Roswell, New Mexico.

A Bank for Capitan.

Capitan people have reason to congratulate themselves on the fact that they are to have a bank. Mr. A. H. Harvey, a banker from Urick, Missouri, arrived here last Saturday to investigate this location for a bank, and after talking the matter over with a number of the citizens of the town and surrounding country, a canvass of the situation was commenced and the amount necessary to organize a State Bank with a capital stock of $25,000 has been subscribed, and the bank is assured. Mr. Harvey left this afternoon for his home in Missouri to close out his business there and will return to Capitan in four or five week, when the stock will be paid in, the charter obtained and the bank opened for business. Mr. Harvey brought with him letters of recommendation from two of the strongest banks in Kansas City, and is undoubtedly the man our people have been hunting for a long time. The people in the country, farmers and ranchmen, took hold of the enterprise with a readiness that could hardly have been expected, which certainly indicates that it will be paying institution from the begining. Among the heaviest local stockholders are Lewis England 15 shares, John L. Stewart 10 shares, Fred Pidgeon 10 shares, W. H. Fisher 5 shares, Mrs. S. T. Gray 5 shares, W. O. Norman 4 shares, and the other subscriptions by home people run from 1 to 3 shares. A bank at Capitan will be a great convenience to the people making it their trading and shipping point, which embraces an area twice as large any two counties in Texas.

Lincoln County High School Interests Threatened.

A report has reached Capitan that Representative Ira O. Wetmore, from this county, is making a move in the Legislature, or is contemplating making one, that will effect the Lincoln County High School interest. If this report be true, it is certainly an unfair move on Mr. Wetmore's part, as it evidently means that the County High School would be moved from Capitan to Carrizozo. It is right that Carrizozo should have a High School if she can get it by the consent of the people, but the County High School was established at Capitan by a large majority vote of the people and should be let alone. Mr. Wetmore lives in Carrizozo and has interests there, but is not supposed to represent that town's interest only. Had it been known that he contemplated any such a move, he would not have been nominated nor elected. In fact, Capitan's vote elected him, simply because had once lived among these people, and he should not now betray their confidence. We hope legislative action will be delayed in this matter until Mr. Wetmore's constituents can be heard from.

A very attractive line of Box Paper have been received at the Sunshine Pharmacy.

An Unfair Apportionment.

The proposed county bond issue for the improvement of roads is one that deserves investigation by every voter in the county before casting his vote on that question. The way the apportionment has been made it is unfair to the tax-payers of several parts of the county, as the figures presented in this article will show. Good roads are very much needed, but the public funds required to put them in good condition should be equitably divided and expended where most needed. The following apportionment is taken from the proclamation calling the election and making provisions for holding it:

The Carrizozo-Corona Road	$4,000.00
The Carrizozo - White Oak - Jicarilla Road	1,000.00
The Lincoln - Arabela Road	3,000.00
The Devil's Canon Road	1,500.00
The Gavland Canon-Alto - Pngus - Nogal Road	3,500.00
From Angus to the Capitan-Nogal Road	500.00

The remainder of the fund of $55,000.00 is to be divided equally among the following roads:

The road from Picacho Hill to Lincoln;

The road from Lincoln by way of Capitan to Carrizozo.

The road from Hondo up the Ruidoso to the Mescalero Indian Reservation.

From this apportionment of the fund, it will be seen that the roads leading back into the rural and farming districts will get $13,500. The remainder, $41,500, is to be expended on the two thoroughfares running through the county, one of them known as the Roswell and Carrizozo road, and the other known as the Roswell and Almogordo road, running up the Ruidoso.

This paper does not object to the amount any one of the roads in the country districts are to get; not a single one of them will get too much; some of them will not get near enough. Take for instance, the road from Parsons to Capitan, which will get $500. It should have at least $5,000 to give the farmers a such road as they need to haul their products to market. The Alto road is given more, but not enoufih to make it a good. There are others that deserve more than they will get.

