Miss Fleming's home is in Roswell; she is an accomplished musician, plays and sings equally well. She has agreed to come and sing without charge, the committee has arranged to take care of her expenses.

Esther Reed, Instructor in the schools of East Vaughn, will sing. Miss Reed came to New Mexico from Ohio. She has appeared in Carrizozo before, having sung at the Commencement Exercises of the local schools about three years ago. Her singing at that time has never been forgotten by those who heard it. She has agreed to come without charge; the local committee will take care of her expenses.

The local Lyceum Committee will fill in the balance of the program with five or six other numbers, details of which will be announced later.

New Mexico Lady Honored

A signal honor came to Las Cruces and one of its citizens when Mrs. Homer C. Rivers was invited to sing at the Tri-ennial Grand Encampment, Knights Templars of the United States.

Mrs. Rivers will sing the song, "Worthy the Name of Sir Knight," which poem she set to music.

Mrs. W. J. Stevens also went to New Orleans, and will accompany Mrs. Rivers on the pipe organ.—Las Cruces Citizen.

"The Old Nest" May 10-11 At Crystal Theatre

Rupert Hughes, the most human writer for the screen, has written an unusual ending for "The Old Nest," a Reginald Barker production for Goldwyn of one of his stories, which will be shown at the Crystal Theater, for two days, commencing May 10-11.

Says Mr. Hughes at the end of this appealing photoplay: "This has not been a picture for plot or action or mystery, but if it should persuade either to remember your mother piously, if she is dead, or if she' lives, to send her a love-letter or even a telegram saying, "I am well, mother, I think of you and love you," or above all, go and see her, then this picture would give you more real joy than any other that has ever been made."

EARLY SPRING

By HENRY G. KOST

The sullen sky is gray with clouds;
The mists lie on the sea;
And chill, the wind blows o'er the waste
And smites the barren lea.

The earth is damp with fog and rain;
The trees are lank and bare;
And yet a strange, mysterious breath
Is floating through the air.

The hoar despoiler's loath to yield,
But wonderous powers strive
To swell the buds on tree and bush,
And burst death into life.

The sun his lengthening course pursues
And rouses slumbering day
To earlier toil, his summons beams
With each increasing ray.

The birds are on their northward flight,
Their notes lie on the breeze;
They bid the playful waves defy
The blast that made them freeze.

The heralds are a - wing, afloat,
And spring is their device,
Whose smile, triumphant over death,
Melts winter's heart of ice.

"Husbands on Approval" Next Monday Night

As previously announced in this paper, "Husbands on Approval" was postponed until next Monday evening, May 8. The play will be given by the same array of local talent as before and will be repeated at the request of the many pleased patrons who witnessed the first performance. Moreover, we wish to state that some erroneous statements have been made concerning the play which should be corrected. It is merely a laughable farce in which nothing is said or done aside from innocent merriment that could only please and not by any means offend an appreciative audience.

EDUCATIONAL NEWS

(By Mrs. M. L. Blaney)

This office is in receipt of a letter from President Jonathan H. Wagner, that the New Mexico Normal University, Las Vegas, N. M., will be ready for the summer session; the new buildings will be in readiness at that time. Fortune has favored this Institution since the loss of some of the buildings by fire, by the people responding with united efforts to have everything ready for the large attendance of summer students.

The financial condition of the state makes it necessary for every class of employees and employers to stand a certain reduction in salary and the teachers will be called upon to add their efforts to bring back to a substantial basis the financial standing. Just what reduction in salary will be made is not known at this time.

The first of the Rural school commencement exercises will be held at the Nogal - Mesa school Friday evening, May 11, 1992. This school continued work at Christmas time, therefore closes earlier than some of the others.

MANY TROUT DISTRIBUTED

State Game Warden Gable came over from the fish hatchery at Glorietta, on Wednesday, with 52,000 speckled mountain trout which were deposited in the nearby mountain streams namely: North and South Forks of Eagle Creek, Ruidoso and the Bonito. The fish were motored over in twenty six containers without the loss of a single one.

The ground was broken for the hatchery on the Pecos about 11 months ago and up to the present time, nearly two million fish have been distributed throughout the mountain streams of our state. Sportsmen are delighted over this consignment of trout and although small, according to T. E. Kelley of the Southwestern Fish, Game & Forest Protective Association, they will grow to a size ready for the hook in two years and there are plenty of the larger sized trout now in the streams to keep the sportsmen busy in fishing seasons until the present consignment reaches the required growth.

On account of the many entertainments that will be given by the school pupils between now and the close of school, I have decided to postpone the play, "How Many Wives" until after commencement exercises are over. I wish the Carrizozo people to know that my efforts are not for self-gratification, but the proceeds are to be donated to the benefit of the baseball team.

GERMANY MAY ARM RUSSIANS

RUSSO-GERMAN TREATY IS A WARNING OF FUTURE DANGER TO WORLD.

FEARS FUTURE WARS

AMERICAN INFLUENCE NEEDED TO BRING PEACE, SAYS BRITISH PREMIER.

(Western Newspaper Union News Service.)

Genoa.—Premier Lloyd George drew an alarmist picture of Europe in an interview with British and American press representatives here. He declared that the object at Genoa was to clear up political difficulties, which were full of menace.

He compared Europe to seething racial lava which, like the earth's crust, was seeking a proper level. This adjustment was full of peril. He emphasized that Europe must take cognizance of hungry Russia, which would be equipped by an angry Germany.

"The world must recognize the fact," he said, "that Russia and Germany combined contain more than two-thirds of the people of Europe. Their voice would be heard, and the Russo-German treaty is the first warning of it."

As proof of the danger he cited the fact that there was no frontier line from the Baltic to the Black sea, excluding the Rumanian, Galician, Polish and Lithuanian frontiers, which had been accepted.

"I wish America were here," he explained. "Some people think we want the United States for some selfish purpose. This is not true. We want America because she exercises a peculiar authority; her very aloofness gives her the right to speak.

"America could exercise an influence no other country could command. She could come here free and disentangled, and with the prestige which comes from her independent position, she would come with the voice of peace.

"But America is not here; so Europe must do her best to solve the problems in her own way."

Announcement by the British delegation that a meeting of the signatories of the Versailles treaty will be held in Genoa within a fortnight to determine upon action in the event of Germany's failing to meet her reparations obligations at the end of May, was the chief feature of the conference activities. This call for a meeting of the allies was inspired by Premier Poincare's Bar le Duc address intimating that France was prepared to act alone if the allies failed to support her in enforcing the treaty.

Poland replied to Russia's protest charging the Poles with violating treaties with Russia and seeking to undermine Russian sovereignty. The Polish reply asserted that the Poles were endeavoring to assist the reconstruction of Russia and had no thought of violating their treaty agreements with Russia.

