Grand Master To Visit Here

With an unusually good attendance on hand at the regular meeting on last Tuesday night the Odd Fellows conferred the initatory degree on Mr. Lawrence Dragoo and Mr. Clinton Pfingsten and took in Mr. Gus Grossmiller an ancient Odd Fellow by card. Mr. Grossmiller states that this was the first time he had been in an Odd Fellow lodge for 32 years.

There was a gratifying number of out-of-town members on hand at this meeting: E. C. Kidwell and Fred R. Hendrix of Ancho; A. H. Pfingsten and E. H. Ramey of Lincoln; Tommy McCamant of Corona.

The local Jericho Club has been organized to furnish entertainment and any funds derived from that organization will be turned over to the Odd Fellows.

Next Tuesday night the Grand Master is expected and the First degree will be conferred on two candidates. Several Alamogordo members have stated that unless bad weather or some other unforeseen condition arises they are going to be on hand. Refreshments and a social hour are to follow the work. Every Odd Fellow is urged to attend this meeting.

Legion Post No. 11 Wins Merit Award

Benjamin I. Berry Post No. 11, American Legion, has been awarded a certificate of meritorious service for 1937-38 for surpassing its previous four-year average in members.

Mr. W. S. Stwart framed the certificate and it is now the proud possesion of the local post.

Alto Items

People of Alto and vicinity are very much grieved to learn of the death of an old timer, Mr. J. W. Stewart, who lived here many years. Mr. Stewart came to Alto in 1914, and filed on the land which is now known as the Shook ranch. He was a good neighbor and friend. In fact everybody was his friend on account of his honesty and devotion to duty. He leaves to mourn his passing, his wife; one daughter, Ethel; and two sons Walter and Clyde who now live in California. Also two brothers, Pat and Bruce Stewart.

Mr. Ted Collier and wife visited Ruidoso this week-end.

While cutting wood last Saturday, Mr. Gene Silvers cut his thumb very badly.

Miss Anna Koeppe was in Capitan on business the past week-end.

Mr. O. B. Shook was in Capitan last Saturday on business.

As for snow we have had plenty. We have had about 22 inches in the past three weeks. Roads are almost impassable due to so much moisture. In fact they are in a worse condition than they have been for years, and we haven't had any road work.

Mr. B. L. Luck spent last week at home on account of too much snow to work.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Copeland have started housekeeping at Alto. We welcome them back home.

Miss Fronie Hulbert was on the sick list last week, but is better.

Jimmy Wooten visited friends at Alto the past week-end.

Farmers can get busy soon on their planting. They have plenty of moisture.

Mr. J. R. Adams came from Santa Fe Saturday and visited his son and wife, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Adams until Sunday.

Warning Notice!

HAVING been notified by telegrams and mail, that Spectacle Fakers have been operating in several sections of New Mexico and victimizing the public, I hereby appeal to my friends and others not to patronize any glib tongued transient specialist (?), Make sure he has a New Mexico Optometry Board License and that it is registered in the Court House in this County, which is a guaranteed protection to you. The State Board can revoke a license for unprofessional conduct.

THERE are several reliable specialists in this state, so why, take chances. Dr. Fred R. Baker, One of the Southwest's best known eyesight specialists, who has been serving the citizens of this section, with high class optical work for many years, and who has several hundred boosters in this county, has a New Mexico Board license, registered in this County. He will be at El Cibola Hotel, Thursday and Friday, March, 10th and 11th, Only.

Basket Ball

Last Friday night the local Hi quintett took Vaughn in a game of Basket ball by a score of 20 to 17. The game throughout was highly exciting and interesting. A good crowd was out to see our boys in action.

Saturday night they met the Capitan Cagers at Capitan and were defeated by one point, in the fastest game of the season.

Last Tuesday night they met the 3C five on the local court in the last game of Basket Ball to be played here this season.

Our High school team is in Roswell playing in the District 5 Tournament at Cahoon Armory. Everyone who possibly can, should attend and show the team you are for them 100 per cent.

W. M. Kennedy

Mr. W. M. Kennedy, age 71 a former citizen of Carrizozo, passed away last Tuesday, at a hospital in Phoenix, Arizona. He had influenza and seemed to be on the road to recovery, when he suffered a relapse, two weeks ago.

Mr. Kennedy was a pioneer of Lincoln county, having come here from Texas. He was a carpenter and continued in this line of endeavor with the exception of a short time spent in the mining industry.

He was a good husband and father, and charitable toward all.

His wife passed away in 1925, since which time he had made his home in Arizona. His survivors are Mrs. W. J. Fetter, Mrs. E. A. Stevens and Mrs. L. R. Wright of Arizona; Mrs. Lloyd Hulbert of White Oaks and one son, Jesse Kennedy of Arizona, and three grand children, all of whom accompanied the remains here except Mrs. Wright who is ill.

Funeral services were held at the Kelley mortuary this morning at 10:00 o'clock, with Rev. R. A. Crawford in charge. Interment was in the local cemetery.

Lt. Truman Spencer, Jr. To Flying School

Lt. Truman Spencer, Jr., of Carrizozo, N. M., stopped in El Paso Tuesday enroute to San Antonio, where he will enter the flying school at Randolph Field. —El Paso Times.

ANCHO ITEMS

Mr. Walter Smith who has been employed at the Ancho Trading Co., by Mr. George Roberts was called back to work on the extra section crew near El Paso. He and Mrs. Smith have been here for several months.

CAPITAN ITEMS

Mr. and Mrs. Berly Beller, Roy Copeland and family recently moved to Hondo.

The town team basketball tournament was held here Friday night, all day Saturday and Saturday night. A large number of towns gathered and presented their teams.

Mr. Monroe Howard was in Carrizozo on business Monday.

Capitan received a fairly good rain Sunday night.

Mr. Blair who has been ill in the past few weeks was able to be out Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Maryfield and son went to Tularosa Sunday to visit their daughter.

Mrs. Laura Merrel went back to Roswell for an other operation on her eyes.

Mr. Currant age 87, a long time resident of the Texas Park community near White Oaks, was a victim of pneumonia, Tuesday of this week, and was buried in the White Oaks cemetery Wednesday with Rev. J. C. Vandiver in charge of services. Mr. Currant is survived by six daughters, Mrs. Reed, Mrs. Sam Ward and Mrs. John Walker of Tularosa; Mrs. Bud Lee, Mrs. Tom Ward, Roswell; and Mrs. Nick Brill, Pine Lodge. Also two nephews, Tom and Freddy Currant.

Jailer E. G. Gallegos was at Arabela Monday and Tuesday where he attended the funeral of his uncle Mr. Octaviano Gallegos who passed away last Monday.

Mr. Florencio Vega was in town this week from his ranch.

Johnson-Foster

Monday afternoon at four o'clock Miss Bee Johnson and Mr. Homer Foster were united in marriage at the Methodist parsonage with Rev. R. A. Crawford officiating. Witnesses were the bride's sister, Mrs. Thelma Peters and Miss Beulah Leslie.

The bride is the attractive daughter of Mrs. Belle Johnson of San Antonio and is one of the popular owners of Bee's Beauty Shop.

The groom has made his home here for some time and has been employed by the Southern Pacific railroad, in the bridge building department.

They visited the groom's relatives at Tatum, and are now housekeeping in the French cottage on Elm street.

Both have many friends who extend congratulations and wishes for a happy, prosperous life.

Hotel Carrizozo

Mrs. Cleata M. Prior wishes to announce to the traveling public and to the local trade that she is now in charge of Hotel Carrizozo and invites their patronage. Clean, comfortable rooms, and prompt, courteous service guaranteed. She will have the dining room in operation after March the 15th and invites the patronage of the public. Adv.

Historic Hoaxes

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Horrors of the Drouth

DURING the great drouth of 1936 an enterprising photographer sold to news picture companies three "views from the drouth area of North Dakota" which were printed in newspapers all over the country. One showed the water in the Missouri river near Stanton so low that automobiles could ford the "Big Muddy" without difficulty; another depicted "a herd of cattle from the drouth area contentedly grazing on the state capitol grounds at Bismarck"; and a third, the whitened skull of a steer lying on a bare spot of pasture that had been parched and cracked by the heat.

Widespread publication of these pictures caused great indignation throughout North Dakota because its citizens knew that they were gross exaggerations. One of the leading papers of the state, the Fargo Forum, exposed the hoax by reprinting the pictures labeled "It's a Fake."

Along with the Missouri river picture was printed one showing a Stanton ferry crossing the stream which, it declared, was 15 feet deep at that place. The second was labeled "a photographic trick—superimposing a picture of a herd of cattle on a picture of the North Dakota capitol building. Where those cows are presumably grazing is a graveled parking lot at the rear of the state capitol, thickly dotted with cars at all hours of the day." As for the steer's skull it was called a "movable 'prop' which comes in handy for photographers who want to touch up their pictures with a bit of the grisly" and it was pointed out that it was "a typical alkali flat, left when melting snow water and spring rains have passed. Without difficulty, one can find these in Maryland, Pennsylvania, Indiana, wherever one chooses."

