CARRIZOZO TALENT PLEASES AUDIENCE

The Carrizozo Entertainers gave their first musical concert last Friday night at the Crystal Theatre to a large and appreciative audience. With the exception of the Misses Minnie Dee Fleming of Lincoln and Esther Reed of Vaughn, the talent was purely local. The orchestra, under the efficient leadership of Geo. Ferguson, was composed of the following gentlemen: R. C. Pitts, violin; Geo. Ferguson, piano; J. A. Appelget, clarinet; Edwin McCarty, saxaphone; Lewis A. Burke, trombone; H. Bamberger, drums. Since the entertainment, the orchestra has been reinforced by J. H. Wright of the Lincoln Light & Power Co., cornetist, which completes the instrumentation. After the first selection by the orchestra which was roundly applauded, the opening chorus together with the balance of the program, was much enjoyed by everybody. The Misses Fleming of Lincoln and Reed of Vaughn in their vocal numbers accompanied by Mr. Ferguson at the piano, met with the highest of praise, as also did the duets of Miss Hilary Cooper and Eb Jones and the vocal selections by Miss Carolyn Roberts with Miss Lorena Sager at the piano, all of whom Carrizozo is justly proud of.

The quartet singing by Messrs. Scott, Jones, Rowland and Finley was good and on the whole, taking into consideration the fact that our home talent had but one rehearsal, the entertainment was a decided success, and the second one of the series will far surpass the first in many ways. The program published in this paper two weeks ago contained selections of old sweet songs which were sung at the request of many home people. The next will contain selections of the latest songs and the orchestral numbers will be a special feature of the occasion. On account of the Commencement Exercises over the county, many were detained from coming, who will be here at the next entertainment which will occur early in the month of June.

A total of $85.00 was realized from the entertainment and the committee wishes to thank the public for its support.

President Faces Whiskers

Washington, May 24—The last scene of the world war so far as the United States is concerned will be enacted at the White House tomorrow afternoon when President Harding will receive the new German ambassador, Dr. Otto Wiedfeldt.

IN LOVING MEMORY

From the Rocky Mountain News

The lillies of France are blooming
By the little white crosses today,
Where America's sons are sleeping
The years of their manhood away.
They died on the altar of Freedom
For liberty, right and truth;
They sleep in glory immortal
In the beauty and splendor of youth.

The soldiers of France are marching
By the fields where our loved ones lie—
Each one lifts a hand, saluting,
As he silently passes by.
The children of France are singing
When the bugles softly play,
And the lillies of France droop lower
O'er the little white crosses today.

The women of France are kneeling
By the graves they lovingly tend,
And the breezes murmur gently
As the Stars with their Tricolor blend.
The women of France are kneeling
'Mid the graves so far away,
And our hearts are kneeling with them
By the little white crosses today.

—Anna Heald Clayton.

FORT STANTON NOTES

Patrick Sweeney, patient, left on Wednesday of last week for Galveston, Texas.

G. Ringstrom, also patient, left last week for the Pacific Coast.

The Misses Margaret Clarke, Clare Tozzer, Helen Kinnan and Mrs. R. M. Shaw spent the week end visiting in Roswell.

Miss Mary Dalton, Dietitian, returned on Sunday from a few days' visit to El Paso.

Dr. Harry J. Warner, of New York, arrived at the Fort last Saturday and took command immediately, succeeding Dr. Wallace as Commanding Officer. On Monday evening an informal party was given in honor of Dr. and Mrs. Warner by residents of the Parade.

"Early Twilight"

Mrs. Wm. Culter of Oscuro has completed the painting of a scene north of her home town which includes a portion of the Sierra Blanco range, giving a vivid view of Nogal peak. The interior of the picture is of the canyons and lowlands, giving a distant view of the ranch home of Chas. Thornton. In the foreground, the residence of Dr. and Mrs. R. E. Blaney is shown. The picture was painted expressly for Mrs. S.J.Kohn of Chicago, who was Mrs. Blaney's guest a short time ago. She was present when the scene depicted in the painting was suggested and her wishes carried out. The The scene is descriptive of early twilight as the mountains clothed in robes of purple, stand out vividly over the gathering shadows in the valleys and canyons below.

Shops and Rail Notes

The local management of the E. P. & S. W. system at this point is making hurried arrangements for the coming cantaloupe rush which began yesterday. Tracks leading from the big turn-table into the round house have been taken up and the rails replaced with heavy ones; the roadbeds also have been strengthened to accommodate the rush. 11,000 cars of cantaloupes will pass through here at from 450 to 500 cars per day as long as the business lasts.

Jack Harkey, boiler maker, has returned to his old position.

I. D. Baker of El Paso is here and will stay with the boys until the rush is over; perhaps longer.

A rush like this doesn't bother Sam Miller; he has mixed up with too many of them in the past.

The call boy will be busy from now on during the rush. Be ready when he raps on your door and yells out: "gold ball at 2:15."

Conductor Fred Getty has been laid up with a sore foot for the past week, but hopes to be able to take his run by the time the rush begins, in earnest.

Josephus Brown, blacksmith in the shops, is busy getting things in readiness for the big rush. Mr. Brown is an important factor in the shops.

Mike Barnett, who has done but little since the war in railroad work, will soon be handling feeders on the "Big Mikes," it is understood. So much for "Big Mikes."

MEMORIAL DAY
A PROCLAMATION BY THE GOVERNOR

For over half a century the Nation has set aside and observed what is known as MEMORIAL DAY, on which to honor the memory of the soldiers, sailors and marines who have defended and died for our country. This national roll of honor now includes the men and boys who paid the supreme sacrifice in the Civil, Spanish-American and recent World War. On this day it is our sacred privilege to visit and decorate the graves of these heroes and to participate in suitable ceremonies and exercises wherein we may publicly acknowledge our debt of gratitude to them, and pay to their memory every tribute of respect and love.

NOW THEREFORE, I, MERRITT C. MECHEM, GOVERNOR OF THE STATE OF NEW MEXICO, do hereby proclaim Tuesday, May 30, 1922 as MEMORIAL DAY in the state of New Mexico; and respectfully recommend that all patriotic societies representing the survivors of the wars in which our nation has taken part, prepare programs for the day, at the graves, in the churches or other suitable places as may be in keeping with the solemn and sacred meaning of the day.

Mrs. Burleson Honored At the Bonito Inn

Last Saturday afternoon at Lincoln, Mrs. Lena Morgan and Mrs. E. L. Woods entertained at a bridge party in honor of Mrs. Fred Burleson, principal of the Lincoln Consolidated Schools, who is about to leave on her summer vacation. The party was given at the Bonito Inn, a beautiful retreat in the old historic town. Three tables were arranged for the players and after the hour at bridge, dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses. A happy afternoon was spent, the affair closing at about five o'clock. Those present were: Mesdames Wood, Penfield, Clark, Pfingsten, Morgan, Wright, Magee, Burleson; Misses Sophia and Julia Penfield, Bonita Clark, Edna Pfingsten, Maria Sanchez. Harriett Brown.

Jones—Slack

Walter F. Jones and Miss Ala Slack, both of Gran Quivira were united in the holy bonds of matrimony Monday morning Rev. T. M. Blacklock officating. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest R. Blood and Mr. E. E. Marr accompanied the young people. The bride once lived in Carrizozo.

New Agent at the Western Union

Miss Lassie Ayers was appointed last Friday to succeed Mrs. Pearl McFarland as local agent for the Western Union Telegraph Company at this point. Miss Lassie is purely a Carrizozo product. She has had an amount of experience in the work of telegraphy, sufficient to enable her to accept the appointment and to amply perform the duties connected with it. Mrs. Mc Farland has resigned and will hereafter confine her attention to home life. We congratulate Miss Lassie on the appointment.

Smith-McNary Bill Urged

Washington, May 24.—A demand for the passage of the pending reclamation bill, known as the Smith-McNary measure, was made in the senate tonight by Senator Ashurst, Democrat, of Arizona, who said he was speaking not only for himself but for Republicans as well as Democrats in the west. He served notice "that we will not allow this congress to adjourn before the bill becomes a law." People of the west regardless of politics see the vast importance of the measure and the senate is reminded that Republican editors in the west regard it as an "inexcusable mistake" to ignore its importance.

