First National Bank Soon to Be in New Home

An Up-to-Date Building With New and Advanced Features to Be Completed in Short Time.

Wedensday we had the occasion to visit the First National Bank and was shown over the building that is rapidly nearing completion. In many respects this will be one of the most complete and up to date buildings in the state. The owners have spared neither time nor expense in their efforts to get the best that is to be had for the building, furniture and fixtures. We take pleasure in giving a short description of the work as it will stand when completed.

The main building is 24x60 and 15 feet high, the main banking room is 40 feet long and 25 feet wide; the entire floor of the lobby will be covered with tile while back of the counter the working space has a floor of cement over which will be laid a thick cork carpet. In the lobby will be a settee, a double check desk with sight shield, two wall check desks and an oval glass topped check table. The counter will be of the famous Tavernell marble which has a brown tint, surmounted by triple plate grilling and oak top screen. All the furniture and fixtures of the interior of the building will be oak and will harmonize with the counter and other fixtures. In the rear will be a large room for the directors and the use of the public generally. This room will be 20x16 and will be fitted with a large oak table and eight chairs to match, the floor of oak covered with carpet, all interior trimmings such as window and door facings to be of oak. Mattera have been arranged so that the directors room can be entered either from behind the counter or from the lobby. At the end of the working space is a large concrete vault 8x12, below this is a second vault of same size that is entered from the basement, on top of all is a large concrete tank from which water is drawn for the lavatory and toilet, the lavatory being situated in the corner of the directors room back of the vault: water from the roof is run into this tank situated on top of the upper vault.

In the basement is a new Spencer steam heater installed by F. A. English. This furnace is equipped to burn either hard or soft coal or coke. The building was erected by the contractors Little and White. The entire inside work, including the decorating and painting, will be done by The W. D. Collins Co., Denison, Texas.

The upper vault is closed by a beautiful new Victor Door: the lower by a Victor door not so expensive. Into the upper vault will be placed one of the newest and latest Victor Burgler Proof Safes equipped with silver chest base and American Bankers Association Triple Time Lock.

Mr. Brickley took some time to explain to us the workings of the new Burroughs Electric Posting Machine. A great deal of the clerical work of the bank is done on this machine. Not only is the individual ledger posted on it daily, but also the statements and general ledger. Mr. Brickley stated that to the best of his knowledge and belief, very few banks in the state were keeping the general ledger on the posting machine. The system of posting the general ledger on the machine was worked out by a cashier of one of the banks at Carlsbad N. M. and so far as we know is the only other bank to use the machine for the general ledger. All the other books of the bank are the newest and most up to date that money can buy. All the books are loose leaf, one feature that was explained by Mr. Brickley was the working of the loose leaf sysem in the matter of reducing the number of books to handle. He showed us a book equipped with tags took the place of what was formerly

Carrizozo Schools Open Sept. 3rd

The schools of Carrizozo will begin the term Monday, September third. The morning will be devoted to enrollment and clasification of pupils: in the afternoon the teachers will meet with Supt. Conway to discuss methods and plans to make the work for the term effective and harmonious.

The teachers in charge of the year's work are Supt. T. W. Conway, Miss Ida Shimphff, principal of High School, and Miss Bernice Morrel, assistant high school instructor. In the grades Mrs. M. L. Blaney, principal, assisted by Misses Blanche Garvin, Iona Stephens, Mamie Humphrey, Olivia Kennedy, Ivy Lindsey, and Mrs. Nora Massie. The place made vacant by the resignation of Miss Mildred Peters is not as yet filled, but the board have two highly qualified teachers in view.

Most of these teachers are well known to the Carrizozo patrons by their successful work in the past years. The new-comers are valuable additions to the corps: Supt. Conway is one of the best known educators of the state, having been in charge of the Raton city schools for eight years, member of the State Board of Education, president of the N. M. Educational Association, and an institute conductor second to none. Miss Morrell is a new-comer to this state: she brings excellent credentials from Neaho, Mo. High School and Drury College.

Sad Accident Occured Near Rabenton Tues.

Roy Owens the Unfortunate Victim of a Careless Scheme for Self Protection —In Critical Condition.

On Tuesday morning, August 21st, Roy Owens, Chad Munk, Bill Thorpe left Carrizozo for Corono, by the way of Rabenton. After leaving Rabenton they lost their way and wandered aimlessly about until about nine o'clock in the evening they came to what they considered was a deserted cabin. Mr. Owens was the first to reach the cabin and on opening the door, which opens to the outside, a rifle was discharged from the interior of the cabin. The ball came through the door and entered Mr. Owens' right breast, passing through the lung and out at the muscle of his arm.

His companions after making him as comfortable as possible, began to investigate the cause of the shooting. They found the cabin without an occupant, and also found that a trap gun had been arranged inside the door for the evident purpose of warding off invaders, who had doubtless been stealing from the cabin owner.

Mr. Owens was taken in his car back to Rabenton, where he was left in care of a Mexican family. Mr. Thorpe and Mr. Munk proceeded to White Oaks, where they telephoned for Sheriff Hyde and Dr. R. T. Lucas. After giving the wounded man medical attention they set out to find the owner of the cabin. He was found a short distance from where the accident occured, living with a neighboring ranchman. He told the Sheriff that he had lately been the victim of thieves, who had broken in his cabin and stole his food, clothing and belongings. He said that the intention of the trap gun was to scare more than to injure anyone who might prowl around his place with mischievous intent. Mr. Page was arrested and is now confined in the county jail to await a hearing.

Mr. Owens was brought to the Lucas Hospital where, according to advices, he is resting easy, but the outlook for his ultimate recovery is not hopeful.

It was a deplorable misfortune, but like all others of this nature, it will only serve as an object lesson to all parties concerned to be more careful in the future.

Mrs. F. J. Sager and daughter Esther, were in El Paso this week. They were guests at the Hotel Zieger.

Mrs Dr. McKeon will entertain the ladies of the Carrizozo Bridge Club at her home at Ft. Stanton Saturday.

