Pharisaical Attitude

The policy of the Hoover government that it would have nothing to do "officially" with the sessions of the International Chamber of Commerce, announced in advance of the meeting of that body, which has just concluded a week's discussion of the causes of world depression and the remedies therefor, and "broadly hinting that our government will be distinctly 'cool' toward the entire proceeding," is roundly scored by the New York Times as one of "callous indifference."

"So far as this attitude has been defined and may be persisted in," says the Times, "it is a willful ignoring of conditions in which we have a greater concern than any other country. The United States is caught in a general misfortune. For us to refuse to do our part to relieve it, or even to consult with those who are planning measures of relief, is worse than a crime, for it is a gigantic blunder. For this nation or this government to be cool or suspicious in the presence of endeavors to help the whole earth out of an international mess is to heap folly upon ignorance.

"What really ought to have the warmest and most instant sympathy with the whole inquiry, and lend to it every help and countenance. But thus far our official position has been that depression and disasters in other countries are a good excuse, or political alibi, for their having occurred here also.

"President Hoover has more than once tried to reassure his fellow countrymen by telling them that they are suffering only what has befallen all other people. But when other people come and ask us to reason together with them in order to see if means cannot be devised for aiding the world to its feet again, we ostentatiously decline to have part or lot with them. Nothing like this has been seen since the Pharisee kept very cool and passed by on the other side."

France: Most Prosperous Nation

(National Industries News Service)

Measured by almost every index, France has stood forth in the past few years as the most prosperous nation in the world Doctor Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who has recently made a personal survey of the prospects for American trade overseas, writes in Collier's Weekly: The material progress of France is one of the outstanding features of the post-war decade. Until recently her unemployment has been practically nil, whereas the jobless armies in America, England, Germany and Italy are counted by millionns. Her per capita gold holdings are $67, aaagainst $42 for Switzerland, $39 for Argentina, $34 for the United States."

In iron and steel exports France has stood at the head of the exporting nations. In telegraph wire mileage France is best equipped. Her roads, in proportion to population, are the most adequate on the globe: her improved road mileage per thousand of population is 9.9, whereas that of the United States is 5. 1, England 3 9 and Germany 3.

France's well being is conspicuously impressive. "What is the meaning of all this in terms of American interest?" Doctor Klein asked and answered: "Well, for one thing, Franco-American commercial relationship stands out almost uniquely for the remarkable steadiness of its relative importance to each of the participants.

Increasing Payroll

All plants of the Chevrolet Motor Company are now operating an average of five and one-half days a week, with workers back on a full-time basis, W. S Knudsen, president and general manager, announced Saturday.

The total company payroll is now in excess of 36.000 employes and some plants are on a heavier productive basis than at any time since the fall of 1929, Mr. Knudsen said

As an unemployment aid, the company's policy last winter was to increase the number of men employed as soon as those on the payrolls averaged forty hours of work a week. At the current high rate of operations, however, plant workers are now averaging fifty hours a week. New workers have been added to the payrolls for several consecutive weeks, although only previous employes of the company are being hired.

Current operations are generally at a higher rate than at any time since last May, Mr. Knudsen said.

In spite of war and post-war upheavals, trade between the two great republics in terms of its relative importance has been singularly undisturbed.

"Our participation in the buying power of this new France, which has risen with such impressive strength since the war, is well illustrated by the increase in our machinery sales, which are three times what they were before the war."

Senator Watson's "66 per cent Free" Is plain Hokum

Senator James E Watson (Indiana), Republican leader of the Senate, recently issued a reply to the statements of Julius Barnes, General W. W. Atterbury and Representative Snell, all Republicans, favoring a revision of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

In his defense of the tariff, he repeated what the Baltimore Sun calls "the venerable G O. P wheeze," that the tariff cannot affect imports advercely because "66 per cent of all we bring into this country comes in free"

"This statement," the Sun says, "is bottomed on the sheerest statistical hokum."

The paper states that many commodities not produced in this country, such as rubber and coffee, come in free, but "in the case of virtually all products, capable of production in the United States, Mr. Watson and his compeers have erected a tariff wall which broke the all-time altitude record in the Smoot-Hawley law.

"It is obvious," the Sun continues, "that as our tariff walls against all competing products become more prohibitive, duty-free commodities among our imports are bound to go up in percentage of all imports. Indeed, if we had an absolute prohibitive tariff wall against all competitive wares, the percentage of imports made duty-free because of no domestic production would be 100 per cent of our imports. Nothing but goods of that type could get in. On the basis of the calculation followed by Senator Watson, an absolute tariff wall against all competitive articles would be a free trader's paradise."

The Sun declares: "To continue business at the old tariff stand the nimble Jim Watson will soon have to think up or be told some new tricks."

Brookhart Against Hoover

Washington, May—Senator Brookhart (Rep, Ia), who has been credited with doing more than anyone else except Senator Borah to hold the disgrunted farmers in line for Hoover in 1928, has openly announced his opposition to President Hoover's renomination. In an interview he declared:

"Every faction in the party has had something to say to me on the subject, and all agreed that the re-election of Hoover is impossible."

He quoted a standpatter as saying:

"There isn't a Chinaman's chance for President Hoover to be re-elected, but the unfortunate thing is that we probably shall have to renominate him."

Still another Republican is quoted as saying:

"I've got to find some issue for my campaign which the administration opposes or I haven't a chance to be re elected"

The Iowa Senator further states in his interview:

"Editors and politicians who supported Hoover in 1928 and still would be for him for renomination tell me they hope he will not be a candidate, as they regard his election as impossible."

Spanish at the University

Albuquerque, May—A unique method of studying the practical use of the Spanish language will be inaugurated at the University of New Mexico this summer.

A special residential hall, to be called "Casa Espanola" will be reserved for students of Spanish. Each person living there must pledge himself to speak nothing but Spanish while at the house All conversation will be conducted in that language, and Spanish servants will be used, so that their instructions can be given in Spanish.

Special entertainment features will be provided at Casa Espanola for the residents there. Spanish music and plays will be provided, as well as Spanish periodicals for reading. The whole purpose is to nearly as possible for Spanish students the environment they would have in living for several months in Mexico or Spain.

The house will be under the direction of Miss Osuna, acting head of the Modern Language department of the university, who spent several months last year in Spain.

MAKE FISH ATTRACTIVE

By BETSY CALLISTER

NOWHERE in the world is fish more plentiful or more delicious than in this country. A wide variety of fresh-water fish may be had in abundance in inland sections where salt-water varieties have to be sent from a distance. And the best sort of fish wherever you are is the sort that you can get freshest.

Compared to the better cuts of meat fish is inexpensive, and yet many American housewives include fish but rarely in the family bill of fare. The excuse they give is that their families would rather have meat.

The fault is not with the fish, and not usually with the actual cooking. It is because American cooks as a rule do not understand the art of garnishing fish and know even less about making appropriate fish sauces.

Lemon juice, parsley, butter, eggs, capers, anchovies, shrimps, cucumbers, onions, mustard and fennel if you can get it should be included in your list of ingredients for the making of sauces for various fish. Capers are used in a white sauce with boiled fish, notably cod and salmon. Fennel sauce is really the correct thing for mackerel but a sauce made from gooseberries or currants may be used instead. Tartare sauce made by adding chopped celery, onions and other seasonings to mayonnaise dressing is the right sauce for most fried fish. Shrimp sauce is chosen for various fish of a decidedly mild flavor. At the formal dinner fish is served without vegetables of any sort and many persons find it much more appetizing if served as a separate course.

SOME TIMELY FOOD HINTS

By NELLIE MAXWELL

IN the homes where children are full of abounding health, the food problem is not so much what is served, if it is good, as how much. A growing boy needs more food than an adult man, because he is building his body, besides providing for the energy needed in each day's activities.

Raisin and Date Salad.

Cover one package of orange gelatin with one and one-third cupfuls of boiling water, cool, add one cupful each of seeded raisins and dates cut into small pieces, and one can of pineapple. Pour into molds and chill in the refrigerator. When molded turn out on lettuce and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Sweet Potato Muffins.

