Brickley-Bishop

On Saturday evening, April 17th, 1937, Miss Ruth Brickley and Mr. Harold Bishop were united in marriage at Livingston, Texas, by the pastor of the Methodist church there.

Mrs. Bishop is the daughter of Mr. E. M. Brickley formerly of this place, but now cashier of the American Bank of Carlsbad where he moved about one and one half years ago. She is possessed of many charms of both mind and heart. Added to her charm she is extremely gifted and accomplished.

Mrs. Bishop was born at Willard, N. M. and reared at Carrizozo. She was graduated from the Carrizozo High school, as salutatorian of her class. Later she attended the University of New Mexico, where she was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree and a Major in Music. After graduation from the University she was employed at the First National bank here for awhile; and later became assistant to the County Superintendent of Schools for four years, which position she resigned to be married.

Mr. Bishop, who is a member of a prominent Texas family, made his home here about one and one half years where he was quite popular. He left last summer to accept a responsible position with the Union Gas Company at Livingston, which position he has filled successfully.

Mr. and Mrs. Bishop were the recipients of many beautiful and valuable gifts. Also honored by a number of parties and social affairs.

Friends here join in wishing them happiness and success.

EXTRA Knee-Action smoothness, to let you rest as you ride.

A General Motors Value

All that kept this motorist from buying a Pontiac sooner was the belief that a car so big and beautiful must be very expensive as well. But a check of the facts revealed this truth: based on 18 months terms in 168 representative cities, the difference in monthly payments between a Pontiac DeLuxe six 2-door sedan and the same model of the next lower-priced cars is only 15 cents a day. That, you'll agree, is little enough to pay for more of everything worthwhile. If you, too, thought Pontiac an expensive car, see your Pontiac dealer. He can quickly prove that America's finest low-priced car is well within your means.

He can do more—he will show you with facts and figures that Pontiac is one of the most economical cars ever built!

Court Bill Hearings Continued to April 28

HEARINGS on the President's Supreme court enlargement bill will be continued until April 28, and the last two days will be devoted to testimony by supporters of the measure. Then the senate judiciary committee will go into executive session and debate the bill at length. The hearings were suspended Monday afternoon, April 19, but the senators scornfully denied that the opening of the baseball season had anything to do with this.

Smith W. Brookhart

One witness heard in support of the bill was Smith Wildman Brookhart, radical former senator from Iowa. He said the President's proposal was an issue in the campaign because the opposition declared what he would do to the Supreme court.

"It was specifically made an issue in the campaign," said Mr. Brookhart. "The President himself did not so urge it because he probably had not fully made up his mind, but former Senator James A. Reed, the ablest, most brilliant and most forceful opponent the President had in the whole campaign, did present in detail the President's plan upon accurate information. He dared the President to deny his statement.

"There was no denial because Senator Reed was telling the truth and the President was content to submit the issue upon the violent arguments against it alone."

Judge William Denman of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at San Francisco, an appointee of President Roosevelt, argued against Chief Justice Hughes' contention that a Supreme court working in two or more separate panels would be unconstitutional.

Army's Huge Bombing Plane Is Given Test Flights

TEST flights by the army air corps' new big bombing plane were being made at Seattle, Wash., where it was built by the Boeing Aircraft company. This machine is the largest military airplane in the world, with an all metal fuselage 100 feet long, a wingspread of 105 feet, and a cruising range of 6,000 miles. It weighs about 40,000 pounds unloaded and 75,000 pounds when carrying a full complement of fuel and armament. It has four twin row engines of a new type which will deliver 1,400 horse power each for takeoff. The speed is about 250 miles an hour. There are five streamlined blisters on the new machine which are emplacements for small, quick firing cannon, instead of machine guns. These cannon will outshoot any guns mounted on any other military airplane in the world and make the great machine virtually impregnable.

Auto Strikers Lose $65,000,000 in Pay

IN THE last five months strikes in the automotive industry have cost the workers between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000 in wages. And still, at the behest of John L. Lewis and his C. I. O., they are planning further strikes. What they gain, beyond recognition of their union which probably could be obtained by negotiation wherever it is deserved, is problematical. The figures are from Ward's Reports, Inc., which says of losses to companies affected that the net volume of business "delayed" by the strikes would approximate $200,000,000, but what proportion of this actually is lost cannot be calculated.

"Let me tell Lewis here and now that he and his gang will never get their greedy paws on Ontario as long as I'm prime minister," said Premier Hepburn.

He thereupon let it be known that he was prepared to push through legislation that would exclude the C. I. O. from Ontario if this becomes necessary to save the pulpwood and mining industries from C. I. O. control.

General Motors of Canada offered the strikers at Oshawa various concessions but not recognition of the union. Hugh Thompson, U. A. W. A. organizer, advised that the offer be accepted, but the strikers rejected it as insufficient.

The executive board of the union at a meeting in Washington decided to postpone until November the drive to unionize the Ford company plants.

Hepburn forced two of his ministers to resign, charging they were not supporting the government in its fight "against the inroads of the Lewis organization and communism in general." They are David A. Croll, who held the labor, municipal affairs and public welfare portfolios, and Attorney General Arthur W. Roebuck. Axel Hall, young mayor of Oshawa, who has been friendly to the strikers and critical of Hepburn's action, sent an "ultimatum" to President Martin of the Automobile Workers of America demanding that members of the union in the United States strike in support of the Oshawa local. The latter body adopted a resolution demanding that Premier Hepburn withdraw from the negotiations to make way for intervention by the dominion authorities.

In Montreal 5,508 women garment workers, members of the C. I. O. international union, employed in 72 plants, started a strike for higher wages; and in Fernie, B. C., 1,000 C. I. O. miners threatened to strike for union recognition.

Baseball Season Opened; President Tosses Ball

BOTH the National and American baseball leagues opened their seasons, and the small boy and the tired business man are happy. President Roosevelt, conforming to custom, "did his stuff" by tossing a new ball into the field at the national capital where the Washington and Philadelphia teams started the American league games. Vice President Garner hoisted the flag in center field, and a great crowd of congressmen and government and social leaders was present.

The National league season was opened in Boston by the Boston Bees and the Philadelphia team.

Mrs. Harriman Nominated Minister to Norway

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT sent to the senate the nomination of Mrs. Florence Jaffray Harriman of Washington as minister to Norway. She is the widow of J. Borden Harriman, New York banker, and has been active in politics for a number of years. Anthony J. Drexel Biddle, Jr., who now holds the Norway post, was nominated to be ambassador to Poland.

Luther Assails Critics of German Nazis

DR. HANS LUTHER, German ambassador to the United States who is about to retire, gave his annual bock beer party, and surprised his guests, several hundred congressmen and correspondents, by assailing Americans who criticize the Nazi regime in Germany.

Hans Luther

"You must accept Germany as she is," he said. "You may not like some of the things about her, but you must recognize her as a strong and unified country under the leadership of a man who has the courage and the wisdom to lift it out of a grave emergency.

"My chief aim during the four years I have spent in the United States has been to give your people a better understanding of mine, their homes, and their ambitions. But recently I have been made melancholy by suggestions I have read and heard of political disunion in my fatherland.

"Nothing can be farther from the truth. Germany today is a nation actuated by a single purpose, which is to recover from the fetters placed upon her by the treaty of Versailles. Germany wants to live in friendliness and amity with other nations of the world. But such a peace must be constructive peace if we are to achieve the friendly cooperation among nations which you seem so much to desire here."

Over in Germany the anti-Jewish crusade seemed to be growing more intense. The latest instance reported is the dismissal of Leo Blech, a Jew, who has been conductor of the Berlin State Opera house since 1906 when he was appointed by Kaiser Wilhelm II. Hermann Goering, Prussian premier and reich minister of aviation, has been a strong supporter of this accomplished artist, but pressure from the anti-Semites grew too powerful and Blech was ousted.

Americans Want to Fill Soviet Warship Order

SOVIET RUSSIA, which recently was said to have asked American help in building a navy that would check Japanese ambitions, wants to buy a "knocked down" battleship in the United States, and two manufacturers are trying to adjust the specifications so that they can fill the order with the consent of the State department. The munitions control office in Washington at first ruled that a license should be issued unless military secrets were involved, but the State department objected because the proposals called for 16-inch guns to be manufactured in this country, and because the Soviet government specified that the guns and armor plate be inspected by the United States navy.

