CCC Camps on War Time Basis

Albuquerque, N. M., March 23, 1942. CCC Camps that have been doing soil erosion work in New Mexico have gone on a war-time basis with camp projects being adjusted for an all-out war effort, Mr. K. C. Balcomb, regional CCC chief for the Soil Conservation Service stated today.

Wherever possible, camps are being assigned to help the Army by building target ranges, stringing telephone lines, setting up tents, doing erosion control work at airports and laying water and gas mains. Also, by taking night courses after the regular 8-hour work day, CCC enrollees are learning welding, machine shop work and other skilled trades designed to permit them to step into war production plants.

Although CCC recognizes that military needs demand first priority, enrollees not employed on military posts are continuing soil erosion control work in critical farming areas, where increased production must be achieved with the least possible damage to the soil. Through the construction of terraces, irrigation ditches and intake headings, dikes, gully plugs and other soil conservation structures, CCC is helping the state in its "Food for Freedom" drive, Balcomb stated.

This is particularly true of Camp 32-N, located at Hondo, in Lincoln County. This camp has devoted its entire company strength to assisting farmers reconstruct diversion dams and rehabilitate farm lands damaged or destroyed by floods last fall.

In conformity with national policy, Balcomb said, CCC is discouraging the enrollment of young men who are needed for military service, farm work, or industrial production. There continues to be a number of youths between 17 and 20, however, who are untrained for industry and too young for military service, he said, and it is this group that will most profit from a year spent in a CCC camp.

Balcomb also wished to correct the impression that CCC men are not subject to military draft. They have exactly the same status as any other civilian group, he stated.

During the nine years of its existence, CCC has created a reservoir of healthy, trained man power that is serving the nation in its war program, he declared. Enrollees have learned tractor operating, road building, blasting, welding, machine shop work, blacksmith work, electrical work, cooking, radio operating, and many other trades. Today, thousands of former CCC enrollees are serving in the armed forces or working in defense factories at skilled trades.

In addition, CCC men are built up physically through work and posture drill so that the corps is an excellent pre-conditioning unit for army service, Balcomb stated.

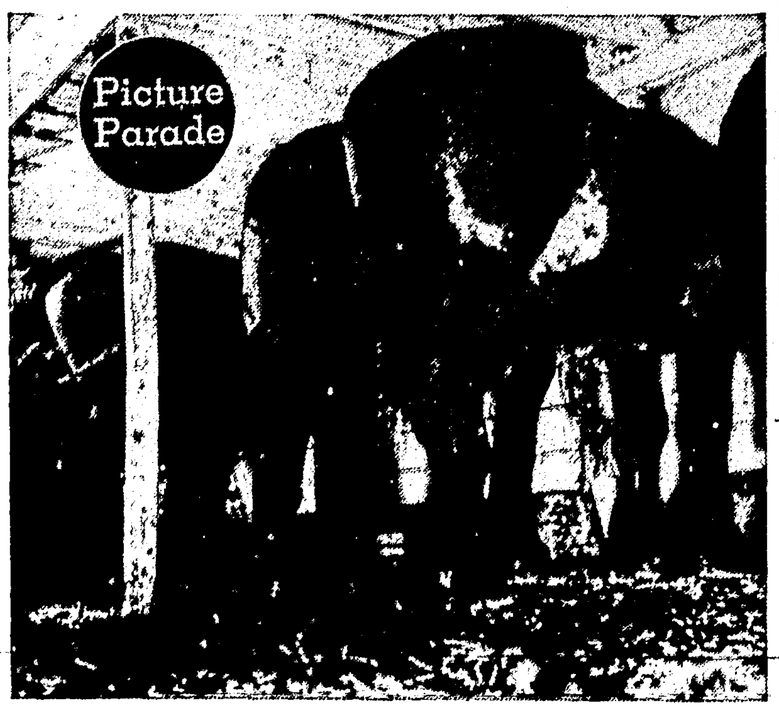
Wanna Buy a Horse?

A few months ago this question, if addressed to an automobile owner, would bring a laugh. Today the horse has the laugh. Out in the West and the Middle West horses are still plentiful, but in the East they are scarce. And yet there is a firm of horse auctioneers operating in Greater New York—Potters and Greenberg—where private sales on horses are held every day of the week and special auctions on Fridays. Photos show you what goes on.



This might pass for a picture of the Axis high command, but actually it is one of some of the steeds waiting to be auctioned off.

Not a gift horse. Deftly the buyer takes the horse's tongue in one hand and examines the teeth, to determine age.

Horses have many foot ailments, and seasoned horse traders know all about them and just what to look for.

Frequently a piece of harness goes on the block instead of a horse. Here you see a halter going to a bidder for three dollars. Auctioneer Greenberg is knocking it down.

This man has taken on the difficult job of selling a horse to the auctioneer.

When bidding lags on a horse the animal is made to strut his stuff, as shown here.

'Yankee Doodle' Spirit Rekindled By Nation Pledged to Freedom

At the nation's Capitol to boost stamp and bond sales, Irving Berlin, songwriter, is shown (left) with Lucy Monroe, "The Star-Spangled Soprano," and Barry Wood, radio singer, as they looked over a copy of Berlin's latest song just before the community sing. Berlin's number was one of many that came out right after the war started. Unlike the tearful, sentimental ballads that characterized the last war, these were tough and snappy ones like, "To Be Specific, It's Our Pacific" and "You're a Sap, Mr. Jap."

The days of fervent patriotism have returned to give America a new "lift" after the apathetic 1920s and the distraught 1930s. For more than a year now, ever since the fall of France jerked us out of a national lethargy, America has been re-kindling the spirit of 1776—re-examining the glorious history that made her a great nation and putting her heart and soul to the task of defending freedom.

A few days ago the treasury department at Washington received a $100 check from a man who had won that amount at a movie bank night. He didn't want to buy any savings bonds or pay his taxes—just wanted to help Uncle Sam.

At public gatherings throughout the country bathroom baritones are twisting the vocal chords around "The Star Spangled Banner" like they haven't done for more than 20 years. School children are putting unaccustomed vigor into their oath of allegiance to "the flag and the republic for which it stands," and movie goers find themselves applauding spontaneously when the President's face flashes across the screen.