The Floating Cabaret

BACK in 1924 the New York Herald Tribune printed a story which sent the United States coast guard on a wild goose chase all up and down the Atlantic seaboard. It was in the days of prohibition and this story described a 17,000-ton "floating cabaret" with an old-fashioned American bar, a ballroom, a jazz band and beautiful chorus girls—all provided for the entertainment of wealthy New Yorkers who visited this "joy spot" every night.

The story had been turned in by a young reporter named Sanford Jarrell who claimed that he had been an eye-witness of the merry-making going on there. Then Jarrell was sent out to get more details of the illicit bar. But instead of coming back with one, he sent back a signed confession that it was all a hoax. He had concocted the yarn to win the attention of his city editor. So copies of his confession, with the Herald-Tribune's apologies for being the unwitting perpetrator of the hoax, were sent to all the other New York papers which had been playing up the story, based upon Jarrell's "revelations."

However, a movie company which was just about to release a new picture called "Wine" capitalized on the excitement over this story. It placed an advertisement in all the papers in the form of a letter signed by "the captain of the 12-mile limit cafe" and advised readers to go to the manager of your favorite picture theater and whisper "show me Wine." He will do the rest. A great many did and he did, thereby increasing box office receipts materially.

The Iron Maiden

FOR many years Nuremberg, Germany, was famous all over the world for a relic that was considered the most terrible instrument of torture ever devised by man. It was called the "Iron Maiden," a huge iron box, in the form of a cloaked and hooded woman, with hinged sides. Inside was an ingenious arrangement of razor-sharp projections so placed that, when a complicated clockwork slowly closed the doors upon the unfortunate prisoner, his eyes, heart and other vital organs were pierced.

According to tradition, more than one witch died a horrible death within the embrace of the "Iron Maiden" and the sight of it caused many a shudder when this and other sinister examples of medieval cruelty from the notorious tower of Nuremberg were taken on a tour and exhibited in the leading cities of the world. In 1831, however, the "Iron Maiden" was exposed as a hoax by Fraulein Hildegard Kartner, who announced that this instrument of torture did not date from medieval times, nor had anyone ever been killed in it. Instead, the "Iron Maiden" was the invention of her great-uncle, an antiquarian who had constructed it back in 1667 to satisfy an apparent public taste for "horror relics" and who had made up an appropriate story to go with it.

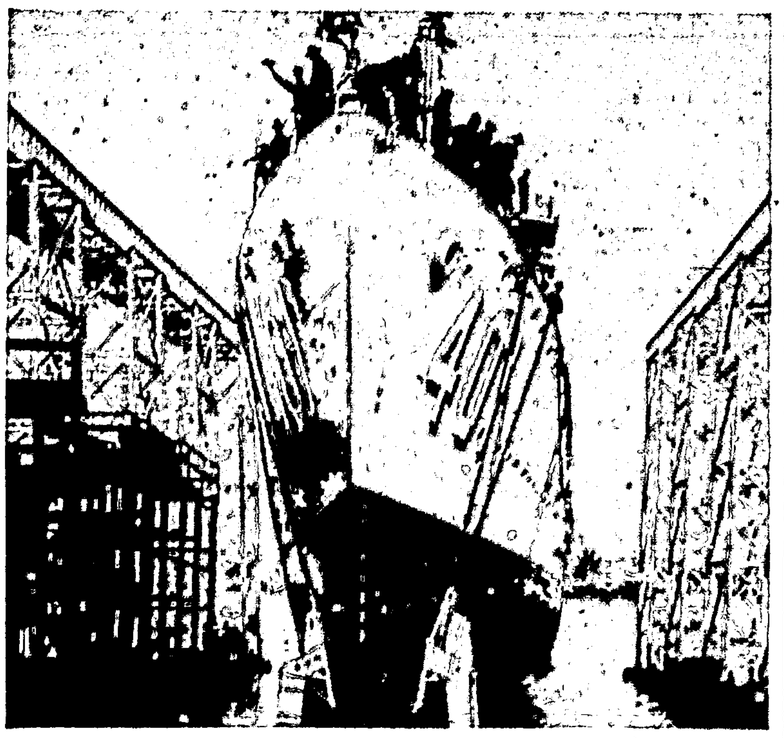
It looks like a rebellion of some sort, but it is really only a battle royal among kids at Palm Beach, Fla., for the purpose of getting in shape for the high-chair championships in Miami. The young entrants are from the Sun and Surf club. Notice the two young ladies mixing it up at the left.

Navy Launches New Destroyer



The navy's newest destroyer, the 1,500-ton Maury, launched recently at San Francisco. Second naval vessel to be built privately on the west coast since the World war, the Maury was christened by Miss Virginia Lee Maury Werth, great-granddaughter of the ship's namesake, the late Lieut. Commander Matthew Fontaine Maury.

NO ARMS FOR HIM

Frank Littell of Mt. Vernon, Iowa, student at Union Theological seminary, New York, who represented the National Council of Methodist Youth before the house naval committee on the United States naval building program, where he attacked President Roosevelt's request for increased military expenditures as "anti-social action" and said the young men he represented "will not bear arms" in event of war.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK...

By Lemuel F. Parton

NEW YORK.—In 1929, at the age of seventy-one, Frederick H. Prince, the Boston banker, was still playing polo. He has great faith in the durability of men, institutions and governments, as long as they behave themselves.

Time Better Than Reform for Business

He left for Europe to forget about business for a while and intimates that it would be a good thing if the government would be similarly neglectful. "Washington should stop trying to reform business and leave the situation to time," he says.

Time has treated him nicely and he may well give it a testimonial. At seventy-nine, he is the grand seigneur of American business. Only four years ago, he engaged in a hard-hitting slugfest over the control of Armour & Co.

He got what he was after—the chairmanship of the board. He has many such trophies, having controlled 46 railroads, and, in general, one of the biggest cuts in the American dream of any man of his day.

His (mainly liquid) fortune is estimated at around $250,000,000. But, for many years, he says, he has made it a point to be about $20,000,000 in debt. That is revealing in connection with his ideas about money and success. He emphasizes the dynamics of money. It isn't money unless it is working. Stagnant money just dries up and blows away. Hence you draw cards even if you do have to drag a few chips for markers.

Makes Point of Being in Debt Always

He's a little too heavy for polo, with a massive gray head, deep sunken, pondering eyes, and heavy, gray moustache; a bit grim, perhaps, but not formidable. When, early in October, 1929, a small black cloud appeared on the horizon, he viewed it with a telescopic eye, saw it for what it was, and got out of the market.

The cyclone never touched him. Until a few years ago, he was still riding to the hounds at Pau, in southern France, master of the hunt. He has marble palaces here and there, one of them the former mansion of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, at Newport. Remarking that he has been in business 55 years, he says this little squall will blow over in two or three months.

THE reason isn't quite clear, but, these days, the colleges compete for tuba players as well as athletes.

Tuba Aces Prized Same as Athletes

Dr. Walter Albert Jessup deplores this and other phases of the scramble for students in the annual report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, of which he is president. The fight seems to be entirely in the field of extra-curricular activities. No mere scholar gets competing bids from rival faculties.

Since he became head of the Carnegie foundation, in 1933, Dr. Jessup has been a consistent deflationist, so far as education is concerned. He wants fewer and better students in the colleges. He assails the colleges which would "teach anybody anything." He is against educational trimmings, excrescences and gadgets, as the little Scotch ironmaster doubtless would be if he were looking over the current scene.

Other leading educators join him in this, but the big mill has to have plenty of raw material, to keep on grinding, or else become just a crossroad plant. So they go after even the tuba players. At any rate, each can blow its own horn.

Brain Mill Needs Raw Material

Dr. Jessup was president of the University of Iowa from 1916 to 1933. A native of Richmond, Ind., he was educated at Earlham college and Columbia and gathered several honorary degrees in later years. He was superintendent of schools in Indiana and dean of the college of education of Indiana university. He has won high distinction in the educational field and is the author of a book on arithmetic.

One gathers that he would not recommend Benny Goodman for a college faculty and that quite probably the next Carnegie report may find adversely on the shag, the eeper and the susy-q. He is for low kicking and high thinking, as against the prevailing reversal of this formula.

Giants Short Lived

The circus giant, the man with abnormally long legs or other abnormalities of frame, is a short-lived human. Tall men fall into two classes, those who attain their extraordinary growth because of inherited tendencies and those who become freaks because of some upset in the glandular functions. The man who "comes by his height naturally" usually lives a normal life span, but the freak seldom attains middle age. An insurance company, given to research in such matters, found that a number of men ranging from 7 feet 6 inches tall to 8 feet 7 inches had an average life of thirty-four years. The oldest died at forty-five, the youngest at twenty-seven.

Waters of Colorado Soon to Irrigate the Platte Valley

By RONALD L. IVES

Denver, Colo.—Waters now roaring down the unvisited canyons of the upper Colorado river soon will ripple placidly through the irrigation ditches of the Platte valley, 40 miles to the east of the river gorges and across the 14,000-foot-high Colorado front range. Work has begun on the long-debated Colorado-Big Thompson Transmountain Diversion project.