Officials of the two American companies, it was reported, believed it might be possible to meet State department objections by changes in the specifications.

International Patrol of Spain's Coasts Begins

PATROL of the coasts and borders of Spain by the navies and land observers of Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany, as arranged some time ago by the international non-intervention committee, is now in effect.

Under the command of British Vice Admiral Geoffrey Blake, aboard the battle cruiser Hood, the British fleet patrols the northern coast on the bay of Biscay. Germany patrols the southwestern coast while France guards Spanish Morocco and the Balearic islands and Italy the eastern Mediterranean coast.

Merchant vessels of the committee's 27 members entering Spanish territorial waters must first call at specified ports and take aboard non-intervention committee supervisors who will have the right to examine the cargo, inspect ships' papers and question passengers. After their vessel leaves Spanish waters the supervisors will be disembarked at some convenient port.

The patrolling warships also have been empowered to halt and examine the papers of any ship coming from a country not participant in the scheme, such as the United States.

Neither land nor sea observers have the authority to turn back volunteers or shipments of ammunitions. Their functions are limited to observation.

Government Must Formulate New Labor Policy

VALIDATION of the Wagner act brought the administration up against the necessity of formulating a new national labor policy to prevent strikes and to determine what course shall be followed when collective bargaining is unsuccessful. For this purpose Secretary of Labor Perkins invited 33 leaders of industry and labor to attend private meetings in Washington, stating they would be asked to discuss the need of new safeguards for industry to balance the gains achieved by labor under the Wagner act. Among those Madame Perkins invited were William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; John L. Lewis, chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization; Myron C. Taylor, board chairman of United States Steel corporation; Gerard Swope, board chairman of General Electric corporation; Harper Sibley, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and government officials.

Sec. Perkins.

Certain of the President's advisers have told him a law requiring the incorporation of labor unions should be passed; or that at least there should be a law similar to the British trades union act which provides that all union funds must be accounted for to the government and that unions cannot participate in sympathy or general strikes.

Organized labor always has opposed any such legislation and probably would continue to fight against it.

John L. Lewis thinks one result of the Wagner act decisions may be the abandonment of the sit-down strike, though this, he says, depends on the attitude taken by employers in the operation of the act. "Under the court's decision," says Lewis, "workers now have machinery for adjudication of disputes and the making of contracts with employers. Everything depends on the attitude of employers, who showed no disposition to be generous although the right of labor to gather together for its protection had been conceded for a lifetime."

South Is Angered by Anti-Lynching Act

SOUTHERN congressmen found they were no longer in the saddle when the house by a vote of 270 to 119 passed the anti-lynching bill. The debate was furious and the representatives from the South were deeply resentful.

The bill was sponsored by Representative Joseph Gavagan of New York whose district includes the big negro city of Harlem. It provides that any state officer who surrenders a prisoner to a mob shall be guilty of a felony and subject to prosecution and severe penalties. In addition, the county in which a lynching occurs shall be liable for $2,000 to $10,000 damages, to be paid to the family of the lynched person.

Proponents of the measure were greatly aided by a mob in Mississippi that took two negroes from a sheriff and tortured and burned them to death. The local authorities were supine and called the shocking affair a "closed incident."

Our Coronation Envoys to Wear Knee Breeches

WHEN George VI is crowned king of Great Britain on May 12, Robert Worth Bingham, our ambassador to London, and James W. Gerard, President Roosevelt's special ambassador to the coronation, will appear in Westminster abbey garbed in silk knee breeches and ordinary evening tailed dress coats. The State department in Washington consented to a modification of the ruling which bars American diplomats from wearing gala clothes at state functions. The costume decided upon is not full court dress but the duke of Norfolk, who is earl marshal, will let it go as such.

Silk Prints Lead the Style Parade

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

JUST one dazzling, color-gloried silk print after another is what's happening in the fabric realm this season. The new prints are more fascinating than ever, and try to resist them and do you? You do not. The urge for another and another in your wardrobe ever keeps on keeping on.

To add to the excitement, couturier and dressmaker are devising ways of making up these silks that are so artful and fraught with such high-pressure novelty the world of fashion is being cast into new throes of enthusiasm every time a style parade of last-minute costumes is staged.

A favorite treatment is pleating and when you pleat printed silk you multiply the beauty and intensity of its coloring to a thrilling degree. The all-around pleated skirt is a favorite topic with designers who are styling the new gowns of silk print. Even if you are making your dress yourself it is a good idea to have the skirt pleated, and it is almost a certainty that you will be pleased with results. The charming dinner dress to the left in the picture is fashioned of a water color print silk crepe with separate jacket and pleated skirt.

Another dressmaker treatment adding untold interest to print ensembles is the self-print lining. To achieve a maximum of practicality and wearability these coats with linings matched to the print of the frock are made reversible. You turn them inside out and vice versa. See the idea nicely worked out in the model centered in the group. The silk print is highly colorful and the monotone cloth of the coat repeats the background tone of the print.

Then there is this reigning vogue of the bolero. Dressmakers and designers are turning out the bolero frock of silk print in vast numbers. You'll love a print silk bolero frock. Flattering it will prove to be and practical. See the model to the right in this group. Here is a bolero frock of feather silk print. The dark grounds such as this with wide-spaced motif are especially smart and attractive and wearable. The bodice buttons to a high neckline. The bolero has peaked shoulders and elbow sleeves. Note the red silk chiffon handkerchief in the buttoned pocket of the bolero. The circular skirt of the dress has emphasized creases. The straw bonnet has flowers massed at the front. Which calls to mind another feature designers are emphasizing, that of having flowers somewhere in the picture that are related in color to the print of the silk. This may be a corsage, a gay posy cluster at the new low of a neckline or it may be a bouquet played up in conjunction with a vivid gypsy sash tied at the front.

One of the outstanding innovations in the realm of print silk costumes is the redingote fashioned of matching print, the small figured being smartest for day wear. This redingote, while it tops off the dress of self print to a dramatic climax, will prove one of your happiest possessions to be worn as a separate coat or wrap over the monotone crepe cress on cool spring days and later on serving admirably as a summer wrap worn with dainty lingerie frocks.

It is good style, too, to wear over your navy or crepe afternoon dress either a bolero of eye-impelling silk print or a hip-length jacket if you prefer. The latter should be slightly fitted to be up to the mode and they are especially smart when buttoned down the front.

The silk print idea enters into every phase of fashion this season. You are encouraged to wear gay print from the tiptop of your head down to your feet.

BLUE TAFFETA

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fancy turns to the southern-belle type of dress for evening wear. Here is a charming specimen of the quaint and picturesque type that is proving such a general favorite. It is made of silk taffeta in a delectable soft-toned medium blue. Young girls are showing a preference for sprightly taffeta and they love the way the little puff sleeves stand up in lively taffeta manner. Square necklines are much in evidence this season. This one is accented with rhinestone and enamel flower pins and there is a matching bracelet.

GLOVES TO MATCH YOUR SPRING SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Cloth gloves to match spring suits are the latest news from Paris. An extra piece of material, ordered when the suit is bought, can be made up in any size or style, short or with deep gauntlet cuffs. Square fingertips are another innovation. The finger may be stitched at sides and straight across the top, giving a casual, out-of-doors look, especially popular in gloves of doeskin or chamois.

Half-finger gloves, which made their appearance last winter in the guise of lace mitts to go with gowns of the southern belle type, are now an established vogue. They are shown in pigskin and chamois for sports wear, and in suede for dress. The gloves extend as far as the finger-joint, revealing brightly polished nails. Very convenient when it comes to picking up a dropped coin, fitting a key or writing out a check. Polish in cardinal or burgundy may be worn to match or contrast with the gloves.

Further independence in glove fashions is exhibited in the unconventional treatment of seams along the back of the hand. These vary from two or three seams running across instead of up and down, to one crosswise seam with two short ones in the usual direction.

Tiny Watches Are Fitted to the Latest in Gloves

Small jeweled watches are being worn everywhere but on the wrist these days. Some of the new tailored suits with heavy cuffs have a small detachable watch encased over the left wrist.

Many of the new cigarette cases have small watches fitted on the outside, while purses and gloves that are fitted with watches have been shown for several months.

What Irvin S. Cobb Thinks about

A Yes-Man's Paradise.