A Trying Period Through Which Every Woman Must Pass

Practical Suggestions Given by the Women Whose Letters Follow

Phila., Pa.—"When I was going through the Change of Life I was weak, nervous, dizzy and had headaches. I was troubled in this way for two years and was hardly able to do my work. Detroit, Michigan—"During the Change of Life I had a lot of stomach trouble and was bothered a great deal with hot flashes. Sometimes I was not able to do any work at all. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in your little books and took it with very good results. I keep house and am able now to do all my own work. I recommend your medicine and am willing for you to publish my testimonial."—Mrs. J. S. Livernois, 2051 Junction Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

The critical time of a woman's life usually comes between the years of 45 and 50, and is often beset with annoying symptoms such as nervousness, irritability, melancholia. Heat flashes or waves of heat appear to pass over the body, cause the face to be very red and often bring on headache, dizziness and a sense of suffocation.

Another annoying symptom which comes at this time is an inability to recall names, dates or other small facts. This is liable to make a woman lose confidence in herself. She becomes nervous, avoids meeting strangers and dreads to go out alone.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted to help women at this time. It exercises a restorative influence, tones and strengthens the system, and assists nature in the long weeks and months covering this period. Let it help carry you through this time of life. It is a splendid medicine for the middle-aged woman. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs and contains no harmful drugs or narcotics.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

Most uncomfortably astonished, Ramsey took his hands out of his pockets, picked a leaf from a lilac bush beside the path, and put the stem of the leaf seriously into a corner of his mouth, before finding anything to say. "Well—well, all right," he finally responded. "I'll tell you—if it's anything I know about."

"You know about it," said Dora. "That is, you certainly do if you were at your 'frat' meeting last night. Were you?"

"Yes, I was there," Ramsey answered, wondering what in the world she wanted to know, though he supposed vaguely that it must be something about Colburn, whom he had several times seen walking with her. "Of course I couldn't tell you much," he added, with an afterthought. "You see, a good deal that goes on at a 'frat' meeting isn't supposed to be talked about."

"Yes," she said, smiling faintly, though with a satire that missed him. "I've been a member of a sorority since September, and I think I have an idea of what could be told or not told. Suppose we walk on, if you don't mind. My question needn't embarrass you."

Nevertheless, as they slowly went on together, Ramsey was embarrassed. He felt "queer." They had known each other so long; in a way had shared so much, sitting daily for years near each other and undergoing the same outward experiences; they had almost "grown up together," yet this was the first time they had ever talked together or walked together.

"Well—" he said. "If you want to ask anything it's all right for me to tell you—well, I just as soon, I guess."

"It has nothing to do with the secret proceedings of your 'frat,'" said Dora, primly. "What I want to ask about has been talked of all over the place today. Everyone has been saying it was your 'frat' that sent the first telegram to members of the government offering support in case of war with Germany. They say you didn't even wait until today, but sent off a message last night. What I wanted to ask you was whether this story is true or not?"

"Why, yes," said Ramsey, mildly. "That's what we did."

She uttered an exclamation, a sound of grief and of suspicion confirmed. "Ah! I was afraid so!"

"'Afraid so?' What's the matter?" he asked, and because she seemed excited and troubled, he found himself not quite so embarrassed as he had been at first; for some reason her agitation made him feel easier. "What was wrong about that?"

"Oh, it's all so shocking and wicked and mistaken!" she cried. "Even the faculty has been doing it, and half the other 'frats' and sororities! And it was yours that started it."

"Yes, we did," he said, thoroughly puzzled. "We're the oldest 'frat' here, and of course"—he chuckled modestly—"of course we think we're the best. Do you mean you believe we ought to've sat back and let somebody else start it?"

"Oh, no!" she answered, vehemently. "Nobody ought to have started it! That's the trouble; don't you see? If nobody had started it none of it might have happened. The rest mightn't have caught it. It mightn't have got into their heads. A war thought is the most contagious thought in the world; but if it can be kept from starting, it can be kept from being contagious. It's just when people have got into an emotional state, or a state of smouldering rage, that everybody ought to be so terribly careful not to think war thoughts or make war speeches—or send war telegrams! I thought—oh, I was so sure I'd convinced Mr. Colburn of all this, the last time we talked of it! He seemed to understand, and I was sure he agreed with me." She bit her lip. "He was only pretending—I see that now!"

"I guess he must 'a' been," said Ramsey, with admirable simplicity. "He didn't talk about anything like that last night. He was as much for it as anybody."

"I've no doubt!"

Ramsey made bold to look at her out of the side of his eye, and as she was gazing tensely forward he continued his observation for some time. She was obviously controlling agitation, almost controlling tears, which seemed to threaten her very wide-open eyes; for those now fully grown and noticeable eye-winkers of hers were subject to fluctuations indicating such a threat. She looked "hurt," and Ramsey was touched. There was something human about her, then, after all. And if he had put his feeling into words at the moment, he would have said that he guessed maybe he could stand this ole girl, for a few minutes sometimes better than he'd always thought he could.

"Well," he said, "Colburn prob'ly wouldn't want to hurt your feelings or anything. Colburn—"

"He? He didn't! I haven't the faintest personal interest in what he did."

"Oh!" said Ramsey. "Well, excuse me; I thought prob'ly you were sore because he'd jollied you about this pacifist stuff, and then—"

"No!" she said, sharply. "I'm not thinking of his having agreed with me and fooling me about it. He just wanted to make a pleasant impression on a girl, and said anything he thought would please her. I don't care whether he does things like that or not. What I care about is that the principle didn't reach him and that he mocked it! I don't care about a petty treachery to me, personally, but I—"

Fraternal loyalty could not quite brook this. "Brother Colburn is a perfectly honor'ble man," said Ramsey, solemnly. "He is one of the most honor'ble men in this—"

"Of course!" she cried. "Oh, can't I make you understand that I'm not condemning him for a little flattery to me? I don't care two straws for his showing that I didn't influence him. He doesn't interest me, please understand."

Ramsey was altogether perplexed. "Well, I don't see what makes you go for him so hard, then."

"I don't."

"But you said he was treach—"

"I don't condemn him for it," she insisted, despairingly. "Don't you see the difference? I'm not condemning anybody; I'm only lamenting."

"What about?"

"About all of you that want war!"

"My golly!" Ramsey exclaimed. "You don't think those Dutchmen were right to drown babies and—"

"No! I think they were ghastly murderers! I think they were detestable and fiendish and monstrous and—"

"Well, then, my goodness! What do you want?"

"I don't want war!"

"You don't?"

"I want Christianity!" she cried. "I can't think of the Germans without hating them, and so today, when all the world is hating them, I keep myself from thinking of them as much as I can. Already half the world is full of war; you want to go to war to make things right, but it won't; it will only make more war!"

"Well, I—"

"Don't you see what you've done, you boys?" she said. "Don't you see

There Was Something Human About Her, Then, After All.

what you've done with your absurd telegram? That started the rest: they thought they all had to send telegrams like that."

"Well, the faculty—"

"Even they mightn't have thought of it if it hadn't been for the first one. Vengeance is the most terrible thought; once you put it into people's minds that they ought to have it, it runs away with them."

