Answers Last Call

The people of the town and the community were sadly grieved when word passed around Saturday morning, March 7, that William M. Reily had passed on, at his home in the east end of town. Mr. Reily had been in bad health the past year, a sufferer from an asthmatic affection that ultimately took his life. Funeral services were conducted at the Methodist church Sunday afternoon, Rev. Jno. L. Lawson officiating, and, following these ceremonies, the body was laid to rest in the local cemetery.

William Morgan Reily was born in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, August 21, 1867; came to the town of Lincoln, the old county seat of the county, in 1891, and entered the office of his boyhood friend, George Curry, who was then the sheriff and ex-officio tax collector. October 31, 1894, he was married to Miss Nellie Reily, who with five children survive: A. M. Reily, El Paso; Mrs. Sam Allen, Mrs. Will Ed Harris, Mrs. C. A. Branum, Carrizozo, and Mrs. H. C. Jones, Tucumcari.

From 1897 to 1899 Mr. Reily served as assessor of this county; for a number of years thereafter he was engaged in the cattle business at Capitan, but sold his interests and in 1909 moved to Carrizozo where he made a home until his death.

Few men were better known in this section of the state, and during his 40 years' residence in this county he made many friends who are deeply grieved over his demise. His genial hospitality, a trait common to his nativity, his willingness to share his home and his means with others, won for him a place in the hearts of those friends that is imperishable.

His devoted wife, who was the recipient of his every care and consideration, and his sorrowing children have the unbounded sympathy of the entire county.

The Republican Muddle That Remains a Muddle

Washington, Mar.—Senators David Reed (Rep., Pa) and Geo. H. Moses (Rep., N. H.) contribute articles to the March Atlantic Monthly analyzing the situation of the Republican party, which are announced on the cover of the magazine as "The Republican Muddle."

Under the caption, "It Remains a Muddle," the Baltimore Sun comments thereon:

"Senators Moses is as satisfied as Senator Reed to approach the whole cosmology of political and economic controversy in the United States as a mere occasion for some smart strategy in the campaign.

"In neither article is there any attempt to present a program for legislation, and no attempt to attack or defend the policies of recent Republican Administrations; no evidence that either Senator appreciates the part a government must play as the adjuster of the claims of various interested groups in society—as opposed to the Republican theory that the government is the agent of the group best financed and most insistent. That two important leaders of the controlling political party in one of its critical years do not feel constrained to come nearer to the problems which seem likely to wreck their present Administration, and which require more than rhetorical soothing syrup, is perhaps not surprising. It is not, however, particularly encouraging."

Business Deal Pending

A business deal is pending, with prospects of its consummation, which involves a change of ownership and management of one of the substantial concerns of our town. The impending change relates to the Hedrick & Company, hardware and furniture store, and the prospective purchaser is Frank A English. An inventory of the stock is now being taken and the sale may actually take place before this reaches our readers.

Preaching at Capitan

Regular preaching service next Sunday morning. Please read the first chapter of Genesis carefully before coming. There is much for us in that chapter. Let us be at the church in time for Sunday School at ten oclock.

District Basket-ball

(C. H. S. Reporter)

The Basketball Tournament of the eighth district is now history, and rather unusual history at that, being filled with thrilling moments and surprises from start to finish. In other words, the "dope was upset," as is shown in the bracketed results.

The games were well officiated by "Bud" Taylor and his brother. It was the opinion of the majority of those witnessing the games that these two called basket-ball as it was intended to be called. It was impossible, under these conditions, for games to be anything but clean, which may account, in some measure, for unexpected defeats and early eliminations from the tournament.

Due to some mistake, the original bracket gave Carrizozo a By in the preliminaries, then a clean run for the finals, with only two games. This bracket proved so unsatisfactory that it was altered, but Carrizozo held its By. However, Weed High School arriving late found the team in no condition to play, so called Carrizozo to play their game with Estancia. The result was the best game of the season for the Carrizozo team.

Although the first half seemed doubtful for the Carrizozo team, because of of the uncertainty of their scoring ability, the defense was complimented by several coaches and the referee. At the beginning of the the second half the McMillan-Brady combination started to function as never before. Aided by the splendid defense of Young and Lewis and the wonderful floor work of Aguayo, the score began to rise. It was soon evident that the Estancia quintett was being played off their feet, with the Carrizozo team falling into its defense instantly and breaking into offence so rapidly as to find the forwards with the ball under the basket, unguarded. Final gun sounded, with an unexpected victory for Carrizozo

Being thus thrown into the bracket for their second game with Corona, the boys spent a rather quiet night and uneventful day, venturing out only to eat and witness the games. At 4 p m. Friday they marched onto the court determined to win in spite of the fact that Corona had defeated them three times earlier in the season. The defense held as usual, but the offensive failed to function as it had earlier in the tournament, with a result that at the half the game was only starting. Although the defense held in the second half, Corona found that the basket had become as "big as a barrel," and began dropping in practically unguardable shots from the safety zone. Carrizozo was defeated with a final score of 14 to 23

Perhaps the greatest surprise of the entire tournament was the way Hondo High School performed. Although handicapped by an outdoor court, lack of practice due to snow and cold, they battled their way into the finals and took no mean defeat from Tularosa, the fast, shifty champions of the district.

Let us follow the champion teams of our district to the State Tournament and boost for them.

French Foreign Trade Declines

Washington, Mar.—France did not begin to feel the effect of the world slump in foreign trade until last November, since which time there has been a steady decline in French exports and imports. The figures for January just issued, as cabled to the New York Times, show that French imports in January this year were $20,520,000 less than in December, and exports for the month fell off $8 560,000. It is stated that there has been no such marked regression in French foreign trade in the month of January for many years. The principal declines were in raw material and manufactured articles, both imports and exports.

Dixie, the colored maid, played by Dorothy Dozier, keeps the household awake by her antics. Be sure to see how it all comes out on Friday night.

Begging for Bread

Washington, Mar —From a little town in President Hoover's state (California) came the following verses, which Senator Geo. W Norris (Rep., Neb) described as "beautiful lines" sent to him, when he read them into the Congressional Record:

Begging for bread—in a plentiful land!
Begging for bread—with a trade in his hand!
Sound as a dollar, in heart and in head,
Ready for work, yet—begging for bread!

Production and Employment

February production of the Chevrolet Motor Company was 67 381 cars and trucks, according to W S Knudsen, president While the total is 3 448 under that of January when 70,766 were produced, daily output was higher in February, with its three fewer working days, than in the previous month.

Final figures on Chevrolet's February production show an increase of 2 678 over preliminary reports and indicate that schedules originally set for the month were followed.

March schedules, according to President Knudsen, have been placed at 78.000 and confidence is expressed that the figure will be surpassed. Current factory employment of Chevrolet is approximately 34 500 men.

