Friday Night's Basket Ball Game

Olson's Terrible Swedes were not so terrible after all. They were just a crowd of clean-cut, up standing young college men, with a sense of fair play and sportsmanship and Carrizozo was not outclassed the least bit. We had an all star team of our own picked from the best players in the county. The line-up was as follows: Detloff, Harkey, Cooper, Price and Leonard of Carrizozo; Jellun and Woodrow Clements of Corona; Pipkin and Traylor of Capitan Detloff Price, Harkey and Traylor made the best plays for Carrizozo.

Last Friday's game was well advertised and all the spectators who could be accommodated were at Community hall away ahead of time to witness the game. Every part of Lincoln county was represented and the good-natured raillery gave evidence of enthusiasm of the onlookers. Score was 71 to 35 in favor of the Swedes. Cowan of Capitan acted as referee.

Musical-Party

Mrs. Elizabeth Gallacher gave a musical party last Wednesday evening. About 40 guests were present and every one had to sing, play or take some part, to help entertain the crowd. Vocal solos were sung by Mrs J. M. Beck and LaMoyne Johnson; Vocal duets were by Miss Herringa and Mr. Hale; Mrs. F. L. Elliott and Mrs. Young and Mr. and Mrs Louis Adams; piano solos were by Mrs. Burns, Mrs. Mendenhall, Miss Melaas, Lesia Cooper and Helen May Young. Ernie Prehm gave a violin solo, accompanied by Otto Prehm on the piano; Mrs. Don English played a solo on the cello with Mrs. Oscar Snow as accompanist. LaMoyne Johnson danced and Miss Brickley gave a reading. Jane Gallacher gave a reading accompanied by Zane Harkey on the piano. Father Brady and Mrs Grece were to have sung solos, but they could not be present. Five group numbers were sung. This was a most enjoyable occasion. Refreshments consisted of different kinds of homemade candy.

They're Coming

Firemen . . . a doctor . . . neighbors from around the corner or the next farm—they're coming to help you because of your emergency telephone call.

Isn't it reassuring to know that whether you live in town or miles out, you can reach others instantly by telephone?

That alone is worth the few cents a day you pay for telephone service. In addition, a telephone saves many errands, brings social chats with friends or business information. The more you use it the more useful it becomes.

The local F. T. A. voted last week to establish a soup kitchen in connection with the school on the east side. Mesdames Vidaurri and Sanchez will have charge of it.

Arrest Three For Holdup Near Tinnie

C. F. Hogue, K H. Sheets and Billy Green, all of Roswell, were arrested by Chaves county officers Sunday in connection with the holdup of W. M. Smith near Tinnie Thursday evening.

Officers yesterday requested both Roswell newspapers not to publish that these men had been arrested because they were still looking for a fourth man whom they were certain would return to Roswell if he did not know his confederates were being held. The Record yesterday complied with this request. Officers now say that it will probably cost Chaves county between $400 and $500 to apprehend the other man, as this information was published by another newspaper this morning.

Hogue is the man who was with Smith on the outing when he was robbed.

Following the holdup, Smith said he had been robbed of $640 and Hogue reported that he had been robbed of $40.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Hogue and their families went out on a day's outing together last Thursday and as they were playing cards by their tent which they had pitched about 12 miles north of Tinnie, two masked men robbed them of all the money they had with them. Officers believe that Hogue was a party to the holdup. Mr. Smith and his family came to New Mexico from Mississippi and were seeking to locate here for health reasons. The money of which they were robbed was every cent which they possessed. They had been here for two weeks and were staying at La Hondo Auto Camp.—Roswell Record.

Colin looked at the great toe of the colonel, bent so that it was riding on its neighbors.

"Since I kicked a man that insulted me that fool toe don't appear to know where it belongs," said Morgan.

The next evening he spoke to the brigade.

"If any of you has got a sliver in his brain, I'll pull it out," he began. "We are going to win this war. Wait a minute. I'll skin that cat for you. I know the Commander in Chief. He is a great fighter an' if you stick here you will all get it from him. It's as catching as the measles. He's a man of brain an' guts. If we do our part he'll lead us to victory. The British don't know how to fight in a wild country an' keep themselves from starvin'. We know the bush. We can fight well and we can starve well. We know how to go to hell and find our way out of it. They're not used to that kind o' manouverin'. Don't worry. The ocean, the snows, the rocks, the stone walls, the forests, the swamps, an' the mountains are our friends an' allies. They're hard to beat if you're on the right side of 'em. You'll drive them rump-fed lady-killers out o' Boston before spring."

Fortunately, a good part of the army had already begun "to get it from him" and from Morgan.

In September the Bushmen and their chief left camp with Col. Benedict Arnold and his thousand men to march through the northern wilderness and join General Montgomery in the siege of Quebec. In consequence of this depletion Colin and Col. Simeon Botts were sent into the west to hasten the process of recruiting. Before they left Revere brought a letter from Pat. Communication had become more difficult, and now the young spy rarely ventured to cross the lines.

"My beloved," the letter began, "I received the pass, but General Gage is in a bad temper and refuses to permit me to go through. His son is very ill. I hear that he will have to lose his arm. It was a bad arm—the one with which he used to embrace me when we met. Poor boy! Of course I am sorry for him, but that arm often made me angry. It was an indecent arm.

"You are always in my mind, and I am a lonely and forlorn creature. Still, in a sense I have you with me. Even in my dreams you are with me but it is only a shadow, and a shadow is poor company at best.

"I must be content to stay at home and wait until this vile war is ended. I think that it will be better for my health than a day of your ardent love-making. And the parting. Oh, dear! the parting! I must have looked like Ophelia singing her death song. Honestly, my dear, when I got home I was weak for days. My mother wanted to know if I had been in a battle. 'No more of that,' she said.

"How silly for good men to be fighting each other! These British generals are all kindly, delightful gentlemen. I'm sure it isn't their fault. I suppose that the kings cause all the trouble. George the Third! I'd like to get hold of the big nose of that old German. I'm sure I'd lose my head for it. I'd make him know that I am in love with an American soldier and with dear Mrs. Washington and the grand and gentle General whom she called her 'old man.'

"All this is from your faithful and devoted. Pat."

Colin and Colonel Botts set out at daylight on their horses with a good store of food in the saddlebags. Their orders were to get the people together in their churches and schoolhouses and kindle their enthusiasm for the cause. They were to see leading men of known loyalty, and lay before them the situation at Cambridge and the imperative need of strengthening the army. Washington had said to the young man:

"I send you because you understand the principles involved and know the camp and have an unusual gift for self-expression. I send Botts because he is well known and liked in that part of the province and because he can be spared. When you are at the most convenient point in the West, I shall ask you to leave the colonel and go north to Ticonderoga and get a report of the sledges made and the number of ox teams available for winter service. You will then proceed to this camp. Here is a letter to the commander of the fort."

The General had said little of Botts but enough. He was a lawyer in the flourishing town of Springfield, where he was familiarly known as "Sim" Botts.

He was a ruddy, overfed man more than six feet tall, of a serious countenance. He had also a serious notion of the importance of his accomplishments and intentions. He was wont to say: "It is claimed that my reputation reposes on the arts of the orator but I insist that my only gift is a passion for the discovery and dissemination of simple facts and eternal verities."

His reputation was by no means alone in finding repose on the soft bed of his oratory. He was one of the voices of the new inspiration and his long side-whiskers resembled a passionate and permanent gesture. Colonel Botts had an abnormal appetite for richness in food and rhetoric. He ate pie three times a day. In his look and talk there was ample evidence of both physical and mental indigestion. He had studied the dictionary and the poets. His mind was like a cold dark cellar cluttered with storage and so ill-lighted that his thoughts seemed to have trouble in finding their way out of it. Naturally utterance was followed by evaporation. It created a fog in which his ideas were hidden. In court and on the platform he was fluent, often intense, but no one comprehended his argument. It imparted only one conviction, namely that he was willing to die on the altar of his faith. But that was enough.