"Well, it isn't mostly vengeance we're after, at all. There's a lot more to it than just getting even with—"

She did not heed him. "You're all blind! You don't see what you're doing; you don't even see what you've done to this peaceful place here. You've filled it full of thoughts of fury and killing and massacre—"

"Why, no," said Ramsey. "It was those Dutch did that to us; and, besides, there's more to it than you—"

"No, there isn't," she interrupted. "It's just the old brutal spirit that nations inherit from the time they were only tribes; it's the tribe spirit, and an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth. It's those things and the love of fighting—men have always loved to fight. Civilization hasn't taken it out of them; men still have the brute in them that loves to fight!"

"I don't think so," said Ramsey. "Americans don't love to fight; I don't know about other countries, but we don't. Of course, here and there, there's some fellow that likes to hunt around for scraps, but I never saw more than three or four in my life that acted that way. Of course a football team often has a scrapper or two on it, but that's different."

"No," she said, "I think you all really love to fight."

Ramsey was roused to become argumentative. "I don't see where you get the idea. Colburn isn't that way, and back at school there wasn't a single boy that was anything like that."

"What!" She stopped, and turned suddenly to face him.

"What's the matter?" he said, stopping, too. Something he said had startled her, evidently.

"How can you say such a thing?" she cried. "You love to fight!"

"Me?"

"You do! You love fighting. You always have loved fighting."

He was dumfounded. "Why, I never had a fight in my life!"

She cried out in protest of such prevarication.

"Well, I never did," he insisted, mildly.

"Why, you had a fight about me!"

"No, I didn't."

"With Wesley Bender!"

Ramsey chuckled. "That wasn't a fight!"

"It wasn't?"

"Nothing like one. We were just guyin' him about—about gettin' slicked up, kind of, because he sat in front of you; and he hit me with his book strap and I chased him off. Gracious, no; that wasn't a fight!"

"But you fought Linski only last fall."

Ramsey chuckled again. "That wasn't even as much like a fight as the one with Wesley. I just told this Linski I was goin' to give him a punch in the sn—— I just told him to look out because I was goin' to hit him, and then I did it, and waited to see if he wanted to do anything about it, and he didn't. That's all there was to it, and it wasn't any more like fighting than—than feeding chickens is."

She laughed dolefully. "It seems to me rather more like it than that!"

"Well, it wasn't."

They had begun to walk on again, and Ramsey was aware that they had passed the "frat house," where his dinner was probably growing cold. He was aware of this, but not sharply or insistently. Curiously enough, he did not think about it. He had begun to find something pleasant in the odd interview, and in walking beside a girl, even though the girl was Dora Yocum. He made no attempt to account to himself for anything so peculiar.

For a while they went slowly together, not speaking, and without destination, though Ramsey vaguely took it for granted that Dora was going somewhere. But she wasn't. They emerged from the part of the small town closely built about the university and came out upon a bit of parked land overlooking the river; and here Dora's steps slowed to an indeterminate halt near a bench beneath a maple tree.

"I think I'll stay here a while," she said; and as he made no response, she asked: "Hadn't you better be going back to your 'frat house' for your dinner? I didn't mean for you to come out of your way with me; I only wanted to get an answer to my question. You'd better be running back."

"Well—"

He stood irresolute, not sure that he wanted his dinner just then. It would have amazed him to face the fact deliberately that perhaps he preferred being with Dora Yocum to eating. However, he faced no such fact, nor any fact, but lingered.

"Well—" he said again.

"You'd better go."

"I guess I can get my dinner pretty near any time. I don't—" He had a thought. "Did you—"

"Did I what?"

"Did you have your dinner before I met you?"

"No."

"Well, aren't you—"

She shook her head. "I don't want any."

"Why not?"

"I don't think people have very much appetite today and yesterday," she said, with the hint of a sad laugh, "all over America."

"No; I guess that's so."

"It's too terrible!" she said. "I can't sit and eat when I think of the Lusitania—of all those poor, poor people strangling in the water—"

"No; I guess nobody can eat much, if they think about that."

"And of what it's going to bring, if we let it," she went on. "As if this killing weren't enough, we want to add our killing! Oh, that's the most terrible thing of all—the thing it makes within us! Don't you understand?"

She turned to him appealingly, and he felt queerer than ever. Dusk had fallen. Where they stood, under the young-leaved maple tree, there was but a faint lingering of afterglow, and in this mystery her face glimmered wan and sweet; so that Ramsey, just then, was like one who discovers an old pan, used in the kitchen, to be made of chased silver.

"Well, I don't feel much like dinner right now," he said. "We—we could sit here awhile on this bench, prob'ly."

THE SNAKES

"Well," said Willie Watersnake, "it is nice to be about again, but I enjoyed my winter sleep."

"Hiss, hiss, so did I," said Morris Moccasin snake.

"I had a fine sleep, hiss, hiss, hiss," said Robbie Rattlesnake.

"But I'm glad to be around again," said Charlie Copperhead Snake.

"So am I," said Morris Moccasin Snake.

"Some folks were surprised to hear that we had spent the winter together," said Willie Watersnake.

For the Watersnakes and the Moccasins, the Rattlers and the Copperheads had all been together in the same den all winter.

"Well," said Charlie Copperhead, "sometimes our families live quite by themselves and do not share a den with others."

"The same is true of our family," said Robbie Rattlesnake.

"It has been said that we do differently at different times in our ways of living and sharing dens, and that is quite true," he added.

"And last year," said Willie Watersnake, "so my family tell me, Billy Blacksnake and his family shared a den with my family."

"We were wise snakes to build our dens facing the south so we would avoid a great many hard storms," said Morris Moccasin Snake.

"Yes," said Willie Watersnake, "and we got up a little earlier this spring from our winter's sleep, because of that. However, it was nice to get up. The spring came along most pleasantly, most pleasantly.

"We know the South from the North. Oh yes, snakes know that. Some people think that snakes don't know much of anything except to have poisonous fangs like old Robbie here, for example, or to hiss and squirm."

"Live in the Cliffs."

"Strange how ignorant they can be," said Morris Moccasin.

"Of course we know the South from the North," said Charlie Copperhead, "and we know that when we have our dens facing the South we miss a great many terrific storms that way. They don't blow in such horrible gusts toward our homes.

"Ah, it is nice to go to sleep in the winter."

And all the snakes hissed and said: "It is nice, very nice. And it is well to know how to be protected from the storms, too."

"We know," said Morris, "that when we build our dens facing the South, they will not be frozen in so quickly.

"And we like warmth. That is why we have no special time for getting up in the spring. It depends on the weather.

"If it is a cold spring we get up much earlier than we otherwise would.

"We love the warmth, oh yes."

And all the snakes hissed.

"Oh yes, we love the warmth."

"We like to live in cliffs," said Charlie, "and there we have fine rooms with old warm dead leaves and pine needles and other soft warm blankets."