Educational News
By Mrs. M. L. Blaney

The Lincoln County Board of Education met with the Board of County Commissioners, the Educational Auditor and Assistant State Superintendent. The budgets for the coming year were considered and passed upon by these several bodies. Rural schools must confine themselves to the limitations set by law. Teachers for the coming year will be paid according to educational qualifications, experience and ability to teach. A tentative schedule will be mailed to clerks of the various districts with instructions. The County Board to adjust salaries according to schedule and qualifications. Principals employed in schools of four to eight teachers will be paid a salary not to exceed $1500 per year.

Picacho, Hondo, Glencoe, Tinnie and Ruidoso schools closed last week with appropriate exercises. Glencoe, Tinnie and Picacho had exhibits of industrial work to which much credit should be given. The aprons and dresses made by the 4th and 5th grades of the Picacho school, maps, drawings, class room work, clay modeling, etc., completed the exhibit.

The Home Economics exhibit of the Lincoln County High School, under the direction of Miss Stella Wyatt, demonstrated what is being done there. The Manual Training Department has been busy the entire year doing practical work for the benefit of the school along with the mechanical drawing taught by Mr. Peters. The Academic teachers including Supt. Klopp deserve their share of honor for the success of the school year. Three of the six graduates have made plans to continue their education. The art and basketry of the lower grades is very commendable.

The Lincoln Consolidated school held an outdoor festival on the evening of May 24, the grounds being lighted with various kinds of lanterns. An excellent program consisting of drills given by the lower grades directed by Mrs. U. S. Clark and Miss Sanchez, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth and High school students directed by Mrs. Mabel J. Burleson, Miss Fleming and Miss Brown. The Glee Club and the orchestra are to be congratulated on their fine work. Mrs. M. L. Blaney presented the diplomas.

A most interesting address was given at the Corona school by Jonathan H. Wagner, President of the Las Vegas Normal University. Miss Nanelou had charge of the music which was enjoyed by all.

Last, but not least, comes White Oaks school. An interesting program was rendered by the pupils of the school under the direction of the teachers, Mrs. Burnett and Virden. White Oaks has a right to feel an unusual pride in the present graduating class as Roy Harmon and Miss Pearl Purcella of Tinnie, stand at the head of the list in standings so far reported, both have a general average of 94. Mrs. M. L. Blaney presented the diplomas.

The Baca Canyon school closes May 30. A school play prepared by the pupils under the direction of Mrs. Mimms will be given on the 29. The Eighth Grade diplomas will be presented by Mrs. M. L. Blaney on the 30, when appropriate exercises will be given by the graduates.

EXCITING CORN CHASE BY JAILER COLE

Wednesday evening about 7:45, as most of our population were preparing to see the great "Theodora" at the Crystal Theatre, shots were heard in the vicinity of the court house and the word "halt!" rang out clearly on the mountain air. Then an exciting chase followed. Along Capitan avenue to Fifth street, up Fifth to Alamogordo avenue went pursuer and pursued. The pursuer proved to be jailer Jake Cole; the pursued, Lee Corn, who it will be remembered, passed a bad check on Mr. Lutz of the Carrizozo Trading Co., a short time ago and was bound over to await the action of the grand jury.

Corn was the only occupant of the jail and the jailer had allowed him to go to the cistern back of the jail to get his supply of water but had always kept a close watch on him. On Thursday evening his visit to the cistern was later than usual and as he placed the bucket under the spout of the pump, he took to the tumble weeds like a jack rabbit, with Cole close behind him. As the chase reached Capitan avenue, Cole fired to scare him, but this seemed only to increase his speed; so on he went. Cole followed, firing as many as six shots in rapid succession, but after reaching an alley between Alamo. and El Paso avenues, the frightened fugitive evaded his pursuer. Search was made in every direction through the night, but up to the present time, his capture has not been effected. If he is captured, to use a time honored expression, he will be "paid back with his own corn."

RADIO

PROGRESS OF RADIO THROUGH THE YEARS

Wireless Research Began Long Ago, But Development Has Been Swift Lately.

Wireless research started many years ago, as far back even as 1827. Even the radio telephone is not a recent perfection; rather it is that introduction to the layman of the human voice and music has suddenly popularized something that wireless men had thought a pastime or amusement. Here is the chronological record of wireless:

1827—It was found that the magnetic discharge from a leyden jar would magnetize a steel needle.

1831 — Electro-magnetic induction was discovered between two entirely separate circuits by Michael Faraday.

1837—Cooke and Wheatstone of London, England, and Morse of the United States take out first patent for electric telegraph.

1838—K. A. Steinheil of Munich suggested that a system of wireless telegraphy could be established after his discovery of the use of the earth return.

1840—Joseph Henry (U. S. A.) produced the first high-frequency electric oscillations, and stated that the condenser discharge is oscillatory.

1842—Wireless experiments were made by S. F. B. Morse by electric conduction through water across Washington canal and across wide rivers.

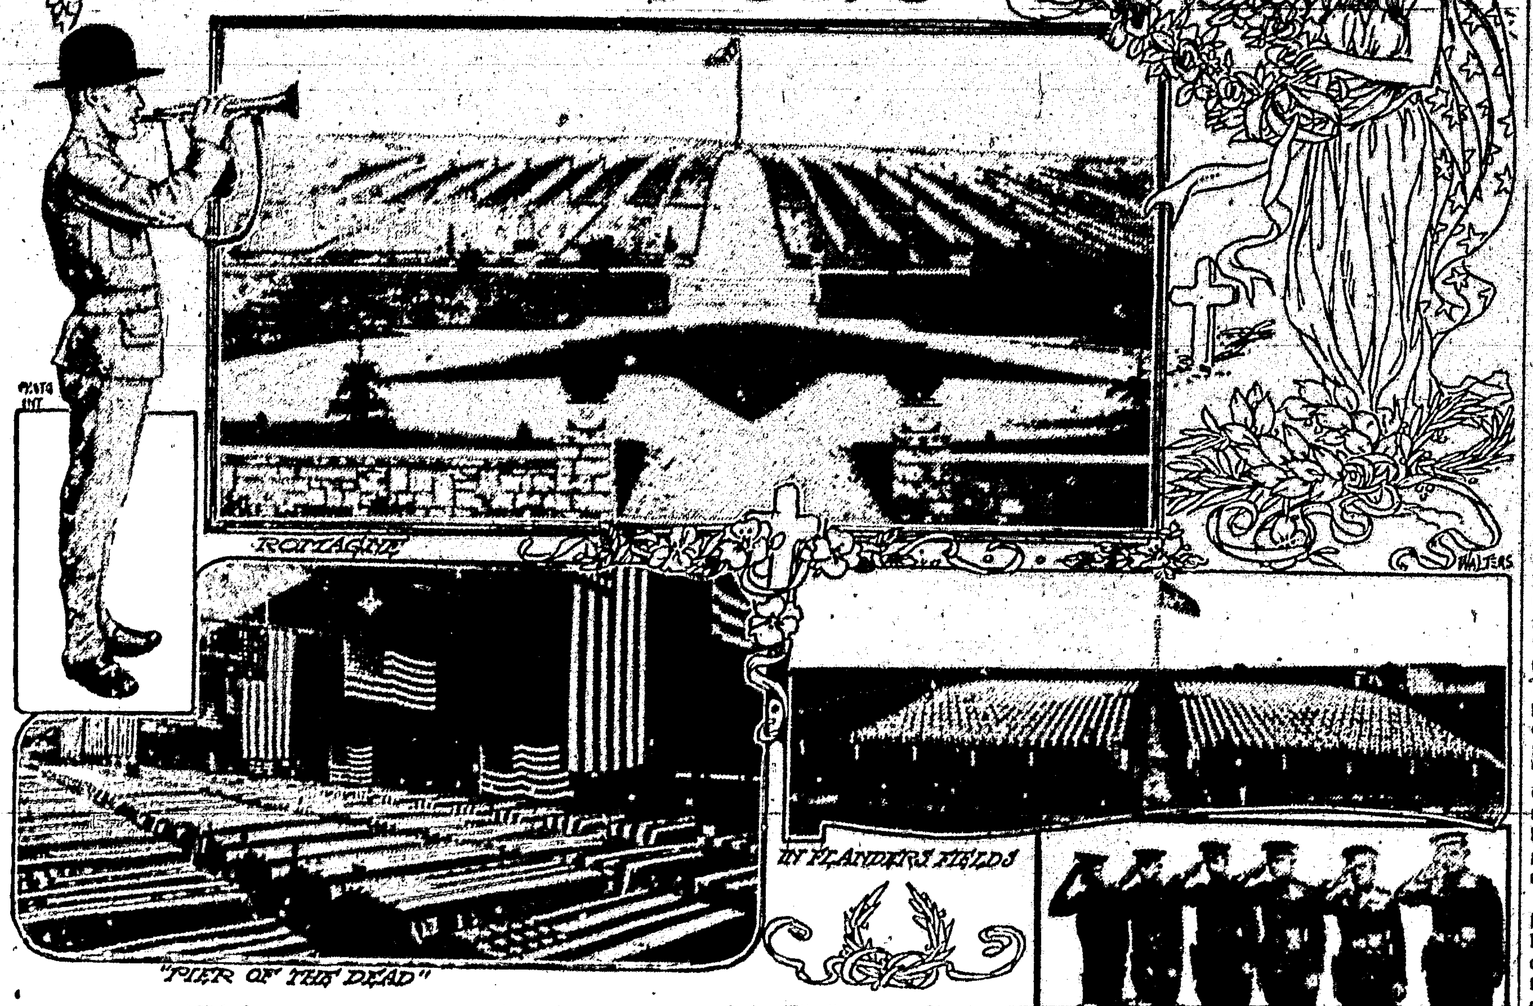
1843—A wireless system for transatlantic communication was suggested.