Add one tablespoonful of shortening, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one teaspoonful of salt to one cupful of mashed sweet potato. Add one and one-fourth cupfuls of scalded milk and when lukewarm add a dissolved yeast cake which has been softened in a bit of cold water. Mix with enough flour to handle lightly and knead. Set to rise until double its bulk, then make into small balls and place in a well greased pan to rise. Brush well with softened butter or any sweet fat to prevent drying of the top; this will allow the muffins to rise more quickly. Bake when doubled in size in a moderate oven.

Chicken Salad.

Add enough of the jellied chicken broth to moisten the finely cut chicken breast, add a dash of highly seasoned french dressing. Cut up tender almonds, using an equal amount of celery and chicken. Turn into small molds to become firm. Serve on lettuce. Garnish with capers and hard-cooked egg.

The Crimean Wampus

SMALL colonies of these animals are found on the banks of the Volga and Bug rivers, living among the bugs on one and the volga on the other. The natives often domesticate them and train them to polish door knockers, but they often leave off in the midst of this exciting work to chase a jackrabbit up a tree. They can sing, but do not, for which the natives are much obliged. If you can imagine this sad-faced beast singing, you can sympathize with the natives.

The doleful face is a pecan with split peanut ears. Its walnut body rests on toothpick legs, and the stump of a tail is a clove. You use chewing gum to put him together with.

Jogalong Tales

CHAPTER 2

By the time he finished speaking he had reached the other end of the tunnel. He turned and waved frantically to the boy to hurry.

"Isn't it sunny?" he asked.

"But, good gracious, what is that?"

"That's what I hurried you to see," said the Jogalong. "That is the Ant's new summer estate."

"I think it looks more like a sand-pile than anything else," said the boy.

"I hope you won't let any of the Ants hear you say that, Boy. A sand pile, indeed! We shall see. Please step lightly because the children may be asleep and walking over their heads is likely to disturb them."

Very lightly the boy and the Jogalong walked up to the Ants' new summer estate. They didn't find any door, but instead of looking around the edge for one, the Jogalong started to climb.

"Be careful, Boy," said the Jogalong. "When you enter the house be sure to pay some homage to the queen. She is the most important member of the household. And please don't ask them to show you over the whole establishment. The whole house is so tremendously large. There are many rooms, some of them way down underground and it would take us too long to visit them all. Sometimes they make so many rooms and make them so deep that their houses extend under the beds of rivers."

They began to climb down, down, until they reached the queen's favorite parlor. She was particularly busy but was polite enough to acknowledge her visitors by slight wiggles of her feelers. The Jogalong and the boy passed on into the next room, for they did not wish to disturb her. Here the nurses were busy with the babies who were beginning to grow from funny little grub bodies to real ants. The nurses were helping them to unfold and dry their new legs and wings. It was a very difficult thing to do. They had to devote the most careful attention every minute. Sometimes they talked with each other.

"Oh, not in the same way we do," said the Jogalong, "but by rubbing their feelers together."

They all seemed to be hard workers. Hundreds of them were scurrying about, some cleaning house, others feeding the queen, some bringing in food and others caring for the young.

"What do they like to eat?" asked the boy.

"They like many different kinds of food which they find in the grass and under rocks, but they like the food their cows give them the best."

The boy laughed. "Oh, how silly!" he said. "Ant cows! Whoever heard of such creatures!"

Now it is too bad that he laughed so quickly, for things that are funny to some are not in the least funny to others and, as it happened, the Jogalong was quite right. The ants are very fond of the sweet honey dew which their small white cows give them and though these strange creatures are nothing at all like our cows, they are led to pasture on young leaves much as real cows are to the green fields. The ants who care for them watch the leaves upon which they feed and when the leaf begins to lose its sweetness, the cow or what looks to others like a small white grub, is carried to another.

Just as he turned to climb out of the ants' house, a dreadful thing happened. Great heaps of sand came tumbling down upon their heads.

WOMEN IN MEN'S POSITIONS

By JEAN NEWTON

"I DO not agree with you," writes a reader, "when you say that women do not suffer a disadvantage because of prejudice against their sex, that ability being equal they have the same opportunity for success and self-expression as a man.

"I have a sister, an unmarried woman, who passionately loves the sea. She no doubt has this from our father who was a New England sea captain. Having no son, and she being the older, he frequently took her with him from the time that she was a little girl. She always knew more about boats than any boy I knew and was happiest on the ocean. She is hardy and strong and would make a better mate on a vessel than many a man who is holding down that job. If she were a man she would long since have had a ship of her own.

"But being a woman, her only hope of finding work on the sea would be as a stewardess, which is about as much working on the sea as a basement office is like flying. How do you answer that?"

This reader refers to a recent article in this column when we discussed the complaint of one of our readers that "Nobody wants a woman lawyer," in which I disagreed with the idea that women in business and the professions are held back by prejudice.

And the woman whose dream of happiness and success is in the form of being a sea captain is an extreme example of this handicap—you can hardly call it prejudice. You may say this particular woman is not unfitted by her sex for seamanship. True. And if the day ever comes when enough women desire to be sea captains, I doubt that prejudice would stand in the way of making this feasible. With the present arrangements on ships for all-male crews, it is obvious why this exceptional woman's desire to be a seaman is not feasible. For my part, I cannot see it as an argument for prejudice against woman's work.

WORLD WAR YARNS

by Lieut. Frank E. Hagan

No. 16 in "Decisive Battles"

Creasy's "Fifteen Decisive Battles of the World" is a classic. But it was written long before the World war and now there is No. 16 to be added to the list. It is the second Battle of the Marne, which began on the morning of July 18, 1918, and it paved the way for Allied victory. From that time onward until November 11, 1918, when the Armistice was signed, the German initiative which had existed from August, 1914, ceased to be and the Germans were placed on the defensive and kept there.

Under the cover of a storm which raged during the night of July 17, the Allied forces were mobilized in the wooded area known as the Forest of Villers-Cotterets. They were the American First division, composed of the Eighteenth, Twenty-eighth, Sixteenth, and Twenty-sixth regiments, the American Second division, composed of the Fifth and Sixth marines and Ninth and Twenty-third infantry of the regular army, and the crack Moroccan division of General Mangin's French army. Behind in reserve were two French divisions, placed there because Foch and Petain were not certain of the ability of the Americans to handle the job. Incidentally, they were not needed.

Preceded by a heavy artillery fire, the Americans and the Moroccans jumped off on the morning of July 18. By the evening of July 1' the Second division had advanced six miles, had captured more than 3,000 prisoners and had suffered its heaviest casualties. It was then withdrawn. The First division also had suffered its heaviest casualties of the war, losing about 7,500 men, but it was not relieved until the night of July 22. The First was commanded in this battle by Gen. Robert Lee Bullard, later commander of the American Second army, and the Second was commanded by Gen. James G. Harbord.

Easy—by Comparison!

Dr. Rene Kirby-Smith, who receives his mail at Sewanee, Tenn., home of the University of the South, comes of fighting stock. His father was Gen. E. Kirby-Smith who commanded troops for the Confederacy and who, in the impoverished days following the Civil war refused an annual fee of $75,000 to head the Louisiana lottery because he believed the scheme to be "without principle."

Rene Kirby-Smith swapped his title of doctor for that of major during the earliest days of the war and was sent with an American Red Cross detachment to hospital duty at Belgrade.

A typhus swept Serbia. Major Kirby-Smith was the only survivor of his detachment and he stamped out the plague. Then, in the fall of 1915, he came home.

A newspaper man sought an interview with the fighting doctor in a hotel at Nashville, Tenn. He wanted to see at close range this hardy mountaineer for whom not even a deadly plague held terrors.

Major Kirby-Smith sat on a bed in his hotel room. In one hand he clutched his son Rene, Jr., in the other Henry Kirby-Smith, both aged eleven.

"Got the boys down here for a tonsilectomy," he explained breathlessly. "D—n you, Henry; be still. Here, Rene! Get back on the bed!

"Serbia?" he asked his interviewer. "Typhus?" He regarded the squirming boys. "Oh h—ll They were easy compared to this job!"

The First Shot for America

Old Soixante Quinze Number 13-579, a French 75 with a notable record in American history, still is on duty, more than twelve years after the World war, at the United States Military academy, West Point, N. Y. The French gun fired the first shot for America in France at 6:05 o'clock the morning of October 23, 1917, at Bathlemont, France, a few miles north of Nancy. The shot was fired by Maj. John R. Starkey of the Sixth Field Artillery, First division, who today is a lieutenant colonel, on reserve duty in California.