His audience concluded that, while his words were "too deep for them," no man could be wrong whose soul and body had been so prodigiously engaged in the argument. So his inscrutability had become an asset and a source of revenue.

In this singular manner Sim Botts gave his convictions to the people of the western province. They believed in him and when he wanted an office they voted for him. He had the reputation of being "a profound thinker." Out of a full heart Colin wrote to his mother:

"Sim Botts' profundity may be a relief to those accustomed to sterner hardships. It's easier than lifting rocks. It's like bad weather; work stops and weary men go to sleep. They wake up grateful and refreshed. They are minded to give him the credit he demands. He is a symbolic figure. I understand him perfectly. I spent last night with a member of the congress called home by the illness of his wife. He is a graduate of Harvard and an able citizen. Being a fellow alumnus and a member of my club, he gave me frank opinions.

"I asked: 'Why is it that our army cannot get the help it needs from congress?'

"'Sim Botts!' he answered.

"'What has he to do with congress?'

"'Well, there are so many Sim Bottses in it that they clog its business and even defeat some of its best purposes. They come from all parts. Before an important measure can get through every one of them, seeking the fame of Patrick Henry, must have a chance to smite the British. These men indulge in weeks of superfluous and passionate remarks. They think that all we have to do to get money is turn a printing press. This may make us more trouble than we have yet known. The Sim Botts man has just enough learning to be dangerous. He can impose upon the ignorant crowd and get himself elected to important positions. Look at our Sim. He knows nothing about the arts of war yet he was able to defeat a good man who should have been the colonel of our regiment.'

"'Do you think that we can win the war?'

"'Yes. There are two men of genius who will win the war. They are Washington and Franklin. We must first suppress the Bottses. That will take a year or more. If Washington can hold his army, Franklin will get help in Europe. The British officers have no great enthusiasm for their cause. This is the only explanation of their inactivity. Gage, with his trained army and the help of the river, should have captured Cambridge long ago and driven us back.'"

The letter ends with these significant sentences:

"I think that there must be chaos in Philadelphia as well as in Cambridge. They are both suffering from the same trouble and that is Sim Botts."

The successful joint campaign ended in a small village at the edge of the wilderness in the far northwest. There in the early morning Colin left Colonel Botts and set out on a horse path in a forest, vast as the ocean in the east, and broken only by small clearings.

He found rude entertainment on his way at log inns and the cabins of lonely pioneers. One of the latter was a thrifty Dutch farmer with a barn filled with wheat and hay. Colin sat down at supper with a large family. In the center of the table was a big wooden bowl of bread and milk into which all save two young children dipped with wooden spoons and ate.

At a squalid log tavern in a clearing he found men and women sleeping on the floor of its main room rolled in dirty blankets. An army scout arose from the floor when Colin entered with the host, who carried a lantern in his hand.

"I can't stand it here," said the scout. "Too many fleas! Hay for me! I'm going to the barn and you'd better come along."

They lay down with their blankets in the haymow.

"Who are these folk that are crowding the inn?" Colin asked.

"Settlers way east o' here—young people mostly who have traveled more than sixty miles in the saddle to go to a dance over at Eph Kittle's on Samson creek. The unmarried girls went up the ladder into the loft to sleep. Young folks don't mind a lot o' hard work to get a little fun."

The third day out, his mare being weary, Colin halted in the forest to spend one night and there fell into a strange adventure. He had lighted a fire near sundown, the evening being frosty. This was no sooner done than he heard the bawling of a bear a little way up a near mountain-side. In a moment he could hear the animal coming through bushes near him. It emerged standing up taller than a man, chanking its teeth and frothing at the mouth. It was a black bear of unusual size. It went back into the bushes. Colin's gun was in its holster lying with his blanket on the other side of the fire. He made haste to get it. Before he could disengage his weapon the bear had come out of the bush again and was close upon him. To save himself he dropped the gun, which he had drawn half out of its holster and threw his blanket over the bear's head. The bewildered bear was floundering on the ground for a few seconds trying to disengage himself. Meanwhile Colin drew his gun "and put an end to the quarrel but not without doing serious damage to the blanket."

The little matter so shook his nerves that he saddled his mare, who had now finished her oats, and pushed on hoping to find shelter before the darkness had grown too thick for travel. Some three miles away he came to a clearing and saw a glimmer of lights ahead in a scatter of small houses. Soon he drew up at a large log inn whose mistress, a tall, plump, broad-shouldered, Amazonian woman with arms bare to the elbow, gave him a hearty welcome. A historian has described her as a woman "of singular strength and courage, about thirty years of age, with dark hair and eyes and a powerful figure." It was a cleanly, commodious well-kept tavern.

"I've had a hard ride and am hungry," said Colin.

"Hard riding
"Good abiding,"

the Amazonian lady murmured. "This is not a bad bettering place."

"Where am I?" Colin asked.

"This, sir, is the village of Skenesborough. It has a sawmill, a church, a school, a store, a blacksmith shop and two hundred inhabitants—mostly absent. Only women, babies and old men are left in the settlement. The rest have gone to the war. Will you have something to drink?"

That was apt to be the first question that greeted the traveler arriving at a back-country tavern. After a fatiguing journey on the "shake-gut" roads and trails they were apt to be in need of stimulation. Often they got too much of it. The bar was the dominating feature of the place. Colin put his mare in the stable and, as he was wont to do, gave the most careful attention to her comfort. When he returned to the inn a good supper of bear steak, baked potatoes, preserved berries and pumpkin pie awaited him.

The cheerful innkeeper asked the young man if he liked the bear steak.

"It was the tenderest meat I have ever eaten," Colin answered.

"It ought to be tender. It was a cub about three months old. I killed it a few miles down the road this morning. Its mother was a monster bear. I flung the cub over my horse's withers and got away."

"The old bear must have thought that I had the cub in my pocket," said Colin. "She got after me plenty." He told of his curious adventure and of his leaving the dead bear.

"If she'd 'a' fetched you a cuff 't would 'a' ruined ye," said one of the old men. "A she-bear won't stan' no meddlin' with her fam'ly affairs an' she can be mortal quick."

The woman was busy behind the bar stirring up rum and molasses for the old men who sat by the fire. When she had served them she asked:

"On your way to the fort?"

"My name is Cabot. I'm from Cambridge and on my way to the fort. What is your name?"

"Bowlby. I'm Rachel Bowlby. My husband is with General Schuyler. He's a lieutenant colonel. In time of peace I'm a school teacher. I wish you'd tell 'em at the fort that we need a few soldiers to protect us. Our boys have all enlisted and gone away. I'm the only fighting man in the place."

"You!" he exclaimed.

The old men laughed. One of them knocked the ashes from his pipe saying, "You hear to me, young man. If ye don't think that womern kin wrastle, you tackle her an' ye'll learn a lot ye didn't know. She's a mortal, powerful womern, she is. The big boys in our school have learnt better than to git keerless with her."

"Mercy! You'd think that I was a panther," she said in a mild gentle

"Mercy! You'd Think That I Was a Panther."

voice. "There is no one that likes peace and good-will more than I do."

"Why do you want protection? Afraid of bears?"

"Shucks, no! Injuns! They've raided two places west of here. Stole a lot of horses and all the loot they could lay their hands on. They're stirred up by the war. A massacre would be fun for them. When they get drunk ye don't know what they'll do. They're expecting the British to come down from Canada. It's sure the redcoats were planning to be here before now."

"The siege of Quebec has held them back," said Colin.

"I wouldn't wonder, but the Injuns don't know it. They've got a mighty grudge and are looking for the British. A roving band of braves is out in the big woods. They're liable to fall on us any night."

The old men went to their homes. Colin loaded his gun. The woman lighted two candles and led the way to his bedroom on the first floor. The young man carried his gun with him.

His record of the history of that day ends with the statement that he slept in his day dress, ready to leap out of the open window and run to his mare at the first sign of trouble. It was a peaceful night, however, and the young man set out at an early hour in the morning, when a number of children were skylarking in the barroom.