Armed with good maps and $40,000,000, hard rock men of the United States bureau of reclamation have started their drills roaring in the first bores for the 13¼ mile tunnel through the backbone of the continent. Grand lake, carved long ago from the living granite by Ice-age glaciers, will become an irrigation reservoir, storing water that will later gurgle through the great tunnel, to issue near the little town of Estes Park and fall into a power penstock.

After generating power, the water will flow to storage reservoirs at the edge of the great plains, and later go to the thirsty beet fields of the Platte valley.

Relief for the "Sugar Bowl."

Designed to remove forever the spectre of water shortage from the farms of northeastern Colorado, and to generate cheap power for farm machines and mining equipment, this diversion project will bring no new land under cultivation. Only lands now under irrigation will receive the water from the Colorado river.

Fast becoming a dustbowl, with surface water entirely used for irrigation and underground water supplies mined out during the last drouth, the water needs of the Platte valley, Colorado's "Sugar Bowl," have increased yearly. Ditches already have been run miles back into the hills to catch each little stream at its source. Now, all the streams on the eastern slope are harnessed, and there is no possibility of getting more water from them.

Through the Front Range.

Colorado river water, until now largely wasted in violent spring floods caused by sudden melting of the mountain snow, and flowing through lands unsuited to cultivation, seemed the only solution to the Platte valley's problem. The Front Range, rising more than a mile above the river valley, presented only one of several obstacles. Now, with tunnel construction planned, and storage reservoir construction starting, the transmountain water diversion will soon be an accomplished fact.

From the reservoirs, ditches will extend, like the arms of an octopus, to gather in the water of each little stream in the region. A lower reservoir, built in the melting basin of the long-extinct Monarch Valley glacier, with a dam in the deep-cut granite canyon of the Colorado river, will collect the water as it runs in. Above, at the tunnel mouth, Grand lake will be enlarged, and fitted with special spillways to keep its level constant. Power generated at the eastern end of the tunnel will be wired across the storm-swept range and used to pump water from the lower reservoir to the upper.

Keep New-Born Baby Warm and Reduce the Mortality

Washington. — Keeping new-born babies warm after their birth is a simple but important way of helping to cut down infant deaths, Dr. Horton Casparis of Vanderbilt university pointed out at the conference on better care for mothers and babies held under the auspices of the United States children's bureau here.

Before birth the baby has been living in an environment with a temperature of 98.6 degrees Fahrenheit, which may be compared to the wilting heat of midsummer. An infant, especially a prematurely born infant, needs to be gradually acclimated to the temperature of his new environment, just as an adult is careful about not getting chilled after a hot bath. Failure to protect the baby against the change in temperature at birth may, directly or indirectly, be responsible for his death.

Protecting the infant from infection and seeing that he gets plenty of water and suitable food are other important measures stressed by Dr. Casparis.

American Spas Not Well Enough Known to Our Physicians

Chicago. — Let us save for America and Americans the many millions spent each year in foreign spas.

Dr. Bernard Fantus, Chicago physician, makes a plea to state governments to provide the nation's doctors with information in regard to the natural remedial resources within their own states.

He further asks the American Medical association to interest itself in ridding American spas of quackery.

Dr. Fantus presents his two pleas in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

American doctors know a great deal more about European spas than about our own health resorts, Dr. Fantus states, "although in this country there are practically all the climatic and balneic remedies possessed by any other country in the world."

Some 2,000 places in the United States boast of springs of more or less medicinal value.

The result of the European exodus each year is not only a net loss to this country but also a financial loss to the patients who are sent abroad for a treatment they could obtain much more economically nearer home.

Better Handled in Europe.

In Europe, Dr. Fantus declares, the governments and the governmentally owned medical schools see to it that their doctors are well informed as to their national health resorts.

This is not only altruistic but also sound financial policy for, through taxation, governments are in virtual partnership with all the national enterprises.

A sick person does not get the same benefit out of drinking mineral waters from a bottle in his own home, experience has shown.

The therapeutic value of a mineral water "cure" consists also of the remedial value of a vacation, the change of scene and of occupation, the change in mode of living, the subtle influence of climate and the factor of faith, the Chicago physician states.

Distrust and skepticism prevail among doctors regarding American health resorts. With a few notable exceptions this distrust is well merited in the opinion of Dr. Fantus.

"The mendacity of many of the advertisements for mineral springs rivals that of the claims for 'patent medicines' in their palmiest days," he writes. "Unethical practice and quackery abound in and around health resorts. Even the social features and amusements, in many of them, may be objectionable from a therapeutic as well as a moral standpoint."

California Coast Ranges Comparatively Modern

Washington. — California's earthquake-plagued coast ranges first started to grow only a short time before the Ice age began, and received their most recent uplift only a few thousand years ago, according to data reported recently by Dr. W. P. Woodring of the United States geological survey.

Rising first during the Pliocene period, age of giant mammals, just before the beginning of the ice ages, to part of their present height, the coast ranges were thrown into a jumble of ridges and basins somewhat resembling their present construction.

Ice age erosion, during the time of alternating glacial periods and warm spells, changed the shape of the original mountains somewhat, removing material from the higher lands and depositing it in the valleys, it was stated.

Evidence has been presented during the past generation to prove that the coast ranges were built any time from about 40,000,000 years ago to 20,000 years ago, but the most recent studies lead to the conclusion that the greatest uplifting and deformation took place during the Pleistocene period, time of ice ages, which probably began not more than 1,000,000 years ago.

Polar Seas Fast Warming. Russian Scientists Find

Moscow.—Surface layers of cold water in the Arctic ocean are becoming rapidly thinner, reports Tass, Soviet news agency, summarizing the results of recent thorough studies of Russia's 16,000-mile northern coastline and adjacent seas.

From the surface to a depth of 210 yards, in 1895, Fridtjof Nansen found the temperature in the Arctic ocean slightly more than one de-degree below freezing. Now, in the same areas, the cold zone is only half as deep. Below the cold zone the water was warmer. Soviet scientists believe that this shallowing of the cold zone is caused by an increased amount of warm Atlantic water flowing into the Arctic ocean under the surface.

Alaska's Output

Washington.—Gold, silver, copper, coal and tin produced in Alaska last year were valued at about $27,000,000, according to preliminary figures issued by the United States geological survey.

Use of Cheese Is Spreading Widely

More and More Dishes Now Call for This Delicacy

By EDITH M. BARBER

THE epicure considers a fine taste for cheese as important as discrimination among vintages of various wines. Most of us Americans lack these talents, although we are beginning to cultivate them. It is only within recent years that the cheese production of this country has become at all versatile. We were content with our American cheddar, known commonly as "store" cheese and with cottage cheese which is also known as pot cheese. Then came cream cheese and our proudest native production, Liederkrantz, which compares with the finest cheese of Europe. Recently, however, efforts have been made to reproduce products native to Europe and which are called by the same names. In addition we have a number of combinations of cheese with savory ingredients which are known as spreads.

The practice of eating cheese with pie is considered a typical American custom. It dates back to our English ancestors who customarily served it with fruit as is always done in France and Italy for dessert. Cheese is served with apple tarts in many places in England. One of the most interesting things to collect in Europe is cheese experience. Practically every section of each province has a specialty which may remind you of a famous cheese, but which is just a little different.

The use of cheese abroad, however, is not limited to dessert. A yard or so of bread and a slab of cheese, sometimes accompanied by an onion or a garlic, often provides lunch for the workman. The fondues and the souffles are often used for a course which precedes the meat at the noon meal.

In this country we are accustomed to the service of crackers with cheese. Abroad we find that French bread is used instead. Sometimes butter is served as well and you may see it being mixed with certain kinds of soft cheese before it is spread on the bread.

Coeur a la Creme.

3 cakes cream cheese
½ cup sour cream, whipped

Mix the cream cheese and the cream together, stirring them with a fork until the cheese has absorbed all the cream. Place in a heart-shaped mold and put in refrigerator for two hours. Remove from the mold and serve with fresh or stewed fruit.

Stilton Canape.

12 rounds Boston brown bread
Stilton cheese in port
2 tablespoons minced celery
2 tablespoons minced pimento

Spread rounds of bread with softened cheese and dip in the mixed celery and pimento. Serve as an appetizer or with salad.

Fondu a la Alsace.

1 pound cheese, Gruyere or American
¾ cup white wine
¼ cup brandy or kirsch

Cut the cheese and soak in chafing dish in the wine for several hours. Heat over chafing dish flame, until cheese is melted. Add brandy or kirsch. Serve hot with French bread.

Old-Fashioned Rarebit.

1 pound American cheese
1 tablespoon butter
2 teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons dry mustard
1 teaspoon paprika
½ bottle beer
Toast

Shred cheese with a fork. Melt butter, stir in seasoning, add cheese and stir over low fire until melted. Stir in beer gradually and cook, stirring over fire until the mixture is smooth. Pour at once over hot toast. A dash of cayenne pepper may be added if desired.

Roquefort Dressing.

1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon mustard
½ teaspoon paprika
1 teaspoon sugar
2 tablespoons vinegar
½ cup salad oil
2 ounces crumbled Roquefort dressing

Mix dry ingredients and add to onion juice, vinegar and oil. Mix well. Add cheese and beat well with a fork.