Old No. 13-579 belched out something like 12,000 shells after that first salvo before it was moved back for reconditioning and finally returned to this country.

Something of a charm hovered about the history-making gun during its life in action. Many crews appeased its appetite with shells but no member of a crew was killed or seriously wounded. Perhaps the inscription; first in chalk and then in paint "First Shot at Huns," with which the gun was promptly labeled, reacted as a good omen to the gun crews. Anyway, Old 13-579 herself suffered no more ill effects than a barrel grooved by flying shell fragments and one wheel cracked the same way, when she finally gave way from the front.

Major (now Lieut. Col.) Starkey, incidentally is a native of Roodhouse, Ill., and down that way they hope to obtain the French 75 some day as a lasting souvenir of the war. But they've got to wear the old girl out at West Point or make her obsolete before Roodhouse gets its chance, and gun.

"I'M going, anyway"

THE modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin will always enable you to carry on in comfort. Take enough to assure your complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does not upset the stomach. It does nothing but stop the pain.

Headaches come at inconvenient times. So do colds. But a little Bayer Aspirin will always save the day. A throat so sore you can hardly swallow is made comfortable with one good gargle made from these tablets. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day, or a sleepless night.

Bayer Tablets Aspirin Genuine

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets cost so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

Couple's "Carrying On" Not an Unmixed Evil

It was shortly after Lady Astor was put on the spot for roasting the so-called "British Peerage" that she stated it as her opinion that England was too much tied up by moth-eaten conventions.

"England is too prudish, both in its government and in its daily life. Too much convention brings dullness. I overheard a rather dignified man say to his wife:

"'Nelly, just look at the way Miss B is carrying on with that married man. It's simply awful!'

"'Yes,' admitted his young wife, 'but what a blessing they are carrying on. It would be intolerably dull here without them.'"

Sympathetic

The ingenious excuses offered by small children to escape work are always amusing and often instructive. Take the case of little Marcus of Brooklyn for example:

"Marcus, why didn't you finish sewing that wood?" asked his mother.

"I just couldn't, mamma," the little fellow replied. "The poor saw had the toothache."

When Travel Was Cheap

Travel by foot in the early 1800s certainly was inexpensive if the 300-mile journey of Elisha Barrell of Hartford, Washington county, New York is taken as a criterion. Barrell in 1826 walked from Gouverneur to his home in 15 days at an expense of $2.42. This was exclusive of liquor he bought en route. One overnight stop cost him only 18 cents.

Healthy Town

New Hampton, N. H., is a healthful town to live in. According to the town report just published, the youngest person who died in 1930 was seventy-one years of age, the oldest was eighty-five years and the average age of the nine deaths reported was seventy-seven years.

Stomach Troubles Headache and Dizziness

If your stomach is sick, you are sick all over. If you can't digest your food you lose strength, get nervous and feel as tired when you get up as when you went to bed.

For 10 years Tanlac has restored to health and activity many thousands who suffered just as you do.

Mr. Daniel Vinciguerra, of 6200 Stiles St., Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have not had a dizzy spell or a headache since taking Tanlac. My nerves are in better shape and I can enjoy a good night's sleep."

Let Tanlac help you too. It corrects the most obstinate digestive troubles—relieves gas, pains in the stomach and bowels, restores appetite, vigor and sound sleep.

Tanlac is made of roots, barks and herbs. Costs less than 2 cents a dose. Get a bottle from your druggist today. Your money back if it doesn't help you.

Good Business

"Why is it that you encourage all of your clerks to get married?"

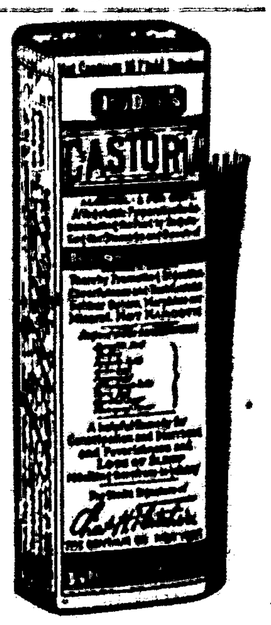
Soothes restless, wakeful CHILD



THERE are times when a baby is too fretful or feverish to be sung to sleep. There are some pains a mother cannot pat away. But there's no time when any baby can't have the quick comfort of Castoria! A few drops, and your little one is soon at ease—back to sleep almost before you can slip away.

Remember this harmless, pure vegetable preparation when children are ailing. Don't stop its use when Baby has been brought safely through the age of colic, diarrhea, and other infantile ills. Give good old Castoria until your children are in their teens! Whenever coated tongues tell of constipation; when there's any sign of sluggishness, just give them a more liberal dose. Castoria is so pleasant-tasting; all children love to take it.

Poppy Day

Tomorrow, Saturday, May 23, is Poppy Day" throughout this nation. It will be worn by Americans in memory of the men who gave their lives in the World War—the little red poppy of France and Flanders.

Heavy Foreign Trade Losses Continue

Washington, May— United States exports and imports by countries for March, 1931, and for the three months' period of this year ending March 31, in complete figures issued by the Department of Commerce, show a continued rapid rate of decline everywhere except in trade with Czechoslovakia and Soviet Russia. To the latter country there was more than two million drop in exports in March, but for the three months' period they were equal to the similar three months of 1930, or about $44 000 000

Exports to Canada, our best customer, for March were $41,8 0 249, compared with $66,565,796 for March, 1930—a loss of $24 705 547 For the first three months this year our exports to Canada declined from $178 269,154 in the same period of 1930 to $110,652 162 —a loss of $67,608,002. Canadian imports from the United States in March, 1931, declined from $38 486 610 in March 1930 to $24 147,608—a drop of $14 269 002

March exports to Great Britain our next best customer, dropped from $58 061 390 to $39,706,172, compared with March, 1930—loss of $18 355 218. For the first three months of 1931 they dropped from $196 916,631 in 1930 to $128 178 017.

Imports declined from $21,198,429 to $13 033 274 in March and from $59 340 076 to $35,816,067 in the three months period.

Germany came third with an export loss of about $8,000,000 in March and more than $47,000,000 for the three-months' period.

The decline in imports from Germany for March, 1931, was $5 500,000 and for the three months' period almost $19,000,000.

Exports to France dropped nearly $9 000,000 in March, 1931, and $25,000,000 for the three months of the year.

Export trade to South America declined from $31,289,104 to $15,139,187. The three months' decline was from $96,998,259 in 1930 to $50,700 392

Imports from South America dropped from $48,664,658 to $34,598,753 in March and for the three-months' period from $139,189,408 to $90,640,982

The Woman's Club

The Carrizozo Woman's Club held its last meeting on May 15, at the home of Mrs. C P. Hupperts, which was decorated with lovely red roses.

The meeting was called to order by the president, Mrs. Paul Mayer, "America" and "America the Beautiful" were sung by the club, Mrs. R. E. Lemon song leader, with Mrs. W. C. Hendren at the piano.

Mrs. Lawson, as chairman of the Americanization Committee, presented a beautiful flag to the club, to the accompaniment of the "Star Spangled Banner Then the salute was given. The flag is to be on display at each club meeting. Mesdames E. M. Barber and O. J. Snow stood beside the flag during the presentation

Under Mrs Lawson's leadership, Mrs. M U. Finley read a note on illiteracy; Mrs. Koogler on San Antonio, the oldest city; Mrs Hall on popular songs; Mrs. Barber on laws. Mrs. Clouse read an interesting report on the district meeting at Canutillo, and Mrs. Spencer "A memorial to Theodore Roosevelt."

Mrs. R. E Lemon had charge of installation of officers for the coming year, and it was done in a highly entertaining manner, with rhyme, verse and song. The outgoing president, Mrs. Paul Mayer, was earnestly complimented for the splendid work she had done.

Mrs. Mendenhall at the piano, sang "Memories." Mrs Clouse, incoming president, was presented the gavel with best wishes from the club for a successful year, to the song "We'll Be Loving You."

