Our First Duty To Our Government

"Our first duty is to our government in the war," said A. T. Mercier who has just been elected president of the Southern Pacific Company with headquarters in San Francisco.

"Iknow the men and women of our railroad. They will give a good account of themselves During the months past we have established a close and effective working relationship with the armed forces and war industries. Feeling sure of the understanding cooperation of our shippers and travelers in the troublous times ahead, we pledge our best efforts.'

Mercier has had 38 years experience in all phases of the company's far-flung operations.

As an engineer, he personally supervised the building of many of the railroad's important structures. As an operating man, he served both as division superintendent and general manager of the operating department. In the executive and administrative field he has headed a number of Southern Pacific subsidiairy companies as well as working closely, as vice president, with the late President A. D. McDonald during the past three years.

Always interested in the people with whom he has worked, Mercier is credited with knowing as many of the 60,000 employes of the railroad by name as any man in the Southern Pacific organization.

He is a native of New Orleans and he received his degree as a civil engineer from Tulane University in 1903. He began his service with Southern Pacific in 1904 as a transitman and roadmaster's clerk at Los Angeles.

Easter Cantata

The cantata Sunday evening in the High School auditorium was indeed a treat to the music lovers of the town, and those who missed it may rest assured they really missed a delightful, high class entertainment.

BANKS AND THE WAR

Why Banks SELL DEFENSE BONDS Without Compensation or Profit

Do you realize that for the billions of dollars of Defense Bonds sold by banks not one cent of compensation has been paid to them? Banks have spent large sums to advertise and sell the Bonds. Yet they receive no fees, no commissions. That is as it should be. That is how the banks WANT IT. Banks place their country's interest FIRST. They do not wish to be paid for rendering a service which every loyal banker deems a patriotic duty and a privilege. We urge you to buy Bonds.

Teacher Starts Schools on Models for U. S. Planes

LAS VEGAS, N. M., April 1—New Mexico Highlands University is coordinating the work of 25 New Mexico schools in working to help Uucle Sam's war pilots identify Jap bombers.

State coordinator for the program, organized under the Govenment's order for plane identification models, is Harold Brandt M. A., instructor of industrial arts at Highlands. He was appointed by Mrs. Grace Corrigan, State Supt. of Public Instruction, and Brice Sewell State Supervisor for Vocational Education.

Brandt's own college class already is at work on a series of 50 airplane models as standards, and 25 high schools of New Mexico which have industrial arts departments are at work on similar series.

The models are built to Government specifications on a scale of one to 72, so that the model is one-seventy-second of the size of the real plane.

Navy pilots must recognize the models when the Governments put them into use, from a distance of 35 feet, Brandt said. This is equivalent to one-half mile in the air, viewing the actual plane.

Besides the U. S. Navy, those who will be supplied with the models built by New Mexico students include civilian air raid wardens and pilots of all grades.

Highlands boys have finished a model of one of the big Jap Bombers that attacked Pearl Harbor.

Among the High schools which were recommended by Brandt to Washington for specifications for models are Capitan and Carrizozo High Schools.

Ruidoso Items

THE STORY SO FAR: Running away from marriage to Ned Paxton, rich but a gay blade, Janice Trent becomes secretary in an Alaska wilderness camp over the protest of Bruce Harcourt, a long time friend. Bruce is chief engineer, succeeding Joe Hale, deposed for negligence. Millicent Hale, his wife, is also attracted to Bruce. Janice tells Ned Paxton she is married to Harcourt. The latter overhears her and insists on an immediate marriage. The newlyweds are interrupted at home that night by Mrs. Hale who says her husband has been shot dead. She exclaims: "If you had only waited, Bruce." Bruce spends the night investigating the murder. When Jimmie Chester, Millicent's brother, runs off in a plane Bruce brings him back. In the meantime, Ned Paxton invites the women to his yacht. Janice and he, and two natives, leave in a launch to view a volcano closer. Suddenly it erupts. The boat is stranded on a lonely beach.

Now continue with the story.

She took careful aim. Fired.

CHAPTER XVI

An uncanny howl from somewhere inland rose to crescendo, slid into diminuendo and died away.

"What's that?"

The teeth of one of the pilots visibly and audibly chattered as he answered Paxton.

"That a wolf cry, yes sirree. Smoke an' fire drive dem to shore. Dey no lak fire. Not much ever come oder time. Hunters come here. Shack up by trees."

Paxton's voice showed strain. "You've clung to your camera, I see. We may wish it were something to eat before we get through. There are two cans of crackers in the launch, that's all. If only this infernal smoke would lift, we'd get back to the yacht. The men were right. There's the shack."

Janice's heart went into a tailspin. On a little hill, a spur on the side of the mountain, sagged a cabin of warped, weather-beaten boards.

She didn't know how long she and Paxton stood there staring at the distant hut. He wheeled at sound of the put-put of an engine starting. With a startled oath he ran back to the water's edge. Janice stumbled after him. As they reached it, the stern of the launch vanished into the mist.

"Come back! Come back!" Paxton shouted. Only the fading throb of the engine responded. He drew his revolver and fired into the air. As though in answer, a wild wail was relayed by echo after echo through the woods. Janice caught his arm. Her voice came raggedly.

"Ned! Ned! Save your ammunition. Remember that ghastly howl."

A shower of hot stones pelted the man and girl. Rain splashed.

"Come on, Jan. We'd better make for that shack while the going is fairly good. I'll bet it leaks like a sieve, but it will be some protection. Those infernal quitters threw out a can of crackers. I'll take that along."

He picked up the tin.

They passed great patches of blue lupin. Wild raspberry bushes, higher than Janice's head, clawed at her wet clothing, as though to direct attention to the dead ripe fruit hanging in maroon clusters. She gathered handfuls, carried them in her hat which she had lined with a damp but spotless handkerchief. The woods rustled with the motion of unseen life. A porcupine rattled across the trail ahead. An otter swam down stream, two martens scuttled into a tangle of brush. A fox trotted by, stopped, one foot raised, looked back before he dashed off as though pursued by furies. A fat ptarmigan rose with a whiz which sent Janice's heart into her mouth. A few blood-thirsty mosquitoes buzzed about her head, before drifting smoke sent them winging. Did everything living feel the pervading imminence of danger?

Paxton's eyes were inscrutable as they met Janice's. Something about the grimness of his mouth set her heart thumping. He waved his hand toward the hut.

