HEALTH CRUSADERS FIGHT OFF ILLNESS

Twenty-Five Thousand School Children Just in Modern Tournament for Better Health—Seal Sale Finances Crusade.

The days of chivalry have returned in New Mexico. Throughout the schools of the state, there are 25,000 Crusaders who are combating the demons of ill health and preventable disease. They are enrolled in the Modern Health Crusade, conducted by the New Mexico Public Health Association in most of the public and many of the private schools of the state.

The Modern Health Crusade is a system of practical health instruction depending for its success upon the formation of health habits rather than the memorization of mere rules. The child is regularly enrolled as a Crusader and is assigned eleven health chores which must be done daily. If seventy-five per cent are done for two weeks, the child becomes a page in health chivalry; at five weeks, a squire; at ten weeks, a knight; and at fifteen weeks, a knight bannered. Pins and buttons symbolic of success are awarded at the end of the various periods.

Endorsed by the National Educational Association, and the state department of education, the Crusade has been widely adopted in New Mexico. All of the counties except Taos, McKinley and Sierra have pupils enrolled. San Miguel county leads in the point of numbers with 3,076 in rural schools only. Union is second with 2,870 in the rural schools, 500 in Clayton and 250 in Des Moines. In Colfax, there are 520 Crusaders in the rural schools, 761 in Dawson and 763 in Raton, making a total of 2,050 for the county. The city schools of Deming, Clovis, Carlsbad, Artesia, Roswell, Santa Rosa, Lordsburg, Silver City, Lordsburg, Carrizozo, Portales, Socorro, Magdalena, Raton, Dawson, Des Moines and Belen in a special contest.

Chore charts printed in Spanish have been ordered for districts principally Spanish-speaking. The blind children at the New Mexico school for the blind at Alamogordo are also enrolled. The Crusade is financed entirely by the New Mexico Public Health Association from funds received by the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals.

ATHLETES VICTIMS OF TUBERCULOSIS

Many Shining Lights of Ring, Track, Diamond and Air Succumb to Dread Disease Which Is No Respector of Persons.

The recent deaths from tuberculosis of a number of athletes, each celebrated for his startling prowess in his chosen field in the world of sport, give proof that the disease is no respecter of persons and are regarded by the medical fraternity as conclusive evidence that eternal vigilance must be exercised if perfect health is to be enjoyed.

Rodman Law, dare-devil aviator whose death-defying stunts have thrilled hundreds of thousands during the past few years, is among the latest victims of tuberculosis. For years he defied death in every form, yet a few days ago he died after a wasting illness at a hospital in Greenville, S. C.

The list of athletic champions who have recently died of tuberculosis includes "Terry" McGovern, who once wore the crown as a lightweight prize-fighter, "Mike" Murphy, for years trainer of the track and field teams of the University of Pennsylvania and "Cy" Seymour, once the star of the New York National League baseball team, the Giants. Even those who were once physically fit fall victims of the Great White Plague when they permit their resisting power to be lowered.

The New Mexico Public Health Association, engaged in stamping out tuberculosis in the "Sunshine State", must have $50,000 if the work now outlined for 1920 is to be done. It can get that amount only through the sale of Red Cross Christmas seals and public health bonds in the drive between December 1 and 10. As every county and practically every school district is thoroughly organized for the drive, the officials of the association believe the desired goal will be reached.

Suggestion for Mother's Letter.

Son of Mine:

They're sending you home to me at last. Through all these months of waiting and longing I've been wearing a star for you and holding my head high and thinking wonderful thoughts about you. I've watched you through ocean mists and dreamed anxious dreams. Yes, and cried a little, too, but not when people could see.

And now you're coming home. Oh, it seems too good to be true. I've just read your letters again. They say so much more than you ever thought when you were writing them. Just happenings—that's all most of the things you wrote about were to you. But to me they said you were facing the biggest thing in life, facing it bravely, as I should want my son to face it. You were offering your body and your soul for a thing bigger than you or me or America.

When I wrote to you I tried to write cheerful, encouraging letters, because I did not want you to go into battle feeling that I was holding you back from the big sacrifice. It's only now, when the fighting is over, that I can let down a little and be just your mother, just the woman who loves you better than anything else in the world and is so glad to know you're coming back to her that she doesn't care who sees her cry.

Perhaps for some of the boys who have stood with you so finely through these trials the fighting is not yet all over. The fighting I mean is that between a man and himself, and for many of them this will be the hardest battle of all. During the long days and nights of waiting before they can start for home thoughts will creep into their minds which will be hard to resist. There will be times after all these months of action when the longing for change and for the companionship of women may lead them into associations which will spoil their homecoming and cause them shame and humiliation, and even, perhaps, make them unfit to receive the love that awaits them here.