Ticonderoga was then a wild, shapeless tumble of rocks and hills. It was a saying that God must have made it in the dark. Arriving at the fort, he found Colonel Brentwood, delivered his letter from Washington and received a full report for the General of the work progressing in the mountain valleys of Vermont. Colin told the colonel of the helpless condition of the little settlement of Skenesborough and of the fear of its people.

"They are in danger," said the colonel. "A drunken band of Mohawks went north a few miles to the west a week ago. They expect the British to be coming down from Canada. My scouts are watching them. If they head toward Skenesborough, I'll send down a squad of men to keep the right look on their faces. They're a bad lot. They worry me."

On his way back to Skenesborough Colin met some three hundred soldiers coming up from Albany to the fort all drunk and singing and yelling. With supplies from the Dutch city they were having a merry march.

He arrived at the little settlement long after dark.

Having eaten his supper, Colin was sitting by the fire with the old mill hands and Mrs. Bowlby when they heard the hoofbeats of a galloping horse. It halted in front of the door. The woman opened it. A man shouted:

"A band of bad Injuns is comin' down the road. They're not above a mile away. Hide yer liquor an' git ready to fight."

The men jumped to their feet.

"Don't lose your heads," said Mrs. Bowlby. "Most of the liquor is hid in the haymow."

She hauled two heavy sacks from behind the bar. Colin seized them and toiled toward the barn. The woman followed him with a basket filled with bottles. Their burdens were quickly buried in the hay. They hurried back to the inn, where Mrs. Bowlby began to organize a well-considered plan of defense. She ordered the men to build a big fire of dry wood a few feet in front of the door. That done she blew on her conch shell. Immediately all the men, women and children of the place came running toward the inn. The children were shut inside of it. A line of men and women covered its front and the lane that led to the stable, thickly hedged with thorn bushes. They were armed with pitchforks, pickaxes, scythes, crowbars, pikes, bows and arrows.

The redoubtable female gave her orders: "Captain, you stand here with your gun and pistol. Give me that sword.

"Now you all keep quiet and let me do the talking. If I tell ye to charge, pitch into 'em. I guess we can scratch 'em up some before they get our scalps."

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

At Boston, in July, 1775, Colin Cabot, ardent young lover of liberty, bids good-by to his sweetheart, Patience "Pat" Fayerweather, daughter of a loyalist but herself at heart a "rebel." He joins the Revolutionary army at Cambridge, and is mustered into the company of Capt. Amos Farnsworth. Colin impresses Washington, and he makes him his informal secretary, with the rank of captain. A letter from Pat tells Colin she is to visit friends outside the American lines, and ask him to meet her. Obtaining leave, he sets out. Learning of a British plot to capture Colin, Farnsworth, with a troop, rides to the rescue. A British patrol, led by Harry Gage, Colin's rival for the hand of Pat, threatens the young patriot. Farnsworth and his troop come up. Gage challenges Colin to a duel. They fight and Gage is wounded. Colin returns to Cambridge. Washington, having [illegible] dueling, reduces him to the ranks, but Mrs. Washington, affectionately known in the army as "Lady" Washington, remains his stanch friend. Pat visits headquarters and is welcomed by "Lady" Washington. Pat returns to Boston.

HOLE IN BANK OF RIVER HIS HOME FOR HALF CENTURY

Nuts and Berries Chief Article of Food of Nebraska Hermit.

Springfield, Neb.—Old Henry Morris has beaten the depression. Old Henry Morris doesn't even know there has been a depression. He has lived in a hole in the bank of the Platte river for the last 40 years and depressions and other events pass over his head like water off a duck's back. Just so the squirrels don't beat him to the walnut and other trees, everything is O. K. to Henry Morris.

Morris is seventy-seven years old. He was thirty-one when he found this hole in the river bank and crawled in to take a nap. He has lived there ever since. With logs and planks salvaged from the river he built a sort of front to his cave, with a door, and here he lives, year in and year out. In winter he sort of "hibernates," coming out of his hole only once or twice during the entire cold season. He is known as "The Hermit of the Platte."

Morris fell ill this fall and the farmers gathered in force and built him a little, one-room shack near to his cave. They furnished it with a stove, a bed, a chair and bedding—but Henry wouldn't move from his cave. Neighbors had to take him by force. Then they wrecked his cave so that he couldn't return to it, for a while at least.

Nuts Chief Item of Diet.

That talk about everything being all right with Morris as long as the squirrels don't beat him to the walnut trees is no joke. Nuts are among his principal articles of diet. In the fall he lays up quantities of them for winter, and it's a tragedy if the squirrels get to the nuts first.

Dried berries, corn gathered from some farmer's field after the shuckers have passed and a few bushels of wheat gleaned from fence corners provide the remainder of his food. He doesn't use coffee, tea or milk. His only drink is water, and the river is but 100 feet away.

Morris burns the limbs he picks up when they fall from trees or are brought down the river. He stacks this up inside his cave, and when he shuts and barricades the door for the winter not much fuel is necessary to keep him warm, for he spends virtually all his time in bed anyway. In the summer he comes out daily, mostly at night.

"I've worn these pants more than 20 years," he told a newspaper man. He doesn't remember just where nor when he got his shoes, but it was years and years ago. He goes barefoot all summer and he takes off his shoes when he hibernates in winter. So he gets the utmost wear out of them.

He hasn't had a shave in 46 years nor a haircut by a barber. When his hair gets about a foot long he just chops off some of it.

Morris came from New Jersey. When he was a young fellow he started tramping around the country and reached Nebraska when he was thirty-one. He denies that a woman is in any way responsible.

No Books or Papers.

The old fellow has no books and no newspapers. During the winter he just "thinks." In the 46 years he has lived in his hole in the ground he has been to Omaha, 15 miles away, only twice.

Another thing Morris didn't know until lately—he didn't know there had been an election—and he didn't care either. The last time he cast a vote his ballot was marked for James G. Blaine, back in 1884.

A small sack of salt a couple of times a year is about all that he buys. Each summer, for a day or two, he works in the harvest field and gets the cash. That's all he needs. He beats up his wheat and corn into a coarse flour or meal, mixes it with water from the river, adds a little salt and cooks it on his little stove. Then he'll eat some nuts or dried berries, take a drink of water and he's eaten enough to last him two or three days.

Dog, Cat Beneficiaries of $20,000 Trust Fund

Chicago.—Red, a sad-eyed shepherd dog of somewhat uncertain ancestry, and Peanuts, a cat whose ancestry is even more uncertain, walked the earth recently a rich couple in dog-and-catdom.

Red and Peanuts were made beneficiaries of a $20,000 trust fund left by their mistress, Mrs. Alice Hunter, to provide her pets with the choicest bones and the finest catnip for the duration of their lives.

So long as Red and Peanuts live the income of the fund will be spent to keep them comfortable. Upon their death the money will be divided among the Anti-Cruelty society, Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin's dog refuge, the Orphans of the Storm, and the Home for Destitute and Crippled Children.

Beware the Cough or Cold that Hangs On

Persistent coughs and colds lead to serious trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with two-fold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and inhibits germ growth.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by high medical authorities as one of the greatest healing agencies for persistent coughs and colds and other forms of throat troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the infected membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and checks the growth of the germs.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of persistent coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, bronchitis and other forms of respiratory diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. (Adv.)

Mother of 7—Still Young

THE woman who gives her organs the right stimulant need not worry about growing old. Her system doesn't stagnate; her face doesn't age. She has the health and "pep" that come from a lively liver and strong, active bowels.

When you're sluggish and the system needs help, don't take a lot of "patent medicines." There's a famous doctor's prescription for just such cases, and every druggist keeps this standard preparation. It is made from fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and pure pepsin. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin. Take a little every day or so, until every organ in your body feels the big improvement.

The next time you have a bilious headache, or feel all bound-up, take this delicious syrup instead of the usual cathartic. You'll be rid of all that poisonous waste, and you haven't weakened the bowels. You'll have a better appetite, and feel better in every way. The constant use of cathartics is often the cause of a sallow complexion and lines in the face. And so unnecessary!