"Let's investigate. I have a light. I was trained by an old sea-dog never to leave the ship without a flash, a gun and matches." He pulled an electric torch from an inside pocket of his soaked blue coat. Its glow revealed a room high enough for a man, a tall man, to stand upright without hitting his head. A bunk against one wall was heaped with dried boughs of spruce. A loose-jointed pipe, one end poking through the roof, acted as smoke-conductor between a rusty cook-stove and the outer world. A degenerate chair and a rickety stool kept dissolute company. A table, whose legs sprawled outward like those of a teetering new-born calf, supported two tallow streaked bottles and a dirty pack of cards. A rusty kettle and a frying-pan burned black hung from a crude shelf. Against the wall leaned an axe with a long handle and nicked blade.

Paxton snapped a gold lighter. After several futile attempts he succeeded in producing a small flame which he applied to a candle stub in one bottle. "We will save our matches for the fires. My knowledge of camping is all laboratory stuff, no field work, but I know enough for that."

They hung over the table breathlessly till the wick caught and a flickering flame set ghoulish shadows astir on the walls. Paxton snapped off the electric torch, laid his revolver on the shaky table, a card of matches beside it.

"Those must be kept dry. Think you can start the fire in the stove while I collect brush for a signal to the yacht? Wrecked on a desert island stuff."

He flung his wet blue coat over the chair-back. Axe in hand he smiled at her from the threshold. Good, but not good enough. Did he think she didn't know that the outside fire was more to keep off marauding animals than to signal the boat, that she had forgotten those banshee howls? She steadied her lips and smiled back at him. This last hour had aged him unbelievably. It had set deep crow's-feet at the corners of his eyes, etched lines between his nose and lips. Except for war service, all his luxurious life he had played hard and worked little. His once immaculate buckskin shoes oozed mud; his soaked white flannel trousers were criss-crossed with black lines, where wet shrubs had lashed at him; little green rivulets, sponsored by his necktie, were cavorting down the front of the silk shirt which was plastered to his body. His eyes with a laugh in their blue depths met hers.

"I don't like the suggestion of criticism of my appearance in your expression. You're not so hot yourself."

The liking she had felt for him during the first weeks of their acquaintance, which had flamed into love—or fascination—crumbled into gray ashes of doubt and distrust, stole back. It warmed her voice.

"I'm a sight. I feel like a rag doll which has been left out in the rain."

She heard the crackle of brush under his feet.

She lifted a rusty cover from the stove. Her thoughts raced on as she laid a fire of dry leaves and brush. Billy and Bruce had taught her woodcraft when they had taken her with them on their fishing expeditions. If only Bruce were with her—instead of Ned Paxton.

She struck a match to escape the memory which set her heart pounding unbearably. She watched the dry leaves ignite before she clapped on the rusty cover. She listened. The fire roared. Had she put in too much fuel?

How the peaky thing smoked. She wiped her smarting eyes as she hunted for a damper. Her throat stung. It was humiliating not to be able to start a dinky little fire, but she would have to ask Ned to help. She stepped to the entrance for air.

What was that? Good grief! What was that behind the tree near him? A dog? A gray dog? A dog's eyes wouldn't be green. A wolf! What was hanging from the creature's cruel mouth? Cloth! A piece of plaid cloth caught on one yellowed fang. Sickening! She tried to call a warning. Her tongue dried to the roof of her mouth. Her body prickled with horror. The animal took a stealthy step toward the man on the stump. Stopped. Not a muscle rippled under its skin. Ned would have no chance to save himself.

Eyes on the motionless creature, Janice backed to the table, seized the revolver. On the doorsill she dropped to one knee. "Steady! Steady! Remember Jimmy's instructions," she warned herself. She took careful aim. Fired.

Man and beast leaped simultaneously. The wolf soundlessly slunk into the shadows. Paxton ran toward her, caught her shoulder. Shook her.

"Why in heaven's name did you do that?"

She steadied trembling lips. "It was a wolf—just back of you—he—he was watching you—hungrily. I thought—I thought—"

She dropped her head in her hands. Shuddered uncontrollably.

"A wolf! You shot him?"

"I shot at him." There was a touch of hysteria in her laugh. "I'm not too good."

"God, we'll have the whole pack down on us."

Indignation steadied Janice's nerves as no commendation would have done. "I call that darned ungrateful. You would have been torn to shreds if I hadn't fired."

"Why didn't you yell?"

"Yell! I was dumb with horror. I came to the door to ask you to help with the stove, saw that terrible creature moving toward you, and fired."

He loosened the fingers still clutching the revolver, laid it on the table.

"Did you care when you thought me in danger, Janice?"

Her heart flew to her throat. Blue eyes aflame could be more terrifying than fierce green eyes.

"Care! Wouldn't you care if you saw a human being in peril of his life? Isn't the smoke stifling? Can't you do something to stop it?"

"I—" He coughed, sneezed, wiped his eyes. "What's the matter with the infernal thing?"

Lids half shut, tears marking grimy furrows down his cheeks, he poked about the stove. Tears brimming from her smarting eyes, Janice tried to help. He shook what seemed to be a damper. The portion of the pipe which pierced the roof fell with a clatter which set her already taut nerves twanging like violin strings under the fingers of an impassioned virtuoso. A vicious orange-red fang shot from the standing smoke-stack, licked at the rotting branches of the roof. Damp as they were, they ignited. Fire ran from twig to twig.

The man and girl stared incredulously.

"We've done it now! Quick! Out of this!"

Paxton pushed her to the door, caught up the revolver as he dashed by the table. Janice grabbed her camera, snatched the tin of crackers. As they jumped to the mossy log, she heard the crackle of wood. The walls of the shack were on fire.

Side by side they watched the lurid light inside flicker, flame, wane. Heat poured out as through the door of a furnace. Janice turned her back.

"I'm thoroughly toasted on one side. 'Tis an ill wind, etc.' It would have taken hours before an ordinary fire to dry our clothes. What is the next feature on this peppy program? It ought to be announced over a coast-to-coast hook-up."

Paxton's eyes shone blue and clear in his smoke-grimed face. "Janice, you're the best sport in the world. You set a great pace." He steadied his voice. "The fire's dying down. We'll have a warm, charred shack at our backs. That will be some protection."

"Protection from what?" She hated herself for the terrified catch in her voice.

"From prowlers. You heard the native pilot say that the volcano smoke would drive animals to the water. They will come down the bed of this brook from the interior."

Hours passed. Hours filled with nerve-racking suspense, listening, listening for the sound of a boat which did not come, with the drip of rain, the pelt of hail, flash of lightning and detonations of thunder. Janice dropped to the mossy log in front of the shack which gave out an acrid odor of smoldering wood.

Paxton carefully laid a heap of brush beside him as he dropped wearily to the log. The fire had died down to red coals.

He opened a gold cigarette case. "One left." He snapped it shut. "Glad you don't smoke. Otherwise I would have to sacrifice that on the altar of chivalry. Any crackers?" She drew one grimy piece from her pocket. "The last?" She nodded. "Put it back. I have indulged in too many calories already. I'll lose my boyish figure if I don't watch out."

