Easter Round Trip Rates

Indicative of success attending its first "Dollar Day" venture last month, and further indicating its determination to win back the passenger travel to the railroads, Southern Pacific Company today announced plans for an Easter "sale" embodying new and attractive features in its "cent a mile" offer.

Plans for the new sale, April 3 and 4, were made public by C. P. Hupperts, Agent for the railroad here.

Incorporating the same round-trip fares as those which attracted such widespread public response over the company's Pacific Lines February 20th and 27th, the forthcoming transportation bargain embodies two added features which Southern Pacific believe will enhance the value of the offering to the New Mexico public, Mr. Hupperts said. These are:

Ability to start trips on two days, Friday and Saturday, and extension of the return limit to midnight of Thursday.

In the instance of the Southern Pacific's first "dollar day" sales, Mr. Hupperts pointed out, it was required that the going trip start on Friday. Many persons over the company's system, attracted by the low fare, were handicapped by inability to use the tickets on Saturday; this objection, Mr. Hupperts said, is overcome in the pending sale.

Extension of the return limit on the tickets is held of particular value to residents of New Mexico, inasmuch as ample time is now allowed for trips to distant California and other points on the Southern Pacific Lines.

Round trip fare involved are but three-fifths of the usual one way fare. Initial "Dollar" experiments of Southern Pacific admittedly met with wide spread success, with the result that the further experiment over the Easter week-end is being watched with interest by roads throughout the country.

Hoover's First Congress costs Ten Billion Dollars, After Deducting Amounts for Relief

Washington, March—In a statement analyzing the $10.249 819,315 appropriations of the 71st Congress, covering the first two years of President Hoover, Representative Byrns of Tennessee, ranking Democratic member of the House Appropriations Committee, compares that "enormous and staggering total" with the $9,293,472,592 appropriated by the 70th Congress covering the last two years of President Coolidge—nearly a billion dollars increase.

Declaring that "Republican papers and apologists are attempting to leave the impression that drouth relief and measures for the relief of unemployment are responsible for this startling total, he presents a compilation of these relief measures showing that they ambunt to less than $200,000,000, or $196 000,000, to be exact.

"This leaves practically three-quarters of a billion dollars," Mr. Byrns adds, "that these partisam apologists must account for in some other way."

He then points out that "appropriations for construction of public buildings and Federal aid in road building were a continuation of policies established before Mr. Hoover became President, and cannot be classed as appropriations especially made for the relief of unemployment."

Lest someone may assert that the loans to veterans served to increase the total of appropriations, Mr Byrns says that although "Congress passed a law authorizing loans to veterans on their adjusted service certificates, no appropriations were made necessary by this act."

Referring to the White House statements from time to time directed at Congress declaring the necessity for retrenchment in appropriations and authorizations, Mr. Byrns stated that the 71st Congress appropriated $55,000,000 less than President Hoover asked them to appropriate.

The last Coolidge Congress was "the high peak of government appropriations for peace-time activities," according to Mr. Byrns, "and the myth of Coolidge economy disappeared with his regime," but President Hoover's first two years, after deducting drought and unemployment relief, have set a new high mark, the figures show.

"The people are appalled by the increasing cost of their government," Mr. Byrns declares. "No one can doubt that this increased cost is a contributing factor to the present depression in business.

Grover Cleveland's Philosophy

(National Industries News Service)

When Cleveland declared in 1887 that the people should support the Government but the Government should not support the people he was both politically and economically sound Once the Government ignores the distinction, its troubles begin for it is clear that every man and woman is as much entitled to Government aid as everyone else and the Soviet declaration becomes effective. The Senate now proposes to feed, clothe and finance drought sufferers, the American Legion and the unemployed. But why limit the relief to them? Two years ago the brokerage business was one of the largest and except for the bootlegger the most prosperous of all industries Securities both sound and speculative were in exhaustive demand and the number of those engaged in the business swelled into the hundreds of thousands Their patrons comprised everybody possessing money or credit and business leaders gave assurance of its permanent character.

Then overnight the bottom of the business dropped out and within three months this stream has become a mere trickle of activity. Those who were not entirely wiped out expected to be before many days, and matters have gone from bad to worse ever since. Brokers and salesmen as a class are ruined. Few, if any, have much credit remaining. Their misfortunes are no more due to themselves than to anybody else. Theirs too has been a drought which, like a visit of the locust, has cleaned up everything.

But how would our Senate philanthropists respond to a brokers' appeal for relief? The question needs no answer. This class of their fellow citizens would be given the air with the reminder that they caused the calamity by conducting an illegitimate business. Neither charge would be true. They were responsible for events just as and no farther than other classes of people. Moreover, when Uncle Sam assumes the role of public benefactor he cannot make any such discrimination. The brokers were not a lawless class when the panic came. On the contrary, they enjoyed the special favor of the public financial authorities and of every man who wanted to better himself. Uncle Sam might withhold his sustenance from their outstretched hands, but to do so would be to emphasize the truth of Mr. Cleveland's aphorism only to the class known as brokers.

For the edification, delectation and information of the madding crowd we enjoy life most when people purposely malign us.

To The Public

The directors of the first National Bank, Carrizozo, N. M. have decided to open a new department and give a service that we have heretofore not attempted to render. Will sell,

Life Insurance
Fire Insurance
Accident Insurance
Fidelity and Burglary Bonds
Buy and sell for our customers U. S. Bonds and other Securities.

Statistics show that over 80 per cent of all estates are in the form of Life Insurance. It is extremely difficult for the great majority of our people to save and invest money. We consider Life Insurance a safe and profitable investment. The arguments in its favor are many. We will also sell Fire Insurance, Bonds and Securities for custumers. We will not attempt to recommend any but U. S. Bonds; we will simply buy and sell when requested to do so by customers.

We have found it necessary to develop income other than interest on notes. Installment buying and a tendency ot the part of people to borrow liberally from other sources has narrowed the field for commercial bank loans and made necessary the employment of a considerable amount of the funds of a commercial bank in low rate investments such as United States Bonds and prime Commercial Paper: in addition banks find it necessary to carry cash and secondary reserves out of all proportion to amounts carried several years ago. We feel that the low interest rate in our investment in necessary secondary reserve.