The following is the list of incoming officers:

Mrs. O. Clouse, President
Mrs C. M. Lucky, Treasurer
Mrs. Paul Mayer, Parliamentarian

Miss Mclaas sponsored the program—

"Don't," a reading by Ginger Charles; "Iris," a violin solo by Miss Louise Sweet; Piano duet by Zane Harkey and Helen May Young; also a pianologue by the two little girls, with Mrs. T. E. Kelley at the piano. Mrs. Snyder gave us literature of the south west, a splendid review of two books, one each of Adolph Bandelier—"The Delight Makers," and Charles Lummis—"A New Mexico David," which was thoroughly appreciated.

During the social hour, Mrs. Hupperts was assisted by Mmes. McCammon, Hedrick, Gray, Gillespie and Miss Sweat, in serving cookies and coffee.

Milkman, Housewife, Sportsman, Winners in $50,000 Contest

Stops Headache in Five Minutes

A Wonderful Formula Ends Aches and Pains Almost Like Magic. Something Better and Safer

Thousands of men and women are now stopping throbbing, sick, dizzy, splitting headaches, as well as the excruciating pains of rheumatism, neuritis, toothache, etc., with a marvelous new formula that is said to be far superior to anything heretofore used.

It contains no aspirin, acetanilid, etc., and is absolutely safe and harmless. This remarkable formula, called A-VOL, is being prescribed by thousands of doctors, dentists and welfare nurses because of the quick, efficient way it relieves all types of aches and pains without depressing the heart, or causing any other harmful effects. A-Vol quickly stops the most severe pain, leaving the patient refreshed and feeling fine. Especially effective in women's period pains.

To quickly prove to yourself that this is truly a remarkable formula, just step into your nearest drug store and get a package of A-VOL for a few cents. Take a couple of tablets right there. If your pain is not gone in five minutes, the clerk will return your money.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL

The Zieglers and the Coplins spent the first of the week in El Paso.

The fishing season opens Saturday, May 30 Look out, little fishes!

J. M. Frame and Mrs. Drura Frame and children were down from Ancho yesterday shopping.

Postoffice Inspector Deming was here yesterday on his rounds of visits to Uncle Sam's mail handlers.

The new filling station, in process of construction by V. Reil on El Paso Avenue, is nearing completion.

Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Sale and Miss Grace Jones now occupy their new home, formerly the Pace residence.

Mrs. T. J. Rowden and grandson Buddy and Mrs. Hannah Dalton went to Hot Springs Monday. W. S. Norman drove them over and later returned.

The present week has been a trying one. High winds have been the rule, accompained by low temperatures. In the higher altitudes frost and ice have been general. These spring mornings are everything else but.

Rev. L. D. Jordon, of Belen has been called to the pastorate of the Baptist church here. The local church, however, will not require all the pastor's time, and he will, therefore, devote stated Sundays in each month to other communities.

J. W. Armstrong, merchant at Hollywood, on Ruidoso, was a business visitor yesterday. Mr. Armstrong says his section is enjoying a good season—abundant moisture, streams carrying a large volume of water, fruit and farm products safe from frost and prospects excellent in all lines.

Mesdames Ziegler, Coplin, Elliott and Gumm drove to Alamogordo Friday, and were guests of Mrs. Hunt while there. The Alamogordo Woman's Club held its last meeting for the current year on that day, and concluded the program by a visit to the pottery plant up La Luz Canyon, and the ladies from Carrizozo were invited to take the trip up the canyon and did so.

Senator Cutting Calls

United States Senator Bronson M. Cutting passed through our town yesterday, enroute to his home in Santa Fe. The senator had been to El Paso at which point he delivered an address to the American Legion Post. This office acknowledges a courteous call by our distinguished senator and had a tentative promise that he would return at a later date and discuss matters of importance to our people.

Purchase Hall

The local Oddfellows Lodge has purchased a building on main street, south of Paden's Drug Store, from John W Harkey and which they will work over for lodge purposes. Mechanics are now engaged in remodeling and repairing the building and soon this thriving lodge will be in its new home.

IN congratulating the winners in the great Camel contest we want at the same time to thank most cordially the approximately million men and women who displayed their friendly interest by sending in an entry.

We wish also to thank the millions of smokers throughout the country for the appreciation they are showing for our new Humidor Pack as is evidenced by the notable increase in the sale of Camel cigarettes.

By means of this dust-proof, germ-proof, moisture-proof Cellophane wrapping the rich aroma and full flavor of choice Turkish and mellow Domestic tobaccos have been air-sealed in Camels for your enjoyment.

If you have not tried Camels in the Humidor Pack all we ask is that you switch over to this brand for one day.

After you have learned how much milder, how much cooler, how much more enjoyable it is to smoke a perfectly conditioned fresh cigarette, go back to the harsh hotness of stale cigarettes if you can.

The Indians' Memorial Day

MANDAN SHRINE
(After Painting by Karl Bodmer, 1833)

HOPI KATCHINA OR "ANCESTOR"
(From a Native Drawing)

INDIAN BURIAL GROUND
(After Painting by Capt. J. Eastman)

By EDITHA L. WATSON.

THE little town of Ignacio, on the Ute reservation in southern Colorado, is astir. It is May 24, the anniversary of the burial of Ouray. Beneath a simple cement headstone, made by the hands of the Indians themselves, lies their last great chief. Ever since his body was removed to this grave in 1925, Utes from all the bands in Colorado and Utah have gathered yearly to honor him with memorial rites.

It is hard to tell whether this is a custom patterned after the white man's Memorial day or not. It is true that only six days later, we who read these lines will pay tribute to our dead. There will be parades and speeches, and flowers and flags will deck the resting places of our soldier and sailor departed, while elsewhere in the cemeteries wreaths and bouquets will symbolize our tender recollections of kinfolk and close friends.

There are few communities in our country which have no sort of services. On this day, from coast to coast, the American people give special thought to those who have entered upon the Great Adventure. But if the ghosts of those other folk who lived here before us look back and see us, they understand what we are doing, for once, long ago, the red-skinned people held their day of remembrance, too. It was not always on the same date, across all the country. Sometimes it was twice a year; sometimes many years elapsed between the days set apart for the dead, according to the tribes which observed the custom. But none the less the Indians before us, in their own way, which was sometimes very much like ours, honored their beloved dead.

The Pueblos call them "Those-who-have-gone-before." To their minds the next world is very much like this, but the departed are closer to Those Above, and may intercede for the living. They come back, also, not in the luminous robes and with the trumpets and slates of seance-spirits, but in the persons of certain living tribesmen who, when they have donned the grotesque masks of their ancestor-worship rites, seem to acquire something of the power of those whom they are representing. They come back, also, in the quiet hours when their children are immersed in thought, and give advice and counsel.

It is only fitting, then, that the Hopi should hold ceremonies in their honor, when their representations walk through the villages and hear the supplications of their living children. It is a queer sort of Memorial day, true, but it is conducted with real reverence and love, and who can ask more? What a beautiful faith this is, which does not admit of death separating the living and the dead, and which holds these symbolic "family reunions" in token of that faith.

Even with this belief, however, it is impossible for loving hearts not to grieve at the loss of dear ones. Thus we hear Hopi wailing on the anniversary of a death, and if there has been an epidemic which took a number of the tribe, an official anniversary is fixed, and observed with sorrow year after year.

So, too, the New Fire ceremony sees the Zuni matron, dressed as if to meet beloved friends, weeping softly to herself as she casts food into the fire on her hearth. This food is for the ancestors and for those who died in the past year, but if we could see into her heart we would surely find some beloved one enshrined there, of whom she thinks especially as she makes her offering.

The first anniversary of a death was the one most widely observed. Then the widow could put off her mourning, and the bereaved family could take up every-day life again. The official time of sorrow was passed at the end of this year. But who, be he Indian or white, can say to the mourner, "Do not weep longer; do not grieve further"? The sorrow of death makes a lasting impression on the heart, which cannot be erased at the end of a year.

Anniversaries come as naturally as the seasons themselves. Fall comes, and those who are left behind remember that at the Green Corn feasts their loved ones were merry. Thus, the Tunica guardians of the cemeteries reminded those who had corn and beans that the time had come to offer them, and the people gladly gathered parts of their harvest and placed them on the graves.

If, as the Indians believed, the next world is so much like this, why should not the departed spirits return on these anniversaries to partake of the spiritual essence of the food and mingle a little while with those beloved ones who had not yet joined them? Pere Sebastien Rasles, who wrote an account of the Illinois tribe long ago, spoke of their holding dances that were "a token of their sadness at the death of the most important men of their tribe. It is by these dances that they profess to honor the deceased, and to wipe away the tears of his relatives." During these dances, it was thought, the spirits of the departed ones came and danced also, enjoying themselves as they had once done in the flesh.