Militiamen Guard $50,000 Contest Mail

THE thousands of letters received in the $50,000 Camel cigarette contest, advertised in newspapers from coast to coast, were guarded in the same manner as huge gold shipments. Photograph shows contest mail being loaded into an armored truck at the Winston-Salem, N. C., postoffice under guard for transportation to the offices of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. Charles Dana Gibson, noted artist and publisher of Life, Ray Long, president of International Magazine Company and Editor of Cosmopolitan Magazine, and Roy Howard, chairman of the board of the Scripps-Howard newspapers, were judges of the contest which called for answers to the question, "What recent change has been made in the wrapping of the Camel package containing twenty cigarettes and what are its advantages to the smoker?" The huge response to the contest announcements proved anew the great responsiveness of the public to newspaper advertising.

THE AMBIDEXTROUS INDEX

By Hugh Hutton.

(Author of Nutty Natural History.)

THE index is a special breed of pointer developed by the partridge hunters of Terra Del Fuego. On scenting a partridge, it points in the direction with its tail, and reverses its feet in the same direction. In case the hunter's shells are frozen by the cold winds blowing off Cape Horn, the word of command is given and the index, throwing its head back over its shoulders, dashes off at the quarry and impales him on the sharply pointed tail. As it is more adept in this position, biologists have not been able to determine whether its feet grow backwards or its head and tail have been interchanged.

In any case, there is no doubt that its feet are split peanuts with clove legs. The body is a paper-shell pecan, the head a single peanut, and the neck and ears are cloves. The tail is a highly tempered toothpick, ground down to a fine point.

Dutch as Money Lenders

In addition to their banking activities the Dutch people have long been identified as world money landers. As early as 1700 a decree issued by the states general ruled against "foreign loan transactions without consent." Various other restrictions, called "plac caten," were issued, which prohibited Dutch participation or active interest in any foreign corporations. The prohibition against foreign corporate financing, rather than foreign government loans, was designed to prevent Dutch capitalists from financing foreign concerns competing with Dutch trading companies.

When Looking for a Life Partner

By JEAN NEWTON

"IT MAY surprise you to learn that thousands of Americans each year arrange marriages through agencies by mail. It surprised me to learn that the percentage of success is greater in these unions than among those preceded by the traditional romantic courtship."

That is from an article on "Marriage by Mail" in a current magazine which one of our readers sends us with this question: "Can you imagine marriages between people who know each other only by correspondence turning out more successful than those which take place in the regular way? Can you imagine people who came together because they were looking for some one to marry being happier than those who knew each other before they decided on matrimony? Isn't it ridiculous?"

The longer we live the more we are drawn to the conclusion that anything is possible and hardly anything should be dismissed as "ridiculous."

The author of the article to which our reader refers, after investigating the workings of the so-called matrimonial agencies, tells us that most of their clients seem to be conservative folk, honest and hard-working, usually in isolated places, and that their sincerity in looking for the right kind of life partner is unmistakable.

And if we believe him, dear reader, it is not at all difficult to imagine a large percentage of success. It is just the old story of not expecting too much. These people, since we are to take the proposition seriously, come together in no rarified atmosphere of romance and illusion. They don't put each other on pedestals and expect of each other what is impossible. They are very seriously and bluntly looking for a life partner, and in that spirit they concentrate, as one does in a business partnership on the qualities that are likely to make a successful partnership. They know what they want, they see without rose-colored glasses, and according to our informant, they get it.

Just a little personal digression, if I may be permitted—to say that for my part I still believe in taking one's chances on marrying in the conventional way and make no recommendation of matrimonial agencies for my readers.

A YEAR FROM NOW

By Douglas Malloch

THEY will not matter such a lot
A year from now, the things today.
Alas, we think that they will not.
I know that every word we say,
Kind or unkind, no matter what,
Makes some heart sad or some heart gay,
Leaves on some life a bloom or blot.

Yes, day by day we shape our own
And others' lives in all we do.
We cannot live our lives alone,
For you mark me and I mark you.
As does the sculptor shape the stone,
Our words, our deeds, are shaping, too,
The days to come and years unknown.

We get our wrinkles one by one,
Some made by smiles and more by tears.
The good or evil we have done
Upon the countenance appears—
Alas, not only ours, my son,
For all the furrows of the years
On others were by us begun.

About Economical, Nourishing Foods

By NELLIE MAXWELL

We all have inspired moments when we see clearly how we may do great things but we do not believe in them enough to make them come true.

EGGS are one of the best of foods and when reasonable in price, most economical.

Omelet With Cheese.

Mix one tablespoonful of flour with one cupful of milk, one teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of pepper, then add four eggs beaten very light. Melt one tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan and when hot turn in the mixture. Bake in a moderate oven until well puffed and a golden brown. Sprinkle with six tablespoonfuls of thinly sliced cheese and return to the oven until the cheese is melted. Fold the omelet and turn on a hot platter. Serve at once.

Cottage Cheese Pie.

Line a deep pie plate with pastry and fill with the following: Three well beaten eggs beaten with a half cupful of sugar, add one cupful each of cottage cheese and fresh grated coconut, one teaspoonful of nutmeg and two cupfuls of milk. Bake as you would a custard pie—very hot at first to bake the crust, then lower the heat.

Orange Sponge Cake.

Beat two egg yolks with four tablespoonfuls of orange and one-half tablespoonful of lemon juice, add three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, one-fourth teaspoonful of grated orange rind, and then fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites and cut and fold in a cupful of flour that has been well sifted to mix with a fourth of a teaspoonful of soda. Pour into a cake pan and bake in a moderate oven forty minutes.

Coconut Apples.

Prepare red apples by stewing after coring, unpeeled, in very little water. When nearly done carefully remove the skin and scrape any red stain left on the skin and paint it back on the apple cheeks. Stuff with any chopped fruit such as raisins, prunes, figs and sprinkle the tops with freshly grated and sugared coconut. Bake until the coconut is brown and the apples well done.

Gave Bride a Shock

A clergyman recently gave a young woman of his acquaintance a very bad quarter of an hour. On her wedding day he sent her a telegram which, as received, ran: "John 4:18."

On looking up the text the girl was horrified to read: "For thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband."

After they had restored the young woman to consciousness, inquiry was made at the telegraph office, when it was found that the operator had omitted the letter or numeral indicating the first Epistle. John I 4:18 reads: "There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear."—London Tit-Bits.

SOME NEIGHBORLY HINTS

KEEPING shoes in shape is quite possible without the aid of shoe trees if you buy a pair of kid-covered corset bones. They cost only a few cents. Slip them into your shoes, bending them into shape like a bow. They will keep the leather taut and prevent sagging.

Dry mustard mixed with milk instead of water will not dry out but will keep moist until it has all been used.

If you want pastry to be light and flaky roll in one direction only. If rolled first in one direction and then in the other it is sure to be tough.

Window dedicated to Memory of Lotta Crabtree's Mother

A wish of Lotta Crabtree before her death was fulfilled when a stained glass window, a memorial to her mother, was dedicated in St. Stephen's Episcopal church in Chicago, with Bishop George Craig Stewart delivering the confirmation. Until recently the window has stood in a Boston warehouse. The photograph shows Bishop Stewart at the right and Rev. Irwin St. John Tucker, the pastor of the church, at the left.