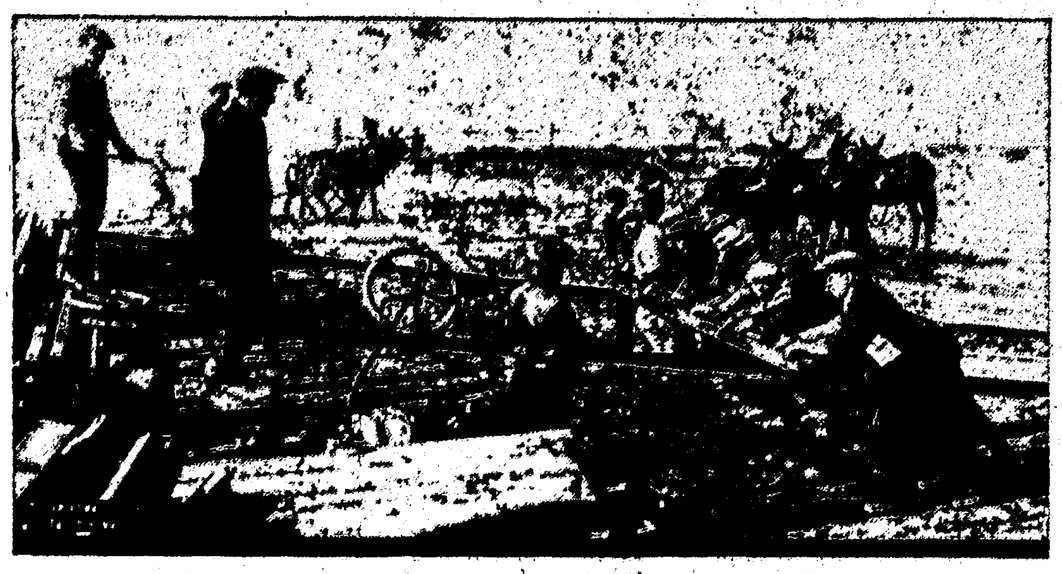
Shortest Railway in World Condemned and Torn Up



What was said to be the shortest railroad in the world, running for one and one-half miles between the docks and warehouses on Governors Island, has been condemned by the United States army and torn up. Built during the war to transport stores and machinery on the island, the railway, with the official name, Governors Island railroad, gradually decreased in usefulness.

Snow Dessert Is Easy to Make

By BETSY CALLISTER

NO DESSERT is much easier to make than so-called snow and certainly none could be any more wholesome. The ingredients needed are egg white, strained fruit, and powdered sugar. One egg white calls for one-half cupful of fruit and will provide four moderate-sized portions. Beat the egg white stiff, add the sugar, beat light and then fold in the fruit pulp. Mix well and put into individual dessert glasses and chill well before serving. It is best when made about an hour before serving.

Apple snow—which most children like immensely—is made from apple sauce. If the apple sauce is sweetened then add only a little powdered sugar. You may use freshly grated raw apple if you like instead of the apple sauce, allowing one medium-sized apple to one egg white. If peaches are used they should be crushed and put through a coarse strainer. Cooked dried prunes and apricots, bananas or berries may be used.

A nice dessert may be made by splitting lady fingers and breaking each piece in half. Lay two or three of these quarters in the bottom of each dessert glass and pile up with fruit snow of any sort and set aside to chill. A spoonful of slightly sweetened whipped cream may be placed on top of the snow if you like, and on top of the dab of whipped cream a marashino cherry.

"Tools" Used by Mosquito

Nature has provided the mosquito with a neat outfit for boring operations. When she settles unnoticed upon your arm she first applies a little fluid to soften the skin. Next she brings into operation a sharp-pointed saw with which she proceeds to make a hole. The softening fluid enables the saw to cut easily—so easily that you don't feel her at work. When the hole is made she inserts a miniature hosepipe into it and through this she pumps up the blood.

It is the softening fluid which causes the subsequent irritation. Scratch the place and you cause it to spread, making matters worse. Further, there is always the danger of introducing microbes into the hole the mosquito has sawn. Ammonia or washing soda will calm the irritation and a dab of iodine will serve to prevent infection.

THE BEARDED BLOW-WORM

By Hugh Hutton
(Author of Nutty Natural History.)

NONE of these curious creatures has been seen in recent years, but were formerly quite numerous in the Black Forest of Bavaria, where they were put in small cages by the peasants to put out the glow worms when they lit up the country too brilliantly. The blow worm has a powerful pair of lungs that will douse all glow worms within a radius of ten feet. Although historians are not clear on the subject, it is supposed that several bowls of blow worms were used by Martin Luther in his famous Diet of Worms.

A double peanut with split navy bean eyes, popcorn nose, and clove ears make up the curious head of this beast. The body is a Brazil nut, the tail a toothpick, and the legs are cloves. All the parts are stuck together with chewing gum.

Odd Methods of Interment

Upright burial was the recognized and traditional form of interment favored by the kings of ancient Ireland. It was not considered fitting that a monarch should be prone, accordingly they were buried erect, clad in their war panoply, and usually with their faces turned toward their enemies. The ancient Irish believed that so long as their kings remained in this position they exercised an evil influence on their foes. So powerful was the belief in this ability that on one occasion the body of a king was disinterred by those hostile to his clan, and placed in another grave, head downward, in order to break the succession of disasters which dogged them while he rested in his grave with face turned toward them.

Good Things for the Family Table

By NELLIE MAXWELL

CANNED corned beef and sausages with sliced hard-cooked eggs make an attractive platter. Veal loaf, too, will add to the variety. Slice the sausages very thin, place a spot of tartar sauce on each, arrange the meat in thin slices and the eggs with bits of cress or curly lettuce. It is a wise hostess who keeps on hand a few cans of fish, meat and various sausages and loaves, which with a piquant dressing or cheese may be drawn on in an emergency, when the unexpected company arrives.

Baked Stuffed Onions.

Boil even-sized onions until tender, remove the centers, chop these, mix with butter, salt and pepper and bread crumbs. Add a half cupful of cooked sausage or a half cupful of chopped pecan meats. Moisten with cream and set into a baking pan to bake, baste with thin cream or milk with a little butter.

Hot Potato Salad.

Boil potatoes with their skins on, peel and cut into slices, add a tablespoonful or two of minced onion, a half cupful of fried bits of bacon, add to a hot frying pan with two tablespoonfuls of bacon fat or enough to thoroughly season, add salt, pepper, mustard well blended and a half cupful of mild vinegar. Boil up the bacon fat and vinegar then stir in the potatoes and seasonings. Serve hot.

Lemon Sirup.

A nice lemon sirup which will keep indefinitely and always be ready for a refreshing drink is prepared as follows: To one cupful of water add one-half cupful of sugar and one-third cupful of lemon juice, boil for ten minutes, bottle and put into the ice chest; when cool add a spoonful of the sirup to a glass of cold or hot water.

Milk Toast.

Milk toast is not a very filling dish; it may be made of tasty, well-buttered toast using either hot milk or a thin white sauce enriched with butter, all depending on the way you have been used to eating it. Grated cheese may be added to the hot milk toast, increasing its food value.

Cause of Man's Dewnfall

New Blessings All Along the Way

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

OF ALL mankind, however dressed,
I think the thankful are most blest.
I have known men who much possessed
Yet thought it little, and were sad.
I have known others who were glad,
Though overalls were all they had.

The measure of the wealth we own
Is not a thing of size alone;
No, to be measured, must be known.
How rich may seem some house of pride
Where discontented hearts reside—
How richer are the satisfied!

