Las Cruces Rodeo November 14-15

Las Cruces, N M. Nov. 5—The largest crowd that ever witnessed a similar event in Southwestern New Mexico is expected to pack the grand stand and new bleachers at the Dona Ana County Fair Grounds Saturday and Sunday, November 14th and 15th, when the Las Cruces Kiwanis Club Rodeo gets under way.

After weeks of unremitting labor, arrangements at the Rodeo grounds are complete. Arena equipment is ready. It has been designed and built by Johnnie Mullens, America's noted Rodeo director, who will act in that capacity during the two big days. Chutes, corrals, and catch-pens are so arranged that long, irritating delays will be impossible.

In the neighborhood of 125 contestants from every section of the West will compete in the various events comprising the daily program. With thirty head of the very best bucking horses, (shipped here direct from the famous Ringling Bros ranch in Montana) including "Old Depression," the toughest outlaw gelding in the Northwest, 75 head of Mexican steers and calves, and 40 head of wild horses, the management is assured of plenty of stock for a wild, fast, snappy show from start to finish.

Ed Wright, leading cowboy comedian, who has clowned the great Cheyenne show the past six years, and his mule "What-a-Man," will entertain before and during each performance with their many comedy acts.

Proceeds from the Rodeo will go to the Las Cruces Kiwanis Club Underprivileged Childrens' fund.

Hoover Given Only 8 States in 1932 by Two Experts---Foresee Farm Vote Turnover

Washington, Oct.—The electoral vote of eight states is the limit set for President Hoover in 1932 by the joint forecast of "a Republican, active in party affairs and well informed about political conditions," and a Washington political commentator who contributes to Collier's Weekly under the pseudonym of "The Gentleman at the Keyhole," as recorded by tht latter in a recent issue of this magazine. Independently of each other they wrote their lists of "Hoover" states and both picked the same states.

"If these two guesses prove to be anywhere near right," says the writer, 'then the greatest political overturn that has ever taken place in four years has occurred since the last national election. What is the reason?"

For answer he quotes a letter from a Republican official in a Middle Western state detailing the distressing conditions there of business and agriculture, which "perhaps will throw some light on the conditions which are affecting the Republican party so adversely"

Saying that the Republican party depends generally upon the farmers to carry national elections, the writer asks, "where is the party going to get its vote in 1932, provided there is no great improvement?" Continuing, "The Gentleman at the Keyhole" says:

"Without upstate New York, the Republicans haven't a look-in in the Empire State. It is rural Massachusetts that usually overcomes the Democratic majority of Boston It is rural New Jersey that is Republican It is in the rural sections of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Michigan that the die-hard Republicans are to be found."

Pointing out that the cities have their reasons for disaffection he cites a prediction by persons familiar with Detroit that that city will give 300,000 Democratic majority. "If that guess is anywhere near accurate," he adds, "then Michigan will have to be stricken off the list of eight states assigned to Mr. Hoover."

A Republican Denounces High Tariff

Col. William C. Procter, Chairman of the Board of the Procter & Gamble Co., long prominent in the affairs of the Republican party and a member of President Hoover's Emergency Committee on Unemployment, in a recent statement said:

"The level of wages in our own country has been comparatively high, not because of the tariff, but in spite of it.

"Whatever may have been said in the past concerning the advantages of a high tariff, it is certainly true that the tariff now is a handicap to us and to the entire world."

Business Men Organize to Oppose Federal Bureaucracy

Tax Increase 325 per cent

Washington, Oct.---Business men of the Peoria section in Illinois recently met to effect an organization known as the Federation of American Business as a protest and protection against the activities of Federal Government bureaucracy, which in some instances have been followed by State and local governments.

It was stated at the meeting, according to the Chicago Tribune (Rep.) that "Federal, State and local government in this country are engaged in more than eighty separate lines of business or of industry in direct competition with their own citizens." As a result of the growth of bureaucratic government, it was asserted that taxes within the last sixteen years have increased 325 per cent and that 500,000 public servants are now necessary for the activities of the bureaucracy.

Commenting upon the Peoria meeting, the Tribune says:

"The change in the methods and objects of the Federal Government has been made without an agreement as to the general principles involved. . . . Nor was consent obtained that new general doctrines of government should be adopted.

"It is reasonable to believe," the Tribune continues, "that if the principles involved had been submitted to a constitutional convention they could not have been adopted. . . . But what could not have been done deliberately and upon full consideration of all the meanings and portents has been done by gradual approach, by yielding to this expediency or that moral consideration, to this humanitarian idea, that economic device or some idea of social perfectibility. Thus an utterly strange form of Federal Government has been developed with the promise of still more sweeping alterations of principle and procedure if not definitely opposed and checked."

The Tribune points out that nearly every departure from standards has had its special organization behind it.

It is the announced purpose of the Federation of American Business to extend its organization throughout the country to combat the growth of bureaucratic government and to protect the individual business man against its encroachments and competition.

It has been heretofore pointed out that the expansion of bureaucratic government, as shown by the record, has been largest under Republican administrations, the cost of which is partly included in governmental expenditures, which in the last peace year of the Wilson (Democrat) administration were approximately $1,100,000,000, and in the last two years of a Republican administration more than $5,000,000,000 each year.

Suggestions for 1932 Democratic Platform

Washington, Oct.---A symposium of suggestions for a Democratic platform in 1932, which was initiated by the presentation of the personal views of Jouett Shouse, Chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee, is continued in the current issue of the Democratic Bulletin, issued by the Women's National Democratic Club. The following are extracts from suggestions made by prominent Democrats in the November number:

George Gordon Battle (Attorney, N. Y.): In my opinion the platform should declare in favor of national referendum to accertain the views of the voters of this country upon prohibition. Those tariff rates which promote monopoly and injustice should be lowered. The Wagner bill (for the establishment of an unemployment service) should be enacted into law.

The public utilities should be subjected to local regulation with every safeguard to provide that they may earn a fair and proper return.

Senator C. C. Dill (Wash.): Economic questions should be the dominating issues in the coming campaign. Revision of the tariff downward. A law that will protect the people in the issuance of watered stock in large organizations engaged in interstate business.

Senator M. M. Logan [Ky.]: I favor an immediate reduction in nearly all of the rates in the present tariff law. Established of a more elastic currency. Repeal of Federal Farm Board Act.

Congressman M. C. Tarver [Ga.]: Prohibition should be eschewed. The primary issue is the tariff and the party should promise a constructive and intelligent revision thereof.

Congressman Robert Ramspeck [Ga.]: Reduction of the tariff to a competitive basis, raising the income taxes in the higher brackets. Increase the inheritance taxes and provide a gift tax.

American Labor Highest in Wage Lowest in Cost

Washington, Nov. 5—In the series of tariff studies which H. E. Miles, Chairman of the Fair Tariff League, is writing for the Hoosier Farmer, he discusses the tariff with relation to wages and presents a number of concrete illustrations to sustain his point of view that American labor is the cheapest labor in the world, considering the cost of production.

"No informed person measures wages by the amount paid per hour or per day," says Mr. Miles, "but by the return in production for the wages paid, that is by the wage cost per pair, per pound, or per yard produced"

Mr Miles cites the following illustration:

"In 1910 the average American factory worker used two and one-half times more horse power and produced two and one-half times more output than the English worker, always our nearest competitor. Our wages were correspondingly higher with our wage costs about the same.