MOTHERS SHOULD TEACH THEIR DAUGHTERS

By BETSY CALLISTER

"DON'T touch that, you might break it."

"Don't try to pour the milk, you might spill it."

"No, I don't want you to help me make the cake. You would only upset things and make more work."

And so it goes and the little girl who would have been only too glad to help mother when she was five or six has outgrown her desire to do so by the time she is thirteen or fourteen.

Once of course mothers had to let their children help, even when there were servants. Now with improved, shortened methods of doing things they usually find it easier to do things themselves than to bother teaching their daughters to help. And the number of girls of high school age who know practically nothing about cooking is amazingly large.

This inability to do the countless and one things that girls all used to know how to do sometimes amounts to a real handicap.

The superintendent of a large nurses' training school related the other day that a surprisingly large number of girls who were perfectly well qualified to do the classroom work in training school started training handicapped because they didn't know how to do the most usual sorts of work about a house.

"Mothers really ought to teach their children how to use their hands," she said, "especially mothers whose daughters want to become trained nurses."

Early English Glassmaking

In Old England the glass making industry was concentrated in the county of Sussex, where an ancient glass works was dug up recently. James I issued a proclamation forbidding the melting of glass "with timber or wood or fuel made of the same" fearing, no doubt, that the forests were being depleted too rapidly. But, in spite of this order, glass works increased. Later on, in 1635, the import of foreign glass was prohibited by government order, although an exception was made in favor of Venetian ware. The most important glass factory was at Chiddingfold, which dates back to 1240. It provided Henry II with white and colored glass for his abbey of Westminster.

Fooled the Big City Art Critics

Because Paul Smith of Los Angeles thought his wife's paintings were unappreciated, he decided to take revenge on the critics. So he executed a number of exceedingly raw daubs and under an assumed name exhibited them as examples of the new art in Russia. The critics in Chicago, Boston and elsewhere were most enthusiastic about them until they learned how they had been hoaxed. Above is one of Smith's pictures, entitled "Exaltation."

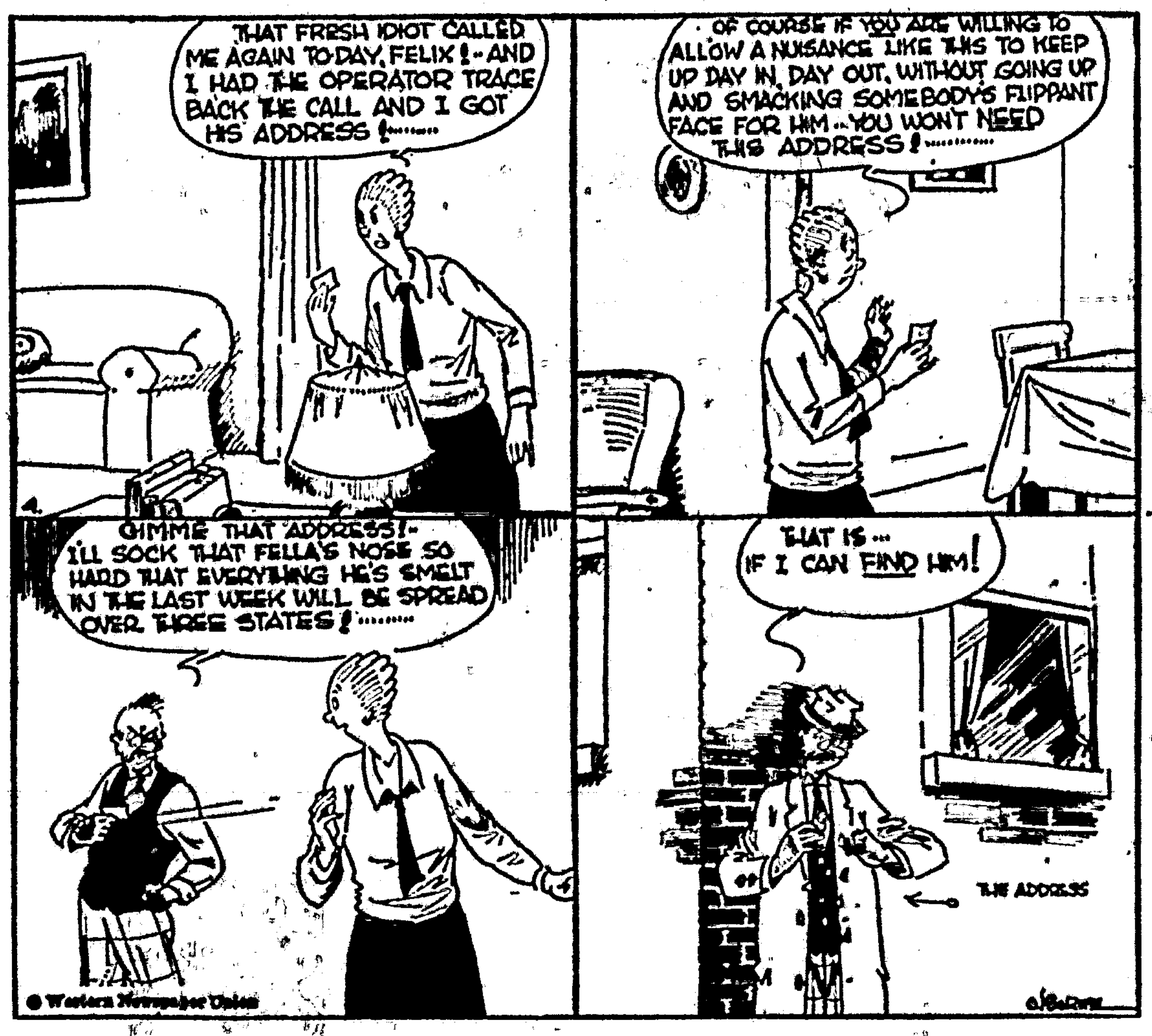
THE FEATHERHEADS — Which Will Be Pretty, Pretty Hard



FINNEY OF THE FORCE — And You Can't Throw Out a Present

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

By Taxi to the Front

When the Germans started their invasion of Belgium, four American war correspondents, Irvin S. Cobb, John T. McCutcheon, Will Irwin and Arno Dosch-Fleurot hurried to Brussels where, on the morning of August 18, 1914, they engaged a taxicab and started out to find the Belgian army. By noon they were in the thick of the fighting but not finding any place in the territory held by the Belgians where they wanted to stop they kept right on going.

Eventually this led them into the German lines where they were immediately taken prisoners and closely guarded that night. In the morning they were taken to Gen. Von Bulow's headquarters. Through his adjutant, who spoke English, the general demanded, "How did you get here?" "Why, we came in a taxicab," replied one of the four casually. "In a taxicab!" exclaimed the general "Gott in Himmel! In a taxicab!" At the thought of these four crazy Americans driving in a taxicab straight into a battle and beyond into certain captivity, the general roared with laughter.

