The Lincoln soldier is a member of the headquarters company of Major General Maxwell Murray's South Pacific Base Command whose mission is to supply and rehabilitate combat troops. Base Command is located on New Caledonia, French-owned, subtropical island 1,000 miles northeast of Australia.

Upon completion of his furlough, Garcia will return to this overseas station.

JUNIOR LIVESTOCK SHOW

The Junior Livestock Show and Sale will be held at Albuquerque, September 9, 10 and 11, it was announced today by E. G. Hayward, Comarron, President of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association. The State Cattlemen's Association is joint sponsor of the event together with the State Fair Board, the State Wool Growers Association and the Extension Service and State Agricultural College.

Fat calves, lambs and barrows will be in their stalls at the State Fair Grounds on Sunday, September 9th. Judging will be on Monday and the sale will take place on Tuesday. All animals not formerly entered in the annual junior livestock sale at the State Fair will be excluded from the show due to wartime transportation regulations, that is, horses, rabbits, milch cows, goats and etc.

50 calves, 30 lambs and 30 barrows will go thru the sales ring under the hammer of veteran auctioneer Tex Condon of LosAngeles. Condon has been auctioneer in the sale for the past three years at the Fair. Official entry blanks will be ready for distribution by the 9th of August, Hayward said. FFA leaders and County Extension Agents will assist in selecting, entering and bringing animals to the event.

Ivan Watson, Extension Animal Husbandman will act as general manager of the Show and Sale in cooperation with Frank Wimberly, State FFA supervisor. Peter Mocho of San Mateo will head the lamb division and L. C. Dalton, State Vocational Education Department will handle the pig group. C. E. Hellbusch of Farm Markets Relations will handle the sales proceedure.

More than 100 boys and girls from throughout New Mexico will bring their animals to this event for which they have been preparing for the past year, Hayward said. Adequate accomodations will be arranged with State Fair officials and court operators.

Both 4-H and FFA members will compete in the same classes and awards will be the same as in previous years of the Fair, except that prizes will go only to fifth rather than tenth place. Prospective buyers from Albuquerque and the state who have boosted the sale in previous years for the encouragement of Junior livestock feeding and youth interest in agriculture, promise to make the event equally as successful this year as during the past when the regular state fair was in full swing.

After the business session, cookies and punch were served.

LAW REQUIRES FISHING LICENSES FOR SERVICEMEN

From time to time requests have come to the State Game Department to permit convalescent and other servicemen to fish without a license or to issue them free licenses to fish or hunt. Authority to purchase a few licenses and rotate their use among convalescent and other servicemen has also been requested.

The State Game Commission at its meeting on June 11 and again on July 16 took this matter under advisement and went into it fully. The Commission feels most kindly toward all men who are serving their country in the armed forces and is particularly sympathetic toward those who are now convalescing in hospitals or at convalescent stations.

"The Game Commission would like very much to assist these men in any way possible that will hasten their recovery" said the Chairman, Judge William J. Barker, "however, the Commission's authority is limited by statutes and we find that no special provision has been made by the Legislature for handling situations of this kind. The Commission finds that it cannot waive the provisions of law governing such matters."

There are two separate sections of law relating to fishing licenses: Section 43-301 of the 1941 Statutes Annotated provides as follows:

"* * * * No person shall at any time shoot hunt, kill, injure or take in any maner, any game animal, game bird, or game fish without paying for and having in possession a license as herein provided for the year in which such shooting, hunting, fishing or taking is done. * * *"

and Section 43-306 says:

"* * * It shall be unlawful for any person except children under age of 14 years to take any game fish from any public stream or water in this State without having in his possession and on his person a fishing license as herein provided. * * *"

"Thus it will be seen that, regardless of the Game Commission's desire to be of assistance, the law is specific and the making of exceptions is not authorized," commented the Commission Chairman.

State Game Warden Elliot Barker sugested that perhaps many sportsmen would like to assist these convalescent servicemen by purchasing licenses for them. Money thus spent would go back into the Game Protection Fund. Those desiring to do so should contact hospital or convalescent station officials.

Mrs. Dan Elliott and little grand daughter Sherrie Ann went to Belen Saturday to spend several days with Mr. and Mrs. Vaden Elliott.

AMERICAN HEROES

by WOODY COWAN

DEATH came to Lt. Dale Christensen, Gray, Iowa, 112th Cavalry, after heroic action at New Guinea, which earned him a medal of honor. Finding his platoon badly shot up from short range fire, Lt. Christensen crawled close to the enemy, silenced one machine gun with hand grenades and later led an assault which resulted in the destruction of four mortars and ten machine guns. Our investment in War Bonds encourages such men to offer the supreme sacrifice for freedom for all humanity.

WHITE SANDS POWER LINE

AMARILLO, TEX., AUG. 6th—Work is progressing rapidly on the high voltage transmission line from Las Cruces to Alamogordo, New Mexico, being constructed by the Bureau of Reclamation to serve the U. S. Army's White Sands Ordnance proving grounds, the air field near Alamogordo and the city of Alamogordo.

Several miles om holes have been dug by the Reynolds Electrical and Engineering co. of El Paso, the contractor, and materials are beginning to arrive. The 70 mile line, with three subatations, is slated for completion by October 1, according to Wesley R. Nelson, regional director of the Bureau of Reclamation, with headquarters in Amarillo.

The extension of the line from Las Cruces to Alamogordo, which will transmit hydro-power from Elephant Butte dam, will eventually serve a number of REA cooperatives in New Mexico in addition to the present emergency war needs, Mr. Nelson said.

Work on the power line is being directed by O. Newall Parker, construction engineer for the Bureau, with offices in Las Cruces.

Mr. J. H Fulmer, Jr., spent several days last week in El Paso on business.

SNAPPY FACTS about RUBBER

By drastic planning, production and supervision of current supplies, the equivalent of 900,000 tires was saved in one year in Britain.

By an arrangement of overlapping rubber lips, a zipper has been developed by B. F. Goodrich that effectively seals liquids, air and gases. Now being used in pressure-sealing doors for airplanes, waterproof supply kits and aviation fuel cells, its post-war uses are numerous.

Automatic tire inflation such as now used on the Army's amphibious "Duck" is a post-war possibility for passenger cars.

Newspaperman Stuff:

Add Things I Never Knew Till Now: In 1812 a newspaperman named Nathanial Raunsavelt was taken into custody for refusing to divulge the source of his information about the secret activities of some politicos. . . . He was threatened and cajoled but stood firm. . . . Thus was established the principle of the reporter's duty to protect his news source. . . . The first American newspaper was discontinued by authorities because it published some gossip about the family troubles of the King of France.

Heywood Broun was a skilled exponent of the rapier retort. He directed some of his most devastating arguments against Huey Long. . . . He once accused Huey of "murdering the truth." Long promptly shrieked for a retraction. . . . Broun replied: "Huey says that he never murdered the truth. That's because he never gets near enough to do it any bodily harm."

Along similar lines there's the classic about the small town gazette which conducted a vigorous campaign against the town council. . . . One of their yarns was headlined: "Half the Town Council Are Crooks." . . . The outraged politicos demanded an apology, and the editor promised to run one. . . . Next day the daily carried this headline: "Half the Town Council Are Not Crooks."