"And then we sleep and sleep and sleep," said Robbie.

"Yes, sleep and sleep and sleep," said Morris.

"Yes, we sleep and sleep and sleep, hiss, hiss," said Willie.

"But now we are out and we must get food and drink," said Morris.

"Yes, now for the adventures, and the dangers and the food," said Robbie.

"We're off for the wide world," said Willie.

"How do you know its wide?" asked Morris.

"Oh, I have an idea that it isn't a narrow world," said Willie.

"Maybe you're right, I suppose you are."

"But it's a round world," said Charlie. "I've heard it said by those who should know."

"It can be round," said Willie, "but when I say we're off for the wide world I mean that we're off for journeys and adventures which aren't to be had in little narrow spaces, but spread out over the wide face of Mother Earth."

"We see," the others hissed, "we understand."

Houston, Texas—"I was in a terribly run-down condition of health after a siege of ptomaine poisoning, and then the influenza. I could not seem to regain my strength and was really not able to do my housework. I knew I needed a good tonic and builder and remembered how my folks used to regard Dr. Pierce's remedies in my girlhood days, and then I decided to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. After taking the second bottle I found it was doing me a world of good, strength returned rapidly and I felt better in every way. I am glad indeed to recommend the medicine that did me so much good and do not hesitate to give this statement."—Mrs. Gertrude Sell, 1236 Rutland St.

"Flapper" Juries Need Public Attention; Let School Girls Alone

On the heels of the meek-eyed recommendation of the Arbuckle jury which failed through the prompt action of Will H. Hays, backed by right thinking people over the the land, a jury in one of our eastern states brought in a verdict of acquittal in a case where a man murdered a member of his family, on the grounds that as the deed was committed when the man was intoxicated with bootleg whiskey, the jury held the Volstead act responsible for the crime.

Now comes a cluster of medical scientists (so called) in the city of Chicago that has doomed a certain lady to lifetime exile from society, on the grounds that her system is inoculated with typhoid fever germs and spreads disease wherever she goes. This amazing stunt was pulled against the protests of several prominent physicians, who claimed that investigations led to the fact that the lady had never been afflicted with the disease, neither had her husband or children. Whither are we drifting, when the people will tolerate such idiocy? Power does not license juries and boards in either temporary or permanent authority to render "nutty" verdicts and brand individuals whom they deem helpless, ruining lives socially and morally; or, placing premiums on crime and shifting the blame from the shoulders of criminals, to legislative acts. The tirade against the "flapper," has grown until cranks with foreheads about one-half an inch in width, are assailing all girls who seek to improve their personal appearances with paint, powder and attractive dressing. Let a watch be kept on "flapper" juries and boards who misuse power vested in them, to the point of ridicule.

WITHOUT STREET ADDRESS YOUR MAIL IS DELAYED AT OFFICE OF DELIVERY

The Dead Letter Office has been in existance ever since Ben Franklin started our postal service. Even then people addressed mail to Mr. Ezekiel Smithers, "Atlantic Coast," and expected Ben to know just where Zeke lived.

Perhaps they had Zeke's address in letters up in the garret, maybe a chest full of 'em, but then it was easier to let Ben hunt Zeke. Today people are addressing letters to John Smith, New York, N. Y., or Chicago, Ill., thinking Uncle Sam can locate him, which is just as incomplete as was Zeke's address of yore. The Postoffice Department asks you to put the number and street in the address. It helps you.

POSTAL IMPROVEMENT WEEK IS OBSERVED

May 1 Sees Inaugurated First General Campaign of Kind in Service.

Without the Postal Service, business would languish in a day, and be at a standstill in a week. Public opinion would die of dry rot. Sectional hatred or prejudice only would flourish, and narrow-mindedness thrive.

It is the biggest distinctive business in the world and it comes nearer to the innermost interests of a greater number of men and women than any other institution on earth. No private business, however widespread, touches so many lives so often or sharply; no church reaches into so many souls, flutters so many pulses, has so many human beings dependent on its ministrations.

"Postal Improvement Week" has been set for May 1, by the Postmaster General. This is the first general campaign of its kind in the Postal Service for several decades. Business men and their organizations, large users of the mail, newspapers, motion pictures, advertisers, and the entire organization of 326,000 postal workers are to be enlisted in this country-wide campaign of interest in postal improvements. Your help is vital. Address your letters plainly with pen or typewriter. Give street address. Spell out name of State, don't abbreviate. Put your return address in the upper left hand corner of envelope (not on the back) and always look at your letter before dropping in the mail to see if it is properly addressed. This care in the use of the mails is for your benefit and speeds up the dispatch and delivery of mail matter.

If you have any complaints of poor service make them to your postmaster. He has instructions to investigate them and report to the department.