The four were inclined to join in the joke until the general suddenly became stern and let it be known that they were in a precarious situation. He might not shoot them as spies but there was a good chance that they would be interned for the duration of the war.

Finally Cobb, acting as spokesman for his companions, said to the general, "I beg of you, as man to man, shoot us if you must, but for God's sake stop that taxicab meter. It's still running." For a moment Von Bulow looked sterner than ever. Then he broke into a bellow of laughter and he was still roaring as he dismissed his captives. For four days they were detained at his headquarters, then were sent back under escort to Brussels.

Excuse It, Please

The Irish have a wit which responds quickly in emergencies—and emergencies always were popping up during the World war.

Witness the story told by Louis G. Brubaker, a member of the old Second Virginia infantry at the time of the war, to illustrate the point.

My outfit, the old Second Virginia, was encamped on the Roanoke (Va.) fair grounds in 1917, under command of the late Robert F. Leedy, says Brubaker.

While we were on guard at the main entrance to the grounds one day, several of us were being entertained by an Irish member of our outfit who was unusually adept at imitating others. The talents of this man were directed principally toward the mimicry of idiots. His favorite pose for this "act" was to hold one hand against his chest, with eyes rolling and mouth agape—too ridiculous for description.

He was in this attitude when the colonel and his staff suddenly reined up before us. We snapped into a salute but our comrade was too absorbed in his acting to even notice the visitors.

The colonel sat his horse for some moments, looking down at the Irishman, before the latter became aware of what was happening. When he saw the colonel, however, the Irish soldier retained his silly pose.

The officer was amused and astonished, it was evident. There was a twinkle in his eye as he roared: "How in the blank-blank did you ever get into this man's army?"

Without batting an eye, the soldier's Irish wit came to his rescue. The mimic replied instantly: "Sir, they enlisted me over the telephone."

A Narrow Squeak—Rather!

On August 12, 1918, Maj. Reed G. Landis of Chicago, then a lieutenant and on the way to becoming America's second ace, hopped off with his fellow war birds in search of the enemy squadron.

They found twenty hostile flyers high above the lines of advancing Allied infantry. For twenty minutes the opposing groups played a game of aerial hide-and-seek, each trying to outmaneuver the other. Then Landis and his companions cornered some of the enemy planes, twelve miles behind their own lines. The fighting began.

Suddenly Landis, who was separated from his mates, saw a German plane swooping down for him, point blank. He swerved his own plane toward the enemy and "gave 'er the gas."

Neither hesitated. Both planes were meeting as though held to an invisible track. The faces of the pilots were almost together when, suddenly—

The German plane rocked sharply, spun dizzily, and whirling like a top, crashed to the forest directly below, a tangled wreckage of pilot and ship.

"And that," Lieutenant (now Major) Landis admits, "was rather a narrow squeak; what?"

Earliest Magazines

The American Library association says: "It is said that the first magazine that really deserved the name was the Athenian Gazette, which appeared in London in 1691. Gentleman's Magazine, starting in 1731, is the real beginning of the monthly magazine such as we know it in recent years."

That cold may lead to something serious, if neglected. The time to do something for it is now. Don't wait until it develops into bronchitis. Tariff Fails to Work

Washington. Feb — Chairman Alexander Legge of the Farm Board testified before the House Ways and Means Committee recently on the Burtness Bill to put an embargo for one year on wheat and some other farm products. He told the committee, according to a report of his testimony in the daily press, "that the flexible clause, which President Hoover regarded as the most important feature of the Hawley-Smoot tariff, doesn't work for the benefit of agriculture in the present emergency.

"It takes too long for the Tariff Commission to make its findings under the flexible clause, Mr. Legge testified, and even when the process is completed, the commission can do no more than recommend duties to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad. With foreign countries selling agricultural products below the present cost of production, Mr. Legge said, such equalization affords no real protection to American farmers."

Redeem Water Bonds

The Village Trustees redeemed water bonds, at their last meeting, amounting to $1,500. This was made possible by the adoption of the resolution authorizing Mayor McQuillen to dispose of securities, Liberty Bonds, etc., which the Village had invested its surplus at different times. Inasmuch as these securities held by the Village were drawing only 4¼ per cent and the redeemed water bonds were 6 per cent, the transaction was a very favorable one. The Village had formerly redeemed $1,000 of the same issue and, added to the recent redemption, the total is now $2,500, on which interest ceases.

Dear Mayor of

I'd like to see the place where Billy the Kid is buried.

What the NEW HUMIDOR PACK means to Camel Smokers*

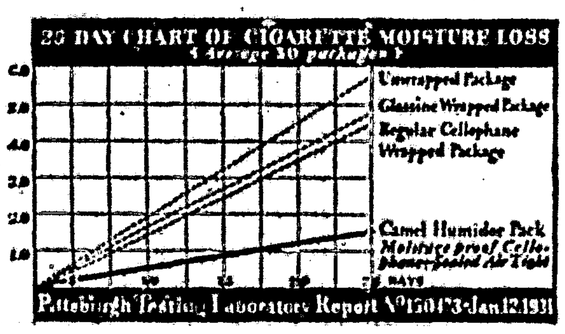
COMPARE a package of Camels with any other cigarette and note the difference in the technique of packing.

Note that Camels are completely enclosed in an outer transparent cover of moisture-proof cellophane and sealed air-tight at every point.

We call this outer shell the Humidor Pack. It differs from the ordinary cellophane pack and while it is egg-shell thin, it means a lot in terms of cigarette enjoyment.

It means, for instance, that evaporation is checkmated and that Salt Lake City can now have as good Camels as Winston-Salem.

While Camels are made of a blend of the choicest Turkish and mellowest domestic tobaccos, it is highly important, if you are to get full benefit of this quality, that these cigarettes come to you with their natural moisture content still intact.



The Pittsburgh Testing Laboratory chart above graphically shows you that only the Camel Humidor Pack delivers cigarettes to you in prime condition

The Humidor Pack insures that. It prevents the fine tobaccos of Camels from drying out and losing any of their delightful flavor.

Aside from cheap tobacco, two factors in a cigarette can mar the smoker's pleasure:

Fine particles of peppery dust if left in the tobacco by inefficient cleaning methods sting and irritate delicate throat membrane.

Dry tobacco, robbed of its natural moisture by scorching or by evaporation gives off a hot smoke that burns the throat with every inhalation.

We take every precaution against these factors here at Winston-Salem.

A special vacuum cleaning apparatus removes dust and now the new Humidor Pack prevents dryness.

Check the difference yourself

It is a very simple matter to check the difference between Humidor Packed Camels and other ordinary dry cigarettes.

First of all you can feel the difference as you roll the cigarettes between your fingers. Camels are full-bodied and pliable. A dry cigarette crumbles under pressure and sheds tobacco.

If you will hold a cigarette to each ear and roll them with your fingers you can actually hear the difference.