About a century ago the press was in its Mother Hubbard stage. . . . Namby-pambyism was rampant. Editors took a lorgnette view of the news. This sidelight illustrates their ultra fuddy-duddy attitude: One gazette front-paged an apology to its subscribers because a reporter had used the word "trousers" in a yarn when he should have used the word "unmentionables"!

Tiffs among newsboys nowadays belong in the taffy-pull category when compared with the journalistic slug-fests during the James Gordon Bennett era. . . . Bennett was physically assaulted a half-dozen times by opposition editors who had been clawed by his barbed-wire editorials. . . . But Bennett refused to dilute his potent attacks against competitors. He merely reported the brawls on his gazette's front page and reaped added circulation. . . . The anti-Bennett journalistic barrage also blasted his family. The slanderers finally drove his wife and children out of the country. They moved to Europe and made infrequent visits to America, while Bennett continued his free-swinging style of journalism.

Joseph Pulitzer's N. Y. World set journalistic standards few newspapers have equalled. Yet Pulitzer arrived in America a poor, friendless, semi-illiterate immigrant. He spent all his spare time educating himself. . . . His enlightened opinions on the subject of newspapers are always worth absorbing. . . . Fix-ample: "What is everybody's business is nobody's business—except the journalist's. It is his by adoption. But for his care every reform would be stillborn. He holds officials to their duties. He exposes secret schemes of plunder. He promotes every hopeful plan of progress. Without him public opinion would be shapeless and dumb. Our Republic and its press will rise or fall together. An able, disinterested, public-spirited press, with trained intelligence to know the right and courage to do it, can preserve that public virtue without which popular government is a sham and mockery."

Hollywood has depicted foreign correspondents as overgrown Rover Boys. . . . It has created the impression that these newsboys have a glamorous occupation. Actually they have a difficult, perilous task with few rewards. . . . O. D. Gallagher, a British correspondent, dodged bombs and bullets, and traveled 100,000 miles in three years for his news stories, which readers forget five minutes after reading.

This is the wisest counsel for colyumists we have come across: "Get around town—find out what people are talking about. Give your readers a little daily jolt on something they are gabbing about at home, perhaps, and can gab about some more. Controversial stuff—so they can argue. The big idea is this: Make half of them happy and half of them sore."

Reporters aren't as hard-boiled as the legends would have you believe. . . . When President Wilson made his gruelling cross-country tour (in an effort to gain the support of Americans for his world peace plans) he was broken in body but not in spirit. . . . Reporters who accompanied him were aware that he was sacrificing his life for his ideals. . . . As Wilson made his final stirring plea for world peace, newsmen listening to his eloquent address openly wept.

Vitamin-Enriched Pork Shown Feasible

Proper Feeding Will Add Vitamins to Pork

By W. J. DRYDEN

Research work at the Washington state experiment station has shown that it is not only possible but entirely practical to increase the thiamin content of pork with selected feeds.

Sub-deficiencies of thiamin or vitamin B1 constitute the most widely-spread human nutritional ailment in the United States. Pork is recognized as one of the richest sources of thiamin among the natural and universally consumed foods.

The experiment showed that cull peas properly used in hog feeding will result in pork richer in thiamin. There is no reason to doubt but what special markets may be developed advertising thiamin-rich pork. Iodine eggs, enriched bread, enriched milk and other food products have had special markets developed along this line. At the start, the demand may be limited to hospitals and others who are willing to pay a premium for an enriched pork product.

On a fresh basis, the ham and loin were found to contain the highest amounts of thiamin, followed by shoulder, heart, liver and kidney. The liver had the highest riboflavin, followed by heart, ham, shoulder and loin.

Jeeps for Farming Will Be Available

Postwar jeep at work.

In tests conducted at state colleges on private farms and at the factory, the postwar jeep has been proven superior to the military jeep in most operations.

The new jeep will do about anything that a light truck and a tractor will do. It can be used for delivery purposes, or for plowing or other farm work, such as discing, drilling, logging, harrowing and the various transportation jobs found on the average farm.

Preventing Odors and Garlic Taste in Milk

To prevent the milk showing a garlic or onion taste or odor, it is necessary to follow these rules carefully:

1. Clip the tops with a mowing machine before grass is pasture high.

2. Graze the pasture lightly with young and dry stock.

3. If cows are turned on the pasture immediately after milking and removed four hours before next milking, the trouble will be largely eliminated.

4. After bringing the cows from the pasture, give them a light feeding of dry roughage.

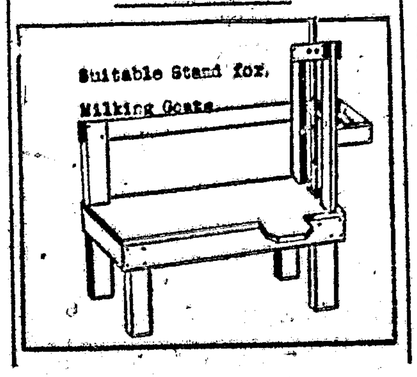
5. Keep the cows outside the milking barn until just before milking time.

6. Cool the milk promptly after milking.

Good Sheep Pastures

Make good pastures the basis of the ration for all classes of sheep, is the advice of sheep experts. Healthy sheep grazing legume or legume and grass pastures and provided with salt and water need no other feed. The pasture season may be extended by using wheat or rye pasture.

If legume roughages are not used, feed liberal amounts of protein concentrates and some extra calcium. Soybean oil meal, limestone will prove welcome additions to fattening lambs on corn silage diet.



Easy-to-Make 'Action' Clothes Just the Thing for Late Summer

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MOST of us want to keep our pretty wash summer clothes just as long as warm weather persists, with utter disregard as to fixed seasonal calendar dates.

If you are an ardent sports enthusiast, life in the open has doubtlessly taken toll of your "action" clothes most of all. You'll find, however, that you can easily fill in the gaps and keep your summer appearance just by stitching up easy-to-launder cottons and white rayon sharkskin costumes. At your sewing center, you can learn some smart and thrifty short-cut tricks from experts which will help you to achieve chic and good-looking costumes to tide you over for the remainder of the summer season.

First on the replacement list is a simple - to - make one-piece tennis dress of crisp cotton or sharkskin as shown centered in the group illustrated. It has action-free lines throughout and boasts a cool comfort with its deep-cut sleeveless armholes and shapely low neckline. A high-riding, set-in waistband assures perfect fit and flattery for a young lithe figure.

Whether you relax at the beach or countryside, you'll find that your most frequent companion for complete comfort is a ruffled full-skirted pinafore of striped cotton that any beginner can turn out in a few hours at the sewing machine. The pretty model to the left is a shining example of the now-so-popular pinafore mode. When you wash the pinafore, on any cottons for that matter, you can make sure that white will emerge gleaming and colors will all look bright if you dissolve bluing flakes with the soap. This expert technique insures against a danger of streaks and saves time by avoiding need for a separate bluing job. Rinse in two clear waters for perfect results. Now that cottons have become of all-year-round interest, it is well to know the various laundry tricks that will keep them fresh and new looking.