SANTA MONICA, CALIF.—If, as, and when the President puts over his scheme for reconstructing the Supreme court nearer to his heart's desire, the question arises—in fact, has already arisen—as to where he's going to find members who will keep step with the New Deal's march of triumph.

Might this earnest well-wisher make a suggestion? Let the President look Hollywood over before making his selections, for this is yes-man's land. Some of the studios out here are so crowded with yes-men that big yes-men have to tote little yes-men in their arms.

Irvin S. Cobb

There's only one or two drawbacks to this plan, as I see it. It's going to be hard to wean the local appointees from wearing polo shirts along with those long silken robes. And they'll insist in a preview for each decision.

Domestic Pets.

A BROOKLYN judge has decided that for a couple to keep eighty-two various animal pets in one apartment is too many—maybe not for the couple, but for the neighbors—yes!

That reminds me that once, in a hotel in the Middle West—not such a large hotel either—I found fully that many pets in my bed. They weren't assorted enough; they all belonged to one standard variety. I shall not name the hotel, but it was the worst hotel in the world, as of that year. If bad hotels go where bad folks do, it's now the worst hotel in Hades.

But the point I'm getting at is that, though eighty-two animals may make a surplus in a city flat, they couldn't possibly upset a home so much as one overstuffed husband who's puny and has had to go on a strict diet such as would be suitable for a canary—if the canary wasn't very hungry.

Literary Legerdemain.

CULTURAL circles along sun-kissed coast of California are still all excited over the achievement of a local literary figure who, after years of concentrated effort, turned out a 500,000-word novel without once using a word containing the letter "E." If the fashion spreads to the point where the capital "I" also should be stricken out, it's going to leave a lot of actors and statesmen practically mute.

But that's not what I started out to say when I began this squib. What I started out to say was that I know of much longer novels which have been produced without a single idea in them. Sold pretty well, too, some of 'em did.

Holding World's Fairs.

IT'S customary, before launching a world's fair or an exposition or whatever they may call it, to hang the excuse for same on some great event in history and then promptly forget all about the thing that the show is supposed to commemorate in the excitement of flocking to see Sally Rand unveiled as the real main attraction.

F'rinstance, the big celebration in New York in 1939 ostensibly will mark George Washington's inauguration as President 150 years before, and it may be, just as a matter of form, that Washington will be mentioned in the opening ceremonials. But the real interest will center in whether Billy Rose or Earl Carroll or the Minsky brothers succeed in thinking up some new form of peach-peeling art to entertain the customers, or have to fall back once more on such reliable standbys as fan dancers and strip-teasers.

Coronation Souvenirs.

SINCE previous engagements prevented me from going over to the coronation, I trust some friend will bring me back a specimen of that new variety of pygmy fish which some patriotic and enterprising Englishman has imported from Africa as an appropriate living souvenir of the occasion. It's a fish having a red tail, a white stomach, and a blue back, thus effectively combining the colors of the Union Jack. And it's selling like hot cakes, the dispatches say.

Now if only this engaging little creature could be trained to stand on its tail when the band plays "God Save the King" what an addition it would make for any household in the British domain! (Note—Households in the south of Ireland excepted.)

50,000 Cattle Lost in Day

Kansas ranchers lost 50,000 cattle in the famous New Year day blizzard of 1886. Dead cattle were piled so thick along the railroad tracks they had to be cleared off before trains could go through.

"Why, yes, Gus," admitted Bull, haltingly but good-naturedly, "I believe you did."

"You believe I did!" echoed Van Tambel, enraged. "How did she get a horse out of my corral?"

"Why, she come down here to get her pony up herself—so I helped her a little."

The veins in Van Tambel's huge neck swelled. Grabbing Bull with his powerful hands, he fastened his iron fingers on the old man's throat and choked him pitilessly, pouring on him as he did so a torrent of curses heard by Quong, who ran to the kitchen door to listen.

Only by struggling for his very life was Bull able to wriggle free from the deadly grip. In doing so, he fell backward to the ground, scrambled to his feet, and ran into the barn.

It was inside the barn that Bull's voice was heard by the China boy begging for mercy. "Why, Gus," he urged, "Jane's a nice girl. Don't take it so hard. I've worked for you a good many years, off an' on. You always found me honest, didn't you?"

Van Tambel uttered no word. He had pursued Bull to the farthest corner of an empty stall and, filled with silent, murderous rage, caught up a broken wagon stake and swung it over his head. "Don't hit me with that, Gus," cried the frightened man. A low, fearful imprecation from Van Tambel answered him.

"Now I'll give you what's comin' to you!"

"Why, Gus, you ain't a-goin' to kill me!"

Grunting and mad for blood, Van Tambel struck at the cowboy and rained blow after blow on him till he sank to the floor. Then, suddenly, he dropped the stake and, bespattered with blood, staggered out of the barn and over to the house. Quong, watching stealthily, fled in terror for town.

In the cubbyhole office of McAlpin's livery barn in Sleepy Cat, Sawdy, Bob Scott, and McAlpin sat on three stools, silent and absorbed in a three-cornered bout at poker. The frightened Quong, trotting and walking from Gunlock and crossing the bridge, reached McAlpin's in pitiable condition. Throwing his hands against the glass-panel office door, he burst in and fell sprawling almost on top of the intent players.

The gamesters jumped to their feet. McAlpin broke into angry exclamation: "What the devil! Can't we have a friendly game in my own quarters without a drunken bum chargin' in on us head first?"

Sawdy, less intent on saving his money and chips, had turned Quong partly over. "It's a chink, boys. There must be a tong war on."

Bob Scott, coolest of the trio, bent to scan the intruder's features.

"Who is it, Bob?" exclaimed McAlpin.

"It's Quong, the cook out at Gunlock, boys, if I'm not mistaken—an' from his breathin', I guess he's run all the way in. Must be somethin' doin' up at Gunlock."

Laid out on the hostler's little bunk, Quong's eyes opened and closed.

"What is it, Quong? What's wrong?" asked Scott.

With his eyes popping from his head, Quong managed to form a word: "Bull!" he exclaimed, hoarse and panting. "Bull Page!"

"What, Quong?"

"Bull Page!"

"He says Bull Page," explained Scott. "What's a-matter with Bull, Quong?"

Quong's eyes rolled in terror. "Gus."

"Who?"

"Gus."

"Yes, Gus—what about Gus?"

"He kill him."

"What do you mean? Bull killed Gus? No!"

"Gus kill Bull."

"Who told you that, Quong?"

"I see ownself. Gus kill Bull."

"Well, I'll be damned," exclaimed Sawdy. "It looks like a straight story, boys. That why you run into town, Quong?"

The China boy nodded.

The trio consulted together. A team was hitched to a three-seated democrat wagon, Quong was helped into it, and with McAlpin driving, the four set out for the jail to pick up Bill Pardaloe. Pardaloe was in bed. They routed him out and drove over to the hotel to pick up Doctor Carpy.

Two hours later the party halted before the dark, silent ranch house at Gunlock.

In the stall farthest from the door they found Van Tambel's victim. Incredible as the possibility seemed to Carpy, poor Bull, left alone, had dragged himself out of the stall and lay on his back.

Carpy held a lantern over him. His face and head had been battered almost beyond recognition.

"He's close to dead, boys," exclaimed Carpy, low-voiced, to his companions. "Get him to the kitchen. While I'm working with him, look for Van Tambel."

They carried Bull to the kitchen door. Scott entered carefully and, groping in the dark, struck a match and lighted the lamp. Bull, breathing stertorously, was laid on the table.

Pardaloe tried the door leading to the dining room. It was locked. He rapped on it. He rapped again loudly, but the summons brought no reply.

"Stand to one side, Bob," murmured Pardaloe. "I'm goin' to bust it."

He threw his shoulder against the door. As it crashed open, Pardaloe, followed by Scott, walked into the dining room. The door to the living room stood open. This room, inspected, revealed no sign of disturbance.

Of the two bedroom doors opening off this room, the door, one leading to Van Tambel's bedroom, was closed. Setting the lamp on the table in the middle of the room, Pardaloe knocked on Van Tambel's door and, getting no reply, tried it. The door was locked.

Pardaloe called out, "If you're in there, Gus, unlock your door. I'm here to talk with you." Pardaloe awaited in silence a response from within; there was none.