The real test of course is to smoke them. And here's where the new Humidor Pack proves a real blessing to the smoker.

As you inhale the cool, fragrant smoke from a Camel you get all the mildness and magic of the fine tobaccos of which it is blended.

But when you draw in the hot smoke from a dried cigarette see how flat and brackish it is by comparison and how harsh it is to your throat.

If you are a regular Camel smoker you have already noticed what proper condition of the cigarette means.

But if you haven't tried Camels in the new Humidor Pack you have a new adventure with Lady Nicotine in store.

Switch your affections for just one day, then go back to your old love tomorrow if you can.

THE STORY

With his English wife, Catherine, and son, Jeems, Henry Bulain, French settler in Canada in 1749, cultivates a farm adjacent to the Tonteur seigneurie. As the story opens the Bulains are returning from a visit to the Tonteurs. Catherine's wandering brother, Hepsibah, meets them with presents for the family. To Jeems he gives a pistol, bidding him perfect himself in marksmanship. Hepsibah fears for the safety of the Bulains in their isolated position. Jeems fights with Paul Tache, cousin of Toinette Tonteur, whom they both adore. Next day Jeems calls at the Tonteur home and apologizes for brawling in front of Toinette. The Tonteurs go to Quebec.

This discussion was the beginning of another phase in Jeems' life. It placed before him certain definite obligations of manhood which even his mother had to recognize, though she wanted to hold him as long as possible in his boyhood years. During the next year he made several trips with Hepsibah, going to Albany and as far as the country of Pennsylvania. Each time he returned to his home something held him more closely to it.

In the autumn of 1754, after four years at school, Toinette returned to Tonteur manor.

Peace and happiness lay over the Richelieu. It had been a splendid year for France along the far frontiers. Washington had surrendered at Fort Necessity, and Villiers was triumphant at Fore Duquesne. England and France were still playing at the hypocrisy of friendship. While they played, thrusting at each other secretly and in the dark, not an English flag was left waving beyond the Alleghanies. French arms and Indian diplomacy were victorious along the Ohio and westward to the plains. The policies of the British royal governors were alienating their Indian allies, and in spite of their million and a half population against eighty thousand in New France, Dinwiddie had frantically called upon England for help. In response, England was sending General Braddock.

In a double rejoicing over Toinette's homecoming and his country's success at arms, Tonteur planned a levee and barbecue at the seigneurie. Hepsibah was away at the time, which disappointed the baron, who insisted that Henri and his family must attend the celebration or he would never call them friends again.

Jeems felt a thrill growing in him as the day drew near. He was no longer the Jeems of Lucasn's place as he set out in the company of his father and mother with Odd pegging along faithfully at his side. In January he would be eighteen. The alert and sinuous grace of one of the wild things of the forest was in his movements. Catherine was more than ever proud of him and rejoiced in the cleanness of his build, in his love of nature and God, and in the directness with which his eyes looked at one. But she was not more proud than Hepsibah Adams, who had seen in this pupil of his flesh and blood the qualities and courage, the lock, stock, and barrel, as he called it, of a fighting man.

Jeems was anxious to see Toinette, but with this desire there remained none of the old yearnings which had once oppressed him. She whom he was going to regard today was a stranger, one into whose presence he was determined not to force himself again. This resolution was not inspired in him by a lack of boldness or an uncertainty as to his own social fitness. An immense pride upheld him. The spirit and freedom of the forests were in his blood, and behind these was also the spirit of Hepsibah Adams. He knew that he could meet Toinette coolly and without embarrassment should they chance to stand face to face, no matter how splendid she had grown. And he realized there must be a great change in her. She was fifteen now. A young lady. At this period of his life, five years seemed a long time, and he thought it was possible he might not recognize her.

An overwhelming moment of shock seized him when at last he saw her.

It was as if a yesterday of long ago had come back into this today, as if a picture which had been burned and scattered into ash had miraculously been restored.

She was taller, of course. Perhaps she was leveller. But she was the same Toinette. He could see no change in her except that she had become more a woman. Hepsibah's work, his own, his freedom, and his courage were dissipated like dust as he looked at her, and once more he felt himself the inferior being offering her nuts and feathers and maple sugar and praying in his childish way that she might smile on him. This was not a new Toinette removed another million miles away from him, as he had supposed she would be, but the old Toinette, commanding him to slavery again, and making his blood run hot in his body.

With a group of young ladies from the neighboring seigneurie, she had come down from the big house, and he was almost in her path, with Peter Lubeck at his side. It was Peter who advanced a step or two toward them. Except for his action Toinette would not have turned, Jeems thought. He pulled himself together and stood with his head bared, as cold and impassive in appearance as a soldier at attention, while his heart beat like a hammer. Toinette had to face him to return his companion's greeting.

It was impossible for her not to see him when she made this movement. But there was a slowness in her discovery, an effort to keep from looking at him which was more eloquent than words. It had not been her desire to speak to him.

If he needed courage, it was this enlightenment which gave it to him. He inclined his head when she met his gaze. Her face was flushed, her eyes darkly aglow, while his own cheeks bore only the color of sun and wind. He might never have known her, so unmoved did he stand as she went on her way.

She had slightly nodded, her lips had barely formed a name.

Later, after the feast on the green, came Tonteur's spectacular feature of the day, a military review of his tenants, with wives and children witnessing the martial display. The male guests, who had drilled in their own seigneuries, joined Tonteur's men. Only Henri Bulain and Jeems were not among them. Henri, sensitive to the fact, and to save Catherine from the hurt which might arise because of it, had started with her over the homeward trail half an hour before. Jeems had remained. This was his answer to Toinette's contempt—that he was not of her people, that his world was not circumscribed by the petty boundaries of the seigneurie. He stood with his long rifle in the crook of his arm, conscious that she was looking at him, and the invisible shafts from her eyes, poisoned with their disdain, stirred him with the thrill of a painful triumph. He could almost hear her calling him an English beast again. A coward. One to be distrusted and watched. He did not sense humiliation or regret, but only a final widening of what had always lain between them.

He bore this feeling home with him. It grew as time went on, and with its growth an increasing restlessness came over him. News creeping through the wilderness and reaching every corner, like the whispering winds, kept an unquenchable heat under the ash of these fires, fanning the embers into flame in spite of him. Secrets were no longer secrets. Rumors had grown into facts. Fears had become realities. England and France were still playing at peace in their mighty courts. In the sunlight they were friends, in the dark they were seeking each other's lives like common cutthroats.

And the thirteen little Colonial governments of the English, quarreling like small boys among themselves, just beginning to walk alone, feeling the significance of the new word American, cheated by their parent, laughed at by their parent, hated by their parent, still yearned for the love of that parent as children have wanted love from the beginning of time, and were loyal to it.

So tragedy began to move, to build out of death, out of betrayed confidence, out of dishonor and fraud and pitiless murder the American and Canadian nations of the future.

Eighty thousand French and more than a million English in the New world made ready for the sacrifice. Massachusetts enlisted one man out of eight of her male populaton. Connecticut, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, New York, and the others followed her example.

