First National Opens

The First National Bank of Carrizozo opened its doors Wednesday of this week. Cashier Brickley and Assistant Cashier Wright were on hand to welcome the "First Day Customers," and to extend the courtesies and services of the new bank to the general public. The bank now occupies temporary quarters, but will build at once a commodious building adjoining. This new institution has strong financial connections throughout the country.

The first day's deposits were $5,093.97, and the second day's ran to $24,863.97. This is a very creditable showing, indeed, and is full of promise for a successful career.

W. O. Womens' Club

The White Oaks Womens' Club wishes to announce that it will give a dance at White Oaks Saturday night, April 7. A cordial invitation is extended to surrounding communities to be present and enjoy the festivities on that occasion.

Woman's Column

The Civic League met in regular session Monday afternoon at 2 p. m. at the Crystal Theater. The new president, Mrs. Frank J. Sager, presiding. By vote it was decided to retain the name of the Civic League, also it was decided that the Civic League should join the State Federation. The per capita to be paid from the treasury.

It will be of interest to the Civic League to note that a new departure of the State Federation of Womens' Clubs will be a division of the state into three districts, each district in charge of a vice-president of the Federation. Mrs. Charles Spiess, of Las Vegas, has in her district the following places: Clayton, Espanola, Las Vegas, Santa Fe, Springer, Dawson and Wagon Mound. Mrs. Ada Bittner, of Albuquerque, has Albuquerque, Anthony, Deming, Estancia, Gallup, Hatvib, La Union, Las Cruces, Mountainair, San Marcial, Socorro, Silver City, Mesilla Park, Willard and Dona Ana county. Mrs. C. E. Mason, of Roswell, has Artesia, Carlsbad, Clovis, Dexter, Portales, Roswell, Duran, Santa Rosa, Tularosa, Tucuman and Tularosa. The clubs in the various districts are urged to write the vice-president in charge for help or advice needed, and especially let her know of unfederated clubs in the district which might come into the State Federation. In all probability this will show Carrizozo in the district in charge of Mrs. C. E. Mason, a very capable and winning club worker.

The Woman's Bible class of the Methodist church will assemble in the school room near the church as they have outgrown their old quarters in the church.

Miss Johnson to Wed

Katherine Wise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Johnson, of Ruidoso, will be united in marriage on April 3 to Kenneth Chester Balcomb. Mr. Balcomb is an engineer in the U. S. Public Road service, with headquarters at Albuquerque, and the newly wedded couple will make their home in the Duke city.

Temperance Meeting

In response to the call of the temporary committee, delegates from the various precincts of the county were called to meet at Capitan on Tuesday afternoon, March 27. Two-thirds of the voting precincts were represented by thirty-four men. The body was addressed by Roswell E. Farley, state superintendent of the Anti Saloon League, and by W. A. Chrisman, of Aztec, N. M.

The purpose of the meeting is the permanent organization of the prohibition forces for the coming campaign for state-wide prohibition was accomplished in the election of a committee for the county at large, and committees for each voting precinct. The county committee consists of Clarence Spence, chairman; Dr. Blaney, secretary, F. J. Sager, Treasurer.

Mr. Sager presented the need of funds for the campaign, in a few fitting words, and proceeded to take subscriptions which amounted to $230 with some cash paid.

The meeting was represented by reliable men from diverse professions and avocations—both young and old—the slogan of the body—manifested more in action than words—seemed to be, "The Saloon Must Go."

Those in attendance from precinct 14 were Messrs. Spence, Sager, Lutz, Kelley, Pearson, Gardner and Marston.

Lieutenant Young

Jack Young, who was in the dispatcher's office here some years ago and later returned to Canada, has been promoted to a lieutenant in the Canadian Signal Corps, so a letter reaching Mrs. Harry Dixon, from his sister, recites. Jack has been with the Canadian contingent in France for two years, and, as he puts it, has had many narrow squeaks. He won his promotion on the field of battle. Another brother is pay sergeant in a London office. Jack, or Lieutenant Young, we should say, and sister, Miss Cora, have many friends here who rejoice with the family in the promotion as well as the safety of the young lieutenant.

Jack Peak

Our Sabbath school met Sunday, the first time since the severe winter weather began. There was a large attendance. Now that spring is fairly on her way we are sure of a successful effort in that line.

Mr. Buckner is now on the road to Elida for household goods and stock for his new home in our settlement.

Rev. S. C. Burnett will arrive soon to take over the Jicarilla school. Mr. Burnett is well liked by the patrons of that school and they do well to secure his services.

George Jeffreys was around the past week buying yearling steers for Harris Brothers. We recall that he secured stock from E. E. Wilson, Nick Maes and Maurice Brooklin.

Robert and Granville Wilson were very sick for two days but are up and busy now.

The people of this community have planned a box-supper for Friday, to which all are welcome.