The thankless take, and wish for more;
The thankful marvel at the store
Of riches piled before their door.
The thankless never have a thing,
They are so busy coveting
The gifts that fortune did not bring.

But how the thankful find each day
New blessings all along the way!
However blest, how blest are they
Who can come home, when shadows fall,
To some dear place, however small,
Happy and thankful for it all.

That Business of Alibi-ing

By JEAN NEWTON

A WELL KNOWN minister in a recent Sunday sermon, admonishing his congregation to concern themselves in whatever evil they find about them, said that the trouble with modern living is that "we have too many alibis for sin." In other words, we pass the buck.

"Take crime," he said. "Everyone employs the same handwashing process. Parents blame the schools for crime, the teachers blame the movies, we all blame the newspapers, and then a general chorus blames prohibition."

We are all acquainted with this business of alibi-ing and passing the buck. And if we look into it, there is one fact that we must realize. That is that we may alibi as long as we draw breath, we may fool some of the people all of the time or all of the people some of the time, but there is one court of judgment where we do not ever "get away with it." That court is ourselves, that judgment the judgment of our own conscience.

A mother who neglects her children to follow her own pleasure may produce a perfect alibi—that is, one that is convincing—to everybody but herself. And if as a result of her neglect, a child falls ill, in body or spirit, the alibi with which she excuses herself to others is all the more bitter in her own mouth.

And so the teacher or worker in other fields where responsibility is involved. If they have not given of themselves in such measure as is worthy of the best in them, they may pass the buck lightly, they may alibi convincingly, but within themselves is that uncompromising judge who relentlessly condemns them.

That business of alibi-ing is not so simple as it would seem. For the person whom it is most important to convince if we are to derive from it any peace, the person whom we have to live with all the year around, night and day—that person sees right through the alibi even before it is formulated.

Firemen Clean Capitol

Washington firemen are called on each year to give the National Capitol its annual scrubbing, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. This is done by turning powerful streams of water on the structure from sidewalk to dome, washing off the year's accumulation of dirt and grime and leaving the building spick and span for the opening of congress.

Some Neighborly Hints

IF CLOTHES are scorched in ironing, wet the scorched part, cover it with cornstarch and rub it in well. When dry, remove the cornstarch and all trace of scorch will be removed.

If a pinch of bicarbonate of soda is added to fruit while stewing, it will lessen the amount of sugar to be used. Only half the required quantity of sugar will be needed.

In pouring drippings into a basin add to them an equal part of water. This is the quickest, and best way of clarifying drippings, as all pieces of meat that may be in the liquid sink to the bottom and the drippings remain clear.

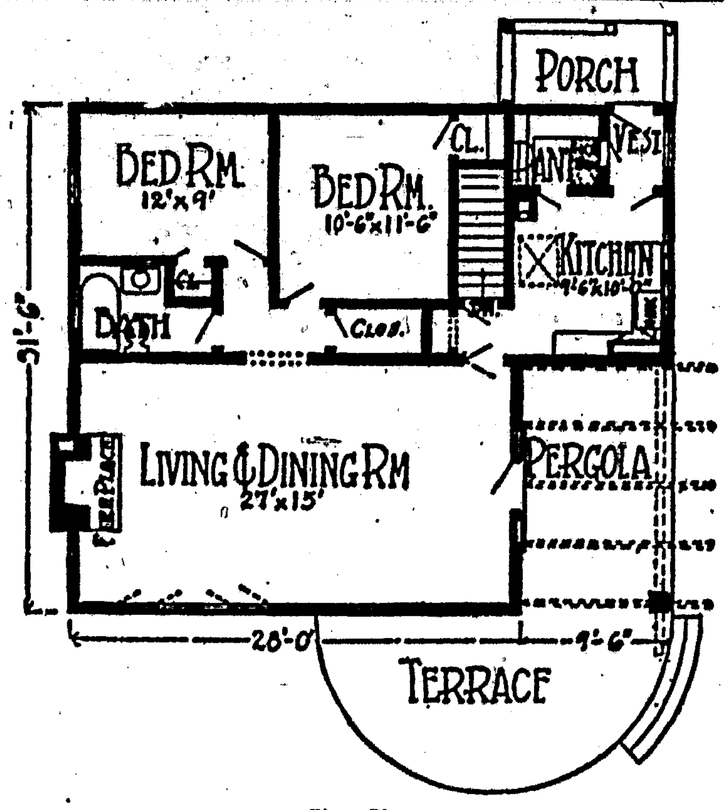
Compact One-Floor Design Offers Comfortable Home at Modest Cost



Floor Plan.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

One of the factors which has restricted home building is the popular feeling that "a home of your own" is solely the privilege of the moneyed class. Now it is true that one can well invest $15,000 or $25,000 in a modern home. But it is equally true that a comfortable well-built home can be had for far less money. Those persons who are standing on the side lines and watching their neighbors acquire a home of their own ought to open their eyes to the fact that they, too, can build a home which will fit their financial situation.

In deciding on the moderately priced home there is no need to resort to shoddy construction. In fact, such a policy can never be considered wise. It is possible to have a home that is plainly stamped with quality and at the same time keep the investment down to a reasonable figure.

A design that will appeal to all who want a home, but who are not able to build one costing a small fortune is shown here. There is no need to make any apologies for this really delightful little home. It is well built, artistic in style and will afford a joyous spout for any family.

This style is of the ever popular and most frequently followed frame construction, the preponderant material in all home building. It has been transformed from plain lines into a most pleasing contour by the curved window roof treatment, a type of bay window that is sure to please. This effect is accomplished by an overhanging roof, which adds so little to the cost that it seems immaterial when the grace and beauty of the effect is considered. Another touch of adornment is given in the pergola effect at the side. Pergolas are in vogue, very much so, and add a great deal to the pleasing lines of the home.

Any woman will be delighted with the interior arrangements, which are compact without being crowded. The living room is a combination living and dining room of splendid size, measuring 27 feet by 15 feet. The kitchen is well planned and the two bedrooms at the rear of the home are a pledge of quiet and convenience.

Besides individual closets in the bedroom, provision has been made for a roomy closet for which there are always a thousand uses in every home. The pergola, of course, will be a popular spot during the outdoor weather, and there is also a rear porch which will be useful.

Those who adopt this style for their home will have a pleasant place in which to live, and one which may be built without excessive cost.

Walnut Fits Into Any Scheme of Home Finish

Now that the flair for "color" in home furnishings is dying out, and an atmosphere of quiet and rest is returning to the home, many a woman is biting her lip as she gazes doubtfully at some of the brilliant pieces she purchased at the height of the craze. Color, she finds, is all right in its place—in a theater, a tearoom or any place that is visited only at intervals, but living with it day after day is quite another thing.