Children, loyal, proud to fight—and hating the French ferociously!

Then came Braddock, preceding Wolfe, to call them "worthless trash."

And New France, a glory of sun and land even now gutted of her prosperity by corruptions brought from Louis and La Pompadour, sent out her own sons to fight and kill, valiant, glad, confident—and hating the English implacably!

With them, on both sides, went Indians from almost a hundred tribes—red men who had once found honor in fighting, but who, now skulking and murderous and vengeful, found their souls in pawn to the great White Fathers across the sea who had prostituted them with whisky, bought them with guns, maddened them with hatreds, and who paid them for human hair.

Of these things Jeems was thinking as winter grew into spring and spring into summer. Only love held him from leaping to the temptations which were drawing closer about him, love for his mother whose happiness marked the beginning and the end of all action on the part of her men folk. And in this hour, when three out of four of the fighting men along the Richelieu were preparing to join Dieskau, when half of his acquaintances at the Tonteur seigneurie had already gone to fight Braddock, when the forests trembled at the stealthy tread of painted savages, and when the Frenchman who did not rise to his country's call was no longer a Frenchman, Jeems observed that the strain upon his father was more difficult to bear than his own. For Henri, in spite of his worship of Catherine, was of New France to the bottom of his soul, and now that other men were making a bulwark of their bodies against her enemies, his own desire to make the same sacrifice was almost beyond the power of his strong will to control. In their years of comradeship, Jeems and his father had never come so near to each other as in these weeks of tension.

Almost as painful to them as the sting of a wound was the day when Dieskau came up the Richelieu with a host of three thousand five hundred men and made forever a hallowed ground of the Tonteur seigneurie by camping there overnight.

When she knew they were coming, Catherine had said:

"If your hearts tell you it is right, go with them!"

But they remained. For Henri it was a struggle greater than Dieskau fought, greater than that in which Braddock died. For Jeems it was less a torment and more the mysterious madness of youth to tramp to the clash of arms. For Catherine it was the gehenna of her life, a siege of darkness and uncertainty in her soul which gave way suddenly before news which swept like a whirlwind over the land.

God had been with New France!

Braddock and his English invaders were destroyed!

No triumph of French arms in the New world had been so complete, and Dieskau, the great German baron who was fighting for France, moved southward to crush Sir William Johnson and his Colonials and Indians, planning not to stop until he had driven them to the doors of Albany.

With him were six hundred and eighty-four of the loyal men who were beginning to call themselves Canadians.

Tonteur rode over to bring the news to Henri Bulain. To Catherine he recalled his prediction that the English would never get into this paradise of theirs. Now the whole thing was settled for many years to come, for Dieskau would sweep their last enemy from the Champlain country as completely as a new broom swept her home. He had sent almost every man he had to the scene of fighting, and only his wooden leg had kept him from joining Dieskau.

Even Toinette had wanted to go!

High Place Accorded Majestic Douglas Fir

A Scottish naturalist, roving the wild western land of the infant republic 103 years ago, brought the majestic Douglas fir to the knowledge of the scientific world, and for all time it will bear his name. Of David Douglas it is said that he "contributed probably more than any other one man to the knowledge of our northwestern trees and plants."

Returning home, he introduced the Douglas fir into cultivation in Great Britain, and the Scots value it highly for finish and furniture. Now comes the sequel, in this editorial paragraph from the Seattle Times:

"A shipment of a cargo of Seattle-made furniture to Scotland has more than ordinary significance. The articles are all made of Washington fir, a wood held in higher esteem in Scotland than walnut. The purchasers specified that the wood should be in its natural grain, which everybody knows is beautiful. We are familiar with the cargoes usually exported from this state, but when a new line and new market are involved there is good reason to rejoice."

America's Largest Island

Isle Royale, Michigan's beautiful island in Lake Superior, often is spoken of as "the second largest island in the United States" Long Island, N. Y., being the largest island. But the second largest is Whidby island, belonging to the state of Washington, according to the American Geographical society. Whidby island lies across the entrance to Puget sound and is so little known that geographies and atlases differ on the spelling of its name.

Gold Mixture

Green gold consists of gold, silver and cadmium, and sometimes copper is also added. The degree of the green color depends upon the percentage of the metals used with the gold.

When Funston Captured Aguinaldo

GEN. FRED FUNSTON

GROUP OF MORO CHIEFS

FILIPINO CONSTABULARY

EMILIO AGUINALDO

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THIRTY years ago America had a new national hero. He was "a little man with a slight limp; a little man who weighs less than a hundred pounds, with a Vandyke beard and a sense of humor that bubbles in him like the effervescence of wine." His name was Frederick Funston and his "madcap enterprise," as he himself called it, put his name on the lips of millions. For Funston had captured Emilio Aguinaldo, the leader of the Filipino insurrectos, the most talked-of man in the Orient, if not in the whole world at that time, who for three years had been leading some 70,000 American troops and native auxiliaries a merry chase from one end of the province of Luzon to another. On March 23, 1901, the chase came to an end when, through the daring and the strategy of the little Kansan, this wily native leader was taken prisoner.

Insignificant though Funston may have been in appearance, few men's lives had been packed as full with adventure as had his when he sprang into fame almost overnight. He was born in Ohio in 1865, the son of a first lieutenant in the Union army, who in 1867 moved to Kansas when Frederick was two years old, where he was elected to the Kansas state legislature and later elected and repeatedly re-elected to congress.

Young Funston was educated in Iola, Kan., attended the University of Kansas for two years and then went to work as a newspaper reporter, first at Fort Smith, Ark., and later on the Kansas City Journal.

During the summer of 1896 he attended a mass meeting in New York called to arouse sympathy for the Cubans who were struggling to throw off the yoke of Spain. Funston became interested in the cause of Cuban liberty and offered his services to the Cuban Junta. After drilling recruits under its direction, he joined a filibustering expedition and aided in delivering to General Gomez the first Hotchkiss guns owned by the Cuban revolutionists. Two weeks later he was placed in charge of these guns as captain of artillery.

During his 18 months in Cuba Funston took part in 22 engagements and so fearful was the execution wrought by his guns (five pieces, including a pneumatic dynamite gun, the first ever used in battle) that the Spaniards set a price upon his head. At the battle of Samai his lungs were pierced by a Mauser bullet and while he was recovering from this wound his hip was injured by his horse falling upon it during a cavalry charge. This was followed by an attack of fever and with his health broken Funston attempted to reach the coast and escape to the United States.

He was arrested by the Spaniards but succeeded in convincing them that he was a deserter from the Cuban army (after swallowing the passport which would have betrayed him) and although they at first sentenced him to a firing squad and a stone wall, he was finally freed and sent to the United States. This was in 1890 and the next few years Funston spent on the lecture platform.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American war he organized the Twentieth Kansas Volunteers a regiment similar to the Rough Riders, of which he was made a colonel. His regiment was ordered to the Philippines and in November, 1898, he joined Gen. Wesley Merritt at Manila and aided in the capture of the capital.