Would you like to break yourself of the cathartic habit? At the same time building health and vigor that protects you from frequent sick spells, headaches, and colds? Get a big bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin today. Use often enough to avoid those attacks of constipation. When you feel weak and run-down or a coated tongue or bad breath warns you the bowels need to be stimulated. Give it to children instead of strong laxatives that sap their strength. It isn't expensive.

THEY HAVE FOUND A 3-MINUTE WAY TO RELIEVE SORE THROAT

All Pain And Soreness Eased In Few Minutes This Simple Way

Proves Only Medicine Helps A Sore Throat

Modern medical science now throws an entirely new light on sore throat. A way that eases the pain, rawness and irritation in as little as two or three minutes.

Results are among the most extraordinary in medical science. On doctors' advice, millions are following this way . . . discarding old-time "washes" and "antiseptics." For it has been found that only medicine can help a sore throat.

Simple To Do. All you do is crush and dissolve three BAYER Aspirin Tablets in half a glass of water. Gargle with it twice—as pictured above. If you have any indication of a cold—before gargling take 2 Bayer Aspirin Tablets with a full glass of water. This is to combat any signs of cold that have gone into your system. Keep on taking if cold has a "hold." For Genuine Bayer Aspirin will not harm you. Your doctor will tell you, it does not depress the heart. Get a box of 12 or a bottle of 100 at any drug store.

Reduces Infection, Eases Pain Instantly. Gargling with Bayer Aspirin will do three things: Relieve soreness at once. Allay inflammation. AND—reduce infection; which is the important thing in fighting a sore throat.

It requires medicine—like BAYER ASPIRIN—to do these things! That is why throat specialists throughout America are prescribing this BAYER gargle in place of old-time ways. Results are quick and amazing.

Be careful, however, that you get real BAYER Aspirin Tablets for this purpose. For they dissolve completely enough to gargle without leaving irritating particles. Watch this when you buy.

NO TABLETS ARE GENUINE BAYER ASPIRIN WITHOUT THIS CROSS

Mrs. Ira B. Smith, Editor and Publisher

It is impossible to follow the relations between the United States Government and foreign Governments without a feeling of indignation about the shiftiness and deceit practiced by foreigners, in the name of "diplomacy." Japan violates all it's pledges as it continues to slaughter the Chinese, and France shamelessly defaults its war debt payments. Many other Governments leave themselves open to criticism, and there is general distrust of their good intentions. These facts furnish the reason for the United States hesitating to join the World Court. The Senate of the United States has always believed in the underlying principle of this Court. The trouble is that the Senate does not take much stock in the nations that are already most conspicuous in the Court.

There is a good deal of imagination about the importance of our five or ten per cent foreign trade, and American business men are gradually coming around to believe that if our own people will buy at home that it will swing the balance of actual trade in favor of our own country.

I've heard people say that the first hundred dollars came the hardest of all. Nothing to it, so far as I have observed. The last hundred dollars is coming so hard that after days and days trying, I haven't cornered quite forty dollars of it.

It is said a dollar nowadays will travel two or three times as far as it would have done a year or so ago. That being the case, we know of several that must have been short winded.

In life as in politics the fellow who expects the least is designed to the fewest disappointments.

You can't fool all the people all the time, but as a general thing it is seldom necessary.

Delay Nepotism Survey

Santa Fe, N. M. Feb 4. (AP) —Representative J. V. Taylor, chairman of a house sub-committee charged with investigation of salaries and nepotism in state offices, said today he had reports from all except the highway department.

Taylor said he thought the sub-committee would be prepared to report next week.—Las Vegas Optic.

The Livestock Situation

Los Angeles, February 10, 1933 Livestock markets during the past few days have been characterized by some firmness, especially on the Pacific Coast. On the Los Angeles market, there appears to be an improved demand for heavier cattle than has been the case for some time. The highest prices are still paid for choice, long-fed baby beeves, which are quotable at $5 00 to $5 50. Heavy steers, weighing up to 1200 pounds, have been selling fully a cent a pound under 700 to 900 pound weights, but are now selling to better advantage, with actual sales as high as $4 75

Trade authorities look for relatively smaller hog marketings during the next three months and many feel that some seasonal advance may be expected. Choice butcher hogs sold above the 4 ct mark this week for the first time in several months. Middle Western markets are fluctuating slightly with little actual gain in values noted so far.

There is a much firmer tone in the fat lamb market on the Pacific Coast, due to reduced supplies, while lamb prices on the Missouri River markets have declined during the week. Choice handyweight fed lambs are now quotable up to 6 cents a pound or better. Lambing has been completed in most of the early lambing districts in California, and with feed conditions greatly improved as a result of heavy rains, a good quality California lamb crop seems to be assured.

It is difficult to forecast any substantial gains in livestock values, unless there is a general improvement in business and industry. The middle west is known to have a large supply of corn, which is even now netting growers more money through the medium of pork and beef, than in outright sales. As long as grain prices are low as at present, we can hardly expect to see decreased feeding operations, and certainly, there is no immediate prospect of reduced hog numbers

An abundant crop of barley seems assured in California, as a result of January rains, and a heavy carry over of 1932 crop barley is also on hand. Feeding of barley has been extensive in California and it appears that barley growers themselves will find it far more profitable to feed out their crops to livestock than to continue to attempt to sell the grain as such.

It would seem far more satisfactory and profitable to feed grains on the farms where it is grown, or at least within a very short hauling distance, than to expect to realize profits on grain which must bear heavy transportation costs.

Ranchers Warn Cattle Rustlers

Roswell, N. M., Feb. 4 (AP).—The ultra modern livestock rustler had an ominous warning from southern New Mexico cattlemen to keep hands off their stock.

Unless authorities can stop "rubber tired" rustling the ranchers threatened to establish an old-fashioned vigilance committee to handle the situation "as it used to be handled in the old range days." Judge Colt ruled then.

Members of a committee representing 100 ranchmen held a conference here and reported more than 1000 head of cattle, including many registered animals, have been killed or stolen by rustlers during the past two months.

"If this means fails we will deal with the situation in the old-fashioned manner," one of the spokesmen said

Several prominent stockmen, bankers and officials are on the committee but they asked that their names not be revealed at present "because of the nature of the situation"

The modern rustler drives in a truck to the range at night, shoots an animal, butchers it and takes the meat to market. In many cases only the hind quarter of beef is taken, the remainder left on the range.—El Paso Times.

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual. National and International Problems Inseparable From Local Welfare.

As is usual at this time of year, business sentiment is somewhat mixed. Reports from various parts of the country point to a change for the better in industrial activity, always an encouring sign. Financial observers seem to be a trifle more optimistic. Even the high percentage of commercial failures impresses many as having a favorable side, elimination of weak units in the industrial machine is essential to getting it going again at full speed.

At the recent retailers' convention, it was forecast that sales would drop 20 per cent during the first quarter of 1933 with improvement in the second quarter. A majority of retail authorities believe that prices are gradually being stabilized.

To many, one of the good events of 1932 was a decline in the cost of living of 9 4 per cent. This, too, has its other side--the continued decline in commodity costs is one of the most stubborn influences in prolonging depression. Another barrier to industrial rehabilitation is the growing fear of heavier taxation and the possibility of a general sales tax that will further damage purchasing power. The state of the public finances continues to be unhappy, with the deficit hovering around the $1,200,000,000 mark. Federal receipts are below expectations due principally to the lost potency of the income tax.

Consumption of electricity, like car loadings and bank clearings, always plays an important part in the making of business barometers. It is, therefore, cheering to know that since July sales of power have been constantly increasing and in greater proportion than the normal seasonal increase. The December advance marked a greater percentage gain than did the increase in the same month of 1930---a year of extraordinary electric consumption.

Latest reports on major industries show:

Building—Improved, with contracts ahead of same period last year.

Lumber—New business continues to exceed production, and in Southern pine district is 13 per cent ahead of last year.

Steel—Fell off after moderate expansion; consensus of opinion looks to improvement in next few months.

Copper—Profitless at present 5c price; best side is that domestic consumption leads production.

Wool—Sales close to normal so far this year.