But just how the question is not whether she was right or wrong in buying the "colorful" furniture. She has it, and the problem is how to get along with it. Every woman is not so well-to-do that she can afford to get rid of furniture that no longer pleases her and replace it with something that suits her present taste.

The woman who is in this quandary very often finds the solution by turning to the natural wood finishes. The natural wood finishes have that softness and mellowness that harmonize with different color schemes, and at the same time often have the effect of toning down the brighter colors with which they are placed in juxtaposition.

Walnut, especially, is what the interior decorators call an "accommodating" wood—that is, it blends well with almost any color scheme. It seems to have a natural affinity for the greens, peacock blues and turquoise that were so popular only a couple of years ago, and sets off the stronger blues as well. Gold tones, ashes of roses, and delicate pink also make good settings for walnut. In fact, the wood goes well with almost any color except the "hot" colors—red, rose or mauve.

The woman who is trying to make her "colorful" living room a little more liveable—will often find that one or two carefully chosen and carefully placed pieces in natural wood finish will bring about the effect she is after. It is understood, of course, that the French dolls, the somnolent tabbys and all the other so-called "objets d'art" turned out in such huge volume by the novelty manufacturers must go. They have no place in the scheme of a quiet, dignified, liveable home.

The woman who turns to natural wood as a means of toning down her ultra-modern color scheme will have the satisfaction of knowing that she can always add further pieces as her needs dictate and the purse affords, and that she can always find pieces to "fit." Natural wood, and particularly walnut, is always popular and always in good taste, however many fads may come and go.

Bedrooms Should Be of Ample Proportions

Bedrooms need not be very large, but should have plenty of light and air, and should allow beds, dressers, chests of drawers and chairs to be placed without interfering with doors, windows or heating outlets. Cross ventilation is most desirable. It is not best to have bedrooms opening directly into the living rooms. If possible, entrance should be from a passage or hallway. Ample clothes closets are most necessary, particularly in small houses where there is little room for storage.

Brick Walls

An eight-inch brick wall is considered strong enough for any dwelling. Eight inches represents the thickness of two bricks laid flat. There is no need to add to the cost of your house by building the walls unnecessarily thick.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

Time Out for Tea

Edward S. Sothern, the Shakespearean actor who has participated in thousands of stage appearances, played to his most extraordinary audiences and under the most unusual conditions of his career, during the World war.

Sothern engaged in a tour of the British and American rest camps and staged his shows on both the British and American fronts. Like as not, when the most dramatic moment arrived during a performance a sudden cry of "Lights Out," would presage an air raid and the performance would suspend until the "All Clear" signal was heard.

At other times a bursting shell near the hut where the actor impersonated his favorite bits of Hamlet or King Lear added to the drama of the occasion.

Once on the British front, Sothern had need of a philosophy only years of public appearances supplies.

The "Tommies" of the audience had never heard of Sothern. They sat entertained while a troupe of trained dogs were put through their paces. Then Sothern, and tea time, arrived simultaneously. Being accustomed to tea through generations of habit, the Tommies walked out in a body on Sothern.

"There may have been times when I would have simply been staggered by such a reception," the veteran actor commented afterward. "But up there—well, I understood."

Revenge!

An English colonel who, this yarn must reveal, was not too popular with his troops, was prowling about one night in No Man's Land, just north of Arras. He was seen in the light of a star shell sent soaring aloft from the German lines. When the next shell shed its gentle light over the disputed ground a Boche sniper in a tree fired upon the Englishman.

The colonel rolled into a convenient shell hole and lay there, unharmed, while succeeding star shells burst and burned out. Came a lull and darkness and the colonel crawled back into his own trenches.

"See here," he upbraided the lieutenant in command. "What d'ye mean by not getting that sniper in the tree who fired at me?"

"We didn't see him, sir," replied the officer. "But he shall be taken care of immediately. I'll put one of my best riflemen on the job at once."

The appeased colonel hiked back to his dugout while a sharpshooter was summoned and ordered to bring down the German sniper. The man took up position at a rift in the parapet, adjusted his sling and waited. A star shell soared upward from the enemy lines and burst. Its radiance revealed the German marksman in his tree. When the next shell lighted up the terrain the English rifleman was ready and sent a bullet whistling true to its mark.

As the German collapsed and hung grotesquely from the branches of his hiding place, the English sharpshooter remarked:

"Take that, you . . . for missing our colonel!"

The Gallic Temperament

Soldiers of the French army, as they appeared to American eyes, were a strange but likeable mingling of vivacity and philosophy. The philosophical ones, per example, were those old fellows who, instead of peacefully fishing somewhere along the Seine, or Aube, or Aisne or some of those other streams, were holding their part of the line of trenches known as the Western Front.

Their philosophy manifested itself most noticeably as they trudged along mountain roads, returning to their sectors in the Vosges, stopping now and then to nibble at the huge brown bread each man carried. They would be told to return to a sector at a certain time and each soldier would wander in promptly, on his own. Can you imagine a Yank regiment doing that?

Among the vivacious element were the French engineers. One little incident illustrates them perfectly. It occurred on a shell-torn road near Verdun. The engineers were repairing the road. A passing truck churned up a soldier's body from the mud and an engineer, thinking the corpse Boche, jumped upon it with both feet. "Cochon! Cochon!" shouted the excited Frenchman.

Of a sudden, the engineer discovered the body to be that of one of his comrades. His attitude changed in a flash and, dropping to his knees, he began wiping the torn face clean, murmuring soft phrases, as tender as a woman. Work on the road was stopped by the entire detail. They turned to with their shovels and gave the dead Poilu a decent burial.

Rapidly Thinning Out

Some of the flowers and trees that are in danger of extinction in the United States are: Columbine, in Colorado; trailing arbutus, in the Middle West; trillium and fringed gentian, throughout the United States; holly, through the South; and dogwood, particularly in the eastern and middle Atlantic states.

Like Tea . . . the best Gasoline is Blended

EVEN the Japanese maiden who laboriously picks the tea leaves knows that before you sip the delicate beverage from your cup, leaves of another type of tea must be added, for the best teas invariably are blended.

When the tea merchant takes a quantity of Japanese tea, a bit of China tea, and a touch of Ceylonese, then blends them according to the dictates of his expert knowledge, he parallels the making of CONOCO Gasoline. For this is a blended gasoline. It is blended because this is the only method which brings together in one fuel the desirable properties of several types of gasoline. No one type of gasoline can contain them all.

CONOCO refiners use: Natural Gasoline, for quick starting; Straight-run Gasoline, for power and long mileage; Cracked Gasoline, for its anti-knock properties.

There is no secret formula covering the elements which compose this triple-test gasoline. The secret is in the knowledge behind the blending. Knowing how makes one tea blend better than all others... and knowing how places one gasoline in a distinct quality class. Experience the performance advantages of CONOCO Balanced-Blend Gasoline. You'll find it wherever the CONOCO Red Triangle is displayed.