In some respects it's like the wave of patriotism that spread across the land during the last great war, but sociologists are convinced that this time there's more grim determination and less hysteria—a cold and calculating resolve springing from a recognition that for the past 50 years the United States has done too much talking about preserving our way of life and has taken too little action to really preserve it.

Evidence of Seriousness.

This atmosphere of seriousness is evident in the crop of new songs which popped up the first few weeks after Pearl Harbor.

Song publishers, who can detect a straw in the wind even before the breeze comes up, began making allowance more than a year ago for the new national emotional situation they sensed this war would produce. "God Bless America" was the first tip-off, inaugurating what might almost be called a "patriotic school" of tunesmiths unlike anything Tin Pan Alley had experienced before. And less than a week after the first Japanese bomb had fallen on unsuspecting Hawaii, the words-and-music boys were turning out "fightin' mad" numbers like "They Started Somethin' (But We're Gonna End It)" and "Let's Put the Axe in the Axis."

"Maybe we'll get sentimental in a few months," a prominent publisher said recently, "but I doubt it. This time America is dead serious. Sales of patriotic music have gone up 40 per cent during the past few weeks and we expect them to keep asking for the standard numbers like "Star Spangled Banner" and "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

America's involvement in the war has actually heightened national interest in such normally peace-time activities as the far-flung Americanism program of the American Legion, designed to "foster and perpetuate a 100 per cent Americanism." One committee is working with local Legion posts to stimulate interest in physical education, health education and recreation, because a healthy America is a strong America. Projects like the $1,000 annual Lewis S. Rosensteel award for outstanding community service, and the annual safe driving contest sponsored in co-operation with the Automotive Safety foundation, are all doing their part. Sponsorship of Boy Scout troops, junior baseball and essay contests are just a few of the commission's other activities.

'Glory of Being an American.'

"We anticipate an even livelier interest among Legion posts in this type of work during the war," according to Homer L. Chaillaux of Indianapolis, national director. "Legionnaires seem to realize that the individual community is the basic denominator of American life, and they're determined to strengthen it. Our job is to dramatize the glory of just being an American, for this is the only way we'll be able to have young Americans understand and believe in the United States."

Look anywhere in the country and you'll find the same dead-pan sobriety about this business, a shoulder-to-the-wheel attitude that completely transcends even the darkest days of the last war. Look at vocational schools and you'll find that in 17 months they have trained 1,775,000 men and women for war industries, 29 times the number trained during the last war.

Look at religion. Unlike 25 years ago, when the doctrine of a "holy war" against the "barbarians" was preached from most pulpits, churches throughout the country are now recognizing Christianity's responsibility to help make the coming peace a just peace. The Right Rev Henry St. George Tucker, presiding bishop of the Episcopal church in the United States, pointed out recently that "in comparison with the attitude of the clergy in April, 1917, I should say that today there is a deeper appreciation of danger to our country than existed at the beginning of the last war." Only a few days after war was declared, interdenominational leaders called a meeting, with the slogan: "In time of war prepare for peace."

Why has it happened? Why did defense savings bonds go up 117 per cent the week after Pearl Harbor? Why are Americans ready and willing, almost anxious, to pay the highest income taxes in history, and to spend $150,000,000,000 to win the war

Sense of Danger.

Broadly speaking, the answer lies in a more imminent sense of danger forced upon us by the knowledge that our own cities can now be bombed and we, ourselves—civilians though we may be—can be wounded or killed in our own homes. Thus the mobilization of manpower and womanpower this time has brought home the reality of war with an unprecedented impact. In addition to a fighting army of more than 7,000,000 men, the nation needs practically that many more people for air raid precautions work. Three million more men will be needed during the next year alone.

Another factor—mechanized warfare throws a harder punch at the civilian because it deprives him of commodities he's come to regard as necessities. There's plenty of food this time, fortunately, but no new tires for your automobile—indeed, new automobiles are no longer available. Aluminum frying pans have become instruments of war and plastics once made into phonograph records are now being used for tank gears and instrument panels. You can't even use your telephone as much as you used to, because total war requires mobilization of all available communication facilities.

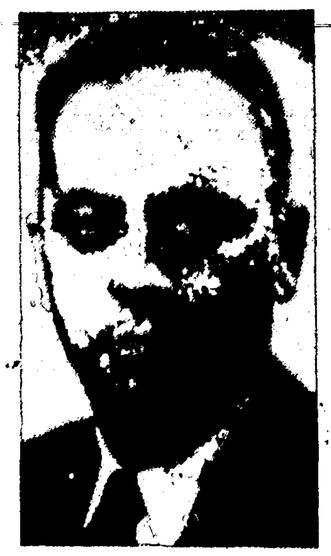
The situation is pretty well summed up in our attitude toward propaganda. In the last war, public opinion was whipped up from the start by motion pictures bearing such titles as "The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin" and "To Hell With the Kaiser." This time Hollywood is concentrating on two entirely different objectives. First, they're providing entertainment for soldiers at camps, and giving the public relaxation from war duties. Second, they're turning out educational short subjects to improve morale, to instruct new soldiers in various phases of warfare and familiarize civilians with their defense responsibilities.

In short, the determination is already present. America knows she has a job to do, and needs no shot in the arm to do it!

Remember K-K-K-Katy? She Was Nation's Gal

Remember the songs we were singing back in 1917? The sentimental ballads of yesteryear have little in common with today's stirring patriotic tunes. Almost everyone more than 10 years of age knew the words to "My Buddy," "Keep the Home Fires Burning," "Till We Meet Again" and "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight." On the lighter side we learned "K-K-K-Katy" and "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm." Barbershop quartets have kept the songs alive.

He's Convinced



Americanism is the job of Homer L. Chaillaux, national chairman of the Americanism commission of the American Legion. Watching growing interest among fellow Legionnaires in community betterment projects since the war began, Chaillaux is convinced the war has produced a deeper sense of responsibility in the average American.

This pretty Stephens college co-ed at Columbia, Mo., is also in step with the rest of the nation as far as purchasing defense stamps is concerned. Her patriotic zeal, though, assisted by some clever handiwork, surpasses that of most fellow Americans and classmates. She has made a flag out of her stamps. Sorry, this newspaper doesn't know her name.

