are essential to success. Water and milk before the fowls all the time."—J. C. S., Virginia.

"I have found White Leghorns best for eggs and Buff Cochins for market poultry."—H. A. F., New York.

"Brown Leghorns for me, first, last and all the time. Best layers, best color to escape hawks, best table fowl for their size, best money makers."—L. J. E., California.

Milking Machines.

A milking machine experiment conducted in England has been closed with the announced results that there was less contamination of the milk by bacteria in machine milking compared with hand milking as it is usually carried on. This is contrary to experiments made by many investigators in this country.

DOUBLE WELL EASILY MADE

Satisfactory Method Given and Illustrated for Securing Water on Both Sides of Line.

In reply to a query as to the best method for getting water from a well 25 feet deep with never less than four feet of water, which is 30 feet from the line on a neighbor's land, placing the pump on the other side of the fence is given by J. S. Woodward in the Rural New Yorker as follows:

Dig a false well on his side of the fence at any place desired about six feet deep. Then dig a trench from that to well deep enough to be below frost. Run a one and one-quarter inch galvanized pipe from one well to the other, putting an elbow over the well and extending pipe down to six inches of the bottom with a check valve and strainer. In the false well put an elbow on the end of the pipe, turning down and into this put a short piece of pipe as long as the cylinder to be used on the pump. On this short piece of pipe put another elbow with a short nipple and another elbow turning up; into this a close nipple on to which connect the pump cylinder. The object of making this turn in false well is to make sure that in case anything should get into the pump to let water back into the well the cylinder being below the line of pipe to the well would always remain full of water and pump would start without priming. The rough sketch shows how it is to be done. But he will do well to remember that extra care must be taken to guard against frost in the shallow false well, for it will not have the water below to keep it warm.

FORMULA FOR A WHITEWASH

Constant Requests for Recipe Justify Reproduction of One That Has Been Printed Before.

An excellent formula for making whitewash is given below in response to constant requests for the same:

This has been published before, but as it is constantly being asked for we give it again.

Take a half bushel of unslaked lime, slake it with boiling water, cover it during the process to keep in steam, strain the liquor through a fine sieve and add to it a peck of salt previously dissolved in warm water, three pints of ground rice boiled to a thin paste and stirred in while hot. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture, stir well and let stand a few days, covered as nearly air-tight as possible. It can be colored by adding ochre, lampblack, ground keel or bluing to suit.

Keep Out Diseases.

Painting the wounds left after pruning the larger limbs, will keep out fungus diseases and prevent drying out. White lead is best for this purpose.

DAIRY NOTES

The three-minute churn is a delusion.

Milk quietly, cleanly, quickly, regularly.

Cow ties are rapidly taking the place of stanchions.

Dispose of the self-sucking cow. She is bad property.

Between extreme heat and extreme cold it the best time to dehorn cattle.

If a cow is pinched for food she will not yield a profitable quantity of milk.

Nothing will solve the run down farm problem like a bunch of dairy cows.

The value of a calf depends upon the treatment it receives as well as upon blood.

The silo has now become almost a necessity on the farm, if profits are looked for.

Don't let the cow run with the herd while in heat. She disturbs them all. Confine her.

When a cow, not a kicker by habit, puts her foot in the pail, there is good reason for it.

The man with five cows and a separator is better off than his neighbor with eight cows and no machine.

Let us remember in all this discussion of intensive farming that intensiveness in the dairy is a big asset.

Remember that your future cows are now wrapped in calf skins and that it behooves you to give them careful attention.

That gilt-edge butter can be made on the farm is being proved every day, but not where strict attention is not paid to cleanliness and detail.

CARE OF NUTS AND FRUITS

Sometimes Too Little Attention Is Paid to Subject That Is Really Important.

Nuts when bought shelled should be scalded, dried in the oven and put away in glass jars ready for use, because as a rule they are not shelled in sanitary surroundings. If exposed to dampness, nuts mold and decay, and even under favorable conditions the nut oils and fats become rancid on long-continued storing. In the main, however, the keeping qualities of most nuts are excellent, but they should be stored in such a way that they may be safe from the attacks of insect enemies.