Oil—The drop in crude from 63c to 38c a barrel, in the face of proration agreements, and because of overproduction, is one of the most discouraging of recent events.

Newsprint—Price-cutting has lead to losses.

Shoes, Silk and Automobiles show definite improvement.

Employment declined .4 per cent in December, with four out of seventeen major industrial groups marking increase. White collar workers constitute 28 per cent of those out or work. Even slightest change upward in purchasing power should be immediately reflected in employment statistics, as stocks of finished goods of all kinds are now at an irreducible minimum and only demand is needed to make factories hum.

While farm conditions show little change, a good sign is that the fundamental supply and demand situation in regard to wheat is steadily improving, thus warranting the opinion that price improvement will come in the future. There have been some farm price setbacks, with cattle and hides holding tenaciously to the upward trend. Foreign demand for cotton has been moderately good.

Of national interest is the fact that forced farm sales totaled 9.5 per cent of all the farms in the country during the five years ending March 1, 1932. Tax delinquencies were responsible for 3-5 per cent of these.

A rise in prices—probably temporary—recently occurred in Bolivia, with but little change in the other South American countries. Basic British industries are reported to be more active. For the first time in 30 years the nationalist Government in China has succeeded in balancing its budget. Rumania showed a large foreign trade balance for the first nine months of 1932. Canadian business continues low.

He placed his hand upon her brow,
And soothingly said, "Tis all right now,"
He tried to bring a ray of light,
By making her know she would be all right.

"All right," he said as he neared the door,
Then turning, said "All right," once more,
My heart welled up within my breast,
Not for the woman who could not rest,
But for the doctor just leaving her bed,
I wondered how many times he'd said,
"All right," to patients in the years gone by,
I knew he must have seen folks die.

I wondered if he'd said, All right" to some,
Who were crossing the bar to realms unknown,
Had he yielded them up with a gentle "All right,"
To to the great Physician, the Giver of Light?
How many times by his word so mild,
Had he eased the heart of a little child?
When the doctor faces Death's dark night,
Will the Great Physician say "All right"?

High School Notes

Several of our High School Juniors and Seniors are participating in a State and National Essay Contest. The topic is "The Problem of the Mosquito and other Insect Life in Relation to Sanitation, health, and Industry." The following students have entered the contest:

Mrs. Sullivan
John Jackson
Edith Dudrey
Refugia Garcia
Allie Haskins
Lawrence Hicks
Ernest Prenm
Ruby Leslie
Lane Kimbrell

The Debate Club of the Carrizozo High School has been unable to schedule debates with the neighboring towns. However, the club has arranged for a local debate at the High School Auditorium February 17 at 7:30 P. M.

The topic is " Resolved that at least fifty per cent of the taxes should be collected from intangibles " The affirmative will be upheld by Edith Dudrey, and John Jackson and the negative by Dorothy Nickels and Helen Strauss We anticipate a large audience as this is a timely subject.

The students appreciated the excellent concert given by Celestino Sandoval Thursday morning. It shows what ambition can accomplish in spite of a physical handicap.

Lura Leslie's name was inadvertently omitted last week. She was, we think, our star performer at the assembly program We hope that Lura will soon dance again for our entertainment.

The Religion Study classes are well attended and truly show that our schools are progressing, as we are learning to emphasize the things that are really worth while.

The Seniors have decided to present their class play earlier in the season this year. The cast is now being selected. The play is entitled "Beads on a String" and is being coached by Miss Melaas. We anticipate a large patronage, and ask you to watch for futher announcements.

Last Saturday night the Carrizozo Grizzlies defeated the Hondo basketball team in quite a closely contested game the final score being Carrizozo 18 and Hondo 9.

The week before Carrizozo played Capitan at Capitan and won the game with a score of 22—17.

In a talk to the High School assembly this morning The coach, Mr. Detloff pleaded with the school to support the team.

A stipulation of accounts in the last game revealed the following items:

Total amount taken in at gate, about $6.00;

To the Community Hall, 50 per cent or $3 00.

Net to the Athletic Fund, $3.00.

Mr. Detloff said that these is some excuse for not supporting a losing team, but this year Carrizozo has held her own with the best of them, and consequently there is very little reason for our not giving them both moral and financial support.

Next Friday Capitan plays here. We should like to find out just how much of Coach Detloff's plea sunk in the hearts and heads of the students and citizens of Carrizozo.

The Physical Education lecture given Friday proved unusually interesting. Mrs. Sullivan gave a demonstration lecture on First Aid.

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. J. H. Skinner has been quite ill all of this week.

Hon. John E. Hall was a business visitor to Vaughn one day last week.

Mrs. Chloe White, who has been spending the winter here with her sister, Mrs. John H. Skinner, returned to her home in Las Vegas last week.

Mr. and Mrs Ben Greisen of Capitan were here last Friday evening to witness the basketball game between Carrizozo and Olson's Swedes.

Woman Collects $200

How a Las Cruces man was victimized by a woman transient and forced to pay her $200 came to light last night.

The man was driving to Las Cruces from El Paso. The woman was walking on the highway, carrying a suitcase. Offered a ride, she said she was going only to Las Cruces, and accepted.

On reaching Las Cruces, the woman said she had changed her mind and that she would go to Phoenix. Amazed, the man told her he lived in Las Cruces and could drive her no farther.

"All right, then, I'll take $300," the woman said. "You know about the federal law against taking a woman across a state line. Well you just drove me from Texas into New Mexico. If you dont believe I have you, see a lawyer."

Whether or not the man consulted a lawyer has not been leared, but he raised $200 and gave it to the woman who went on her way —El Paso Times.

E. M. Wooten Dies In Carrizozo

E. M. Wooten, of Roswell, took suddenly critically ill while driving over Nogal hill yesterday afternoon and died in a doctor's office in Carrizozo at eight o'clock last night.

He left Roswell yesterday afternoon for his ranch 23 miles north of Carrizozo with two other men whose names are not known here at this time. He was stricken very suddenly as they were driving over the top of Nogal Hill, eighty miles west of Roswell, and the other two men rushed him to a doctor's office in Carrizozo. The doctor examined him and gave him a prescription. Then Mr. Wooten started to get up out of his chair and fell back into it He died in a few minutes, despite every effort to revive him. A Bynum-Ballard ambulance was called and brought the body back to Roswell arriving here at four o'clock this morning.

Mr. Wooten was 52 years old. He has lived in and near Roswell for the past seven years and was well and very favorably known here. For the past few years he and his family have lived on a farm southeast of Roswell. He came to Roswell from near Carrizozo, and operated a mattress factory here for a while.

He is survived by his wife and two daughters, Miss Audra Mae Wooten and Mrs. Della Sconce all of Roswell; by four brothers, W. S. Wooten of Carrizozo, Albert Wooten and D. G. Wooten of Reagan, Texas, and Joe Wooten of Dodge City; and by one sister, Mrs. R. Burton, of Reagan.

Mr. Wooten was a member of the Baptist church and of W.O.W.

Funeral service arrangements are awaiting word from relatives. Bynum-Ballard will have charge of arrangements.—Roswell Record.

Mr. Wooten is quite well known in Carrizozo having lived here a number of years before going to Roswell. He had started to his homestead near here when he became ill. Funeral services were conducted in Roswell last Saturday afternoon at 2:30, with Rev. Julian Atwood, pastor of the First Baptist church in charge of the services. Interment in the South Park Cemetery. The News extends sympathy to his bereaved family.

Jimmie Jackson

(Contributed by friends)

Our little friend, Jimmie Jackson age 13 years, 5 days, passed to her reward February 3. 9 o'clock P. M. Jimmie was born in Glencoe New Mexico, where her parents have resided for many years. She was known for her sweet and lovable personality, ever kind and loyal, a star pupil loved by teachers and children alike, a pleasant smile and good word for everyone.

She is survived by father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J H Jackson, two brothers, J. C. Jackson and little Billy Jackson, and a sister Mrs. Ruman Hedgecoke. Our sympathy goes out to the bereaved family.

Beautiful services were held at the Tinnie Cemetary, Rev. Sloan of Tinnie, New Mexico officiating.