Pardaloe threw himself into the door. It gave so easily that he stumbled across the threshold.

The bedroom was dark. Scott relighted the lamp. Pardaloe held it above his head and, followed by Scott, walked into the bedroom.

They saw the huge figure of a man lying across the bed. Pardaloe, passing the lamp to his companion, put his hand on the man's shoulder, saw that he was unconscious, and peering closer, turned the face toward him. It was Van Tambel.

"Call Carpy, quick, Bob," muttered Pardaloe. "He's unconscious."

When Carpy stalked into the room, Sawdy with him, the doctor, aided by his companion, turned the body partly over and examined it.

"Doctor!" She Exclaimed Faintly, "He's Dead!"

"How is he, Doc?" whispered Pardaloe.

"Dead."

Already seized by the excruciating pain that cost him his life, Van Tambel had left his victim and staggered in his distress to the house.

"It was a quick call, boys," said Carpy to those around him.

Transfixed by agony, the cruel features could not be softened.

"Nothing more to be done here," said Carpy in the living room. "Take Bull over to the bunkhouse now and lay him on his bed."

The clatter of hoofs was heard in the yard. "It's the boys back from town," said Sawdy, looking through the window. Carpy turned to Pardaloe. "Go out and tell them what's happened, and not to touch a thing until after the coroner comes out."

Doctor Carpy came into breakfast late next morning. Jane, who had finished her breakfast, rallied him, as she rose.

"I am late," he admitted.

"Night work?"

He nodded.

Standing beside the table, she was looking over the newspaper. He put his arm around her.

"Sit down a minute, Jane. I've something to say to you. News for you."

She blanched a bit. "About Bill, Doctor?" she asked anxiously.

"Not a thing in the world about Bill. It's—about your father."

"Oh, I know he's terribly angry!"

Carpy shook his head. "Not now, Jane. He's not angry with anybody now."

"Doctor! What do you mean? Have you seen him?"

He nodded. "Yes, last night. You know how sick a man he's been—"

"Doctor!" she exclaimed faintly. "He's dead!"

"He died last night."

She hid her face in his arm and broke into tears.

"Jane, your father had lived his life—there was nothing for him to look ahead to.

"This makes a great change in your life, girl. I guess I'll take you up to the hospital. Bill must know this. Now I've got good news for you and no fooling. You have a big surprise and a happy one coming at the hospital. I took the bandages off Bill's eyes yesterday to examine them—and his eyes are much better. If we can only hold it now!"

CHAPTER XIII

Bull Page was only a broken cowboy, but Bull was loved in Sleepy Cat. Yet even resentment at the name of Van Tambel in Sleepy Cat was softened somewhat when men heard of Jane's unremitting attention at Bull's side in the hospital. Van Tambel was buried, McCrossen took charge.

To Jane's infinite relief, Bull recovered and went back to Gunlock.

At the ranch there was an air of cheer when Jane was installed; everybody on tiptoe to render service. McCrossen was especially eager to please.

"Well, Jane, I guess you know whatever I can do to take care of things is goin' to be done, twenty-four hours a day if need be," he said. "All you have to do is to leave it to me."

"I shall depend on you for everything," she returned.

"Everything, Jane?" he echoed, smiling as if to invite a confidence.

Jane was not caught. "Everything connected with running the ranch," she said evenly.

But it became increasingly evident as the days went by that the energetic foreman still regarded himself as a suitor.

For a fortnight nothing further occurred to break the routine of ranch work, and McCrossen said no more. The general impression in town was that Denison, as far as Jane was concerned, was out of the running. Jane, it was argued, would never marry a blind man, and the consensus of gossip was that Bill's sight was gone.

No excitement occurred in Sleepy Cat until one day John Lefever was reported arrived at Thief River with a herd of cattle for the reservation. Sawdy, who had gone to work at Gunlock when Lefever left for Texas, rode down to Thief River to help Lefever check the herd in at Gunlock Agency and to give him the big Sleepy Cat news.

But Lefever, too, brought news. The two cronies sat down to compare notes and celebrate the end of a long drive.

"I want to tell you somethin' I ran into nearin' Thief River," said Lefever. "There's a little slaughterin' ranch a mile south of town run by our old friend, Clubfoot, the butcher—remember how he skinned us on the horse race? While our herd was headin' for the river, I stopped for a few minutes where a couple of his boys were loadin' a wagon with hides for shipping. I happened to know one of the boys. He wrangled for us, comin' up once. And I noticed all the hides I saw him tyin' up had a Gunlock brand.

"'How's this?' I says. 'Does Van Tambel peddle his steers down this way?' He winked at me an' laughed. 'This bunch,' says he, 'was poker steers.'"

"It looks like McCrossen is runnin' off Gunlock cattle to pay his poker debts," said Sawdy.

When Lefever had made his delivery, he marched with Sawdy up to the hospital to call on their disabled side partner, Denison.

Bill had been promoted from a dark room to a shaded one.

"If I knew I was going to lose my eyes, boys," said he, "that would be one thing. I could end it all or settle down to making baskets for a living. But Doc keeps telling me he's going to save my eyes; and that keeps me hoping—so the days and weeks hang on. All the same, it's tough, when you never were laid up before in your life. What's the news with you fellows?"

The visitors talked about the discovery Lefever had made of the hides at Thief River.

The half-blind ranchman listened intently, not with any noticeable excitement. But Sawdy imagined he could see Denison lighting up.

"Seein' you're not fixed up just right yet, is there anything you'd like us to do about it?" Sawdy asked.

"Why, yes, there is—just do one thing."

"What's that?"

"Keep your mouths shut till I get out of here. I guess you both know I've got a long score to settle with that bird. He was mixed up in burning up my ranch house and burning me up. I'll attend to McCrossen myself some day," he repeated slowly, "in my own way."

The two men left the hospital somewhat uneasy. They laid their story before Carpy.

The doctor heard it unmoved. "Well," he commented, "that's not the first bunch of steers McCrossen has stolen—and it won't be the last."

"Not the first," interjected Lefever. "But it's the closest anybody ever came to nailin' it on him."

"Anyway, I don't think he should be left there to rob the girl right along," added Carpy.

"Are you goin' to tell her?" asked Lefever.

"I am, today. She's coming to town and will be in to see me."

They told him of their talk with Denison. "It left us leery, Doc," said Sawdy. "If Bill gets worked up too strong over McCrossen, he's liable to bust out on McCrossen before his eyes are in shape to give him an even break."

Doctor Carpy waved his hand. "Keep your worry for something else, Sawdy. His eyes got scorched; but when I let go of the boy, keep away from the small end of his gun."

"Jane, you'll think I don't bring you anything but troublesome news," the doctor began. "But this isn't really news. I've known for months—two or three years, in fact—that McCrossen was stealing Gunlock steers. But this is what John Lefever brought up from Thief River today. . . .

"Now, there's nothing to get excited about," observed Carpy, after he had finished the story, "for it's nothing new. But if I were you I would get rid of McCrossen."

JOHN LARDNER

Why Go to College?

"Why, some of you guys must still be in the hole," said Elite '30 in frank astonishment.

By JOHN LARDNER

THERE is a book on the market now called "Was College Worth While?" in which you are told that the average fellow who graduated from Yale, Harvard, and the University of Nebraska 25 years ago is making less than $5,000 a year for himself and dependents as we go to press.

Yale, Harvard, and Nebraska are taken merely as examples—"cross-sections," as we say in the statistical racket. Surely it must be obvious to the veriest dolt that the author of the book could not cover all the American colleges in one survey. The average graduate of Fresno State Teachers college, for instance, may be making $17,500.25 a year. If so, he has only to speak up, and we will adjust the figures accordingly. Also, the government will be on his neck for back taxes. It will be news to the government if any graduate of Fresno State ever made more than 10 g's per annum.

But the Yales, the Harvards, and the Nebraskas have been pretty well lined up by our author, Mr. John R. Tunis, in private life a tennis player. Mr. Tunis has come interesting data to show for the work he has done. He reports, for example, that in 1933, the year the Giants knocked Crowder out of the box, the members of the class of 1911 at Harvard were earning an average of $4,000 apiece, which, according to figures of my own compilation, is exactly $100 less than they would have made if they had gone to the Bisbee Institute of Taxidermy and Weasel - Stuffing, instead of to Harvard.

What's Ten Bucks!