ALAIRE AUSTIN AROUSES THE BRUTAL COVETOUSNESS IN GENERAL LONGORIO'S NATURE AND HE BEGINS TO PLAN ACCORDINGLY.

Mrs. Alaire Austin, a handsome young matron, mistress of Las Palmas ranch, gets lost in the Texas desert and after an all-day struggle wanders into the little camp of David Law, a ranger, hunting a Mexican murderer. Circumstances force her to stay 24 hours in the camp. Law catches his man, kills another and escorts her home. "Young Ed" Austin, drunken wastrel, berates his wife and makes insinuations about the ranger. Austin is secretly in league with Mexican rebels. Alaire starts for her ranch La Feria, in federal Mexican territory, to secure damages for cattle confiscated by soldiery.

"I was coming to that. Your husband, senora, is an active Candelerista."

For a moment Alaire was at a loss; then she replied with some spirit: "We are two people, he and I. La Feria belongs to me."

"Nevertheless his conduct is regrettable," Longorio went on. "Probably evil men have lied to him."

For the first time Dolores stirred. She had watched her countryman with a peculiar fascination. Now she said, as if freed from a spell:

"Pah! Nobody pays heed to Senor Ed. We do not consider him."

Alaire turned upon her with a sharp exclamation, conscious meanwhile that the woman's tone, even more than her words, had enlightened Longorio to some extent. His lifted brows were eloquent of surprise and curiosity, but he held his tongue.

"Am I to understand, then, that you rob me because of my husband's action?" Alaire asked.

"No. I shall help," Longorio beamed enthusiastically. "It shall be the object of my life to serve you, and you and I shall arrange this matter satisfactorily. I have influence, believe me. Duty calls me to Nuevo Pueblo, and you shall return with me as the guest of my government." He rose to his feet, but his eagerness soon gave place to disappointment.

"Thank you," said Alaire, "but I must first go to La Feria and get all the facts."

"Senora! It is a wretched journey. See!" He waved a contemptuous gesture at the car, crowded to congestion. "There is no food; you have no one to wait upon you. In my company you will be safe. Upon my honor, you will enjoy the highest courtesy—"

"Of course. But I must go on. I have Dolores and Jose to look after me." Alaire indicated Sanchez, who had edged his way very close and now stood with admiring eyes fixed upon his hero.

"Yes, mi general," Jose exclaimed, eagerly, "I am here."

Longorio scrutinized the horse-breaker critically. "Your name is—?"

"Jose Sanchez."

"You look like a brave fellow."

Jose swelled at this praise, and no doubt would have made suitable answer, but his employer held out her hand, and General Longorio bent over it, raising it to his lips. He called one of his subordinates closer and ordered that a lieutenant and six soldiers be detached to act as an escort to Mrs. Austin's party. "Senora, the hours will drag until I may see you again and be of further service. Meanwhile I shall be tortured with radiant dreams. Go with God!" For a second time he bowed and kissed the hand he held, then, taking Jose Sanchez intimately by the arm, he turned to the door.

Dolores collapsed into her seat with an exclamation. "Caramba! The man is a demon! And such eyes.. Uf!"

Dolores was interrupted by Longorio's voice beneath the open window. The general stood, cap in hand, holding up to Alaire a solitary wildflower which he had plucked beside the track.

"See!" he cried. "It is the color of your adorable eyes—blue like the sapphire gem." He placed the delicate bloom in Alaire's fingers and was gone.

"Cuidado!" breathed Dolores. "There is blood on it; the blood of innocents. He will burn for a million years in hell, that man."

Jose Sanchez came plowing into Alaire's car, tremendously excited. "Look, senora!" he cried. "Look what the general gave me," and he proudly displayed Longorio's service revolver. Around Jose's waist was the cartridge belt and holster that went with the weapon. "With his own hands he buckled it about me, and he said, 'Jose, something tells me you are a devil for bravery. Guard your mistress with your life, for if any mishap befalls her I shall cut out your heart with my own hands.' Those were his very words, senora. Caramba! There is a man to die for."

Nor was this the last of Longorio's dramatic surprises. Shortly after the train had got under way the lieutenant in command of Alaire's guard brought her a small package, saying:

"The general commanded me to hand you this, with his deepest regard."

Alaire accepted the object curiously. It was small and heavy and wrapped in several leaves torn from a notebook, and it proved to be nothing less than the splendid diamond-and-ruby ring she had admired.

"God protect us, now!" murmured Dolores, crossing herself devoutly.

CHAPTER VI.

Blaze Jones and His Neighbors.

Blaze Jones rode up to his front gate and dismounted in the shade of the big ebony tree. He stepped back and ran an approving eye over another animal tethered there. Of course the youths of this day were nothing like the youths of his own, and yet—Blaze let his gaze linger fondly on the highbred mare and her equipment—here at least was a person who knew a good horse, a good saddle and a good gun.

As he came up the walk he heard Paloma laugh, and his own face lightened, for his daughter's merriment was contagious. Then as he mounted the steps and turned the corner of the "gallery" he uttered a hearty greeting.

"Dave Law! Where in the world did you drop from?"

Law uncoiled himself and took the ranchman's hand. "Hello, Blaze! I been ordered down here to keep you straight."

"Pshaw! Now who's been giving you orders, Dave?"

"Why, I'm with the Rangers."

"Never knew a word of it. Last I heard you was filibustering around with the Maderistas."

Blaze seated himself with a grateful sigh where the breeze played over him. He was a big, bearlike, swarthy man with the square-hewn, deep-lined face of a tragedian, and a head of long, curly hair, which he wore parted in a line over his left ear. Jones was a character, a local landmark. This part of Texas had grown up with Blaze, and he possessed a splendid indifference to the artificial fads of dress and manners. He was plainly an outdoor man.

"So you're a Ranger, and got notches on your gun." Blaze rolled and lit a tiny cigarette, scarcely larger than a wheat straw. "Well, you'd ought to make a right able thief-catcher, Dave, only for your size—you're too long for a man and you ain't long enough for a snake. Still, I reckon a thief would have trouble getting out of your reach, and once you got close to him— How many men have you killed?"