Active pall bearers were Viola Smith, Hazel Noaker, Susie Hale, Mary Alice Neel, Pauline Crawford and Viva Werner. Honorary pall bearers were Paul and Flora Mae Cunningham, Hattie Smith, Margaret Blevins, Helen Crawford, Mary Ellen Allison and Ruth Perry. These were school mates of little Jimmie and each of them were given a flower in remembrance. Flower girls were Gladys Mathcock, Edith Smith and others who were called to help with the many beautiful floral offerings.

The entire valley grieves for the little friend and school mate. May we take comfort from the words so aptly spoken by Rev. Sloan. "She has gone to a better home and a better school."

From Apprentice To Professional in Two Hours

A young man just finishing high school decided he would look for a job. He applied to a hotel and he was employed as elevator boy. His predecessor was an old gray-haired man. After two hours' training by the old gentleman, the boy was running the elevator like a veteran. "From apprentice to professional in two hours."

This young man did not seem to realize that a job that could be learned in two hours offered him no future and if he remained on the job ten years, he would never get a promotion and probably very little increase in pay, because his place could be filled by any one else in the short space of two hours.

Too many young people consider too lightly the importance of preparing themselves for some special occupation. In order to accomplish very much today, a young person must have some specialized training. A general all-round literary education is desirable and in many cases necessary, but it should, by all means, be supplemented by some definite preparation.

At this time, we can think of nothing better than a Complete General Business Course, such as is offered by the Tyler Commercial College and School of Business Administration at Tyler, Texas. This course contains such important subjects as Accounting, Business Administration, General Motors Standard Accounting System, Shorthand and Typewriting and other related subjects. From nine to twelve months spent on such a course, in our opinion, will pay tremendous dividends throughout the future years.

Write them for a catalog and learn about this well known school.—Adv.

Who Said it Doesn't Pay to Advertise?

(Reprinted from the Printer's Journal.)

Despite the fact it is difficult for any of us human mortals to awake in the morning and retire at night without being influenced in our opinion and buying trends through a veritable avalanche of newspaper and magizine advertisements, billboards, street car posters, window display cards, broadsides, catalogs letters, etc.: there are still those business men and women among us who insist that, "It dosen't pay to advertise."

" We've experimented, we've tried it out," they say "We've spent good money advertising with illustrations and without; we've diversified our copy, injected humor into it, but it just doesn't pay

Yet in that group of individuals who are so dead set on the fact that advertising doesn't pay, you will not find a single denial of the fact that:

Advertising has put Arrow collars around our necks, Paris garters around our legs and Tiffany rings and watches around our fingers and wrists.

Advertising has put Munsingwear next to our skin, Frostilla into our skin and Scorville safety pins under our skin. Advertising has put Florshiem shoes on our feet and, through Blue Jay plasters, taken corns off our feet.

Advertising has put Carlson hats on our heads and Sollmer Clog umbrellas over our heads.

Advertising has sold us Radios and Victrolas to keep us awake at night and then Ovaltine to put us to sleep.

Advertising has sold us chewing gum "for easy digestion" and then Sloan's liniment "for sore and aching muscles."

Advertising has sold us pomades and fancy lotions that make us lose our hair and then Lucky Tiger to restore its growth.

Advertising has sold us soups candies, puddings and other soft foods that invite Pyhorrea and then Ipana tooth paste "for sore and bleeding gums."

Advertising has sold us all sorts of fancy baby foods for youngsters with results naturally "They Cry for it."

Advertising has sold us new recipies and fancey cook books followed by Bellan's for indigestion and National casket for "respectful burial."

And yet there are those individuals still who insist that, "It does not pay to advertise." NOW I ASK YOU ? ? ?

GOOD BREAKFAST MOST IMPORTANT

Orange or Tomato Juice Makes Fine Starter.

By EDITH M. BARBER

What do you have for breakfast? That question can usually be answered in one sentence because most of us are creatures of habit as far as this first meal is concerned. Most of us start the meal with fruit. We continue with bread, toast or rolls, perhaps both, and, of course, coffee.

Bacon or eggs, or both, are the most common addition, although they may reasonably be varied with sausage, or some other breakfast meat, such as scrapple or creamed chipped beef.

Orange juice has become in the last few years one of the most used forms of fruit served at breakfast. Some people alternate this with tomato juice and also grapefruit juice and grape juice, as a starter for the day.

It seems as if there should be no directions necessary for the preparation of orange juice, but there should be at least a warning that juice must be prepared almost the moment of using. Do not try to save time in the morning by getting it ready the night before, as orange juice begins to change in flavor almost as soon as it is removed from the fruit. There are a number of good "extractors" on the market; some of them hand, and one or two electric, which make orange juice preparation comparatively easy. Grapefruit should also be served very cold. I think it is best prepared at serving time.

Sliced bananas are also popular breakfast fruit, whether served on top of cereal, or with orange juice. Many people use two fruits for breakfast, considering fruit juice as appetizer and serving sliced bananas or dates on cereal, or serving baked apples, or pears, or stewed fruit as well.

In some households, especially where there are children, we find hot cereal on their tables every morning. These are likely to be varied from oatmeal to a wheat cereal. Perhaps a ready-to-eat cereal will also be offered. One of the great advantages of this type of cereal is the fact that it is always ready, and that several brands can be served at one meal without additional labor to suit the tastes of the members of the household. Men especially are likely to have a special favorite and to eat it day after day. I know one man who has had, not one, but two shredded wheat biscuits, for every breakfast since he went to college.

Men are rather more addicted to the very good habit of eating eggs for breakfast. Nutritionists tell us that it is important for the adult to have eggs several times a week, especially for the sake of the iron and the vitamin content and unless eggs are surely going to be used at some other time of the day, breakfast is the place for them. Boiled, poached, or scrambled eggs, possibly an omelet, are almost always chosen for the meal. Bacon gives a special appetizing contribution to breakfast or any other meal for that matter.

Many people who eat a light breakfast during the week break the habit on Sunday morning when there is leisure for a real meal. When dinner is to be eaten at night, or late afternoon a large breakfast without an in-between meal can be enjoyed with a clear conscience. Broiled ham, creamed chipped beef and sausage, even steak or chops with potatoes or an omelet with mushroom or tomato sauce can be enjoyed in full. Hot breads such as waffles, muffins, hot cakes, sweet rolls, as well as plain rolls, may replace or supplement the always popular toast. Marmalade, honey, jam or sirup will also have a place. After a breakfast like this you are almost certain to hear some one say, "Well—after all—breakfast is the best meal of the day!"

Raised Muffins

¼ cupful sugar
1 teaspoonful salt
3 tablespoonfuls shortening

Add the sugar, salt and shortening to the hot milk; when dissolved add the cold water and the yeast mixed with the lukewarm water. Beat the egg slightly and add the flour, beat thoroughly and let rise over night. Fill greased muffin pans two-thirds full and let rise until the pans are full. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees Fahrenheit) twenty-five minutes.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Why It Is "Exaltation"

AT FIRST glance, there would not appear to be any relationship between the words "altitude and "exaltation" but the lover and students of words quickly discovers that no connection could be closer, that they are both in fact grounded in the same root.

"Exaltation" we know, connotes effervescence of the soul or spirit. This, however, is really a metaphorical interpretation of what the word originally indicated.

"Exaltation" is derived from Latin roots embracing the idea of lifting or raising. Directly, bodily and identically as it was in its original Latin, the English and Romance languages took it over, so that in itself it contains the part of the word "altitude" which we know means "height."

Gradually, it took on imaginative trimmings; so that it came to mean a lifting or raising of the spirits to the heights of joy or enthusiasm, to the pinnacle of religious fervor.

A Woman's Work Is Never Done

Lights of NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Capt. Ashley McKinley has been telling me of the downward voyage made by the Eleanor Bolling, one of the ships of the Byrd expedition, from New York to Little America. It seems that the entire crew, with the exception of Captain Brown, the first mate and the chief engineer, were strictly volunteers, all being members of the exploring party. One or two of them may have had active experience in a towboat or even have sailed a catboat, but none had really done anything to impair his standing as an amateur. Dr. Laurence M. Gould was second mate, because of his position as second in command to Admiral Byrd and because he was able to use a sextant. When he was not seasick, he was a very valuable second mate.