Another way to achieve a perky finish that is dirt-resisting, is to dip all of your cottons in a quart of thin starch mixture in which you've dissolved a quarter-cake of a specially prepared wax-like substance. This will keep the iron from sticking and pulling, and you can iron your clothes to satiny crispness before they are entirely dry and so by-pass the sprinkling chore.

Cool fillers for any wilting wardrobe are cotton blouses that are classic in style and made of checks and stripes. Combinations of blue and white will make you look as fresh as a summer breeze. You'll find that white sharkskin slacks, as pictured to the right, team beautifully with any of these cotton toppers, thus playing an important role in the wardrobe-stretching program.

Your swank town cotton suits in dark ginghams, checked cottons, black shantung, black eyelet and smart rayon in a linen-like weave will carry through the mid-season triumphantly. In fact, they will give excellent service for school wear and shopping until cool weather actually sets in.

Tricks with ribbon work like magic in reviving a summer frock that needs uplift. Ruffled ribbon shirred and gathered at the neckline ending in a cascade down the bodice opening. A huge bow of ribbon placed at the low neckline or posed at the shoulder, together with a belt of the same ribbon (you can buy the ready-made belts at the ribbon counter) will add new interest to your dark summer print frock. Self-fabric bows made out of left-over scraps of material, one on each jacket pocket, also at the neckline, or placed at the base of a low-cut neckline will add a refreshing note to your costume.

Crownless Type

When the upswept hairdo came "in" this season, it brought a challenge to milliners to create hat types that would take care of the topknot of curls puffs brought en masse to the top of the head. Resourceful milliners found the answer in the crownless hat. By leaving the top crown open milady's hair would not be disarranged. The charming theater hat by Mme. Reine here shown is typical of the new trend toward crownless hats. It is fashioned of black Chantilly lace, bound in velvet and roped in gray pearls. Many of the summer white hats have ruches of tulle or net or lace banked about the headline of the brim to simulate a crown, though in reality the top is open.

Figurines Latest In Juvenile Jewelry

Designers are paying a lot of attention this fall to creating jewelry items for youngsters. Something new in the field are the little bracelets from which dangle figurines that are miniature replicas of nursery rhyme characters and fairy tale folk. Painted wooden pins to wear on the lapels of tiny-tot coats consist of lilliputian Russian boys and girls or cunning Dutch maidens and Mexican figures. Hand - painted hearts on a fine silver chain appeal to the little girl of esthetic taste.

The new displays show boxed sets containing necklaces and matching bracelets. For the teen-age group the newest thing is a dog-collar and matching bracelet in bright leather, studded with wee gold hearts. A big heart dangles from the wrist strap. Many pastel jewelry items to be worn with "young teen black" enliven this season's collections of jewelry designed for the very young.

Lace for Luxury Lingerie

The treatment of lace used as part of the garment rather than a trimming is seen in the new slips and gowns. Slips with the entire bodice of lace are shown especially in black, the demand for which is increasing right along. Boudoir coats and robes are very lovely made of allover pastel cotton lace.

Nailhead-Studded Felts

An effective form of trimming is seen on voguish new felt hats for fall which are studded with either bright nailheads or with tiniest satin buttons. Smart accessory ensembles include hat, belt and cuffs of felt, enhanced with matched nailhead trimming.

With branches all over the World

THERE'S no business institution more thoroughly American than the General Store.

Yet, do you realize that America is not even self-sufficient enough to keep that General Store running efficiently and prosperously?

For instance, its delivery truck was made in America; but 300 products, from 56 countries, went into its making. The telephone over which the orders come is American-made. But 18 of the telephone's important materials came from outside the country.

The coffee, the tea, the sugar, the tin in the cans, the cocoa and chocolate . . . these and many more of the things the store buys and sells came from overseas. Take them away and business languishes, becomes more difficult to operate. Take them away, and the community's standard of living declines, life itself becomes less pleasant.

No country can build a fence and hide behind it these days. For lasting prosperity, as well as for durable peace, we must cooperate with the rest of the world. Truly, planes, radio, rockets, have made of this shrunken earth, one world.

Cooperation means getting along even with peoples whose beliefs do not jibe with ours. It means contributing our share toward world order. It means making the effort necessary to understanding. It means every citizen must accept the responsibility of making international cooperation work.

You can do these things:

First, get and keep yourself informed about the specific proposals for peace and international cooperation which are now before us.

Second interest your friends in these questions. Get them discussed in groups to which you belong.

Third, write what you think to your Congressman and Senators, to your newspaper. Declare yourself.

At last the secret is out, the bomb which exploded early on the morning of July 16, which was discussed by everyone at the breakfast table and wondered about is explained! When we undertook to tell one lady who saw the shining light in the west that morning that the War Department said it was merely an explosion at the air base, she became choleric and defiant, and said she knew a bomb when she saw it, and especially when it shook the whole house and threw an article from the top of her kitchen cabinet For fear it was a war secret we didn't mention it in the paper; And now comes Mr Truman's official announcement of the effectiveness of this secret cosmic bomb that carries more power than 20,000 tons of T N T. Uranium, which is the basis of the bomb is a metallic element which possesses radio active properties and is the basis of pitchblende No matter how much the Germans knew about uranium our own scientists knew more

What surprises us is that now since the bomb is an established fact some wiseacres want it destroyed. That would be a senseless procedure, and could not be accomplished anyway, since the knowledge is assured. There would be as much sense in trying to destroy gas or electricity because they can be turned into dangerous channels. For peace time activity a few pounds will be a god send for everybody.

Editorially we have never mentioned how pleased we are, and how proud New Mexico as a whole should be over the appointment of the Hon. Clinton Anderson to the office of Secretary of Agriculture. The people feel that Mr. Anderson is a qualified, efficient and capable head for the office he has been chosen to fill.

His address at Stillwater, Oklahoma, Friday to the "Flying Farmers of America' indicated his vision and his desire to fulfil his duties of office conscientiously His appointment was recognition of his outstanding ability and accomplishment as a public servant during his congressional term.

We are in receipt of a copy of "New Mexico's Future" an economic and employment appraisal by Mr. E. L. Moulton. The book is a discussion of manufacturing, agricultural production, mining, textiles, the lumber business; and in fact is a complete coverage of the economic possibilities of the state In reading this survey we find New Mexico is especially favored in so many ways that her post-war future would seem to hold wonderful promise for inevitably successful enterprises and development.

Chapters in "New Mexico's Future" concerning the hand-made Indian jewelry and Navajo and Chimayo weavers hold my greatest interest. The marvels of Indian hand made articles have always held an especial appeal for me.

The widely heralded No. 5 ration book which is to be "no larger than a $1 bill" will be distributed in December. We trust the red points will go farther than they did in the No. 4 book.

Marine Corps Needs Volunteers

Marine Recruiting Office, 905 Mills Building, El Paso, Texas.

TOWN AND FARM WOMEN BEATING CITY FOLKS AT FAT SAVING

Our government knows that city women have done an outstanding job saving used fats—but, now that you town and farm women have rolled up your sleeves, you are providing more used fats per kitchen than any other group in the U. S. Keep it up! 100,000,000 more pounds of used fats are needed this year to help make vital war supplies. We hoped your record savings, we'll never make that quota.