Rich Stamp Collection Envied by Philatelists

The most freakish and one of the most valuable stamp collections in France is pasted on the walls of the cottage of a priest in the Savoy Alps.

Collectors who have found the stamps have bid fabulous prices for the right to steam the collections from the walls, but since church property belongs to the French government, the stamps must remain pasted up until they are spoiled by time.

The collection was started half a century ago by a young priest who had no other distraction in the mountain village. The community is an hour's walk and climb from the nearest road. But the priest received a great quantity of mail, and friends sent him stamps to add to his collection.

He started pasting stamps on the bare walls in place of wall paper. And then, as the collection grew, he pasted more on top, making freak designs out of the issues of various countries. There are nearly 250,000 old postage stamps on the four walls of the salon, many of them now rare issues much sought after by collectors.

The French collection is particularly rich, with copies even of the famous balloon stamps issued for air mail by gasbag, when Paris was being besieged by the Germans in the war of 1870.

There is a triangular stamp from the Cape of Good Hope, some Vatican stamps of the first issue before Italy took over the pontifical territory, war stamps from 1870 from Alsace and Lorraine, the first issues of Norway, the famous Greek Mercury series and countless others.

Submarine Life Viewed by American Scientists

Exploration of one the most thrilling and mysterious territories in the world has been accomplished by the expedition of the New York Zoological society's department for tropical research.

The expedition has been exploring the world under the sea. At their Bermuda station on Nonsuch Island the sea is limpidly clear, and it greatly facilitates observation of submarine life.

Not content with shallow water work, the bold explorers and their engineers took a leaf out of Jules Verne's book, and invented a kind of diving bell called the bathysphere.

This consists of a steel shell in globular form, built with a glass window for observation purposes, which could be lowered to a great depth in the ocean.

Communication with the shore or boat is maintained by telephone, and air supply is also provided for, so that the occupants of the bathysphere were able to enjoy comparative comfort.

In this great shell observers were lowered into the ocean, and they actually reached the depth of 1,400 feet. From the window many wonderful forms of fish and marine animals were seen.

Luminous fish were common, and well-known fish were seen to advantage in their native environment. From the window of their bathysphere the scientists had visions of a new world, and perhaps the continuance of their investigations will provide us with tales of new and undreamed-of wonders.

"Chief among the reasons given for killing this (Wagner) bill was the charge that the measure meant the abandonment of the present employment system months before a new plan could be devised to take its place. The provisions of the bill as passed bear out Senator Wagner's contention that the President and his advisers were dead wrong on this matter. There would have been no stoppage of service while the new system was being put into effect.

"President Hoover's attitude toward the efforts of Senator Wagner to do something constructive to meet the unemployment situation has been lukewarm. His action in killing the last of the bills suggests that he was looking for reasons to support his course, and that his advisers helped him find them. President Hoover has ordered many investigations and has accumulated much data on various aspects of government. But the record does not show that fact collectors have ever found anything that changed his policies in the slightest." Brooklyn Eagle (Ind. Rep.)

The current depression is regarded by many people as positively serious, so serious that a number of projects to relieve it were placed before Congress. None of these, however, was evolved by the President to whom thousands of his countrymen looked confidently for some brilliant idea which would dissipate the gloom. His part has not been that of an active in relief but quite the reverse, as is apparent when one stops to consider the fate of various measures advanced by those who believed they could thus ameliorate unemployment and relieve suffering.

"There was the Wagner unemployment bill. Mr Hoover killed it with a pocket veto. Maybe the President believes that all the complaints about depression are just talk. That seems to be about the only logical explanation of his course."—Baltimore Evening Sun (Ind. Dem.)

In his manner of disposing of the measure, the President added nothing to his stature as a statesman. His righteous proclamation of his desire to prevent any upsetting of the Federal employment service has a very hollow ring. On the question of fact involved, proponents of the measure challenge the President's accuracy. The bill has been before Congress throughout Mr Hoover's term in office, and, though he is on record as having advocated the general plan involved as head of an unemployment commission in 1921, he has been credited with having been the backbone of the opposition to it. The President's expression of anxiety to "prevent a serious blow to labor during this crisis" can reasonably be put down as window dressing, and not very skillful window dressing at that. The President does not address himself squarely to many of the important realities in the case. This, it must be conceded, is not a very impressive Presidential performance."—Balto. Sun (Ind Dem.)

Republican House Leader Tilson vs Republican Senate Leader Watson

Senator Watson: "It is quite true that we are in the midst of a financial depression produced by manifest causes that I shall not here discuss. But I here and now predict, and I ask my fellow Senators to recall this prediction in the days to come, that if this bill (Hawley-Smoot Tariff Bill) is passed, this nation will be on the upgrade financially, economically and commercially within thirty days, and that within a year from this time we shall have regained the peak of prosperity."—From Congressional Record, June 13 1930, page 11085

Representative Tilson: "No sensible person ever claimed that in spite of world conditions the laying of an additional tariff duty would prevent economic depression or restore domestic prosperity."—From Congressional Record, March 11, 1931, page 1395.

They Play the Game

We attended a basketball game one evening. One team had one good player on it who plainly outclassed every other player on the floor. Every time he got his hands on the ball it went into the basket, if he was any where near it. Yet his team did not win the the game.

The reason was that every man in it was playing an individual game. Each was trying to star himself and was unwilling to play a minor part to assist another to score.

The result was that the other team which was distinguished by no brilliant playing, won the game easily, because it resorted to team work. Every man on the team was working for one thing at the same time—the score. Who put the ball through the iron hoop did not make any difference. The only thing that counted was that it got through and made a score.

Towns are often troubled as was the losing team in this game. There is an unwillingness to get behind one man's plan and put it across. There is an unwillingness to forget personal desires and unite on the other fellow's project. As a result the energies of the town, as well as its limited resources are divided to the extent that nothing is accomplished. Many things are talked of, but nothing is done.

On the other hand, towns with less manpower and less resource forge ahead and accomplish one thing after the another and each year can point to something definite achieved.

The reason that these towns have team work. The forces of the community really behind the leadership and work together for a definite end.

We are glad that spring is on the way. We believe that the influence of spring will have much to do with dispelling the spirit of depression and pessimism that has the country in its grip because of the business depression. Spring is the season of hope, of harvests to be gathered later on. In the spring time the imagination pictures the prospects that are ahead and in doing so lifts the individual out of the slough of despond and sets his feet on the high road with new hopes, new zeal, and new ambition. We are glad spring is coming.

The reason some people talk so much is that they never stop to think and never think to stop.

Miles Standish Is Emulated

By H. IRVING KING

(Copyright.)