1845—Water was used as a conducting medium in wireless experiments across a wide river.

1849—Intelligible signals were actually sent across a river 4,500 feet wide in India, but the cost was found prohibitive for commercial use.

Forty-five years ago a desperate bandit was hanged to a tree near Joplin, Mo., on July 12, 1877, a woman cut him down and he recovered from the ordeal. They have written to learn if he can still be tried for robberies "in which men were killed."

Bringing Home Our Soldier Dead



By JESSIE DELL,

(Historian Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.)

TO THE quartermaster corps of the United States army has fallen the reverent task of bringing home the soldier dead, returned for burial under the stars and stripes.

On March 30 last, the army transport Cambrai reached New York with 1,224 flag-draped coffins. With her arrival, the solemn duty of the quartermaster corps of returning the bodies of those who fell in France, was practically completed.

There are left over seas now only 325 bodies to be brought back to the United States, the last of the 44,418 of those Americans who will be buried in the homeland. About 32,000 more will sleep forever overseas, according to the desires of their next of kin.

At this time it is fitting to tell our people just how America has been returning to the bosom of their native land the mortal remains of thousands of her sons who followed the flag—

Into that realm where battle flags are furled
And war drums throb no longer.

This sacred duty, under the direction of Major General H. L. Rogers, quartermaster general of the army, is performed by the graves registration service through the cemeterial division, and the efficient, sympathetic and reverent manner in which it is done has been a source of satisfaction to every one.

That one may visualize the work involved—its methods and operations in preparing our soldier dead for the last journey—we will endeavor to draw a picture which will show, step by step, how this has been accomplished.

Early morning sun finds the field operating units ready for the day's work and with trucks containing all materials necessary—tools, implements, caskets and shipping boxes—they start on their way to the sacred regions where lie our soldier dead. Each unit has its corps of highly-specialized and technical men in mortuary affairs (embalmers, undertakers and technical assistants) to perform this service. The working squads or laborers are composed chiefly of ex-service men.

Guards and watchmen attached to each unit are also discharged American soldiers, and during the time that the bodies are under the jurisdiction of operating units, this guard is constantly on duty over them. A commissioned officer filling a dual capacity of commanding officer and inspector is in command of each unit.

Once at the graves, excavating is commenced. When the bodies are reached, only one is allowed to be lifted to the surface of the ground at a time, in order that no possible chance will be taken in confusing identities. This is a requirement rigidly adhered to. The outer wrapping of the body is removed and search is made for identification tags and marks; when found they are securely fastened to the remains; the body is then wrapped in a new, clean blanket.

The identification disk and long narrow strip of aluminum, showing name, rank and organization, taken from the cross or star which marked the grave, is pinned to the blanket over the chest of the dead. Tenderly lifting and placing the body in a metallic container is the next step, using soft, flat cushions as padding to hold the body steady; after this a soft, clean sheet is carefully tucked in, further insuring against the shifting of the body during transportation.

After this the metallic container is placed in its silk-lined casket of chestnut wood or oak, and it, too, is securely fastened; across the head of the lid is attached a narrow aluminum strip showing the name, serial number, rank and organization of the soldier, and the number of the grave and cemetery from which the body was taken. The casket is then placed in the shipping box, which has been secured by the blocks of white wood or chestnut, covered with white plush to prevent marring or scratching the casket.

Name, rank and organization is then stenciled on each end of the shipping case. A tag giving the name and address of the consignee is tacked to the side, and the whole box is enveloped with our flag, which remains until the body is placed on the transport for sailing.

The sun sinking low in the West sees all bodies which have been exhumed entirely prepared for shipment, for this is another requirement which is rigidly adhered to. The bodies are then placed in local storage under constant guard of American watchmen. And thus the day's work is done.

All evacuations being completed within that section, the bodies are then removed from the local storage, and accompanied by convoys and guards, are taken by rail or river barges, as conditions allow, to the concentration point for that particular section.

Port officers maintain at all times a close liaison with the field operating unit in order to obviate misunderstandings, to prevent delays, and to permit satisfactory and definite plans being made in sufficient time for sailing. These concentration points are under the personal and constant supervision of commissioned officers and watchmen who are honorably discharged American soldiers.

The ports chosen as shipping bases are: Brest, St. Nazaire, Bordeaux, Toulon, Cherbourg, Calais, France; and Antwerp, Belgium, through which, during last year, 20,018 bodies were returned to America. Cherbourg has had the greatest number to handle, as evacuation of bodies for return from areas of Romagne, Thiaucourt and Belleau all passed through this port, to the number of 25,000.

Finally the news comes from one of the six ports that the transport is ready for its precious cargo. Officers, convoys and guards then place the dead on special French trains or barges which have been draped with American flags. Departure is taken amid large gatherings of the population of the town and a guard of honor, comprising two or more companies of French soldiers who come to pay homage to our dead.

Quickly the news spreads that "les Americains" are taking their dead heroes home, and all along the line of the journey many are waiting. Priests are there, and these men of God gently and lovingly chant the prayers for the dead, while children with arms full of flowers are waiting to place them in the care of the guards or drop them on the barges as they slowly pass by. Every honor is shown both by civil and military France; and so the journey becomes a triumphal procession of America's heroic dead.

The port is reached, and there on its great "Pier of the Dead" the bodies are gently laid side by side, under the watchful care of the military "Guard of Honor" comprising a company of men detailed from the American forces in Germany.

Before it goes on the transport, each shipping case containing a body is carefully gone over to ascertain if it is in perfect condition for ocean transportation.

The tag showing the name and address of the consignee, which has been tacked to the side of the box, is then removed, and name and address stenciled on the side instead. The port officers, who are commissioned officers of our army, are present when this stenciling is done, the quartermaster general holding them personally responsible for all discrepancies and inaccuracies. Everything finished to the satisfaction of these officers, the bodies are finally placed on the transport, the warning bell is sounded and the transport slowly moves away.

The military attachments stand at "Attention" while their bugles salute the dead. All flags and ensigns of shipping, or those on vessels of the various navies of the world, which may be represented in the harbor, are lowered as our funeral ship solemnly passes out, and then begins the long, last voyage of our soldier dead.

Simultaneously with the sailing of the transport, a cable message bearing the names of the dead returning speeds on its way to Washington and is received by the chief of the cemeterial division, who immediately takes steps to provide that every care and attention shall be attendant upon the arrival of the sacred cargo at the home port.