On Easter Sunday there is to be an egg hunt, and eggs of all sorts and colors will be in evidence. This is an ancient custom and almost as delightful to the little ones as is Christmas.

The Burnett Bros. have leased the homestead of Miss Tickner, near Ancho. They expect to cultivate the farm proper and use the balance in pasture for a hay field in the late summer.

Messrs. Fair and Pitts are to add a general line of merchandise to their grain business. It is a good proposition and is going to fill a long felt desire for a convenient place to get supplies. This section is growing and the stores among us are mere playthings to the demand of so large a section. When we need things we want and expect to get them now and here.

Mr. Stoneman is just completing the underground work on a large cistern on his place.

Geyego Myler and family are back from Miami, Arizona, and are now visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. McBrayer in Jicarilla, who are the parents of Mrs. Myler.

Excepting for the winds we have had most beautiful spring weather for ten days. Grass is coming and all stock are doing well. We would gladly welcome April showers after buffeting with the winds so long.

Mass Meeting Call

At the request of various citizens in various portions of the county, a mass meeting is hereby called at the courthouse in Carrizozo Monday night, April 2, at 8 o'clock p. m. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the feasibility of sending a representative to the Ozark Trail meeting at Amarillo, Texas, on the 26, 27 and 28th of June, and to endeavor to secure that Highway for Lincoln County. A good representative from every part of the county is desired.

Thomas Hughes Dies

A wire was received here Sunday by Mrs. G. M. Hughes notifying her of the death of a son, Thomas, which occurred at Douglas, Arizona. Smallpox was the cause of the death. Harvey, a brother, left Monday for Douglas to ascertain the particulars of his brother's death and to look after his effects. The whole community sympathizes with the sorrowing mother and surviving brothers and sisters.

Lincoln County Teachers' Association Meeting

The annual meeting of the Lincoln County Teachers' association will be held at Capitan on April 6th and 7th, the coming Friday and Saturday. From present indications the meeting will repeat the unqualified success of the past year's gathering, which was so well and widely noticed in the papers of the state. There will be many prominent speakers at the meeting, including the following: Asst. State Supt. John V. Conway, President Enloe of the Normal school, Prof. D. A. Worcester of the University, W. T. Conway, state leader Boys and Girls' Industrial clubs, and Col. James A. Wilson, superintendent of the Roswell Military institute, Rupert F. Asplund, editor of The New Mexico Journal of Education, upon the topic, "The Chief Business of the State." The presence of these distinguished men should guarantee that the teachers of the county shall receive something of value from the meeting.

In connection with the meeting the exhibit of work from the various schools of the county, along lines similar to those followed last year, will occupy much attention and interest. Nearly every school in the county will be represented in the exhibit, which is arranged along competitive lines. Each school competes only with others having the same number of teachers, unless at its own desire it enter in a higher class.

The people of Capitan, with their usual hospitality and enthusiasm, are again offering to the teachers and guests of the association the cordial welcome given them last spring. Accommodations will be provided free for all those attending the meeting and it is the earnest desire of the people of Capitan to show the same hearty hospitality which distinguished the meeting last year. The Domestic Science classes of the Lincoln County High school will give a dinner to the visitors on Friday night, and the ladies of the town will repeat the dinner on Saturday night.

The Town Board

The mayor and trustees did not hold a meeting Monday night of this week, the meeting having been postponed until next Monday night. Action will be taken on the ordinances prepared by City Attorney Wood which have been passed to the third reading. Additional ordinances have been prepared by the city attorney and will be read for the first time on Monday night. The question of the appointment of a marshal is to be decided and matters of general public interest will also receive attention.

Methodist Church

Rev. Arthur Johnson, Pastor. The boys' and girls' prayer meeting met at the parsonage on Monday afternoon.

Next Sunday is Communion day.

Next week is to be observed as week of prayer and self-denial.

The Women's Sunday school class will meet at the little school house on Sunday at 9:45 a. m.

Mexican Sunday school (Spanish) at 3 p. m., Sunday, at the Mexican church.

TRAINING TODAY'S BOYS AND GIRLS

Interest Versus Discipline as Motive for Effort.

NEW PHASES OF OLD PROBLEM

In Order to Get a Task Well Done It Is Not Necessary to Make All Drudgery for the Child— Appeal to His Interest.

By SIDONIE M. GRUENBERG.

AS HIS was about to leave for a summer in the country his teacher informed eight-year-old Leonard that he had been promoted, and told him that he would not have to study during his vacation. Leonard was happy and so was his mother, for she did dread the thought of having a child "make up" school work when he should be playing. But toward the end of the vacation there was an occasion for writing a letter—grandfather was to have a birthday—and Leonard exhausted his ingenuity and his mother's patience in fudging excuses and delays. When he did at last sit down to write the letter the mother was both chagrined and worried. The child squirmed about in his seat, showing great discomfort.