KITTIE LANGTON had been proposed to several times—and had said a prompt "No" to each of the proposers. Whereupon the rejected ones had, after sulking for awhile, gone off and married somebody else. Kittie cared for only one man in the world—and he would not propose. She knew he wanted to; and several times he had been upon the very verge of doing so—had, in fact, begun his little speech and then, becoming scared, trailed off into something else while the "Yes" which she was prepared to hand him was trembling on her tongue. This almost-but-not-quite conduct on the part of Leonard Griffin was partly due to a natural diffidence, and partly to a horror of hearing the "No" which he feared would be Kittie's answer. Once rejected by Kittie, life to him would be a desert and all its pleasures Dead sea fruit.

Then, one day, Leonard picked up Longfellow's poem which tells how the valiant Captain Miles Standish, afraid to propose in person to Priscilla Mullen, sent John Alden to ask the momentous question for him. This struck Leonard as an excellent idea on the part of Captain Standish; but the result gave him pause. For everybody knows that at Miss Mullen's suggestion John Alden "spoke for himself" and left Captain Standish to hold the bag. Still, the more he pondered over the matter, the more the idea of a vicarious proposal appealed to Leonard.

He resolved to try it. But, warned by the fiasco in the Captain Standish case, he determined to choose as his intermediary some one debarred by previous contract from playing the part of young Mr. Alden in its entirety. There was Jack Davis! He was engaged to Florence Merriman. He would be a safe envoy and Jack could be counted upon to state the case properly and convincingly. So he took Jack into his confidence. Jack was delighted with the proposition. "I'm just the boy for you," cried he, "proposing is just where I live. I've had experience you know. Trust your Uncle Jack."

The next evening Jack went forth upon his mission, while Leonard remained in his bachelor apartments in a state of nervous agitation. About ten o'clock Jim Hazzard, who occupied the apartments just over Leonard's, came in for a smoke and a chat before going to bed. His advent was a precious boon to Leonard. Jim was a great talker and rattled on with all the latest gossip, finally bursting out with: "Did you hear about Jack Davis and Florence Merriman? Everybody said they were engaged; but it seems they are not. Wonder who started that story, anyway. Why, what's the matter with you?"

Leonard had turned pale. Jack Davis fancy free? The outcome of the Standish-Mullen-Alden episode came rushing upon him. Jack, the bold, the dashing, the winner of the smiles of women—he had sent him as his agent to Kittie Langton. He felt like taking the first train to Plymouth and weeping tears of sympathy over the grave of Captain Standish—if he could find it. Jim departed; and Leonard was left to a lonely half-hour of agonized suspense. Then appeared his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the court of love. Jack came in with a pensive and subdued look which was entirely foreign to his usual aspect. Leonard read his countenance as if reading the scroll of doom.

"Well?" said Leonard at length.

"Well," sighed Jack, "I delivered the goods for you; made one of the prettiest pleas you ever heard in your life."

"And she rejected me, I suppose," said Leonard, dolefully.

"Why," replied Jack, "she did not exactly accept you. She seemed to be vexed about something—made some sarcastic remarks about second-hand proposals and that sort of thing. However, I changed the subject and soon had her in good humor."

"And then?" said Leonard.

"Why, and then," continued Jack, "as she had rejected you I thought I would try on my own account."

"You traitor!" cried Leonard, starting up; "you proposed and she accepted you!"

"Don't get hot under the collar," said Jack. "I proposed all right; but she just handed me the mitten. Two mittens in one night—one for you and one for me. That girl is going some. Well, so long."

Leonard passed a feverish night. As he went out the next morning he encountered the janitor in the hall nailing on a loose piece of wainscoating.

"I told that carpenter to do this a week ago," volunteered the janitor. "But I guess the only way to get anything done is to do it yourself."

"The only way to get anything done is to do it yourself." The words stuck in Leonard's consciousness. "Do it yourself! Do it yourself!" rumbled the wheels of the elevated as he rode downtown. And that night he did do it himself, and Kittie, after scolding him for his Miles Standish stunt, said yes.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec. Four years pass. War between Britain and France flames. Jeems returns from a hunt to find his home burned and his father and mother slain.

As softly as the light, without a sob or cry, Jeems knelt beside him. He spoke his father's name, yet knew that no answer would rise from the lifeless lips. He repeated it in an unexcitable way as his hands clutched at the silent form. The starlight left nothing unrevealed; his father dead, his white lips twisted, his hands clenched at his side, the top of his head naked and bleeding from the scalping knife. Jeems slumped down. He may have spoken again. He may have sobbed. But the thing like death that was creeping over him, its darkness and vastness, hid him from himself. He remained beside his father, as motionless and as still. Odd crouched near. After a little, an inch at a time, he crept to the dead man. He muzzled the hands that were growing cold. He licked Jeems' face where it had fallen against his father's shoulder. Then he was motionless again, his eyes seeking about him like balls of living flame. Death was in the air. He was breathing it. He was hearing it. At last, irresistibly impelled to answer the spirit of death, he sat back on his haunches and howled. It was not Odd's howl any more than it had been Jeems' voice speaking to his father a few moments before. It was a ghostly sound that seemed to quiet even the whispering of the leaves, an unearthly and shivering cry that sent echoes over the clearing, with grief for company.

It was this which brought Jeems out of the depths into which he had fallen. He raised his head and saw his father again, and swayed to his feet. He began seeking. Close by, near the pile of apples which she had helped him gather from under their trees on the slope, he found his mother. She, too, lay with her face to the sky. The little that was left of her unbound hair lay scattered on the earth. Her glorious beauty was gone. Starlight, caressing her gently, revealed to her boy the hideousness of her end. There, over her body, Jeems' heart broke. Odd guarded faithfully, listening to a grief that twisted at his brute soul. Then fell a greater silence. Through long hours the burning logs settled down into flattened masses of dying embers. The darkness came which precedes the day, and after that, dawn.

Jeems rose to face his blasted world. He was no longer a youth but a living thing aged by an eternity that had passed. It was Odd who led him in the quest for Hepsibah Adams. He sought like one half blind and yet sensed everything. He saw the trampled grass, the moccasin-beaten earth at the spring, a hatchet lost in the night, and on the hatchet an English name. But he did not find his uncle.

In the same gray dawn, stirring with the wings of birds and the play of squirrels among the trees, he set out for Tonteur manor.

He carried the hatchet, clutching it as if the wood his fingers gripped held life which might escape him. Because of this hatchet there grew in him a slow and terrible thought that had the strength of a chain. The weapon, with its short hickory handle, its worn iron blade, its battered head, might have been flesh and blood capable of receiving pain or of giving up a secret, so tenacious was the hold of his hand about it. But he did not see the iron or wood. He saw only the name which told him that the English had come with their Indians, or had sent them, as his uncle had so often said they would. The English. Not the French. The English.

And he held the hatchet as if it were an English throat.

But he was not thinking that. The part of him conscious of the act was working unknown to the faculties which made him move and see. His thoughts were imprisoned within stone walls, and around these walls they beat and trampled themselves, always alike, telling him the same things, until their repetition became a droning in his brain. His mother was dead—back there. His father was dead. Indians with English hatchets had killed them, and he must carry the word to Tonteur.