Then, there are roads in the county which are not mentioned in the appropriation. There is a large scope of country on the north side of the Capitan mountains, extendiding from the White Caks country all the way to the Chavez county line, which takes in Paradise Valley, the Encinoso country, the Cactus Flat country, and the Meek and Arabela countries. Not a dollar is provided in the appropriation for roads in this vast territory.

There is another section in the county, known as the Baca Canyon neighborhood, which has been ignored in the appropriation. This is a community composed of a very fine class of people—farmers and ranchmen, and they are greatly in need of a good road leading into the main thoroughfare.

On the other hand who will be benefitted by this $41,500 to be expended on these two roads in the county? Will it be the farmers and ranchmen? No, not to any great extent. The people who will be the greatest beneficiaries of this $41,500 appropriation will be folks who live in other states, far separated from us. The most them will be tourists, only passing through the state enroute to Arizona, California and other places in the far west, and not one in twenty of them will ever spend a dollar in Lincoln county, except for gasolene. Is it not better to expend the larger part of this money for the benefit of our farmers and ranchmen who are the mainstay of the country and our hope for its prosperity. The principal part of the taxes that would have to be raised to pay interest on these bonds would come from the farmers, the ranchmen and people of small means. It should be the policy and the duty of those in charge of the county's affairs to look well to the interest and protection of our home people, and not expend money collected from them on roads to be traveled principally by people living outside of the state. How can the poeple living in some of the outlying districts be expected to vote for a measure when they have been subjected to such discrimination?

Some may be offended because the Mountaineer has spoken so frankly on this subject, but it has no apologies to make for what it has said. It is only the expression of honest conviction. It believes in its home people; it believes they should have first consideration in everything; it believes that the people in every part of the county should have a square deal in all mattters pertaining to public welfare. And it believes that a newspaper that will not speak out in the interest of its home people is not worthy of their support.

Fourth Class Postmaster Examination.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces that there will be held at Capitan, New Mexico for the purpose of examining applicants for the position of Post Master at Hondo N. M., on February 10th. The compensation of the Postmaster at Hondo was $180 for the last fiscal year. Age, 21 years and over at date of examination. Application form and full information concerning the requirements of the examination can be secured from the Postmaster at Hondo or from the United States Civil Service Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

When To Produce Cream.

A silo is good, a good barn is better and a fine dairy cow is best of all. But you must not wait till you have any or all of them. Just tie old Sooky to a to a tree it don't make much difference whether a cedar or pinon; give her some roughness, get a cent bucket and milk her in it. When you milk old Sooky for a while (remember she is not to blame for being a scrub) then you will buy a real dairy cow, then you will build a barn to house her and next will come a silo to hold her feed. Last of all when people meet you they not John! but good morning Mr. Thrift. Its a near way to repect. Try it.

L. W. Carlton.

Letter from Lincoln on the Road Bond Question.

In the matter of good roads and dividing the county, I wish to say or ask, what would be the difference in bonding the county $55,000 for good roads or the same amount for dividing the county, which would effect the tax-payers most? I cannot see where the difference comes in. Our friend, Dr. Johnson, says bonding the county, or rather dividing the county, would put a burden on the tax-payers, but still he is in favor of bonding the county to the amount of $55,000 for a few roads that he is interested in. Why not mention all of the public rosds in the county? Not only those over which the Doctor travels. There are several roads in the county that are and have been neglected for several years. Roads that are are as important as the Ruidoso, Capitan, Roswell, Carrizozo, or any other roads that would be taken good care of by this $55,000 issue. Is there any justice to the public in this? If there is I fail to see it.

Im in favor of good roads, but not for only a few of them. Give the people a fair deal and I will vote for the bond issue. I am also in favor of dividing the county for the reason I do not own an auto, and when I have to go the county seat to attend court, they allow me 6 cents per mile and I have to pay 8 cents per mile to get there. I believe that the people from Capitan to the east end of the county would be benefitted more by dividing the county than by the good roads bond issue.

