Mines AND MINING.

S. S. DOAK IN TOWN

He Reports the Mining Industry in His Part of the County to Be Exceedingly Active.

S S. Doak, superintendent of the New Mexico and Iowa Mining company was in town this week from his company's Turkey Creek mines and reports every thing pertaining to mining in that part of the county exceedingly active for this time of the year. Mr. Doak stated that his company would soon install a mill and considerable other machinery on their Turkey Creek property as the development work which has thus far been done has exposed sufficient ore to justify putting in a plant for treating the ore right on the ground. He also stated that a soon as spring opened his company would put in a steam hoist and air compressor on their Schoolville properties to facilitate development work as they contemplate running several thousand feet of tunnels and shafts during the summer for the purpose of exposing the ore bodies. Mr. Doak like every one who has given any attention to the mining industry in Lincoln county believes this will eventually prove to be one of the richest mineral counties of the territory.

Mining Property Sold

E. A. Wall the popular and wide awake merchant and liquor dealer of the Bonito has sold a group of 4 mining claims to the Eagle Mining and Improvement Co. The groups shows good mineral in place and assays as a whole $25.00. The consideration was spot cash, and $3,500 was the price paid. Mr. Wall has also made arrangements with the Iowa Mining Co., for the sale of his group of copper claims in Water canon. These claims are considered by experts to be the best in this Territory.

THE RED CLOUD DISTRICT.

It is Situated in the Gallinas Mountains and is Coming into Prominence Again.

F. S. Hostetter, C. E. Ames and W. H. Wordon have returned to Alamogordo from the Red Cloud mining district, in the Gallinas mountains, Lincoln county, and reported the new camp prospering. They brought in ore for a general mine test, which runs 55 per cent copper, 28 ounces silver and $8 gold. This ore is from the Blue Cloud and has a six foot lead turning out fine at 20 feet from the surface.

The Tellefore Mining Company is doing extensive development work and expects to ship ore next month. The Tellefore mine is not a prospect, but a patent, and was worked 50 years ago, and the ore packed to Santa Fe on burros, as it was considered very rich. The Rock Island railroad is now within eight miles of the mine, whereas, heretofore the camp was 70 miles from a railroad. There are five patented claims in the Gallinas and about 50 prospects. There is a general store; two sawmills, etc., and a population of 150, with an abundance of good water. The altitude of the highest claim is about 9,000 feet. The outlook is good for the new mining district.

Exposition Notes.

About $15,000 in material and cash has been donated towards the Arkansas building at the World's Fair at St. Louis.

Colorado is very proud of her schools and is making preparations for an extraordinary exhibit in the educational building at the World's Fair St. Louis. The exhibit will cover a floor space 30 by 60 feet using also the walls for exhibit purposes.

Governor White of North Dakota and Governor Herried of South Dakota will visit the site of the Woald's Fair at St. Louis within a short time to select sites for buildings representing those two states. South Dakota will spend not less than $35,000 for her representation at the Exposition.

Governor Van Sant of Minnesota will in a few days appoint a Commission of three members to prepare the state exhibit for the World's Fair at St. Louis. The legislature has appropriated $50,000, $10,000 of which may be allowed for salaries and wages of employees. The commissioners have no salaries but are allowd $1,000 each for personal expenses.

New Mexico Passion Plays.

In several remote, desolate valleys among the southern spurs of the Rocky mountains, in northern New Mexico, has been enacted during these last days of the Lenten season the most savage passion play in all the world. In a fanatical desire for self-abnegation and humility, appropriate to the forty days of fasting and contriteness of heart during the Lenten season, several hundred American citizens have frightfully scourged their backs and have imposed upon themselves a half dozen other forms of torture, they have hanged one of their number to a wood cross until it has seemed he would swoon and die there.

During Holy or Passion Week, the last week previous to Easter Sunday the American Passion Play is performed in two or three different localities in Northern New Mexico. The indian converts and their descendents have been known for thirce hundred years as the Penitentes, the full name being "Los Hermanos Penitentes," (the penitent brothers) as given by the Jesuit fathers. The locality where the Penitents are still strongest is about the little village of Taos, on the northern hem of New Mexico.