The ship got out of New York harbor all right, with the captain on the bridge, the first mate at the wheel, and the chief engineer dashing back and forth between the engine room and the stokehold. One of the volunteer stokers had once had some experience with an oil furnace in a suburban cottage, but the other had never done more than turn a radiator on and off. The Eleanor Bolling burned coal. By frenzied effort the two were able, while they lasted, to get up at least 25 pounds of steam.

Naturally, the mate couldn't spend all his time at the wheel and when he was relieved by the first volunteer, strange things happened. The ship began to do a sort of combination tango and barrel roll. Uttering loud supplications to all the gods of mariners, the captain reeled his way on deck. When he spoke feelingly to the helmsman, the latter was both astonished and hurt.

"Why, captain," he protested, "she never was more than 6 inches off her course," meaning 6 inches on the compass card.

Owing to a few such trifling incidents, the ship, which had been due to reach Norfolk early on Tuesday, did not arrive until Wednesday afternoon. This was a bit alarming to relatives of the crew who had gone there to meet her, especially as some of the papers carried headlines saying that the ship was overdue and probably had sunk. But with the mate again at the wheel, she came into harbor nobly.

Meanwhile, the first volunteer stokers had given their best and their all. They were tenderly laid in bunks and Captain McKinley and the doctor took over the stoking job. They stoked a large part of the way to New Zealand. They did well and would have done even better, if the furnace doors had not formed a habit of swinging shut just when they wanted to throw coal in. Pair by pair, the huskiest of the volunteers took their turn in the stokehold, but the steam gage remained at about the same point. At New Zealand a couple of Scandinavian professionals were signed. From the time they took over, it was possible at all times to blow the whistle without stopping the ship. They weighed about 180 pounds each.

Entering the New Zealand harbor, Captain McKinley had been promoted to the wheel. If the ship had been an airplane or a dirigible, he would have been an expert pilot. As it was, a small misunderstanding arose between him and the captain.

"Port," ordered the latter, meaning apparently that he wanted the wheel turned to port. But Ashley McKinley naturally thought he was referring to the ship. The captain was so surprised at the result of his command that the ship like a cat chasing its tail, made practically a complete circle to port before he recovered his power of speech. But by the time the Eleanor Bolling reached Little America everyone, including the captain, first mate and chief engineer, had obtained a lot of experience and all were able seamen.

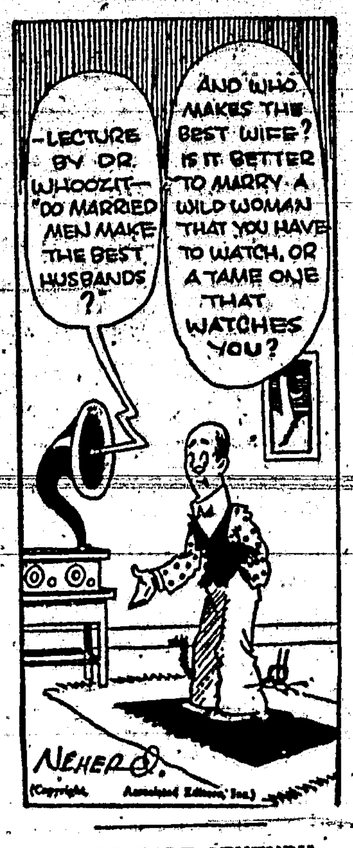
RADIOTIC



AFTER HALF CENTURY

In 1874 a traveler named Rohlfs crossed the Libyan desert in the direction of Kufra, which the Italians recently captured from the Senussi tribes. Rohlfs wrote a message giving his own name and the date, enclosed it in a bottle, buried it in the sand at a place called Regnfid, and returned to civilization. The bottle and the message have now been discovered. The Arctic embalms its secrets for hundreds of years, the bodies of men in the ice, their writings, their foods, their property; but who would expect such fidelity in the burning sands of the wilderness, where wood and horn and glass and even fingernails split in the heat, and hair falls out?

TRY THIS!
When children won't eat—and won't gain weight—

The youngster who has no appetite, probably has stasis. A little syrup of figs will soon correct this condition—then watch the child eat—and gain!

Mothers should never coax a child to eat. Nature knows best. Remove the cause of a youngster's poor appetite—get rid of stasis. Children who don't eat are sluggish. Read what the "California treatment" is doing for sluggish, listless children in every part of the country!

A POUND A WEEK. Your child will eat well from the day and hour you conquer sluggishness. But that girl or boy with furry tongue and a bad breath should not be dosed with salts!

Begin tonight, with enough pure syrup of figs to cleanse the colon thoroughly. Less tomorrow, then every other day, or twice a week, until the appetite, digestion, weight, complexion, tell you the stasis is gone. When a cold or other ailment has again clogged the system, syrup of figs will soon set things to right.

When appetite fails, tongue is coated white, eyes are a bilious yellow, California syrup of figs will gently stimulate the colon muscles—and the child you used to coax to eat will fairly devour his food.

The claims made for California Syrup of Figs are true and it will do the same for you—IF you get genuine CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs. Don't accept any substitute.

Our Government —How It Operates

By William Bruckart

FEDERAL JUDICIARY

IT IS a common mistake for persons to misstate the title of the head of the federal judiciary. He is chief justice of the United States, not the chief justice of the Supreme court of the United States, for his duties and powers are vastly broader than just those of presiding over the nation's highest judicial tribunal.

The Constitution provided for our system of courts, but it established only the Supreme Court of the United States. It gave power to congress, however, to create the entire system of United States courts as it might see fit, and to that end the legislative branch of the government established the courts of original jurisdiction, calling them District courts, and Appellate courts, which are known as Circuit Courts of Appeals, of which there are ten with a varying number of justices, depending upon the amount of litigation in the circuit.

District courts, of course, are nearest to the people. It is into that court that the United States attorneys go seeking indictment and prosecution of violators of federal statutes, and it is into that court corporations and individuals go to seek adjudication of differences when their claims arise under a federal law or when the defendant resides in another state. The District courts, therefore, provide the citizen with a means of reaching those against whom he has a grievance even though that individual or corporation be located across the continent.

The name of the Circuit Court of Appeals defines its place in the judicial structure. It is just that, and in a great majority of the cases that reach it from the District court, it becomes the court of last resort as a result of the power which the Supreme Court of the United States has. The highest court can say and, indeed, it does say in the bulk of the cases decided by the several Courts of Appeals, that it will not consider them further. That ends it. The question then is res adjudicata, to employ the legal phrase.

The Supreme court cannot avoid consideration of all of the cases, however, for if they involve a question of construing the Constitution, those cases can reach the highest tribunal. Likewise, in a dispute between two states of the Union, the Supreme court has to hear of the matter, because in that instance it becomes a court of original jurisdiction and can have a jury to hear the testimony if it so desires.

Appellate courts operate in something of the same fashion, except that they obviously have to examine every case that is appealed from the District where all of the evidence was taken. Very frequently, it is true, they do not go far with the cases sent to them from the court of original jurisdiction, because a very great number are dismissed when the Circuit judges have satisfied themselves that justice was done in the court below. However, even then the litigants in the cases can ask the Supreme court to review the matter, but that court may or may not let the cases come before it as it sees fit. It never refuses, however, if there is a Constitutional question involved, or if serious doubt is shown as to rights of citizens under the statutes of their own states.

From this it becomes evident that the Supreme court transacts an enormous amount of business.

It has been said that the Supreme court is never able to catch up with its work. That is true, in a sense, for it always has cases on its docket awaiting decision. In another respect, the statement is untrue, however, for it always allows itself time in which to study the questions before it and determine the far-reaching consequences of its rulings, a condition of which every justice is mindful at all times. Its reputed slowness, therefore, may be said to be in the interest of justice to all.