Thought which had been wrecked and beaten until now possessed him with a flame behind it that began to burn fiercely but which seemed to give no heat or excitement to his flesh. Only his eyes changed, until they were those of a savage, flinty in their hardness and without depth in which one might read his emotions. His face was white and passionless, with lines caught and etched upon it as if in bloodless stone. He looked at the hatchet again, and Odd heard the gasp which came from his lips. The hatchet was a voice telling him things and gloating in the story it had to tell. It made him think more clearly and pressed on him an urge for caution. As he drew nearer to Tonteau manor, the instincts of self-preservation awoke in him. They did not make him leave the open trail or travel less swiftly, but his senses became keener, and unconsciously he began to prepare himself for the physical act of vengeance.

To reach Tonteur was the first obligation in the performance of this act. Tonteur still had a few men who had not gone with Dieskau, and as Jeems recalled the firing of guns, a picture painted itself before his eyes. The murderers of his father and mother had swung eastward from Forbidden valley, and the seigneur, warned by Hepsibah's fire, had met them with loaded muskets. He had faith in Tonteur and did not question what had happened in the bottom lands. Before this no doubt had crossed his mind as to Hepsibah's fate. The English hatchets had caught him, somewhere, or he would have come during the long night when he and Odd had watched alone with death. But now a forlorn and scarcely living hope began to rise in his breast as he came to Tonteur's hill—an unreasoning thought that something might have driven his Uncle Hepsibah to the Richelieu, a hope that, after lighting his signal fire, he had hurried to the manor with the expectation of finding his people there. His father must have seen Hepsibah's warning across Forbidden valley, and had waited, disbelieving, while death traveled with the shades of night through the lowlands.

It Made Him Think More Clearly and Pressed on Him an Urge for Caution.

He might see Hepsibah, in a moment, coming over the hill. . . .

Hepsibah, and the baron, and men with guns. . . .

Even Odd seemed to be expecting this as they sped through the last oak open and climbed the chestnut ridge. Beyond were the thick edging of crimson sumac, a path breaking through it, and the knob of the hill where they had always paused to gaze over the wonderland which had been given by the king of France to the stalwart vassal Tonteur.

Jeems emerged at this point, and the spark which had grown in his breast was engulfed by sudden blackness.

There was no longer a Tonteur manor. There were no buildings but one. The great manor house was gone. The loopholed church was gone. The farmers' cottages beyond the meadows and fields were gone. All that remained was the stone gristmill, with the big wind wheel turning slowly at the top of it and making a whining sound that came to him faintly through the distance.

Jeems, looking down, saw in the drifting veil of smoke a shroud that covered death. For the first time he forgot his father and mother. He thought of some one he had known and loved a long time ago. Toinette.

As he had stood at the edge of the Big forest seeking for a figure that might have been his mother's, he now quested for one that might be Toinette's. But the same hope was not in his breast, nor the same fear. Certainty had taken their place. Toinette was dead, despoiled of her beauty and her life as his mother had been. A fury triumphed over him that was as possessive in its effect as the color which blazed about him in the crimson bush. It had been growing in him since the moment he knelt at his father's side; it had strained at the bounds of his grief when he found his mother; it had filled him with madness, still unformed in his brain, when he covered their faces in the early dawn. Now he knew why he gripped the English hatchet so tightly. He wanted to kill. His eyes turned from the smoke-filled valley of the Richelieu to the south where Champlain lay gleaming in the sun miles away, and the hand which held the hatchet trembled in its new-born yearning for the life blood of a people whom he hated from this day and hour.

He was vaguely conscious of the whine of the mill wheel as he went down into the valley. He did not feel fear or the necessity for concealing his movement, for death would not trouble itself to return to a desolation so complete. But the wheel, as he drew nearer, touched the stillness with a note which seemed to ride with strange insistence over the solitude, as if calling to some one. It became less a thing of iron and wood that was crying in its hunger for oil, and more a voice which demanded his attention. It seemed to him that suddenly he caught what it was saying: "the English beast—the little English beast"—repeating those words until they became a rhythm without a break in their monotony except when a capful of wind set the wheel going faster. It was as if a thought in his brain had been stolen from him. And what it expressed was true. He was the English beast, coming as Madame Tonteur had predicted. Toinette had been right. Fiends with white skins, who were of his blood, had sent their hatchet killers to prove it. And like a lone ghost he was left to see it all. The mill wheel knew and, even in moments of quiet, seemed to possess the power to tell him so.

With stubborn fortitude he faced the gehenna through which he knew he must pass before he could turn south to find his vengeance with Dieskau. Toinette belonged to him now as much as his mother, and it was for her he began to search.

In a ditch which had run almost under the eaves of the loopholed church, he stumbled on a body. It had fallen among tall grass and weeds and had remained hidden there. It wore a Mohawk war tuft, and in one of its stiffened hands was another English hatchet like the one Jeems had. A scalp was at the warrior's belt, and for a moment Jeems turned sick. It was a young girl's scalp, days old.

As he advanced, he could see there had been an alarm and a little fighting. There was old Jean de Lauzon, the cure, doubled up like a jackknife, half dressed and with a battered old flintlock under him. He had fired the gun and was running for the fortressed church when a bullet had caught him between his thin shoulder blades. Jeems stood over him long enough to make notes of these things. He saw several more dark blotches on the ground quite near to where the thick oaken door to the church had been. There were Juchereau and Louis Hebert, both well along in years, and not far from them were their wives. Raudot was a fifth. He had been a slow-witted lad, and now he looked like a clown who had died with a grin on his face. These people had lived nearest to the church. The others had been too far away to answer the alarm quickly, but the result had been the same. Some had come to meet their death. Others had waited for it.

Between this group and the smoldering pile that had been the manor, a lone figure lay on the ground. Jeems went to it slowly. The sprawled-out form was Tonteur. Unlike the others, the baron was fully dressed. He undoubtedly had been armed when he rushed forth from the house, but nothing was left in his hands but the clods of earth which he had seized in a final agony. A cry broke from Jeems. He had loved Tonteur. The seigneur had been the one connecting link between his older years and the dreams of his childhood, and it was because of him that he had never quite seemed to lose Toinette. He crossed the dead man's hands upon his breast and loosened the earth from his fingers. He could feel Toinette at his side, and for a brief interval the sickness in his head and body overcome him so that he could not see Tonteur at all. But he could hear Toinette sobbing.

Many Theories About National Flag Design

There are various theories regarding the origin of the design of our national flag, and most historians do not consider the Betsy Ross legend as trustworthy. It is true that Washington's family coat-of-arms contained both stars and stripes, but these had been used in other flags before 1776. The Grand Union flag, the first to float over the navy, consisted of 13 stripes, alternately red and white, with a union bearing the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew, signifying the mother country. Some historians believe that the stripes were taken from the flag and the stars from the colonial banner of Rhode Island. Others maintain that the idea of the flag came from the Netherlands, as Franklin and Adams, who were sent to that country to borrow money for aid, told the Dutch that America had borrowed much from them, including the ideas represented in the flag. Another claim is that the stars were taken from the 13-starred constellation Lyra and signified "harmony."