Cheese Platter.

On a large platter arrange a box of Camembert cheese and surround with wedges or cakes of other types of cheese, such as Roquefort, Swiss, Bel Paese, Liederkranz and cream cheese. Provide a cheese knife for service. With this, pass toasted biscuits and a variety of other crackers and thick slices of French bread and one or two varieties of mustard.

Greasing Cake Pans

Grease both the pan and the paper when lining cake pans. Waxed paper, vegetable parchment, or any clean white or brown paper may be used.

For Fruit Punch

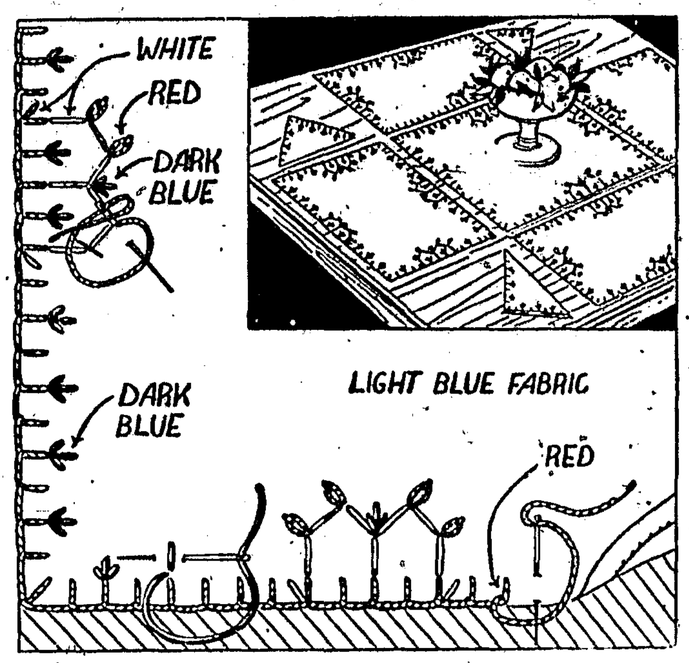
Save the juice from canned pineapple and the liquid from maraschino cherries to use when making fruit punch.

To Tempt Kiddies

If children will not drink milk, add cocoa or grated sweetened chocolate to it and place a spoonful of whipped cream on top.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears



A Colorful Luncheon Set

WE HAVE been hearing a good deal about American handcrafts lately. Of course, quilts have always been important among our needlework handcrafts. So many readers have written asking me for more of the old fashioned embroidery stitches that were used in making crazy patchwork that I have collected dozens and dozens of these quaint stitches from old quilts.

This gay little double house effect built upon blanket stitches with chain stitches flaunting from all gables was the invention of someone's great-grandmother and I couldn't resist using it for a luncheon set of light blue linen. It originally adorned a light blue satin patch in a quilt and all the other colors indicated here in the sketch are the original colors.

All the strands of six-strand mercerized embroidery thread were used for the luncheon set. The mats were hemmed first and then the blanket stitches were taken through the hems to make a firm edge as shown at the lower right. All the other stitches used are clearly illustrated. Just the edge stitches without the little houses were used for the napkins. Many more authentic old patchwork stitches are illustrated in a new leaflet which is free upon request with the booklet offered herewith.

I bve you a copy of Mrs. Spears' new book SEWING? It contains forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slip-covers and dressing tables; curtains for every type of room; lampshades, rugs and other useful articles for the home. Copy will be sent postpaid, upon receipt of 25 cents (coins preferred). Address Mrs. Spears, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

No Longer Our Defense

Our ancestors kept themselves from being henpecked by wearing long and terrifying beards.

Strange Facts

Get an Eye-Full of This

IT IS often said of an ardent lover: "He seemed to devour her with his eyes." But the common or garden frog has him beat forty ways to a finish.

The large, bulging eyes of the frog are separated from its mouth only by a thin skin. When the eyes are closed they bulge inwardly. Thus the frog closes its eyes when it has an insect in its mouth, and the inner bulging helps to push the food down the throat.

Frogs are insect eaters, and for that reason are very helpful to man. Those that spend most of their time in or near water are also very fond of small fishes and worms. They catch their prey with their sticky tongues. The tongue is not fastened at the rear of the mouth as ours is, but at the front. The tip points backward when the mouth is closed.

The adult frog has lungs, but it does not breathe air into them as we do. It sucks air into its mouth through two nostrils, at the same time lowering its throat. Then the nostrils are closed, and the frog lifts its throat and pushes the air into its lungs.

In northern countries, when cold weather sets in, some frogs dive into a pond, bury themselves in the mud and stay there all winter. What little oxygen is needed the frog gets from the water through its skin. The frog sometimes, however, spends the winter in a hole in a soft bank, or buried under loose stones and earth.

Era B. Smith Editor and Publisher

Because the President sent a message to Congress recommending an increase in our naval establishment that would keep us pace with the bigger armament programs of other great nations the people and some organizations are expressing deep concern.

One might think that the President was advocating this expenditure of money for his own satisfaction. One group even feels to believe that this is a move to lead us into war, there being a curious philosophy that the way to keep out of national strife is through meekness and weakness. China followed that procedure, with the result that a nation of 400,000,000 people is now being kicked around by a country having not one-fifth of its population and not one-hundredth of the resources.

In the course of the hearings on the subject up at the Capitol, there have been many references to our having been compelled to enter the World War. It probably does not occur to those who cite that incident that had the United States been adequately prepared, and had the Central European powers known that we had as large and strong a navy as any nation on the globe, the episodes which forced us into that struggle would probably never have taken place. It was only because of the idea that the United States of America could not become an active participant in the transoceanic struggle that these powers thought they could with impunity tell our commercial vessels how and where they should go, and torpedo them without warning, and perform other acts along those lines.

The genesis of such a message as the President sent is ordinarily as follows: The Navy Department, being charged with the duty of protecting our interests on the sea, advises the President what it deems requisite in order that it may perform its duties efficiently in any emergency. Presumably, that is the story of the present bill.

With war clouds everywhere, and nobody knowing when they may begin to discharge their lightnings, it would not be a comfortable thought to have our country practically helpless. No truer word was ever spoken than that classic remark that the second best navy is of no more use than the second best hand in a poker game. In the present combustible state of the world a country is as liable to have to fight to preserve its neutrality as to defend any other of its functions. In the desperation of war, no more respect is paid to the rights of neutrals than the peaceful nation can enforce. The smaller countries may not be able to defend themselves in direct combat, so their only recourse is to go in on the other side, which, of course means war just as much as any other process.

Of course, if a big, strong country like the United States were willing to abandon its foreign commerce and withdraw any promise of protection to such of its nationals as go into business abroad, it might escape involvement. But, on the other hand, it would have to sit down quietly while all the other nations took the whole of the world's trade, and incidently, the whole of the world prestige.

We have had half a dozen major wars in our comparatively brief history as a nation, but not one of them has been attributable to an oversized navy. On the contrary, the War of 1812, for instance, would have never come had we been big enough and strong enough to take care of England on the seas at that remote date. We came out of the Civil War with one of the strongest navies in the world. If we hadn't had the navy, we would have had war with France when we insisted on the termination of the Maximilian empire in Mexico. Does anybody suppose that the colony-hungry powers of Europe or Asia would have kept out of the inviting field of Latin America if it had not been for the Monroe Doctrine, with the American navy behind it? And yet the Monroe Doctrine has kept the Western Hemisphere free from wars or aggression, and probably from greater wars that would have resulted over the division of territorial spoils had that aggression been permitted.

A powerful navy, so far from being an incentive to war is an essential element in what the President has described as the "search for peace".

There are certain rules, which distinguished what we call civilized warfare. These rules, and even treaties, burn up when countries find themselves engaged in a death struggle. So twenty years ago, despite the progress that the world thought it had made in the advancement of the humanities, we saw unfortified cities bombarded, civilians slain by bombs dropped from the air, peaceful merchant men torpedoed and poison gas established as a weapon of combat.

It would be lovely if we could regard ourselves immune from war; if we could be sure that other nations, regardless of their own plans and policies, would respect the rights and protect the persons of our non-combatant citizens abroad. But history does not record any great nation that had this immunity except when it was strong enough to compel that respect. So we have always to regard war as a possibility at least, which brings us to the very practical question of what kind of a war would cause the least damage and destruction.

A big navy is expensive, but a month of actual warfare now-a-days might easily cost more than the entire price of the largest navy afloat. Assuming that, through no fault of our own, we should be forced into a struggle, it would certainly be much better for us to have that war decided by a victory the other side of the seas than one off our own harbors. That is the military reply to the suggestion that we should never fight except in the emergency of invasion or other assult on our own territory. Obviously, to get this condition we must have a better navy than the other fellow.

In the discussion before the committee that is framing the navy bill, it was at first suggested that there existed some secret pact for the coalition of our navy with that of Great Britain. The Secretary of State was called upon to declare that no such coalition or compact was in existence, or could be in existence. Secretary Hull's statement was accepted. And then came the still more amazing idea that such a secret project might be under way without the Secretary of State's knowledge. Partisan absurity could certainly go no further than that, for every form of negotiations between the United States and foreign countries is conducted by the Secretary of State and by nobody else.