He made many false motions, omitted letters from common words (he was an unusually good speller) and omitted strokes for many letters. The mother was ashamed to send off the letter; and she was afraid that the boy would be demoted after returning to school. She therefore resolved to use the remaining days of the vacation for retrieving the lost art, and planned a daily exercise in writing.

There was no revolution, so the plan was carried out—but it was a torture to both mother and child. This lasted for several days, and the progress made was far from encouraging. But one afternoon Leonard and some of his young friends were playing "auction" on the porch, having witnessed a real auction of household effects a day or two earlier. Leonard was the clerk, and made a record of all the sales, writing the names of the purchasers, the articles and the prices. When the mother saw the list she found it hard to realize that it had been made by the same child that suffered such agonies over his writing. The work was neat, the names were all spelled correctly, and there was no sign of effort or discomfort.

This observation made the mother suspect that this child could be led faster than he could be driven, and she looked about for "motives" to make writing interesting. She got him to write out items when she sent him on an errand, she asked him to help through stimulation of a real concern of the child for the results of the task, or an interest in the process? Those who fear training a child through appeals to the interest are very much like people who think it is necessary for a child to have measles and other "children's diseases" in order to attain a state of health. It is true that surviving measles and smallpox will make one immune to these diseases. But it is hardly wise to expose every child to these diseases for that reason. In the first place, immunity is not necessary, where we can make sure of preventing infection. But resistance to disease may be obtained more pleasantly and just as effectively by proper care for the nutrition and breathing and cleanliness of the body. The same principles would seem to apply to the normal health of the child.

There is no doubt that many a child is "spoiled" by being pampered. We make a game of dressing or of eating, or of putting things in order, or of writing. There is the danger that when the child is older he will fail to do these things, because the dependence upon the game is too strong. This means that we may legitimately use the game as a motive for the child's activity until he has acquired a new skill, but that after the skill is acquired we must supply a new motive for applying it. Under the "discipline" system the corresponding danger is that after the child has learned to do something—under compulsion—he will evade the doing whenever the pressure is relieved. Whichever system is followed, it is necessary at last to find internal motives for conduct, and this does not appear to be more difficult where the interest is made to play its part.

On the other hand, where the child's interests bear their share of the burden of training, we avoid a certain hardness or sourness and we strengthen the bonds of sympathy between our children and ourselves.

WHERE THE LABORER IS KING

Already in Australia Building Trades Have a Working Week of Forty-Four Hours.

The day laborer, as opposed to the employer and to other workers, is king in Australia. The unions, through the labor party, practically control the executive, legislative and judicial machinery of the cities, the states and the commonwealth.

Forty-eight hours is the recognized maximum for a week's work; but in certain occupations 44, 42, 40 and even 38 hours are considered full time, the National Geographic Magazine observes. Some of the larger building trades have a 44-hour week, and it is probable that this figure will become the recognized standard of all labor. Of the "four sacred rights" is the original slogan, "Eight hours' work, eight hours' play, eight hours' rest and eight hours' a day," only the portion relating to rest has been retained.

It is interesting to note the definition of a living wage as formulated by the court of industrial arbitration of New South Wales in 1914:

"The living wage is standardized as the wage which will do neither more nor less than enable a worker of the class to which the lowest wage awarded to maintain himself, his wife and two children—the average dependent family—in a house of three rooms and a kitchen, with food, plain and inexpensive, but quite sufficient in quantity and quality to maintain health and efficiency, and with an allowance for the following other expenses: Fuel, clothes, books, furniture, utensils, rates, life insurance, savings, accident or benefit societies, loss of employment, union pay, books and newspapers, train and tram fares, sewing machine, mangle, school requisites, amusements and holiday intoxicating liquors, tobacco, sickness and death, domestic help, unusual contingencies, religion or charity.

Safeguarding Watchman. After completing its factory an Atlanta firm hired a nightwatchman. Soon, however, the manager formed his own suspicions that he was doing more sleeping than watching at night. So he put in a couple of time clocks, one at each end of the building, to be punched by the watchman every half-hour. "What's these here clocks for?" demanded the watchman when he found them installed when he came to work. "What sense is there in fussin' around and punchin' these here things?" "It is a measure of humanly," explained the manager slyly. "We don't want you to be burned if the building should catch fire while you were asleep."

Dame Fashion's Latest Decrees

New York.—Unless something more drastic happens in Paris than has happened so far, the woman who wants to furnish up her gowns of last autumn and even last spring and continue to wear them may do so without criticism. This does not mean that France has not shown to the American buyers an amazing collection of new clothes. She has featured the afternoon gown above the morning and evening ones, and she has not originated anything new in sports clothes except in the house of Chanel, where certain new touches have been brought out that will undoubtedly catch the public here.