Darwin, Australia, 'Way Down Under,' Is a Modern, Busy City

Darwin, bombed by the Japanese, heretofore has been considered Australia's backdoor. But it is a front door now from the troubled world to the north. Darwin has been described as a small town of less than 5,000 inhabitants with the appearance of an early mining town.

Australians explain Darwin as the victim of the tropics and transients. Its excellent harbor gave it birth, but, as the best port on Australia's north coast, the sailors give it color.

The majority of Darwin's better homes on the outskirts stand high above the ground on stilts of ironwood or concrete posts as a protection against termites. Life is lived for the most part on the shuttered verandas surrounding the houses, of which the open rooms are a part. Only a dressing-room and a bathroom are entirely enclosed. The almost unbearable heat at 12 degrees south of the Equator is relieved somewhat by cool breezes.

Darwin is the capital of the Northern Territory which covers a half million square miles of sparsely settled, wild country. During the long dry season this region has a scorched appearance. With the rains of the wet season, when the luggers come into port to lie up, the country blossoms almost overnight in scarlet poinciana, frangipani, Japanese honeysuckle, and many flowering trees, according to a National Geographic bulletin.

Make a Delicious Spinach Ring With Leftovers
(See Recipe Below)

Conserving Food

As the quotation "Food will win the war and write the peace" gains prominence, homemakers all over the country are beginning to realize that they must do their part in making the most of the food at hand.

Your first step in conserving food will come when you plan your menus and shopping. If you are not in this habit, then start now to practice the true economy that comes only with this kind of planning. You will rarely have bits of leftovers that are difficult to fit into the menu if you provide a place for them.

Your second step in conserving food will come in proper storage. No matter how careful a shopper you are, if you do not provide the facilities that keep food from becoming decayed, wilted, or soiled, you will not have done your part.

Refrigerator Storage.

Milk, eggs, butter, cheese, meat, opened canned food, or leftover food, require the cold of a refrigerator to keep them in good condition.

Fresh fruits and vegetables also retain their freshness and moistness in the icebox. Place them, after they are washed and carefully dried on the racks or in their special compartments. Lettuce and other greens keep best when stored in damp cloth bags.

Protein foods such as eggs, cheese and meat need the controlled cold of the refrigerator to keep their protein from decomposing. Uncooked meat may be left uncovered or covered lightly with waxed paper. Cooked meat should be covered. Cheese may be wrapped in a waxed paper or cloth, and covered with a thin film of butter if you expect to keep it for a long time. Keep eggs away from strong foods to prevent their porous shells from absorbing odors.

Leftover food remains usable if kept in covered containers. Canned foods will be perfectly safe to use even if left in the cans in which they come. Canned fruits keep best in their own liquid or syrup, olives best in their own brine, and pimientoes will not become molded if left in the oil in which they come.

The problem of keeping an egg yolk or two after the white has been used is easily solved if you just leave the yolk in a half of a shell and cover it with the other half. Several egg yolks or several whites can be placed in a glass jar and kept well covered.

Take stock of your refrigerator frequently so no food remains there for too long a time. Even though you are careful about storage, do not expect food to retain its good condition indefinitely.

Storing Cookies, Cakes, Bread.

Crisp cookies will retain the crispness if you place them in a loosely covered tin or box to permit the free circulation of air. Soft cookies remain moist if kept in a well-covered tin or jar with an apple or slice of lemon, orange, or grapefruit to provide additional moisture. Change the fruit every several days.

Tight containers which close out the air are recommended for keeping cakes at their best freshness. Cover them with waxed paper, too.

A bread box scrupulously cleaned at least once or twice a week with soap and water, and dried thoroughly contributes in large measure to the freshness of bread.

Keep in a Cool, Dry Place:

Coffee, spices, flour and crackers need dry, cool storage in tightly covered containers since they are affected by air. Use metal or glass containers for them. When crackers get soggy, crisp them in the oven for a few minutes and they will be as good as when you bought them.

Fats which are so valuable at present should be treated with the best of care so they do not become rancid. Store them in a glass jar or crock and place in a cool, dark storeroom.

Storing in the Cellar.

You are extremely fortunate if you have a cellar for storing purposes. Now with home and defense gardening gaining in popularity, you may have vegetables to keep for later use. If the cellar tends to become warm, leave the windows open at night, closed during the day.

Cook to Save Food Values.

Poor cooking may cause the biggest kind of waste in food. Perhaps you roast your meats at too high a temperature and cause them to shrink more than necessary. Be careful to watch temperatures and time in roasting or cooking meats. Meat, cheese, eggs and milk are all protein foods which should never be cooked too long or at too high temperature since this causes the protein fibers to become tough.

Measure water carefully when cooking vegetables so you do not have to throw any out and lose valuable minerals and vitamins into the kitchen drain. As soon as food is cooked serve it immediately as standing or overcooking causes loss in food value.

Cook with covers as much as possible except in the case of green vegetables which lose their coloring if covered. Starting the cooking of vegetables with boiling water will cut down cooking time.

Our recipe of the day is a good example of how you can combine several kinds of leftovers into one delicious main dish. The spinach may have been left over from yesterday's dinner, the shrimp from a luncheon you gave, and the bread crumbs rolled from stale bread.

This Week's Menu

Hot Consomme
*Spinach Ring with Shrimp Sauce
Grape, Peach, Banana Salad
Whole Wheat Bread Butter
Baked Apple Stuffed with Raisins
Coffee Tea Milk
*Recipe Given

Spinach Ring With Shrimp Sauce.
(Serves 6 to 8)

3 cups cooked spinach
1 teaspoon grated onion
1 tablespoon butter
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon black pepper
⅓ teaspoon paprika
2 eggs
3 cups cream sauce
½ cup fine bread crumbs
1 to 2 cups whole canned shrimp

Chop spinach fine and add grated onion which has been browned in butter. Season with salt, black pepper, paprika and add the well beaten yolks. Mix the spinach with 1½ cups cream sauce and fold in well beaten whites. Place in a buttered ring mold and dust with bread crumbs. Place in a pan of hot water and bake in a moderate (35-degree) oven for 20 minutes. Loosen by pressing spinach from side of mold. Heat shrimp with remaining white sauce and serve in center of spinach ring.

If you would like expert advice on your cooking and household problems, write to Lynn Chambers, Western Newspaper Union, 210 South Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill. Please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for your reply.