"What's that?"

"What? Where?"

Janice gripped his sleeve. Pointed. Two lambent green dots glowed between low alders.

With a muttered imprecation, Paxton threw on the pitifully inadequate pile of brush beside him. The fire flared. The sinister points of light retreated. A howl tore through the distance. From near at hand the blood-curdling wail was answered.

Paxton rose swiftly.

"I'm going for more wood."

"Where? You mustn't. It isn't safe."

(See Recipes Below)

Substitute Foods

Most vital question every homemaker is now facing is how to substitute certain available foods for shortages. Sugar shortages and reduced supplies of fats, oils and certain imports make it necessary for every one of you to revise your meals in some respects and use substitutes.

Although sugar rationing is to be in effect, you will still be able to get some of it. There are also good substitutes for it such as honey, molasses and corn syrup all of which may be used very easily for cooking and sweetening purposes. Still another excellent source of sugar is in the dried fruits which you can use for dessert to get your daily quota of sugar.

Select recipes which have less eggs, sugar and butter, for although there may not be an actual shortage of all these items, they may be expensive.

Fats are extremely valuable in the current emergency, and you are advised to save as much of fats and oils as you can. Be sure that your butcher puts in all the scraps of fat and trimmings off the meat you buy. You can take these pieces home and clarify them for use in frying, flavoring or actual cooking.

If you have blithely discarded the scraps of butter off the butter plates after dinner, lunch or breakfast, then remedy your habit immediately. Even if you do not use the butter scraps as table butter, these can be used for flavoring vegetables, or in larger amounts for cooking and baking purposes. Be sure the butter is kept in the icebox or at least in a cool place so it will not become rancid.

Butter and its substitutes will be available, but you should plan to use these foods sparingly. You can substitute the corn and vegetable or even mineral oil for salad dressings if you are unable to obtain olive oil.

Cheeses which have been formerly imported are available only in limited quantities, but American made cheeses are coming to the fore, the Bleu and Camembert cheeses being of excellent quality.

Soybeans are becoming a popular, nutritious food during the current emergency. Here is an excellent recipe for:

Soy Bean Yeast Bread
(Makes 1 loaf)

1 cup milk
1 cake compressed yeast
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon fat, melted
1 teaspoon salt
3¼ cups wheat flour
¼ cup soy bean flour

Lynn Says:

With new equipment at a premium, you will be a wise homemaker if you give the best care possible to the pieces you already have.

Disconnect electric appliances by grasping the plug itself, not by pulling on the cord. When washing electrical equipment such as coffee pots or toasters or waffle irons, wipe with a cloth rather than immersing in water.

Scouring pots and pans with steel wool pads impregnated with soap, after each meal during which you use pots and pans, will keep them bright and shiny longer.

Keep sulphur away from silverware to prevent tarnish. Eggs, matches, salt, fruit juice and even rubber tarnish silver quickly. When washing cutlery with wooden handles, be careful not to let the handles stand in water or they will become loosened.

Grease new pans before putting them in the oven and they will never rust. For rusty pie tins, rub a raw potato with cleansing powder on it to get rid of the rust quickly.

To sharpen scissors cut a fine grained piece of sandpaper into strips.

This Week's Menu:

*Old Fashioned Boiled Dinner
Pineapple-Nut Salad
*Fruit Bran Bread
*Baked Pears · Cookies
Coffee Tea Milk
*Recipes Given

Scald milk and cool to lukewarm. Pour over yeast and sugar in mixing bowl and let stand for ½ hour. Add melted fat and salt and the flours, beating them in well. Knead the dough for about 10 minutes on a lightly floured board. Cover and let rise in a warm place for ½ hour, then knead again for 1 minute. Repeat the rising and kneading process twice more. Shape into a loaf and let rise again in a greased pan until double in bulk or about an hour. Bake in a hot (400-degree) oven about 50 minutes.

Honey or molasses along with fruits rich in carbohydrates contribute to the sugar content of this fruit bread:

Fruit Bran Bread.

1 egg
⅔ cup honey or molasses
1 cup buttermilk
2 cups flour
1 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons baking powder
1½ cups bran cereal
½ teaspoon soda
½ cup chopped figs
½ cup chopped dates
½ cup raisins
½ cup chopped nuts

Beat egg well, add honey or molasses. Add bran and buttermilk. Sift the dry ingredients and add to first mixture with fruit and nuts. Stir only until flour disappears. Bake in a greased loaf pan with waxed paper placed at the bottom before the mixture is poured in. Set the oven at moderate (350 degrees) and bake bread for about 1 hour.

Simplicity will be the keynote of meals so in keeping with that theme, I am including two desserts using fruit flavored with honey.

Broiled Grapefruit.

Wash and dry grapefruit and cut in half crosswise allowing ½ grapefruit per person. With a sharp knife cut around and under the entire pulp being careful to leave all the membrane on the shell. Cut down each side of each section loosening each section completely. Lift out center section or core. This leaves only the separated sections in the shell. Spread the top of each half with honey and dot with butter. Place under a broiler flame in moderate oven until honey begins to carmelize and all ingredients are blended together. Serve hot.

Baked Pears.
(Serves 8)

8 pear halves
¼ cup lemon juice
½ cup honey
1 teaspoon cinnamon
2 tablespoons butter

Arrange pears in a shallow baking dish. Pour over lemon juice and honey. Sprinkle with cinnamon and dot with butter. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven until tender, 20 minutes if uncooked pears are used.

Old Fashioned Boiled Dinner.
(Serves 8)

5 pounds corned beef brisket
1 white turnip
1 head of cabbage
8 onions
8 carrots
8 potatoes

Cover meat with cold water and heat rapidly to the boiling point, then remove scum and reduce heat. Simmer until tender 3½ to 4 hours. Prepare vegetables, cutting turnip into eighths. Peel potatoes, carrots and onions. About 45 minutes before meat is done add vegetables and cook them until tender.

Serving Well Cooked Food.

Warm plates for hot main dishes and well chilled plates for cool salads and desserts can put over the simplest meal and make it a success. A few bits of canned leftover fruit with a dab of leftover jelly will make meat platters an attractive garnish, or sprigs of parsley, watercress, or celery tops for meat and vegetable platters do big things to tempt weary appetites.

Household Hints

Metal stains on linens or clothing usually can be removed by covering them with vinegar and salt, bleaching them in the sun, then rinsing them in warm water and washing the usual way.

• • •

When making pie, bake the leftover crust on inverted muffin tins to make tarts for the next day's meal.

• • •

When cleaning fish the blood should be wiped from the backbone. If it is not properly cleaned the fish may have a musty flavor when cooked.