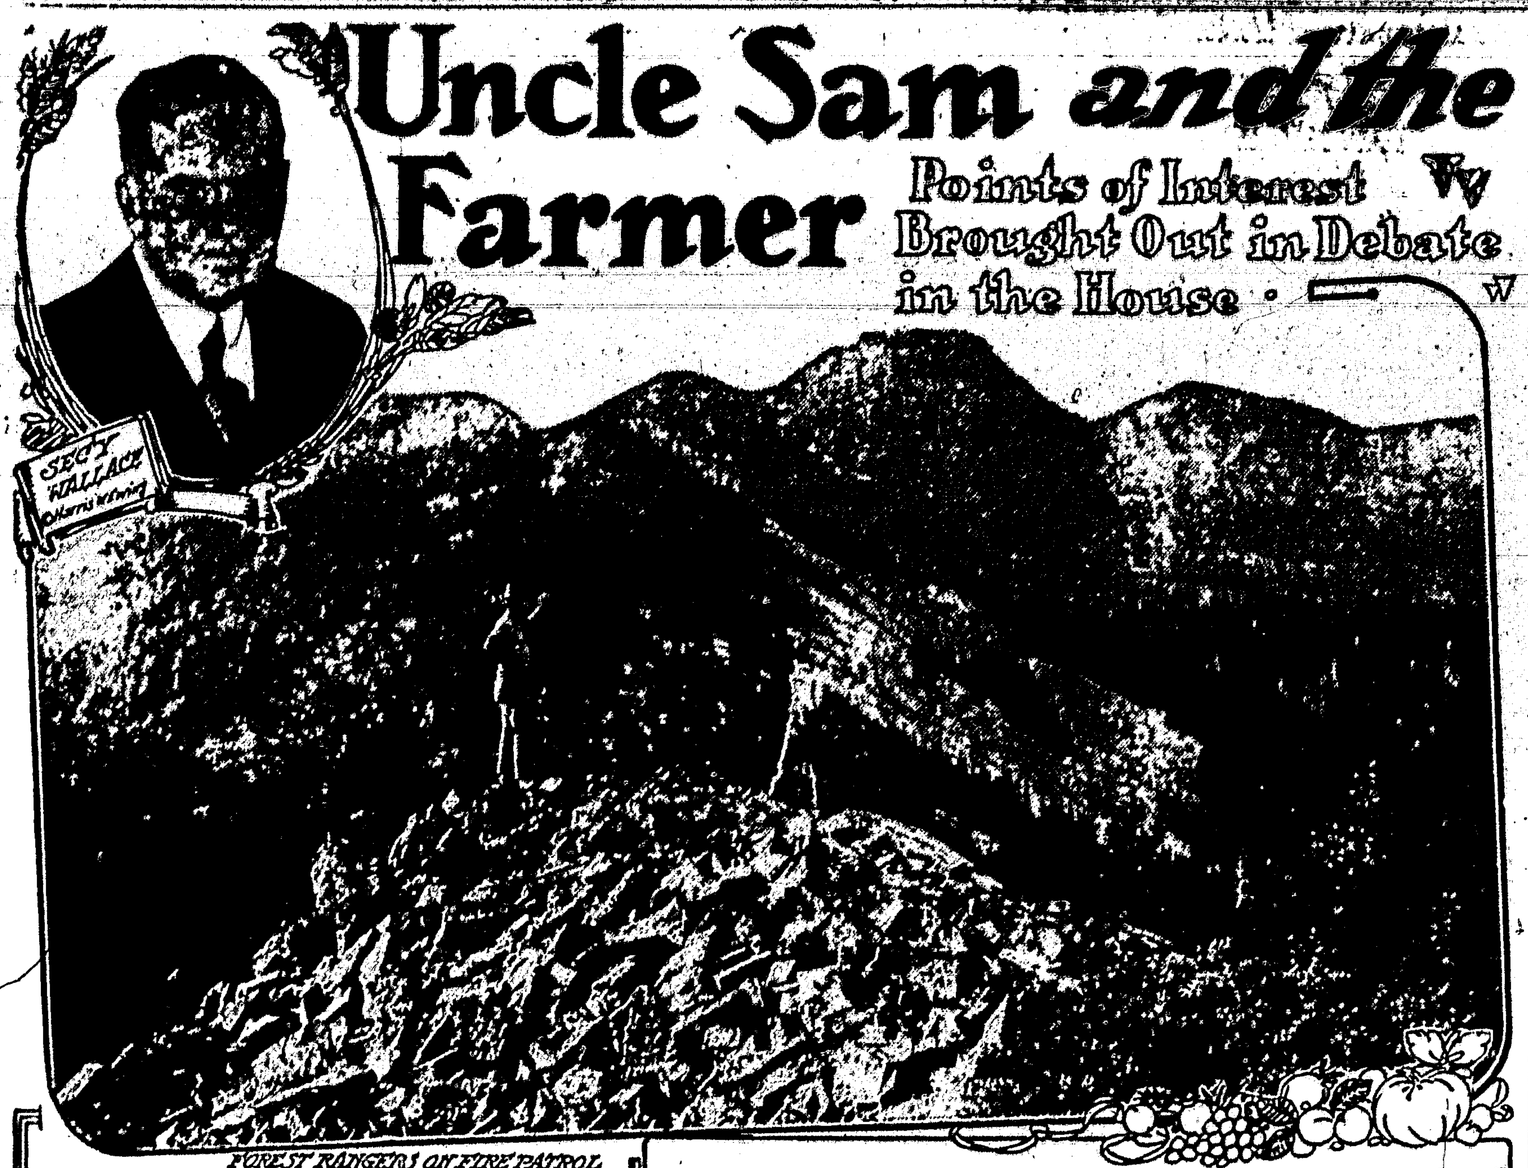
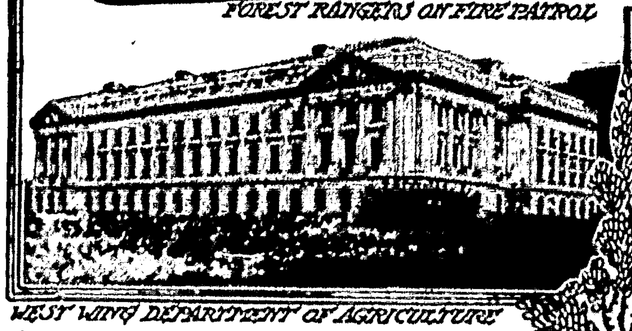
Uncle Sam and the Farmer

Points of Interest Brought Out in Debate in the House



FOREST RANGERS ON FIRE PATROL



WEST WING DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

IRRIGATED POTATOES

WHEN the annual appropriation bill for the United States Department of Agriculture comes up every year in congress there is much debate over its many items and over its huge total. First the house threshes it out. Then the senate goes over what the house has done. Then the two houses fight it out in conference. Sometimes it looks as if there might be a deadlock. The department is a big one, with many activities affecting both producer and consumer; so the total appropriation is necessarily large. There is always a flood of oration pro and con. Here are some items of general interest that were set forth in the debate over the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923 (six months of 1922 calendar year and six months of 1923). First is a statement regarding farms and farmers by Representative Philip H. Stoll of South Carolina, in effect as follows:

From the census of 1920 we find that there are 6,448,343 farms in the United States. Of these farms 3,925,090 are operated by owners, 2,454,804 by tenants, and 68,449 by managers.

The total acreage in farms in 1920 was 955,883,715 acres, and of this 503,073,007 acres were classified as improved land. The average acreage per farm was 148.2 acres. The value per farm is fixed at $12,084. It is interesting to note that of the total number of farms 796,535 have an average of less than 20 acres each, that there are 1,503,732 farms with an acreage between 20 and 49 acres, and that of farms with acreage of 50 to 99 acres there are 1,474,745. In other words, more than one-third of the farmers of the United States are small farmers, and tend less than 50 acres of land. It is also worthy of note that there are 261,719 farms that are operated by females, and that 76.3 per cent were operated by native white farmers, 9 per cent by foreign-born white farmers, and 14.7 per cent by colored farmers.

There are nearly 6,500,000 individual farmers in the United States and there are more than 12,000,000 men engaged in this work; the permanent investment of these farmers in land and equipment amounts to approximately $80,000,000,000, and the output of these farms is worth $25,000,000,000 annually.

Here are interesting points in the statement of Representative Sidney Anderson of Minnesota of the appropriations committee:

The total appropriations carried for the regular work of the Department of Agriculture during the present year amount to $38,688,050. The amount recommended in the bill now pending is $34,978,033. This sum, compared with the present appropriations, is $3,710,020 less than the appropriations for the current year and $1,654,835 less than the estimates submitted by the Director of the Budget through the President. It should be remembered, however, that the current law carries an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purchase of forest lands in the Appalachian Mountain Range and also carries an appropriation of $2,000,000, to be loaned to farmers in the Great Plains area of the country for the purchase of seed, so that the bill in fact, eliminating new items which have been added, is approximately $700,000 less than the regular items carried in the current appropriation bill. It should also be considered that the pending bill carries three or four new items, one for the operation of the Center Market, carrying about $165,000; an item for the enforcement of the packers and stockyards act carrying $410,500; and an item for the enforcement of the futures trading act which carries, I think, $105,000, making the total carried in this bill, which is not carried in the prior bills, approximately $700,000.