Let us leave for awhile our dead as they cross the great Atlantic and let us get a glimpse of the fields of honor in whose beautiful, broad, white acres will repose for all time those whose nearest of kin desire that they shall stay sleeping in France. The quartermaster corps has spared no effort in making lovely and lasting monuments to the boys who made the supreme sacrifice. Grounds, graceful and majestic, were chosen and arranged with a simple dignity that seems to be eminently fitting for the resting places of the dead.

At the present time, only five cemeteries in France and Belgium have official approval and sanction for their permanency, but the advisability of increasing the number of national cemeteries abroad is receiving favorable consideration; it is recently that Thiaucourt has been added to the number. In this cemetery lie so many of the men of the air service whose daring and brilliancy will ornament many pages of the World's war history. Already extensive plans are on foot to make our cemeteries over there great national memorials; and to insure the success of the undertaking, plans for beautifying and ornamenting have been placed in the hands of a special commission appointed by the secretary of war.

It is headed by the chief of the cemeterial division; other members are: Charles Moore, secretary of the National Fine Arts commission; James L. Greenleaf, New York landscape artist; and William Mitchell Kendall, the well-known artist of New York. Their ideas when carried out will make the "American Fields of Honor" the most impressive war cemeteries in the world. And every one will be an outpost of America in France or Belgium, for wherever lies the grave of an American soldier, lies, too, a spot that is forever America.

Romagne, which is our Argonne cemetery, originally held in its bosom 23,000 of our men who fell in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, America's greatest battle. There every State of the Union, as well as the territories of Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, had representation. No spot in France is more historically famous than this, the Argonne sector, where lies our largest field of honor.

Here France's greatest battles have been fought, but none so great as that of 1918, when America and France again fought side by side, as in the days of Washington and Lafayette, and again for the principles of freedom and liberty. So, Romagne-Argonne, our beautiful and largest cemetery, stands as a monument to America's share in the world's greatest struggle.

Belleau, whose name memory lovingly links with the heroism and sacrifice of our men of the Second division, lies in a green, fertile valley, densely wooded, with loved, and shattered Chateau-Thierry near its portals. This cemetery is and always will be of the greatest national pride and glory to the United States, for it was at Chateau-Thierry that the American soldiers cried, "They shall not pass!" and, like a barrier across their path, halted the Huns on their way to Paris.

Suresnes cemetery, in the winding valley of the Seine and surrounded by a semi-circle of hills, is like a white gem in an exquisite setting of emerald. Old Fort Valerien, whose massive gray walls crown one of the hilltops, stands like a grim sentinel guarding our dead. Lying off in the distance can be seen one of the world's greatest cities—Paris—whose beautiful Washington boulevard, curving in graceful lines, connects it with our cemetery.

Flanders Fields, familiarly known by its old name of Bony, is the spot made historically famous to America by the Twenty-seventh and Thirtieth divisions, whose united effort as the Second corps, furnish one of history's most brilliant pages. Boys of the North and South, sons of the men who wore the Blue and the Gray—who can say that, in spirit, the great commanders of that long past war were not near to guide their boys, as they advanced to meet a common enemy, on the battleground of Flanders Fields.

In smashing the Hindenburg line, many of the division's bravest sons were left to sleep in the field they had so gallantly defended—"In Flanders Fields where poppies blow"—the deep, rich crimson of those poppies; how they cover every hillside and dell! Growing thickly among them are the white lilies of the valley and the beautiful blue cornflowers. And "Old Glory," floating high and wide, finds its colors reflected in these flowers below.

So peaceful and restful! It seems such a little while ago that the boom of cannon and the scream of shell had sent fleeing from their native haunts the sky larks now returning whose little throats all through the day pour forth floods of melody—a requiem over the dead, a psalm of thanksgiving to the Great Creator for bringing again to their home peace and quiet.

"ON EASY STREET"

Women "Farmerettes" Make Money in Western Canada.

Many Are Taking Advantage of the Opportunity Offered by the Fertile Land and Fine Climate.

In many parts of Western Canada are to be found women owning and running farms for themselves, and what is more, making them pay. May Hazlett, an English girl, who lived on a farm in the Touchwood hills, in Saskatchewan, for the past four years, looking after her stock and cultivating her land, is one of these. The farm was originally her brother's homestead, at which time Miss Hazlett was a stenographer. Her brother was killed while fighting with the Canadian forces at Vimy Ridge. Neighbors advised Miss Hazlett to sell the farm, but she decided that she was tired of the "eternal pounding" and became a farmerette.

Mrs. Mary J. Blackburn, a pioneer woman farmer of Alberta, has just added 160 acres to her farm near Hardisty. Coming from Eastern Canada, Mrs. Blackburn homesteaded a quarter section in 1902. She had two Holstein heifers, a bull, and $17 in cash. She lived in a tent the first summer and in a sod shack in the winter. Her first crop put her, as she tells the story, "on Easy street." In ten years she had a herd of 60 pure-bred Holstein cattle and was operating a prosperous dairy. A fine residence has supplanted the sod hut. "I milked my cows, raised my cattle, cut hay and stacked it all by myself," said Mrs. Blackburn. "I started on bare prairie with no money, and made good. I worked hard, but the experience was wonderful."

It has generally been conceded that farming is a man's job. It has long been considered that a woman's place on the farm was in the house, with a few attendant duties, looking after the chickens and the garden. But times are changing.

Demonstrative of the present feminine initiative, there are two young ladies farming extensively and with good profit too, in Western Canada. Some years ago a family located a 160-acre farm in the Oak Lake district, Manitoba. Later the father died, leaving his two daughters and aged wife a mortgaged quarter section. Instead of selling the effects and moving to town to take employment, the girls decided to work the place.

While the mother looked after the household duties the daughters did the farm work. They did the plowing, harrowing, seeding, haying, harvesting, stocking, feeding and other farm operations. Except at threshing time, the getting out of wood, the help of man was never sought. Instead of a 160-acre place, with seven horses and ten cattle, which they started with, they have a 1,120-acre farm, twenty-five head of heavy horses and nearly a hundred head of cattle, mostly pure-breds. Their farm buildings, equipment and well-kept fields would be objects of pride to the owners in any country.

Their accomplishment has not only been profitable but pleasant, and they have enjoyed every home advantage. They are two entertaining and bright girls, and have all the feminine charm of womanhood. Their manlike occupation has not given them a masculine character or appearance, as some of the older generations might imagine. Their gallant struggle for success signifies the truth in the oft-repeated maxim of Western Canada, "A little assistance and the soil, with its natural richness and God's sunshine will soon pay for the land itself."

Smokers Cause Many Forest Fires.

Denver, Colo.—Twenty per cent of all the forest fires started by man in the national forests of the West during 1921 were caused by careless tobacco smokers, according to figures compiled by the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture. In California, Arizona and New Mexico, one out of every four forest fires due to human agencies was started by burning cigarettes, cigars, matches or pipe-heels carelessly thrown aside by smokers while in the woods. In other parts of the West the percentage of smokers' fires ranged from 12 to 18 per cent. The total number of forest fires on the western national forests during the past season was 5,181, of which number 1,444 were caused by lightning, 732 by smokers, and 2,055 by other human agencies.

Tientsin, China.—General Wang Chang Pin, commander of the 23rd division, has arrived here to take over command of the Chili forces. Gen. Wun Pei Fu has returned to Paoting-Fu. General Wu announces that the trouble in the province of Honan, caused by the revolution of Tuchum Chaoti, has been suppressed.

Fiancé Saves Thief from Prison.

New York.—On the solemn promise of his fiancé to stand as a "silent sentinel over him the rest of her life," Oscar Hirschmann escaped with a suspended sentence after he had pleaded guilty to stealing $500 from a brokerage firm by which he was employed, to provide medical attention for his aged father, who has since died.

Carpentier Knocks Out Lewis.

London.—Georges Carpentier knocked out Ted "Kid" Lewis in the first round of what was to have been a twenty-round bout for the light-heavyweight championship of the world, held by Carpentier. The end came when Carpentier, in breaking from a clinch, drove a sharp right to the point of Lewis' jaw. The Englishman toppled over backward and lay motionless on the floor until the referee counted ten. Then Carpentier picked up his fallen foe and aided in carrying him to his corner.

Claim Cossack's Presence Is Insult.