Lynn Says:

You can be smart about the way you use leftovers. Here are a few ideas:

Save leftover vegetables from dinner, wash the butter off and use in salads combined with celery, lettuce and dressing. Use other vegetables for stews, meat pies, and casseroles.

Leftover roasts slice nicely so you can have them cold or serve hot with leftover gravy. Meats combine well in casseroles, croquettes, stews, soup and salads.

Meat juices and bones combined with a few vegetables make up nicely into soups.

Clarify fats (bacon drippings, lard, suet, or chicken fat) by heating and adding 1 peeled, sliced potato and cooking until fat stops bubbling. Strain through a double cheesecloth, and store. Substitute ¾ cup clarified fat for 1 cup butter in recipes.

Pour cooked cereals leftover from breakfast into jars or pans. Slice, fry and serve with syrup.

Leftover egg yolks are good for custards, mayonnaise, sauces and frosting. Leftover egg whites are excellent for angel food cakes, frostings, meringues and sauces.

Practical Attitude Will Not Spoil Fun of Easter Paraders

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THE 1942 Easter style parade will be more than a mere display of chic and flattering apparel. Not that it will be lacking in feminine charm, for the new fashions are as intriguing and eye-appealing as bright, pretty accessories can make them. However, it is with a two-fold purpose that women are selecting their Easter outfits and assembling their spring wardrobes. Women are not choosing their new clothes from the viewpoint of attractiveness alone, but back of it all is a steadfast desire to buy wisely, purposefully and thoughtfully with an eye to the future.

The present sane, careful, wholesome buying movement demands expression, and from all reports and appearances, that expression is the suit of handsome material styled softly and becomingly with a versatility that reveals a fresh fashion inspiration that has been born of war needs.

Women are becoming alertly "fabric wise." They want quality materials that are given an undated styling which will carry them valiantly through more than the current season. They are regarding wool weaves in a new light, knowing full well they must buy wool with a view to serviceability, long wear, as wool supplies for civilian use are being reduced as rapidly as the requirements for army service are expanding. It behooves every woman to take jealous care of her wool suits, dresses and coats these days, for most of the newer fabrics will have but a percentage of wool.

Color is the big news for suits. With a fine philosophy our style creators have worked out the problem of making the suit that is designed to be utterly utilitarian radiate a message of cheer in such striking colors as geranium red, ivy green, spring-like yellow, hyacinth blue and related bright hues.

Accessories are creating such a splurge of color they give to suits a brightness that radiates throughout the entire spring fashion picture. Especially smart with navy suits and gray wools, and also with checks and stripes, are vivid gloves, bags, shoes and hats. And don't forget plaids when choosing the new suit or coat. They are more important than ever.

Covert is a leading fabric for spring. We see this sturdy fabric in the trim man-tailored suit shown at the top left in the above illustration. Instead of a coat it has a modish cape for dash and extra warmth. Capes will be seen more and more as the months go by. This serviceable ensemble is in tan. Coverts are also being widely shown in defense blue. Both colors take vivid accessories beautifully.

The novelty flannel plaid suit pictured to the right above is young and cheerful. In red and soft gray tones, it has a generously pleated skirt and a snug fitting double breasted jacket which buttons high and is accented by four vertical pockets.

Fine spun rayon gabardine brings its nice tailoring to fashion the costume to the left, below, in the above illustration. The fitted high-buttoned jacket sports three large pockets, while the skirt is styled with trim box pleats.

Novelty jeweled buttons mark the front closing of the jet black rich rayon faille suit to the right, below, in the above picture. The high, rounded lapels, flap pockets and kick-pleated skirt are excellent fashion points. A flaring milan straw bonnet with grosgrain edging adds distinction to this costume

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Jersey Jacket

It's smart to be sleeveless. New on the spring fashion program is the sleeveless jacket worn with a simple shirtwaist dress. The New York creation illustrated in the above picture scores high in style credits. The dress is fashioned of a bow-knot print. The jacket of wool jersey highlights the lighter tones of the printed design, and is distinctive because in addition to being sleeveless it has huge patch pockets and a sewed-in belt.

Taffeta Is a Popular Fabric for Accessories

A new trend in fashion this season is the use of taffeta for trimming. It is being used for piping, pleating, bordering, wide tie-girdles, yoke treatments, pockets and in countless other intriguing ways.

One of the latest versions is the navy dress piped and trimmed with navy taffeta. There is also a liberal use of taffeta in contrast colors, and taffeta plaid hats and bags have a high style rating.

Playtime Aprons

Children will take great delight in the novel aprons of bright prints. They have huge pockets to hold a sewing outfit for little girls, or a set of garden tools for boys, or perhaps a drawing set for either.

White Hats

Milliners are creating most attractive little white hats this spring to be worn with suits or ensembles. They are styled with a view to flattery and many have sprightly little dotted white veils.

Chevrons

A patriotic gesture is the trimming of junior hats, blouses and sailor suits with gaily colorful chevrons and stars. You can buy these motifs all ready to applique.

Unbleached Muslin

Cottons will be worn extensively this spring and summer. There is promised a plentiful use of unbleached muslin dyed in rich colors.

She Woudn't Know

At a cocktail party the supercilious youth met a lady whose invitation to dinner he had declined. He thought it was a chance to smooth things down.

When Emerson Forgot

Longfellow and Emerson were friends for 50 years. When Longfellow died, Emerson went to his friend's funeral. Passing the casket, Emerson paused a moment—and in a pathetic manner exclaimed: "I have forgotten the man's name who lies there, but he was a great soul."

Victory Book Campaign

The million books wanted for the men in the services. Let's give generously, books, more books, the right kind of books. All you book lovers, attention! Here's your chance to help. Uncle Sam has provided library buildings, trained librarians and well selected up-to-date books for camps with more than 5000 men. But the supply of books is inadequate for the rapidly growing forces in Army and Navy posts, camps and stations. Remember our men in the services don't burn books. They want to read them. Remember Uncle Sam doesn't prohibit reading. He wants all of us to read, to learn, to know, and to enjoy books.

Look over your book shelves. Take down the books you think will interest young men. What does your son read? What do your brothers read? Contribute books men will like, men will read be eager to read. Give from your own live book shelves. Give new, fresh, alive, exciting books.

All books so donated may be left at the Lincoln County Rural School Library to be sent on to Santa Fe from there.