"In 1920 our output per worker was about twenty-five per cent more than pre-war and Europe's twelve per cent less Today our output per factory worker averages fifty five per cent more than in 1910."

In the knitting and weaving industry, the contrast in domestic and foreign wages as related to cost of production is shown. Mr. Miles says:

"An American girl in an easy day's work runs twenty-five to thirty knitting machines and knits 1,800 pairs of good cotton socks in a day for a piece price of two cents per dozen pairs, or one-sixth of one cent per pair. She is satisfied because this nets her $3 00 per day—the lowest price per pair and the highest wage per day in the world in this industry. She knits ninety dozen pairs of women's silk hose per day for one-fourth of one cent per pair. No lower paid, under-nourished, poorly-housed foreign competitor equals her.

"An American operator weaves 13 000 yards of medium fine cotton cloth per week for a wage of $16.00. She runs from thirty to seventy-five looms against six to twelve looms in England, our principal competitor. Why should she not get two and one-half times the wage for five times the output?

"An East Indian cotton mill, well-equipped, with cotton growing near the factory door, pays its operatives an average of $1 25 per week. And yet, India sends to the United States for drills and denims because ours are made cheaper with our $14 00 wage than hers.

Democratic Cooperation on Depression Relief

Commenting on the speech of Robert H. Lucas, Executive Director of the Republican National Committee, in which he charged that Democratic leaders were content to let bad business and unemployment continue because such conditions would elect a Democratic administaaiion, the Houston Post-Dispatch says:

"A less fitting time, from his own standpoint, to hurl such a charge at the Democratic leadership, could hardly have been selected It has been only a few days since the leaders of the Democratic party assented cheerfully to Mr. Hoover's plan for aiding the banks, and thus helping to restore business confidence. Not only did congressional leaders give their approval promptly to the Hoover proposal, but Alfred E. Smith, Democratic nominee for the presidency in 1928, voluntarily endorsed the plan.

"And a few weeks before, the same Democratic leadership as promptly and as heartily indorsed the Hoover move for a moratorium on war debts, another effort to restore prosperity. The truth is that the Democratic leadership has put no stone in the way of the Republican administration in its effort to remedy the economic situation"

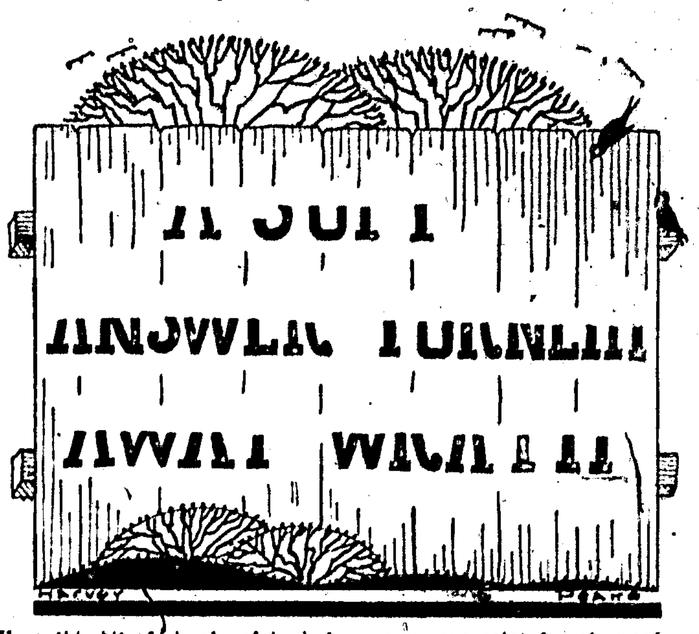
Scripture Quotation Puzzle



Upon this bit of abandoned back fence some one printed a six-word quotation from the Bible. But some one else came along and rubbed away the upper part of the letters. Can you take a pencil and finish out the letters to make them spell the six words?

A Bear Who Finds Ice and Snow Warm

We can't all be of the same opinion, that is certain. To most creatures, snow and ice are cold but not so to the beautiful white bear of the frozen North. In the picture you may see Mrs. Bear and her baby. Spring has come, the ice has broken away, and she has brought her baby out of their snow cave to hunt for food.

She can make the coziest nest in all the world—in the snow! This she does by lying close to a cliff and letting the snow fall over her until she is entirely covered and has left only a tiny breathing hole open. Here in this tightly packed home she is content to sleep with her baby until spring comes. Mr. Polar Bear roams about all winter long; he doesn't seem to need a long winter sleep. Mrs. Bear stores up a great deal of fat to keep her alive through her sleeping season. When her baby grows up and is strong she, too, will make herself a snow cave and follow her mother's example.

The Polar Bear's feet or paws are very powerful and in order that they may be secure in walking on slippery ice, many prickly hairs grow on the soles. And oh, how these beautiful creatures can swim and dive! You see they must be able to, for the food they like best lives in the water. Seals are a great delicacy as is walrus meat, but when these are not to be had, the bears content themselves with berries. Perhaps these make rather nice dessert!

Baby bears are born as blind as they can be and without one little bit of fur. They must be nearly five weeks old before their eyes can see or before their bodies begin to grow their lovely thick coats. These Polar Bears are the largest in all the bear family and certainly the most beautiful. Sometimes they may swim for many miles, or drift on ice cakes far from home. They do not mind, for the whole Northland is their home and if they can find plenty of ice and snow they are comfortable and happy.

The KITCHEN CABINET

Banbury Tarts.—Roll puff paste one-eighth of an inch thick and cut into three-inch squares. Rich pastry made in the ordinary way may be used, but it is not so delicate. Put two teaspoonfuls of the following filling on each square on one side, fold over and press the edges tightly together after moistening. Bake twenty minutes in a hot oven.

Orange Shortcake.—Prepare the rich biscuit dough in any form desired, either in a large cake or in biscuits. Slice peeled oranges very thin and mix with sugar to sweeten. Let stand for an hour or more to dissolve the sugar and season. Pour over the buttered shortcake and decorate the top with slices of orange.

Sheep Kidneys.—Skin and split the kidneys and place on skewers with pieces of bacon between each kidney. Season well with mustard, salt and pepper, or any savory seasoning desired. Place in a dripping pan, so that the meat does not touch the pan and bake in a hot oven until the bacon is well cooked.

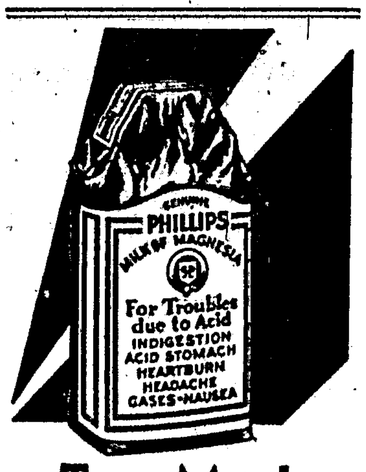
New Style Blacksmithing

The village smithy has taken to the highways and business is excellent, Louis Wanasek, a Wisconsin blacksmith, reports. He admits that the motorized era shoved horseshoeing from the door of his smithy and might have forced him into bankruptcy had he failed to fight the automobile with the automobile. "There are still plenty of horses," he said, "but farmers refuse to drive the poky things to a blacksmith shop." So Wanasek receives orders by telephone, loads tools into his car, and drives to the farms where there is horseshoeing to be done.