New York.—The American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars have been asked to work for the deportation of Gen. Gregorie Semenoff, Cossack ataman, on the ground that his presence in the country was an insult to the 15,000 American soldiers who served in Siberia during the war. The request, made by the Siberian Veterans' organization, contains a bitter denouncement of Semenoff's action toward the American forces in Siberia.

Campus Turned Into Museum.

Colorado Springs.—Colorado College students turned the campus grounds into an outdoor museum recently as a protest against President Dunaway. Palmer hall, a college building, was broken into and stuffed animals from the museum were taken and distributed over the campus. A live cow was locked up in the hall throughout the night. Large signs bearing the words, "Eventually—Why Not Now?" and "Sooner or Later," were strung up, apparently referring to Dunaway leave.

Inside Facts.

Alice had been to Sunday school for the first time, and had come home filled with information. She was overheard to say to her six-year-old sister, as she laid a wee hand over her heart, "When you hear something wite here, you know it is conscience whispering to you."

"No such thing," responded the six-year-old; "it's just wind in your tummy."—Philadelphia Ledger.

"I hereby solemnly promise to fill any man's pipe"

This promise is made in the letter that follows. We had sent Mr. Lewis some free samples of Edgeworth (as we do to all who ask for them). We didn't know that he was an Edgeworth smoker until we received this letter.

Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Messrs. Larus & Brother Company,
Richmond, Va.

Gentlemen:

I am a smoker of good tobacco for over 40 years and have no hesitancy in saying that of all smoking tobacco Edgeworth in my estimation occupies the first place.

Having smoked it for a number of years in many different parts of our own good U. S. A., and also Alaska and Cuba—it has always given me supreme smoke-satisfaction, at all times, anywhere, everywhere, regardless of climatic changes or any other hocus-pocus.

My object in sending for the free samples (if you will forgive me) was to determine whether or not Edgeworth was being made any different—that possibly the samples (like whiskey samples used to be) were the best and finest of the whole output.

But on smoking the samples I find no difference whatever, and so I am convinced beyond the shadow of a doubt that Edgeworth always is of the same superior quality in all its forms, and farther, that my little joke in asking for and receiving something for nothing will be excused by you on the plea of curiosity.

In thanking you kindly for your courtesy in sending free samples, I hereby solemnly promise to fill any man's (reasonable-sized) pipe with Edgeworth tobacco of my own purchase, to convert him to that really good smoke, "Edgeworth."

Very sincerely,

(Signed) Arthur John Lewis.

Edgeworth samples are no different from the regular Edgeworth tobacco you can buy in a store. We wouldn't keep "special" samples any more than we would have a special kind of tobacco in a different pouch in our pocket to hand to a friend.

We feel that Edgeworth is good enough, that its pleasant fragrance and mellowness will appeal to most pipe-smokers. We do not think our effort is wasted if we send free samples of Edgeworth to a man who doesn't find it exactly suited to his taste.

If you never tried Edgeworth, let us send you enough to fill your pipe a few times. Smoke it, and then decide whether or not Edgeworth was "made for you."

Edgeworth is sold in two forms—Ready-Rubbed and Plug Slice. There are various sizes to suit all purchasers.

When you send for samples, address Larus & Brother Company, 00 South 21st St., Richmond, Va.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

Newborn Danger in Yellow Fever

GORGAS' WARNING RECALLED

In Former Days Time of Transit Across Atlantic Was Long Enough to Allow all Cases of Fever on Board to Kill or Cure.

Panama.—The two Portuguese aviators flying across the Atlantic from Africa to South America brings to mind a prophetic warning of the late General Gorgas. This was to the effect that when quick transportation between tropical Africa and tropical America should develop, as it eventually would, it would greatly increase the danger of the spread of yellow fever to the Eastern Hemisphere as long as the disease remained in South America, especially in Brazil.

Days of the Slave Trade.

The reason why yellow fever did not spread from America to Africa in the days of the slave trade, as malaria did spread from Africa to America then, illutrates beautifully an important difference between the two great tropical plagues, as well as gives point and pertinence to General Gorgas' warning. Yellow fever kills or cures in a very short time; malaria may linger in the system for a very long time. In former days the time of transit across the Atlantic was long enough to allow all cases of yellow fever on board a ship to die or to recover before the voyage ended. Recovery conferred immunity on the fortunate, and if a mosquito should bite them after they reached Africa they found no germs in them to transmit to others. So it required a very quick transit to get the infection across. It is not yet positively certain that yellow fever ever did cross the ocean. General Gorgas was on his way to the west coast of Africa to settle this question definitely when he died in London.

An Important Difference.

But malaria, which seems to have originated in Africa, does not confer immunity upon those who recover from an attack. The germs may survive in the system of the sufferer for months, or even for years, in a more or less dormant state, even if acute attacks do not again develop, and these germs may infect the anopheles or malaria-carrying mosquitoes, and so enable them to infect others. In this way the African slaves brought malaria to America with them, but the slave traders did not carry back yellow fever with them to Africa—at least it is not definitely known that they did—and the long time of transit was unfavorable to any considerable transportation of the infection. It is certain that Africa has not suffered from the imported American plague of yellow fever as much as America has from the malaria imported from Africa.

Airplane May Change This.

But the airplane may easily change all this. If the Atlantic is crossed in two or three days any member of the crew of an airplane having an infection of yellow fever may easily carry the disease to where the mosquitoes are waiting to do their part on both sides of the Atlantic. Yellow fever does not reveal itself immediately after a man is bitten by an infected mosquito.

The only safety would lie in a strict quarantine at the port of arrival in Africa or Europe, the crew and passengers all being detained under watch until the period of inoculation has passed. The other remedy is to clean up South America of yellow fever, as General Gorgas so strongly urged.

Would Harness Heat of Kilauea

Borings in Volcano Suggested to See if It Can Be Converted into Power.

EXPERTS SEE POSSIBILITIES

Tentative Plans for the Experiment Embrace at Least 50 Borings to Provide Thermal Map of Hot Belt of Volcano.

Honolulu.—An immediate start on experimental borings in the bed of the active volcano of Kilauea, on the island of Hawaii, to determine whether the heat of the volcano can be harnessed and converted into electrical power, was urged by Dr. T. A. Jaggar, director of the Volcano observatory, at the annual meeting of the Volcano Research association here.

Doctor Jaggar said that tentative plans for the experiment embraced at least 50 borings so located as to provide a thermal map of the hot belt of the volcano. The first boring would be sunk to a depth of 200 or 300 feet in the center of the crater, with the others at 50 to 100 feet deep, depending upon the nature of the resultant discoveries.

Most of these borings will be made at the source of old lava flows.

The meeting, commemorative of the tenth anniversary of the founding of the research association, decided that the borings should not be made until subscriptions totaling $8,000 had been obtained to defray the expenses. Of this sum $7,000 already has been donated.

Doctor Jaggar also recommended the construction of a practicable pack trail to the summit of Mauna Loa, 14,000 feet above sea level. Kilauea is situated 4,000 feet above sea level, on the slopes of Mauna Loa. Doctor Jaggar said that he expected a summit outbreak of Mauna Loa, in the crater of Mokuaweoweo, next year, or in the year 1924, as nine years will have lapsed then since Mauna Loa's last activity.

Wants House for Scientists.

He also urged the construction of a house at the summit in order that scientists might be quartered there in anticipation of this outbreak, as nobody has been known to have witnessed the first stages of one of Mauna Loa's activities.

Previously attention has always been attracted to the outbreak at the summit by the reflection in the clouds above of the glow of the boiling fire fountains which had risen through the summit crater. The board of directors indorsed this suggestion.

Doctor Jaggar's report reviewed the work of the research station on the brink of Kilauea volcano and the activities of the association.

PULLS TOOTH TO TOOT FLUTE

Schoolboy Sacrifices Crooked Incisor to Further Life's Ambition to Become a Musician.

Philadelphia.—A real martyr to music has been brought to light by Miss Winnetta L. Stacks, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Deaconess home here. Miss Stacks in describing her efforts to initiate music classes in settlement work, told of one small boy who confided that his life's ambition was to play the flute. The teacher struggled in vain to teach, but his lips would not pucker right.

"Joe, I guess you will never learn to blow a flute because of the way that front tooth has grown. It is in the way," she said finally.