In the following land agencies:
General Land Office
Geological Survey
Division of Grazing
Bureau of Reclamation
Office of Indian Affairs
National Park Service in the Interior Department
The Forest Service in the Department of Agriculture
Bureau of Biological Survey in Department of Agriculture.

In support of proposed changes, attention is called to the following beneficial effects which such a contemplated reorganization would bring about:

Reduction of Inter-Bureau conflicts by grouping overlapping agencies in the same Department.

Elimination of overlapping functions of General Land Office and Forrest Service,

Elimination of overlapping functions of Forest Service and National Park Service.

Elimination of overlapping functions of the Forest Service, the Division of Grazing, and the Indian Reserve Grazing Service.

There is some talk of a proposal to place all public land agencies in the Department of Agriculture. Although it is possible that such an oranization could be made to work and that would tend to overcome certain difficulties, nevertheless this proposal is subject to certain objections.

Attention is also called to the fact that many of the states have departments of conservation whose services are analagous to those contemplated for the Federal Department of Conservation. Such a proposed reorganization would facilitate the coordination between the states and the Department of Conservation. The Brookings Institution in a report to the Select Committee to investigate the executive agencies of the Government, has made the following recommendations concerning natural recousce administration:

1. That the General Land Office and the Geological Survey should be in the same department.

2. That grazing on public lands and in national forests should be brought under common direction.

3. That there should be closer coordination in the development of recreational facilities in national parks and national forests.

4. That lands acquired in the Resettlement Administration that are suitable for grazing or forestry should be turned over to the Division of Grazing and the Forest Service respectively.

5. That the Bureau of Fisheries should be placed in the same department as the Bureau of Biological Survey, subject to a reorientation of the policies now governing the Bureau of Fisheries.

6. That a Division of Hydraulics should be established in the Bureau of Fisheries.

It is believed that the creation of the proposed Department of Conservation will provide an up-to-date efficient instrument to carry out the desire of the nation for the conservation of its natural resources. The need and desirability of this insturment of government have long been recognized, and an unusually favorable opportunity for its establishment now exists. The divided forces of conservation can, if they care to do so, unite in a very constructive action by helping the President to make it a strong department.

A United States Department of Conservation

The United States Government has been compelled, during the past ten years, to undertake many new and diverse functions resulting in the multiplication of bureaus and agencies. Some of these have been placed in the regular departments without relationship to the functions of the other bureaus with which they are associated. In many cases they have been given independent status entirely outside the regular departments. They tend to assume additional functions after their creation: functions continue to be exercised long after the need for them passed; and all of them tend to be self-perpetuating. Overlapping and needless duplication of services are general. Practically all departments of government have acquired bureaus which have no place in them. There is indicated a need of transferring and re grouping many agencies in order that they may be associated with other agencies dealing with closely related functions of government.

It is now proposed by those in charge of the Interior Department that a complete reorganization of that department be undertaken. Among other things it is proposed to abandon the name "Interior" and to substitute for it a name which is descriptive of the functions performed by a majority of its present bureaus. It is proposed that it shall be called the "Department of Conservation", using the word "conservation" in its popular sense, as it applies to natural resources.

It is proposed to eliminate from the department those agencies that have come into being under the welfare clause of the Constitution. A separate Department of Public Welfare is proposed. In it will be grouped the principal agencies relating to relief of distress, public health and education whose activities need to be coordinated for efficient administration.

A report of the Select Committee of the Senate on Government Organization appears to favor such a reorganization of the Interior Department. Consideration is given by that committee that some opposition will be encountered by certain groups, and attention is called to the fact that any transfers will be determined only by the President after investigation, and that proposed or anticipated transfers will be considered on their merits. In any event, any transfer will have to be submitted to Congress before going into effect and may be nullified by Congressional action. This assures us that hasty action is not contemplated and that the proposed changes will not be attempted without due thought and consideration.

Overlapping occurs principally

FUEHRER STIRS EUROPE

Demands Colonies, Threatens Czechs and Says Germany Doesn't Fear War . . . Anthony Eden Resigns

Hitler Defies the World

POLITICAL turmoil spread over Europe after Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler, in an address to the reichstag, declared his intention to make Germany one of the most powerful nations in the world, gave warning that it was re-arming and did not fear war though it desired peace, and demanded the return of Germany's lost colonies. Furthermore, Hitler upheld the aggressive actions of Italy and Japan, and asserted that Germany would not tolerate ultimate victory of the loyalist faction in Spain over Franco's rebel forces.

Adolf Hitler

The Fuehrer told with gratification of his success in compelling Chancellor Schuschnigg to give the Austrian Nazis representation in his cabinet and to permit them to act as a political party. He gave no assurance that the independence of Austria would be preserved. He openly threatened similar action against Czechoslovakia unless the Germans in that country were granted "political liberty."

Hitler's speech might be summarized as a declaration that Germany will ignore Great Britain, France and other western powers in carrying out her international policies, will continue her efforts to destroy the last vestiges of the general settlements which followed the World war, will insist that the "have not" nations must be restored to a basis of equality with the "have" powers, and is prepared to defy any combination of powers which may be formed against her.

Here are some of the other things Hitler told the reichstag:

Germany refuses to accept "credits or other promises" in substitution for the colonies taken from her by the treaty of Versailles.

Reports of dissension between the Nazi hierarchy and the Reichswehr are "nonsense" and in his new role as supreme commander of the Reich's armed forces he has decided to "strengthen the army to prevent the menace of war."

Germany's relations with Great Britain can not be improved so long as British statesmen and newspapers attempt to meddle with what the Reich regards as its own internal affairs.

Germany has no intention of returning to the League of Nations.

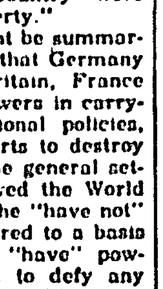
Halifax Succeeds Eden

REFUSING to go along with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain in his plans to "buy" a friendly settlement with Germany and Italy, Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary who has fought the ambitions of European dictators for two years, resigned from the cabinet. With him went Viscount Cranborn, the principal foreign undersecretary. Viscount Halifax was appointed to succeed Eden temporarily. This change was in effect another triumph for Hitler, was especially regretted by France, and threatened to precipitate a serious crisis for the British government.



Lord Halifax

Viscount Halifax, lord president of the council and former viceroy of India, is a personal friend of Hitler and an insistent advocate of immediate friendship with Germany and Italy, even at the cost of great concessions by Britain. He was sent to Berlin not long ago to talk over matters with the Nazi leaders.

Eden told the house of commons that he had resigned rather than deal with Italy in the face of Premier Mussolini's "rife, hostile propaganda" against Britain and Il Duce's "glorification" of victories in Spain.

Chamberlain boldly told the house of commons that his government would begin negotiations with Italy at once in hopes of obtaining a friendly settlement. He put forward a four-power peace plan designed to eliminate the dangers of war in Europe. As members of the pact, he advocated Germany, Italy, France, and Britain.

Chamberlain went to Buckingham palace and gave King George his account of the events leading up to Eden's resignation, and then summoned Dino Grandi, Italian ambassador, to a conference. With them were Halifax and Sir Alexander Cadogan, permanent undersecretary for foreign affairs. It was learned that the break between Chamberlain and Eden came to a climax a few days before when Grandi and the prime minister had a conference concerning the basis on which negotiations might be opened for a general understanding between London and Rome. Some British leaders feel that agreement with Mussolini for Mediterranean security would give Britain a stronger hand in dealing with Germany on the question of colonies.

French Worried

PREMIER CHAUTEMPS and other high French officials saw, in Hitler's words concerning German minorities in other lands a definite threat against Czechoslovakia, a military ally of France, whose security the French are bound to defend. There are about 3,000,000 Germans in that country.

From Prague, the Czech capital, came word that Czechoslovakia would not even negotiate with Germany regarding autonomy for those Germans and would not yield to coercion as did Austria. Officials said that if negotiations are Hitler's aim, they would be regarded as "infringement of Czechoslovakia's sovereignty, and therefore not acceptable."

As for the prospective British-Italian agreement, the French government was fearful that Chamberlain's overtures to Mussolini would take a course that France could not follow without risk of alienating its own Socialist and Communist elements. The government, however, was determined to keep unbroken its close relations with Britain.

For Price Increases

BEFORE going to Hyde Park for a short vacation, President Roosevelt announced two moves designed to restore prosperity. He declared the administration's economic policies are being directed toward a limited increase in prices, to be achieved without inflation or any substantial increase in the cost of living.

He ordered the Reconstruction Finance corporation to renew its lending to industry and the railways.

The President specifically mentioned farm prices as needing to be increased. On the other hand, he said certain other prices, such as those in the building industry, have remained at a high level for the last few years.

No specific monetary action is contemplated to increase those considered too low, he added.

Earle Wants Toga

GOV. GEORGE H. EARLE of Pennsylvania announced his candidacy for the Democratic nomination for United States senator, standing on his record as governor and continued support of the Roosevelt administration.