Too Much ACID

MANY people, two hours after eating, suffer indigestion as they call it. It is usually excess acid. Correct it with an alkali. The best way, the quick, harmless and efficient way, is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. It has remained for 50 years the standard with physicians. One spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids, and at once. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

You will never use crude methods when you know this better method. And you will never suffer from excess acid when you prove out this easy relief.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drug store.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

James and May Wilson Preston have recently returned from a summer in France. They spent some time at Brides les Bains, that little town in a little valley at the edge of the Alps. While there, Mr. Preston met Huntington Harter from Mansfield, Ohio, whose father, it seems to me, was a congressman or senator. At any rate, they used to go climbing over the hills together and often spoke of the beauty of the scenery.

"As I think back," said James Preston, one day, "I cannot remember many more picturesque places than Manayunk, the Pennsylvania town where I was a boy."

"Manayunk!" exclaimed Mr. Harter. "Why, my sister married a man from the place which lies shoulder to shoulder with it, Wissahickon. His name was Vaughn Merrick, and he was head master of the Episcopal academy in Philadelphia."

"Well," said Mr. Preston, "then you may remember a family who lived right across the lane from your brother-in-law. One of those kids grew to be a pretty well-known writer. His name is Struthers Burt."

So a man from Mansfield and another from Manayunk had to go all the way to Brides les Bains to become friends and discover that they might have met as boys in Wissahickon.

It was one of the most famous of New Yorkers who said to his brand-new daughter-in-law, "My dear, as an extra wedding gift, I present you with this formula for happiness in marriage: Give your husband one night a week off and ask no questions."

In these days, the man might have switched and given that advice to his son. It is getting so that if a man desires perfect solitude he can find it in the home. The little woman who used to run the sewing machine is now out running the political machine.

The daughter of the founder of a string of nickel-and-dime emporiums married, and her husband bought a large country place. Not long ago this couple gave a big party, to which both old and young were invited. It was a gorgeous affair with all the trimmings wealth could give it. Everyone had a good time. There was just one drawback. The band seemed to have orders not to play one of the tunes the younger set most desired. In spite of more than a few requests, the musicians never rendered: "I Found a Million-Dollar Baby in a Five-and-Ten-Cent Store."

Tommy Meighan told me a story recently about acting in the screen version of a story by his friend, Peter B. Kyne. Playing with him was a professional wrestler. They were supposed to engage in a scuffle. Meighan put his hand on the wrestler's forearm and found it the size and consistency of an oak tree.

"Relax," he said to the grappler. "Look. Feel my arm. Can't you see it's relaxed? Loosen up your muscles. This is acting."

"I am loosened up," growled the wrestler. A moment later, when the cameras began to grind, the director called for action.

"That wrestler gave me a shove that sent me the entire length of a ship's deck," says Meighan. "Of course, there had to be a retake, because he shoved me right out of the camera field, and I was supposed to be in the picture. In fact," said Mr. Meighan, "I was supposed to get in the last shove."

Radio's Effect on Language

Radio has aroused new interest in correct speech and pronunciation. No definite steps have been taken in the United States as yet to standardize English speech as used over the radio, but the British Broadcasting company of England has established a single standard of radio English by organizing an advisory committee to compose a style sheet for radio announcers. According to David Sarnoff, radio has added about 5,000 new words to the English language.

Geologist Finds Fish 380 Million Years Old

Red Lodge, Mont.—A number of fish which swam in the waters of Montana 380,000,000 years ago were caught here recently—with a geologist's pick.

Prof. R. T. Chamberlain, leader of the Princeton geological expedition in the Beartooth mountains last summer found embedded in the red shale on the face of Beartooth butte several fossilized specimens of ostracoderms—fishlike creatures that swam in American rivers eons ago.

The ostracoderm resembles a cross between a crab and a flounder. Its body was about seven inches long and was covered by a bony plate much like a crab's shell. Projecting from beneath the plate was a tail and a pair of jointed flippers much like the large claws of a crayfish.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

Why We Call Them "Cops"

THAT a policeman should be known colloquially as a "cop" seems strange and puzzling not only to those who run and read but apparently to others who profess to have made a study of these things and should know.

It has been suggested that the reason for this colloquialism was the fact that many years ago, when Fernando Wood was police commissioner of New York city, he designed a copper badge which all policemen had to wear for purposes of identification.

The fact is that this suggested history of the term is quite erroneous. The word "cop" for "policeman" far antedates the advent of Fernando Wood. It is derived in fact, from the old English "cop" meaning "to catch," so that its use in the sense indicated is quite logical.

Swedish Invention Will Eliminate Radio Fading

Ostersund, Sweden.—The so-called "fading" difficulty, known to most radio listeners, seems to have been eliminated by a new invention in the field of broadcasting recently made by K. E. Flander, a Swedish engineer of this city.

Flander for six years has worked on an apparatus intended to eliminate "fading." Experts heretofore have not been able to find the reason for "fading."

At a recent meeting of radio experts, engineers and telegraph officials in Ostersund the invention was successfully tested on programs sent from distant foreign stations.

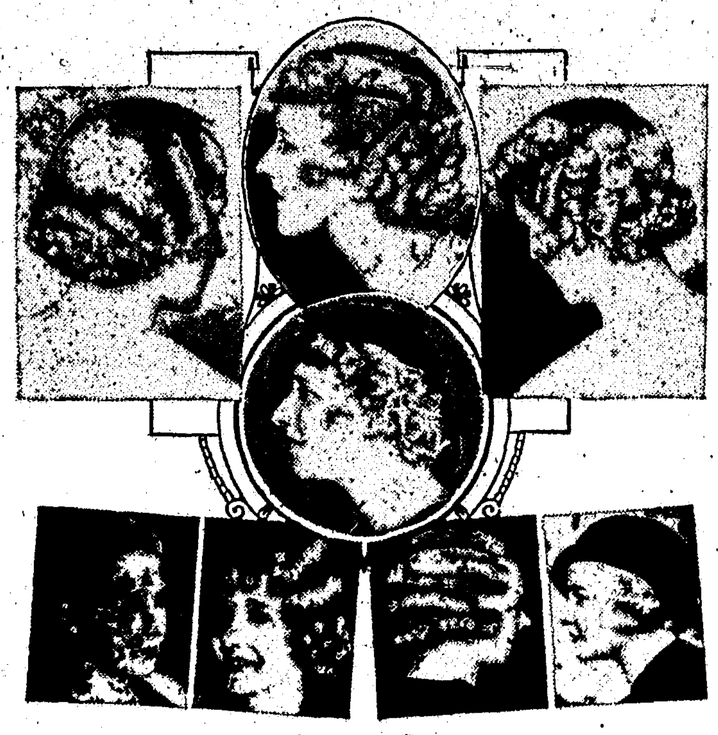
New Hat Calls for New Hairdress

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



TO SUCCESSFULLY, that is to say becomingly, wear the little Eugenie hats and other Second empire effects, likewise the early Victorian modes which are now in vogue, it is well to remember that "where there is a will there is a way," and the "way" in this instance leads directly to the hairdresser's door.