Of the total appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, speaking roughly and generally, $18,000,000 is spent for the conduct of regulatory services, many of which are as directly of interest and concern to the consumers of the country as they are to the farmers of the country. Approximately $8,000,000 is spent for research of various kinds. Three million dollars is spent for service work, such as that involved in the inspection of fruit and vegetables, and approximately $4,000,000 is expended for extension.

Prior to this year the appropriation for the individual forests controlled and operated by the Forest Service have been carried in something like 139 separate forest items. In accordance with the suggestion made by the Forest Service to the Director of the Budget, the items for the 139 individual forests have been consolidated into eight forest-district items without any increase in the total appropriation for the forest with this exception, that there is allocated to the current appropriations in these districts an additional appropriation of $80,000, which is divided in this way: $50,000 additional for fire guards, $20,000 for additional technical men in these forests where the sales of timber are increasing or likely to increase; $10,000 for additional employment in connection with the grazing in the national forests. The committee was in part influenced in granting this increase by the fact that the air patrol service, which has heretofore been conducted by the War Department in the national forests and in conjunction with the Forest Service, will be discontinued next year.

In 1921 the receipts from the sale of timber amounted to $1,775,001, as compared with $2,067,295 in the preceding year, while the receipts from the grazing privileges in 1920 were $2,480,040. It has not all been paid in, but the grazing receipts for 1921 will amount to about $2,130,174. The total appropriations carried in this bill for the Forest Service is $6,532,802, as compared with an expenditure last year, including deficiencies, of $6,990,302.

There is one considerable reduction on the face of this bill in the items for the extension of activities of the Department of Agriculture along the line of the work now being done under the Smith-Lever Act. These items are now carried in four separate items. The first of these items carried $715,720 and was for farm demonstration work in the North. The second carried $634,800 for the same sort of work in the South under a general title of boll-weevil eradication and control, the third was a small item of $16,800 carried for supervising expenses in connection with the extension services of the Government, and the fourth was a general item of $1,500,000, which was originally made for the purpose of advancing the maturity of the Smith-Lever Act by three years. The first three items have been consolidated in one item in this bill with a reduction of $53,280, and the fourth item, which is now the second item, has been reduced from $1,500,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. Clarke of New York. Has the appropriation for the distribution of seeds for buncombe purposes been eliminated from this bill?

Mr. Anderson. The committee did not report the provision for the congressional seed distribution. That is not included in the bill.

Mr. Clarke. Thank God for that. (Just the same, it was put into the bill later).

PITT AND PITTSBURGH

Pittsburgh is to have an heroic bust of William Pitt, first earl of Chatham (1708-78), which will stand in the rotunda of the city hall. Pittsburgh (Fort Duquesne) was named for the famous British statesman in 1758 by John Forbes, the British general who revenged Braddock by driving out the French and building Fort Pitt, which still stands. The name was suggested by George Washington.

The bust is the gift of Sir Charles Wakefield, a former mayor of London. Presentation will be made May 9 by a distinguished party of Britons, headed by the marquis of Cambridge. Mayor William A. Magee (portrait herewith) will receive the bust on behalf of the city. Pittsburgh is planning a three-day celebration.

Sir Charles Wakefield decided to present busts of Pitt and Edmund Burke about the time Virginia presented to Great Britain, through the Belgrave Institution of America, a replica of Houdon's statue of Washington that stands in the capitol at Richmond.

The Burke bust will go to Washington and will be received by President Harding.

LAND OF AMAZING FERTILITY

American Settler in Western Canada Tells of Splendid Crops Raised Year After Year.

Harold J. Gregory, of Lowe Farm, Manitoba, writes as follows:

"When I came to Canada from Lexington, Ill., in the fall of 1913, it was with the spirit of adventure and through curiosity. I always imagined that crossing the boundary line took me beyond the limits of civilization into 'No Man's Land,' and that this country abounded with bears, moose, caribou and other wild game. Imagine my disappointment when I reached my friend's home just in time to help him through a month of harvest—wheat, barley, flax and oats. I realized then the possibilities that this almost untouched territory held open to the home-seeking settler, with its rich, virgin soil, good markets, railroad systems, graded roads, etc.

"In the spring of 1914 I came back with the intention of testing out my judgment concerning the soil's grain-growing powers. This I did with complete satisfaction. I am now farming 480 acres of land at Lowe farm, and have raised crops of equal value to the purchase price of the land on which it was raised two or three different times. I have found this land to be superior in fertility to any land that I have ever seen, and I have seen land in Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Wisconsin, and parts of Minnesota and North Dakota.

"The present low prices of machinery make this year an exceptional one in its opportunities to the man who wants to make a new start under favorable conditions. Why raise corn for 50 cents a bushel on $300 per acre land, when you can get good improved wheat land for $50 per acre, and wheat selling for $1.15 at your local elevator? I was enabled to purchase a Gray Dort automobile from the profit of a hay crop produced in one year. This district offers good facilities for stock raising and there are special opportunities for the hog raiser."

Important to all Women Readers of this Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be despondent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine, will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

Strangling Averted by Operation.

Trenton, N. J.—His windpipe slit and held open by two fellow convicts to permit air to enter his lungs, John Monroe, convict at New Jersey state prison, serving from five to ten years for breaking and entering, is much improved after the operation. Monroe is affected with tuberculosis. He was found gasping for breath in his cell. Dr. Martin W. Reddan of this city, prison surgeon, was called. He immediately slit the man's windpipe and asked for aid of two convicts to hold it open to permit air to penetrate the man's lungs.

Treaty Upsets Conference.

Genoa.—The signing of a treaty between Germany and Russia, which nullifies the Brest-Litovsk treaty and re-establishes full diplomatic relations between these two countries on a basis of equality, has caused profound astonishment and resentment among the allied delegations. The ministers of the powers which convened the conference decided to have a committee of experts examine this treaty to determine whether it conflicts with the Cannes resolutions or the treaty of Versailles.

Protest Removal of Bureau.

Washington.—The Colorado senators protested against a suggested plan for the abolishment of the western reclamation headquarters at Denver and its consolidation with the general reclamation bureau in the Interior Department here. Director Davis of the reclamation bureau and Acting Secretary of the Interior Finney promised that no action will be taken until Secretary Fall returns from the West.

German Troops in Ruhr.

Paris.—The German government, says Emile Bure, in L'Eclair, has sent 12,000 "shock troops" into the Ruhr and announces readiness for resistance in Upper Silesia, meanwhile the Russian Red armies are threatening the Polish and Rumanian frontiers.

Trial of Judge Day Looms.