"If elected a member of the senate, I shall continue my services on behalf of the principles which have marked the Roosevelt administration and my own administration in Harrisburg," Earle said.

Kennedy Now Ambassador

JOSEPH P. KENNEDY took the oath as ambassador to Great Britain in the office of President Roosevelt and will soon leave for his new post. He resigned as chairman and member of the maritime commission and Mr. Roosevelt appointed as new head of that body Rear Admiral Emory S. Land of Colorado, retired chief of the navy's bureau of construction, who has been a member of the board since last April. To fill out Kennedy's term the President selected Max O'Rell Truitt of St. Louis, who has been the commission's counsel.

Mr. Kennedy apparently lost out in his squabble with Secretary of Labor Perkins concerning legislation to curb labor disorders in the American merchant marine. Both of them appealed to the President but that gentleman did not indicate his stand on the pending bill which Kennedy favored and Madame Perkins and the C. I. O. opposed.

Ortiz Inaugurated

ROBERTO O. ORTIZ was inaugurated president of Argentina for a six-year term, and pledged himself to maintain democracy. In a speech to the congress he said: "As a candidate I ratified my faith in democracy. That implied a solemn promise to respect liberty and guarantees of the constitution."

He went on to say that only a strong people can maintain peace and justice under present world conditions. Therefore, he added, development and perfection of armed institutions and moral reserve of the nation would be his special preoccupation.

Wallace Gets Busy

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE WALLACE is losing no time in putting into effect the new farm law which gives him increased powers over production. He announced the 1938 marketing quotas for cotton and two types of tobacco to start with. The national cotton acreage allotment was set at approximately 20,300,000 compared with last year's planted acreage of 34,383,000. The flue cured tobacco quota was fixed at 704,000,000 pounds, compared with the 1937 production of 850,000,000 pounds. The quota for dark tobacco was set at 145,000,000 pounds.

Sec. Wallace

These quotas will remain in effect through the marketing year, subject to approval by two-thirds of the affected producers. Referenda among the producers are scheduled for March 12.

Cotton acreage allotments will be apportioned among individual farmers by local committees of producers.

Rescued from Ice Floe

FOUR Russian scientists, who spent nine months at an observation post near the North pole, were rescued, with their records and equipment from their ice floe that was drifting along the east coast of Greenland. This ice raft had carried them more than a thousand miles and was reached with difficulty by icebreaking vessels.

The meteorological and hydrographic records compiled by the scientists in their vigil through the arctic night are expected to help Russia in plans for regular transpolar flights from Russia to the United States.

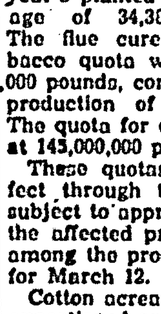
Rumania Goes Fascist

RUMANIA is now a Fascist corporative state of guilds patterned after Italy. This was settled when King Carol proclaimed the new constitution, which provides for a parliament composed of guilds of farmers, workers and intellectuals. Both the chamber of deputies and the senate are reduced in size and election of members is to be by trades and professions, not by political parties. The king will appoint half the senators and will have veto power over all legislation. All Rumanians are declared equal, with radical distinctions, and religious freedom is granted with the Orthodox Rumanian church as the state religion. Trials by jury are abolished and the death penalty reintroduced for certain crimes.



King Carol

The constitution was created by Rumania's powerful crown council, a special body established by King Carol to define general policies and chart the course of parliamentary measures. Carol and Dr. Miron Cristea, head of the nation's latest cabinet, collaborated in drawing up the constitution.

New Suits Stress Color Alliance

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MORE than ever the spring fashion picture is going strong for suits. Somewhere in the current collections "your suit" is holding forth, waiting only for you to come and get it. Which is by way of telling you that the styling of suit costumes is so diversified this season you can depend upon being perfectly "suited" in that the fashions for spring and summer 1938 include models typed to every individuality.

Suits that lead in the style parade come out definitely in favor of color. Which is most significant news and should be kept in mind when choosing the new spring outfit. Even more newsy is the fact that many of the smartest suit costumes favor two colors rather than one. They highlight, for instance, such intriguing combinations as raspberry and navy, maple or brown and beige, gold color with black, or they contrast a pale blue woolen with red fox trim and so on.

It's going to be tremendously interesting to go suit hunting this spring for just such stunning models as here pictured are typical of what you will be shown throughout your quest in the better shops and departments. The three-piece costume suit to the left makes two-color its theme in a dramatic styling of black nubby wool combined with the same wool weave in the striking gold color that is so new and so fashionable just now. Notice how intriguingly the patch pockets are decorated with black in conventional design. The black breton hat worn with this suit is the bowl type that is so favored at present.

A message of utmost importance as told by the Style Creators in Chicago in the wholesale district via an illuminating prevue of spring and summer fashions is the favor expressed for suits tailored of pastel woolens, such as grayish blues and the once old-fashioned and now new-fashioned "old rose," and a list of soft lovely muted shades might be cited. Seen to the right in the picture is a charming two-piece costume suit tailored of fine wool fabric in a beguiling light blue. The fur is red fox. You'll love the color combination. The dress has cutout embroidery on the blouse.

For the new suits the dominant silhouette is square shouldered, straight and decidedly boxy in line. This trend is seen in dressy as well as casual models, the chief distinction being a matter of fabrics and ornamental details. Quilting, embroidery and fur trimming distinguish costumes in the dressy category while contrasting appliques and novelty fabrics highlight the casual types. Of greater prominence than in any recent season is the tuxedo front employed on innumerable garments from full length coats to jackets ending at the hip.

Many suits are of fabrics that favor pencil stripes; checks small or large, lightweight tweeds that are nubbed or flecked, come in gay plaids, others herringbone or diagonals and there's a list of colorful airy homespuns shown.

From the signs that tell, it's a navy spring. With navy in the lead a promenade of colors follows that include many not seen for years such as forget-me-not blue, ashes of roses, purple, moss pink, lilac fuchsia and so on. Other colors on their second wind of popularity include aqua, gold, chartreuse, flag blue, bright red, also some dubonnet.

CONTRAST JACKET

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Emphasis is on English walking suits of the type pictured. Indeed the costume that tops a skirt of handsome plain wool with a jacket that is tailored of colorfully plaided wool that assumes a very British air in its many-pocket detail and general feeling of superior workmanship and material has become quite an idol of fashion for town and country wear among the smart set. The stores are showing similarly styled two-pieces in dashing color combinations.

TRAILER CLOTHES NEW FASHION THEME

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Now that that there is an increasing enthusiasm shown for trailer travel, a new phase of fashion challenges the creative genius of designers. Here's describing the latest or shall we say earliest in trailer outfits as displayed at the spring style revue recently presented at the Merchandise Mart in Chicago. Practical and at the same time very attractive mattress ticking denim was the wise fabric choice for this utility outfit. The overalls with zipper in front are backless above the waist, and there is a little boxy jacket to complete the ensemble. It's a perfect outfit to wear when you go trailering.

Color of Frock Trim Is Often Picked Up for Hat

For afternoon, often the color of its trim is picked up to make a bright felt hat that rises in any direction that proves becoming. Braid trim may be repeated on a hat, sequins often make the top of a flat crown, ribbons follow the dress trim or cutouts of the dress fabric are appliqued onto the edge of a long veil.

Sports hats worn with tweed and dark wool suits follow the bright tones of blouses, the crowns taking a high, tapering line. Berets are adapted for all occasions—there are high, stovepipe crowns and fan-shaped brims rising from the front or back of turban-shaped hats.

Concealed Heels

Concealed heels are one of the latest contrivances for adding inches to the size of small women, and men as well. Built snugly into the inside of the shoe, they provide the desired height without affecting the outer contours in any way.

Favorite Recipe of the Week

PIMIENTO BISQUE

THE soup described below is delicious. It has a delectable flavor and the rich color of the pimientoes gives just the desired red touch to the finished product.

1 can cream of celery soup
1 cup milk
3 pimientoes
1 tsp. salt
2 slices of onion
⅛ tsp. paprika

If canned condensed soup is used, prepare according to directions on the label and then add 1 cup of milk. If canned ready-to-serve cream of celery soup is used, pour the contents into a pan and add the cup of milk. Rub the pimientoes through a sieve and add to the soup. Add salt, onion and paprika and heat until the soup is hot. Stir frequently to prevent scorching. Remove the onion before serving. Serves 6.

The food with red color in the main course might be a ring mold made with canned beets.

The red color for the dessert might be supplied by a raspberry gelatin made with a can of red raspberries.

The Stars Above . . .

FIXED stars are so called because they change their positions so slowly in comparison with the planets. All of the stars are in motion.

The name morning star is given to the planets Jupiter, Mars, Saturn and Venus, when one of them rises shortly before the sun and is a conspicuous object in the sky before dawn.

The brightest star is Sirius, the Dog star, in the Canis Major.

Betelguese, a bright reddish star in the constellation Orion, has a volume about 30,000,000 times that of the sun.