Save every drop! Remember, even the small amounts that fill the average can faster. Drippings, crummings, scrapings, and fat scraps melted down. Your butcher will give you 2 red points and up to 4¢ a pound. If you have any difficulty, call your Home Demonstration or County Agent.

BIRTH SLIPS TO BE DISCONTINUED

Director J. R. Scott announced that the State Health Department has stopped issuance of birth notification slips to parents, even though it would create somewhat of a burden on the people of the State of New Mexico.

The slip was free. It will now be necessary to obtain birth certificates at a cost of $1.

"Among the uses that have been made of these slips," Dr. Scott said, "has been the presentation of the slip to ration boards for the issuance of food ration cards for the babies. The slip also has been used to prove the age of a child who starts attending school for the firset time."

EL PASO— International Mining Day will be celebrated November 2 and 3 in El Paso.

The mining committee of the El Paso Chamber of Commerce, sponsor of the anual celebration, has decided to advance the date so as not to interfere with the opening of the hunting season in New Mexico.

The committee also began to poll mining machinery corporations throughout the country, asking whether they would care to participate in a mining exhibit which would be held in conjunction with International Mining Day.

Eugene M. Thomas, Dean of Engineering of the Texas College of Mines, is the general chairman for International Mining Day of 1945.

Nearly 500 registered for the 1944 celebration. International Mining Day is a get-together for mining men of New Mexico, Texas, Arizona, Colorado and Mexico. Although the program is primarily social, culminating with the famous Sourdough Supper, one business meeting is held at which leaders in the mining industry speak. The El Paso Metals Section of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers also has a program in conjunction with International Mining Day.

The Carlsbad Section of the AIME is expected to participate in this year's program.

NEW PROGRAM FOR VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II

Effective July 1st veterans can purchase government surplus property on a high priority to set themselves up and maintain themselves in business it was announced today by John F. Bynon, N. M. District Manager of the Smaller War Plants Corporation. The exercise of this right by veterans will be accomplished through SWPC, thereby affording veterans the highest priority possible. Under the terms of the Surplus Property Act, SWPC can purchase surplus property for resale to small business organizations and under Surplus Property Board Regulation No. 2 has a federal agency top priority to buy surplus property. SWPC will act as a buying agent or clearing house on all veterans purchases. It has the responsibility of determining whether the veteran has a likely chance of success in his venture.

If he decides he has not, SWPC must explain that decision to the Surplus Property Board. The War Food Administration will advise SWPC concerning applications for surplus property items useful in farming, forestry, grazing(fruit growing and the like. Under this system a veteran cannot buy more than $2,500. of surplus property. Prices will be governed by OPA ceilings, and the prices will not be more than the government originally paid, less depreciation.

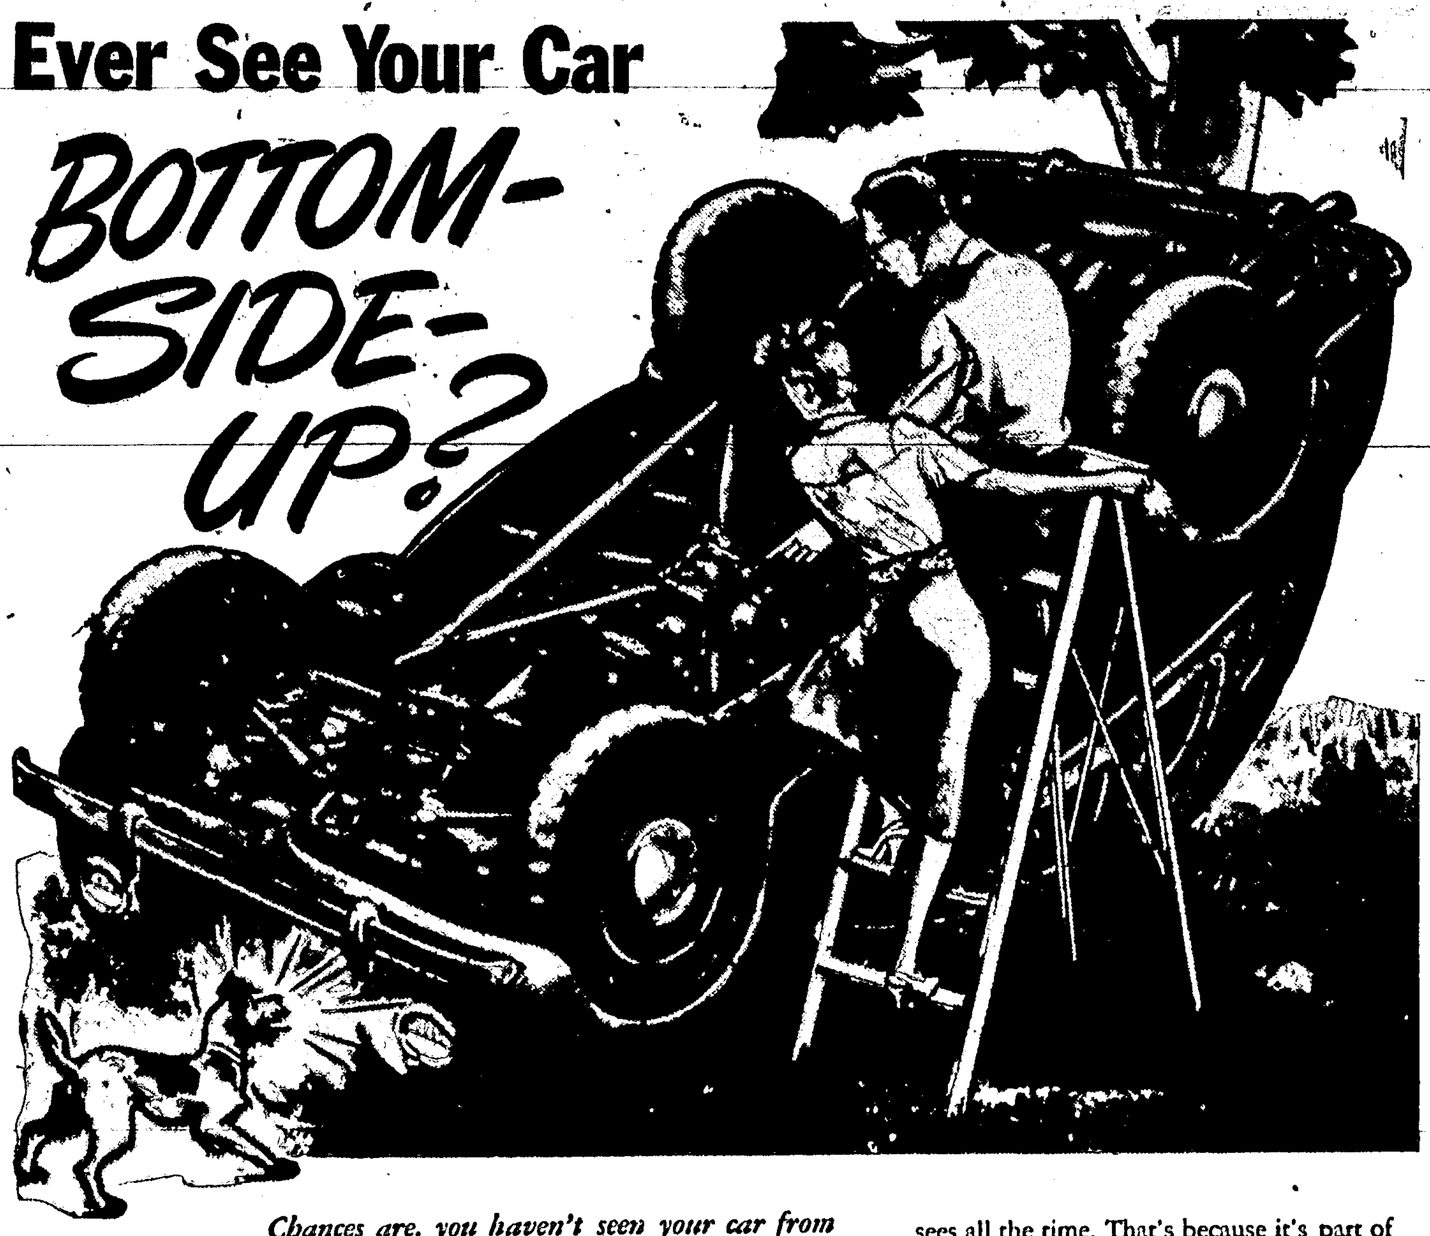
To take advantage of this preferential buying, a veteran must have or be prepared to operate a small business or professional enterprise on his own. This might consist of a commercial, industrial, manufacturing, financial or service business, or it might be a medical, dental or legal office.