"Counting Mexicans?" Law inquired with a smile.

"Nobody counts them."

"Not many."

"That's good." Blaze nodded and relit his cigarette, which he had permitted promptly to smolder out. "The force ain't what it was. Most of the boys nowadays join so they can ride a horse cross-lots, pack a pair of guns, and give rein to the predilections of a vicious ancestry. They're bad rams, most of 'em."

"There aren't many," said Paloma. "Dave tells me the whole force has been cut down to sixteen."

"That's plenty," her father averred. "It's like when Cap'n Bill McDonald was sent to stop a riot in Dallas. He came to town alone, and when the citizens asked him where his men was, he said 'Ain't I enough? There's only one riot.' Are you workin' up a case, Dave?"

"Um-m—yes! People are missing a lot of stock hereabouts."

"It's these blamed refugees from the war! A Mexican has to steal something or he gets run down and pore. If it ain't stock, it's something else."

Dave Law's duties as a Ranger rested lightly upon him; his instructions were vague, and he had a leisurely method of "working up" his evidence. Since he knew that Blaze possessed a thorough knowledge of this section and its people, it was partly business which had brought him to the Jones home this afternoon.

Strictly speaking, Blaze was not a rancher. He had speculated heavily in raw lands, and for several years past he had devoted his energies to a gigantic colonization scheme. It was by no means a small operation in which he was engaged. The venture had taken foresight, courage, infinite hard work; Blaze was burdened with responsibilities that would have broken down a man of weaker fiber.

But his pet relaxation was reminiscence. His own experience had been wide, he knew everybody in his part of the state, and although events in his telling were sometimes colored by his rich imagination, the information he could give was often of the greatest value—as Dave Law knew.

After a time the latter said, casually, "Tell me something about Tad Lewis."

Blaze looked up quickly. "What do you want to know?"

"Anything. Everything."

"Tad owns a right nice ranch between here and Las Palmas," Blaze said cautiously.

Paloma broke out impatiently. "Why don't you say what you think?" Then to Dave: "Tad Lewis is a bad neighbor, and always has been. There's a ford on his place, and we think he knows more about 'wet' cattle than he cares to tell."

"It's a good place to cross stock at low water," her father agreed; "and Lewis' land runs back from the Rio Grande in its old-Spanish form. It's a natural outlet for those brush-country ranchos. But I haven't anything against Tad except a natural dislike. He stands well with some of our best people, so I'm probably wrong. I usually am."

"You can't call Ed Austin one of our best people," sharply objected Paloma. "They claim that arms are being smuggled across to the rebels, Dave, and, if it's true, Ed Austin—"

"Now, Paloma," her father remonstrated mildly. "The regulars and the river guards watched Lewis' ranch till the embargo was lifted, and they never saw anything."

"I believe Austin is a strong rebel sympathizer," Law ventured.

"Sure! And him and the Lewis outfit are amigos. If you go pirootin' around Tad's place you're more'n apt to make yourself unpopular, Dave. I'd grieve some to see you in a wooden kimono. Tad's too well fixed to steal cattle, and if he runs arms it's because he's a 'galvanized Gringo' himself—married a Mexican, you know."

When mealtime drew near, both Jones and his daughter urged their guest to stay and dine with them, and Dave was glad to accept.

"After supper I'm going to show you our town," Blaze declared. "It's the finest city in south Texas, and growing like a weed. All we need is good farmers. Those we've got are mostly back-to-nature students who leaped a drug counter expecting to light in the lap of luxury. In the last outfit we sold there wasn't three men that knew which end of a mule to put the collar on. But they'll learn. Nature's with 'em, and so am I. God supplies 'em with all the fresh air and sunshine they need, and when they want anything else they come to Old Blaze. Ain't that right, Paloma?"

"Yes, father."

Paloma Jones had developed wonderfully since Dave Law had last seen her. She had grown into a most wholesome and attractive young woman, with an honest, humorous pair of brown eyes. During dinner she did her part with a grace that made watching her a pleasure, and the Ranger found it a great treat to sit at her table after his strenuous scouting days in the mesquite.

"I'm glad to hear Jonesville is prosperous," he told his host. "And they say you're in everything."

"That's right; and prosperity's no name for it. Everybody wants Blaze to have a finger in the pie. I'm interested in the bank, the sugar mill, the hardware store, the ice plant— Say, the ice plant's a luxury for a town this size. D'you know what I made out of it last year?"

"Twenty-seven thousand dollars!" The father of Jonesville spoke proudly, impressively, and then through habit called upon his daughter for verification. "Didn't I, Paloma?"

Miss Paloma's answer was unexpected, and came with equal emphasis: "No, you didn't, father. The miserable thing lost money."

Blaze was only momentarily dismayed. Then he joined his visitor's laughter. "How can a man get along without the co-operation of his own household?" he inquired naively. "Maybe it was next year I was thinking about." Thereafter he confined himself to statements which required no corroboration.

Dave had long since learned that to hold Blaze Jones to a strict accountability with fact was to rob his society of its greatest charm. A slavish accuracy in figures, an arid lack of imagination, reduces conversation to the insipidness of flat wine, and Blaze's talk was never dull. He was a keen, shrewd, practical man, but somewhere in his being there was concealed a tremendous, lopsided sense of humor which took the form of a bewildering imagery. An attentive audience was enough for him, and, once his fancy was in full swing, there was no limit to his outrageous exaggerations. A light of credulity in a hearer's eye filled him with prodigious mirth, and it is doubtful if his listeners ever derived a fraction of the amusement from his fabrications that he himself enjoyed. Paloma's spirit of contradiction was the only fly in his ointment; now that his daughter was old enough to "keep books" on him, much of the story-teller's joy was denied him.

Of course his proclivities occasionally led to misapprehensions; chance acquaintances who recognized him as an artful romancer were liable to consider him generally untruthful. But even in this misconception Blaze took a quiet delight, secure in the knowledge that all who knew him well regarded him as a rock of integrity. As a matter of fact, his genuine exploits were quite as sensational as those of his manufacture.