Here we find again the great unlikeness of thought between white man and Indian. Standing between the graves, placing flowers on them, listening to the prayers and speeches which seek to recall the dead to us, we would shudder at the idea that they stood by us, admiring the flowers and hearing with appreciation their eulogies! Yet the Illiniwak found only pleasure in this thought, as if some dearly-loved ones had returned from a journey to be among them, and the fact that they were invisible did not make them fearsome or less welcome to the feast in their honor.

Indian burial mounds were not forgotten by their tribesmen, even though they moved far from the place where their people were interred. No less a person than Thomas Jefferson, speaking of a mound near Monticello, related that "a party passing, about thirty years ago, through the part of the country where this barrow is, went through the woods directly to it, without any instructions or inquiry, and having staid about it some time, with expressions which were construed to be those of sorrow, they returned to the high road."

The Oneida often visited a mound near Richfield Springs, N. Y., saying that it was the burial place of one of their chief men. The old chroniclers omitted to state whether these visits were performed with any memorial ceremonies, but judging from what we have learned of other tribes, we believe that there must have been something of the sort.

A strange Sioux memorial custom was that of "keeping the ghost." A lock of hair from the head of the deceased person was made into a roll with cloth and various articles of value. This was kept for a year or so, and other presents collected, when the friends of the dead person assembled to hold ceremonies. At this time the gifts, together with small pieces of the lock of hair, were distributed. This ceremony was sometimes repeated.

Another memorial observance which corresponds slightly to our custom of erecting headstones over the dead, was that described by Adair as follows: "To perpetuate the memory of any remarkable warriors killed in the woods, I must here observe that every Indian traveler as he passes that way throws a stone on the place. . . . In the woods we often see innumerable heaps of small stones in those places, where, according to tradition, some of their disgraceful people were either killed or buried." Each heap is increased, he goes on to say, as a lasting monument in their honor.

No discussion of Indian memorial observances would be complete without a description of the strange customs of the Assiniboin, Mandan, and some other tribes:

These people did not inter their dead, but placed them on scaffolds or in trees. In time the bones of the deceased were all that was left, and these, perhaps, fell on the ground as the scaffolds or platforms, weather-beaten and old, gave way. The relatives gathered and buried the bones, all but the skulls, and these they placed "in a circle in the plain," says Father De Smet, speaking of the Assiniboin, "with the faces turned toward the center. They preserve these with care. . . . The Indians call the cemetery the village of the dead. They visit it at certain seasons of the year, to converse affectionately with their deceased relatives and friends."

Many travelers of the early days have observed and commented on these circles of skulls, and we are given pictures of them in many of the old volumes. It is only natural that such a strange custom should be misunderstood. Some of those early observers did not realize what real affection prompted the preservation of these relics of the dead, and hence we read the scornful note that "several skulls were kicking about on the ground."

Catlin observed this same custom among the Mandan, and goes on to tell us that each skull was placed on a bunch of wild sage, which was renewed as often as necessary. "There is scarcely an hour in a pleasant day, but more or less of these women may be seen sitting or laying by the skull of their child or husband, talking to it in the most pleasant and endearing language that they can use (as they were wont to do in former days) and seemingly getting an answer back."

This custom may seem a revolting one to us, but to the Indians it was a natural and common observance. Indeed, to the white men who knew these people well, their strange ideas grew less fantastic, and Catlin remarked, as he noted the Mandan women "visiting" with the skulls of their loved ones, "There is something exceedingly interesting and impressive in these scenes." Indeed, they recall to us the famous vault under the Capuchin convent, where the bones of monks who have died are used to make patterns on the walls, and the skulls stand in rows. Travelers have remarked that the monks who showed them these strange designs appeared to know many of the skulls, and could relate their names and something of their histories. It was noteworthy, also, that they had no horror of the grim vault, but looked forward serenely to their own time of departing, when their skulls also would help to decorate the walls, and some later brother of the order would name them and tell their stories.

So it is with the Indians. Not all of them, of course, regarded death without dread, but surely those of whom we have been reading did not recoil at the unavoidable step. True to their beliefs, they went out bravely. The "Happy Hunting Grounds" of the Plains people beckoned; the Underworld of the Pueblos waited for their return. And they believed with firm conviction that they would know about the memorial ceremonies, and be able to share, with the beloved living, in the rites.

Whether we agree with them or not, it was a pleasant sort of faith. And although our own beliefs have gone in a far different direction from theirs, sometimes, still we unite once a year to recall the virtues and to honor the memories of Those-who-have-gone-before.

Lemon-Meringue Pie Did It

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(© 1931, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service.)

JULIA had not expected, when she took her trip abroad, to spend three weeks of her vacation in a nursing home in London and then return home minus an appendix. However, there she was and there she must remain for still another week.

"You know, Nursey, I didn't let my people know I was having an operation. They will be surprised when I tell them," said Julia.

The nurse was dusting Julia's toilet things on the dressing table while they chatted. She always sent a long glance at the photograph of a young man which her patient evidently prized. Nurse Keene didn't like the young man's face and had become so attached to Julia that she hated the thought of a possible engagement. However, nurses were nurses and not cupids.

"We admitted a fine young chap last night who refuses to cable his people also—it's rather an unusual situation for us to have two Americans in at the same time. He was in a motor accident last week. He insisted he didn't need attention, but two ribs had been fractured. A slight operation will be necessary," said the nurse.

"Oh, dear, I do hope he will come through as well as I have," Julia said, and her big eyes were full of sympathy.

A few minutes later nurse went off to the operating theater but had promised to let Julia know as soon as possible how her countryman fared.

The report on Tom Conway was very satisfactory and Julia felt relieved. It was almost as if she knew him—the fact that he hailed from her side of the ocean.

A day or two later, while the nurse was making Julia comfortable for her breakfast she said: "That boy keeps worrying me all the time about something called lemon meringue pie and can't see why I have never even heard of it." She recalled with a smile Conway's appealing grin and wished she could tell the matron how to go about making that particular meringue pie.

"Lemon meringue pie!" exclaimed Julia. "Oh—maybe you think I wouldn't just love some myself!" She turned excitedly to the nurse. "Do you suppose if I wrote the exact recipe down that the cook would mind making it?"

"I'm sure she'd enjoy a new dish." Nurse produced paper and pencil and soon Julia had put down all details.

And while Julia was writing Nurse Keene cast a glance at the photograph and her brown eyes snapped defiance at him. She might not be a fat little cherubim calle. Cupid, but she certainly was going to make a big effort to assume the role for the time being.

She took the pie up as a surprise to Conway, who simply grinned from ear to ear, and would have sat up swiftly in his bed save that nurse's eyes warned him not to be too frolicsome.

"Angel!" he exclaimed. "Where, how and when did you manage it?" He gazed at the golden brown meringue that lay over the top of the pie. "I don't think I'll have the roast beef and vegetables," he told her.

"Oh yes you will," decided nurse, "or no pie!"

"Where did you find the recipe?"

"From that sweet American girl—she put it all down so carefully that we simply couldn't go wrong. She's tremendously fond of it herself. I think you two should have a pie party all to yourselves when you're out of hospital," she commented and saw the joyous light in Conway's eyes. "You might write her a little note of thanks and I'll deliver it when I take in her tea."

It was only the first of many notes which the nurse carried back and forth between the two rooms.

Conway had his first bad day when in her letter Julia told him she was leaving next day and would be sailing back home in a few days. Clouds hung heavy on his brow and there was no smile to greet the nurse when she returned after delivering the note to him. She, of course, knew the reason but said nothing.

Conway decided to ask a favor in his answer to Julia.

"I'm sailing on Saturday fortnight on the Homeric—is there a chance that you would wait and book a passage on the same boat? I feel it would be wise considering the operation you have had that some one you know is nearby."

"But I don't know you," wrote back Julia, then in very small writing which suggested a wee voice adding an afterthought. "It certainly would give me a feeling of security and—pleasure but—you see, I don't know you personally."

"Nursey!" Conway had rung the bell urgently. "Before Jul—Miss Avery leaves tomorrow—would it be possible for you to bring her in to—meet me?" He looked up with such a depth of eagerness in his eyes that nurse turned away to hide her great amusement.