On approved applications the veteran can purchase surplus property with 15% down payment. Credit will be extended on the balance for a reasonable period, depending on the type of material purchased. There is a limitation on the type of goods a veteran can buy under this system, for example, he can buy equipment and fittings to operate a store but he cannot buy the merchandise he sells from his shelves. The latter comes under a different regulation.

A few of the items a veteran might be able to buy under this preferential system are: Office and store equipment, trucks, automobiles and motorcycles, tractors and road building machinery, factory machinery, medical and scientific instruments, construction machinery and materials. Many of these items are not now available but probably will be later on.

The veteran and others who wish more information about the policies and procedures that govern the sale of surplus property for the veteran and small businessman may obtain it from any regional or district office of the Smaller War Plants Corporation, said Mr. Bynon. The albuquerque District Office, covering the State of New Mexico is located at 103½ W. Central Avenue, Room 2, Albuquerque.

Ever See Your Car BOTTOM-SIDE-UP?



Chances are, you haven't seen your car from this revealing position since the last time your modest Aunt Nellie lifted her skirts above her knees!

Brother, if you want to know the shocking facts of car-life, just sneak a look at your bus from underneath-up! And don't let a shiny hood fool you. It's what you usually can't see that can hurt you!

For instance, take that spring shackle, crummy and crusted with the mud and grime of miles of dusty roads . . . or that dry, rusty spring . . . or that tattered muffler, just hanging on by a thread . . . or that worn, bone-dry tie-rod.

There's plenty more you could see—plenty your Phillips 66 Service Station Man sees all the time. That's because it's part of his job to look underneath as well as over your car . . . to check and lubricate all those important mechanical parts that are so often out of mind because they're out of sight.

And he knows, probably better than anyone, just how important over-all, underneath lubrication is today! He knows that a loose nut, a broken pin or shackle, can often mean the loss of your car—and it may mean the loss of your life!

An awful lot of cars are going to wind up on the junk heap in the next few months. Don't let yours be one of them! Care for your car for your country! Wherever you see the Orange and Black Phillips 66 sign—drive in and let an expert take that added ounce of precaution which can mean so much to you.

FOR VICTORY...Buy U. S. War Bonds and Stamps

LAS VEGAS, N. M., July—The long felt desire by Highlands University students and faculty for a separate music building was realized this week with the announcement of the purchase of the Christian Church and its parsonage at the corner of Eighth Street and University Avenue.

A complete exterior and interior remodeling of the church building is scheduled to start this fall. Landscaping and repainting walls have priority on the list with the interior remodeling to follow as quickly as time and material are available.

Plans call for a large concert hall, individual lesson rooms and other facilities that will give Highlands students a place to develop their musical talents as fine as any in the State.

The parsonage will be remodeled for home economics demonstration house where senior students in the home economics programs will live for one quarter, and receive their actual practice in home operation. The purchase of the house and the remodeling of it is part of a program to bring Highlands University into the Smith-Hughes program, the practice house being final requirement. . .

Dr. Eyring, Highlands President, in commenting upon the acquisition of the new facilities, pointed out that this was part of a long range plan to bring Highlands University students the very best in buildings, facilities and personnel.

LABOR MONOPOLY MAY BECOME DANGEROUS

WE, AS A PEOPLE, do not approve, or long countenance, monopoly in any line that interferes with the rights of that group that is all of us, the general public. We have monopolies, usually in utility lines that are so controlled and regulated as to guarantee their operation for the public good. Monopolies in commodity production have been outlawed.

A monopoly that is raising a dangerous head insofar as the best interests of the general public is concerned, is that of labor. It is an irresponsible monopoly that, all too frequently, recognizes no rights other than its own. It is accountable to no authority other than the particular group of workers involved in any controversy.

Labor is a service, not a commodity. It is a partner in production. As such it should be accountable as are the other partners of production, capital and management. Capital and management are not permitted to encroach on the rights of the general public, and labor should be in the same category.

The contracts organized labor makes with its production partners, management and capital, are not enforceable because organized labor is not responsible under the law, as it should be. It is guaranteed the rights to make that contract. It can force the observance of the contract on the part of management and capital. Organized labor, too, should be placed in a position where failure to recognize the validity of a contract it has made, failure to abide by the provisions agreed to, would mean paying a penalty.

LABOR SHOULD BECOME PARTNER OF CAPITAL

THE LABOR ORGANIZATIONS that are partners with management and capital in the operation of the railroads recognize the rights of the general public. Under the law they accept, and meet, responsibility for the performance of contract obligations. They do not walk off the job over fancied or trivial grievances.

Unless organized labor in other lines accepts responsibility for the contracts it makes and recognizes the rights of the general public, that general public will rise up in its might and demand of congress such legislation as will curb the strikes caused by internal quarrels, or in violation of contracts. Such strikes jeopardize the rights of the general public, and accomplish nothing of value to labor.

Collective bargaining cannot continue to be only a one-way program. The placing of direct financial responsibility on the union for the breaking of contracts over trivial incidents would help guard the rights and interests of the general public. Politically that general public is the majority. It is of greater importance to the vote seeker than is the minority represented by organized labor. Leaders of organized labor should realize they cannot long maintain an arbitrary monopoly in the labor field.

ADVERTISING DECREASES COST OF PRODUCTION

REXFORD GUY TUGWELL, then assistant secretary of agriculture, now governor of Puerto Rico, was, I believe, the first to denounce advertising as an "economic waste." In doing so he spoke for a coterie of impractical theorists who had delegated to themselves the job of remaking America. No one of them attempted to prove the truth or falsity of that statement. Had they made even the most superficial investigation they would easily have demonstrated that advertising is both a price reducer for the consumer, and a profit increaser for the manufacturer and the distributor.