When, after supper, Blaze had hitched a pair of driving mules to his buckboard, preparatory to showing his guest the glories of Jonesville, Dave said:

"Paloma's getting mighty pretty."

"She's as pretty as a blue-bonnet flower," he father agreed. "And she runs me around something scandalous. I ain't got the freedom of a peon." Blaze sighed and shook his shaggy head. "You know me, Dave; I never used to be scared of nobody. Well, it's different now. She rides me with a Spanish bit, and my soul ain't my own." With a sudden lightening of his gloom, he added: "Say, you're going to stay right here with us as long as you're in town; I want you to see how I cringe."

In spite of Blaze's plaintive tone it was patent that he was inordinately proud of Paloma and well content with his serfdom.

Jonesville proved to be a typical Texas town of the modern variety, and altogether different to the pictured frontier village. All in all, the effect was much like that of a prosperous, orderly northern farming town. To its happy founder it seemed well-nigh perfect, and its destiny roused his maddest enthusiasm. He pointed out the Odd Fellows hall, the Palace Picture theater, with is glaring orange lights and discordant electric piano; he conducted Law to the First National bank, of which Blaze was a proud but somewhat ornamental director; then to the sugar mill, the ice plant and other points of equally novel interest.

Everywhere he went Jones was hailed by friends, for everybody seemed to know him and to want to shake his hand.

"Some town and some body of men, eh?" he inquired, finally, and Dave agreed:

"Yes. She's got a grand framework, Blaze. She'll be most as big as Fort Worth when you fatten her up."

Jones waved his buggy whip in a wide circle that took in the miles of level prairie on all sides. "We've got the whole blamed state to grow in. And, Dave, I haven't got an enemy in the place! It wasn't many years ago that certain people allowed I'd never live to raise this town. Why, it used to be that nobody dared ride with me—except Paloma, and she used to sleep with a shotgun at her bedside."

"You sure have been a responsibility to her."

"But I'm as safe now as if I was in church."

Dave Law turns up some surprising evidence against certain Texans and he makes important plans. It's all in the next installment.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MAGIC LANTERN SHOW.

Daddy was in a great hurry to commence his story. "I have been meaning to tell you this for some time," he said.

"There lived a little girl named Lucy in a lighthouse. She had no other playmates, though every little while her daddy would take her on a trip with her mother to a town to visit some cousins. And how they would love to see her! For Lucy had so many stories to tell them. They were always so busy rushing about that they could not tell many stories, for they had never had the time. And to Lucy it came so easily. Her daddy had always told her stories, and so had her mother, and even the sea had told them to her.

"And these stories Lucy used to tell to her cousins when she went visiting them. These visits were to keep her from being lonely, but she really never minded being alone. There were always books to read, too, and she found plenty to do.

"One day in the lighthouse Lucy was thinking what she would play. 'I don't want to have my magic lantern

"Tomorrow You Will Be Free."

show until later this afternoon,' she said to herself. 'It is much more fun to have it when it is dark.'

"There was a queer cry from outside the lighthouse—on the window ledge—and Lucy looked out. There, against the shutter was a sea gull and another was by him. The window ledge was very wide but they did not seem to be there from choice. Then Lucy remembered what a storm there had been the night before, and she thought that these sea gulls must have been hurt.

"Oh, yes, she remembered how it had blown, for old Mother Ocean had told her stories of the great and wondrous frolic all the creatures of the sea were having. She told Lucy, too, of the fun the old Wind was having blowing for all he was worth.

"Lucy opened the window and took the sea gulls inside. They were very young and they had been hurt. But they had not been hurt very badly. They had simply been hurt a little. But they had been very much frightened.

"All the day Lucy looked after the sea gulls. They grew quite tame, and as if they knew that Lucy was a little girl of the sea.

"It was late in the afternoon when Lucy remembered that she had planned to have a Magic Lantern show.

"'This will be fine,' said Lucy to herself. 'I have two for my audience. Usually I have to be audience and stage manager, too. Sometimes Daddy and Mother come, but they are busy at this time, and usually I am alone. Of course, I have lots of companions in the pictures that I show, and I leave them on the sheet which shows the pictures for a long time and talk to them.'

"Lucy took a great cushion and she put the sea gulls upon it. 'Tomorrow you will be strong enough to be set free,' she told them. 'I know you would hate to be prisoners when you are used to flying over the great sea.'

"The sea gulls paid no attention to the magic lantern show, which disappointed Lucy a little. But still, they did make an audience, and that was quite a treat!

"Lucy had one picture which was of a harbor with many boats and with sea gulls flying up and down. And to her great amusement the sea gulls both looked at the picture and then flew against the sheet, for they thought they were out in the harbor once more!

"Lucy was afraid they might get hurt again, for they were still a little shaky, but how amused she was that the only picture they had noticed was one of creatures like themselves. For this day, though, the show was over.

"'Tomorrow you will be free,' whispered Lucy, gently, as she left the sea gulls, 'and now I'll have a new story to tell my cousins. One of the sea gulls and their interest in nothing but themselves—like so many other creatures!' But the sea gulls were happy for they had been saved and the next day they were set free."

The Triumphal March of Bevo

A NEW CREATION OF SCIENCE AND NATURE

WHEN we announced Bevo recently, our hopes were high. We knew that we had the most unusual soft drink that had ever been offered: A beverage combining the nutritive extracts of wholesome cereals, the zest of Saazer Hops, a flavor all its own and absolute purity. We knew this because, true to our own ideals, we had experimented for years before we were satisfied to say, "We offer you Bevo—it is a different soft drink—it is good and it is good for you."

High as were our hopes for its reception, we have realized them far and beyond our expectations.

Bevo today is an established popular success. Everywhere the same question is asked:—"Have you tried Bevo?"

Now, one final word. We promise you that, in accord with the known principles of Anheuser-Busch and all its products, Bevo not only will forever maintain its present high standard of quality, but as time goes on our great endeavor shall be to make this soft drink even more perfect in every detail of its goodness.