To secure a perfect harmony between the coiffure and the present millinery innovations, which are absolutely revolutionary in their "lines," the hair must be arranged just so—utterly feminine down to the last curl, with emphasis placed on the left side, for there is where milady's carefully coiffed ringlets, waves and such, are supposed to show forth in all their glory.

Of course this gesture in the direction of a more pretentious hairdress sounds the knell of the short bob. To keep pace with the mode there is no alternative but to let the hair grow, not too long or not too short, a happy medium being the verdict.

There is a message of encouragement, however, to those whose tresses have not yet arrived at the desired length, in that one may buy or have made of one's own hair all sorts of "pin-on" effects to do duty during the exasperating interim when the bob is still in the awkward growing age. It is quite the fashion, too, to use little jeweled pins and clasps, which help a lot in holding unwieldy locks in place.

For the charming hairdress shown in three views at the top in the picture, a style, by the way, which has just recently been launched by the Coiffure Guild of New York, it is not practical to have the hair shorter than three inches at the neckline and no hair on the head should be longer than six inches.

In dressing this bob the first essential is to thin out and taper the hair so that on the top of the head it will lie flat and smooth under the shallow crown of the second empire hat. All the ends of the hair at the sides and back, as shown in the view to the right, are set in a mass of irregular curls. It is a practical necessity that the hair have a permanent wave to give assurance that the curls will hold their shape. Note that the first pose reveals the hair to be slightly parted. The right side has only a suggestion of a shadow wave near the temple, and this is followed by a large diagonal wave on a line with the ear.

At the left side (see second view at top) a scallop is drawn back in order to allow part of the lobe to show. A long tendril of hair is woven into a soft pin curl and placed far out on the cheek in an accidental-on-purpose way. This must be very delicate in order to comply with the prettily feminine character of the hairdress. The picture in the center beneath shows how effectively the new hats are worn with this hairdress.

The two views to the left at the bottom of the picture present a most attractive hairdress. At the right side a single wave is allowed to cover merely the top of the ear, for, according to the latest edict, the hair must be brushed back from the face to show the cheek, the temple and part of the ear. Several fragile "kiss curls" add to the effect. The long-bob is more noticeable at the left side where the wide waves end in a mass of combed-out curls, giving an informal and girlish touch which is extremely desirable. The finished coiffure assumes a lovely line across the back which swirls diagonally from right to left. With a jeweled clip tucked on the right or left side, this hairdress would be ideal for evening.

Everything about the coiffure shown below to the center right in the picture suggests smartness plus simplicity. This sleek, trim hairdress will make instant appeal, for it is practical at the same time that it carries a convincing message of perfect grooming. Its adaptibility to the new chapeaux is clearly demonstrated in the concluding picture. By having the hair at the medium bob length, all the requirements of the 1931 fall fashion at met.

SHOES KEEP STEP WITH DRESS TREND

Shoes have become highly specialized this fall. More than ever are they destined to be called distinct types

First are the smartly tailored shoes created for the lightweight woolens. In this group there is a choice of sanely sensible bt chic pair of high-cut oxfords in a combination of suede and alligator; or, with the new derby hat, you may don an opera pump of black or brown pin seal with the classic wing tip and trim of matching calf. Another alternative is a high-heeled one-eyelet tie of suede with patent leather side inlays and effective white piping.

Suede predominates in the dressier types. There are any number of dainty high-heeled models, many with strap effects.

The most promising and elegant of the evening sandals are those of gold and silver.

Aluminum Branches Out Into Realm of Jewelry

Aluminum has left the kitchen, or at least branched out into the realm of jewelry and some of our most effective bracelets are being made of it. You can have them in groups of very narrow bangles, or you can wear one or two impressively wide ones. The steely luster of aluminum is smart with black wool or silk town costume.

"Portable" Feathers Are Now Available for Hats

Flat feathers of a portable variety are being sold for these new tilted hats. You buy several and change the color scheme of your costume. Some with dashes of red in them are particularly alluring and give a finished look to an untrimmed hat.

Feather Boas

The revival of the feather boa is in keeping with the appearance of other fashions that first saw light of day a decade ago. A Paris couturiere shows them worn like a "lei" about the neck, with evening frocks.

Sports Costume Popular

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This sports costume of hand-knitted wool bespeaks a popular mode. Being for practical daytime it calls for a very restrained treatment of the romantic hat. The derby-crowned shape dips only slightly to one side. It is made of cire felt which is treated to give the effect of leather. The brown kid oxfords were selected with meticulus care, for the mode of today is very exacting when it comes to correct accessories. They are cut low on the sides and outlined with beige pipings. The piping is repeated to form a heart-shaped design on the toe.

Braided Leather

Very smart as accessories to sports costumes are belts of braided leather which are matched by flat envelope bag braided in the same manner. They come in brown and white, black and white and navy and white.

Girl at the Top in Health Tests

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West, are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test.

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Indian Relics Tell Story

A small group of Indian relics recently found near Center City, Wis., was believed to tell the story of an early hunting episode. William George Nelson, farmer, was gathering maple sirup sap when he came upon the relics—a half dozen arrowheads, an Indian stone knife, two bear teeth and a huge bear claw. Reconstructing the scene, Nelson was able to picture a fight between a group of Indians and a huge bear.

AGE WELL CALLED MATTER OF MIND

Retain Usefulness and Defy the Years.

"I am still only forty-five, but I have a great and secret dread of growing old; for it seems to me that to be old is to be useless. The world is more and more turning to youth and strength, and has less and less time for age. Maybe it is a foolish fear on my part, but it is a very real one."—D. B.

I think all fears of the future are foolish, but the dread my reader mentions is particularly foolish, for it is utterly without foundation. It is no good thinking of age merely in terms of years. Age is a matter of mind just as much as of body. Indeed, I would say it is more a matter of mind than of body.

For I know young men in their twenties who are aged and bored and cynical so far as their mentality is concerned, and I know also men and women in their sixties and seventies who could put many a youth to shame with their mental vigor and alertness, their freshness of mind and their burning enthusiasms.

It is silly to dread what cannot be avoided. We must all grow old. The important thing is to see to it that, as we grow older, we grow wiser, to make sure, too, that we keep our minds elastic, that we move with the times instead of becoming fossilized in the past.

Are is only useless when brains are allowed to rust. That famous novelist, the late Mrs. Annie Steel, was over ninety when she died—and she left the last of a tremendous output of novels half finished. More than that, she had cheerfully undertaken a voyage half across the world just before her death in order to see her grandson firmly established in business. Had she grown useless just because she had grown old?

I know a woman who is nearly eighty. Each winter she has a holiday in the sunshine. Sometimes she goes to Egypt. Sometimes she goes to India. How does she do it? She works for it. She advertises in the papers that she is willing to accompany invalid ladies, to take charge of cchildren, to act as nurse or companion—to do anything in return for her passage out and home. Eighty—but it's no good pretending that she's useless.