Yet Harvard is a rich man's college, catering to the sons of rich men. I will give you an idea of how rich it is. The other day I ran into a member of my own class at Harvard, McGew, and said to him, by way of courteous greeting:

"McGew, old sporting life, can you spare ten bucks?"

McGew laughed scornfully.

"Ten bucks!" he exclaimed. "I don't happen to have ten bucks in my pocket at the moment, but if you would only take a check I would write you one for $12,000. That's how much I think of you, old pal, if you would only take a check."

"I will take a check," I told him generously.

"Ten bucks!" continued McGew, who did not seem to catch my last remark. "That's chicken feed to me these days, old pal. I would do much, much more than that for you, if you would only take a check. I'm sorry you won't."

But There's a Catch.

And McGew strolled away, fairly dripping prosperity. His watch and chain alone must have cost the original owner something like seven hundred and thirty-five smackers.

But there is a catch in the situation somewhere, because Mr. Tunis, who knows the facts, says that the average grad of 25 years ago is lucky if he can keep his wife in clothes and his babies in bourbon during the long, hard winter. Something is wrong. Either the class of 1911 was not very bright, as a class, or else some vicious, mean-spirited dog is holding down the average by not making any money at all. This is a dirty trick on alma mater, and I hope the culprit, if there is one, will come some day to realize that he owes it as a duty to old '11 to get out there and make $77,896.50 as quickly as possible. There is still such a thing as college spirit, I trust. Or is it dead? What would the old coach say?

It takes a school like Princeton, where patriotism is a byword, to inspire real loyalty in her sons. While Harvard's ingrate class of 1911 was amassing a paltry $4,000 per capita in 1933, a group of clean-cut, starry - eyed, exalted young blades from Princeton (class of '21, to be specific) made the Harvard men look like utter bounders and rank quitters by piling up $5,600 apiece. What's more, a certain Princetonian told me he could have lifted the average even higher by selling another stock short.

Dental Schools Neglected.

"But I thought our lead was big enough already," he explained, "so I let it go."

Besides, the man he was swindling was not a college man.

Inspired by Mr. Tunis' survey, I decided to make a similar survey of my dentist, the only dental college graduate I know (Skowhegan Bicuspid, '18). It struck me that dental schools had been sadly neglected, and so had my teeth.

"Doctor," I said to him, as man to man, "how much dough did you make in, say, 1932?"

"That was a big year," said Dr. Gurbel, his face lighting up. "I made $11,500 that year. I remember the amount very well, because I have three agents trying to collect it now."

"And 1929?"

Fling at High Finance.

"A sweetheart," yelped the loyal alumnus enthusiastically. "I must have pulled down close to $20,000 in 1929. And I got some of it in cash, too—at least three or four thousand."

"And the rest of it?"

"Still owing," beamed Dr. Gurbel. "That was quite a year."

"And who were your customers that year?"

"The very best people, all college men and their wives," replied the good doctor. "Six distinguished Princeton families, four fine Yale families, and a couple of important Harvard families. Believe me, their teeth were in terrible shape."

Dr. Gurbel's testimony shows that if the Yale and Harvard graduates played ball with their dentists for services rendered (an iconoclastic hypothesis, I admit) their average incomes would be even lower than at present. The same thing goes for Princeton, I guess. And maybe Nebraska. I don't positively know how Nebraska alumni feel about paying their dentists, but I have heard some tales that would make your blood run cold.

Harvard Falls Short.

Right now I am engaged in a preliminary survey of the graduates of American barber colleges. One alumnus (Elite Tonsorial, '30) estimated that he earned a net of $1,100 last year. The Harvard average is higher, but, as the old Elite grad pointed out, they don't show you a thing about facial massages at Harvard. They don't even teach you how to cut hair.

"In fact," said the old Elite grad, "what the hell do they teach you up there?"

Your correspondent, confused, muttered something about Professor Kittredge's English course.

"And what does the schooling cost you?" persisted Elite '30.

Your correspondent allowed it must come to something like five grand.

"Why, some of you guys must still be in the hole!" said Elite '30 in frank astonishment. "My education cost me thirty bucks, in six installments. You picked a sucker racket, pal."

There is something in what Elite '30 says. I will have to take it up in my next survey.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Jelly Sauce—One glass jelly (crab-apple, red currant, grape, etc), quarter cup hot water, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour. Add hot water to jelly and let melt on stove. Heat butter in saucepan, add flour and gradually hot jelly liquid. Cook until smooth and serve hot over almost any pudding.

To Remove Threads — When basting sewing material, try placing the knots of the thread on the right side. They will be easier to pull out when the garment is finished.

Hanging Pictures—Is your picture hanging on a nail which keeps breaking the plaster and so falling out? Before you put the nail in next time, fill the hole with glue, the plaster will not crumble.

Left-Over Liver—Liver that is left over can be converted into an excellent sandwich filling if it is rubbed through a sieve, well seasoned, and moistened with a little lemon juice and melted butter.

Boiling Old Potatoes—Old potatoes sometimes turn black during boiling. To prevent this add a squeeze of lemon juice to the water in which they are boiled.

Stuffed Orange Salad — Allow one orange for each person to be served. Cut through the skin three-quarters of the way down in inch strips, being careful not to break the strips apart. Remove orange pulp and cut in neat dice. Combine with pineapple and grapefruit dice and fill orange shell with mixture. Drop a spoonful of heavy mayonnaise on top of each salad and garnish with a maraschino cherry. Another good mixture for stuffing the orange shells is a combination of orange sections, dates stuffed with cream cheese and nut meats. Mask with mayonnaise.

Melting Chocolate—Chocolate is easy to burn, and for that reason should never be melted directly over a fire. Melt it in the oven or over a pan of hot water.

Washing Table Silver—Much of the work of polishing table silver can be saved if the silver is placed in hot soapsuds immediately after being used and dried with a soft clean cloth.

Cleaning Wood-Work—To clean badly soiled wood, use a mixture consisting of one quart of hot water, three tablespoons of boiled linseed oil and one tablespoon of turpentine. Warm this and use while warm.

Butterscotch—Two cups brown sugar, four tablespoons molasses, four tablespoons water, two tablespoons butter, three tablespoons vinegar. Mix ingredients in sauce pan. Stir until it boils and cook until brittle when tested in cold water. Pour in greased pan. Cut into squares before cool.

Resettlement Administation News

Mr. James W. J. Evans, Resettlement Administration supervisor for Lincoln county, announced today that word had been received from the regional office in Amarillo, Texas, that more than a million dollars has just been made available for Resettlement loans to deserving farmers in Region Twelve. Many farmers, with the planting season approaching, are finding they need a little more money in order to plan the year's work, and the Resettlement Administration is anxious to help these farmers to rehabilitate themselves.

Resettlement loans are available Mr. James W. J. Evans said to farmers whose farm units make it possible to create a sound farm plan, permitting the retirement of the loan and rehabilitation of the farm family. Farmers in need of this financial aid, as well as the help and advice of the rural and home management supervisors, should visit the Resettlement Administration county office at once. The office is located in the Lutz building in Carrizozo.

The Resettlement Administration this year is emphasizing livestock set-ups in its lending program Mr Evans said. Loans of this type have proven quite successful in the way of financial rehabilitation of distressed farmers. They also lend themselves toward rehabilitation of the land in the area, which has been subject to severe erosion due to several years of drouth.

Hundreds of farmers in the region have already received Resettlement crop loans this year. The program is weeks ahead of last year's lending program according to Resettlement officials in the regional office. Farmers in need of the type of assistance and technical supervision supplied by the Resettlement Administration are asked to visit their county officer immediately and confer with the county supervisor concerning their financial and farm problems.

Is Overweight a Disease?

By
DR. JAMES W. BARTON

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

JUST as yellow fever, malaria, diabetes, pernicious anaemia and other "incurable" diseases have been conquered in recent years by our scientific research physicians, so also will obesity — overweight — be conquered within the next few years.

For, after all, obesity is really a disease — some deficiency somewhere in the body—just as with diabetes and pernicious anaemia.

Time after time metabolism tests have been made of overweights (that is the rate at which the body processes work) and except in a very few thyroid or gland cases—perhaps 2 or 3 in every 100—the body processes in overweights were not working any slower than in those of normal weight.