During the morning hours of Good Friday the preparations are made for the annual Passion Play in the after noon, and Taos is livelier than at any time in the whole twelve months.

At 2 o'clock the church bell ring and the population of the valley gather about the "morada." A procession headed by the "hermano mayor" and the most devout members of the brotherhood, who are generally chief actors in the Passion Play, starts slowly on foot for El Calvario. All are barefoot, and many are naked from the hips up. The spectators follow silently at a respectful distance. Half way out to the hillock, which is known in Taos as El Calvario, the procession halts at a tumbled-down adobe house.

While the "pipero" blows a sharp air on a flute the man who is acting the part of the Savior comes forth. His only garment is a quantity of cotten sheeting or muslin that hangs flowing from his shoulders and waist, as is represented in the pictures of Christ in the bible and church histories. About the forehead of the man is bound a wreath of cactus thorns. The thorns have been pressed deep into the flesh, from which tiny streams of blood trickle down bronze face and over his black beard. In a moment a cross of huge timber, that would break the back of many men, is laid upon the man's shoulders. He grapples tight hold of it, and, bending low under the crushing weight, starts on.

The pipero changes his tune on his flute, and the procession, with the mimic Christ near the head moves on. It is a warm day in the semi-tropic valley, and the perspiration mingles with the blood from the thorns on the body of the chief actor, and rush down his half-nude body. The man pants and gasps at times, but never looks up or speaks.

On the way a pathway of broken stones has been made, and the most devout, Penitentes walk these with bare feet and never flinch. The counterfeit Christ is spit upon by any and all in the procession. Little boys and girls run ahead that they may more deliberately spit in his face and throw stones upon his bending form.

When El Calvario is reached the great, clumsy cross is laid upon the ground; the actor of Christ is seized and thrown upon it. The assemblage joins in a chorus of song while several Penitentes lash the mans arms, hands and legs to the timber with cords of rawhide. The bonds are made tight as the big muscular vaqueros can draw them. The ligaments sink into the flesh, and even cut so that the blood runs out. The arms and legs become blue and then black under the awful binding, but not so much as a sigh escapes the lips of the actor. He repeats in a mixed dialect of Spanish and Indian words uttered by Christ at the the true Calvary, and bids his brothers to spare him not.

When all is ready a dozen men lift the cross and its human burden, and carrying it to an excavation near at hand, they drop the case in the earth. The hole is quickly filled, and the Penitentes gather about the foot of the cross with uplifted faces. The women weep and the children look on dumbfounded. Some of the men mock and jeer the man on the cross, others throw clods of sun-baked earth at him, and still others, feeling that they must have some part in the physical agong of the afternoon call upon the multitude to lash and beat them. The invitation is never in vain, for there are strong arms and hands ever glad to lay the lash on the backs of fanatics, and to provide leaves of cactus to apply to the swollen and bleeding flesh.

In several localities in Colorado and New Mexico it was once the practic to literally nail the hands of the acting Christ to the timber of the cross, but the Catholic priestl of this generation put a stop to that. There is no doubt that people have died from the tortures of the Passion Play. Only two years ago the government Indian agent in the Santa Rita mountains reported several deaths among the Penitentes, because of poisoning by the cactus thorns and the dreadful lashing the men had endured in the hour of their fanaticism. The Penitentes believe that no death is so exalted as that caused by participation in the acting of the travail of the Lord.

After the first half hour of noise and flagellation about the cross at El Calvario the excitement dies away. The crucified man, whose arms and legs are now black under the bonds, must be suffering indescribable pain, but he only exclaims occasionally in Spanish. "Peace, peace, peace," while the Penitent, who have had no part in the self-abnegation and punishment, prostrate themselves silently about the cross. A motion of the hand from the pipero, and the spectators bow their bared heads in reverential attitude. As the sun slow descends behind the loftiest mountain peaks and the first shadows of twilight are thrown across the valley of El Verde, the pipero rises to his feet, and, blowing a long, harsh air upon his flute, leads a procession of the people back to the village. Some of the leading Penitentes remain behind, and when the spectators and others have gone away, they lift the cross from the earth and Railroad Plans In New Mexico.