The silhouette is still straight and slim. The directoire, as was predicted, is creeping in. The high empire waistline has several advocates among the lesser houses in France.

The skirts shown in the last two weeks have been a trifle longer than usual, there has been more flat plaiting than bunched drapery and the use of expensive and ornate embroidery on chiffon continues.

Much-Discussed Barrel Skirt.

Of course, we are still talking from rumor, from cables and from the letters of those who are entrusted with the mission of giving us advance information according to their best belief. But from all these sources one gathers that novelty was centered in the barrel skirt and that the American buyers are not looking upon it with much favor. This does not mean that the barrel skirt will fall to be a famous creature of fashions in America. It is too early to tell what will become of it. The exclusive dressmakers and shops, you know, do not like to bring over in March what the manufacturers of inexpensive, ready-to-wear clothing have exploited in January. Skirts with barrel skirts are now selling for $30, and the man who has to pay $400 for such a suit in Paris, plus 60 per cent duty, may not even take a gambling chance at its success over here.

All information points to the fact that belts will relieve the sandwich effect of pure mediocrity. These belts are put above or at the waistline, but rarely below. The girdled hips are not to be featured. Belts do not confine the normal waistline; they merely suggest it in a riot of color, embroidery and trim.

Hang From the Belt.

Another new touch is to hang a heavy chain or an ornate silken cord from the belt at the side or in the front, and linked chains are made to represent the ornamentation worn by Henry VIII, only they are dropped from the waistline instead of from reserve all entertainment of that kind for the evening.

It may be that this season the French designer and the French woman have locked hands in making the afternoon costume the serious and brilliant one of the day. This idea quills Americans immensely, for there must be several thousand card parties given on this continent every afternoon between four and seven, and what a French woman wears in the park in the afternoon, an American wears to an elaborate indoor affair with candles, chicken salad and closed-curtains. But she wants eyes ling gowns, too, and yet we hear not a rumor of anything new, brilliant or stimulating being done along that line.

Colored silk in a new hat; it is of rope pink fall, with trim of upturning ostrich tips; the chin-strap of pink ribbon ends in long streamers at the side.

One thing is true. Whatever we will have in the way of new evening fashions, will be dignified and not frivolous. Satin will rule and silk net will hold its place. Embroidery will again be a feature, done in tinselled threads and silk floss. The Chinese influence is already suggested by the house of Callot, which has made a chrysanthemum evening gown that is built of orange net, crystals and a mass of Chinese embroidery.

The question, therefore, that has arisen among the American women, who are excessively stimulated by the desire to see new clothes at this season, is whether there will be a striking novelty this month, and with it the shipments of American cloths.

If not, can the dressmakers persuade women to keep up the orgy of clothes buying which has gone on since last spring?

SIMPLE AND QUICKLY MADE

Applied Patch Embroidery Recommended as Excellent Occupation for the Hours of Leisure.

Simple work for busy hands seems to be in demand just at present. Applied patch embroidery is simple and is made quickly.

To make center pieces, cushion tops, scarfs, ties or chair backs, clothes bags, etc., plain linen or silk is needed, preferably linen.

Circles of applique are cut from cretonne. The design should be a large single flower or small spray in order to cut three-inch circles. The circles are basted to the cloth and stitched on by machine close to the edge. Chain stitch around each circle with coarse thread, then run through with a white thread in what is called the blanket stitch, or whip it straight along the last row of stitches, catching it over and over. The white rolls in with the black and is very pretty. A scroll is drawn in by cutting out a figure which looks well and then tracing it off on the cloth.

In a center piece six medallions are used, three in a pillow, three in each end of a scarf and three in a chair back. To finish the edge, outline it as the medallions were outlined. Dots which are often placed in the center of the scroll work are made of black in the satin stitch.

LOOK PRETTY IN WINDOW

Nasturtiums One of the Best Plants for the Purpose, and Will Thrive With Little Attention.

Nasturtiums can be grown in any warm room that has a sunny window. Strong sunshine is absolutely necessary; windows that have only a little sunshine, morning or afternoon, will not give good results.

The Pennsylvania department of agriculture recommends the filling of a pot six inches in diameter nearly full of soil; after it is pressed down there must be a space about three-quarters of an inch between the top of the soil and the top of the pot. This is to enable one to thoroughly water the soil.

In the center place three or four seeds of a climbing nasturtium, putting them about half an inch below the surface of the soil. Then place the pot in the sunny windows and provide a trellis of strings.

The important thing to remember is that while the seeds are germinating and the plant young, great care must be taken not to provide too much water and so sour the soil.

New peasant frocks are so simple they are almost unalike.

A Good Sign.