Dr. G. Hetenyi, in German Archives of Clinical Medicine, thinks that there is something wrong with the collection and distribution of fat in the bodies of those who are overweight. He investigated the mobilization or gathering together of the fat at the depots or storage places in overweights and in normal individuals, when both types were eating insufficient food for their needs. He found that there was something wrong or different with the way fat was gathered and stored in the bodies of overweights.

Then he studied the way the fat and the normal individuals handled the blood rich in fat from food, and observed that the tissues of overweights have a great avidity—eagerness or desire for fats that enter the blood stream. In other words as the blood rich in fat passed through the tissues of fat individuals, these tissues were "hungry" for fat and so a great amount of the fat in the blood was taken from the bood and stored in the fat tissues. On the other hand in those of normal weight, their tissues did not seem so hungry for fat and so the fat laden blood passed through without leaving much if any fat.

What an Investigator Learned.

Dr. Hetenyi also studied the relation between fever and fat mobilization from the deposits of fat, the action of dehydration (cutting down on liquids) on the fat in the blood, and finally the resorption into the blood of fat put under the skin by a hypodermic needle or syringe.

He found out that the increase in the blood fat (fat taken from the fat depots) was slight in overweights, was less than in those of normal weight. This means then that during an illness when there is an increase in the temperature of the body, the tissues of overweights did not give up as much as did those of normal weight.

And finally the blood in overweights did not take into itself as much of the fat that was placed in the body by the hypodermic needle as did the blood in those of normal weight. It practically left this extra fat stay where it was.

The conclusions drawn from the above experiments are that the mobilization or collection of fat from its storage depots—the skin, the liver, in and about the abdominal organs—is reduced in overweights, whereas their absorption of fat from the blood passing through their tissues is greatly increased.

In other words, fat individuals take more fat from the blood when fat is being eaten, and less from their depots when no fat is being eaten than do the tissues of those of normal weight.

Overweight—obesity—is therefore a disease of fat mobilization—the way fat is gathered and distributed.

Now while this knowledge that their tissues are "different" in the way fat is handled in the body—whether the fat is due to eating starch or fat foods—may make overweights feel a little less responsible for their increased bulk, nevertheless there is no reason why they should not reduce their weight.

Gall Bladder Disorders.

It has been definitely proven that two of every three individuals have more or less disturbance in the gall bladder and yet the number of cases that actually require draining or removal of the gall bladder is very small.

Dr. R. F. Carter, New York City, in Annals of Surgery, says that during a period of four years in studying patients having disease of the gall bladder the medical and surgical clinic of the New York Post Graduate Hospital has gradually come to realize the importance of changes in the size and shape of the gall bladder. In patients with definite gall bladder symptoms — pain in the upper right abdomen, gas on the stomach, nausea, tenderness in abdomen — even when the X-ray showed no stones present and the gall bladder filled and emptied normally, real disease was found at operation.

UNCOMMON AMERICANS

By Elmo Scott Watson

© Western Newspaper Union

"Liberator of Bulgaria"

HIS name was Janarius Aloysius MacGahan and that fact alone should be enough to make him an "uncommon American." But he had other and better claims to distinction.

Born in 1844 in the little town of New Lexington, Ohio, young MacGahan grew up into a mild-mannered, timid youth, which was strangely in contrast to his character later. At the age of seventeen he tried to become a country school teacher but his application was rejected on the grounds that he was too young and inexperienced.

Deeply wounded by this rebuff, MacGahan left his native state and never returned to it. He went to Huntington, Ind., where he was given a school and taught it successfully for two years, then to St. Louis, where he studied for four years and wrote for the newspapers, all the time preparing himself for a career as a lawyer.

Next he decided to finish his studies in languages in Europe before starting his law career. But just as he was preparing to return to America, the Franco-Prussian war broke out and the New York Herald engaged him to accompany the French army as a war correspondent.

If he had been shy as a boy, he seems to have gotten over that. His new job took him into the thickest of the fight and there he wrote his dispatches while the bullets whistled around him. His graphic reports from the French front won him a position with the London News as well as the Herald.

In 1876 he went into the Balkans and his exposures of the Turkish atrocities in Bulgaria not only stirred England to the depths but led to action by the European powers which won for MacGahan the title of "Liberator of Bulgaria." His untimely death, caused by a fever which he took from a friend whom he refused to leave in Constantinople, brought to a close a brilliant newspaper career. He was buried first in the Turkish capital. Six years later his body was brought back to his native town of New Lexington, where thousands united in honoring the "home town boy" who had made good in other fields. Today his is one of the names honored in the Hall of Fame in the school of journalism at Ohio State university.

Swindler of Millions

AROUND the turn of the century, when Americans were becoming accustomed to the idea of "Big Business" in finance and industry, Cassie L. Chadwick taught them that "big" might be applied to swindling also. Born in Canada of poor parents, Elizabeth Bigley soon decided that she didn't want to remain poor.

After getting her out of a forgery scrape, her father sent her to live with a sister in Cleveland. There she represented herself as an English heiress and married a young doctor named Chadwick but he soon divorced her. For the next four years she supported herself as a spiritualist, clairvoyant and hypnotist under a variety of names in the Middle West. In Toledo she was arrested for forging a draft for $10,000 and sentenced to the penitentiary.

Paroled in 1893, she started out to get money in a big way. She let it be known that she was related to Andrew Carnegie and that the facts of that relationship could only be whispered. After a trip to New York to visit her "father," she came back to Cleveland and turned over to the president of a bank a trust fund agreement and notes amounting to more than $15,000,000. Since these were apparently signed by Carnegie himself, the banker readily gave her a receip. for them.

With her credit thus established, Mrs. Chadwick started on an orgy of wild borrowing and spending. Once she bought $1,200 worth of handkerchiefs from a Cleveland store. She sent grand pianos to eight friends as "little surprises." She chartered a special train to take her friends to New York.

Then suddenly her bubble of prosperity was punctured. An enterprising Cleveland newspaper printed a full-page story revealing the details of her past life. She managed to put off the anxious bankers who were demanding repayment of their loans and fled to New York. Arrested and brought back to Cleveland for trial, it was revealed that her liabilities were more than a million dollars. Several banks failed as the result of loans to her.

Moreover, Andrew Carnegie, who had examined the documents which she had deposited in the Cleveland bank, pronounced them forgeries and Mrs. Chadwick an imposter. She was sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary again, this time for four years and there she died in 1907, leaving an estate of only $14,000.

Indians Who Greeted Columbus Have Now Been Identified

Arawaks From Haiti, Says an Investigator

Washington. — An expedition has unearthed new light on the mysterious Indians who met Columbus, and whom he immortalized in history as "simple, honest and exceedingly liberal" natives.

Returning from the Bahama islands, Herbert W. Krieger of the Smithsonian institution reports first discovery of village sites of this Indian group.

One village where these Indians lived was found at the entrance to a huge cave. Under shelter of the overhanging entrance, Mr. Krieger unearthed a hearth where campfires burned, and pottery used in housekeeping. The cave stretched back for about two city blocks.

A chief's seat is one important object recovered from the cave. The seat, unlike many a stiff throne for European kings, was made with a lean-back effect, and had short legs about four inches high. Scrollwork adorned the wood.

Like Those on Watling Island.

This village discovered by Mr. Krieger is at Hamilton cave on Long island. Long island was one of Columbus' three stopping points in the Bahamas when he made his famous voyage in 1492. Indians of San Salvador or Watling island, where Columbus first landed, were of the same native type and group.

Science has heretofore depended mainly on Columbus' journal for information regarding these long-vanished Indians. Columbus called them the Lucayans.

Mr. Krieger's search for archeological remains has produced cumulative evidence that these Indians were Arawaks who migrated from Haiti. That is, their ancestry linked them with South American Indians rather than with tribes to the north in Florida. They had trade relations, however, with Florida, for their pottery and other objects bear some clues to contact with that region.

They Had Flattened Skulls.

Skulls found by Mr. Krieger show that the Indians met by Columbus had heads flattened front and back. This was a custom among Indians in Haiti, but not in Florida, another fact pointing to southern origin of these Bahaman natives.

Proof that these Indians used tomahawks of stone, with wood handles is announced by Mr. Krieger. Heretofore, only the stone weapon heads have been found, and these were taken for "celts" or unshafted stone axes to be held in the fist. Wood handles have now come to light. The discovery is another that links these Indians with southern origin, for such tomahawks were made in South America.