2 WAY RELIEF FOR THE MISERY OF COLDS

Take 2 BAYER ASPIRIN tablets and drink a full glass of water. Repeat treatment in 2 hours.

If throat is sore from the cold, crush and stir 3 BAYER ASPIRIN tablets in ⅓ glass of water. Gargle twice. This eases throat soreness and soreness almost instantly.

All it usually costs to relieve the misery of a cold today — is 3¢ to 5¢ — relief for the period of your cold 15¢ to 25¢. Hence no family need neglect even minor head colds.

Here is what to do: Take two BAYER tablets when you feel a cold coming on — with a full glass of water. Then repeat, if necessary, according to directions in each package. Relief comes rapidly.

The Bayer method of relieving colds is the way many doctors approve. You take Bayer Aspirin for relief — then if you are not improved promptly, you call the family doctor.

—19—

Steve Hurley kept fretting, hungry for action. "Most likely they've got Coffee and Tulare in the cooler! They should have been back an hour ago."

"More like two hours," Val Douglas thought.

"If we was to drift into that town," Steve said, "either we'd meet 'em on the road, or they're needing our help, by God! I think we oughter—"

"We're plenty close now," Wheeler said. "You can see the lights of the town from here—or could before they all went out. If you think I'm going to take Marian into town—into a shooting scrape—forget it. Unless Tulare and Coffee get back with my car, so that she can go on back to the ranch—I stay here. And so does the car stay here."

"Don't you bother about me," Marian spoke. "I'll get along all right."

It was after midnight. Their plans for the crack-out of Horse Dunn were indefinite, because their information was indefinite. First was necessary the seizure of Walt Amos, for it was known that he carried the keys to the Inspiration lock-up; but the trouble was that they did not know how many deputies were camped with Amos, in his house below the jail. If more than one or two were there, they thought that it would be a good idea to create a gunpowder diversion in some other quarter of the town, to draw away a part of the sheriff's force. Tulare had driven Old Man Coffee into Inspiration to make a reconnaissance, and what they feared now was that the hot temper of Tulare had got both scouts in trouble.

"There ain't much left of the night," Steve complained.

"There's other nights."

"Leave one man here with Marian," Steve suggested, "and let's the rest of us go take that town apart! Or anyway, find out what's up."

They finally agreed upon this; but only after it was conceded to Billy Wheeler that they wait a quarter of an hour more.

That last quarter of an hour dragged out like a week; and still no headlights appeared upon the Inspiration road.

"It must be time by now," Steve Hurley insisted.

"Five minutes more."

A gleam of lights showed two miles off in the outskirts of the town; a car was coming out of Inspiration at last. So slowly it came that for a time they were convinced that this could not be the driving of Tulare. Even when Billy Wheeler's roadster pulled up opposite them on the road they stayed quiet for a moment, suspicious that the car was no longer driven by their own men. Then Old Man Coffee sung out. "Billy Wheeler?"

"Here!"

"Billy, let me talk to you a minute—alone."

Val Douglas and Steve Hurley had started piling out, but now they looked at each other and reluctantly settled back. Billy Wheeler trotted across to the other car.

Old Man Coffee dropped his voice to a muffled undertone. "It's all over, kid."

"What's the—"

"Horse Dunn has run his own jail break, pretty near four hours ago. It took us a long time to get the full dope. We got it now. He got clear of the jail, all right, with that same derringer in the sheriff's back, and using the sheriff as a shield. But the deputies mowed him down."

"You sure? You sure this isn't one of Bender's tricks—"

"Yes, for I saw him laid out," Coffee said.

For a moment Wheeler was silent. He was laboring under heavy shock; but already he was wondering what he was going to say to Horse Dunn's niece. "Did he get anybody?" he asked, half unconscious of what he said.

"He couldn't get a man. He made his break with an empty gun. And they found his ammunition lying on the floor inside."

Tulare whispered, fiercely, "We'll get 'em for this—we'll get 'em if it takes—"

"Kind of late for that," Coffee said.

They were silent again, for a long time. And to Billy Wheeler the night turned suddenly empty, as if a great and living force had gone out of it with Old Man Coffee's words. "I suppose we may as well be getting back to the ranch," Wheeler said at last.

"Who's going to tell Marian?"

"I'm going to tell Marian. I'll take her back in my car."

Coffee and Tulare stepped down, and followed him reluctantly across to Horse Dunn's battered touring car, where the others waited.

For a moment Billy Wheeler stood silent, one foot on the running board. The eyes of Marian and Steve Hurley and Val Douglas were on his face. Steve Hurley spun the starter and the engine began to purr; he sat waiting to jump the car down the road to Inspiration at the first word.

"Well?" Val Douglas demanded at last.

"No action tonight," Wheeler heard himself tell them. "We'll be going back to the ranch. Marian—you'd better come with me."

"What the—" Steve began.

"Coffee will give you the dope on your way back. We got to get out of here now. Come on, Marian." They stared at him; but presently they obeyed.

Billy Wheeler let the others turn Horse Dunn's car in the road and start back toward the 94, before he started his engine. Even after he had set his roadster rolling he drove slowly, half paralyzed with the dread of what he had to say. He knew that Marian was watching his face, waiting for him to speak.

Marian Dunn Sat Perfectly Still.

"Suddenly she grasped his arm in both her hands. "Billy—what is it?"

He let his car drift to a long-rolling stop beside the road, and shut off the engine.

"Billy! What's the matter?"

Still he could not speak, but sat with his hands gripped on the wheel, and his eyes on the far off vanishing tail light of Horse Dunn's car, which Horse would never drive again. Once more he was seeking words, and finding no words at his command.

Then Marian cried out sharply, as if she had read his mind, "It can't be that—Tell me it isn't so!"

"Marian—I can't hardly believe it myself. But—"

"My uncle is—"

"Dead," he said.

Marian Dunn sat perfectly still, so still that he could not hear her breathe. Still he did not look at her, as that incredible silence settled upon them; a silence so complete that somewhere, many yards from where they sat, he presently could hear the faint, small gnawing that a kangaroo rat makes, working to get at the water in a cactus heart.

Over all that vast range the moonlight shone clear and clean as a light radiated by silver; you could even see the distant mountains, and there was a color of deep blue in the dark sky. This was the range that Horse Dunn had won. As far as the eye could reach, all that lean dusty land was under the domination of the 94 brand. Somewhere off in the night, scattered over the miles, were the bunches of cattle which Horse Dunn had branded in Marian's name—scattered and few to the mile, but grazing an area so vast that Horse himself had not known how many they were, within a thousand head. It seemed a strange thing, almost impossible to believe, that the shaggy old fighter who had gained these long miles of desert, built these far-flung herds, would never ride this range again, nor count the scattered beeves, nor see this moonlight, cool and serene and clear, flooding the vast dry land that he loved.

When the silence had grown until he could endure it no more, Billy Wheeler turned his eyes to Marian. She sat as still as a resting kit fox, and her face, turned straight ahead, was as white as the alkali flats under the moon. Only, once, he saw her eyes turn, sweeping the unlimited land that Horse Dunn had fought for in her name.

He tried to say something. "Marian—Marian—"

She turned into his arms, and hid her face in the hollow of his throat. For a few moments her breathing was irregular, but she did not weep. "We—can't let the 94 go under; not—not now."

"It isn't going under," he said. "I tell you, you and I can show this coyote ring such a fight as they've never seen!"

Marian said, "He gave me all his last years, while he was old. He had just one great lasting dream—his dream of a cow kingdom. But somehow I think he could have spent his last years sitting somewhere contentedly in the sun; except that he wanted to do this thing, for me."

"I know."

"Billy, do we have a chance to whip the coyote ring?"

He drew a deep new breath. "We can fight 'em to a standstill, fight 'em till they quit! I can clear the 94 of its debts at a stroke. The next step may be a little different than what he would have done—"

"He'd have wanted you to fight the best way you knew—your own way."

"Then—we can win. Next step is to cut down the uncontrolled herds, and build better herds in their place; make a 40 mile fenced pasture of that north land you own—"

"We own," she corrected him.

"—and use the fenced 40 miles as a barrier, to hold the young heifers clear; get in the best bulls we can buy, by the hundred, at any cost; dig tick dips, and set up chutes; vaccinate all calves against blackleg the day they're branded, dehorn all young stock, make alliances with the feed pen outfits in west Kansas; break through a trail drive to Pahranagat, and ship our own stock, taking the breaks of the market—"

"But the coyote ring?"

"Hire their best men—we'll need a big outfit for the new ways; buy out what little they still own in the Red Rock country—and the coyote ring is done."

"It's a gamble, Billy. If you go into this—it may break you, before you're through."

"We'll go broke together, then! If we can't gamble together—but we will."

"This is what he would have wanted, Billy; I know it is, I know!"

They sat quietly there for a long time, holding each other close. "Billy," Marian whispered, "I have to know one thing more."

"Yes?"

"How—did he die?"

"He died fighting, Marian; you see—well—"

"You mean he didn't wait for us?"

"That was it. He tried to make it on his own. He still had the derringer. Then it seems—this is an extraordinary thing — he almost made it look as if he had a chance! He held up the sheriff with the derringer in his back, and got out of the jail and broke clear; and died in gunsmoke, weighted down with lead."