"Is the world really getting better?" "Of course it is," replied the cheerful individual. MADE $5,000 OUT OF HOGS

On His Western Canadian Farm. It is getting to be a long drawn out story, the way that Western Canadian farmers have made money. Many of them a few years ago, came to the country with little more than their few household effects, probably a team of horses and a cow or two, and sufficient money to do them for a few months, until they got a start. Hundreds of such can be pointed out, who today have splendid homes, well equipped farms, the latest machinery and an automobile. Here is the case of A. M. Merriam, formerly of Devil's Lake, N. D. He didn't leave there because the land was poor, or farming not a success, for all who know that country are aware that it is an excellent country. He wanted to expand, to take advantage of the cheap land that Western Canada offers. And that same story has appealed to hundreds of others who have had like success with Mr. Merriam. But his story, and he signs it, too, is:

"I came to Alberta in the Spring of 1900 from Devil's Lake, North Dakota, locating on my farm near Dalroy. "I arrived with six head of horses and two head of cattle and about $1,500. Since then, I have increased my live stock to seven head of horses, four head of cattle, and about one hundred head of hogs, a four-roomed house, good barn with all modern improvements; a feed grinder, elevator, chopper, fanning mill, etc. I have increased my original capital at least four times more since coming here.

"From the feeding of hogs during the last year, I had a gross return of $5,000.

"I first started grain farming, but during the past four years I have made hogs my specialty, and you may see by the foregoing statement for 1916 that I have not done so badly. "Land has increased at least twenty per cent in value during the past few years, now selling for from $25 to $35 per acre, with nominal taxes of about $27 a quarter section yearly.

"The climate here is better than Dakota in that we do not have so much dry wind; the winters are similar to Dakota.

"As for farming in general, the growing and feeding of live stock is more sure than the grain farming, if continued year after year, and if every farmer follows this he will be ahead of the grain growers in the long run. Taking everything into consideration, I feel satisfied with my success in Alberta."

(Sgd.) A. M. MERRIAM, Dalroy, Alberta, Jan. 12th, 1917.

There will be the greatest demand for farm labor in Western Canada during the early spring, and, in fact, all season until November, and the highest wages will be paid. There is an absolute guarantee by the Canadian Government that those who go to Canada for this purpose need have no fear of conscription.—Advertisement.

MOTHER! LOOK AT CHILD'S TONGUE

It—cross, feverish, constipated, give "California Syrup of Figs."

"A laxative today saves sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, which become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, breath bad, restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat or any other children's ailment, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs." then don't worry, because it is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleaning" is oftentimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any ailment.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask at the store for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Adv.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Quinn's Experience Ought to Help You Over the Critical Period.

Lowell, Mass.—"For the last three years I have been troubled with the Change of Life and the bad feelings common at that time. I was in a very nervous condition with headaches and pain—a good deal of the time so I was unfit to do my work. A friend asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and it has helped me in every way. I am not nearly so nervous, no headache or pain. I must say that Lydia E. Celery's Many Virtues.

There is but little enlightenment afforded in the every-day, culinary literature on the many uses of that delicious plant known as celery. Probably no other plant is so well adapted to cooking in so many different styles as celery, a vegetable that can also be eaten raw.

There is hardly any other vegetable of which every part can be brought to such good account. The trimmings are carefully preserved for similar uses, or to produce celery salt, which in itself forms an ideal table condiment.

GOOD ROADS

HOW FARMER WAS CONVERTED

Conversion Began When He Realized Value of Good Roads in Lessening Cost of Transportation.

When the good roads campaign followed close upon the wider use of automobiles many farmers grumbled about the prospect of high taxation, which they ascribed to an endeavor to benefit city motor owners at the expense of the rural community.

When the farmer began to buy automobiles himself he experienced a change of heart. His conversion really began when he realized the value of good roads in lessening the cost of transportation to himself. Rural mail delivery helped, the roads had to be better so that the carrier could "get through."

The farmer should be even more fully reconciled to the good roads development when he learns, as he may, that a large percentage of the license fees paid by both city and rural automobilists goes straight into the good roads fund.

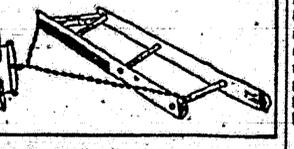

In the United States, 90 per cent of the license money goes into the building and maintenance of state and county roads, and this sum defrays 7 per cent of the total for road and bridge building. Steps in this direction have already been taken by most of the Canadian provinces, and good roads expenditures are gradually on the increase along with the increase in the number of automobiles.

SUGGESTION FOR GOOD ROAD

Easy Way to Put Roof on Dirt Road to Keep it Dragged After Draining and Dragging.

A correspondent of an eastern agricultural paper suggests that, inasmuch as it is water which makes mud roads the easy way to have good roads is to put a roof over them. There is this to be said for his suggestion, that if a roof were put over our country roads it would not only keep water off of it, but would give us a nice, shady drive during the six months of the year when we would appreciate it. The trouble is that the cost of putting up such a roof as he has in mind, and maintaining it, would far exceed the cost of making a really first-class hard-surfaced road, which would need no roof.