You will find Bevo at inns, restaurants, groceries, department and drug stores, picnic grounds, baseball parks, soda fountains, dining cars and other places where refreshing beverages are sold.

Guard against substitutes. Have the bottle opened in front of you, first seeing that the seal is unbroken and that the crown top bears the Fox.

Bevo—the all-year-'round soft drink

Bevo is sold in bottles only, and is bottled exclusively by

National Nuisance

(From the Philadelphia Inquirer)

No German spy that was paid out of the funds of the German embassy at Washington, no German conspirator engaged in plotting to blow up industrial establishments, no miserable traitor taking German money and selling secrets of this government has been, is, or could be half as dangerous as is Robert M. La Follette, senator from Wisconsin.

For this man—this dastard—is not only a national nuisance, but a national menace.

If he were in the pay of the Prussian military fanatics, monsters of crime of cruelty, he could not do their cause more good than he is doing it.

With a record of obstruction to every measure that the administration has considered necesary, with pages of the Congressional Record befouled by treasonable speeches with a display of contemptible "little" Americanisms unparelled, he has not been content. He has tried to block war progress at every turn of the wheel. He was one of that little group of "willful men" so thoroughly scourged by President Wilson. From the beginning he has fought in the senate against the liberty, the independence, the rights and the self respect of the United States and has done his utmost to give aid and comfort to the enemy, that enemy that is already placarded in history as the greatest foe that humanity has ever known and as an outcast among nations. And now, to top the infamy of his atrocious pro-German career, he has deliberately thrown a firebrand into the senate in the form of a peace resolution.

Peace! There is a way to obtain peace but it cannot be of the sort that is "Made in Germany."

The editor of the Inquirer should be given a medal.

A certain Y. M. C. A. leader at Deming, N. M. tells us that skirts must be lengthened if we win this war. This will serve as a hint to drygoods dealers to double their orders for women's dress goods.

Elks Help Soldiers Million For Hospital

The Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks has appropriated a million dollars for the hospital work in connection with the war. The huge sum will be expended in the erection and maintenance of base hospitals for sick and wounded members of the order and in caring for their widows and orphans. There will be no delay in preparing for this great task, as the order has three quarters of a million dollars in its treasury. This sum will be drawn upon pending the receipt of apportionment from each lodge.

Butchers Want Two Weekly Meatless Days

A recommendation that the sale of meat be prohibited thruout the United States on Tuesdays and Fridays, was adopted and forwarded to Herbert Hoover food administrator, by the United Master Butchers of America, meeting in annual convention today. The recommendation also suggested that the government make an investigation into the prices of fresh and frozen fish which were declared to be unreasonably high. A law prohibiting slaughter of young animals and fowl also was urged.

Women Rule

According to a letter received at the Mexican consulate here from the department of fomento the island of Tiburon in the Gulf of California is ruled by Women.

The letter informed the consulate officials that the island was to be explored and its natural resources listed. A description of the island said the island was inhabited by Seri Indians and the women were the ruling sex; they hold all of the official positions, are the employers of labor and hire the men to work as clerks, farmers, domestic servants and other crafts usually filled by men. —Washington Post.

A journey over ice covered rivers and snow crusted plains has just been reported when a party of mounted police officers arrived here in charge of two Esquimaux named Sinnisiak and Wlusvk, said to be wanted in connection with the deaths of Fathers Rouvier and Leroux, who were slain at Bloody Falls in the Arctic regions in 1913. Inspector J. D. Lanouse headed the police party on the trip which took more than two years.

A watchman in the immigration service on Angels Island in San Francisco bay, was arrested on a charge of attempting to bribe an army officer into revealing army secrets in connection with the island. He was in the wrong place; he should have been in Devils Island.

Our Man About Town

The Baptist church and parsonage are undergoing a new course of paint and when finished will be what is usually termed as "Battleship Grey." This will be of no surprise to people who understand that Rev. Gardner was at one time in the service of Uucle Sam.

The new building of the Carrizozo Trading Co. is rising at a rapid rate and contractors expect to complete the structure before rabbit tracks can be seen in the snow.

What! Not a vacant house in the town of Carrizozo! What do you think of that?

The new cement sidewalk will soon be laid in front of the Oasis Confectionery.

The Western Garage shows great signs of activity these days and at times it is hard for a person to pass in front of their place on account of the many automobiles stopping there for the good service they render the auto owning public.

Cowboys General Round-up

The second annual Cowboys General Round-up will take place at Tucumcari, August 28, 29 and 30.

This is to be Tucumcari's banner year in arena work. The ranch chuck wagou wlll be here in it's thrilling run and camp-pitching event, and the cow-pony sweep-stake relay and straight-away contests.

The parade will be composed of the top-notchers of skilled riders, ropers, and arena contestants of America, and all the cow-girls and cow-boys from off the ranges from the Panhandle of Texas to the Rocky Mountain Divide, and from Cheyenne to El Paso. This will give the visitor a glimpse of the early days in the cow-country of the west and to put modern conditions in contrast, two miles of automobiles bring up the rear. The parade will be followed by the ceremonies of the laying of the corner-stone of the Masonic Temple. Tucumcari is preparing to entertain the largest number of visitors ever invited to the city. Come on in to the round-up. There will be three days of fun and frolic and the cowboys will be here from the region of mountain and plain all over the range.

Are We Decending to Autocracy?

In the interest of public welfare congress should remain in continuous session until the close of the war. Continsous session would not necessarily mean daily meetings of the two houses of congress, but a series of short adjournmenta which would keep congress legally in session to act promptly if occasion arose. An intimation by one recently in conference at the White House to the effect that the President would like to have congress adjourn, is sufficient reason why congress should remain at its post of duty.

During the past four years we have witnessed almost revolutionary steps in the establishment of executive dictatorship, and coincident abdication by congress of its duties, powers and responsibilities. The constant trend of this administration has been the strengthening of the executive branch of the government and the weakening of the legislative. Having been thus far unable or unwilling to check this movement congress should at least remain in position to take such action as may be necessary to restrain the unconstitutional exercise of that arbitrary power which the administration delights to assume.