A few days later the lad's mother returned home to find her son's face bloody, but shining with triumph. He had borrowed pliers and had pulled the tooth.

"And at the first recital of the students of the class," Miss Stacks concluded, "he blew notes on the flute."

"ANGEL" WILL BUY A VILLAGE

Swedish Red Cross Nurse Seeks to Rehabilitate War Wrecks.

Aristocratic Girl Gathers German Refugees From Wastes of Siberia—Has Already Repatriated Thousands of War Prisoners.

Stockholm.—A refuge of rest and physical rehabilitation where the human wrecks of German war prisoners from Russia and Siberia may be treated and salvaged is being purchased by Miss Elsa Brandstrom, known throughout central Europe and Russia as "the angel of Siberia."

Miss Brandstrom is negotiating for a village in southern Germany which she proposes to turn into a human reclamation camp for the derelicts that once marched proudly under Hindenburg and other Teutonic military leaders against the Russians and were captured and sent to Siberian concentration camps.

They remained in Siberia till long after the world war was over, and there are still thousands of them left, free to return home if they could. But they have neither the means nor the physical strength to do so.

Miss Brandstrom is a young Swedish Red Cross nurse, the daughter of the late Gen. Edward Brandstrom, for many years Swedish minister to Russia under the czar's regime. Leaving her comfortable home in Stockholm and the aristocratic social set in which she had been brought up, she led a small Red Cross expedition into western Siberia and has succeeded in repatriating thousands of German and Austrian war prisoners.

But she found that when the former soldiers reached their homes they were unable to assume their former places in society. They were wrecks.

So she has collected a considerable fund and hopes to purchase a village and have it ready for occupancy this autumn.

As to the war prisoners still wandering about Russia and Siberia, many of them never will be found, and none of them will ever be able to get back without outside aid. Miss Brandstrom proposes to continue rounding up these waifs and bringing them to her haven of rest.

Wooden Leg as Flask.

Spartanburg, S. C.—The storied "uses of adversity" proved anything but sweet the other day for Alex Ballenger, a one-legged Spartanburg Negro. When a faint and muffled "splash, splash" was heard to accompany him as he hobbled down Main street a policeman took him in. At the station a cache in his wooden leg was found to contain a pint of liquor. The judge imposed a fine of $100 for transporting intoxicants.

If the Turkey Comes Home To Us, It's Different

A certain preacher in one of the El Paso churches devoted his last Sunday's sermon to lambasting the southern people for lynching negroes who have been guilty of rape or murder. He says that people should be civilized enough and have charity enough to allow the law to take its course in these cases instead of resorting to riot and lynching He deplores the level to which humanity has sunk and makes an appeal for a higher and better moral rating among the people.

It is one thing for a preacher to sit in his study, cool - headed, with his thought evenly balanced and ponder over the wrongs, as he may term them, but it is quite another thing to have these same assaults and crimes brought to his own door. It is one thing to look on the faults of the other fellow, but when the "turkey comes home to us," as it has to the people of the south, then its different. How would the reverend gentleman feel, should his daughter fall a victim to brute violence and the guilty wretch be lead into his presence? How would he feel should his son be waylaid and slain, an arrest follow and the murderer be apprehended, confess his crime and be ushered into his presence? The people of the South still feel the sting of the Negro domination which followed in the wake of the Civil War, when negroes were allowed to arrest, imprison and in some cases, execute innocent white people. While crimes still exist in the south, there are few today to what there would be, were it not for Judge Lynch. The preacher referred to takes no thought for the suffering mother, the heart broken father, but, should the "turkey comes home to him" he would recall with bitterness his attacks on those who have seen fit to take the law into their own hands in a frenzied desire to mete out speedy punishment — "If the Turkey Comes Home to Us, then its Different!"

SENDS U. S. NEW GENOA APPEAL

NEW TRUCE IS FORMED

FRANCE AND BELGIUM APPROVE PRESENT PROGRAM FOR CONFERENCE.

(Western Newspaper Union News Service.)

Paris.—The Havas correspondent at Genoa understands that Premier Lloyd George has sent another message to the United States government giving a fuller explanation of the plan of the meeting of the experts' commission at The Hague.

Genoa.—The Hague has been definitely selected as the meeting place for the experts who will further examine the Russian problem. Arrangements for the Hague conference in June were practically completed with the acceptance by the Russians of the proposals submitted to them, which have been amended so as to provide that a truce between the various powers will continue for a maximum of eight months.

The process verbal relating to the Lloyd George plan for dual commissions to meet at The Hague, which was presented to the Russians, was adopted with an annex.

With the amendments recently carried by the subcommission, it will be sent to the Washington government, probably with a letter from the secretary of the Genoa conference.

Clause six of the annex to the process verbal, which refers to the truce or preliminary pact of non-aggression, was amended in such a manner as to make it clear that the truce, as well as applying to the Russian government proper, will apply also to the eight republics allied with Russia.

The Japanese delegation accepted this amendment with the understanding that it must be ratified by the Japanese government. A second amendment to the document provides that the truce will continue to operate for a period of four months after adjournment of The Hague meeting. As it had been previously understood that The Hague conference would last about four months, this change is interpreted as indicating a probable European and Asiatic truce of about eight months. This extension is also considered a victory for Mr. Lloyd George because it provides more time for the consummation of the permanent nonaggression pact into which he hopes the truce will be merged.

After a conference with Mr. Lloyd George, M. Barthou and M. Jasper announced that the French and Belgian delegations, approved the proceedings, but must refer the whole matter to their home governments for ratification.

The impression prevailed here that France's attitude toward The Hague conference might be determined largely by the attitude of the United States, whose presence France desires because of the similarity of their views on Russian communism.

The Russian delegates withdrew their objection to the holding of the conference at The Hague, upon hearing the announcement from a representative of Holland, that the Dutch government would undertake to accord to the Russians all guarantees, facilities and rights extended to the delegations of all other countries.

Russian Recognition by U. S. Held Up.

Washington.—Any question of recognition by the United States of the Russian soviet government lies beyond the time when restoration of productivity in Russia shall have been set in motion by that country itself. Refusal to participate both in the Genoa conference and in the proposed commission consideration of Russian affairs at The Hague, was based on the conviction that such a restoration could not be hoped for under the terms outlined in the recent Russian memorandum.

Army of 140,000 Men Proposed.

Washington.—An army of 140,000 men with an average officer strength for next year of approximately 12,880 was agreed upon by the Senate appropriations subcommittee which has charge of the measure. The subcommittee draft of the War Department appropriation bill which has yet to be acted upon by the full committee, proposes increases of 23,000 in the enlisted personnel and about 1,500 in officers, over the House provision.

Boom Awaits Reparations Settlement.

Washington.—Discussion of European conditions from the viewpoint of American trade and finances continued to occupy both the day and night sessions of the annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Several of the speakers emphasized their conviction that the United States soon would be brought into closer economic relation with Europe and that with final settlement of the German reparations question, world business would boom.

"My method is very simple," the venerable gentleman replied. "I have never let any of my friends know it if I didn't happen to be feeling well, consequently I've never had to take any of the things they would have recommended if they had known I was ailing."

Are Men So Fickle?

Women members of the Republican county committee were discussing Assemblyman Steinberg's bill providing that no marriages should be performed until thirty-six hours after the issue of the license. Miss Mary Wood, prominent in politics, opposed the measure. "It gives a man too great a chance to change his mind," she said.—New York Herald.

MADE WISE CHOICE OF WIFE

John Brown's Helpmate Apparently Ideal Woman for a Man of His Stern Disposition.

John Brown, whose body later on lay "a-moldering in the grave," once described the lady who afterwards became his wife as a "remarkably plain but neat, industrious and economical girl." These latter virtues seem to have atoned for her want of physical charm, for he and Dianthe Lusk were married when she was nineteen and he was only twenty.

Dianthe was a strong-minded woman, but she made John an excellent wife, and their twelve years of married life—terminated by her early death—were most happy. He was a man of decided and violent disposition, and his wife is said to have possessed the faculty of getting him to do as she wished and causing him to believe that it was his idea all along. She died in 1832, twelve years after their marriage and just after the birth of their seventh child.