Notes from Luke's Corners

A re-union of the veteran cowbows was held in Rattlesnake Bend, on Wampus Creek, on the 15th inst. A large and happy crowd gathered to pay homage to the occasion, and incidentally sell the loose butter, eggs, chickens, etc. Snakey Ed made the opening address amid loud applauses and swift kicks. His speech follows:

"Ladies and Gentlemen of this Assembly—It becomes my painful duty to stand before you and allow my innerds to air. We have met here to re-unite the veteran cowboys—the cowboy of years ago, when dudish doings, such as you witness nowa days among the up-to-date, or later day Cow-Boy Saints, would have been sufficient to cause a death penalty to be imposed.

Allow me to recall the days when the Cow-boy was a true Cow Puncher, when they ate only the dried hump of the buffalo without bread or cuss words, and use the ripe prickly pear fruit for desert, and fought to the death over the essence of rattlesnake poison; boot heels so high that they had to walk on their knees, and when they ate chile con-carne it had to be quadruple strength, and drank their coffee after it had been re-boiled the third time before it would be hot enough. When movers came through the wild west, they pulled down the wagon cover to hide the women folks and charged the cow boys $5 a look before they were allowed to see the said women folks.

Yes, these days were the days when the cook was compelled to stew the flesh of panther and musk hog and make a hash of the two meats and flavor it with tur n ula tails and scopion legs and feed it to the Range Boss before he would have courage enough to hold his job. When nothing pleased the cow puncher more than to get lost in a snow storm and be compelled to crawl into a cave of she wild cats and stay until the storm broke, or had eaten the very last wild cat in the den and was shot dead when he reached camp because he did not bring the marrow guts of the wild cats he had killed to the Boss. When milky cows were so scarce 'till they were killed for their hides for lariat making only, and even easy chairs had horns.

It makes me sigh to look back over the past and recall the days when the cow puncher would refuse to work for an outfit that owned safe and gentle horses; the days when the cow-horse was considered not worth killing unless he could walk on his hind feet fifteen miles and then buck all the way back home and finish up by falling back on the rider and roll him in the dust and thorns until he was mashed as flat as a tortillo.

When it was against the rules of the outfit to employ a man unless he had killed somebody's dog, and could speak the native language sufficient to coax the matron of the native hut out of a chile con quezo, mingled with goat hair and mesquite beans.

It is different now, boys. The Latter Day Cowboy Saints use chewing gum, drink tea, wash their faces, also their feet, wear slippers and smile. They call leggings "chapps" now, and lots of them never heard of a pair of saddle pockets. It's awful! awful! I tell you boys, and now I shall thank the audience and ask you to pass the Lamascus Salve."

OFF THE COAST

By SUSAN E. CLAGETT.

Just why Lavinia Payton was determined to carry out her plan in the face of angry opposition she could not have told. Probably it was due to the opposition.

Yet it was a very simple thing she proposed to do—merely to shun the beaten path that led toward White Sulphur Springs and go anywhere that would take her away from the life her people had led for generations and expected her to live.

She longed for Portugal or the fjords of Norway, but she sailed on a steamer for the fjords of Newfoundland, the Norway of America.

The walk to Signal or Cabot's tower, is not one to take alone. It is long. It is steep. The road follows the shore until it begins to ascend and is lonely. When steamers come there is always a sprinkling of people, mostly driving toward the tower, where there is a magnificent view of the harbor and ocean. This and much more was told in the booklet Lavinia had learned by heart. But there was one grave omission. Indeed, two. The first was wind, the other, mist.

She had felt wind before, but never like this. It whipped her wet skirts about her until she thought she would never move again. Ahead was the tower, gray and somber, built to defy the elements. She saw a little group of people standing in an angle of the granite mass, one figure apart from the others and nearer to her. Then everything was blank. She was conscious only of blind terror as the wind caught and whirled her about. For a space eternity fronted her, then the awfulness of the wind subsided and she found herself clinging desperately to the gray sleeve of an ulster.

"What made you attempt that alone?" the man said roughly, giving her a little shake as he let her go. "Didn't you know Signal hill was no place for a woman unless she had a man with her?"

He left her in the angle of the wall and stepped forward, a tall, broad-shouldered, athletic-looking man with keen blue eyes and a determined mouth.