Before our entrance into the war, as well as since, we have had numerous illustrations of the desire of the department heads, and bureau chiefs to secure and exercise autocratic powers. Even where authority to perform certain acts was expressly refused by congress. Departments have proceeded to exercise the powers they have derived. The Post Office Department has ignored and defied congress. When censor-ship of the press was denied by the lawmaking body, it was assumed by the administration. Without any express authority of law, the executive branch of the governmeut etablished committee and bureaus of vague and expansive powers whose scope cannot even now be foreseen. An expensive and entirely useless bureau of information is being maintained and congress has been denied information regarding its organization. Sectionalism partisanship, and favoritism are frequently displayed. With such policies pursued when congress is in session, it is difficult to imagine to what lengths bureaucarcy would go if congress would finally adjuorn.

Only a few months ago congress had a demonstration of the importance of retaining its constitutional powers and refusing entire abdication. On February 26, 1917, the President went before congress with a request for power to use the armed forces of the United States in any way he saw fit. In that message to congress he indicated the desire that congress should vest himwith plentary power and leave him alone in charge of the destinies of the public. Such would have been the effect if congress would have passed the armed neutrality bill just before final adjournment March 4th. Developements since that time have demonstrated the wisdom of congress in refusing the desired authority, and the importance of its presence in Washington, ready for the transaction of the natien's business.

Many incidents in recent history indicate that America is running the course of the ancient republics—that we are rounding the circle from autocracy to democracy and back to autocracy again. Most Americans are not yet willing to agree that representative government is a failure. Whether we shall be ultimately forced to such admission depends largely upon the manner in which the representatives of the people in the legislative branch of the government guard and exercise the powers conferred upon them by the people. Much will also depend upon the attitude of the people themselves toward the constant efforts of bureaucracy to overthrow a Republican form of government consisting of three coordinate branches. If the peple and their chosen representatives passively acquiesce in usurpation, the end of our republic and the beginning of autoracy are not far distant.

The people who are really worrying about this war are not those who will risk their lives, but those who may lose a dolldr in their business.

Care in Tuberculosis.

Living with a case of tuberculosis is not particularly dangerous if the patient and those around him will exercise proper care. Sputum cups or paper napkins should be used for all discharges of the nose and throat as well as for matter coughed up from the lungs. Handkerchiefs should not be used, since it is an expensive matter to destroy them, and washing them is not safe unless the soiled handkerchief is boiled immediately after use

Tiny Actress First Leader in the Suffrage Movement in Japan

There must always be a first woman, and the first woman to make suffrage speeches in Japan is so tiny she looks like a humming bird, a little purple, bronze and ivory humming bird. Such little hands and feet and lithe little body seem to belong on a Japanese fan. But this is no smiling bric-a-brac lady. She is the leader and spokeswoman of the passionate longing for freedom which, she avers, is in the hearts of all the women of Japan.

In a public hall in the center of Tokyo City, Madam Kokoma Kimura made the first public woman suffrage speech in that city, saying that the law which forbids women to hear political speeches should be changed; for women need the vote. They need a chance to get into business and to use their talents.

If it is some little achievement to lead the suffrage cause in old Tokyo, it is no more of a feat after all than interpreting Strindberg, Maeterlinck and Chekhov to the Orient. Madam Kimura has played "Monna Vanna," Strindberg's "Sacrifice," and Chekhov's "Dog" to the far East. Japan did not escape its Shakespeare tercentenary last year and Madam Kimura played "Ophelia" in the Tokiwa theater of Tokyo. She is actress, dancer, writer and editor and leader of the Shin-Sin Fuzin-Kwai, the "new true woman's movement." For several years she published a feminist periodical bearing the same name as her society. It was printed in Japanese.

"Even education does not yet free the women of Japan," says Madam Kimura, "for a girl must always talk of love and of nothing else in order to be agreeable. I hope soon for the highest education for the women of my race, so that they may have their own professions and be free after their marriage to think for themselves."

Madam Kimura carefully explains that the great writer, Madam Akiko Yosano, who is a friend of hers, is not an exponent of the suffrage doctrine, but is an interpreter for woman, the feminist poet of her country.

This feminist movement has wings and is about to make a great flight over all Japan, Madam Kimura is sure, "for Japanese women are very clever," she explains. She has interviewed many statesmen in Japan on the subject of woman's freedom and among them, Yakio Ozaki, former minister of law in the constitutional government. He is, she says, personally for the enfranchisement of women. In her own broken speech, she explains: "I tell them about woman suffragette. They like ect. But all are afraid to speak. All Japan likes woman suffragette, Oh, yes, but it fears the government."

Small Flocks Best

My experience of over ten years in poultry keeping has taught me that hens lay and do better when kept in small flocks, says a writer. I have noticed repeatedly that, when during the breeding period, I placed part of my hens in pens of ten or twelve, the hens so penned, always laid better than the hens kept in the general flock.

When kept in small flocks, hens keep in a more thrifty state of health. In small flocks, contagious diseases such as roup or cholera can be more effectively treated, without subjecting all the chickens on the place to the contagion. And besides, when kept in small flocks scattered over the farm, the range offers a large supply and a better variety of food, thus effecting quite a saving.

Fifty hens in a flock should be the limit. Where a farm carries 200 or more hens it will be found more profitable to house them on the colony plan than to keep them in one flock. Of course, when so kept, the labor of caring for the flock is much greater, but the increased egg-production and the saving in food will more than compensate for the increased labor.

The main reason why so many fail in the chicken business is because the hens are kept in large flocks. Most of those who fail, have, in the past, been successful in managing a small flock, and this success has been instrumental in causing them to embark in the business on a big scale. I say unreservedly that the man who decides to keep 1,000 hens will stand a better chance of succeeding if he keeps them in 20 flocks of 50, than will the beginner who attempts to manage 1,000 hens in one flock. The beginner who attempts to keep 1,000 hens in one flock will find his experience in managing a small flock of little value. On the other hand the man who starts in business with 20 small flocks can apply the experience gained in managing his one small flock.