The easy way to put a roof over the dirt road is to keep it properly drained after it has been drained and graded, says Wallace's Farmer. Water is the most accommodating thing in the world. It will run off if you will give it half a chance. D. Ward King, the apostle of the split-log drag, put the regulatives of the good road into three words: Hard, oval, smooth. That is all there is to a good road.

Our problem in the corn belt is to get that kind of a road without paying more than it is worth to us. We can not have a hard, oval and smooth dirt road if we continue our stupid practice of piling up in the middle a mass of unpacked fresh dirt and sod. Last week we saw a very good road ruined by filling the center with fresh sod from the sides. That should be made a criminal offense. The sod holds the water just where we do not want it, and just where it will do the most damage. It should be thrown to one side, and nothing but clear dirt put on the road bed, and this should be packed firmly as soon as put on. The more grass roots and sod on the road, the harder to make it a good road.

Gradually, hard-surfaced roads will come in the neighborhood of cities and the larger towns of the state; but during the lifetime of the present generation at least, most of our roads must be made of dirt. If we can once really grasp the principle of putting a roof on the dirt road by the use of the drag and drainage, we will have made a long step forward. The next step will be to all the road, and thus make the road more nearly waterproof. Such a road properly maintained is the best and most comfortable road in the world; for it is not only hard, oval and smooth—but elastic as well.

FARM LOAN ACT.

From the Point of View of the Investor.

(By Frank R. Wilson, federal loan bureau, Washington, D. C.)

Farm lands have always been regarded as the safest security in the world. But loans made against farm lands have generally exacted a higher interest rate than loans on other good security.

There are several reasons for this. Such loans are not readily transferable, i. e., marketable. Farm loans are usually desired for long periods. A loan for less than five years is usually of little value to the farmer. If the loan is made for the purpose of buying land, the farmer's chance to pay it off is to make the money out of the land. It is against reason to expect that land will pay for itself in five years.

Well-managed commercial banks cannot make a business of lending money on farms and carrying the loans themselves. It is not good banking. It ties up their funds in permanent investments and if persisted in continually would ruin any bank. This fact limits the supply of local money for farm loans, and partially accounts for high interest rates on them.

Provides Needed Agency.

The farm lands of the United States constitute a great mass of valuable assets against which money ought to be borrowed at fair rates of interest. But it has been a chaotic mass of value. No agency has ever undertaken to assemble this mass of assets into negotiable form so that it could be readily handled as a marketable security.

Now the government steps in and provides this agency. It says to the farmer who wants to use his land as security:—

"You join a national farm loan association and contribute your mortgage to a great federal land bank pool of mortgages. We have provided the machinery for this purpose and adopted rules for its operation so that the interest of all will be safeguarded. When your mortgages are massed together, a federal land bank will take these mortgages and issue bonds against them; sell the bonds to investors, and re-lend the money to farmers. The pooled mortgages of the farmers of the United States will be security for every bond. The high character of this security means that people who have money to invest will jump at the chance to put their savings up against your security at a low rate of interest. We will let you have this money at actual cost to us, plus not to exceed 1 per cent to cover the cost of operating this money-assembling and money-lending machinery."

Attractive to the Investor.

Then Uncle Sam turns to the Investor and says:—

"We have enabled the farmers of the United States to give us their massed mortgages. We are offering you bonds which are in reality first mortgages against the farms of all who join this pool. It is the best security in the world, because every dollar a farmer borrows is represented by $2 worth of land plus the stock each farmer has purchased in his local association. To make these bonds even more attractive, so as to eventually give the farmer a lower interest rate, we have exempted them from all forms of taxation. Even Uncle Sam will not collect any tax from them, nor from the income upon them. No state or municipality may tax them. We have made these bonds in small denominations from $25 upward so their purchase will be easy among people with small savings, and we will have the bonds printed and engraved by the government bureau of engraving and printing to protect them against counterfeiting, and the United States secret service will watch over them."

So the farm loan act, in addition to providing money for land purchase and farm development, provides a new form of security which ought to become one of the most popular in existence, because it is based on the land value of the entire country.

Mill Employee at Eighty-Nine.

Lawrence, Mass., boasts of an eighty-nine-year-old mill worker, the Boston Globe states. His name is George Alsworth. He has been a mill operative in one capacity or other for 70 years. At ten years old he entered one of the big mills in Yorkshire, England, where he was born.

He came to America when he was twenty-three, and has worked in different mills in New England as a first-class weaver. For many years he was an overseer. At present Mr. Alsworth is employed in the Washington mill of the American Woolen company as a warp twister.

Mr. Alsworth's eighty-ninth birthday anniversary was celebrated by a full day's work, as usual, from seven o'clock in the morning to six o'clock at night.