Loan Assistance

The FSA supervisor wishes to remind readers of The Lincoln County News that loan assistance from the Farm Security Administration is available for the purchase of gardening equipment, seed, feed, cows, heifers, pigs, and chickens, and to rent workstock and equipment, repair livestock shelters, fences and machinery, and to meet other needs.

Mr. Jones has been assured that this new Food for Victory program has been streamlined with simplified forms which have been worked out to make these loans quickly available. He said the new loan program for the low-income families not now participating in the FSA program may amount to as much as $500 for each family and extend from one to five years at 5 percent interest. Present FSA borrowers may get additional loans where needed to help them meet revised operating costs.

Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas

To all Banks in the Eleventh Federal Reserve District:

Recurring rumors that the Federal Government intends to confiscate all savings are being circulated in many parts of the country. The continued circulation of such rumors might lead to the withdrawal of saving deposits. In connection with these rumors, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau recently made the following statement:

"I wish to state most emphatically that there are no foundations whatever for such rumors. The Federal Government does not have under consideration any proposal involving the confiscation of the savings deposits of this country for any purpose. Furthermore, anyone circulating rumors of this character is acting against the welfare of the nation."

The importance of financing the war effort to the greatest possible extent from current income rather than from accumulated savings has been repeatedly emphasized by the Treasury Department. In furtherance of that policy, efforts are being made to encourage all employers to adopt a payroll allotment plan for the sale of Defense Bonds to their employees, because that is regarded as one of the essential steps in combating the development of inflamatory tendencies.

Digging the Longest Trench ever plowed by Man...

One of the big defense activities of the Bell Telephone System is the placing of the new 1600-mile Omaha-Sacramento underground cable lines at a cost of twenty million dollars. They cross the Mountain States territory through Wyoming and Utah, with a spur from Cheyenne to Denver.

The 20-ton cable-laying telephone "tanks" used on the job travel almost as the crow flies and do their work in almost any kind of ground except soft swamps or solid rock. Driving steadily ahead, they are digging the deep trench for 1600 miles, laying two cables in it and filling in the earth, all in one continuous process.

It is a major defense project because when completed late this year it will provide for the first time a coast-to-coast all cable route free from most hazards, and it will materially increase the number of transcontinental telephone circuits as well.

In Washington

Selection of General Douglas MacArthur, America's hero of the Philippines, to direct the Allied war effort in the far east was hailed by Senator Dennis Chavez as "more than a chance" for New Mexico soldiers in the baleaguered Bataan.

"New Mexico mothers, who have sons in the Philippines, will now feel that under MacArthur the U. S. will undertake the offensive, and give their boys more than a chance," Senator Chavez said. "I know General Mac Arthur will not forget the New Mexico boys in Bataan."

Terming the general the "only successful one" in the field, Senator Chavez said he was confident the Japs who had pushed every Allied general around but the redoubtable Scotchman would "now find themselves halted and ultimately beaten" by the same kind of armed walls the canny MacArthur built in Bataan.

President Roosevelt this week complimented Senator Dennis Chavez, active supporter of closest possible collaboration between the Americas, on the "excellent" address made by the Senator to Central and South America recently from NBC in Washington.

At White House request, Senator Chavez mailed to the President a translation of the address he made in Spanish over short-wave radio for the Office of the Co-ordinator of Inter-American Affairs in connection with the government's Pan-Americanism good-will program. Along with the copy he also sent a transcription of the reply to his address made from Berlin by the Nazi's chief Latin American commentator some ten days later.

The President, telling Senator Chavez about the Nazi system of attempting to "counterattack everything we do," expressed a hope Senator Chavez would make use of "this (the Nazi reply) episode" in the future.

President Roosevelt's compliments and remarks were contained in a "Dear Dennis" letter received by Senator Chavez.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
(Consolidated Features WNU Service.)

NEW YORK.—Anthony J. Dimond, Alaska's delegate to congress since 1933, has a chance to say "You should have listened to me," and commendably refrains. He begged long and earnestly for air and army bases in Alaska, didn't get what he wanted, and now settles peacefully for that road linking Alaska, Canada and the U. S. A., work upon which has just been begun by U. S. army troops. Mr. Dimond did the best he could.

Asked Alaskan Air Bases; Settles for Road Linking U. S.

It was on March 28, 1938, that Mr. Dimond managed, by considerable effort to fudge a $2,000,000 allowance for an Alaskan air base into the $447,000,000 war department appropriation bill. Congress made mincemeat of the bill and Mr. Dimond's $2,000,000 was an almost unnoticed casualty. He said that if a plane wandered up that way, it couldn't find any place to roost over night and reminded congress that it might not be a good idea to leave matters of national defense to the budget bureau. The year before congress had killed a $10,000,000 allowance for an army base in Alaska.

Mr. Dimond was a Palatine Bridge, N. Y., school teacher who shoved off to Alaska in the gold rush of 1904, and in Valdez, a settlement of about 300 persons, has been pretty much owner and operator of his little principality. For about eight years he was engaged in mining and prospecting, and in 1913 took up the practice of law. He was a mayor of Valdez and member of the Alaska Territorial senate from 1923 to 1931. In 1916, he married a Valdez girl and they have three children.

Mr. Dimond is a born joiner and mixer—an Elk, Eagle, Moose and what not. He is satisfied with his friendly wilderness and long has insisted that it is worth defending—aside from its importance as a stepping-stone to Canada and the U.S.A.

IT MIGHT have been better if we had sent Japan xylophones instead of scrap-iron. An eight-foot xylophone, made in Chicago, diverted Yoichi Hiraoka from his career as an economist and brought him to New York for the edification of a 7:45 a. m. radio audience, for nearly 12 years.

Xylophone This Jap's Bridge to Our Way of Life

The Pearl Harbor bombs blew him out of his job and now Mayor LaGuardia, his Kew Gardens neighbors, members of the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra and sundry others are urging NBC to restore his inspiriting early morning tinkle to the program. It is more than that, however. He was the first man to arrange Bach, Handel, Haydn and others of the great masters for the xylophone.

His friends now cite his aid to the U.S.O., the Red Cross, the Y.M.C.A., the New York Institute for the Education of the Blind and other Patriotic and welfare organizations. It is apparent that the petition in his behalf must fail. NBC officials think there are too many listeners who remember Pearl Harbor.