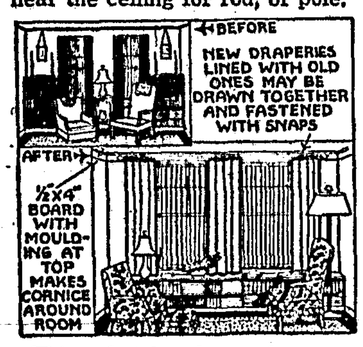
NEW IDEAS for Home-makers

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

LONG before we were threatened with the necessity of blackouts window draperies were hung well over walls to give rooms a sunny spacious effect. The same idea may now be used to keep light in at night. A cornice taking the place of a picture moulding is smart for both modern and traditional rooms and gives and drage near the ceiling for rod, or pole.



This sketch shows how one homemaker made cheerful, soft green sateen blackout draperies, repeating a tone in the chintz of the new slip covers. They are edged with cotton cord fringe in a darker tone.

That Nagging Backache
May Warn of Disordered Kidney Action
Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feel constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.
Try Doan's Pills. Doan's help the kidneys to pass off harmful excess body waste. They have had more than half a century of public approval. Are recommended by grateful users everywhere. Ask your neighbor!

LEAVES from Uncle Sam's Notebook

(WNU Service) by HARRIET MAY WILSON

Arbor Day and Its Values

Although Arbor day, as such, is a purely American institution, one would have to explore the very mists of antiquity to discover the earliest ceremonial tree plantings. There have been sacred groves, and memorial avenues in all ages. However, Arbor day originated in Nebraska, in 1872, the idea having its inception with J. Sterling Morton, then a member of the state board of agriculture. He introduced a resolution to the effect that Wednesday, the 10th day of April, 1872, be specially set aside for the planting of trees, in the then almost treeless state of Nebraska. The plan was widely publicized, and widely approved, so that on the appointed day more than a million trees were planted in Nebraska.

One of the greatest values of Arbor day has been that it calls attention annually to the need for conservation of the forest resources of America, and to the great economic value of all forest areas and farm woodlands. The observance of this tree-planting day reminds Americans, each year, that we still have millions of idle acres, once tree-covered, now offering little except the hazard of brush-covered, cut-over lands. We are reminded that all those idle acres could be and should be rehabilitated. As a recent government bulletin says:

"Forests in this country have not always been managed in the public interest. In the past this nation's forest wealth has been subjected to exploitation and devastation on a gigantic scale. Millions of acres of natural forest lands have been converted to wastelands by destructive cutting and fire. These millions of acres represent the huge problem of forest restoration now facing the country."

As a result of the observance of Arbor day and of the interest in forest conservation which it has nourished, the reforestation of all forest lands has been greatly accelerated. Industrial organizations, schools, colleges, and individual timberland owners had planted, by the close of 1938, more than 2,000,000 acres. It is encouraging to note that extensive public forest areas are now owned, policed, planted, and generally supervised by villages, towns, school districts, townships, counties, multiple-county organizations, and many similar groups who have acquired the properties sometimes by purchase, sometimes by the reversion of tax-delinquent lands, sometimes by gift.

COMMUNITY FOREST ORGANIZATIONS

The objective in the creation and management of community forests may be to produce income from the sale of timber, the proceeds to be devoted to the public welfare; to provide employment and to improve the prosperity and well-being of the city, town or county; to provide game reserves or bird sanctuaries or public playgrounds; to protect reservoirs and watersheds; to provide fuel or funds for relief purposes; or merely to serve as a memorial to some citizen who has deserved well of his neighbors. Probably no better use could be made of Arbor day than to use it, first, for the establishment of a community forest area, and thereafter to maintain local interest in, and local support and protection of such an area.

FOREST PLANTING ON FARM LANDS

Unused, or badly eroded farm lands may be made profitable by the planting upon them of small forest trees. Such tree plantings may serve a double or triple or even a multiple purpose: They check and prevent erosion; they provide shelter from icy winter winds and burning summer suns; they produce, in time, a permanent supply of fuel; if they are properly located they hold back the drifting snows from roads and farmstead yards; they give greater beauty to the farm scene; lastly, and of equal importance, they provide nesting places for the birds which help to rid the fields and gardens of harmful insects and noxious weeds.

SPRINGBOARD FOR CIVIC ENTERPRISE

For P.T.A.'s, for granges and farmers' clubs, for Boy and Girl Scouts and 4-H clubs, the annual Arbor day offers a very strong and convenient peg upon which to hang an enterprise which will be of great and lasting benefit to the community—the initiation of a community forestry project. As the bulletin previously quoted well says:

"The spirit of Arbor day is unique in that it looks not backward but always forward.

PLANT-LOUSE DESTROYER

The larva of the beautiful lacewing fly is called the aphis-lion because of the great numbers of aphids which it kills. These larvae are so ravenous and ferocious that they would devour one another if the lace-wing did not guard against such voracity. She lays her eggs, singly, on the tips of stiff grass stems so that each larva as it hatches crawls down and goes about its business without molesting the others. When the larva is ready for pupation it spins a silken cocoon.

In Suits or Satin, Wartime Brides Are Lovely as Ever

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THERE'S big news in the realm of fashions for brides. We used to speak of "the season for brides." Well, there is no special season now, for the entry of an increasing number of wartime brides into the picture has changed all that. Weddings are apt to happen any time, anywhere, these days.

If you are wondering about the fate of the bride in gleaming satin and masses of billowy tulle who has always been the pride and joy of the fashion world, you may rest assured she will grace the springtime picture as radiantly lovely and picturesque as ever. From style centers everywhere comes the news that, while there will be a continuous program of informal weddings because of rush orders to soldier grooms to return to their posts of duty, yet there is definitely a continued trend to big weddings.

For the formal bride who is fortunate enough to have a pretentious wedding in the time-honored way, the exquisite gown pictured in the foreground of the above illustration is a masterpiece of all that goes to make up a "picture." There is infinite charm in this stately wedding gown of gleaming ivory white satin, enhanced with a yoke of Alencon-type lace. The snug-fitting basque is prettily sleeved with short puffs of the satin which add to the youthful technique employed all through the costume design. The Victorian bouquet complements the quaint charm of the gown and the short bridal veil. This bridal bouquet is of white roses and pompom chrysanthemums, with a deep red rose as a touch of romantic modernism. The bride's flowers are traditionally the groom's responsibility, but it is the bride's privilege to specify her preferences, and it is readily to be seen that the bride pictured here made a most excellent choice.

The bride who is real news this spring is the bride who is going to be married in a simple little suit in a hurry-up wedding because of army regulations and the uncertainties of the soldier-groom's recall to headquarters. Thus a new expression, "suit wedding," has been coined, and to meet its requirements designers are giving of their best to create costumes that will make the simple wartime bride as lovely and charming as the stately bride who is privileged to enjoy all the pomp and glory of a more formal wedding.