"All right then," Fred settled himself upon the window seat with a pipe, and proceeded, "There's something about her, when she stands there, she stands so straight and knows just what she's up to, and everything, why, there's something about her makes the cold chills go down your spine—I mean my spine, not yours particularly! You sit down—I mean anybody's spine, doggone it!" And as Ramsey increased the manifestations of his suspicions, lifting a tennis racket over the prostrate figure, "Oh, murder," Fred said, resignedly. "All right, we'll change the subject. That fat little Werder cutie made out a pretty good case for Germany, didn't she?"

Ramsey disposed himself in an easy chair with his feet upon the table, and presently chuckled. "You remember the time I had the fuss with Wesley Bender, back in the ole school days?"

"Yep."

"All the flubdub this Werder girl got off tonight puts me in mind of the way I talked that day. I can remember it as well as anything! Wesley kept yelpin' that whoever mentioned a lady's name in a public place was a pup, and of course I didn't want to hit him for that; a boy's got a reg'lar instinct for tryin' to make out he's on the right side in a scrap, and he'll always try to do something, or say something, or he'll get the other boy to say something to make it look as if the other boy was in the wrong and began the trouble. So I told poor ole Wes that my father spoke my mother's name in a public place whenever he wanted to, and I dared him to say my father was a pup. And all so on. A boy startin' up a scrap, why, half the time he'll drag in his father and mother if there's any chance to do it. He'll fix up some way so he can say, 'Well, that's just the same as if you called my father and mother a fool,' or something like that. Then, afterward, he can claim he was scrappin' because he had to defend his father and mother, and of course he'll more than half believe it himself.

"Well, you take a government—it's only just some men, the way I see it, and if they're goin' to start some big trouble like this war, why, of course they'll play just about that same old boy trick, because it's instinct to do it, just the same for a man as it is for a boy—or else the principle's just the same, or something. Well, anyhow, if you want to know who started a scrap and worked it up, you got to forget all the talk there is about it, and all what each side says, and just look at two things: Who was fixed for it first, or thought they were, and who hit first? When you get the answer to those two questions everything's settled about this being 'attacked' business. As near as I can make out, this war began with Germany and Austria's startin' to wipe out two little countries; Austria began shootin' up Serbia, and Germany began shootin' up Belgium. I don't need to notice any more than that, myself—all the girls in the country can debate their heads off, they can't change what happened and they can't excuse it, either."

He was silent, appearing to feel that he had concluded conclusively, and the young gentleman on the window seat, after staring at him for several moments of genuine thoughtfulness, was gracious enough to observe, "Well, old Rom, you may be a little slow in class, but when you think things out with yourself you do show signs of something pretty near like real horse-sense sometimes. Why don't you ever say anything like that to—to some of your pacifist friends?"

"What do you mean? Who you talkin' about? Whose 'pacifist friends'?"

"See, here!" Fred exclaimed, as Ramsey seemed about to rise. "You keep sitting just where you are, and don't look at me out of the side of your eye like that—pretendin' you're a bad horse. I'm really serious now, and you listen to me. I don't think argufying and debating like that little Fraulein Werder's does much harm. She's a right nifty young rolypoly, by the way, though you didn't notice, of course."

"Why didn't I?" Ramsey demanded, sharply. "Why didn't I notice?"

"Oh, nothing. But, as I was saying, I don't think that sort of talk does much harm: everybody knows it goes on among the pro-Germans, and it's all hot air, anyhow. But I think Linski's sort of talk does do harm, prob'ly among people that don't know much; and, what's more, I think Dora Yocum's does some, too. Well, you hit Linski in the snoot, so what are you—Sit still! My lord! You don't think I'm askin' you to go and hit Dora, do you? I mean: Aren't you ever goin' to talk to her about it and tell her what's what?"

"Oh, you go to bed!"

"No, I'm in earnest," Fred urged. "Honestly, aren't you ever goin' to?"

"How could I do anything like that?" Ramsey demanded explosively. "I never see her—to speak to, that is. I prob'ly won't happen to have another talk with her, or anything, all the time we're in college."

"No," Fred admitted, "I suppose not. Of course, if you did, then you would give her quite a talking to, just the way you did the other time, wouldn't you?" But upon that, another resumption of physical violence put an end to the conversation.

CHAPTER XII.

Throughout the term Ramsey's calculation of probabilities against the happening of another interview with Dora seemed to be well founded, but at the beginning of the second "semester" he found her to be a fellow member of a class in biology. More than that, this class had every week a two-hour session in the botanical laboratory, where the structure of plants was studied under microscopic dissection. The students worked in pairs, a special family of plants being assigned to each couple; and the instructor selected the couples with an eye to combinations of the quick with the slow. D. Yocum and R. Milholland (the latter in a strange state of mind and complexion) were given two chairs, but only one desk and one microscope. Their conversation was strictly botanical.

Thenceforth it became the most pressing care of Ramsey's life to prevent his roommate from learning that there was any conversation at all, even botanical. Fortunately, Fred was not taking the biological courses, though he appeared to be taking the sentimental ones with an astonishing thoroughness, and sometimes, to Fred's hilarious delight, Ramsey attempted to turn the tables and rally him upon whatever last affair seemed to be engaging his fancy. The old Victorian and pre-Victorian blague word "petticoat" had been revived in Fred's vocabulary, and in others, as "skirt." The lightsome sprig was hourly to be seen, even when university rulings forbade, dilly-dallying giddily along the campus paths or the town sidewalks with some new and pretty Skirt. And when Ramsey tried to fluster him about such a matter Fred would profess his ardent love for the new lady in shouts and impromptu song. Nothing could be done to him, and Ramsey, utterly unable to defend his own sensibilities in like manner, had always to retire in bafflement. Sometimes he would ponder upon the question thus suggested: Why couldn't he do this sort of thing, since Fred could? But he never discovered a satisfying answer.

Ramsey's watchfulness was so careful (lest he make some impulsive admission in regard to the botanical laboratory, for instance) that Mr. Mitchell's curiosity gradually became almost quiescent but there arrived a day in February when it was piqued into the liveliest activity. It was Sunday, and Fred, dressing with a fastidiousness ever his daily habit, noticed that Ramsey was exhibiting an unusual perplexity about neckties.

"Keep the black one on," Fred said, volunteering a suggestion, as Ramsey muttered fiercely at a mirror. "It's in better taste for church, anyhow. You're going to church, aren't you?"

"Yes. Are you?"

"No. I've got a luncheon engagement."

"Well, you could go to church first, couldn't you? You better; you've got a lot of church absences against you."

"Then one more won't hurt. No church in mine this morning, thanks! G'by, ole sox; see you at the 'frat house' for dinner."

He went forth, whistling syncopations, and began a brisk trudge into the open country. There was a professor's daughter who also was not going to church that morning and she lived a little more than three miles beyond the outskirts of the town. Unfortunately, as the weather was threatening, all others of her family abandoned the idea of church that day, and Fred found her before a cozy fire, but surrounded by parents, little brothers and big sisters. The professor was talkative; Fred's mind might have been greatly improved, but with a window in range he preferred a melancholy contemplation of the snow, which had begun to fall in quantity. The professor talked until luncheon, throughout luncheon, and was well under way to fill the whole afternoon with talk, when Fred, repenting all the errors of his life, got up to go.

Heartily urged to remain, for there was now something just under a blizzard developing, he said no, he had a great deal of "curriculum work" to get done before tomorrow, and passed from the sound of the professor's hospitable voice and into the storm. He had a tedious struggle against the wind and thickening snow, but finally came in sight of the town, not long before dark. Here the road led down into a depression, and, lifting his head as he began the slight ascent on the other side, Fred was aware of two figures outlined upon the low ridge before him. They were dimmed by the driving snow and their backs were toward him, but he recognized them with perfect assurance. They were Dora Yocum and Ramsey Milholland.

They were walking so slowly that their advance was almost imperceptible, but it could be seen that Dora was talking with great animation; and she was a graceful thing, thus gesticulating, in her long, slim fur coat with the white snow frosting her brown fur cap. Ramsey had his hands deep in his overcoat pockets and his manner was wholly that of an audience.