While studying economics at the University of Keio, in Tokyo, he played the little two-foot mokkin, the Japanese version of the xylophone. He heard an American phonograph xylophone record and borrowed $500 from his sister for the eight-foot specially designed Chicago job, big enough for the classical romp of his dreams

With such a lure at hand, it must have been hard for him to keep his mind on his work, but, in 1930, he was graduated in economics, with honors.

The western musical classics fascinated him. He walked out on the "dismal science," and persuaded his merchant father to buy him a boat ticket to New York. He landed with only his xylophone, and faced the necessity of hastily converting his talent into food and lodging.

His neighbors' petition cites him as "an American in loyalty and devotion, in thought and in deed." We once saw him work—a small, lithe man whose body seemed both fluid and precise as he swept the instrument board with bewildering swiftness or hovered over it with a gentle caress. A few shiploads of big Chicago xylophones might have turned many Japanese economists, or militarists—they are all one these days—into more cooperative world citizens. Also they might have awakened somebody at Pearl Harbor that baleful morning.

FIRST AID to the AILING HOUSE

MISPLACING HOUSE ON LOT

A HOME owner is much troubled because his new house is not squarely in the center of his plot. The house is the first one in a section, and the building of a second house two plots away has made him realize that his own house is 14 inches closer to one side of his plot than it should be. He is greatly worried about it, for he feels that the appearance is so affected that the value of the property is reduced. He feels so strongly about it that he is considering selling, although this would not be to his advantage. As a matter of fact, I think that his worry is most unnecessary, for I doubt if an outsider would notice that the house is misplaced. Actually, the only difference that it might make would be in the location of the driveway. As far as appearances are concerned, foundation planting and landscaping could completely conceal the error in the location of the house. To many people, in fact, having the house off-center on the lot would be an advantage and an added attraction, as getting away from too much symmetry. Other methods for curing what the owner considers a defect would be to add a bay-window, or what would be still simpler, to make a paved terrace beside the house, shielded by a permanent awning.

Rusting Furnace.

Question: My house is heated by hot water, with a rectangular boiler and an oil burner. I have had trouble with rusting of the smokepipe and of the furnace, and am taking your advice to take down the smokepipe during the idle seasons, and to spray with oil. If I do this, is it also necessary to leave the boiler doors open?

Answer: Rusting during an idle season is due to the fact that chimney draft draws cellar air through the boiler openings. The air is damp, and there is heavy condensation if it is forced to go through leaks around closed doors. Taking down the smokepipe cuts off the draft and stops this cause of condensation. Even so, I should leave all the doors open in addition to taking down the smokepipe. The whole boiler will remain at the temperature of the cellar air, and condensation will be at a minimum.

Concrete Porch Floor.

Question: Would you advise putting concrete over an open deck porch of a brick veneer house? Would it be lasting?

Answer: Although you do not say so, I take it that the present floor is wood. In that case, a concrete covering would not be satisfactory; for if it is thick enough to have the necessary strength, it will be too heavy for the supports. You will do better to cover the floor with deck canvas, which you can get from a dealer in building material, or with a kind of insulating board impregnated with asphalt, to be had at a lumber yard.

Chromium Plate.

Question: I have chromium plated faucets in my new bathroom, and to keep them looking new I used metal polish. To my sorrow this took off the silvery surface. How can I restore it?

Answer: Chromium plate can be kept clean and polished with no more than a cloth wet with warm water. The polish that you used removed the plating. You can have it restored in a plating shop; any garage can tell you of one in your neighborhood. For this, the faucets must be removed, of course, so the simplest procedure is to have the whole job done by a plumber.

Peeling Bricks.

Question: Bricks under stone window sills are peeling. What is the cause and cure?

Answer: Leakage around the window and frame is keeping the bricks soaked with water. To stop the trouble you should close all leaks, which are likely to be in the joint between the window frame and the outside wall.

Killing Trees.

Question: What can be done to kill a diseased tree, so that near-by trees will not be harmed? I do not want to go to the expense of cutting it down.

Answer: A tree can be killed by cutting through the bark to the wood, forming a ring around the trunk. This will prevent the flow of sap. The tree will then die quickly.

Swollen Door.

Question: In rainy weather, our front door swells so that it cannot be closed. It is made of birch, 2½ inches thick. Can this be corrected?

Answer: In a stretch of clear weather, when the door is thoroughly dry, put paint or varnish on all of the edges, for those are the places where moisture soaks in and causes all the trouble.

Crimean Peninsula

The Crimean peninsula is centrally located on the Black sea, making it a convenient market for the surrounding country, says Pathfinder. Sebastopol, a major Soviet naval base, is also a railroad center. Although the peninsula is only about the size of Vermont, it maintains a population of 750,000 inhabitants who till the rich farmland, work in the fisheries, the iron mines, and oil refineries.

The climate is so mild that flowers bloom the year 'round in parts of the peninsula.

Watch Your Kidneys!
Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

THE STORY SO FAR: Janice Trent runs away from wedding Ned Paxton, rich, but a gay blade. Unbeknown to Bruce Harcourt, a family friend, she becomes secretary of an Alaska camp of which he is chief engineer. Millicent Hale, wife of the man whom he succeeded, is also attracted to him. Bruce at first wants to send Janice back. On a trip to the city, she encounters Paxton and tells him she is married to Harcourt. The latter hears it and insists on a wedding that day. That night, after a wedding party arranged by the Samp sisters, elderly owners of the Waffle Shop, Mrs. Hale breaks in on the newlyweds with the cry that her husband had been shot dead. She also says: "If you only had waited, Bruce." Bruce spends the night investigating the murder. A Commissioner arrives to conduct an official probe. Jimmie Chester, Mrs. Hale's brother, who hated her husband, runs off in a plane. Bruce and the Commissioner set out to find him.

Now continue with the story.

"I will take you down the coast in my yacht."

CHAPTER XIV

A yell of horror cracked in Bruce's throat. He seized his rifle, climbed down from the cockpit, stumbling, slipping, raced toward the man wielding a gun like a club as a great polar bear charged at him. Another, smaller, bleeding, roaring horribly, was struggling up from the ice.