Advertising has done that by making two or more sales grow where only one grew before. It has divided the overhead, taxes, rents, management, light, fuel and other items, between a larger number of purchasers, and so resulted in lower prices for each as well as leaving a larger net profit on each sale. It has made larger, and consequently more economical, production possible. It has reduced, not increased, the per dollar sales cost. It has paid for itself and passed along a saving in price to every purchaser of an advertised product. A striking example is the automobile. Advertising made possible a far better car at but a fraction of the cost.

THERE ARE THOSE in the United States whom we rightfully credit with being able to see through a not overly clear glass, who are fearful we may have to call upon other nations to rescue us from the Nazi-ism against which we have been fighting, and restore to us the freedom we have enjoyed in the past. State socialism, to which we were drifting, and Nazi-ism are but two of a kind. We were approaching all too close to the edge of State Socialism.

Where Seeing Is Not Believing

This peaceful village isn't—it just doesn't exist—look again, closely this time. You can see that the houses only look like houses and the trees are strictly imitation. About the only real things here are the girls, Suzette Lamoreaux and Elinor Offenbach, who use a "safe" catwalk and stay off the chickenwire farmland of this elaborate camouflage which has been built to protect a vital B-29 plant from threat of possible Japanese air raids. This is the first photograph of this camouflage project—the top of a factory!

HITLER IN PATAGONIA

It may take a long time to find out whether Hitler and his bride Eva Braun escaped to Patagonia. The country is a series of vast Nazi-owned ranches, where German is spoken almost exclusively and where Hitler could be hidden easily and successfully for years.

The ranches in this southern part of Argentina cover thousands of acres and have been under Nazi management for generations. Because of absolute German control, it would be impossible for any non-German to penetrate the area to make a thorough investigation as to Hitler's whereabouts.

Along the coast of Patagonia, many Germans own land which contains harbors deep enough for submarine landings. And if submarines could get to Argentine-Uruguayan waters from Germany, as they definitely did, there is no reason why they could not go a little farther south to Patagonia. Also there is no reason why Hitler couldn't have been on one of them.

Note—On December 15, 1943, this column reported that "Hitler's gang has been working to build up a place of exile in Argentina in case of defeat. After the fall of Stalingrad and then Tunisia, they began to see defeat staring them in the face. That was their cue to move in on Argentina." The same column also cited chapter and verse regarding German-trained officials who ruled the new Argentine dictatorship. At San Francisco, Nelson Rockefeller and Jimmy Dunn insisted that the U. S. A. recognize Argentina.

Note 2—If it ever comes to identifying Hitler, Dr. Robert Kempner, former German police official now living in Lansdowne, Pa., has the answers. Kempner, who was in charge of the investigation after Hitler's beer hall putsch, says that Hitler's right thumb is abnormally long, his right ear pointed on top, and his mouth is very receding. Kempner has turned over his data to U. S. authorities.

MYSTERIOUS PEACE FEELERS

It's being kept very hush-hush, but something important is brewing behind the scenes regarding peace with Japan. Highest officials won't say a word about it, not even to some of their cabinet colleagues.

However, peace feelers which have come from the Japs have been much more than feelers—despite Secretary Grew's denials. One of them was debated by the combined chiefs of staff for more than a week. It proposed that the Japs withdraw from Korea and Manchuria and all China if (1) they could keep the emperor, and (2) they would not be invaded.

Meanwhile, Joe Grew and the army and navy have prepared a directive outlining the minimum terms we would accept from the Japs. This is one of the most highly guarded documents in the government. However, it can be stated on high authority that the Grew peace plan would permit the Japs to retain Emperor Hirohito.

It can also be stated that there is considerable difference of opinion inside the administration regarding the Grew memorandum, and some of his colleagues inside the state department, including Assistant Secretary Will Clayton and Assistant Secretary Dean Acheson, are vigorously opposed.

The whole situation is in a state of flux, and anything can happen overnight.

INSIDE JAPAN

¶ Jap workers are now being drilled for home defense at noon hours, some even using pointed sticks as spears.

¶ The Japanese railroads are being torn to pieces by B-29s. Rail junctions are clogged for days before traffic can clear through them.

¶ Jap prisoners taken in Burma, Indo-China and the Dutch East Indies haven't the ghost of an idea as to what is happening in Japan. They can't believe that U. S. forces are steaming close to the Jap mainland, still believe the Jap navy will reopen supply lines to the South Pacific.

¶ There is considerable debate inside the U. S. high command regarding the necessity for landing in China. Some think a Chinese invasion is necessary to protect our invasion flank when we land in the main Jap islands. Others believe a Chinese invasion would only use tight shipping and result in unnecessary casualties. The easiest way to aid China, they argue, is to defeat Japan quickly, not get bogged down with a long fight on the Chinese mainland.

¶ The entire Jap administrative system has broken down. The Japs have now decentralized their government so every area has its own war production board, its own local defense system, even its own local tax collections.

¶ We have also mined Jap harbors so Jap merchant vessels can hardly get through. . . . Despite the claims of cleaning up northern Luzon, stiff fighting continues. The Japs are beaten but they don't know it. They are still making things tough for MacArthur's men—despite official communiqués.

THE STORY THUS FAR: Amos Croy and his wife settled on a farm in Missouri where Homer was born. Homer was the first Croy to finish high school and college. In New York he worked on a woman's magazine, wrote a novel, free-lanced, married and had a son and daughter. After the death of his father and mother, Homer and his family went to France, where Homer Jr. died suddenly. A relative got into serious trouble and Homer mortgaged the farm; he already had a mortgage on his home. He wrote a dealer training film for an oil company and paid the mortgages. His play, "Family Honeymoon," headed for success, turned sour when censored by Variety.

CHAPTER XXIII

Now that I am getting along in my story, I am appalled by the number of events I've left out and I see how futile it is to try to tell an honest story of one's own life. It can't be done. For instance, there is the matter of how many things to put in it. If I tried to put in all, William Harlowe Briggs, of Harper & Brothers, would call me to that sixth floor room with its long table and holy atmosphere, and, in no time at all, would have me down on my knees, sobbing.

There is the matter of selection. But how can one tell what is significant? For instance, I published for a year a magazine for writers called The Magazine Maker. I sold it at a profit, but have wished many times I hadn't let it go. How I would love to have it now when the so-called magazines for writers are so nearly trash. Another story I would like to tell is of my experiences in the first World War. I was with the YMCA, assigned as liaison man with the Signal Corps. And how, for a time, I wrote the radio version of "Show Boat," with Lanny Ross as the star. And I would like to tell of my days with Chic Sale and how he wrote "The Specialist," and of how Earl Derr Biggers created the character of Charlie Chan, the Chinese detective. Doggone it, I will stop and tell that Earl had visited Honolulu, but the idea for Charlie had not come to him. One day, long after his return to New York, he went to the newspaper reading room of the New York Public Library, and happened to see a copy of the Honolulu Star-Bulletin. As he was reading it, he saw mention of a Chinese detective connected with the police department. Then and there Charlie Chan was born. Later, when Earl returned to Honolulu, he found that a local Chinese on the police force was receiving great acclaim for being the Chinese detective Earl had based his stories on. The two were photographed together. But Earl didn't tell him that the original Charlie Chan was a newspaper clipping.