Ingenious designing resulted in the suit dress pictured to the right in the above illustration. It is a triumph of soft tailoring and is beguilingly feminine and definitely fashion-right. It boasts two lives, for it serves both as a suit and as a charming dress when the jacket is removed. This New York creation is of navy wool with attached blouse top of red crepe, gaily printed in vivid blues and greens which matches the jacket lining. A jaunty hat of white fabric trimmed with red and white fringe completes the ensemble. The gloves and footwear are perfect selections.

For a young girl who is planning a quiet wedding the simple crepe frock with its cunning jacket effect, as shown centered in the above picture, is ideal. Of either navy or black (black with lots of white is very smart), it will look girlish and "sweet" relieved by deep white lace half sleeves. The lace is removable. However, the high note of charm is the matching lace hat which gives the "pretty bride" look as convincingly as any arrangement of orange-blossoms and tulle that might be devised.

(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Bright Squares

The new prints are superb in color and technique, and they have the look of uniqueness about them which every woman covets. Here, illustrated above, is a print that qualifies on every count as a winner. This New York creation of black crepe, simply fashioned, is scattered with large red and white squares. The skirt is marked by softly gathered front fullness. The bodice is graceful and easy fitting. The wide belt, with its huge buckle, is of black patent leather. Of especial interest is the hat, for it is characteristic of an important style trend. Its flattering fan-pleated brim is bordered on the upper side with navy grosgrain ribbon. The white linen-weave straw is very smart.

Short of Materials? Designers Say 'No'

To those engaged in apparel industries has come an unprecedented challenge to make the adjustments necessary to carry on a program of conservation of materials in accordance with wartime priority rulings. The reaction to this challenge is most heartening. There apparently will be no lack of fashion interest but really a gain in new ideas and new ways of making the most of materials at hand.

Silk or no silk, nylon or no nylon, we are going to have flattering and wearable hosiery of the sheerest of sheer lisle or fine gauge rayon. As to "pure silk" silks, what is being achieved with rayon and other synthetics is a revelation.

Achieve Maximum Style With Minimum Yardage

The restriction on materials has spurred designers to create fashions that require minimum yardage. So look for slim silhouettes and shorter jackets styled so intriguingly you will be converted to the idea at first glance.

The new side-saddle drapes are so amazingly slenderizing they are destined to enjoy definite style prestige.

Gray and White

Watch the fashion parade and note the preponderance of gray suits, dresses and coats. Gray has become such a hobby with fashion we will be seeing more of it than we have seen for many a season. Gray hats with white accents are outstanding, as is the all-white hat with a gray suit.

Frankly Feminine

Hat styles tend to be frankly feminine. Even the huge brims are supple and becomingly manipulated. Some of the newer little hats are mostly a labyrinth of bandeaux with which to anchor tiny forward-pitching flower pieces to the head.

PATTERNS SEWING CIRCLE

A NEW and different yoke treatment brightens the top of the "teen-age" frock which we present today. A clever detail, this yoke carries a front opening for the bodice and in addition gives that originality which younger girls seek in their fashions! Pattern No. 1520-B is bound to be regarded highly by the younger set anyhow, because it also presents that very popular feature—the dirndl skirt—in this case a dirndl skirt with a snug fitting belt which ties in back with sash ends.

Mose Knew Not What Lucy Talked Of, but How!

Before the court on wife-brought charges of desertion and non-support, Mose Brown meekly admitted his guilt and offered nothing in extenuation except that the lady talked too much.

"That's no excuse for desertion, Mose," said the judge. "The law gives a woman the right to talk all she wants to."

"Yassuh, Jedge. I knows it do. Only Lucy she never stop talkin'. She keep it up stiddy, mo'nin', noon and night, till I cain't stan' it no mo'."

"She does? What does she talk about?" inquired the court.

"Jedge, suh," Moses said, "she don't say."

Loan Assistance

The FSA supervisor wishes to remind readers of The Lincoln County News that loan assistance from the Farm Security Administration is available for the purchase of gardening equipment, seed, feed, cows, heifers, pigs, and chickens, and to rent workstock and equipment, repair livestock shelters, fences and machinery, and to meet other needs.

Mr. Jones has been assured that this new Food for Victory program has been streamlined with simplified forms which have been worked out to make these loans quickly available. He said the new loan program for the low-income families not now participating in the FSA program may amount to as much as $500 for each family and extend from one to five years at 5 percent interest. Present FSA borrowers may get additional loans where needed to help them meet revised operating costs.

TRUTH about ADVERTISING

By CHARLES B. ROTH

HOSS TRADIN'

MY FRIEND asked me if I would go with him to buy a horse. I went. We traipsed from one dealer's to another. One man asked us $300 for a horse. The next man had a horse which looked no better, but his price was $450. Before the afternoon was over we had seen horses ranging in price all the way from $150 to $14,000.

Now, the $14,000 horse was a much better animal than the $150 horse. No use to deny that. But nowhere along the line did we find a stabilized market.

Charles Roth

Had we bought we would have been paying a price which the seller thought his horse was worth. There was no market authority we could consult which would tell my friend whether he was being overcharged or undercharged.

That same evening I went out to buy a small household item—one which is advertised in all the newspapers. I knew what the market price would be: advertising had told me.

With confidence I asked the clerk for what I wanted and put my 25 cents down on the counter. Had he said: "I am sorry, sir, but the price is 50 cents," I would have left and gone somewhere else.

What assurance have I, as a consumer, that someone won't take advantage of me and overcharge me in this bold way?

My only assurance is the advertising which I read in the newspaper. That is my market and my buyer's guide. It tells me the prices I must expect to pay. Let the seller who tries to charge me more beware.

It also tells me what quality I may expect. Let the seller who tries to give me a poorer substitute beware.

So you see that advertising stabilizes prices and enables me, no matter how inexperienced I am in business, to buy with the same expertness and assurance of a professional buyer who spends his life buying for a large concern.

No one objects to paying the established price for something he wants. But all of us hate to be robbed by an unscrupulous man who, taking advantage of our ignorance, "soaks us good and plenty."

The way to avoid being "soaked" in this complete way is to buy advertised goods from merchants who advertise.

There was a time in America when there were no set prices. Each merchant charged what he thought "the traffic would bear." Advertising came to the rescue of the consumer. It led the way to the established prices you pay when you buy anything today — except, perhaps, horses.

Any Poets In Lincoln County?

Because of many requests for additional time to prepare manuscripts, the merican Poet Laureate Committee this week announced that the "Poet-Laureate Search" contest closing date has been extended to May 1.

Contest is open to amateur and professional poets and any number of entries may be submitted. Ten cents should be enclosed for postage and handling costs.