Col. T. W. Harrison says in the Topeka Capital: "The principal interest in New Mexico seems to center around the construction of new lines of railroad. The aggressive action of the Rock Island railroad in plunging across the despised but unknown Staked Plains to El Paso and a connection with the Southern Pacific that gave them the shortest line between Chicago and California, thereby securing to that road very valuable contracts for carrying the United States mails, has stimulated a rivalry on the part of other competing lines that seems likely to make it well nigh impossible to get out of the sound of the locomotive whistle on the heretofore inaccessible Staked Plains of Texas and New Mexico.

"Rumors have settled it, so far as rumors can, that the Choctaw line is at once to build 200 miles of new road from Amarillo, Tex., to Torrance and Los Lunas, and eventually from there to Phoenix and San Diego, that the Santa Fe is to build from Roswell to El Paso, and also from Roswell to a connection with the Atlantic and Pacific west of Albuquerque, that the Colorado and Southern is to build at once from Dalhart to Dawson, and is building from near there northwest to the large coal beds at Dawson, and that the Santa Fe Central which is building from Santa Fe to Torrance on the El Paso line is also a Rock Island enterprise.

"The Staked Plains that were supposed to be dry from the surface to the center of earth and the breeding ground to the devastating hot winds that sometimes destroy the crops from southern Kansas to Manitoba, may yet be reclaimed and become a productive portion of the country. Exploration has developed the fact that over a large portion of this plain an abundant supply of good water is found at a depth of 20 to 25 feet from the surface. At some seasons of the year the rain comes down in great torrents, almost cloudbursts, filling the ravines and draws, and subsiding as quickly as it comes, so that growing vegetation could get but very little advantage from it. If this water were impounded and saved where it falls, it would eventually solve the whole problem of the inhabitability of those plains, for the soil is rich, the climate mild, and the abundance of good water from shallow wells would make good any deficiency there might be from the impounded rainfall."

World's Fair.

The bill appropriating $100,000 for New York State's representation at the World's Fair at St. Louis has passed both houses of the legislature and will be approved by Governor Odell. The bill appropriating $50,000 for Colorado's representation at the coming exposition has also passed both houses of the legislature and been signed by Governor Orman. Bills are pending in Maryland for $40,000, in New Jersey for $50,000, in Ohio for $75,000 and in Iowa for $150,000. In all cases there is promise of favorable action. Including Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Phillipines 24 states and territories have made provision for World's Fair exhibits. In nearly all instances buildings will also be erected. In some states where the constitutions prohibit appropriations for Exposition purposes money is being raised by private subscription. In Kentucky whose legistature voted down the bill for a $50,000 appropriation by a narrow margin the Louisville Commercial club has taken up the work and an exhibit no less pretentious than was at first contemplated will be made, under the auspices of this club. The work in Texas where it is expected a half million dollars will be raised by private subscription, is progressing rapidly, and nearly all counties of the state have been organized to further the collection of the fund.

Mayor Rojla wells of St. Louis has outlined a plan for a fine Boulevarde from the down town district to the World's Fair. It is proposed to remove the street railway tracks from Chestnut St. and have the thoroughfare finely paved to Grand Avenue where it will strike west Pine Boulevard leading to Forest Park the site of the Exposition.

lower its burden. The cords of cowhide are removed, and the psuedo Christ, who is now probably unconscious from long and dreadful bondoge, is lifted from the timbers.

Following the Biblican narative of the scenes on Calvary, the body of the actor is wrapped about with a mass of white fabric, and is carried to a dugout cave in the hillside near at hand. Several women in black serapes, with tearful eyes, who have been appointed to impersonate the Marys and Marthas, follow some distance behind, all the time violently weeping and lamenting.

In the cave the bleeding and tortured body of the chief actor is nursed to strength. If the man is of endurance and rugged physicial strength he will probably be ready to go home to his family in the evening, conscious of having made ample atonement for long years of sin. Las Angels Herald.