"I fancy I could manage—there would be no harm in it."

At the nursing home a few weeks later Nurse Keene was proudly showing the matron a cablegram which read, "You and Lemon Meringue did it. Married at noon yesterday. Julia and Tom."

Tiaoga and his warriors moved slowly. They were like bronze men without flesh or emotions. Their heads were high, their bodies straight, their jaws set hard as they stalked at a death-march pace between the columns of their people. Jeems fell into this rhythmic movement as the mouth of the torch monster began to swallow them. And then with eyes that became flame-lit pools of fear and exhaustion Toinette saw that not a hand gave a sign of rising against them. The torches coughed and flared, but not a spark touched their skins in passing. No eyes gleamed hatred at them. No fingers clenched, no hand was raised. The things she had heard in the land of her people were lies. The Indians killed in war but they did not torture. They did not pull out eyes and thrust sticks through quivering flesh. They were men and women and children like all other men and women and children. These truths she thought she had discovered for herself.

But one thing she did not fully know. She might have learned it had she caught the low-voiced whisperings which followed the passing of the warrior: "She is Tiaoga's daughter—she is the spirit of Soi Yan Makwun returned to us in the flesh—now our good fortune will return—the sun will shine—light and laughter will come—for Soi Yan Makwun is here, out of death to live with us again!"

They crossed a field of darkness toward the fires, and when they came among them Tiaoga was marching in Jeems' place and Jeems had disappeared. She had not sensed his going or Tiaoga's presence, and before she knew that Jeems was no longer among the warriors, she found herself standing alone with the Seneca chief, the people gathering in a circle around them. Tiaoga began to speak. His voice renewed her confidence as she searched for Jeems. He was describing the success of their gods in restoring Silver Heels to her people. It did not take long for Tiaoga to tell his story. His voice rose. His scarred and bitter face assumed a strange gentleness, and Toinette knew that Jeems was safe though she could not see him. She waited, trembling, and at last Tiaoga was finished and stood for a moment with upraised hand amid a great hush—then spoke a single name, Opitchi. A girl, the Thrush, sprang forward, and as she came Tiaoga took the slave collar from Toinette's throat and crushed it into the earth with his moccasined foot. A murmur ran through the circle. Tiaoga stood with his arms folded across his breast, and Toinette felt the hands of the Thrush drawing her away.

They paused at the edge of the circle, and for a little while no one moved or spoke. Then there was a break in the ring behind the Seneca chief, and through it came Jeems, escorted between Shindas and another warrior. Toinette gasped and almost cried out. There was an amazing change in Jeems. He was stripped to the waist and painted in stripes of red and yellow and black. His face appeared to be cut in crimson gashes. His thick blond hair was tied in a warlock from which streamed a feather showing he had killed a man. At Tiaoga's command there advanced from the circle an old man with a wizened face and white hair and a younger man whose form was bent almost double because of a deformity. Behind these two came a little girl. The old man was Wuskoo, the Cloud. The younger was his son, Tokana, or Gray Fox, a name of which he had been proud in the days before a tree fell on his tepee and crooked his back, when he was the fastest runner in the tribe. Tiaoga spoke again. He exulted in the fortune which had sent another son to Wuskoo, a son with a white skin and a strong body who would care for him and who would be a brother to Gray Fox. With his thin and quivering hands, Wuskoo took the slave collar from Jeems' neck and stamped it joyously into the ground while the broken Gray Fox raised a hand in brotherhood and friendship. There was something so wistfully sweet in the big dark eyes of the little Indian maiden that Jeems drew her to him and put an arm protectingly about her. It was then Toinette left the Thrush and ran to him, so that all saw her held in his painted arms, with Wanonat, the Wood Pigeon, a happy partner in the moment when Toinette proudly and a bit defiantly told Chenufslo and through it the whole Seneca nation that this was the man to whom she belonged.

Like a flood burst loose from a dam, the night of feasting and rejoicing began. It was preceded by a combat among the dogs in which Odd established his right to a place among the four-footed citizens of Chenufslo. After a time he found a scent on the hidden ground that led him to the tepee which had been prepared for Toinette. Here he found Toinette and the Thrush, whose name—a long time ago—had been Mary Daghlen.

* * * * * * *

It seemed to Jeems that from the beginning his freedom among the Senecas was as great as if he had been born of their blood. Gray Fox took him to the tepee of his father, which was to be his home, and food and drink were brought to him. Then he was left alone, for even the delighted old man whom Tiaoga had honored by the gift of a son could not be kept away from the celebration which was in progress. The thought came to Jeems that no impediment had been placed in his way if he chose to steal off into the night and disappear. The ease with which he might have set out on this adventure was proof of his helplessness. Like the others, he was a captive forever. There was no escape from Chenufslo unless one accepted death as the route.

He did not think of escape because its desire possessed him. He was measuring his world and adjusting himself to its limitations with emotions which were far from unhappy. With Toinette, he could find here all that he wanted in life. Tiaoga and Shindas knew that she belonged to him, and the people of Chenufslo were now aware of it. His heart exulted and his spirit rose with the chanting of the savages. What difference did it make that they were buried in the heart of the forests for all time? He had Toinette. She loved him. Chenufslo would not be a sepulchre. Their love would transform it into a paradise.

He was eager to see Toinette again, and began to seek for a place where he could clean himself of the colored clay plastered on his face and body. With his clothes, he went to the river, and after a thorough scrabbing returned fully dressed with the eagle feather still in his hair. His weapons had been given to him, and these he carried boldly when he joined the Indians. The triumphal fire was blazing, and as soon as the hungry town had fed itself, the scalp dances would begin. The scalps were already suspended on the victory pole in its light. Children were playing about them. The fine dark hair of one was so long that they could reach the tresses with their fingers, and when they did this they shrieked with ecstasy. Among them was a white-skinned boy of seven or eight who laughed and shouted with the others.

Jeems found an opportunity to have a word with Shindas and learned that Toinette and Opitchi were together. Shindas could not tear himself from the martial dignity which was expected of him until the warriors had told of their exploits in the scalp dance, so Jeems went alone and found Tiaoga's tepee and the smaller one near it in which were Toinette and the Thrush. It was lighted by a torch, and he drew back among the dark holes of the trees and waited. At the end of half an hour, Toinette and Opitchi came out into the illumined forest. For a little while they stood under the gnarled limbs of the trees which cast shadows from over their heads. He did not reveal himself until Opitchi's form disappeared among the pools of light and darkness as she went toward the fires. Then he advanced, calling Toinettes' name softly.

Her appearance surprised him. She was not the ragged and disheveled young woman who had arrived with Tiaoga's men. Mary, the Thrush, had dressed her in the prettiest raiment left by Silver Heels. There was something about the long yellow feather, the filet of scarlet cloth, and the boyish closeness of her dress which made Jeems give a wondering cry. It was as if they had come to her from an obscure and distant past and had always belonged to her. He had dreamed of this lovely wilderness princess; through years of boyhood hopes and plannings he had built up worlds about her, and in those worlds he had fought for her, and had adventured with her where he alone was her champion and her hero. He had carried gifts of feathers to her—feathers and fawnskin and a piece of cloth like that which she now wore in a crimson band about her forehead!

To him it was the precious red velvet, there in the glow of the moon.

He opened his arms, and Toinette came into them.

CHAPTER X

For half an hour Jeems was alone with Toinette. Then Mary Daghlen returned, and with her came a messenger who took him back to the dances which were beginning about the scalp-fire. He was not embarrassed by the critical eyes upon him. The wildness of the night entered his blood, a heat set blazing by the joy of his possession, and as he chanted the Seneca victory songs with the others, Toinette was in his heart, and words she had whispered to him under the oaks repeated themselves until they dulled his senses and blinded his eyes to everything but their import. As soon as God would let them bring it about she would be his wife. She had said that! So he danced. He shouted at Tiaoga's side. Toinette, horrified at first, saw him in his madness. Then she began to understand. But not until he took his turn among the warriors and danced alone in the light of the fire, chanting his story in the language of his adopted people, did Opitchi—translating what he said—let her know fully the daring of her lover. Jeems' story began with his earliest thoughts and memories of her. He told of their homes in the country of the Richelieu, of his dreams and hopes. He described the passing of moons and the growing of his love and how death had come with the Mohawks from the south. Then he came to the finding of Toinette, their flight, the triumph of his love, his fight with the scalp hunter at Luman's place, and their capture by Tiaoga and his warriors. He praised these warriors. They were not like the Mohawks, who were sneaks in the night. The Senecas were clean and swift and brave. He was proud to be a brother and a son among them. He wanted this people to respect him, and he wanted them to love Toinette whom Tiaoga had honored by taking as his daughter. For Toinette belonged to him. She wanted to be his wife. She wanted to bear his children among the Senecas.