It is at this point that Aguinaldo comes into the picture. The early life and ancestry of this leader is cloaked in mystery. He is said to have much Spanish blood in his veins from which came his intelligence, his courage, his military ability and his political acumen. When in August, 1898, he declared himself president of the revolutionary government of the Philippines and general in chief of its army, he called himself Don Emilio Aguinaldo y Famy. He was even then dreaming of independence for his native land, after the Americans had defeated the hated Spaniard and these dreams led to the insurrection against the new masters of the islands.

Almost from the beginning of the insurrection Funston had been in the field against Aguinaldo's followers. His strict discipline had not made him especially popular with his soldiers, but after the affair at Murilao river in April, 1899, he had their unbounded respect. There he found the bridge across the river destroyed and a strong force of insurrectos on the other side to resist a crossing by the Americans. Selecting 20 of those who volunteered to accompany him, Funston swam the river, drove the enemy back and took 80 prisoners. A few days later, with only 45 men, he crossed the Rio Grande at Calumpit on a raft, and after a desperate fight drove 2,500 of the enemy from an intrenched position. For this feat he was promoted to brigadier general of volunteers.

Throughout 1899 and 1900 there was constant fighting but always the leader of the insurrectos eluded capture. Sometime during 1900 he seemed to have dropped out of sight entirely but in January, 1901, from his hiding place in the province of Isabela, Aguinaldo sent out a letter denouncing the subchiefs who had taken the oath of allegiance to the United States and ordered certain insurgent forces in southern Luzon to join him at the rendezvous in Isabela. The messenger entrusted with this letter surrendered to an American lieutenant in February and upon securing the information so long desired, General Funston determined upon a daring plan for capturing Aguinaldo. Going to Manila to lay his plans before his superiors, Generals MacArthur and Wheaton, he finally gained their consent to the attempt. Taking with him Capts. H. W. Newton and Russel T. Hazzard, Lieuts. Oliver P. M. Hazzard and Burton J. Mitchell and a company of 80 Macabebes who spoke the Tagalog languages, he was landed on a beach south of Casiguran in the province of Principe on March 12, 1901.

Aguinaldo's messenger and the Macabebe scouts were to pass themselves off as a detachment of insurgent Tagalogs who had captured the five Americans and were taking them as prisoners to Aguinaldo. The position of Funston and his companions was a dangerous one. Everything depended upon the faithfulness of the Macabebe. Should they turn traitor to the Americans, it meant certain death. But they remained faithful and after a fatiguing and dangerous march of seven days and nights, the party reached a point eight miles from Palanan, Aguinaldo's hiding place. A message, stamped with the seal of General Lacuna, an Aguinaldo supporter, which had been found among the papers handed over by the insurgent leader's messenger, was sent forward to Aguinaldo and a prompt response was received, welcoming the party. The Americans and their fake Tagalogs hastened forward. Funston himself was not present at the actual capture. That he entrusted to a Spaniard, Iazaro Segovia, and a detachment of the scouts. The story, as Funston told it later, follows:

"Running up the bank toward the house, we were met by Segovia, who came running out, his face aglow with exultation and his clothes spattered with the blood of the men he had wounded. He called out in Spanish: 'It is all right; we have him.' We hastened into the house and I introduced myself to Aguinaldo, telling him that we were officers of the American army, that the men with us were our troops, and not his, and that he was a prisoner of war. He was given assurance that he need fear no bad treatment. He said, in a dazed sort of way: 'Is this not some joke?' I assured him that it was not, though, as a matter of fact, it was a pretty bad one on him. While naturally agitated, his bearing was dignified, and in this moment of his fall there was nothing of the craven."

In after years Aguinaldo was loud in his praise of Funston for the audacity and skill of his plan, saying that only by the stratagem used could he have been captured. The news that Aguinaldo was captured was flashed to the United States and was hailed with delight as the sign that the long and weary war against the insurgents was over at last. President McKinley on March 30 commissioned Funston a brigadier general in the regular army and had it not been for his untimely death in 1917 it is probable that he would have been commander in chief of the A. E. F. when the United States entered the World war. His only part in that great conflict was to give his name to a training camp in Kansas where thousands of men received their training for "over there."

This Home Building Design Is One That Is Favored by Many

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice—FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

When the average family begin to plan to build a new home, every member has some idea that he or she would like to see incorporated in the house. In some other home, perhaps, such a feature as appealed to the individual was found and gave rise to the thought that when or if he was to build he would have this feature in his home. It is this desire that makes so many homes entirely different from others.

There is danger, however, in carrying this idea too far. Odd features either in the exterior or interior of a house may not appeal to some one else, and, if the necessity arises, may prevent the sale of the home. Comfort and convenience may be secured for the average family by following the plans that have been found most suitable to the average family. And when this is done it is not difficult to dispose of the place if it is desirable to do so.

One type of house that appeals to the greatest number of persons is the story-and-a-half building, such as is shown in the accompanying illustration. Here is a house of the size and shape that appeals. While it looks large from the outside, it is not, as it contains only six rooms, aside from the inclosed breakfast porch at the rear of the first floor. It contains three good rooms downstairs—living and dining rooms and kitchen—and three bedrooms and the bathroom on the second floor. This number of rooms will accommodate nicely the average family.

In exterior appearance it is difficult to find a more attractive house than the one shown. The narrow gables at the end, the steep dormer window set in it at the front and the extension of the roof lines to form the porch covering all combine to give this house a graceful, homelike appearance. This exterior appearance is greatly enhanced by the brick foundation and piers of the porch and the wide brick fireplace chimney in the end wall. The porch is inviting in summer, while the chimney gives rise to thoughts of a comfortable, open fire in the winter time.

The floor plans that accompany the exterior view show how the rooms are arranged and their size. The entrance door off the porch leads into a reception room, out of which run the stairs to the second floor. To the right, through double-glazed doors, is the living room, 12 by 15 feet in size. Three windows opening onto the porch and the high windows on either side of the fireplace admit plenty of light and ventilation. The wide fireplace at the end of the room, with bookcases on either side under the window, adds to the attractiveness of the room's finish.

Back of the living room is the dining room, also a light cheery room, 12 by 13 feet 6 inches in dimensions. And opening off the living room and connected with it by double doors is a large, inclosed breakfast porch, 14 feet long and 7 feet 6 inches wide. This room also makes a secluded cheerful sun parlor.

Adjoining the dining room at the left is the kitchen, 11 feet square, whose size and shape make it an efficient workroom for the housewife, a place where the cooking and other kitchen activities may be accomplished with a minimum of steps. The sink is placed under the window in the outside wall, with cases for utensils and dishes on either side. The side entrance leads to a passageway, which is large enough for the icebox and has a closet alongside it for the linens needed in the dining room and kitchen. Back of the kitchen also is a good-sized pantry.