Modern Negroes of the Bahamas sometimes find the stone heads of these tomahawks, and superstitiously call them "thunderbolts."

Optical Phenomenon Is Discovered in Strange Mineral

Corning, N. Y.—In this modern day, when the properties of ordinary masses of matter are seemingly completely known, it was announced here that in a strange Canadian mineral a new phenomenon of optics had been found.

Scientists of the Optical Society of America heard of the baffling glowing property of a mineral known as Hackmanite. This mineral has been known to science since it was discovered, first in Greenland, back in 1906-08 on a Danish expedition.

O. Ivan Lee, mineralogist of Jersey City, described how Hackmanite exhibits a beautiful red-violet color when first fractured into pieces but how this color quickly passes when the fresh surface is exposed to light.

Mr. Lee's discovery is that this striking and characteristic color may be revived at will if the mineral is exposed to ultra-violet light for a short time. While kept in the dark the color persists permanently but exposure again to ordinary light promptly makes the color fade out.

There are two well-known phenomena which cause materials to glow in a fashion somewhat like Mr. Lee's new discovery. They are fluorescence and phosphorescence. The new-found glowing, however, is neither of these for the color seen is different in shade from the mineral's fluorescent or phosphorescent light.

Pithecanthropus Is Now Considered to Have Been an Ape

Ape-Man of Java Was Not Really a Man

PITHECANTHROPUS, Java's famous ape-man, has been demoted to a place definitely among the apes, in the opinion of his scientific discoverer, Dr. Eugene Dubois. He was a giant gibbon-like creature and no man at all. Evidence: Recently found additional thighbones which indicate that Pithecanthropus was "erectus" only occasionally and when on uneven ground habitually went stooped over like a modern gibbon; indications in jaw and skull that his head was attached to the spine well aft (ape-fashion) instead of set on squarely at its middle (man-fashion).

The whole Pithecanthropus question was opened up for re-discussion, according to the Dutch anthropologist, Dr. W. P. Van Stein Callenfels, by the discovery a little over a year ago of a child's skull at Modjokerto in Java, dated as Early Ice age by its associated fossils. The skull is stated to "belong somewhere in the line of human development. It may have been an infant Pithecanthropus."

But the previously known adult Pithecanthropus has always been regarded as belonging to the Middle Ice age, and Dr. Callenfels regards it as quite unlikely that this species began at the early time represented by the infant skull and survived when all other Early Ice age mammal species perished.

Just an Ice Age Gibbon.

Dr. Callenfels suggests that the skull of Pithecanthropus may be of Early Ice age date too; it was found by an army sergeant and site data are quite lacking. The thigh bone may not belong with the skull at all, but to the primitive but definitely human type discovered in a Late Ice age deposit at Solo in Java, and called Homo soloensis.

With his skull chased back to the Early Ice age to go with the Modjokerto infant skull, and his thighbone appropriated by the later-coming Solo Man, poor Pithecanthropus seems rather pushed out on a limb, away from the main trunk of human descent. Ape-man no longer, just a plain ape, though a big one with a big brain; and so his discoverer leaves him.

Gain for the Solo Man.

But the position of Solo Man, with his 1,200-cubic-centimeter brain, is much magnified. With another primitive Java man, Homo wadjakensis, and the strange Rhodesian Man of Africa, Dr. Dubois regards him as representative of the most primitive fossil human type, precursor to the present-day Australian race, most primitive existing human type.

The Dutch anthropologist characterizes Solo, Wadjak and Rhodesian as "the most important of all known fossil men, as representing the most primitive type of Homo sapiens."

"Camel" Locomotive Drinks Only Once Every 621 Miles

Moscow.—The new type of locomotive known as the "SO" but popularly called the camel, has completed a round trip run from Moscow to Vladivostok pulling a freight train of 1,200 tons. The distance covered was 13,000 miles, according to the Tass agency.

Equipped with a tender-condenser the SO used only one-tenth the amount of water normally needed by a freight locomotive for the long journey. With its ten-ton water load the SO can operate for about 621 miles without replenishing its water supply. Its long time between "drinks" makes the name camel appropriate.

The boiler and running parts of the new locomotive differ but little from the ordinary locomotive. The tender-condenser which so efficiently conserves the water supply is a most complicated mechanism.

Oldest Metal Statues of Man Found in Syria

Chicago.—The oldest metal statuettes of men and women ever discovered have been unearthed in ruins of a temple in Syria, dating from 3300 B. C.

Quaint, stiff little figures with solemn faces and arms folded or bent sharply upward, these copper statuettes are believed to represent gods of war and goddesses of fertility. They were discovered by the Syrian expedition of the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, at Tell Jedideh. The male figures wear silver helmets almost hiding their eyes, and the women have silver curls or an elaborate headdress.

Household Hints

By BETTY WELLS

"OUR living room gets a lot of noisy living," said Frances when we bumped into her downtown the other day—we hadn't seen her in years. She was selecting a new easy chair when we saw her. She finished deciding on it before we hunted up a drug store table where we could visit.

"Do you like the green covering?" she asked. "The walls of our downstairs are all in cream just like everybody else's, and green may sound just as banal in a wing chair, but actually I think our place has a lot of charm for a well-used house. The floors are pretty good, and even if they weren't, I'd have to have rugs that could be kicked back because the children (listen to me, I never can think of them as grown) like to dance. Anyway I have the rugs in the living room, hall and dining room all in a lovely wisteria color. Then pale yellow glass curtains with printed cretonne draperies with lots of yellow, some lavender and green in the sprawling pattern. I've got slip covers on most of the furniture. Several pieces are in a soft green and several pieces are in the printed cretonne. And I've used very large pieces of copper for accessories. It seemed to me that with my very energetic family that I needed a rather dramatic accent.

Our living room gets a lot of noisy living.

"Anyway we certainly have lots of good times in this room, and it never seems drab. I find it quite easy to keep since the slip covers are all washable. So are the walls, and you should see what good rug shampoo-ers my boys have gotten to be! They may not set the world on fire as engineers and lawyers, but I'm sure they'll make fine husbands.

"But there, I've been chattering away about my house. Come on and let's find a table where we can exchange notes about old times."

Without a Second Glance

The prettiest girl we know paused in her powdering to remark to us, as we sat in her lovely pastel room, "I'd like to know why rich or important women are such frumps. Their houses are that way, too. What burns me up is thinking what I'd do if I had their chance and money. I'd have clothes and white rugs and all the trimmings! The funny part is that a girl can look very swell without spending a lot if she just takes pains. Yet the women who have everything we're hoping for will mash a felt hat on their heads and slide into a tweed coat without a second glance. And their houses get dowdier and dowdier the more chances they have to make them simply knockout."

Of course, these remarks are not a hundred per cent correct. Some women of means make a whole career out of their clothes and houses. And some clever women have natural style about everything they wear.

The career women theoretically love to look stunning and have becoming backgrounds and they'll buy the best, but actually they are too busy and too engrossed in their work to bother much with the fixing needed for real smartness. It was brains more than beauty that won them their distinction and so instinctively they value their ideas more and give their best energies to polishing off their thinking. So we had to agree that most of them look pretty frumpy.

The prettiest girl we know wonders why important women are usually frumpy about both their clothes and their houses.

The well-to-do women who neglect appearances are those who have everything and are too busy or too bored to give time to the looks of things.

And there are times when frayed edges have their own charm. Mothers of a batch of children all under ten don't usually have time for facials and pink nail polish. But they usually have handsome husbands who adore them. And houses bursting their buttons with children and dogs can't keep their creases in any too well. But who would trade the mellow tones of a room in that kind of house for the most interior decorated movie set on the screen.

BAKING POWDER BISCUITS TEMPT

Expert Gives Recipes Calling for Rich Dough.

By EDITH M. BARBER

I WONDER if there are any hot breads that have a more genuine welcome than baking powder biscuits? Most of us have had our disappointments in regard to this favorite. There is nothing easier to make than good biscuits in spite of the time worn joke about bullets and biscuits. Biscuits depend upon several factors, perhaps first of all the amount of shortening. I like a rich biscuit myself and for this reason I use one and a half to two tablespoons of shortening to each cup of flour. The amount of baking powder is also important—one and a half to two teaspoons of the tartrate, or phosphate types of baking powder or one teaspoon of the combination type of baking powder is generally used with each cup of flour. The more shortening used the less baking powder will be needed.