Oh yes! I do want to put in that I was elected secretary of the Authors' League of America to serve with Elmer H. Davis who was president; yes, the Elmer who went to Washington. But, such are the vagaries of one's mind, it was not until several days after my election that I recalled the first reception where I seized my hat and escaped out a side way.

During these years I have come to some conclusions about the art of writing. The chiefest is that it cannot be taught, and that anyone who takes a dollar from you on the promise of making a better writer of you deserves tar and feathers at dawn. And that if you have to encourage anyone to be a writer, you had far better tell him the field is not for him. A real writer is born, and the world does not hold so much discouragement that it can get him down.

And it seems to me the best qualities to be found in writing are sincerity and truth. And, quickly, I want to add a third—simplicity. All my life I have been striving for simplicity, but I have far from attained it. Sometimes, when I have had the courage to turn back through some of my writings, I could hardly find what I had been driving at. For the most part I do not read my "stuff" over after it's printed. It would be just too discouraging. I write it as best I can, and as I feel it when it is flowing, and, like a cow when she has weaned her calf, let the thing shift for itself.

Well, here are some of the beliefs I now have in my personal credo, although—goodness knows!—I may heave them out of the window inside of a year. The fatalities among cherished beliefs are astonishing!

I believe that most people do the best they can, considering their limitations and their prejudices and the toll their mental limitations have levied upon them.

I believe that kindness is just about the finest thing in the world. And, it seems to me, that kindness has its roots in understanding.

I believe that most people would rather be kind than cruel, but that their animal inheritance is just below the surface and is the cause of much of the intolerable ferocity that human beings so often exhibit toward each other.

I believe there is no secret of happiness and that complete happiness is an impossible goal. But that one can get a great deal of satisfaction as one goes along by not expecting too much and by squeezing dry all the little pleasures.

I believe in the innate dignity of human beings and I hold this to be one of their finest qualities.

I believe no one is free from worry, and that the person who is happiest and who accomplishes most is the one who spends his time and vitality doing instead of chafing.

I believe that most people hunger for approval as the roots of a flower do for water.

I believe that praise is just about the most powerful stimulus in all the world. And, unfortunately, about the least employed.

I believe that every person is part devil and part pretty fine. And that we must accept these phases as they come.

In all the world is there a pleasure so completely satisfying as going back to the very land you were born on, and walking across it and just looking at it? But I must tell you it's not all pleasure, for every joy has a few stickers, on the theory of the rose, no doubt. You labor over a cornerpost and when you have it finished you're proud of it; there it stands, straight and tall and firm. Then you come back, in no time at all, and it looks like the start of a scarecrow. Or a watergap you've taken pride in has been swept away and there's only a bundle of loose wires and somebody's hencoop.

Spide and I walk over the farm.

I seem always to be going home alone, for aloof the old farm doesn't mean much to the other members of my family. My wife has seen it only once. Carol has never seen it. Some day it will be hers, I suppose. I wonder what will happen . . .

This is a sample of my homecoming. I get off the train and there is Spide standing on the platform where my father used to wait. He heaves my suitcases into his Chrysler—no buggy now—and we start uptown to the Square. I glance up at the gilt hands on the clock and my mind shoots back to the days when I used to drive by in the hack and stare up at them as if they were the Hanging Gardens of Babylon. The clock suddenly bongs out the hour, and there is a throbbing in my throat. Why is it that an old clock can make a baby of you?

Cars are parked around the Square. But what I think of is the battle that once raged there. Yes, the battle of the hitch racks . . . when Pa had said, if they tore down the hitch racks, he'd trade in Wilcox. The farmers had won then, but there had been other and later battles and the merchants had finally triumphed. After a time, Pa was back trading again as if no blood had ever been shed. It just about shakes your faith in war.

We pass the north side of the Square where Moses Nusbaum's store was. Today there is no Jewish family in town. But at the State Teachers' College (which has come since those early days) are three Jewish refugee students.

My eye darts to the courthouse steps and I think of the heartbreaks they've seen—the days during the depression when farms were sold by the sheriff, and men and wives and children saw them go to the insurance companies. That shakes your faith, too.

We pass the Methodist church where I hid in the areaway. But the years have helped me in at least one particular. I am no longer afraid of my fellow man. I like him.

We pass the Blue Moon cafe. In it are farmers, eating, and I think of the time we used to eat our cheese and crackers in the back of a grocery store. Yes, times change. Also I think of the time in New York when I stole the girl's tip. But these farmers, when they've finished, will plunk down a tip and think nothing of it. Yes, times change.

I pass the house where my father lay like a shadow in the pillows and asked me to pare his fingernails. I think of the featherbed . . . Spide says, "You didn't catch cold on the train, did you?"

And I say, "I don't think so. I guess I got some of that train smoke."

"That Diesel smoke's bad," Spide says.

Here, alone, Phebe lived until eight-four was upon her. One day she went out to hang her featherbed on the clothesline for an airing; the bench she was standing on tipped and threw her on the ground. Bones were broken, and in St. Francis Hospital she lay waiting for them to mend. But before they could do so, pneumonia came and my second mother was no more.

The water tower jumps up ahead of me, and my mind goes back to the time that Dave and I clumped by it twice a day; and to the time I sold its story to Jesse L. Lasky. Oh boy! I was a businessman that day.

We pass the white schoolhouse and I think of my greatest triumph. When I won the prize in spelling—Pilgrim's Progress'—certainly the dreariest book ever written. I think of what happened next year when a new teacher came among us and offered a prize for the one who turned in the best showing for nine months of spelling. I won the prize that year, too. The same damned book. It just about soured me on trying to do my best.

Studying was hard work in those days. We moved our lips and whispered the words of the book to ourselves in such an intense effort of concentration that when we were going full tilt, the schoolroom sounded like a hive of bees. One day a girl, much older than I, who was going to the seminary in town, came out to our house to stay over Saturday and Sunday. She brought her books along so she could study and be ready for her schoolwork Monday morning. After a while she sat down in a chair by the window and got her book ready. To my astonishment, I saw she wasn't moving her lips. She was just sitting there holding the book and looking at it. Now and then she turned a page. I stared and stared at the mysterious ways of higher education.

Our car goes down a swale and I see the exact spot—at least I think it is the exact spot—where I had the only fist fight of my life. Where I actually struck a person. I wonder if Harlen Kennedy remembers it.

I look down the draw and think of the white weasel that I trapped just about there—the one the One Horse Farmer told the world about.

The car pulls into the drivelot and the door to the house opens and Nellie Logan (Spide's wife) comes out, and their son Lloyd Logan and his wife Opal, and their children, Robert and Kenneth (Spide and Nellie's grandchildren). They are the ones who run the Croy farm. I am home. My feet are on the very soil.

After chatting a while, Spide and I walk out over the farm, just as Pa and I used to do. There's the very place Jim Vert used to come with his dehorning chute and his long thin-bladed, hump-backed saw. I can—so potent is memory—again almost see the blood spurting out on Jim's hands.