The stairs lead into a short hall on the second floor, off which open the three bedrooms, one at the front, one at the side and one at the back. The bathroom is located in the center of this floor, so that it is accessible to all three bedrooms. Both front and rear bedrooms are 15 feet 6 inches by 10 feet, while the one at the end of the house is 11 by 12 feet.

The basement extends under the whole of the house and is reached by stairs just inside the entrance at the side of the house.

Taken altogether this is a very desirable home building design—one that combines exterior attractiveness and interior comfort, and it is not expensive to build.

Many Metal Lath Types Individually Effective

Metal lath, which of late years has been given wide acceptance in quality construction, because of its fire-resistance, plaster protection, ease of installation and adaptability to decorative requirements, is made in a variety of types for use at various points about the home.

The main division in metal lath manufacture is between the expanded and the wire types. Expanded metal lath is made from a piece of steel which is punched in such a pattern that when the two sides of the sheet are pulled outward series of keys are formed in the metal, these forming the bond for plaster. Various weights and sizes of the lath are made, and galvanizing or other protective processes are given to the sheets to eliminate rust.

The wire type of metal is also made in various weights for exterior and interior use. Cross joints of the wires are usually spot welded. Treated paper backing in some types guards against plaster falling behind the lath and automatically back-plasters it. The paper backing also affords insulating value.

While both expanded and wire types are in general use, the expanded type has of late years received wider usage than the wire type.

For particular locations metal lath in strips and other forms expedites work and is a valuable adjunct to wood lath. Cornerite, corner bead, invisible picture molding, steel window and door casings, with strips of metal lath attached, and other special types are coming more and more into extensive use.

Tasteful Planning

Have you ever wondered why one home has charm and another lacks it? Money isn't the answer. Even with moderate amounts to spend, those who know can often obtain lovely things of real authenticity. The answer is good taste applied to home planning and decoration.

BEET BY-PRODUCT HELP FOR LAMBS

Has Several Attributes in Its Bulky Nature.

Wet beet pulp and corn silage make excellent supplements to the lamb-fattening ration because they are bulky, succulent and palatable, and because of their partial grain equivalent value, says E. J. Maynard, associate animal husbandman at the Colorado Agricultural college.

In adding variety to the ration and in reducing the amount of grain necessary for finishing the lambs, these feeds often show a value greater than their actual grain-replacement estimate, it is emphasized.

"Dried molasses beet pulp in recent years has come into rather wide use as whole or partial substitue for grain where lambs have gone 'off feed,'" Maynard adds. "As this beet by-product concentrate has several natural attributes in its bulky nature, its palatability and fattening value, it is often wise to include it as part of the grain mixture fed in the dry ration for lambs when wet pulp or other succulent feed is not available.

"An average of four tests conducted at the Agricultural college indicates that the substitution of dried molasses beet pulp for one-half the corn fed will slightly decrease hay consumption, decrease cost of gains at present prices and slightly increase gains.

"It is a well recognized fact that lambs once 'off feed' on account of too heavy a grain ration can rarely be brought back to a full feed of barley or corn. Since no two bunches of lambs can be expected to take the same amount of grain on a full feed it is often a delicate matter to raise lambs to a full feed of straight grain and hold them there.

"When lambs go 'off feed' the cost of fattening them of course increases because time is lost and digestive disturbances naturally cut down the efficiency with which they handle thier ration. Then, too, there may be some death loss experienced in connection with the disturbance.

"With these facts in mind the importance of keeping lambs 'on feed' is evident and any feed that can be used in the fattening ration to safeguard them against going off feed should have additional merit in connection with its actual fattening value."

Right Mineral Mixture in Swine Feeding Lot

The veteran experimental feeder at the Iowa experiment station, John M. Evvard, has the following to say about a simple mineral mixture for pigs:

"It is surprising how well a simple mineral mixture will usually respond in the swine feeding lot. It is surprising that even common salt may give results that are greatly superior to those obtained where no salt is fed. A simple mixture of salt and wood ashes often yields wonderfully good results. Of course when we use salt and wood ashes we have a mixture that carries a number of essential nutritional elements, chief among which are calcium, potassium, sodium, phosphorus and magnesium.

"A very good, simple 'backbone' mixture which carries the outstanding and main deficiency elements such as are needed to balance up our ordinary feeds may be made up per hundred pounds as follows: Hard wood ashes, 60 pounds; spent bone black or bone charcoal, 25 pounds; common salt, 15 pounds; potassium iodide, 0.02 pounds (two one-hundredths or one-fiftieth of one pound.)"

Composition of Wheat and Rye Very Similar

The chemical composition and the general characteristics of wheat and rye are very similar so that they might be expected to give about the same results when fed in the same stations, however, indicate that rye instead of being more valuable than wheat is in reality about 5 per cent less valuable. This difference in feeding value of wheat and rye is thought in a measure at least to be due to the fact that rye is less palatable.

The Minnesota station has recently been working on the problem in an attempt to find out what factors cause rye to be an unsatisfactory feed when it is fed as the greater part of the ration over a period of several weeks or months. Efforts to discover some feed combinations that will be efficient for dry lot conditions have been partially successful while quite satisfactory results have been obtained by feeding rye combined with other grains upon pasture.

Hay for Horses

An allowance of about one and a half pounds of hay for each 100 pounds of live weight is the usual recommendation for idle horses. Many farmers increase this allowance to two pounds per 100 pounds live weight. This quantity should be divided into two or three parts and fed morning and night with a noon feed if needed. Some horses will eat much more hay than this even when idle, but the tendency is to develop what is often called "hay belly."

No Inferiority Complex About Daniel Webster

Undoubtedly the acceptance of Daniel Webster's greatness by his contemporaries was due in part to his own consciousness of it, and his skill in imposing his conception of himself on others.

Even as a poor boy at Dartmouth college he had a passion for clothes. For great oratorical occasions he always wore a bright blue coat with brass buttons, and a buff waistcoat. There is more than a suspicion that he stage managed his entrances and exits.

Claude Moore Fuess, in his biography, "Daniel Webster," quotes a Dartmouth graduate who remarked that "in the political processions of his youth, he never saw Webster except marching alone in a hollow square, and that without any planning on the part of the authorities in charge." Like other actors, he needed his audience. While Emerson communed with the infinite through his diary, Webster thought of himself in terms of public appearance.

Webster directed his deathbed scene with a formality such as attends the passing of a cardinal or pope. After his dying oration he lapsed into drowsiness, but revived to inquire: "Have I—wife, son, doctors, friends, are you all here?—have I, on this occasion, said anything unworthy of Daniel Webster?"—Robert Morse Lovett in the New Republic.

Wood Resists Heat

By a special process, wood is said to have been made more flame-proof and fire-resistant than other fire-resisting material without the loss of characteristics that make wood desirable for interior and exterior uses, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In a recent test, a wooden door, treated with the chemicals, withstood intense heat for a longer time than one of steel. This specially fire-proofed wood has been used as a fire safeguard in the tower of the Chrysler building in New York city.