Harcourt stopped. Raised his rifle. Fired. His gun cracked again. Again. Both animals crumpled into mounds of white fur. The man who had been defending himself jumped back, turned.

"Bruce! Bruce!"

The universe steadied. Panting, bleeding, ashen, dripping with moisture, Chester stumbled forward. His eyes were the eyes of a man who has stared death in the face.

"Just in time! I shot—the—cub—didn't know there was another and—and—" he swayed. Harcourt caught him.

"Take it easy, Jimmy, till I can get you into the cockpit."

With moans, Chester pulled himself up.

As he climbed into the cockpit, Chester mumbled deliriously:

"Take me—back—Chief. Crazy stunt to—run—away. Milly heard—me — threaten — Joe. I'll — come across with—"

His face contracted in pain. His eyes closed.

Grant's usually clear voice was toneless. "Did you get those notes typed?"

"Yes."

He picked up the sheets Janice indicated. "You're good, you are certainly good. When you leave us you'd better take a turn at the reduction of the Public Debt."

"Leave! What do you mean?"

"Don't like the way this guy Paxton has been hanging round since Our Hero left. He and his 170-foot yacht, with its twin 550-horsepower engines, make headquarters look as bare and unlovely as a plucked chicken. I'll bet Bruce would be fit to tie if he knew that bozo was here."

"Ned arrived before he started."

"He did! And he went off and left you?"

"Of what importance am I in comparison to his job?"

"Says you." Grant's always ruddy skin took on a deeper tint. He clearly gave her the impression that in his opinion Harcourt was deeply in love with her. But he quickly changed the subject.

"I've just found out that Kadyama didn't appear at all at the squaw-dance the night Hale was shot."

"He told the marshal that he was there after nine."

"He sure did. But he wasn't."

"Where was he?"

"That's what I mean to find out. You're the only person I've told. Don't breathe a word to anyone. The Commissioner and Harcourt are sure that Mrs. Hale knows more about the late unpleasantness than she is telling. They radioed that they would be back at headquarters tomorrow. Didn't say whether they were bringing Chester. Get her up to the H house for a cup of tea this afternoon, can't you? I'll drop in. Philo Vance stuff. If your former fiance comes, all to the good. I suspect that the sunshiny presence of a multi-millionaire might help dispel her gloom."

As she walked the short distance to the Samp cabin, Janice marshaled her memories. Where had Pasca been the evening of what he called the marriage-party? He had welcomed Bruce and herself when they landed on the flying field. She couldn't remember having seen him even for a moment during the festivities.

She paused abruptly on the threshold of the Samp living-room. Ned Paxton was beside Miss Mary at the table from which books and lamps had been removed to make space for a profusion of unmounted photographs. Martha, in the wing chair, white-stockinged feet on a stool, shoes on the floor beside it, peered from behind a newspaper.

"Sakes alive, aren't you through work early, Janice?"

"Mr. Grant closed the office early. I had finished the work he left. I suspect that he didn't want to be bothered with me. Immediately I thought of a tea-party. Where is Mrs. Hale?"

Martha Samp's voice was grim. "She isn't what you'd call cheerful. I kinder think Millicent's goin' to enjoy widowhood like some folks enjoy poor health. She's talkin' an awful lot about missin' Joe. Now, makin' allowance for the shock an' terrible unhappy with him."

"You don't understand folks who aren't hacked out of Plymouth Rock, as you are, Martha."

If one of the scarlet-coated Hessians on the hearth had slashed with his gold saber, Janice wouldn't have been more surprised than she was at the younger Samp sister's outburst. Martha stared at her with faded agate eyes.

"Mary Samp! What foolish talk! Have you gone plumb crazy?"

"Crazy! I've just come sane. I've spent over two years of the precious few I got left cookin' waffles up in this wilderness, where you don't ever see anybody, when I might have been seeing places, real places, an' having clothes, real clothes. Great things are goin' on in the world, an' all I know is waffles an' then more waffles."

Martha Samp opened her lips.

"Mary Samp! Your head's been turned readin' those fashion magazines. Foolish things."

"They ain't foolish. They're like fairy tales to me. When I read 'bout slim, slithery women in trailin' silver dresses an' ermine capes an' emerald bracelets glitter-gleamin' on their arms, I'm them. You an' I are not poor. You like to pile up money. I don't. I'm going to spend my half. I'll stay here till the last boat goes out, then I'm through with pots and pans and waffles."

She sank back, visibly shaking. Her sister's voice was as sharp as a razor, though Janice saw the glint of tears in her eyes.

"Sakes alive, Mary Samp! I didn't know you had so much spunk. An' here I've been layin' awake nights wonderin' what would happen to you if I died. I guess I'm not so important as I thought I was. You'd probably get on a heap sight better without me. If that's the way you feel, you needn't wait for the last boat. Go as soon as you like. I don't need you."

Paxton, who had been standing by the mantel smoking, flung his cigarette into the fire. He laid his hand on Mary Samp's heaving shoulder.

"Call her bluff. I will take you down the coast in my yacht. I'll give you the time of your life. I will take Mrs. Hale too, if she'll come."

Mary Samp wiped misty eyes with a shaking hand. "I'd like it, Mr. Paxton."

Millicent Hale was seated at a desk littered with papers when Janice entered her cabin. In her black frock she seemed passionless, remote, intangible as a shadow. The fire cast rosy shadows on her skin without warming it, flashed reflected flames into the strained eyes without lighting them. Janice felt her color rise in the face of her well-bred surprise.

Mrs. Hale touched her black frock. "You are inviting me to a party?"

Her pained surprise made Janice feel like a worm. "I didn't mean a real party. Merely a cup of tea. I thought coming to the H house for a while might shorten the day for you. It must seem horribly long."

Millicent Hale's shudder was slight, quickly under control.

"This day is neither longer nor harder than many other days have been in this horrible country. Has Bruce been heard from?"

"They radioed that they would leave the northern camp early tomorrow. Would reach headquarters in the afternoon."

"Have they found Jimmy?"

"Nothing was said about Mr. Chester. At least Mr. Grant told me nothing."

With a sob, relief perhaps, Millicent Hale laid her face on arms outflung on the desk. Janice tried to comfort her.

"I wish that I might help you."