Washington.—New developments in the recent shooting at Oklahoma City of Lieut. Col. Paul Ward Beck, which may result in a trial of Judge Jean P. Day, were predicted by War Department officials. The report of a special board of officers which made detailed investigation into the affair resulting in the killing of Colonel Beck by Judge Day is now on its way to Washington. Coming in advance of the reports are letters to Secretary of War Weeks and other officials of the department predicting that the army report will shed new light of a startling character on the tragedy.

Urges Organization of Business.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Thorough organization of American business and co-operation with labor and agriculture "in obtaining legislation and administrative policies for the good of the nation as a whole," was urged by Harry B. Wheeler, Chicago banker, and for three years president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in an address here.

Buys Back Wedding Ring.

Chicago.—Edward P. Morse, an attorney, and his wife, recently were held up by robbers, who took the attorney's valuables and stripped the wedding ring from his wife's finger. Mr. Morse bargained with the bandits for the ring. They agreed to return it for $100, according to Mr. Morse. Not having the cash, he offered them a signed blank check which they agreed to fill in for $100. The canceled check for $100 has been returned to the attorney.

Will Preserve Historic Fort

Daughters of American Revolution Plan Reconstruction of Famous Fort Crawford.

ORIGINAL WAS BUILT IN 1812

Most Famous of Any of the Forts in the Northwest Has Fascinating History—Zachary Taylor Once Commandant.

Prairie du Chien, Wis.—Preservation and eventual reconstruction of historic Fort Crawford is forecast by the action of the Prairie du Chien chapter of the D. A. R. in securing an option on the property from W. R. Graves, its owner, in an effort to preserve it for historical purposes.

Fort Crawford was the most famous of any of the forts in the Northwest. The original post, Fort Shelby, was built during the war of 1812. Hardly had the first American troops taken possession of it, when a detachment of British troops, re-enforced by Indians, came down the Wisconsin river and laid siege to it. The garrison was forced to surrender and for a year the Union Jack floated over the frontier post and southwestern Wisconsin was a part of the British empire.

Buildings Ruined by Fire.

At the close of the War of 1812 the fort was evacuated and shortly afterward most of the buildings were gutted by fire.

The American government then rebuilt the fort on the same site, calling it Fort Crawford. Later a new site was chosen a mile south on higher ground and a larger Fort Crawford was erected.

Zachary Taylor, later President of the United States, was commandant of it at one time. One of his lieutenants was Jefferson Davis, who led the southern Confederacy through the Civil war. Davis fell in love with Taylor's daughter and married her, to the great displeasure of the commandant.

The fort surgeon was Doctor Beaumont, whose assistant, Martin St. Alexis, had a bullet hole in his stomach. Through this hole Doctor Beaumont studied the processes of digestion. The experiments thus conducted still form the major part of the knowledge medical science has of the stomach and its functions. St. Alexis is mentioned in many school physiologies.

Other Notables at Fort.

Others stationed at the fort at various times were the historian, Henry Schoolcraft; the artist, George Calvin; and Gen. William Clark, Lewis Cass and Winfield Scott.

The treaties of 1826 and 1830, wherein the Indians deeded away the last of their lands east of the Mississippi river, were signed at Fort Crawford. The Black Hawk war centered about it, and Abraham Lincoln, then a young lieutenant was stationed at the fort during this conflict. Chief Blackhawk was taken to the post as a prisoner after his capture by the Winnebago chiefs after the rout of the Sacs and Foxes at the Battle of Bad Axe.

Near the site of the fort is Fort Crawford cemetery, where those who died during their term of service were buried. The cemetery is government owned and well cared for.

THIS BEAR IS BULLET-PROOF

Three Slugs From Rifle Fail to Stay Onrush of Bruin in Pennsylvania Wilds.

Lewisburg, Pa.—Samuel Crone, a Shamokin butcher, encountered a bear that weighed about 400 pounds, dropped the animal with a bullet from his rifle, but was startled to see the bear rise and, howling with pain, race toward him on all-fours.

Two more shots were fired and struck the tough hide of the animal, inflicting painful wounds, but each time the bear refused to stay down, and by the time it was ten feet in front of Crone the latter's weapon jammed.

Desperate, the hunter decided to battle with the stock of his rifle as a club and stood his ground as the animal rose on its hind legs as if to rush him. Suddenly the bear changed its mind, turned and ran limping into the woods.

Raise Standard for Teachers

Federal Bureau Is Studying the Question of How to Accomplish It.

MANY INADEQUATELY TRAINED

Grade School Classes Taught by Persons Who Have Not Even High School Diplomas—Trained Teachers Barred.

Washington, D. C.—Commissioner John J. Tigert of the bureau of education and his assistants are studying the question of how to raise the standard of training for school teachers throughout the United States. Thousands of women and men entrusted with the education of large groups of children in the public schools lack what the federal officials regard as an adequate preparation for their work, Doctor Tigert said.

In the grade schools many persons are teaching classes who have not even high school diplomas, according to a recent investigation by the bureau of education. According to the federal standards a man or woman to be properly equipped for teaching should have at least a normal school education. If the teaching is to be that in high schools a college or university diploma should represent adequate training. In other words the training of the teacher should reach considerably beyond the subject to be taught.

Many Are Barred.

Thousands of men and women who were adequately trained to teach are now barred from the schools, it has been found. This is a result of the war. When living costs increased faster than teachers' salaries large numbers of teachers who were well equipped for their work were compelled to step out of the schools into the other other positions that would pay better. Many were practically forced out by lack of means to remain, although their first interest was with the schools.

There was a national shortage of teachers. Economic depressions followed. Persons with hardly any training stepped into the vacant positions. At the same time the level of salaries paid teachers began to be increased. More and more inadequately trained persons went into the schools as teachers. The shortage of teachers ceased to be a problem. There are now enough, so that few schools need remain closed for lack of men and women to conduct them.

Standard Lowered.

But the teachers who are inadequately trained are holding the positions. And many persons who studied to make teaching their life work are without positions. School boards generally feel that in all fairness those persons who accepted positions when there was a teacher shortage should be retained.

The standard of training for teachers thus has been very largely lowered throughout the schools in all sections of the United States, the reports show. The correction of this situation may take several years, according to Commissioner Tigert.

RISES IN DEFENSE OF FLIRT

According to English Author, Fickleness is Simply Natural Desire to Be Liked by All.

"I like being adored," she said, "even though I dislike the person who adores me."

"You can express that more simply by saying, 'I'm a flirt,'" said Philip.

"But it's such an ugly word. Besides, everyone likes being adored; everyone is a flirt in that sense. It's only the people who never are adored who call it flirting. They would like to be adored, but as they can't, they call the rest of us rude names. But it's no use going about trying to be adored because nobody has the least idea as to how to set about it. It's not the least use being kind and honest and amiable, for that only makes you mildly popular, while the most disagreeable people get worshiped. And it isn't any good being beautiful, I dare say beauty hurries people up, because there is obviously something rather attractive about it, but it's not a bit of good by itself. Perhaps brains have got something to do with it, or is there a sixth sense which directs it all?"—From "Lovers and Friends," by E. F. Benson.