Dried fruits, like dates, raisins and figs, are also favorable resting-places for dirt and dust, as almost anything which the air-currents place in the sticky surface will remain there. Fortunately it is becoming a common practice to buy such fruits in closed packages which protect them to a great extent from dust and insects, so that the dried fruits, if clean in the first place, will remain clean. When bought in bulk they should be scalded to kill any germs, washed thoroughly, dried and put away clean.

Making Eggs Creole.

Six eggs, one teaspoonful of salt, one cuptul of rice, four peeled fresh tomatoes, one large onion, and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Wash and boil the rice. Put the butter into a pan, add the onion and pepper chopped; shake until they are soft, not browned. Cut the tomatoes into halves and press out the seeds; then cut them in pieces; add them to the pepper and onion, cook for 15 minutes and add the salt. Put the eggs into warm water, bring to boiling point, and keep them at boiling point for a quarter of an hour. Remove the shells. Cut the eggs into slices and put them into a serving dish, pour over the sauce; heap the rice at the ends or at the sides and send to the table.

Grape Fluff.

One-quarter box shredded gelatin or one tablespoon of granulated gelatin, one-quarter cup cold water, three-quarters cup sugar, juice of one lemon, one cup of grape juice, white of three eggs. Soften the gelatin in the cold water and dissolve by standing the dish in hot water. Dissolve the sugar in the fruit juice and strain the gelatin into it. Set in ice water and stir occasionally until it begins to thicken, then add gradually the well-beaten whites of the eggs and beat until the whole is very light and stiff enough to hold its shape. Pile lightly in a glass serving dish and serve with whipped cream or soft custard. This is sufficient for six servings and is delicious and wholesome.

French Designs in Lamps.

Some of the old French designs in porcelain lamps fitted for electric light are very quaint and original. The shades are carried out in the same patterns and colors and are hand painted on silk or gauze, according to the style. Some have porcelain shades. The shades are charming and are quite a change from the ordinary style.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

More cakes fail from "guessing" at proportions than is generally supposed. Use a divided and marked cup, and weigh accurately.

Celery and lettuce may be kept fresh by standing the roots in cold water and throwing over them a damp cloth or dry manila paper. They should, before using, be washed thoroughly, soaked in ice water and dried on a towel.

Onions that are overstrong in flavor may be rendered less so by slicing, then putting in a collander and pouring boiling water over them. After this plunge into ice water and let remain for half an hour. This will leave them sweet and crisp.

To remove scorch marks from fireproof dishes, cook them in strong borax water until the ugly brown marks upon them can be rubbed off with a cloth.

If whites of eggs are not perfectly cold, or if they are too fresh they will not beat very stiff. Cream will not whip well unless at least thirty-six hours old and very cold.

Mayonnaise dressing will separate when too much salt has been added to the egg yolks, or when the oil has been dropped to fast, or if the ingredients are not thoroughly cleaned when used.

Cabbage Salad.

Remove the center from a white cabbage, leaving a shell. Shred center and mix with mayonnaise. Chill, fill cabbage shell, arrange on a thick bed of parsley and garnish top of shell with a border of parsley.

Caramel Pudding.

Melt one cup sugar, add one pint scalded milk; let this dissolve thoroughly, then add three tablespoons cornstarch, one teaspoon vanilla, one cup of rolled walnuts. Serve with whipped cream.

A Negative Merit.

She—Have you any strawberries?

Dealer—Yes'm. Here they are, a quarter a box.

She—Goodness! They're miserable looking, and so green.

Dealer—I know, mum, but there ain't enough in a box to do you any harm.

Does Backache Worry You?

Many who suffer with backache and weak kidneys are unnaturally irritable and fretful. Bad kidneys fail to eliminate all the uric acid from the system, keeping you "on edge" and causing rheumatic, neuralgic pains.

When your back aches, and you notice signs of bladder irregularities, suspect your kidneys and begin using Doan's Kidney Pills, the best recommended special kidney remedy.

An Arkansas Case

Mrs. Joseph Gross, Church St., Morrilton, Ark., says: "For weeks I was all doubled over with pain I became so dizzy I had to grasp something to keep from falling and my ankles were swollen to nearly twice their natural size. None of the doctors understood my case and I felt myself sinking lower day by day. I improved rapidly through the use of Doan's Kidney Pills and before long was entirely cured."