"Did he—did he get any of the—"

"That was the strangest thing of all. He had shells for the derringer; but he left them in his cell. He went through it all with an empty gun—yet almost made it clear."

"He did that for me," Marian said in a choked voice. "He knew I hated guns and blood; if it hadn't been for me—"

"It was his own idea; his own way. What he wanted was pretty plain. He knew we would have been drawn in, and mixed up in it forever, if he'd waited for us to get him clear. So he took the only way out he knew."

"I'm sorry for one thing more than anything else. If only I could have known—could have changed it—"

"Would you have wanted it any different?" he said gently.

"Only this: I'm sorry that his gun was empty, because of me."

After a little while she added, "And one other thing. Before he took his long trail, I wish he had known that you and I have found each other."

"I think he knew. And that was what he wanted too, I think."

"I'm sure he did."

"When the coyote ring is whipped we'll have built him such a monument as few men have had; a monument built of land and cows, and good horses, and men in the saddle."

"The Cattle Kingdom he dreamed, and planned . . ."

They sat silent, close together, their eyes lost in the distances of the range of the 94; and the coyote moon swung low over the Tuscaroras, promising sunrise, the cool soft colors of dawn on the Red Rock, and bacon and coffee cooked by Tia Cara.

Chemists Learn New Uses for Swelling Clay; of Great Value to Agriculture

Research results from the nation's laboratories dealing with soil structures and the industrial uses of clay, the absorption behavior of chlorine, the surface tension of liquids and the chemical activity of blood and serum were reported to more than 400 chemists from all parts of the country participating in the fourteenth annual colloid symposium of the American Chemical Society at the University of Minnesota, writes a Minneapolis correspondent in the Chicago Daily News.

Bentonite clay, found principally in Wyoming, which possesses the ability of swelling in water, was put in the spotlight by Prof. Ernest A. Hauser and C. E. Reed of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. They reported several new discoveries relating to the clay, which is becoming increasingly valuable in industry and agriculture. Bentonite was used recently to stop a serious leak in the cofferdam of the Coulle dam of the Columbia river.

"Bentonite," said the report, "is finding ever-broadening application in the oil industry, where it is used during the drilling operation as a thickener. If suspensions of bentonite in water are allowed to rest they will become increasingly more viscous and finally form a 'gel' (a gelatin - like material). Upon mechanical agitation they are quickly liquified. This procedure can be repeated many times and is known as 'thixotropy.'

"A closer understanding of the reason for the different swelling capacities of bentonite and a better knowledge of the reasons for this peculiar phenomenon should materially assist in broadening out its industrial application. Furthermore, any more detailed knowledge should prove of great value in agriculture and soil preservation, since soil is made up to a large extent, of clay minerals."

TO RIDE THE RIVER WITH

A NEW SERIAL BY

William MacLeod Raine

STARTS IN OUR NEXT ISSUE!

Ruth Chiswick knew Jeff Gray was honest, from the moment he saved her life during the shooting escapade at Tail Holt. But . . . Jeff mingled with the notorious Sherm Howard's henchmen, he tried to kill her father and he was an ally of the cattle rustlers. Through it all Ruth knew that some day he would vindicate himself, though her doubts were often great. You'll be thrilled by the mysterious Jeff Gray, by beautiful Ruth Chiswick and their unusual romance amidst gunfire and desert dust. "To Ride the River With" starts in our next issue.

For Your Spring Wardrobe

DRESSES that not only satisfy your present craving for something new and spring-like, but also look ahead to a later season, too. Make them yourself at home, for very much less than you usually spend on clothes. You'll find it very easy to do, with the sew chart that accompanies each pattern.

Corselette Waistline.

If you have a slim figure, this is the afternoon dress for you! The fullness over the bust, the sleeves cut in one with the shoulders, and the lifted waistline, are just as flattering as they can be! It's the kind of dress you can wear to bridges, luncheons, meetings, and for every afternoon occasion, with the assurance that it is not only smart but becoming.

Slenderizing House Frock.

Especially designed for full figures, this house frock follows straight, tailored lines, and fits beautifully. You can get into it in nothing flat, and it doesn't take long to make either, thanks to the complete and detailed sew chart that comes with your pattern. Make it up in a pretty, small-figured printed percale, and trim it with rows of old-fashioned rick-rack.

A Frilly Home Cotton.

This is perfectly charming, made up in dotted Swiss, voile or dimity, in some flower-like color like delicate blue or pink or sunshiny, clear yellow, with sheer white collar and cuffs. It's ideal for slim figures. Nice to wear around the house now, and perfect to wear anywhere, later on, during summer afternoons.

The Patterns.

1442 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20, 40 and 42. Size 14 requires 3¾ yards of 39-inch material.

1389 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 4⅝ yards of 35 or 39-inch material, 3⅓ yards of braid.

1453 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 4 yards of 39-inch material, plus ⅝ yard contrasting, 2¼ yards edging.

What Is Proper Use of Furniture Polish?

In a recent investigation, it was proven that many, many homemakers use furniture polish incorrectly—pouring it on a dry cloth, for application to the furniture! This is a gross waste of the housewife's time, energy and her polish! And the latter is usually blamed. We refer, of course, to oil polish—for this type is best to clean, beautify and preserve the furniture. The best oil polish is not greasy, because it's made with a fine, light-oil base. The polish should be applied on a damp cloth—thoroughly moistened with water, then wrung out. Saturate this cloth with the polish—spread on—and rub lightly. The "wet" of the cloth smoothly distributes the polish—and the finish absorbs, receives it evenly! This correct procedure takes the "labor" out of polishing — and requires far less tiresome rubbing! A dry cloth is then used to easily work up the glow, which is even and uniform—the desired effect! This—and only this—is the proper way to use a good oil polish!

MORE WOMEN USE O-CEDAR POLISH THAN ANY OTHER KIND!

. . because O-Cedar not only cleans as it polishes, but preserves your furniture—"feeds" the finish, prevents drying-out, cracking. Insist upon O-Cedar Polish, for furniture, woodwork and floors (with the famous O-Cedar Mop).

TIPS to Gardeners

Grow Better Flowers

GROW better flowers by planting them in the kind of soil in which they can perform best. Though your soil may be good and rich, certain flowers will not do as well in it as in poorer ground.

In rich soil plant zinnia, petunia, portulaca, snapdragon, stock, heliotrope, marigold and salvia.

Nasturtium, love-lies-bleeding, Joseph's coat, celosia, alyssum, California poppy, calendula, love-in-a-mist and hollyhock are suggested by the Ferry Seed Institute for growth in poor soil.

Heavy soil containing clay is good for sweet peas, pansies, stocks, carnations, scabiosas, snapdragons and most of the popular perennials.

The following prefer a soil of light texture:

Petunia, Portulaca, celosia, hollyhock, love-in-a-mist, annual phlox, calliopsis, nicotiana and all the climbers.

In garden plots that are partially shaded grow calendula, balsam, mignonette, pansy and vinca.

HELP WANTED!

The files of the office of Carrizozo High School do not include a definite roll of graduates. Several important facts have taken place relative to school matters that should be of record. The undersigned will appreciate any assistance from those who are in possession of facts relative to following points:

Carrizozo School system was founded in 1907 and Mr. W. C. McDonald, first state Governor of New Mexico, donated the land and first school building. The land for present school building site and play grounds was donated by Gov. McDonald. Bonds were voted in 1909 to start the present high school building, and in 1911 additional bonds were voted to make additions to school plant. A bond issue of 1928 provided the funds for construction of such additions as to bring the school plant up to its present conditions.

Some high school subjects were taught at early as 1912, however there appeared to us no definite record of same. Below are presented the earlier graduating classes. Could you assist in giving us information as to their addresses? Any information relative to the accuracy of points herewith stated will be appreciated by the undersigned.

Graduates of 1915: Olivia Kennedy, Emuel Anderson.

Graduates of 1916: Lea Kennedy, Allie Branum, Margaret Branum, Louis Adams, Daniel Mayes, Margaret Scott.

Graduates of 1917: Clara Brazel, Ula Edmiston, Mae Kennedy. Zella Mayes.

Graduates of 1918: Rachel Hughes, Rufus Branum, Bessie White, Margie Lacey.

Graduates of 1919: Hillary Cooper, Perola Stevens, Pearle Hyde.

Graduates of 1920: Linza Branum, Hillary Cooper.

Graduates of 1921: Erva Wack, Lillian Merchant, Barbara Hust.

Graduates of 1923: Jeannette Johnson, Grace Taylor, Ella Rowland, Audrey Miller, Juell Miller, Beaulah Burr.

Graduates of 1924. Lucille Crenshaw, Nonie Littell, Fred Tuton, Kastler Taylor, William Kahler, Lenora Taylor, Ada Corn.

Graduates of 1925: Lillian Johnson, Anna Bert Hall, Robert Poage, Wayne Zumwalt, Bruce Chandler, Charles Pfingsten.

At a later date the remaining classes will be published. Information and correction or errors will be appreciated. Would you like to meet your old school mates at an alumni meeting?