He stopped at last and thanked God that Hepsibah Adams had made it possible for him to do this thing in the light of the fire at Chenufslo. A murmur of approbation stirred the people. It rippled and died out as another warrior took his place.

Long after midnight the revels ended, and Chenufslo grew quiet. For a time, he looked at the stars and the changing shadows of the moon through the open door of Wuskoo's tepee. He entered sleep as if going into a long avenue of golden colors. Only happiness rising like a flower from the ashes of a torture that was gone could have made it like that. His mother seemed a part of it, her voice a glad melody somewhere in the radiance which embraced him. In the avenue of gold, he saw Wood Pigeon smiling happily between his mother and Toinette. Then he sank into deeper sleep.

This was the beginning of the strange life of Jeems and Toinette in Chenufslo which Colonel Bouquet, afterward major general and commander in chief of his majesty's forces in the southern department of America, described as "an episode of fact which is difficult of belief and astounding in the new viewpoint which it and others of a similar kind give us of savage life."

State Boundaries Long Matter of Disputation

For a great many years the boundary between the colony of New York and Massachusetts was in dispute. The government of New York maintained that the eastern limit was the Connecticut river, basing its claim upon a Dutch title. The Massachusetts government claimed territory westward as far as the Hudson river. For the purpose of establishing this claim the Boston government in 1650 made a grant of land on the Hudson river below Fort Orange and in 1672 sent John Payne to New York to solicit permission to pass and repass by water. He was most courteously received, but the claim was never recognized. The dispute finally reached such a stage, resulting in riots, etc., that it was submitted to the lord commissioners of trade of England, and George II in 1757, by royal order in council, determined the boundary, granting the territory to New York. This was still not acceptable until 1773, when commissioners from New York and Massachusetts met and finally decided the boundary according to the present lines.

COMPARE HEIFERS AS BEEF MAKERS

Well-Finished Light Animals Are Most Popular.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)—WNU Service.

In comparing the meat-producing abilities of well-bred heifers and steers recently, the United States Department of Agriculture and seven state experiment stations disproved some of the arguments which have been advanced in support of the long-standing prejudice against heifer beef.

One of the most interesting and important facts discovered by the investigators is that the meat from well-finished heifers is equally as palatable as that from steers when the two are slaughtered at the same age. Moreover, in these experiments, the dressing percentage of the heifers was fully as high as that of the steers.

In the course of their studies on the relative merits of the two sexes as meat producers, the investigators likewise found that yearling heifers ordinarily reach an acceptable market finish more quickly and at lighter weight than do steers of similar breeding and feeding. It follows, of course, that the heifers become overfinished sooner than the steers when the feeding is continued.

These research findings are significant in view of the present market demand for lighter-weight carcasses of good finish, the department says. The housewife likes to buy small but well-finished cuts of beef. She likes steaks thick, if not otherwise too large, and would buy roasts more often if she could always get them small enough. The well-finished light heifer, slaughtered before she becomes overfat, fulfills these requirements. This study has uncovered some facts which should be of marked benefit not only to the consuming public but also to the producer, the meat packer, and the retailer, the department says.

The agricultural experiment stations of Arkansas, Colorado, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, Ohio, and Illinois, in co-operation with the United States Department of Agriculture, fed out about 400 head of cattle, about half of which were heifers and half steers, during these experiments.

Dehorning Calves Most Profitable Practice

Horns and choice beef carcasses don't go together. Dehorned beef cattle bring more than horned cattle of similar quality and condition.

For a great many reasons too, dairy animals not intended for show purposes are best dehorned. You have most likely either witnessed or heard of the wrath of some animal that ended in a serious goring of some unfortunate fellow critter, if not a human. Too, you have seen fences and equipment destroyed by unruly animals allowed to parade around with weapons which, under the protection of man, they no longer need.

In the range country saws and mechanical dehorners are used to remove horns. A simpler and more humane way to dehorn is through the use of chemicals applied to the horn buttons of young animals before the horns appear. Some of the leading stock remedy houses have developed very satisfactory preparations for the purpose, and they are sold very reasonably. These preparations destroy the tissues which would otherwise develop into horns. The chemicals are in the form of paste that stays right where you put it. They are safe, practically painless, and they do the work.

Feeding Balanced Ration to Pigs Always Favored

The hum of the threshing machine cylinders will be good music to swine on farms where corn cribs and granaries have been bare for some time. On most dairy farms where swine are also produced, grain is conserved for the dairy herd and the pigs must be satisfied with what they can get. In a good many cases this is skimmilk and various degrees of quality and kinds of forage. Nothing is better for pigs than skimmilk and green forage but they are not enough for a well balanced ration. Pigs do not do well on rations that are not well balanced. When they do not do well they do not return good prices for the feeds consumed no matter how excellent their quality.

Barley and oats are now available for pig feed on many farms. It is just as bad to go too far the other way and feed pigs nothing but barley and oats. There is no uncertainty about the results of feeding poorly balanced rations to pigs.

Feed With Care

One place where many farmers could be saving themselves hundreds of dollars is in feeding horses with more care, according to R. H. Wilcox of the University of Illinois. This is revealed, says Mr. Wilcox, in records which farmers are keeping in co-operation with the farm organization and management department at the university. Between two typical central Illinois farms, available records show that there was a difference of $788 a year in horse labor cost.

On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Since agricultural colleges have been advocating pasturing hogs and pigs on ground that was not used as pasture the year before as a means of saving a greater number of young pigs and to prevent the ravages of round worms and other enemies of hogs, the A-shaped hog house has come into greater use than ever before. An individual home for the sow and her pigs is believed to be the best method of housing.

Shown in the illustration are a number of A-shaped houses, each with a yard for the young pigs to exercise in, while the houses provide shelter at night and when the weather is inclement.

Houses of this type are simple to build, as will be seen by the sectional drawings that accompany the view of the houses and yards. Good matched lumber should be used in order to make sturdy homes that will be weather tight. The walls are well braced, the roofs are of shiplap sheathing covered with asphalt or other weather-tight roofing.

When these houses are used the sow usually is put in the house several weeks before farrowing time, so that she will become accustomed to her home before the pigs arrive. A plank floor raised above the ground so that it will be dry, and good, clean bedding provide the "nests" for the pigs. Glazed sash may be set in the sloping sides of the house if desired and are beneficial when these houses are used for early spring farrowing.

The advantage of the A-shaped house over the colony farrowing house is that it may be moved to clean ground whenever such action is advisable.

Picture Arrangement Aids Interior Beauty

How to hang a picture so that it will be in harmony with the walls and furniture of a room is an important thing to know. The entire room should "compose" well, that is, it should give a well-balanced appearance in the matter of placing furniture and wall decoration.

It is a fact that very few people who hang pictures on the walls of their homes realize the importance of the correct relationship between picture and furniture. Often a large picture is hung over a small piece of furniture, in which case there is an unconscious feeling that the small stand or table beneath that large picture is in imminent danger of being crushed, should the picture ever fall.

Or again, over a large davenport, for instance, is hung a small picture that is completely lost. Such an arrangement looks quite as absurd to the discerning person as does a tiny little round hat perched on the head of a great stout man.

As a general rule, it might be said that the width of the picture should be about one-half or two-thirds of the width of the piece of furniture. That is, the ordinary davenport is about six feet in length, or as placed against the wall, we might say "width." The picture should be about three feet in width to be in correct proportion to the davenport.

The average desk is about three feet across the back. The picture that is hung above it should surely be 18 inches by 12 inches to appear well proportioned in relation to the desk. Tall candlesticks on either side of the desk will fill in the extra space on each side.

Before deciding on certain pictures for certain wall space, it is well to see if they are appropriate, in size, for the wall space, as well as in color and subject.