The man who keeps his hens in small flocks can keep close watch on them. Whenever disease manifests itself it is quickly noticed and the sick birds promptly removed. In the care of large flocks, however, diseased birds may not be noticed for some time.

America's Busy Bees.

Last year the bees produced in America 250,000,000 pounds of honey. That was a little more than 2 per cent of the normal consumption of sugar in the United States.

Floating Steel Curtains Proposed to Protect Ships From Attacks by Subboats

To render merchantmen and transports immune to submarine attacks by means of floating steel curtains towed alongside, is an interesting proposal that has been submitted to the government for consideration, and which is described in an article accompanied by a full-page illustration and diagram in the Popular Mechanics Magazine. One of the flexible barriers would consist of a series of airtight cylinders, each supporting a large eight-inch plate fastened to it longitudinally like a keel slightly below that at which a submarine missile travels. . . . The barriers would be towed on either side of a vessel, or fleet, at a distance of 200 or 300 feet.

For this purpose sea-going tugs, or staunch yachts of slight draft, could be employed. It is estimated that in good weather a powerful tug could tow a 600-foot barrier at a rate of about 15 miles an hour. A fleet could protect itself by sailing in two staggered rows, each vessel towing a screen which would shield the ship following it. The curtain guarding the leading steamers, of course, would be handled by tugs. Under present conditions the plan would only be employed in the submarine zones, but, if necessity dictated, ships could be convoyed all the way from port of departure to destination.

Mother's Cook Book

The happy life may be poor and humble in externals. It may have many restrictions and privations; but if it enshrines the pure in heart, the power of loving, serving and sacrificing, it is beautiful in contrast to the worldly life of pleasure that finds no peace or rest in the soul itself, only puerile activity like that of a cloud of insects that will die and leave no trace on the great interests of the world.

Good Home Dishes.

All housewives today are trying to keep down the expenses without reducing the nourishment for the family and it is a problem with foods soaring higher each week.

Cornstarch Pudding.

This may be made equally as well from rice flour, which is about the same in price as cornstarch. Scald a pint of milk, add two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch well mixed with four tablespoonfuls of sugar and a pinch of salt, cook until smooth and the starch is well cooked, then add a small teaspoonful of vanilla, a beaten egg and a sliced banana or two. Put into serving dishes and when well chilled serve with sugar and thin cream or top milk. The bananas may be used to decorate the top, adding them just before serving if desired. A finer grained cake will result if a tablespoonful of cornstarch is added to the flour and sifted with it, subtracting a small portion of the flour as given by the recipe. The thinner a cake will bake without falling, the more delicate and tender will be the crumb.

Delicious Dessert.

Take a half glass of jelly and the white of one egg unbeaten on a platter, beat until stiff and thick, then stir in a few chopped bananas and serve, with or without cream and sugar. One may cut rounds of cake and heap them with the mixture, making a most dainty dessert. Any kind of fruit not too moist may be used, well-drained pineapple, chopped apple or bits of ripe pears.

"A Certain French Port."

There is a certain port in France,
We may not know its name,
And there the little wavelets dance,
The sun shines just the same,
On ships that fly the starry flag
As though at home their anchors drag.

And jollyboats glide to and fro,
Filled with the boys in blue,
Who show the way for row on row
Of lads in khaki, too.
You'd almost be inclined to say,
'Twas Hampton Roads or New York bay.

The streets may seem a trifle odd,
The language somewhat strange,
But silent speech of smile and nod
Has an extensive range;
And wheresoe'er their course extends,
The eyes they meet are eyes of friends.

The seas that knew Decatur's men
Now know his men once more,
And what was in Paul Jones' ken
Appears along the shore;
And up above perhaps they gaze
From some sidereal bridge these days.

EPIGRHYMES:

She's settin' there, jest thinkin'—she's a gal, perhaps a wife; THE pictur' that she sees ain't tinged with sunlight gold o' LIFE; she senses, deep, the silence that no voice OF him will break; she hears a neighbor WOMAN, in the cottage by the lake, a-callin', "John, it's dinner time;" an' then she's brave—an' smiles, an' wonders what the distance IS to him—a thousand miles? The world is FULL OF pictures, boys, a heap sight worse than that, an' you an' me, an' every man, should jest take off his hat to them courageous gentle ones—the sweethearts, mothers, old, who clasped his hand and, silent, hid far down in hearts of gold them words o' WOE an' loneliness them tears fer what might come, but smiled, an' said; "Now don't ketch cold—an' hurry, safe, back hum!" Timing the Typist.

Inventors have tried for years to put a counter on the typewriter to estimate the speed of the typist, but the efforts have always been confined to a count of the words written. A recently patented device, called a cyclometer, counts every stroke which the typist makes on the keyboard. It is fastened to the escapement wheel of the typewriter, says the Popular Science Monthly. This wheel does not move when the carriage is shoved backward and forward.

One firm employing 50 typists found that its work was below normal by cyclometer count and later that it had some very rapid typists and some very slow ones. The rate of pay had always been based on the number of years of service, and many of the slow ones were being paid for the work done by the rapid operators. This, of course, was quickly adjusted.

Corn Relish.

Cut corn from 20 ears of corn and chop four onions, two green peppers, one red pepper, one large head of cabbage. Mix all together with three pints of good cider vinegar and let come to a boil. Take a half cupful of salt, one-half cupful of flour, two cupfuls of sugar and one tablespoonful each of ground mustard, celery seed, one-half a tablespoonful of turmeric powder, two tablespoonfuls of mustard seed all well mixed with one pint of vinegar; pour over the pickle and boil for 30 minutes, then bottle while hot. In two weeks it will be ready to use.

SELECTING DAIRY COW

Essential Functions Are Milk Production and Reproduction.

Only Small Proportion of Animals Used for Dairy Purposes on Which Records Are Kept—Characteristics of Conformation.