Two Hundred Pounds of Sympathy.

"I want to speak to 'Aunt Agnes,' who gives advice to the lovelorn."

"That fat man over there in the corner is 'Aunt Agnes.'"

"The idea! I thought the editor of that department was an elderly spinster with a broken heart."

"You can see for yourself that he's of the masculine gender and takes nourishment regularly, but truly, madam, you don't know the depth of that man's soul. He's so affected by some of the letters he receives from maidens in distress, that if he didn't drink steadily he never could get through his work."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"If" is a small word, but the most unsatisfactory one in the dictionary.

An ounce of forethought is worth several pounds of substantial regret.

Caller's Comment on Matter of Time Somewhat Embarrassing to All Parties Concerned.

We had been spending the evening with acquaintances with whom we had but little in common. In consequence, the time seemed to drag interminably, and when my wife asked me the time I glanced thankfully at my watch.

The hands indicated 9:30. I looked again, shook it and held it up to my ear.

"Funny," I muttered, "the darn thing seems to have stopped. According to this it's only 9:30."

The hostess laughed a little as she referred to her watch. "That's exactly the time I have, too, and that's the time the clock over there on the piano says. I guess, maybe"—she didn't finish, but merely laughed.

Since then when she asks the time, I tell it without any comment. It's less embarrassing.—Baltimore American.

NOTED PRELATES IN LONDON

Leo XIII and Pius XI Said to Have Been Familiar With the British Metropolis.

The new pope, Pius XI, visited London as well as Oxford in early life, in the latter place especially the great Bodleian library naturally attracting such a great scholar, who was himself librarian of the great Vatican library, and known everywhere as a booklover.

It was said that the late Pope Leo XIII knew his way about London better than a great many natives, as he had spent much time there before being raised to the papacy, exploring the slums and other problems in the metropolis.

Pope Leo XIII was the only one of that exalted rank who ever sat in the British house of commons and in the distinguished strangers' gallery, at that. He also is said to have enjoyed the hospitality of Lord Palmerston under that distinguished statesman's own roof. That was, of course, before his exaltation to the papacy.

Hail Men With "Pep."

"Men with 'pep' rush in where angels fear to tread." Even "in the piping times of peace" they cast "modest stillness and humility" to the fourth remove and "let their action imitate the tigers." They advance upon our civilization like an army with banners. "Brashness" we used to call it, with affectionate contempt and tender pity; "pep" we hail it now, and laud it with loud hosannas.—Henry Ford's Dearborn Independent.

Freeze Plays Havoc With Oranges

An unexpected freeze which occurred in southern California has not only spoiled millions of oranges and lemons that were about ready to be picked, but has also killed hundreds of the trees themselves, causing many orchard owners to take out their trees and replace them with new stock, which will require several years to come into bearing. Frozen lemons and oranges are poisonous, hence great care is taken to see that none of the frozen fruit is shipped to market. The illustration shows a pile of frozen lemons and oranges which were dumped into a river bed to decay.

HOLD TO THEIR OLD GLORIES

Manchus Retain Ancient Ceremonies of Former Dynasty.

Emperor, Though Virtual Prisoner in Forbidden City, Receives Homage of Attendants According to Ancient Forms.

Pekin.—In spite of the fact that Ching dynasty has been out of power since 1911 and the present emperor of China is a virtual prisoner in the forbidden city of Pekin, all ceremonies connected with the Manchu emperors are still kept up.

At the recent Chinese New Year's celebration the customary honor was paid to the spirits of the emperors in their resting places at the Eastern Tombs. Offerings of food and provisions were placed before the tombs and the old Manchu officials who are still retained in office by the Ching dynasty kowtowed according to the custom prescribed in Manchu house law for the imperial family.

These officials are experiencing considerable difficulty in following out all the old customs because of the lack of funds available for the upkeep of the emperors' tombs. The funds promised to the imperial family by the republican government are usually very tardily paid, with the result that poverty is facing the one-time affluent Manchus.

At the eastern tombs many of the Manchus, deprived of the annual stipend formerly paid by the imperial government, have been forced to become gatherers of wood and charcoal in order to support themselves.

The old towns and villages are falling into ruins, the forests of the huge tract devoted to the burial of the emperors are fast becoming devastated and the monumental tombs are beginning to fall into ruin and decay.

Every effort is being made by the officials of the tombs, however, to maintain the glory of the dead emperors, and the ceremonies at New Year's typified the attitude of these faithful adherents of a departed order who refuse to allow the glory of the Ching dynasty and the Manchu rule to be dimmed.

Wire Relic to Be Preserved.

Portland, Ind.—An oddity is on display in the office of Henry Martin, Jay county auditor. It is a piece of the first barbed wire ever made in this country and was brought to the auditor by L. P. Fennig of New Corydon, northeast of this city. The wire is in links of a length of three or four inches instead of being one twisted piece as the wire is now made. The antique piece of wire will be placed in the museum of the courthouse.

Mr. Jenkins Took a Cracked Club To Tame Lions

The exhibition ended rather badly. It very nearly was a big day for the lions and a sad day for Mr. Jenkins—all for want of proper care in getting ready.

Many a man who has business to do and a living to make and a job to fill is as careless how he feeds his body as Mr. Jenkins was in picking out a club.

Some foods are too heavy, some are too starchy, many lack necessary elements and so starve the body—and many load the system down with fermentation and auto-intoxication.

Grape-Nuts helps build health and strength. It contains the full richness of wheat and malted barley, including the vital mineral elements, without which the body cannot be fully sustained. Grape-Nuts digests quickly and wholesomely. Served with cream or good milk, it is a complete food—crisp and delicious.

Grape-Nuts is just the food for those who care to meet life's situations well prepared in health. Order Grape-Nuts from your grocer today. Try it with cream or milk for breakfast or lunch, or made into a delightful pudding for dinner.

The "Buying Chance" Sale Ends Saturday Night

Saturday night, May 6, marks the end of the fifteen-day sale held by the Carrizozo Trading Co.

"The Sale has been one of the most successful sales ever held by the firm," said Mr. Lutz. "We not only have done all we expected but have passed the mark we set when we started this sale. The people have come from great distances to attend this sale and many of our largest sales were to people who travelled as far as one hundred miles to attend this sale."

Mr. Porter, the gentleman who has had charge of the sale, has given the people something different from what the ordinary small town usually gets in the the way of a sale. His advertising has been the best that has ever been used; and his methods of keeping up the life of the sale has been new, he has had an extra special bargain for one hour every day, and without exception, these have been well attended. Mr. Porter is putting on a "Dollar Day" offer for Friday and Saturday, and has some very attractive bargains in this line, having worked in more than half of the states in the Union. He expressed himself as more than well satisfied with the way the people of Carrizozo and the surrounding country have patronized the Sale.

County Commissioner, Ben Lujan, is attending to some business matters in El Paso to day.