Contest objective is to select the nation's outstanding 1942 poem and the best verse from each state, according to Claude B. Coldren, contest chairman.

Mail entries to H. M. Hudson, Secretary, American Poet-Laureate Committee, Broadway Building, San Diego, California.

Service Men to Get Pay Increase

The Senate by a vote of 74 to 0, passed and sent to the House legislation granting substantial pay increases to enlisted men and the lowest grade officers in the army, navy, marine corps and other uniformed services.

The measure, sponsored by Senator Johnson (D., Col.), would raise the cost of maintaining the nation's war machine by $282,412,212 a year. Johnson said the readjustment of pay and allowance acales contemplated is designed to provide "adequate compensation and a proper progressive increase on a career basis" throughout the enlisted grades.

Here is how the measure would raise the monthly pay of enlisted men in the army and navy.

Privates and apprentice seamen, from $30 to $42; privates first class and seamen second class, from $36 to $48; corporals and seamen first class from $54 to $66; sergeants and petty officers, third class, from $60 to $78; staff sergeants and petty officers second class, from $72 to $96; first sergeants and petty officers first class, from $84 to $114; and master sergeants and chief petty officers from $126 to $138.

The bill would eliminate the present plan under which army buck privates receive $21 for the first four months of service and $30 thereafter. Instead, the privates would get $42 pay from the moment they enter the army.

Army and navy nurses, who now receive from $70 to $180 a month, would get from $90 to $150 per month.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON
(Consolidated Features—WNU Service.)

NEW YORK. — A business man from Ann Arbor, Mich., has been spending a lot of time lately deep down in the pits of English coal mines, quite literally saving civilization. He is Eugene Power, who has developed the microphotograph process, by which a person can carry a liberal education around with him in his upper vest pocket.

Compress Record Of Our Civilization In Deep Coal Pits

In the safety and privacy of the coal mines, Mr. Power is condensing into a few cubic yards, a documented civilization, the historic archives of the "Sceptred Isle," for deep and secret underground storage, until the day when England lives happily again in the sun. Copies go to our Library of Congress which hasn't yet gone underground.

In an 1941 review, just published, the Rockefeller Foundation features the filming project, for which it appropriated grants totaling $170,000. Raymond B. Fosdick, president of the foundation, who writes the review, describes the microfilm as a process by which "the whole of the New York public library's 3,000,000 books could be compressed into the space of its card catalogue." The film reduces a printed page to around one two-hundredth of its area. A projector blows the microphotograph up to normal size with an apparatus for easy, lounging chair reading.

We had news of Eugene Power from a friendly business competitor, Albert Boni, the publisher, who has brought through the Readex Microprint system, comparable to Mr. Power's, and widely used in universities, libraries and research projects.

"Mr. Power has done an extremely effective job, both commercially and technically," said Mr. Boni, "and deserves great credit for his co-operation in filming the British records. His firm was given a first grant of $30,000 by the foundation and results were so satisfactory that this was increased to allow the present extensive work. He is a technically trained alumnus of the University of Michigan who is quite aware of the wide social implications of his commercial project, and who has co-operated with historical and research societies."

ON ONE day he was a space-grabbing sports writer in London, eating warily at beaneries and sleeping in a hall bedroom, and the next day he had many palaces, jewels and gold plate, elephants, peacocks, servants and race horses.

Ex-Sports Writer Ruler Urges India Unify Against Japs

The maharajah could have given all mere sports writers the merry ha-ha, but he stayed likeable and clubby and thereafter contributed much to world unity and understanding. The summons to his throne came suddenly, with the death of his father.

This, positively no sports writer's dream, is the tale of the august Maharajah Jam Sahib of Nawanagar, today helping unify India against Japanese attack. As chancellor of the chamber of princes, he warns the other thrones, powers and dominions that they will be laid low if they don't get together, but he asks them to rally to the empire within the framework of dominion status for India. He insists that this involves no recreance either to the people of their principalities, or to the empire.

As a friendly and democratic sovereign, the maharajah has been a good will builder for the empire. This is highly important just now, as the Indian get-together, aside from the split between Hindus and Moslems, depends much on team work between the princes and their subjects.

When the maharajah was a student at Cambridge, his Oriental titles were somehow corrupted into "rum, gin and whiskey." Through some misunderstanding at home, he lost his status as heir apparent to the Nawanagar throne. He had been amateur cricket champion of Great Britain, and had played in matches in many countries, including the United States. He caught on easily as a sports writer, piecing out his income by tutoring in Sanskrit. It was said that he could whip out a good yarn in a hurry, on almost anything in the sports field.

CHANGING CELLAR STAIRS FOR SAFETY REASONS

IN PLANNING the remodeling of an old farmhouse, the owner insisted on making a change in the location of the stairs leading down to his cellar. As is common in house design, these stairs were directly under those leading from the front hall to the second story. This meant that in case of a fire in the cellar, the draft would carry the flames up the stairs and bring them into direct contact with the under side of the stairs of the upper flight. Should that happen at night, the chances would be strong that the bedroom stairs would be burned out by the time the family was aroused. As cellar fires are common in residences, this design should be avoided, for it has been responsible for much loss of life. This owner took out the cellar stairs and located them in another part of the cellar. The hole that was left was covered over with heavy planking, so that the cavity under the upper stairs became a small closet, which he utilized for firewood. For additional safety the closet was lined with asbestos. He had three fireplaces on the lower floor, which in winter consumed a good deal of wood. Supplying them was greatly simplified by having a wood closet, where it could easily be reached.

Free House Plans.

"I am planning to build a small summer home about 24 feet square," writes a correspondent. "Where can I secure plans or ideas about building a home of that size?" One thought would be to send ten cents in coin to the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C., for Farmers' Bulletin 1739, which has the title "Farmhouse Plans." He can also get an excellent pamphlet on the subject from his local office of the Federal Housing administration. This is called Technical Bulletin No. 4, which has the title: "Principles of Planning Small Houses." This illustrates several houses of the size that he has in mind. He can get the address of the office from his local telephone book. Another source of information is the 1940 Book of Small Houses, published by Simon & Shuster, New York, which he will find in his local library and also at bookstores.

Moth Control.

Question: I have been in the habit of packing heavy woolen garments in bags and keeping them in the attic during the summer. I have recently been told that the heat would injure the woolens. Is this true?

Answer: The heat of an attic during the summer is not injurious to wool, as it would be to fur. Of course, if a winter overcoat has a fur collar or trimmings it should not be stored in a hot attic. For furs a low temperature is best. The natural oil in furs is dried out by heat, and the fur becomes brittle. With wool there is no such condition. Before putting your woolens away, they should be thoroughly cleaned, preferably by dry cleaning, and a quantity of moth crystals (paradi) should be included in each bag.