Neither of these people—and they are only two out of many—dreaded growing old, for they simply refused to grow old. They kept themselves alert and vigorous by using their brains. People who dread growing old are the sort of people who will rust out before ever they do grow old. They will never give themselves a chance to wear out.

What we should fear is not age, but stagnation. We should fear idleness and boredom and apathy. And if they come upon us it is our own fault. The world is still "full of a number of things," and there is no lack of interest if we will only trouble to look for it.

As for age being useless—anyone, young or old, can quickly become useless if no effort is made to be useful. There is always a job of some sort waiting to be done. What has age got to do with it?

It is only as we grow older that we can see some sort of a pattern in life. It is only as we grow older that we weigh values accurately and plan with the calm judgment that only experience can give.

Youth is the seedtime of life; but it is age that reaps the harvest if that seed has been wisely sown.

Remember the wise words of the philosopher, all you who dread age: "We do not count a man's years until he has nothing else to count."—London Tit-Bits.

Special Guests

Marcia L. of Mooresville was planning for a birthday party. Her mother had written out the invitations and told the little girl that she must tell her to whom she must send them.

"Now, Marcia," she said, "think of your best friends, the one's you like best, and I'll send them one of these little cards and they will come to your party."

Marcia studied quite awhile and finally said:

"Mother, I've decided to ask Santa Claus and Jesus to my party."—Indianapolis News.

ONLY Firestone Tires give you the extra strength and safety of these patented construction features!

Gum-Dipping penetrates every cord and coats every fiber with liquid rubber. This minimizes internal friction and heat, the greatest enemies of tire life.

Two Extra Cord Plies Under the Tread—give stronger bond between tread and cord body and greater protection against punctures and blowouts.

Because distributors of special brand mail order tires cannot meet Firestone extra values, they attempt to confuse car owners with bold claims and misleading statements. But remember—there's no denying the FACTS of Firestone extra values.

Naval Program Excite Comment

President Hoover's call for a $60,000,000 reduction of the Navy's budget brought from the sea branch of our military defence a report on the measures it found necessary to meet the President's demand. Among the retrenchment elements was a cut in the Navy personnel and civil employees, variously estimated as from six to ten thousand men. This report was supposed to be confidential, but, as frequently happens in these matters in Washington, the substance of the document got into the newspapers.

The resulting comment from members of Congress and others brought from the President a statement that there was nothing final about the Navy budget, and that the newspaper publications did not even mean, necessarily, that the President approved the findings of Secretary Adams and his admirals. On the other hand, the President abstained from expressing disagreement with the Navy's recommendations.

However much the Government needs to diminish its costs, and assuming that the Navy can stand the suggested reduction better than other branches of the Government, the method indicated cannot fail to cause considerable concern It may be that the shipbuilding schedule can be curtailed. That involves arguments on the wisdom or unwisdom of ship construction up to the limit of the Arms Conference agreement, and if the President is able to convince the country that no danger is involved in postponing or modifying downward the warship programme, he should have small difficulty along that line.

It may even be that certain navy yards could be eliminated without serious injury to the service and with little resentment outside of the immediate neighborhood of the yards that will go into the discard. When, however, it comes to the matter of cutting down the Navy forces, and the marines, and dismissing several thousand civilian workers, the situation is not so easy. Regardless of how that dose of economy is disguised or sweetened it is a dismaying expedient. Inevitably it means augmenting the army of unemployed, which is exactly opposite to what has been stated as the object of President Hoover's plans for dealing with the most distressing feature of the era of depression. It suggests that at a time when preparations are being made to distribute vast sums to meet the needs of the out-of-works and their dependents it might be more economical to let the threatened Navy people continue to draw their pay for rendered service, rather than to add the amount to what must be disbursed from the relief funds.

If as we have frequently been informed the economic crisis is "largely psychological," the psychology of the situation is hardly to be much improved by setting thousands of sailors, marines and civilian workers to hunting for jobs.

Mr. and Mrs. Carroll York Belknap, of New York City, are enroute to Bermuda, where they will spend their vacation. Mr. Belknap is a son of Mrs. C. C. Belknap and a former resident of Lincoln county.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Gibson were in El Paso a few days this week.

Pete Frame is home fram Colorado.

Mrs. R. E P. Warden, Pickett Jr., and Misses Maudie and Mary Pickett Warden are spending this week in Santa Fe.

Theresa Lucille Simpson, new member of Lee Simpson family, was given a shower last Thursday by several friends of her mother.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Frame were hosts Wednesday evening to the membership of the "A. B. C," making a charming Hallowe'en party of the regular meeting. The spirit of the season was carried out in tallies, decorations and refreshments. High score was made by Mrs. S. J. Pruett.

The school children are enjoying a three days' vacation due to the fact that the local teachers are attending the State Teachers Convention in Santa Fe.

A large number of guests enjoyed the hospitality of the Ancho Woman's Club at a Hollowe'en dance at the school house Saturday night, Oct 31st. The auditorium had been lavishly decorated with Hallowe'en colors and motifs, following a plan elaborated by Mesdames Henderson and Frame, who were assisted by Mesdames S. J. Pruett, G. Pruett, Belknap and Kile and Miss June Caldwell. Mr. J. M. Frame had installed his Atwater-Kent, and other music rendered by Messrs Dragoo and Barnes; Mesdames Warden, Gilliam and Frame accompanying. Mr. Alex Hubbard and Mr. and Mrs. Ward and Mr. Charley Hilburn, of Torrance, to all of whom the Club wishes to express its appreciation. A gay time was enjoyed by all, and at a late hour refreshments of sandwiches pumpkin pie and coffee were served.

Wheat for Coffee

This country traded a large quantity of wheat to Brazil for a large quantity of coffee. In many sections wheat and corn are being accepted in lieu of cash. A sort of back to the old bartering days If money has become so cautious that it will only be invested in government bonds it may become general that we take a load of corn to town and exchange it for supplies. Money after all is merely a medium of exchange. Of itself it is worthless. Perpaps it would be well to be on the commodity exchange basis for awhile

We have heard much of late of farm relief, veterans relief, unemployment relief and various other types of relief. The billion dollar deficit in the National treasury indicates that some sort of national treasury relief would have to be devised.

Nothing sells below the cost of production for very long. On the other hand nothing will sell for more than it is worth for very long. If an article or a service is too high consumers will turn away from it and find a substitute that can be purchased at a lower cost.

Colonial Coiffure to Be Seen in 1932

The pompadour and loose curls which formed the feminine coiffure in George Washington's day is expected to play a prominent part in the hair dress for the fall and winter.

The Colonial motif for this part of milady's toilet, revived by Emile Beauvais, of Washington, D. C., president of the National Hairdressers Association, was inspired by the coming Bi-centennial Celebration of George Washington's birth.

To create the Colonial effect the hair is loosely curled, brushed back in a pompadour and caught up in the back. Three stray curls are left over the shoulders, two on one side and one on the other.