You, dearest boy, are just as human as your comrades, and feelings like these may come to you too. I don't ask you to crush them. They are natural, and they only prove that war has failed to dry up the well spring of your emotions. I ask you only to recognize them when they come and to control them with the fine strength you have gained while fighting for the ideals and principles of America. Just remember that many joyous years of life are ahead of you and that the risk of spoiling them and the love that will fill them is too tremendous to run for a short hour of seeming pleasure.

Many of the boys who will come home with you have no mothers to write to them. Some of them may think that no one cares what they do. But somebody does care. America cares. And the girls they will marry some day care. And, oh, the difference it will make in their lives if they will just remember that there is always somebody, always!

Help them to remember. Help them to come home clean and fine. Don't let them spoil everything now. They have been so splendid. If you think this letter will help them give it to them. If they have no mothers let me be their mother until they have come back and taken the high places that await them here. Tell them to write to me. How I should treasure their letters!

And, of course, you will write to me. Just say that you understand—that you know why I have written this letter. Then I can wait months—yes, even years—knowing that you will come home to me as fine and clean as you were when I sent you away to camp so long ago.

KILL OFF PREDATORY BEASTS

Bidding Ranges of Ravaging Rogues Results in Saving More Than $5,000,000 Worth of Stock.

It is estimated that the bureau of biological survey of the United States department of agriculture is saving annually over $5,000,000 worth of live stock for the ranchers of the Rocky mountain section as a result of its intensive campaign against predatory animals, which has been in progress during the past three years. During this period 60,428 coyotes, 8,085 bobcats, 1,829 wolves, 591 mountain lions, and 107 bears have been trapped or shot, and many other animals have been poisoned. The income from the sale of pelts, of animals killed by government hunters to protect live stock during the last year will aggregate approximately $100,000. This work is of special importance, because the cattle and sheep which are already on the range producing meat, wool, and leather are afforded protection, and thus the actual sources of these essential commodities are being conserved for market. Furthermore, clearing the range of predatory animals is making conditions more favorable for stocking the grazing areas to full capacity and for improving the quality of the breeding stock.—United States Department of Agriculture.

RECALLS OLD ROME

Ancient Coin of Surpassing Historic Interest.

Two Thousand Years Since It Came From the Mint, What a Story of Adventure This Token Could Tell!

A coin 2,000 years old, which may have reposed in the treasure box of a Roman senator, passed from hand to hand in the dice games of members of the Roman imperial guard, been tossed to the rabble by a patrician as he passed through the streets on his way to the baths, or thrown to a victorious gladiator by one of the vestal virgins, now is in the possession of Arthur S. Hibler, United States immigrant inspector at New Orleans. On its way to Mexico, where it was obtained by its present owner, the coin may have been carried as a keepsake by one of the Spanish conquerors and exchanged for the gold and jewels of the Aztecs. Two thousand years afford ample time to pass through a few adventures.

The coin is valued by Mr. Hibler, not only for its age, but for the queer history attached to his gaining possession of it. While he claims he is not superstitious, he admits he regards the coin as a good luck talisman. The piece was sold to him by a Mexican, who wished to cross the border at Brownsville, Tex., and had not enough money for his toll. To pay his way across the international bridge he offered the coin with several others to Mr. Hibler, asserting that it had a strange significance and a blessing attached to it. It had been given him, he said, by the mother of a member of Villa's band, who had been murdered in a cafe brawl. As he lay dying, he had begged the man to take a handkerchief, stained with his life blood, to his mother. The Mexican had sworn to fulfill the trust, and delivered the handkerchief to the old woman. She opened the corner of the handkerchief, which was knotted tightly, and took out several coins. Then she retired into an inner room and, returned, placed a small silvery disk in the messenger's hand, saying it was a talisman that would mean much to its possessor.

The coin is small and white, resembling a modern United States dime in size and color. On its front is a relief of a Roman emperor, with the inscription: "Domitian VIII, Imp. Caesar," and several other characters which are indistinguishable. On the reverse side is what seems to be a reproduction of the temple erected in Jerusalem by Solomon. It is worn thin by the touch of the millions of hands in which it must have rested.

"I have no doubt that it is genuine," Mr. Hibler said. "But how did it come into the possession of the Villista bandit? Well—quien sabe?"

The Tale of an Egg.

Frank Lafferty, a captain of police at Muncie, once answered a call into at night from a restaurant whose owner asked that a drunken man be taken from the place.

"It was the strangest case of intoxication I ever dealt with," said Lafferty, relating the experience. "In the restaurant I found sitting on a high stool at the counter an elderly man who was weeping into his plate containing the remnants of what evidently had been a hard boiled egg.