Picture dealers are now carrying various sizes of beautiful reproductions of the finest orientals, in color, in sepia, and in black-and-white. These are found at very reasonable prices.

Refinish Your Old Floors Inexpensively

"At the floor line, the decoration of a room really begins." Twelve million women living in homes over fifteen years old read the article so entitled, or similar ones, looked wistfully at their own floors, and wished some one would tell how they could fix these floors themselves—inexpensively.

You can rent a sanding-polishing machine from your dealer—some machines are manufactured as two units, while others come as one machine with two, interchangeable rollers—one for sanding the floor, the other for polishing wax. The rental charge is nominal.

Now, you are ready to start the actual sanding, and you will be thrilled to see all those old layers of paint, varnish, etc., come off and give you a brand new surface.

Here are some tips learned from a professional floor sander. Always sand the floor with the grain. When starting or stopping the motor, have the machine in motion. It is advisable to go over the entire length of the floor and, without turning around, draw the machine backward over the same strip. In this way you will avoid making grooves in the floor which are due to letting the machine rest or stop in one spot.

When the floor is all sanded, sweep it up well to remove all dust particles before finishing the floor. The finish is a matter of personal taste—there is a large range for preference in color, materials, etc. A popular finish is a hard drying filler, clean lacquer, and wax. The fillers provide the color—natural, light oak, dark oak, walnut, and mahogany were mentioned, with light and dark oak being the preferred shades.

Floors formerly finished with natural filler and varnish are about the same color as floors finished with light oak filler, and lacquer, because lacquer is absolutely colorless, while varnish was amber colored.

Your dealer will show you panels finished in the various effects so you can make your selection. Whatever material you select, follow the directions on the can and you will be assured of good results.

On a newly finished floor, two coats of paste wax should be applied. The secret of a beautifully polished floor is applying a very light coat of wax, and polishing it well. The polisher you rented with the sander will burnish the floor perfectly. For maintenance of the floor, either paste or liquid wax may be used.

Now, put your rugs and furniture back in the room; sit down and give way to that pride you feel in your accomplishment.

Why Not Paint Before You Try to Sell Home?

To sell or mortgage your property, paint it first. That is the advice of a prominent bank president whose bank has frequently refused to loan because the owner failed to make the property attractive by brushing up the exterior.

"No matter the type of property, if it is attractively decorated the person applying for a loan has an advantage every time," he says.

"A property that is in a fair state of repair otherwise can be improved more by a coat or two of good paint than in any other way."

Appraisers from a bank appreciate the value of a neatly painted, well repaired house as compared to a similar house that has been neglected. In addition, they feel that a man who takes care of his property is likely to be prompt in his payments and the bank will run less risk of having to foreclose the mortgage.

A wise property owner, however, will not be content simply with the pristine appearance of a fresh coat of paint. He will see that a painter of good standing does the job.

7th Grade Banquets 8th

(Communicated)

The Seventh Grade Class of the Carrizozo School entertained the Eighth Grade at the home of Mr and Mrs. Roy Shafer Thursday evening, May 14th. Games of various kinds were played, after which Mrs. Shafer, assisted by Mesdames Shelton, Walker, Shaver and Blaney, served dainty refreshments. The hostess class, as did also the guest class, proved themselves little ladies and gentlemen.

The Methodist Church

By Rev, Jno. L. Lawson

There is a man who is always putting things off. His intentions are good, but he never acts. If any one should ask him why he didn't do something he would say, "Well I always meant to, but I've just been putting' it off" He said that so many times that people began to call him, "Old Been Puttin' It Off." Do you know that man?

Sunday School at nine forty-five, and church at eleven next Sunday morning, and church again at eight in the evening.

Ancho News

Dance in Ancho Saturday night May 23; music by Graves orchestra.

Two Eighth grade graduates, Miss Maudie Warden and Frank Weathersbee received their diplomas at the closing excercises of the local school the evening of May 14th. The entertainment by upper and primary grades consisted of recitations, dialogs and songs. Little Miss Marian Hightower gave a piano solo quite skillfully and Miss Mary Pickett Warden was the hit of the evening in two vocal solos to her own accompaniment on the guitar.

The intermediate department, under direction of Mrs. Drura Frame, put on a charming little Operetta, "Under the Sugar Plum Tree." The stage settings attested much careful planning and skillful work and represented a sylvan scene with a flower bordered river on which a sail boat was navigated. A group of dainty fairies led by tiny Amaryllis Frame did the Poppy dance and black and red Squigacum-Squees sang gleefully. The costumes were elaborate and the children showed the result of painstaking training. During the intermission preceding the Operetta, Mrs Bryan Hightower gave three numbers on the piano.

Mr. and Mrs Fred Sweet entertained quite delightfully last Saturday evening, May 16th. Dancing was main diversion. Dainty refreshments were served to a large number of guests

Mrs. Howard Bullard's home was the scene for a lovely party last Sunday evening The main feature was Mrs. Beiknap's grandson in action. At urgent request of friends, Mrs Beiknap consented to have shown the second time the movie of her grandson, John, who resides in New York City. Delicious cake, coffee and cocoa were served. The guests who enjoyed the pleasant hospitality were: Mesdames Elbert Brown, C. C. Beiknap, W. E Reynolds, T. J. Straley and Allen Kile, Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hall and Ralph Hall.

The Woman's Club had an especially interesting and delightful meeting at the home of Mrs Allen Kile, Saturday the 16th With but one exception all resident member were present. Special guests were Mr. and Mrs. John A. Haley, Mrs. C. A McCammon, of Carrizozo, and Mrs Roy Bogle, of Coyote and from Ancho Mrs Walter Silvers, Mrs. W. E. Reynolds, Mrs. George Straley, Mr. A. W. Drake, Mr J. M. Frame, Misses June Caldwell, Maudie and Mary Picket Warden, Lucille and Lila Lee Drake, Edwina Peters and Mirian Hightower.

The name of Mrs. R. E. P. Warden was added to the membership roll and the club feels it has gained a valuable addition to its membership.

Roll call was answered by a "Favorite Saying of my Mother's," and the Mother's Day theme was carried into the social hour which followed a very interesting business session. Each member read a poem on "Mother," and addresses were made by Mr. Haley, Mrs. Haley, Mrs. McCammon and Mrs. Bogle.

In the intelligence tests, prizes were awarded to Mesdames McCammon and Pruett and Miss Maudie Warden.

During the refreshment period, Misses Maudie and Mary Pickett Warden, Drake, Peters and Hightower entertained with recitations and songs, and Miss June Caldwell gave a very graceful gypsy dance.

Bowls of sweet peas, the club flower, decorated the room.

Green and white, club colors, predominated in the refreshments, which consisted of open-faced sandwiches and lime crush Hand painted place cards were used Corsage bouquets of sweet peas were given as favors.

The club will meet at the home of Mrs. Price Miller, Thursday, May 28.

It was a pleasure indeed to have Mr. and Mrs. Haley, Mrs. Bogle and Mrs. McCammon with us.

Picnicked on Eagle

A crowd numbering twenty-nine from Carrizozo and eleven from El Paso—met at the club house on Eagle Creek last Sunday, and made a jolly day of it. The noon hour found every member of the party seated at the big table—where it was "one for all and all for one"—and the way the grub disappeared indicated that all were disciples of Epicurus. Anyway, those in charge of the culinary department could find no cause to complain for the reception accorded their dietary preparations. In the afternoon, cards, canary golf and hiking engaged each individual as the bent urged. At the setting of the sun, the El Paso contingent started for the long drive home, and Carrizozoans pointed their cars in this direction. It was an ideal day, spent in the heart of America's beauty spot.

Alto Items

Windy days are here again. We hope rain will come soon, to break the crust on the crops.

Corn planting is about done and almost every one has corn up in these parts.

Mr. and Mrs. Roland Box and Mrs. West motored over to El Paso Saturday.

School is out here and the kiddies are very sorry, for they sure did enjoy the school.

We hope to have Mr. Traylor and Miss Shook as teachers again next year.

Weaver-Hagsten

Mr. Jess Weaver and Miss Gladys Hagsten, both of Encino, were married in the Methodist parsonage Saturday, May 16 The Rev. John L. Lawson officiated. The ceremony was witnessed by Mr. and Mrs. Matt Mitchell The happy couple will make their home near Encino.