The flour, salt and baking powder should be sifted together and the shortening rubbed into the flour until they are so thoroughly mixed that the mixture has the texture of corn meal. The amount of liquid which you will need depends upon whether you are going to roll or drop your biscuits. If they are to be rolled, use just enough to make a dough which can be easily handled. In the second case, you will, of course, need more liquid which may be either milk or water.

If you are going to roll and cut your biscuits, you may either pat out your dough, or you may knead it slightly, depending upon what texture you like. The first method will give you a flake biscuit; the second will produce one of finer texture.

A hot oven should be used for baking both types of biscuits. The time of baking will depend somewhat upon the size of the biscuits.

If you like them piping hot, as they should be, you may bake them in installments. When they come to the table, they should be hot enough to melt the butter.

Biscuit mixtures may be varied with the addition of grated cheese, of fruit, nuts and spices with which you will probably like to add extra sugar. The dough may be rolled thin, spread with softened butter, brown sugar, cinnamon and raisins and then rolled tightly and sliced. The slices may be baked in muffin pans, or put close together in a pie or cake pan.

Baking Powder Biscuits.

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons tartrate or phosphate baking powder or 2 teaspoons combination baking powder.
4 tablespoons fat.
½ to 1 cup milk or water
¾ teaspoon salt

Mix and sift dry ingredients and rub in the fat with the fingers or cut it in with a knife. Make a hole in the flour at the side of the bowl and add half a cup of liquid. Add enough more liquid to make a soft dough. Roll on a metal surface or oil-cloth until one inch thick. Cut into rounds and bake ten or twelve minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit). This recipe makes ten medium-sized biscuits.

Sweet Rolls.

Rich biscuit dough.
2 tablespoons softened butter.
½ cup brown sugar.
½ teaspoon cinnamon.
½ cup chopped raisins.

Roll the dough one-quarter inch thick, spread with the butter and sprinkle with the sugar, cinnamon and raisins. Roll like a jelly cake, cut in three-quarter inch pieces, place close together in a greased pie plate and bake ten to twelve minutes in a hot oven, 425 degrees Fahrenheit.

Rhubarb Cobbler.

1 quart rhubarb, cut into pieces.
1 cup sugar.
½ cup water
Grated orange peel
Rich biscuit dough

Put the rhubarb, sugar, water, and orange peel in a deep heat-proof pudding dish and cook four minutes on top of the stove. Roll the dough and cut into rounds. Place on top of the rhubarb and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) 10 to 12 minutes.

Apple Dumplings.

Rich biscuit dough
Apples
Sugar
Butter
Cinnamon

Pare, halve and core the apples. Divide the crust into six parts; roll each piece until large enough to cover the half apple. Place the apple on the crust and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Fold the crust over, dot with butter and bake in a moderate oven (375 degrees Fahrenheit) until the apples are soft. The dumplings may be steamed thirty to forty minutes in a closely covered steamer.

Raisin Scones.

Rich biscuit dough
¾ cup seedless raisins
1 egg yolk
1 teaspoon water

To the dough add the raisins. Add enough extra liquid so that the scones may be dropped from a tablespoon on to a baking sheet. Beat the egg yolk with the water, and spread over the scones with a pastry brush or a piece of cheese-cloth. Bake in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit) for about 10 minutes.

A Winsome Quartette

THERE was a lull in the mid-morning activities of the Chic Twins (in aprons this time) and their week-end guests when the candid camera caught this gay quartette. The guests are wearing—let's have a close-up — sports dresses because they are so all purpose: tennis frocks go shopping just as often as not. The spectator model to the right with its unusual use of buttons is demure enough to wear when calling on one's Sunday school teacher and yet would have sufficient swing to "belong" in the gallery at the golf tournament. Summer days offer so many unexpected opportunities that these dresses are chosen as equal to any informal occasion.

A Two-in-One Idea.

The aprons on the charming hostesses to the left are both cut from one pattern. The clever miss will never overlook a pattern package that offers two such charming numbers for the price of one. The exhibit is over now; feature in one yourself in the very near future by ordering these patterns today.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1276 is designed in sizes small (34 to 36), medium (38 to 40), large (42 to 44). Medium size requires 1¾ yards of 39-inch material. Pattern 1015 is designed in sizes 14 to 20 (32 to 42). Size 16 requires 3⅛ yards of 35-inch material.

Stradivari Violins

Stradivari violins cost from $10,000 to $40,000 today because, although 50,000 are reputed to exist, there are not more than 400 whose authenticity is supported by irrefutable documents. Furthermore, no new "Strado" have been discovered in the past 75 years.—Collier's Weekly.

CHANGES TO OIL-PLATING

In spite of everything, it paid him to take ads seriously, you see, else he might never have tried Oil-Plating. First of all he was impressed by the explanation of Oil-Plating.

Simple enough, if you'll think what happens as Johnny's dirty little hands touch the wallpaper. Anything greasy or oily on his hands becomes quite a permanent part of the paper. You'll say permanent!

In much the same way—forgetting technicalities—Conoco Germ Processed oil forms a lasting attachment for every working part of your engine. A genuine, enduring Oil-Plating is brought about by the Germ Process—patented.

Thus the Germ Process not only multiplies the strength of the usual flowing type of oil-film, but creates Oil-Plating besides. And once Oil-Plating goes on, Conoco Germ Processed oil does not let it come off in minutes, hours, days . . . or miles.

Thus Oil-Plating kills the old fear of starting "dry." Likewise Oil-Plating refuses to let go in all the fury of 5,000 revolutions per minute. That's why your "good old car" or the latest model will stay more like new, with its engine Oil-Plated. And your whole Summer's driving will take less Conoco Germ Processed oil. PONTIAC AMERICA'S FINEST LOW PRICED CAR!

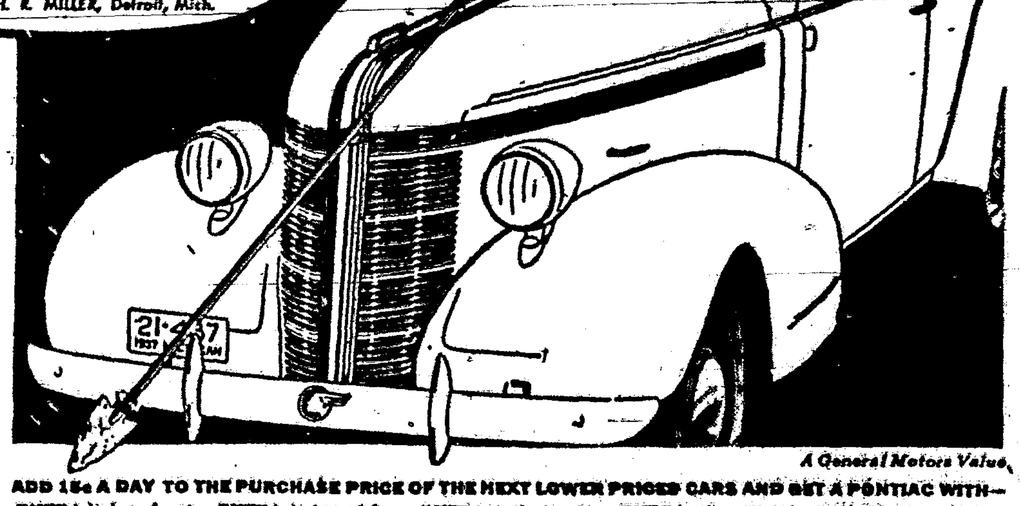
"15¢ A DAY*

MORE TO BUY... EASIER ON GAS AND OIL THAN ANY CAR I'VE EVER OWNED"

H. R. MILLER, Detroit, Mich.



"What's more,

MY PONTIAC HAS BEAUTY, PERFORMANCE, COMFORT AND SAFETY that a low-priced car just can't match"

Like a wise buyer, this motorist got the real facts about comparative prices. And here they are: based on 18 months terms in 168 representative cities the average difference in monthly payments between a Pontiac DeLuxe six 2-door sedan and the same model of the next lower-priced cars is only 15 cents a day.* Naturally, that small extra sum was paid with pleasure, and the result is more satisfaction than a motor car ever brought before. America's finest low-priced car will suit you better, too. Prove it with a ride.