But I mentioned at the outset that the chief justice had other work to do. Without attempting to recite his duties in detail, it may suffice to show the character of his duties by calling attention to the fact that it is an obligation of his to see that the Circuit courts keep up with their work. It is quite obvious that circuit judges sitting in areas like the plains states, where the population is scattered, have not the amount of work to do that confront those sitting in a populous circuit like New York. The chief justice knows the status of the dockets throughout the nations, and if, for example, the judges get behind in New York, one or more of the judges from elsewhere in the nation is ordered to New York to help out.

There are two other courts which should be mentioned in any discussion of the judiciary. They are the Court of Claims of the United States and the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Both are in Washington; both have limited jurisdictions. The Court of Claims is the only tribunal where only the United States can be the defendant. In other words, it hears only suits against the government. The Court of Customs and Patent Appeals deals only with the highly technical questions relating to tariff duties and patent rights under the laws affecting those two fields.

Girl Kills Herself Over Bridge Luck

Detroit.—Miss Marion Helson, twenty-six, played bridge with friends, including Margaret Grenat and Robert Davenport. She lost consistently.

"Oh, what's the use?" she said, throwing down her cards and leaving the table.

Later Miss Grenat and Davenport returned to Miss Helson's apartment to find her still depressed.

"No luck, I just haven't any luck," she repeated, then jumped up and left the room. A few minutes later the couple heard a shot. They found Miss Helson dead.

Former School Teacher Paroled After Two Years.

Rockwell, N. C.—Paroled after having served two years of a six to eight-year term for bank robbery, Miss Mary Frick, former school teacher, is setting out to take up the old threads of life.

Miss Frick's relatives and friends were astounded two years ago when they were notified that detectives had arrested her, Miss Mabel Yarborough, and two youths on a charge of robbing the Bank of Rockwell of $1,126. Those who knew her most intimately, insisted there must be some mistake, but the former school teacher herself admitted her complicity in the robbery.

In company with Miss Yarborough, Ted Honeycutt, and John Ellis they motored to Rockwell, and the two young women sat in the car while the youths robbed the bank. Then they drove to a hotel in Charlotte and divided the loot. Honeycutt and Ellis set out for Florida, but the young women remained.

Miss Frick had been recognized by parents whose children attended her school, and she and Miss Yarborough were arrested and confessed. The youths also were apprehended, and all were sentenced to two to eight years in prison. All four were model prisoners, and when, after two years, they made application for parole Gov. O. Max Gardner granted them.

"I've paid a big price for that foolish deed," Miss Frick told friends when she walked out of the penitentiary at Raleigh. "No one can believe that I participated in the robbery of the bank because I expected to profit from the crime. Every one knows that we did it because it seemed daredevilish. It promised the thrill that young America seems to demand. I had my thrill—and I paid the price exacted by society.

"I do not believe that anyone will deny me the chance to make good—and I am going to make good!"

Jobs are scarce, but Miss Frick believes that somewhere she will find a niche into which she can fit herself.

White Lie Put Him in Jail, but He's Out Again

Birmingham, Ala.—Charlie White has been thrown out of jail because he was untruthful.

White went to the jail here recently, told the warden he was a conscience-stricken escaped convict, who wanted to settle his debt to the state.

For a week Charlie smiled through the bars. He told the warden he was smiling because his conscience no longer troubled him.

The warden telephoned the state prison, advising that he had Charlie White in jail. And wardens are entitled to the state's standing reward of $50 for the apprehension of each escaped convict.

The state prison checked the records and informed the warden they were not looking for a "Charlie White."

Then came Charlie's dramatic confession that he was hungry and cold and out of work. "Why shouldn't I smile through them bars?" he asked. "Good grub—warm place to sleep."

The warden threw him out in the cold again.

Strangely, this man who sought the self-imposed confinement was a seaman, who had sailed twelve times around the world.

Dare Devil Sues When Crate Falls on His Head

Syracuse, N. Y.—Andrew Wilbur, a daredevil who risked his life many times by performing dangerous feats in the movies and at fairs throughout the country, appeared in Municipal court recently seeking $2,000 damages for serious head injuries which he claimed were inflicted when a heavy box toppled from a truck and struck him on the head. Wilbur told the court that he liked to perform death defying stunts, but that he suffered serious injuries when the box struck him.

LIVER'S HIGH VALUE IN ANEMIA CASES

Reasons for Its Use in the General Diet.

Pernicious anemia is a disease quite different from simple anemia, from which we can be protected by a diet high in iron salts. In pernicious anemia the red blood cells are destroyed too rapidly by some, at present, unknown toxin in the blood. There is always accompanying the disease a condition of low hydrochloric acid in the stomach, which may be a cause or an effect.

A specialist on this disease states that in tracing the history of the cases of pernicious anemia which he has treated, he has invariably found that this condition of hypo-acidity has existed for some time, sometimes as long as ten years before pernicious anemia develops, and even after the disease is cured, the non-acid condition continues. Although we are uncertain of the exact relationship between the two conditions, let me remind you that every digestive disturbance that is more than temporary should be diagnosed by a physician and not self-treated. Sometimes the symptoms of hyper-acidity and hypo-acidity are much alike and the home dosage of soda which is harmless and possibly helpful in the first case, has the opposite results in the second case.

The treatment which has produced cures of pernicious anemia consist especially of liver which apparently has the property of stimulating the building of red blood cells. Other organs of animals show this property to some extent. A diet high in red meat of various kinds is recommended. Recently a liver extract has been developed, which allows the diet to be less monotonous.

At the University of Michigan hospital, where a complete plant is devoted to the treatment and study of pernicious anemia, it has been found that dried hog's stomach is fully as effective as liver in the treatment of this disease.

The publicity given to the cure of anemia by means of liver has caused it to be used in general diet to a much greater extent than ever before. While it is not known to be a preventive of either anemia or pernicious anemia, it is a food which should be appreciated because of its large content of iron and vitamins and should be used occasionally.

Other foods high in iron, which guard against simple anemia, are eggs, spinach, bran, lentils, beans, totatoes, meat, prunes, raisins.

ACID STOMACH

Denver, Colo. — "Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a good medicine," said John W. Dodson of 1206 W. Cedar St. "I have used it on several occasions for my stomach and liver, when I was troubled with acid stomach and indigestion, and also when I was rundown and lacked energy and it soon got to the seat of the trouble, rid me of the stomach complaint and I had more strength."

Fluid or tablets. All druggists.

BIG JOB OF MOVING

Sole parallel to a remarkable "moving day" undertaken by a railway in Wales, is Noah's ark. A complete farm was moved, "lock, stock and barrel," from Whitland to Watlington—218 miles—in 12 hours. The work was done for the owner, and the train consisted of 15 cars.

MENTHOLATUM

WOMAN LOST 20 POUNDS IN 4 WEEKS

Mrs. Mae West of St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I'm only 28 yrs. old and weighed 176 lbs. until taking one box of your Kruschen Salts just 4 weeks ago. I now weigh 156 lbs. I also have more energy and further more I've never had a hungry moment."

Fat folks should take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water in the morning before breakfast—it's the SAFE, harmless way to reduce as tens of thousands of men and women know.

For your health's sake ask for and get Kruschen at any drugstore—the cost for a bottle that lasts 4 weeks is but a trifle and if after the first bottle you are not joyfully satisfied with results—money back.

You'll say:

"Whoa, Engine! what's got into you?"

Here's gas to excite motors. It makes them quick on the trigger . . . fast on the move. Choking is hardly required for a quick, snappy start and a take-off like a quail on the wing.

Even old motors . . . wheezy, snorting, complaining motors . . . cut capers you just can't believe. If you doubt it, just try it. It's like rich, racing blood injected into old veins.

This gasoline is so new . . . so "different" . . . so quick, fast, powerful, and economical, it's hard to give it a name. Perhaps YOU can. When you FEEL your motor's response, it may come to you like a flash.

Ask at any Conoco station for the new bronze-colored, high-test gasoline—and an entry blank. Help name it and describe it. You may win a part of $10,000.00. You are SURE to win a grand, new thrill, and that is worth a heap. Make the test TODAY.