Fred murmured to himself, "What did you say to her? 'Nothin'. I started to, but'—" Then he put on a burst of speed and passed them, sweeping off his hat with operatic deference, yet hurrying by as if fearful of being thought a killjoy if he lingered. He went to the "frat house," found no one downstairs, and established himself in a red leather chair to smoke and ruminate merrily by a great fire in the hall.

Half an hour later Ramsey entered, stamped off the snow, hung up his hat and coat, and sat himself down defiantly in the red leather chair on the other side of the fireplace.

"Well, go on," he said. "Commence!"

"Not at all!" Fred returned, amiably. "Fine spring weather today. Lovely to see all the flowers and the birds as we go a-strolling by. The little bobolinks—"

"You look here! That's the only walk I ever took with her in my life. I mean by—by asking her and her saying she would and so forth. That other time just sort of happened, and you know it. Well, the weather wasn't just the best in the world, maybe, but she's an awful conscientious girl and once she makes an engagement—"

"Why, of course," Fred finished for him, "she'd be too pious to break it just on account of a mere little blizzard or anything. Wonder how the weather will be next Sunday?"

"I don't know and I don't care," said Ramsey. "You don't suppose I asked her to go again, do you?"

"Why not?"

"Well, for one thing, you don't suppose I want her to think I'm a perfect fool, do you?"

Fred mused a moment or two, looking at the fire. "What was the lecture?" he asked, mildly.

"What lecture?"

"She seemed to me to be——"

"That wasn't lecturing; she was just—"

"Just what?"

"Well, she thinks war for the United States is coming closer and closer—"

"But it isn't."

"Well, she thinks so, anyhow," said Ramsey, "and she's all broken up about it. Of course she thinks we oughtn't to fight and she's trying to get everybody else she can to keep working against it. She isn't goin' home again next summer, she's goin' back to that settlement work in Chicago and work there among those people against our goin' to war; and here in college she wants to get everybody she can to talk against it, and—"

"What did you say?" Fred asked, and himself supplied the reply: "Nothin'. I started to, but—"

Ramsey got up. "Now look here! You know the 'frat' passed a rule that if we broke any more furniture in this house with our scrappin' we'd both be fined the cost of repairs and five dollars apiece. Well, I can afford five dollars this month better than you can, and—"

"I take it back!" Fred interposed, hastily. "But you just listen to me; you look out—letting her think you're on her side like that."

"I don't—"

"You don't?"

Do Not Reach for the Moon.

Psychological science apparently has exploded the good old notion that "babies will reach for the moon." Dr. John B. Watson states in the Scientific Monthly that when actually put to the test they will watch attentively anything they see moving, no matter what its distance, but that they will not reach for it until it is within 20 inches of them.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

by MARY GRAHAM BONNER

LEOPARD FROG

"Well, I am glad to see that the other frogs are getting up," said Mr. Leopard Frog. "I don't like to sleep too long.

"I Have a Spotted Coat."

"It makes a creature heavy and dull to sleep too long. That is the way I feel about it at any rate.

"So I am about the first of all the frogs to come out of my winter home and wake up from my winter sleep.

"I show myself then as one of the earliest signs of spring.

"Of course any one could recognize me at a glance. I have a spotted coat which looks quite a lot like the coat of a leopard, except, of course, mine isn't fur!

"Well, any one knows that without my telling it, but still I thought I would tell it."

"Oh, you might as well," said Mr. Green Frog. "You don't charge extra for it, do you?"

"No, I throw it in with the rest of the information quite free of charge.

"Tell us about yourself, Green Frog. How are you feeling?"

"Fine, chunk, chunk, fine. I don't mean I'm feeling like a chunk—whatever a chunk is, but you see I'm getting my fine voice in shape.

"I talked in rather a shrill, screaming fashion for a while, so that was how I had my early springtime name of Screaming Frog.

"But now my voice is quieter for it is somewhat later in the season.

"I'm a handsome frog, don't you think? I'm very fond of the shade of green I wear, and it has touches of brown at the back of my head, which makes the green even lovelier, by contrast."

"What is contrast?" asked Mr. Leopard Frog.

"Something different; a contrast in color is the opposite of another color. For example, one will say I am wearing a green hat and a blue dress by contrast. Well, blue and green are quite different and quite opposite colors. So, you see, there is a great contrast about them."

"Oh, yes," said Mr. Leopard Frog.

"Well," said Mr. Green Frog, "I suppose I am almost as well known as any frog. I am about in the springtime and the summer time and I'm not shy like the little spring peepers.

"I do not mind if I am seen. The little spring peepers are certainly very, very shy."

"Oh, very shy," agreed Mr. Leopard Frog, "but they do love the woods and they do make cheery little sounds all through the spring with their peeping sounds."

"It has been a lovely spring," said Mr. Green Frog, "nice and warm and the breezes have been soft and pleasant and the country has been lovely.

"Such lovely scents from the blossoms have been brought over to me by the Breeze Brothers, and there are a good many blossoms around this pond of mine."

"Yes, it has been a perfect spring," said Mr. Leopard Frog.

"Tell me, Mr. Leopard Frog," said Mr. Green Frog, "do people ever feel frightened of you because of your name and because you have somewhat the same coloring as a leopard?"

"Oh, no," said Mr. Leopard Frog, "they know I'm very different from a leopard. I cannot make the great wild sounds that a leopard does. I wouldn't want to make them and I'm glad I don't. I wouldn't want to be wild.

"A Handsome Frog."

"You and I are alike in the way we moult our skin when out of water and swallow it.

"The American Toad is the same way too.

"Of course, if we're moulting in the water our skin may float off in great patches and we will watch it go without bothering about it. But out of the water we will swallow it."

"Yes," said Mr. Green Frog, "we are alike in that. Ah, yes, we both do things sensibly and wisely according to the viewpoint of frogs, and after all, the most important viewpoint for a frog to have is the viewpoint of frogs!"

"Goog-a-room, goog-a-room, I agree," said Mr. Leopard Frog.

Purifying With Soap.

"What was the Sunday school lesson about?" asked Susie's mother.

"It was about purifying the man with the soap that is in him," said Susie.

On investigation the verse in question proved to be: "And every man that has this hope in him purifieth himself."

In Pitiable Condition when she Began Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sabina, Ohio.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for weakness and irregularity. I was weak and nervous and could hardly stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal. I was this way for about a year and had tried several medicines and had a physician, but to no avail. My sister was taking your medicine and finally induced me to try it. I now feel fine and can do my housework without any trouble at all. You can use this letter for the sake of others if you wish."—Mrs. WELDON G. HATFIELD, R. R. 3, Sabina, Ohio.

Housewives make a great mistake in allowing themselves to become so weak and nervous that it is well-nigh impossible for them to attend to their necessary household duties.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be taken when you first notice such symptoms as nervousness, backache, weakness and irregularity. It will help you and prevent more serious trouble. Give it a fair trial. It surely helped Mrs. Hatfield, just as it has many, many other women.

Buttons Long in Use

John J. Jones, a waiter in the dining cars of the Pennsylvania railroad, asked the other day for a new set of brass buttons to use with his white duck coat. When he turned in his old buttons in exchange it was noticed that they were not only unusually bright, but also that much polishing and use had almost worn off the lettering and that the front of each button was actually worn through in one or more places. Asked how long he had worn the buttons, he replied: "About twenty-nine years." They had been issued to him in 1892 by Maj. J. F. Trout, then superintendent of dining cars and restaurants.—New York World.

THE STORE OF CLASS

Common Sense Teaches You That No Man Living Can Sell as Cheap as the Man Who Sells for Cash

FIRST He does not have to pay the expense of keeping books or the hire of an extra person to keep them.

SECOND He sells for cash and always has the money to go on the market and pick up the many attractive Bargains that are offered by the Manufacturers for less in order that they can get the CASH QUICKLY, there are many of them today that are as hard pressed as YOU and I. Thereby enabling him to offer them to you at a mere fraction of what you have to pay elsewhere.

THIRD He does not make you pay for the goods that the other fellow fails to pay for, and there never was a man that did CREDIT BUSINESS but what he lost some accounts.

ALL WE ASK Is for you to come in and see for yourself and you too will be convinced that WE ARE SELLING FOR LESS THAN THE OTHER FELLOW.