"Come," he said, extending his hand. "If we are to make Quidi Vidi we must be off."

"But I am not going to Quidi Vidi."

"Yes, you are. The village is my objective point."

"It is not mine."

"Can you cross the strip alone?" He nodded toward the narrow path where the wind had full sweep although she could not feel it where she sat.

She arose with such evident reluctance that he threw back his head and laughed.

When they parted neither knew the other's name.

The next morning she left for Labrador.

She was a little late in reaching the steamer, and, somewhat breathless from haste, was following the steward down the deck when the back of a rough, gray coat caught and held her attention. There was something familiar about it, so familiar that she moved hastily forward, confronting the owner with blazing eyes.

"You!"

"Why not?"

"You came because you knew I was sailing on this steamer?"

"Partly. I intended taking the trip. It made no difference if I came now or later on. Do not misunderstand me. It was not for your charming society, but because I know it is not desirable for a woman, especially a young woman, to take this trip alone."

"And how am I to know you will not make yourself as unpleasant to other people. You are as much a stranger as they."

He regarded her steadily.

"I will take that back," he said at last.

"No." She turned from him without another word.

They ran into fog that night, depressing, penetrating fog. There were eleven days of it, and the trip was lengthened to a fortnight, but long before the fourteen days were up Lavinia had offered friendliness.

He accepted her overtures with no degree of eagerness, but under his apparent indifference was a steadfast determination that made itself evident their last evening on board when he ended the silence that had fallen between them by saying:

"You have not yet retracted the words you said to me the morning we left St. John's."

"It is not fair that you should hold them against me. I was beginning to regard you as a friend."

"You knew I was to be trusted."

She did not answer directly. "For two weeks we have neither of us known who the other was. I do not even know your name, but I am going to ask you to my home. Will you come?"

His eyes softened to a wonderful gentleness. "When?"

"And you may ask for—"

He interrupted. "You need not tell me."

"You know me?"

"Your picture stood on your brother's desk at college. He is my very good friend and the picture is a wonderful likeness."

He did not consider it necessary to tell her he had begged the picture from his friend. That would come later. She was not ready for what he had to say and he could wait.

About the War

The British have been successful in raids north of Arras, and the French have captured prisoners in a sortie in the Vosges.

A Turkish official report of Jan. 11 says a British cruiser of the Juno type was sunk by Turkish gunfire in the eastern Mediterranean.

A Russian squadron is reported to have raided the Anatolian coast of the Black Sea and sunk forty Turkish sailing vessels carrying food to Constantinople.

According to the London war office the right bank of the Tigris river, except for a small strip northeast of Kut-El-Amara, has been cleared of Ottoman troops.

The Teutonic allies now are in full control of Vadeni, six miles southwest of Galatz, Rumania, and Galatz is under the fire of the Bulgarian artillery from the right bank of the Danube.

In Macedonia on the western wing south of Lake Ochrida there has been several encounters between the French and the Austro-Germans, in which the Teutonic allies are declared by Germany finally to have driven the French across the Czerna river.

Fierce fighting along the lower Sereth line resulted in the capture by Turkish troops of the Rumanian town of Mihalea, northwest of Braila, and 400 men of its garrison. Others of the defending force, attempting to escape, were drowned in the Sereth. The Bulgarians have taken a monastery near the confluence of the Buleu and Sereth rivers.

Bean Worse Than Alcohol.

That firewater isn't the only thing that will cause a wild, unsophisticated Indian of the American plains to rear up on his toes, become indifferent to bulldogs and see pink elephants with wings, is the declaration of Earl B. Putt, a chemist, who is endeavoring to have the government place a ban on the sale of the Mexican Peyote bean to Indians on the South Dakota reservations.

It is reported that the Indians, having discovered the exceptional qualities of this brand of bean, have been using large quantities of it and make a brew from it which excels in effect any product of the paleface. The authorities do not know whether or not the bean can be barred from the reservations under the Harrison anti-firewater act, but they are going to see what can be done about it.