The essential functions of the dairy cow are milk production and reproduction. The most accurate methods of determining these are: (1) Milk production by means of the milk scales and the Babcock test; (2) reproduction by breeding records.

There is only a small proportion of the cows used for dairy purposes on which such records are kept. This necessitates the employment of some other method of selection. In the breeding of high producing animals, through several generations, it has been observed that there are certain characteristics of the conformation which are correlated with large production. These characteristics are, namely: (1) Extreme angular form, carrying no surplus flesh, but in good physical condition. (2) Prominent development of the udder and veins. (3) The symmetrical development of the barrel with large capacity. After one becomes familiar with these external characteristics it is possible to select cows producing 300 pounds of fat per year from those producing 150 pounds. The difficulty comes in picking the animal that will produce 500 pounds of fat per year as compared to the one producing 400 pounds.

The selection of animals by this method is rather uncertain. The farmer makes the largest majority of his selections in this manner and should be familiar with its limitations. In order to judge the animal with much accuracy she should be in milk and at the best stage of her lactation period. A cow that is dry offers very little upon which to base opinion, as she has a tendency to take on flesh. Cows that have been underfed are in no condition to be judged. It is hard to tell what heifers will do from appearance before calving. Sometimes the cow that has all of the external appearances does not have the stimulation to produce milk. Until records are kept of more animals or some other means devised for selection, the selection by type should be used, and it is up to everyone interested in dairy cattle to become familiar with it.

TO ERADICATE WILD CARROT

Short Rotation, Including Intertilled Crop, Is Simplest and Most Effective Remedy.

If the soil is thoroughly infested with wild carrot, a short rotation of crops, including an intertilled crop, as corn, potatoes or beans, is the simplest and most effective remedy. The intertilled crop should be given a little extra attention, particularly late in the season after "laying by," to make sure that none of the weed survives. Before seeding to grass a special effort should be made to build up the fertility of the soil by plowing under barnyard manure or other organic fertilizer.

FEED CALVES IN STANCHIONS

Young Animals Should Be Fed Separately After Milk Ration—Give Grain and Roughage.

When feeding time comes feed the calves separately after the milk ration. Let them have grain and roughage—no ear sucking will follow and wind on the stomach and indigestion will not result. Try this plan. Stanchions with box for grain and rack for hay is a good plan.

Good Dairy Management.

Good dairy management consists of supplying good feed, pasture and soiling crops that go to make the condition of the cows and the attendants favorable.

CONVENIENT GATE FOR FARM

An excellent gate for use where four lots come together is a turnstile gate. This will enable one gate to answer instead of four. The end posts are 2½ feet from the center post on which the gate turns. An inch iron pin 18 inches long and 12 inches in the post that the gate is framed on and six inches in the post in the ground, does the work. This should fit the holes very tight so that the gate may turn solidly.

FAVORS LITMUS PAPER TEST

Professor Huddelson of Missouri College Makes Suggestions for Locating Sour Soils.

With a little practice, any careful and close observing person can test a soil to see if it is sour. All the materials necessary are some strips of blue litmus paper that can be purchased at almost any up-to-date drug store and, if the soil is dry, some pure water free from lime. Distilled water or rain water is best. If the test is made when the soil is wet enough to make a mud ball, no water is needed.

R. R. Huddelson of the University of Missouri College of Agriculture offers the following suggestions for making the test. Work the sample of soil into a stiff mud ball about the size of an egg. Break this into halves and put one or two strips of blue litmus paper between. Put the mud ball back together, pressing it firmly against the paper, and let it stay for five minutes. Then examine to see if there has been any change in the color of the paper. If the soil is sour the paper, where it was in contact with the mud, should be distinctly pink in color. If it is spotted pink and blue or purplish in color, either the soil is not very sour or there was poor contact between the paper and mud. If the paper remained blue the soil is not sour enough to be very detrimental to crops.

The soil of a field is seldom alike all over, and when making a soil test, care should be taken to get soil from several places and mix them together, or enough tests should be made over the field to determine whether any of it is sour.

TREES TREATED FOR CANKER

Combination of Whalecoil Soap, Slaked Lime and Water Is Recommended as Effective.

Treatment recommended for canker of apple trees by one of the experiment stations is to paint the affected trunk with a combination of one pint whalecoil soap, three pints slaked lime and four gallons of water; thicken to the right consistency with wood ashes, or with bordeaux mixture thickened with lime until like whitewash.

No dairyman who expects to grade up his herd by raising his own stock can afford to keep anything other than a good purebred dairy bull. Any other inevitably means a step down.

Soft Food for Ducks.

A duck has no crop and the food passes directly from the throat to the gizzard, so you see the food must be in a soft state.

Plant Cabbage.

If there is a patch of ground on the place that seems to be over-rich, devote it to cabbage; nothing is too rich for its blood.

A rotation that meets the demand of many farmers is one where corn follows clover, then oats, wheat, barley or rye, seeded down with clover.

When the farmer finds any disease in his orchard he should investigate it and inform himself and apply the remedy as far as possible.

Take Off Horse's Shoes.

If the horses are not to go on the hard roads, pull off their shoes and give their hoofs a chance to grow.

Gasoline Conservation

Mr. Van H. Manning, Director of the Bureau of Mines, of the Department of the Interior, has issued the following statements to motor minute men:

One half of the gasoline used in the United states is used in pleasure riding.

The United States Army will need three hundred fifty million gallons for aeroplanes, trucks automobile tractors and other machines. There is no way of obtaining this in this country except by saving from the supply, and this economy may be effected by voluntary cutting down of pleasure riding.

By economical use, enough gasoline can be saved to supply the United States and its allies for war purposes.

The following suggestions should be observed by automobile owners:

Do not allow your gasoline engine to run idle. Use kerosine, not gasoline, for cleaning. See that the carburator does not leak.

Form the habit of shuting off the gasoline at the tank. By regulation of the mixture of gasoline and air in the motor, greater power and economy of fuel may be obtained.

If this advice is followed there will be no undue scarcity, for the United States possesses an abundant supply for ordinary purposes.