THE STORY

Six bandits hold up the steamer Midnight Sun, on the Mackenzie kill Jimmy Montgomery and escape with gold dust and furs. At the Mounted Police post at Fort Endurance Sergt. Alan Baker disputes with his incompetent superior, Inspector Haskell regarding plans for the capture of the bandits. Baker starts out in the police launch with five men. At the MacMillan trading post Joyce MacMillan is thrilled at the arrival of the police launch. She had expected to marry Baker and had been stunned at the news that he was to marry Elizabeth Spaulding. Stolen furs are found on the MacMillan place and evidence points to Joyce's father. Alan leads his expedition up the big Alooska compelled by Haskell's foolish orders to divide the party. Alan fails to capture the bandits, and returns to Fort Endurance. Haskell blames him for the failure and Alan is allowed to buy out of the Mounted on condition that he absolve Haskell from blame. Alan starts out of the country in a motor canoe. He meets Buzzard Feather, of famous aviator and enlists him in the enterprise. Nick Ice Jensen, leader of the bandits, plans to capture Joyce. Haskell suspects Alan's plans.

"Snakes," Bill breathed to himself as he thanked Haskell and went out the door. "That Spring-heel Johnny must be winding up to ask a favor of me or something. But I've got my three days to help Alan out. Lord, I hope Alan shows up during my free time. He might maybe let me go along on his trick."

With no suspicion of the ugly truth he turned up the twilight slope.

When Whipple came in, Haskell ordered him to close the door and pull down the window, to guard against possible eavesdropping. Then he tersely explained the situation. He added:

"Hardsock will probably steal some more gasoline and oil tonight. What he's already stolen isn't enough for a plane to do much maneuvering on. I want you to watch him stealing that stuff so that you can later be a witness. He'll probably have time to take those drums only a couple miles from here tonight. Tomorrow he'll take all of it on to the place where he's to meet Baker. He's been smuggling it away little by little when he had the chance and hiding it close by; but during his three days he'll take it to the meeting place.

"You'll go to the river bank now [illegible] get that lo[illegible] the [illegible]. You'll [illegible] time [illegible] a signal [illegible] the [illegible]. He's got a [illegible] Hardsock he'll have a [illegible] this he's lost the [illegible] map. Take a [illegible] of my [illegible] and a little rum [illegible] present. [illegible] there a day. He was [illegible]."

Whipple nodded. Haskell went on:

"You'll be [illegible] now to shadow [illegible] and [illegible]. Find out where he's taking that stuff and where he's going to meet Baker. As soon as you do that, whip back here and report to me."

It was late the next evening before Whipple returned. He came back tired, bedraggled, but with electric news.

He and the Indian had watched Bill steal more gas and oil from the stores. They had shadowed him to the temporary cache two miles up the Mackenzie. There he had loaded the canoe to the gunwales with the drums and cans and had taken them all to a big lake twenty miles on up the river.

He had cached the fuel on a broad-land called Goose point, and was waiting there without the faintest suspicion that he had been trailed and was being watched. The Indian, lying low back in the willows, was keeping an eye on him.

As Haskell listened to the report, he forgot the haggard day and night just passed. He had scarcely dared hope for such news as this.

After careful thought, guarding against any slip-up, he ordered Whipple: "We get your rifle and bed-gun. I'll take mine, too. We'll go up there in the launch. You can drive it. We'll capture Hardsock and those supplies. That'll be that. Then we'll wait there. The plane'll be along in a couple days. We'll keep the launch in cover close by. When the machine lights down and they go ashore to get the supplies, we'll ram it and get it out of commission. Then we'll have Baker and this Featherd—and we'll put them where the dogs won't bite 'em."

After his despair of their last week, after his helpless festering anger at Baker, it was a new lease on hope to know he was going to snatch Baker's venture and throw him into prison and make his marriage to Elizabeth impossible! Baker was walking all unknowingly into a deadly trap. Walking into arrest and criminal disgrace and prison. He would be lucky to get off with a sentence of two years. That was the statute minimum for his offense.

Buckling on his belt-gun, Haskell snuffed the candles and went out of his cabin—on the easiest, most exultant, most deadly certain trip he had ever made.

CHAPTER IX

Wings Over the Wilderness

On that first day of flight, as dawn broke full and the sun chased away a layer of gossamer clouds beneath the White Speedair, Alan looked down with marveling eyes at a strange panorama. Evergreen forestry, silvery lakes and silvery network of rivers far below, swam past at a speed to amaze him. In thirty minutes he was covering a distance which would take a whole day's hard traveling by canoe or komatik.

Knowing that if he and Buzzard showed up at a police post or larger trading center, it would mean a quick and sorry end of their flight, Alan planned to avoid such places religiously. He had a conviction that he and Buzzard were "wanted." They had left too many tracks in Edmonton—clews that would speedily be followed up. The police there, a wise live outfit, had certainly connected them with the theft of all that government property and had radioed instructions for their arrest.

Eventually he and Buzzard were going to be caught. It was as inevitable as sunset. Soon or late they would have to return to civilization and face the music. To Alan the worst of it was that Buzzard was going to pay a heavy price for helping him on this thankless job. For himself he did not care; he hardly thought of it. . . . He was headed north again, on his last patrol, his greatest patrol.

As they worked on north, they made moderately good time, but only by incessant care and worry. Engine trouble caused them delay. Again and again they sat down on some unknown river or lake and sweated for hours over the old motor. Fuel was a constant problem. Avoiding Mounted detachments and Royal Signal corps stations like the plague, they dared stop only at wilderness-buried posts where radios were unlikely and no police handy. They could never be certain of getting fuel, and what they did get was usually half kerosene.

Alan was looking forward to his rendezvous with Bill as the end of all this worry about gas and oil. Besides the fuel there at Goose point, Bill had promised to cache some supplies up the Alooska near Joyce's home.

Alan was fervently looking ahead to meeting Bill at Elk Traverse lake, to getting those precious supplies, to seeing Joyce again there on the Big Alooska. All of his loyalty to the sister of his dead partner could not keep him from computing Joyce's vital spirited personality with Elizabeth's leisure-bored comfort, and Joyce's two years of lavish sacrifice with Elizabeth's idle deliberate dependence.

On their last evening, worn out by a day of engine trouble and head-winds and blinding rains, they alighted in a little spruce-buried lake on Silver-tip river, a short hundred miles south of Fort Endurance. Anchoring the plane, they paddled ashore, cooked a warm meal, and rolled up in their blankets for a few hours of desperately needed rest.

"Tomorrow's the day of days," Buzzard remarked, thinking of the supplies and a base to maneuver from.

"It's the day of days," Alan agreed, but he was thinking of Joyce running down the path, bareheaded in the sun, to greet them. Tomorrow he would know if she was safe. Tomorrow, after the rendezvous with Bill, the White Speedair would be dropping down upon the Big Alooska.

Buzzard was asleep almost instantly, but Alan, tossing in a useless attempt to sleep, finally got up, built a tiny fire, and sat beside it, thinking, a dead pipe in his teeth. . . .

As he sat there under the solemn spruces, he tried to look steadily at his looming marriage to Elizabeth, and decide his course. No longer blinded by idealization of her as a girl, he saw now, with pitiless insight, that all along she had not wanted him unless he had a good income and was out of the North. She might love him as well as she had ever loved anybody; but to her he was not greatly more than a means of getting what she wanted out of life.