"'What's the matter?' asked the soggy individual and he answered between choking sobs 'I weep to think that by this act of cruelty in devouring this egg I have deprived some poor innocent chicken of the right of being born!'

"And do you know," Lafferty continued, "the only way we could comfort the poor fellow and get him out of there was to tell him it was not that kind of an egg."—Indianapolis News.

German Black List in Peru.

Publications in Peru do not believe in soon forgetting the attitude of Germany or letting the Hun go unpunished. Newspapers there carry a complete list of merchants who showed anything like a friendly disposition to Germany throughout the war. It is known as the "Official Allied Black List." The boycott of these merchants includes trade with any of the employees of the firms. The notice at the top of the list includes this warning:

"Any transaction with an employee of a firm on this list is naturally the same as a transaction with the firm in its own name and will have the same consequences."

United States Life Insurance.

The people of the United States carry more than $40,000,000,000 of life insurance, the largest record of any country in the world. Of this $4,000,000,000 is government insurance for soldiers and sailors.—Leslie's.

NO GENERAL RULE POSSIBLE

Matter of Proper Amount of Bodily Exercise Must Be Left to Discretion of Individual.

"It is an axiom that mental excellence is to a very considerable extent dependent upon a man's physical condition," declared Secretary of State Robert Lansing. "It is equally true that rules of health, except the most general, depend in large measure upon the individual and upon his peculiar needs.

"If I were asked to lay down rules which might be applied generally," continued the American premier, "I would embody them in the phrase 'More fresh air and less food.' How much bodily exercise should be taken and its character depend upon the individual, his physical condition and, to an extent, on his tastes. Of course, exercise is, as a rule, beneficial, but it ought to be a pleasure to the one taking it if he would get the best results.

"It may sound like heresy, but I sometimes wonder whether exercise, when it is not a diversion, is really worth while. Certainly the mind is not rested if it rebels against certain forms of physical training which are being taken, and recreation for the mind of one engaged in intellectual pursuits is, in my opinion, one of the most essential purposes of exercise of the muscles.

"I believe, however, as I have said, that fresh air is one of the great restoratives, and the fact that exercise is generally taken in the open is one of its chief benefits."—From "Secretary Lansing's Story of His Health and Energy," by Richard M. Winans in Physical Culture.

Impressive Tribute Paid by English Poet to the Giant Redwoods of California.

John Masefield, the English poet, contributed the following impression of the giant trees of California to the Reveille, a new paper devoted to disabled sailors and soldiers: "They are not like trees; they are like spirits. The glens in which they grow are not like places; they are like haunts of centaurs or of the gods. The trees rise up with dignity, power and majesty, as though they had been there forever. They are the oldest living things. Even the young ones were two thousand or three thousand years old, and many of these grow from the visible ruins of others, which may have been saplings seven thousand years ago. Sometimes to cathedrals they feels the awe and the majesty of columns. These columns were more impressive than anything of stone; these columns were alive. They were more like gods than anything I have ever seen. They seemed to be thinking. One felt that presently they would march to wipe out everything mean or base or petty here on earth. The stars shone about their heads like chaplets."

W. G. COWAN,
Nov. 8 – Dec. 6 Receiver.

Capitan has the best country and the largest trade trade Territory of any town in the county and needs more and better roads so more people will come to town and do business with us as well as being an advantage to every body as well as increasing property values.

The Field & Farm is published at Denver and Lute Wilcox an early Pioneer is one of its contributors of interesting articles. He is writing a series of articles entitled "Stories of the Early West" and in one of them he says that the early Pioneers of nearly one hundred years ago in laying out the famous Santa Fe Trail from Kansas City, Mo., to Santa Fe, N. M., that without compass and with the natural eye they laved out this famous wagon road with such a small percentage of grade and so straight it didn't vary overseven miles from a straight line of a thousand miles from K. C. to Santa Fe and that Engineers have survoved eleven times and gave up saying it was straightest line and less percentage of grade that could have been selected. A railroad now practically traverses this well known trail.

We noticed Uncle Bob Hunnicutt the well known ranchman and his son Bee, on the streets of Capitan Thursday. Uncle Bob meets his friends with a smile which of course pleases them. Long faces are very near as bad as the "flu" and Mr. Hunnicutt does not believe in either.

Dr. Price seems to be on the go now days. Quite a little sickness over the country.

Mack Blackard and his father-in-law Mr. Watkins and daughter Miss Watkins, were Friday. Mr. Blackard is making application to prove up on his land.

The Editor is still sick and the paper late again yes we cannot help it, so please hold your patience. The Junior Bigger is awfully busy getting out this religious Weekly.