THREE HELPS TO CHEAP HOG GAINS

Cleanliness, Well Mixed Rations and Shelter Needed.

Cleanliness, well mixed rations and proper shelter are three aides upon which a farmer may rely in making economical gains with his pigs, according to J. S. Coffey, professor of animal husbandry for the Ohio State university.

For profitable pork production it is essential to keep the hog shelter and feed lot free of worms, he says. A comfortable, dry shelter, large enough to prevent piling, is also an important help in turning pigs into market hogs.

Because the winter ration is likely to be short in minerals a feed should be used which contains a mineral mixture, such as 40 per cent finely ground limestone, 40 per cent bone meal, and 20 per cent common salt. The ration should contain about 1 per cent of this mixture, in Coffey's opinion. His other recommendation is to allow the hogs free access to the mineral mixture at all times.

A good, standard ration for hogs in Ohio is made of corn and a supplement consisting of 50 per cent tankage, or fish meal, 25 per cent alfalfa meal, and 25 per cent linseed oil meal. If good third cutting alfalfa hay is available, the alfalfa meal may be left out of the ration and coarse hay substituted.

Hogs are in danger of suffering from anemia in the winter and therefore should be brought in direct contact with sunshine as often as possible, Coffey declares.

Save All Straw Stacks to Carry Farm Stock

The main element in food for cattle and horses is the bulky feeds such as hay, fodder, and, in their absence straw will do. Grain and mill feeds will not take the place of these bulky feeds for live stock and are of secondary importance when it comes to sustaining life and carrying the stock over to a new season.

In many communities there are haystacks which have been carried along. Some may have reached a ripe old age, but nevertheless they will sustain life and will come in handy.

In many communities there are also strawstacks which, heretofore, have been considered of no value. Ideas as to the value of stock feeds will change of necessity, and straw will sustain life, whether it be of this season's crop or produced in prior years.

Therefore, straw should be carefully conserved in those communities especially which are threatened with a feed shortage, or in any community reasonably close to the dry districts, so that it may be had as a bulky feed for the stock this winter.

Large Number of Lambs Marketed Never Docked

A considerable number of the lambs produced in Iowa and the surrounding states are grown and marketed without having their tails docked. According to counts made at some of the mid west live stock markets, as high as 20 per cent of the native lambs sold during the summer and fall months have full length tails.

Failure to dock is a source of loss in two ways. The long tails covered with wool collect dirt and filth and invite flies of various types to lay their eggs here. As a result, maggots hatch and cause unthriftiness and sickness and even death. The second source of loss is lower selling price received. This lower price is partly due to less desirable appearance, and partly due to lack of uniformity in size and condition, due to handicaps coming from failure to dock.

Put Cattle on Pasture and Full Grain Ration

Cattle that have been wintered on hay and silage, or other rations not containing much grain, and that can be put on pasture and a full grain ration at approximately the same time, should make the transition from hay to grass rather easily and with no break in gains. Baby beeves, cattle approximately a year old at grass time, have the greatest difficulty in making satisfactory gains during the first month or two on pasture. The older the cattle, the better they can make the change and utilize grass in making fat beef. "Short yearlings," when bought the fall before, make a more profitable use of pasture while on feed than younger stuff.

Worms Cause Loss

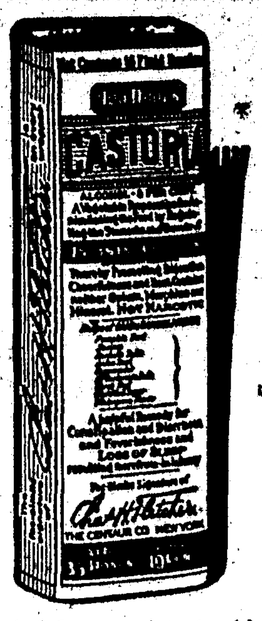
Thorn-headed worms are causing big losses to hog growers, especially in bluegrass areas. This worm passes a stage of its life in the white grub which is often found in bluegrass pastures. Hogs take the eggs of these worms into their digestive tracts through their feed and drink. Pigs which are infested become thin and listless and fail to thrive. There is no effective cure. The best remedy is to keep the hogs off from land where hogs are worm infested.

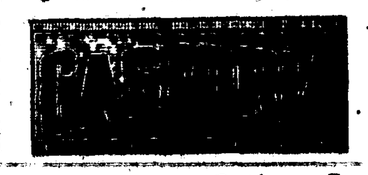
Can't PLAY
Can't REST
—child needs Castoria



When a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:



Cuticura—assurance of a good, healthy scalp.

Civil War Memory

The sale of the Jack Paul grocery store at Mexico, Mo., reminded J. W. Coakley, eighty-five-year-old Confederate veteran, that he had transacted business with four generations of the Paul family, three in Missouri and one in Virginia. He recalled that in 1862 after the Yankees had captured the salt mines near his home, and the price of salt had soared, he rode horseback for six miles to the Paul store at Harrisonburg, paying $1 for four pounds of coarse barrel salt.—Indianapolis News.

MOTHERS ARE LEARNING USES OF MAGNESIA

From the beginning of expectancy until baby is weaned, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia performs the greatest service for many women.

It relieves nausea, heartburn, "morning sickness," inclination to vomit; helps digestion. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is better than lime water for neutralizing cow's milk for infant feeding.

All drugstores have Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in generous 25c and 50c bottles. Always insist on the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Bright children shouldn't know it too well.

The heart contracts as the pocket expands.—Rovee.

Tree Had Sealed Pipe

When A. R. Sullivan, of Tacoma, picked up a piece of wood to throw into his stove, close examination disclosed that an old pipe had been sealed in the heart of a tree, and that 80 rings had ground around it. William Bonney, curator of the Washington State Historical society, declared that the pipe had probably been placed in a hole in a fir tree nearly 100 years ago by some trapper or hunter.

"I want to see the boss."

"What do you want to see him about?"

"About a job."

"I'm sorry, but you can't see him; he's in an unemployment conference."—Judge.

For COLDS

We all catch colds and they can make us miserable; but yours needn't last long if you will do this: Take two or three tablets of Bayer Aspirin just as soon as possible after a cold starts. Stay in the house if you can—keep warm. Repeat with another tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin every three or four hours, if those symptoms of cold persist. Take a good laxative when you retire, and keep bowels open. If throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a quarter-glassful of water and gargle. This soothes inflammation and reduces infection. There is nothing like Bayer Aspirin for a cold, or sore throat. And it relieves aches and pains almost instantly. The genuine tablets, marked Bayer, are absolutely harmless to the heart.