"Help!" The woman rose with a haste which catapulted the somnolent Pekinese to the rug. Her voice shook with anger. "Help! You! You've snatched all the good in life there was left for me. You knew Bruce years ago, I hear. Met him again, ran away from the man you were to marry, disguised yourself as a boy, brought a trunkload of seductive clothes and came hotfoot after him, didn't you?"

"And got him!"

Janice banged the door behind her. Humiliation succeeded fury. If moments of crisis revealed one's true self, she and Millicent Hale had not shown up well under the late passage-at-arms. Two tenement-house women fighting over a man would have stripped down to the same basic frenzy.

"And got him!" What would Bruce think if he heard what she had claimed? The question which haunted Janice's waking hours, intruded on her dreams, bobbed up again! "Was Bruce in love with Millicent before I came?"

As she opened the H house door she heard a thud. Pasca, his plaid shirt of a blinding brilliance, was laying a log on the fire.

"Set up the card table," she said. "Lay the cloth and arrange the Chinese pewter tray the way I showed you. Be sure that the water for the tea has been freshly boiled. Grate cheese on crackers and brown them, put others together sandwich fashion with guava jelly and chopped nuts."

The man's stolid face brightened in a childish smile. "How many tea? One? Two? Tree?"

"Four cups. Put on your white coat." As she removed a faded flower from the bowl on the table desk which had been full of red roses the first time she entered the cabin, she asked casually, "You like the white coat, don't you? What do you wear when you go to dances? Feathers and blankets or just ordinary clothes? Perhaps you don't dance? Perhaps you weren't at the squaw-dance the night the Samp sisters had the party for me?"

He stiffened into immobility long before she had finished speaking. Before he answered he shuffled across the room, removed the embroidered tea-cloth from the dresser drawer.

"I not go to dance, no sirree. Work all time at Waffle Shop. Tell Kadyama, 'You help. Then I get through much quick, then we two go squaw-dance.' He say no. He plenty lazy all time." He spread the cloth carefully and pattered into the kitchen.

Later, seated on the spavin-legged stool before the crooked dressing-table, Janice thoughtfully buffed her already polished nails.

Had the party come? Janice flung open the door in response to a knock. Her smiling lips stiffened. Ned Paxton. Alone. She feigned enthusiasm.

"Come in. Where are the others?"

"Coming. I'm the vanguard. As the relations between the Samp sisters seemed a little strained, I left them to fight it out." Back to the fire, he lighted a cigarette. Janice was conscious of his critical scrutiny of the room as he inhaled and exhaled a long breath of smoke. His cynical eyes came back to her in the fan-back chair.

"So you chose this in preference to what I could give you?"

His amused incredulity stung her. She struggled to keep her voice as lightly contemptuous as his.

"But, you see, I didn't have to take you with it."

" 'Touche!' Score one for you."

Janice asked with honest curiosity:

"Why did you want to marry me, Ned? I am different in all my tastes from the girls with whom you play round."

He frowned as he regarded her with appraising eyes. "You'd be surprised if you knew how many times I have asked myself that question. I went out of my way to meet you. I was curious. I had heard that in spite of the fact that you neither smoked, drank, gambled nor petted, men hung round you in smitten swarms, that you had more friends than any girl in your set. I didn't believe it, but I fell for you like all the rest."

"Smoking for some inexplicable reason makes me dizzy and cutting out the whoopee stuff was no virtue in me. I tried it all. I don't like the ugly and sordid, and more particularly the cheap things of life. They leave tarnished memories. My inhibitions ought to prove to you that I wouldn't fit into your scheme of living."

Strangled Leopard

Probably the only white man who ever killed a leopard with his bare hands was Carl Akeley, famous American explorer, says Collier's. In British Somaliland in 1896, he shot and slightly wounded one and, before he could fire again, it leaped upon him. During the ensuing struggle, Akeley, although badly mauled, finally strangled the big cat.

Speed of Golf Balls

The United States Golf association has recently ruled no golf ball can have a velocity greater than 250 feet per second. The association has so ruled to eliminate the threat of causing present golf courses to become obsolete because of the far-traveling golf ball. The velocity of the balls can be regulated by controlling pressure on the core of the ball and tightness of the rubber wrappings.

"Are you two twins?" asked the teacher, smiling at the boys.

"No, ma'am, we're not," replied the lads in unison.

"You certainly look alike," returned the schoolmarm.

Then as the brothers filled in their forms, the teacher noted that they gave the same birthday.

"But you said you weren't twins, yet you have the same birthday?" she queried.

"That's right, we aren't twins," replied one, "we're what's here of triplets."

A WEEK OF THE WAR

President Roosevelt proclaimed April 6 as Army Day and asked the nation to observe it by resolving firmly "To spare no effort which may contribute to the speedy creation of the arms and supplies indispensable to our citizens' army. . ." He said; "We are engaged in our greatest war, a war that will leave none of our lives wholly untouched. . . We shall win this war as we have won every war we have fought. . ."

War Secretary Stimson announced the Army will train 100,000 men and women for civilian jobs as overhaul and repair mechanics, inspectors at Government arsenals, etc. Men must be outside the age requirements for Selective Service. Applications may be made at any Civil Service Commission local office. The House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to create a volunteer Army Auxiliary Corps of women between 21 and 45.

Ground Forces Commander McNair reported the Army will expand its present nine corps areas to 11 to facilitate handling of 32 new streamlined infantry divisions of 15,300 men each. Commander McNair said a site "West of the Colorado River "has been selected for large-scale troop training in modern desert warfare. The Army Institute was established at Madison, Wis., to provide correspondence study in more than 65 academic courses for enlisted men with at least four months active service.

Selective Service

Selective Service Director Hershey, tightening 11-A deferments, directed SS local boards to put aside considerations of "Mere convenience and comfort" in determining the deferment of persons necessary to the "National health, safety or interest." The local boards began distribution of four-page occupational questionnaires to obtain for the U. S. Employment Service and other agencies full information on the vocational background of men who registered February 16. Later the questionnaires will be sent the earlier SS registrants.

The President set April 27 as the SS Registration Day for all men 44 to 64, inclusive. Director Hershey said as the war progresses, draft deferments will depend more on whether a man's civil operation is essential to the war effort than on his dependents.

In earlier centuries, observers thought that land animals had counterparts in the sea, and so they named seals "sea-wolves," fur seal "sea-bears," manatees "sea-cows."