No humbug! Apply few drops then just lift them away with fingers.

This new drug is an ether compound discovered by a Cincinnati chemist. It is called freezeone, and can now be obtained in tiny bottles as here shown at very little cost from any drug store. Just ask for freezeone. Apply a drop or two directly upon a tender corn or callus and instantly the soreness disappears. Shortly you will find the corn or callus so loose that you can lift it off, root and all, with the fingers.

Not a twinge of pain, soreness or irritation; not even the slightest smarting, either when applying freezeone or afterwards.

This drug doesn't eat up the corn or callus, but shrivels them so they loosen and come right out. It is no humbug! It works like a charm. For a few cents you can get rid of every hard corn, soft corn or corn between the toes, as well as painful calluses on bottom of your feet. If never disappoints and never humbugs or 'ndames. Waiting on Congress

Pending the meeting of congress, which will convene in extraordinary session next Monday, the 2nd, the people of the nation calmly await the announcement of that body on the momentous question of war with Germany. In the absence of a declaration by the war-making body, the government is clearing decks and making all preparations possible to meet every eventuality.

There will possibly be a divided opinion in congress as to the proper steps to be taken. One group will favor an out and out declaration of war against Germany; another, and larger group, will favor a declaration that a state of war exists between the United States and Germany, while still another group will be content with the passage of a resolution endorsing the steps already taken by the president to place the United States in a state of armed neutrality and authorizing further preparedness moves.

In the event no further overt act is committed by Germany, before congress convenes, the prevailing sentiment now seems to favor the declaration that a state of war exists. If, however, further submarine attacks are made upon our merchantmen it is rather difficult to see how congress can refrain from a plain declaration of war. On the other hand, should our merchantmen, which are now aimed, at- tack or sink a submarine, it is reasonably sure that a declaration of war would come from Germany. At any rate, the prospects for peace are growing less and less, and the government is preparing for the worst.

The Germans on the western front are still engaged in that "strategical" retreat.

The big state prohibition campaign is now on, and both sides are organizing for the real battle that takes place November 6.

It is said that the Germans are preparing for a big drive against the Russians. Probably to punish the Muscovits for removing the Czar's crown.

The United States failed to get Villa, but the failure was worth all it cost. It was the cause of this government securing 100,000 trained men, which may be needed soon for a bigger task.

The British admiralty asserts that unrestricted submarine warfare sinks, at its worst, only one vessel out of one hundred. If that estimate is correct, few Germans will live long enough to see England starved out.

When the Kaiser, and all that name implies, is thoroughly overwhelmed, a more prosperous and generous Germany will arise. The German people have a right, and will occupy a place "in the sun," but it will be in spite of Kaiser Wilhelm and the Prussian aristocracy.

For the first time since the war began, the Germans are giving up territory. The territory occupied the past two years. Some seem to think this the beginning of the end, but it must not be forgotten that Germany still has the finest army in the world and her ability to continue the war depends almost wholly upon whether or not she has sufficient food to carry her over until this year's harvest.

Inasmuch as Alamogordo, Tularosa, Fort Stanton, Roswell, Vaughan, E. P. & S. W. El Paso shop team and E. P. & S. W. Tucumcari shop team are organizing, this team should hurry into form. The players wish to cooperate with the Commercial Club and elect a captain and manager, and ask their solicitation.

KELLY & SON

I have often heard it stated and I guess it's estimated that a man these days is rated by the dough he tucks away. Most folks look with approbation on the fellow with stagnation. When it comes to circulation of the coin of U. S. A. Bankers preach to you that saving will in time become a craving. And advise that you start shaving your expenses—good intent. I don't say they're falsifying, for it must be satisfying. To be sure you're money's lying in the bank at four per cent. I admit we get jealous when the guy with the bank book tells us that state law should compel us to save so much coin each day. Though firm in my intention, I can't save this coin they mention. Without finding some invention to expand my monthly pay. But we might start being thrifty, so that by the time we're fifty there will be a balance nifty, where there never was before. Why not have ourselves sorrow that assails us when we borrow. Let's just start right, in tomorrow and keep saving evermore.

The Codling Moth

An executive study of the codling moth in New Mexico has been published by the United States Department of Agriculture as a professional paper, Bulletin No. 429, by A. L. Quaintance and E. W. Geyer. This study, which was carried on by the Bureau of Entomology in the Pecos Valley, was designed to furnish needed information to the orchardists in this valley and throughout the southwest generally which would assist them in controlling this destructive pest. In the Pecos Valley, the codling moth is able to develop three and probably four broods of larvae each season and is, therefore, extremely injurious to the fruit industry in that section. While the experiments have been continued to the Pecos Valley it is believed that their results will be of benefit to fruit growers in the southwest generally.