Repainting.

Question: How should old, scaling paint be treated before repainting? Should two or three coats of white paint be used, or is a first coat of aluminum paint advisable?

Answer: All the old paint that is loose should be taken off. It is possible that scraping will be sufficient. If not, have it burned off by someone who really knows his business; if you have not had experience, you had better not attempt it yourself because of the fire risk. Aluminum paint makes an excellent first coat. If it is not to be had, put on three coats of good quality paint, following the instructions of the maker for the thinning of the first and second coats.

Rain Pipe Odor.

Question: In my new home there is a terrible odor around the front attic window, apparently coming from the rain pipe just below. How can this be remedied?

Answer: It is probable that the odor comes from a dead bird or mouse in the pipe, or from decaying vegetable matter. You may be able to get rid of it by running a strong stream from your garden hose into the pipe. The alternative is to take down the section of pipe and clean it out with a long wire.

White Crusted Bricks.

Question: Does a white crust appearing on bricks indicate deterioration?

Answer: That is the coming to the surface of mineral salts in the mortar and sometimes in the bricks. It is usually harmless, except for appearance. It will eventually disappear.

Australia, Country of Fighting Men, Faces Greatest Struggle in History

Land 'Down Under' Welcomes Yank Assistance.

By CLIFF LANGE
(Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Australia, the last practical Allied base for attack against the Japs, is similar to the United States both in size and attitude of its people.

It wasn't but a few years ago —1938—that Australia celebrated its 150th anniversary. But now it is girding and ready for a battle to the death against the foe creeping down from the north, engulfing all territories and peoples before it, like the Biblical deluge.

Most of Australia's inhabitants are of British extraction. But in spirit the "Aussiés" are just as American as they are British. The welcome given to American troops upon their arrival there, the demand for General MacArthur to lead the Allied forces in the fighting zone, all clearly show the attitude of the Australians.

Australia's 7,000,000 population is spread over almost 3,000,000 square miles of territory as compared with the United States' total of 133,000,000 population in approximately the same amount of space.

Australia, like our state of Georgia, was first settled by English convicts. That both groups did a good job is evidenced by today's far-reaching developments.

Today most Australians live within a narrow 100-mile coastal belt along the south and east. About half of the population is in the nation's half-dozen largest cities. Sydney, having a million and a quarter inhabitants, is the largest; Melbourne, with a little more than a million, is next largest. Both of these cities are practically at the opposite end of the continent from Darwin, which has been bombed repeatedly.

Vital Defense Road.

From Darwin to the above mentioned metropolitan cities it is little more than 1,500 air-miles. Canberra, the nation's 15-year-old made-to-order capital, is located about 100 miles southwest of Sydney, on the road to Melbourne.

Australia's transportation system now playing a very important part in the nation's defense (and coming offense) is peculiar in that many of the railway lines extending inland come to an abrupt end.

It wasn't until but a few years ago that the railway extending southward from Darwin was connected, by a defense highway, with the railroad extending northward from Adelaide to Alice Springs. This road is the artery through which Australia supplies men and materials to the northern battle scene.

With the exception of most of the coastal regions, the greater part of Australia's central territory is flat, arid and semi-arid land which is practically defenseless. More than a third of it is actual desert. It is in the semi-arid zones that the nation's vast scattered ranches and large grain producing centers are located. As the huge stretches of land located here are irrigated, this section of Australia will be one of the most fertile zones when the war is ended.

As for natural resources, the nation has everything needed for war activity except oil. The oil industry is a recent development and not very encouraging insofar as amounts produced. Last year's production totaled only a few hundred barrels.

The European war curtailed agricultural and grazing activities, but operated to speed up the nation's expanding factory life. Towards the middle of 1939 there were nearly 27,000 plants employing more than a half million people. Reports since then have not been made public.

As gold helped considerably to develop California, its discovery in Australia helped to open up vast territories there. It was first discovered in 1843 and the influx of prospectors raised the population in seven years from around 200,000 to more than 600,000. A story is told about an Australian who crossed the Pacific to take part in the California gold rush. While prospecting in California he noticed that the gold bearing rock and soil of that state had a marked resemblance to territory he had seen in his native land. He found his hunch to be correct when he returned there to prospect.

The Commonwealth of Australia is a self-governing nation, sharing British dominions, to the British king. The Commonwealth is comprised of six colonies called "Original States." They are New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, Victoria, Western Australia, and the island of Tasmania—plus the Northern Territory and the Canberra Capital Territory.

It wasn't until 41 years ago that the six original states united to form a commonwealth. Up to that time there had been many inter-state quarrels—some of them going so far as to create trade barriers against each other.

Preparing Since '38.

The Australian federal government is similar to our own in many ways. It has a senate and a house of representatives. In case of a prolonged disagreement with the house, the senate can be dissolved and a new one elected. The house, too, can be dissolved under certain exceptional circumstances. A governor general—representing the king of England—is the executive head of the government.

Since the inception of the Labor party in 1930, the government has been vigorously building up the munitions and industries and expanding its land and air forces. In 1930, on down to the present day, the government, as part of its national defense policy, has been urging the manufacture of fuel oil and gasoline from its own coal, and the creation of large plants for the manufacture of industrial alcohol.

At no time during the Twentieth century has this spunky nation deluded itself as to what country was its coming enemy. Trouble, which all Australians saw on the southwest Pacific horizon, had been brewing ever since 1935. In that year the tariff laws which gave a marked preference to Great Britain in the sale of cotton goods in Australia. Japanese markets were practically smashed. As a result the Japs virtually boycotted Australian wool in retaliation.

Today the Australians are fully aware of how correct they were in their assumptions concerning the over-ambitious Japanese. Today, this scrappy little nation that covered itself with glory in World War I, is ready for a repeat performance. The Aussies are determined that their nation shall remain as they have always had it—a land of individualists, rugged and aggressive—a land free from the imprint of a tyrant's heel.

Still Has a Frontier Spirit.

The Yankees, "down under" in Australia, at least 7,000 miles from their native land, will be learning much about the Aussies, and the land they are helping to defend.