The prospect of marrying her, when his respect was gone, made Alan wince. And his respect was gone with a vengeance. Those moments in the cabin, when she offered herself to him, had been a shock and revelation. She had acted not out of excusable passion, not out of love, but as a guarantee that he would take that Victoria job. He thought of the incident with something of revulsion.

Now he was groping to see the honest and righteous thing for him to do. He wondered whether it would be courage, or a weak yielding to desire, for him to break with Elizabeth and sweep aside the obligations binding him. There was right on both sides. Elizabeth was waiting for him; he had promised to marry her and take her out; he had burned his bridges and committed himself to that Victoria job. Yet it was wrong to enter a loveless marriage that would bring tragic unhappiness. It was wrong to marry Elizabeth when his whole-hearted respect and love went out to Joyce MacMillan.

In the lonely anguish of his thoughts he laid his decision more or less in the hands of time. He felt he must see Joyce again before he could take a decisive step. If he did capture these six criminals and so cleared her father, she would be grateful with all her heart. He meant to tell her about the tragic happening which had bound him to Elizabeth. If he could win back that old intimate comradeship with her and they could begin anew, then the righteous thing was to put Joyce's happiness above Elizabeth's.

A little after gray dawn Alan rebuilt the fire, cooked breakfast, and reluctantly awakened his partner.

Later, when they skirted out to the plane, Buzzard glanced at the tanks and remarked tersely:

"I hope your buddy, this Hardsock, has got some gas and oil cut to that take. It'll be our finish if he hasn't."

"Bill will have it there," Alan assured. "He may not be there himself, he's probably on duty; but we agreed exactly where to cache it. It'll be waiting for us."

They climbed in, taxied twice around the lake to warm the spluttering motor, took off and headed north toward Goose point at Lake Elk Traverse.

With the heavy rains stopped and the insect scourges abating, Alan knew the bandits were on the move again or shortly would be. When they did strike, he wanted to be there on the Big Alooska to look out for Joyce.

Ever since he came to believe that Steve MacMillan knew nothing of the crime, he had been puzzling about that truck of stolen furs. Something dark and sinister lay behind that pack. There was some connection between the trader and those criminals. But what?

Alan reasoned: "Those furs didn't get in that shed by accident. Those men might have had a grudge against Steve MacMillan and planted them there. They might have figured he'd show them to us and get in hot water. That guess is at least possible. If it's true, then their grudge might lead them to strike at Joyce."

If they intended anything against Joyce, they doubtlessly would attempt it just before they started eastward on their trek through the Great Barrens and Strong Woods. Alan had dreamed of that, dreamed of her being captured and taken along, as the bandits had captured Margaret Forrester.

With Haskell refusing to extend her any protection whatsoever, Alan felt that he and he alone stood between her and a terrible danger. If anything happened to the plane or to him and Buzzard. . . .

Religious and Secular Stories That Parallel

All the great religions have stories that parallel each other in some degree. For instance, Jephthah, one of the judges of Israel, made a remarkable vow before he marched against the Ammonites, that if he proved victorious he would offer to the Lord the first living thing which should come to meet him on his return. This happened to be his only daughter, whom he sacrificed to fulfill his rash vow. The history of Jephthah is contained in the second book of Judges. Idomeneus, in Homeric legend, king of Crete, succeeded his father Deucalion on the throne, and accompanied the Greeks to the Trojan war with a fleet of 80 ships. During this war he rendered himself famous by his valor. While returning, he made a vow to Neptune in a dangerous tempest that if he escaped he would offer to the god whatever living creature first presented itself to his eye on the Cretan shore. This was his son, who came to congratulate him on his safe return. Idomeneus redeemed his promise, but the inhumanity of this sacrifice rendered him so odious to his subjects that he was exiled from his country.—Montreal Family Herald.

Virgin Islands

Columbus discovered the Virgin Islands on his second voyage in 1493. It is said, amazed at the number, he feared there would not be enough saints names to go around, so he put them under the sacred patronage of the 11,000 martyred virgins of St. Ursula.

DARING FEAT OF EXPERT SWIMMER SAVES 4 LIVES

Paddles Five Miles to Bring Help to Friends Clinging to Boat.

Mobile, Ala.—The training of Harve Eastman, professional long-distance swimmer, has done more than bring him money. In his latest exhibition it brought him glory and credit for the saving of four lives, not to mention his own.

Harve and a party including two girls set out from the dock here one afternoon recently for a sail in Mobile bay. The craft was about five miles out when it was overturned by a squall.

The two girls, Jeanette Kennedy and Genevieve Henderson, the latter of New Orleans, could swim very little, and Harve rescued them the first time right then. He swam with them back to the overturned craft.

Too Far to Swim.

Harve was not certain how far out in the bay they had sailed, but he had an idea it was a little too far to swim for help. Then, too, some of the others might drown if a squall came up again.

So they decided to cling to the boat in the hope another craft would come by and rescue them.

They stayed in the water all night, the girls near hysteria. At times Harve and another boy, a fair swimmer, formed a sort of hammock by entwining their feet, permitting the girls to release their hold on the boat and get some rest. One of them even slept for a while.

At dawn the girls were almost dead. As the day wore on and no boats appeared, Harve began to worry. He was beginning to weaken himself, and he knew the girls could not hold out much longer.

He decided to take a chance on swimming to Mobile.

Sailors to the Rescue.

About four hours later, sailors on a government boat going down the Mobile ship channel to the open sea, saw a dripping youth lying on a channel beacon. They veered closer and one of them recognized Harve. They thought he was practising his long-distance swimming, but something in his attitude alarmed them.

The boat stopped off the beacon and sailors who went over in a small boat were hardly able to rouse the swimmer. He was almost dead with exhaustion after swimming the five miles through seas unusually choppy for the ordinarily quiet bay.

After Harve had revived the government boat sped to the rescue of the others. When the boat arrived one of the girls had fainted after the seventeen hours in the water and she was being supported by a half-unconscious boy.

A movement has been started to obtain a Carnegie medal for Harve.

New Disease Destroys Grasshoppers and Bees

Carson City, Nev.—Ranchers and bee keepers in this vicinity are wondering if there is a possible connection in the presence of a mysterious disease which has caused paralysis among horses and bees.

In recent weeks a number of horses have died from symptoms similar to paralysis. Large quantities of bees, in some instances entire colonies, have been wiped out by the disease, which has the same peculiar characteristics of the former.

Now a farmer residing in Carson valley has come forth with the statement that, in making a study of grasshoppers, he found them clinging to stalks of alfalfa, unable to use their hind legs. A large number had already died.

Forgotten HEROES

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A Tough Old Pioneer

IT IS a far cry from Griffins Wharf in the Boston of colonial days to the "Gold Coast" of Chicago, but there is a link between the two. For some of the "400" of the midwest metropolis, as they serve afternoon tea in their luxurious apartments and penthouses, can look down into Lincoln park and can see there a reminder of the historic "tea pouring" which took place in Massachusetts 158 years ago. It is a simple granite boulder, bearing a bronze tablet whereon you may read "In memory of David Kennison, the last survivor of the 'Boston Tea Party,' who died in Chicago February 24, 1852, aged one hundred and fifteen years, three months, seventeen days, and is buried near this spot."