There is no longer anybody like Mr. Shannon, the neighborhood man-of-all-jobs. The farms have grown larger; no one would dream, now, of trying to make a living off forty acres. When we need a man to work by the day, we go to town and pick him up there. Usually he's a pretty poor worker. We miss Mr. Shannon.

And there's where the tree stood with the turtledove nest in its arms. The turtledove I killed with a stone—and saw the dirt on its dead eyes and, later, saw the starving young ones fall out and be no more. When my friends tell gory hunting stories, I have my own ideas running in my head.

And here's the spot where the drummer for the nursery company offered Pa five dollars a day just to drive him around and introduce him to his neighbors. And the spot where Pa refused. It was the first time I ever realized Pa was doomed always to be poor.

As I walk I realize more and more that the farm and I are inseparable; that whatever is deep in me came from its roots.

There is a similar pattern between us. The farm has been up and it has been down; and God knows I have!

The black Aberdeen-Angus are doing fine, and so are the Hampshires. I turn to Spide. "I see you have some Shropshires."

"Lloyd thought he'd try out some."

"Well," I say with the manner of an expert delivering the findings of a lifetime, "don't be too cold on them. They're tricky."

Going home is a time of adventures. And no two times are the adventures ever the same, as no two days in our lives are ever the same. Once I arrived the day before a very exciting time; at least, it's exciting to us. The Women's National Corn Husking Contest which originated in our county and which, until the war, was held every year. The National Corn Husking Contest was originated by Henry A. Wallace when he was Secretary of Agriculture, but we started the Women's! It was a gay occasion, with cars from everywhere and newsreel cameras dashing here and there for "shots." At least it was considered a gay occasion by the grinning visitors who piled out of the cars and watched the farm women buckle on their pegs.

by GRANTLAND RICE

AL WESSON'S story on "Charley Paddock, the Fastest Human," in the "Best Sports Stories of 1944," recalls a Paddock yarn I have never seen in print. The marine captain, killed in a plane crash while on war duty, told me some years ago about the most interesting split-second of his long career as a sprinter.

Grantland Rice

You may recall that Paddock on several occasions had run the hundred in 9⅗ seconds. Also that he was the first of the extended flock to cover this same distance in 9.5. I asked him one day why it was that being able to tie the record time and again, he had been unable at some high peak spot to beat it.

So Charley told his story, which makes one wonder whether or not nature hasn't set a certain limit on what the human frame can stand.

"I was running that afternoon," he said, "against a strong field and I know I was never in better condition. I had the feeling before the race that this was to be my big day—the day where I would set a new world mark, possibly around 9⅗ seconds, or even a shade faster. I had that record mark in my mind before the race was run. I was thinking of it while waiting for the starter's pistol.

"At the bark of the gun I was away faster than usual. At the 50 yard mark I knew I had made the fastest time of my career for that distance. I increased my speed on the way home and at the 75 or 80 yard mark I could see that 9⅗ or perhaps 9⅓ all ready for track history. Then a queer thing happened. at this point I suddenly felt my leg ligaments and leg muscles begin to quiver, as if they were being torn loose from the bone. In that split second I caught the flash that if I continued this same pace I would probably finish as a cripple.

"So I called off any continuance of full pressure and eased down. Even then I again ran the distance in 9⅗, where I threw away two-fifths of a second in those last 20 or 25 yards. I found later, however, that my judgment had been correct, for I was sore and lame in the calves of both legs for a week. The speed and the stamina were there, but the physical structure wasn't for that pace."

Gehrig's Hard Luck

Much along the same line, which proves again how difficult it is to crack certain marks, is Lou Gehrig's case. Here was another star who came within a half turn of setting one of the greatest records ever written by the ash.

Up to June 3, 1932, only two men in baseball history had ever hit four home runs in one game. The first quadruple blast came from the bat of Bobby Lowe of Boston in May, 1894. Two years later big Ed Delehanty of Philadelphia, one of the great hitters of all time, plastered four out of the park to tie Lowe's record.

Sixteen years later Lou Gehrig had his big chance. Facing the strong Athletic team of that season, Gehrig hit a home run his first four times at bat. He was now on even terms with Lowe and Delehanty, with another chance left. On his final appearance Lou caught one solidly and squarely on the snout. It was the longest of his five hard smashes, but in place of traveling slightly to left or right, the big blow was caught in deep center against the fence.

It was a matter of raw luck that kept Luis Angel Firpo, the Wild Bull of the Pampas, from putting across the greatest ring sensation of all time. Few recall that the ring had been lifted that night at least 2 feet above normal. This move had been made to give the big crowd a better chance to see the fight. The drop from the ring to the press seats was a deep one. I recall saying that I'd hate to have 220-pound Firpo fall across my neck from the lifted plateau.

It so happened that when Dempsey came through the ropes his body fell directly at Jack Lawrence, who instinctively put up both hands to protect himself. If Dempsey had toppled a foot to the right or a foot to the left the champion would almost certainly have gone all the way down to the press rail — or at least so far down that he would never have had the slightest chance to get back through the ropes in time.

It is by such narrow margins that sport history is often written.

College vs. Pro Football

Greasy Neale, coach of the Philadelphia Eagles, a team that lost only one game last fall, insists that his high-flying Eagles would have beaten either Army or Navy last fall. Coach Steve Owen of the Giants doesn't agree.

"Army had too much youth and speed, plus a lot of power," Steve said.

"We have too much experience—just as much speed and just as much power," Neale counters.

Pika, 4-Legged Creature, Excellent Ventriloquist

Because it has the power of actually throwing its "voice," the pika holds the honor of being the only mammal in the world able to employ the deceiving art of ventriloquism.

This strange little creature, which resembles a cross between a guinea-pig and a rabbit, makes use of its voice-throwing powers when attacked by eagles and hawks. It will disappear in a thatched mass of vegetation, or in crevices in weathered cliffs, and emit squeaking sounds that are baffling almost beyond description. Each time the shrill cry seems to come from a different point. Its puzzled enemies are usually compelled to go away hungry and disgusted.

As if the wonderfully developed voice - throwing faculty were not enough, Mother Nature has given the pika the added advantage of protective coloration, and it blends so well with its surroundings that it is very difficult to get a good picture of this peculiar creature, nature photographers say.

NEW RATION BOOKS TO BE ISSUED NEXT DECEMBER

War Ration Book Five, "smaller than a dollar bill" and containing just half as many stamps as the last book issued will be distributed through the public schools in December, Chester Bowles, OPA administrator, announced today.

At the same time the new "A" gasoline ration book will be issued. Distribution will take place at school houses, or other public buildings through the nation from Dec. 3 through Dec. 15.

OPA district offices will fix the exact time for each local area.

The new "A" gasoline books will go into use Dec. 22, and war ration book V will be used soon after the first of the year for food rationing and shoes.

Mr. Bowles said: "The U. S. Office of Education has assured us that America's school teachers, who have become experienced hands at distributing ration books quickly and efficiently, again can be counted on to do this distribution job as a patriotic service to 130,000,000 fellow citizens.

"Practically every man, woman and child in the country, including military personnel who live at home, is eligible for ration book 5; about 23,000,000 motorists are entitled to receive the new "A" gasoline book.