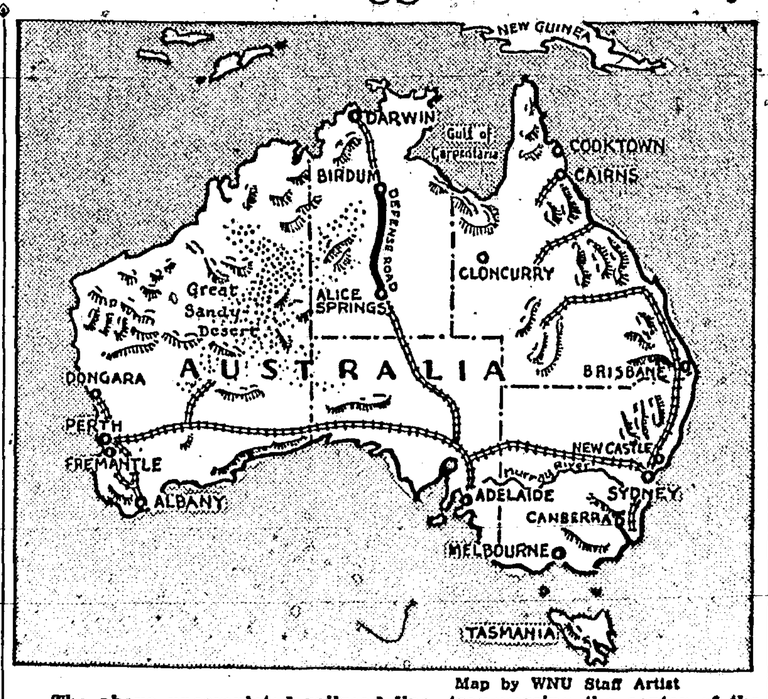
True, the Yank will have time to absorb but little of the past history of the nation. He will, however, learn all about present-day Australia for the Aussies, in addition to being excellent fighters, are definitely proud of their native land without being intensively nationalistic.

The Yank will understand the spirit of the country by remembering that Australia today—outside of its metropolitan cities—has the same "frontier" spirit which lived in the United States about 50 years ago.

The average American citizen and the average American soldier associates Australia with kangaroos, early experiments in social legislation, a national scourge of rabbits, and some remarkably courageous fighting men who covered themselves with glory battling the Germans during World War I.

Then the Yanks will see that the cities are just as modern as those in the United States. The East and West coasts of the United States, where the majority of large cities are located, is somewhat like the east and south coasts of Australia where the most important cities such as Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, Brisbane, and Maryborough are situated.

They will show the Yanks that despite their arming to the hilt, they aren't by nature warriors, nor do they have disturbing aspirations to be such saber-rattling people.



Map by WNU Staff Artist

The above uncompleted railroad line, transversing the center of the Australian continent, (connected in its central part by the Defense highway), is the important artery of war which will be mentioned quite often in future war dispatches from there.

Prime Minister of Australia, John Curtin, who recently clashed with the London government over the selection of Australians who take part in imperial government affairs.

When Australia raised the age limit for enlistment to 40 years, these men were among the many who answered the call to fight for the motherland. Shown here are veterans of World War I who took part in the fierce fighting with the Germans in France.

Animal Curiosities in Store for Yanks

There are many other unusual animals which the Yankee doughboy might see in Australia.

Like the early days of the West in the United States, in the north section of Australia, live nomadic tribes who make fires with sticks and kill their game with spears. Like many tribes of Indians in early U. S. days, these nomadic people are quite harmless, some of them being friendly with the Australian "frontier" people.

The Yankee soldier, remembering his history, will be interested to learn that in the far north section of Australia, buffalo roam over an area as large as the British Isles, in a territory where few white men live.

There are many other strange creatures there that are peculiar to Australia. There is the wombat which burrows deeply, the dingo and the spotted native cat, and the mole, blind, deaf and dumb.

When an alien does not wish to be inducted into any branch of the American army or navy, he may file an "Application by Alien for Relief From Military Service" with his draft board. Origin of Dumdum Bullet

A dumdum bullet is a partially steel-cased bullet with a soft core that expands as it tears through flesh, says Pathfinder. Because of the mushrooming of the core it aggravates the injury of the wound.

Use of dumdum bullets was officially condemned by the International Peace conference of 1899. Their name derives from Dum Dum, a town near Calcutta, India, where they were first manufactured by the British for use against fanatical native tribesmen who refused to be stopped by ordinary steel-jacketed bullets.

$500 THIS WEEK IN PRIZES
WRITE A LAST LINE TO THIS JINGLE

HERE'S WHAT YOU DO
It's simple. It's fun. Just think up a last line to this jingle. Make sure it rhymes with the word "said."
Write your last line of the jingle on the reverse side of a Raleigh package wrapper (or a facsimile thereof), sign it with your full name and address, and mail it to Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., P. O. Box 1799, Louisville, Kentucky, postmarked not later than midnight, April 18, 1942.
You may enter as many last lines as you wish, if they are all written on separate Raleigh package wrappers (or facsimiles).
Prizes will be awarded on the originality and aptness of the line you write. Judges' decisions must be accepted as final. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded. Winners will be notified by mail.
Anyone may enter (except employees of Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., their advertising agents, or their families). All entries and ideas therein become the property of Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corporation.

"Mother, may I go in to buy
Cigarettes for you to try?
Yes, my darling daughter—and

Air Base Training Offered New Mexicans

Santa Fe, April 7. Air Base mechanical jobs, most of them within the state, were opened Tuesday to a number of New Mexico residents willing to take preliminary training.

State Vocational Education Director Brice Sewell said interested men and women, aged 17-45, should visit first and second class post offices to apply for civil service "mechanic learner" examinations. Applications must be in Denver by April 16.

Successful examinations will be given $75 during an indefinite training period and salaries of $1500 a year up when put to work.

4th Registration

The fourth registration date is set for Monday, April 27th and include men whose ages are 44 to 65.

EL PASO

Local and Personal

Miss Rhoda Freeman is home from a trip to Arizona and the West Coast.

Mrs. May Jordan, daughter, and niece and Miss Iris Jerman, Margaret Myers, and Mrs. Glenneth Stokes came home last Monday from an Easter trip to Lubbock.

Miss Kathleen Smith left last week for Clifton Arizona to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Smith.

Frank Mireles, youngest son of Mr. Florencio Mireles, former Carrizozo resident has volunteered for army service and is now stationed at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. This makes three of the Mireles' boys now in service.

Mr. L. M. Sneathen, Electrician who rebuilt the city electric lines, left Saturday night for Malvern, Arkansas where he will assist with the installation of a Government industrial power unit. He obtained a leave of absence from the Lincoln County Utilities Co., to do this work.

Mr. Leandro Vega was in El Paso Wednesday, buying supplies for his feed store.

The Easter parade this year was notable for the number who wore costumes and hats of yesteryear.

Eddie Johnson, who was formerly with the State Highway department, is now with the United States Engineers in Colorado, doing construction work.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ferguson of Capitan were business visitors in Carrizozo, Wednesday afternoon, and staid over to attend the Lyric theatre Wednesday evening.

Mr. Paul Aguayo, who was in the Turner hospital this week is improving.

Mr. Tennis Bigelow, who underwent a major operation Thursday of this week will be discharged from the hospital tomorrow.