Yet the Boston Tea Party was only one incident in one of the most remarkable careers in all American history. Kennison was born in New Hampshire in 1736 and was one of the first to enlist at the outbreak of the Revolution. He was a minute man at Lexington and Concord and with his father and two brothers he fought at Bunker Hill. He served in the Continental army, as a soldier and scout, was captured by the Mohawk Indians and held as a prisoner for several years. After the war he enlisted in the regular army and was a member of the garrison of the first Fort Dearborn. Although past seventy, he reenlisted in 1808 for a term of five years and was a survivor of the Fort Dearborn massacre. He is said to have fought at Sackett's Harbor in the War of 1812 and to have been wounded in the army by a grapeshot at Williamsburg.

Next he settled in New York and met with far more disasters than ever he had during his service in two wars. A falling tree fractured his skull and broke his collar bone and two ribs; at a military review the discharge of a cannon broke both of his legs; and the kick of a horse left a scar on his forehead which he carried till his death.

Kennison was married four times and was the father of twenty-two children. Late in life he became separated from his children and went to Chicago to live in 1845. Finding that his Revolutionary war pension of $8 was not enough for his living expenses, he took up manual labor again and continued until 1848. Then at the age of one hundred and twelve he decided he had earned a rest, but having no other means of support he entered the Chicago museum as an exhibit. For the last twenty months of his life he was bedridden but his sight and hearing, which had failed him for a time, became perfect again and he retained those faculties until his death in 1852.

The Defense of Fort Jefferson

YOU will look in vain on the Revolutionary war maps for Fort Jefferson. It probably was never placed on any of them, for its existence was a short one. But during that brief time it was the scene of one of the most heroic defenses in the history of the American frontier. It was built in 1781 upon orders from Gov. Thomas Jefferson of Virginia by Col. George Rogers Clark near Mayfield's creek in Kentucky, about five miles below the mouth of the Ohio river.

Clark then returned to Louisville leaving in command Capt. James Piggott, a veteran of Washington's army and of Clark's expedition into the Illinois country. Angered by this intrusion upon their lands the Choctaws and Chickasaws under their half-breed Chief Colbert marched against Fort Jefferson and laid seige to it. A messenger was hastily dispatched to Clark but it was doubtful if reinforcements could arrive in time.

The situation in the fort soon became desperate. Their provisions were almost exhausted, the water supply was failing, ammunition was running low and as a final horror, sickness swept the little garrison. One of the defenders who was captured by the Indians was forced to tell the true state of affairs in the stockade, and upon learning this, Colbert, under a flag of truce, demanded the surrender of the fort, promising to spare the lives of the settlers, but declaring that if there was further resistance he might not be able to control his warriors if they once swept over the walls.

Captain Piggott made a counter proposal. If the Indians would raise the siege, the settlers would abandon the fort and leave the country. Colbert agreed to submit this proposal to a council of the warriors. While the council was in progress reinforcements from Louisville arrived and preparations were made to defend the fort to the last.

The Indians immediately attacked, but the small cannon which the Louisville party had brought and which had been mounted on the walls mowed them down by the score. But despite this the battle raged fiercely for hours before Colbert gave up the attempt to carry the fort by storm and retired from the field. The settlers, too, had had enough. They prepared to evacuate the fort, some to go to Louisville and others to their former homes in Kaskaskia, Ill. With their departure the fort fell into ruins and within a short time the wilderness had again reclaimed the spot where Fort Jefferson had stood.

A Cold

Colds are common because people are careless. Prompt use of aspirin will always check a cold. Or relieve your cold at any stage. And genuine aspirin can't hurt you. Take two tablets of Bayer Aspirin at the first indication of a cold, and that's usually the end of it. If every symptom hasn't disappeared in a few hours, repeat. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. Take enough to give complete relief. And if your throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in water and gargle away all soreness. In every package of genuine Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for colds, headaches, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis. Millions who used to suffer from these things have found winter comfort in aspirin.

Moreover

Irene Castle McLaughlin, whose home for homeless Chicago dogs recently burnt down, is a great lover of animals, and at a luncheon she told an animal story.

"There was once a colored gentleman," she began, "who had a dog named 'Moreover.'

"'Queer name, that, for a dog,' a white gentleman said. 'Where did you get the name from, Junius?'

"'Moreover am a Biblical name, sah,' Junius, the owner of the dog, explained.

"'Yes?' said the gentleman. 'How so?'

"'Don't you remember, sah,' said the colored gentleman, 'what de good book says:

"'"Moreover, the dog came and licked his wounds."'"

Reward for Large Families

Rewarding parents of large families is one of the most brilliant functions that take place annually at the Hotel de Ville, Paris. Nearly 150 medals of gold, silver and bronze, according to the merits of each case, were this year distributed. The gold medals went to the parents of eleven and twelve offspring, silver to those of eight or nine, and bronze to those of five, six or seven. There were nine of the gold class this year, twenty-one of the silver and more than one hundred bronze ones presented.

A Far Better External Remedy

No matter how up to date your doctor is, there is one old-fashioned remedy he often finds most helpful—the mustard plaster. For generations it has been recognized as useful in treating bad colds, particularly where pneumonia is feared. But today many physicians realize that there is something far better in the way of external treatment, giving results never before obtained. It is B. & M., The Penetrating Germicide. For quickly checking coughs and colds it is always dependable. Should always be used where pneumonia threatens or has set in. B. & M. is the only germicide that penetrates when externally applied. There is nothing else like it, no substitute for it. Your druggist should have it in stock. Or we will mail a full-size bottle on receipt of $1.25 and his name. Useful booklet free. F. E. Hallowe'en Party

Last Friday evening, Mrs. R. E. Blaney and Miss Davis entertained the High school and Grade teachers at a charming Hallowe'en party at the home of Dr. and Mrs Blaney. Interesting games and guessing contests were the order of the evening, prizes being awarded the best "guessers." The Hallowe'en idea was carried out in the refreshments, which were dainty cakes and sandwiches adorned with Hallowe'en faces. The party lasted until a late hour. All pronounced Mrs Blaney and Miss Davis most charming hostesses.

Regular preaching service next Sunday morning and evening. "When th' frost is on th' pumpkin, and th' fodder's in th' shock." And are not these glorious fall days? Taken day in and day out the whole year round, California's climate, nor any other, can compare with this which we enjoy right here. We get the sun an hour earlier than California and keep it just as long. Depression has not hit our weather conditions And the aforementioned pumpkins are ready for pies Fat Cattle are being herded into the shipping pens. Truly this is harvest time. Come to church next Sunday and let us worship the Lord of the harvest.

The pastor will preach at Ancho next Sunday.

Prayer Defeats Sin—We are beaten by sin, not because it overwhelms us with its superior strength, but because it surprises us. It catches us off balance. We seldom stop to take account of our probable strength and weakness. We begin the game like bewildered blunderers. We are dazed by the sudden, brilliant maneuvers of our foes. Our signals become confused. We recoil, breathless, at varied and unanticipated thrusts. We have no reserves ready. The contest becomes a riot.

Of course, we are vanquished, and that notwithstanding the best intentions, the highest resolutions, the finest courage we can muster. We fail because we have not spent enough time preparing ourselves in the gymnasium of prayer.—Bernard C. Clausen.