Don Payne, route agent for Wells Fargo & Co., and Bert Rawlings, traveling auditor of the P. & S. W., spent Monday night in Carrizozo on company business.

Those who failed to make the necessary grade in the last examination will have a chance to make good at one of the next two examinations, in April or in May. The above mentioned young people will now have opportunity to find out how well they have done the work covered by these examinations conducted under the regulations of the State Department of Education. Wishing each of these young people success in their endeavors, I am,

Yours most cordially, J. E. KOONCK, Supt. of Schools of Lincoln Co.

vastly expanded service

An Economic Problem

While the cost of nearly every necessity of life has been steadily increasing, the rates for telephone service have remained practically the same.

The buyer of foodstuffs, although paying much more, receives but sixteen ounces to the pound. On the other hand, the telephone user is constantly receiving more and better service and paying the same or even a less rate than he did a few years ago.

Gradually the value of telephone service has been increased by a constant increase in the number of telephones added to the system and by improvements and refinements in the telephone art.

Steadily, too, the cost of every piece of equipment and of all supplies, copper wire, iron wire, poles, hardware, etc., used in the business of furnishing service, has increased enormously.

In other words, our revenues have not increased in proportion to increased value of the service or in proportion to increased cost of furnishing the service.

This presents a serious problem in which the public and the Company are mutually interested.

After the introduction to Johnson his hand had gone mechanically to his coat pocket. The demon at his ear was whispering "kill kill!" and his fingers whistled and found the weapon. While he was listening with the outward ear to Bainbridge's cheerful reminiscences, the little minutes were arranging themselves; and he saw where Broffin would step, and was careful to mark that none of the bystanders would be in range. He would wait until there could be no possibility of missing; then he would fire—from the pocket.

It was Johnson who broke the spell. While Bainbridge was insisting that Griswold should come in and make a social third at the hotel dinner table, the teller picked up his hand-bag and mounted the steps. Griswold's brain fell into halves. With one of them he was making excuses to the newspaper man; with the other he saw Broffin stop Johnson and draw him aside.

What the detective was saying was only too plainly evident. Johnson wheeled short to face the sidewalk group, and Griswold could feel in every fiber of him the searching scrutiny to which he was being subjected. When he stole a glance at the pair on the porch, Johnson was shaking his head slowly; and he did it again after a second thoughtful stare. Griswold, missing completely now what Bainbridge was saying, overheard the teller's low-toned rejoinder to the detective's urgings. "It's no use, Mr. Broffin; I'd have to swear positively to you, you know, and I couldn't do that. No, I don't want to hear your corroborative evidence; it might make me see a resemblance where there is none. Wait until Mr. Galbraith recovers; he's your man."

Griswold hardly knew how he made shift to get away from Bainbridge finally; but when it was done, and he was crossing the little triangular park which filled the angle between the business squares and the lake-fronting residences across, he was sweating profusely, and the departing four-manly was leaving him weak and tremulous.

Passing the stone-basined fountain in the middle of the park he stopped, jerked the pistol from his pocket, spilled the cartridges from its magazine, and stooped to prop for a loose stone in the walk border. With the fountain base for an anvil and the looked border stone for a hammer he beat the weapon into shapeless inutilty and flung it away.

"God knows whom I shall be tempted to kill, next!" he groaned; and the trembling fit was still unnerving him when he went on to keep the appointment made by Charlotte Farnham.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Dust and Ashes.
A full moon, blood red from the smoke of forest fires far to the eastward, was rising over the Wahaska hills when Griswold unlatched the gate of the Farnham inclosure and passed quickly on the walk.

Since the summoning note had stressed the urgency, he was not surprised to find the writer of it awaiting him in his welcoming there was a curious mingling of constraint and impatience, and he was moved to marvel. Miss Farnham's outlook upon life, the point of view of the ideally well balanced, was uniformly poised and self-contained, and he was wondering if some fresh entanglement were threatening when she motioned him to a seat and placed her own chair so that the light from the sitting-room windows would leave her in the shadow.

"You had my note?" she began.
"Yes, it came while I was away from the hotel, and the regular trip of the inn brako was the first conveyance I could catch. Am I late?"

Her reply was qualified. "That remains to be seen."

There was a hesitant pause, and then she went on: "Do you know why I sent for you to come?"

"No, not definitely."

"I was hoping you would know; it would make it easier for me. You owe me something, Mr. Griswold."

"I owe you a great deal," he admitted, warmly. "It is hardly putting it too strong to say that you have made some part of my work possible which would otherwise have been impossible."

"I didn't mean that," she dissented, with a touch of cool scorn. "I have no special ambition to figure as a character, however admirable, in a book. Your obligation doesn't lie in the literary field; it is real—and personal. You have done me a great injustice, and it seems to have been carefully premeditated."

The blow was so sudden and so calmly driven home that Griswold gasped.

"An injustice—to you?" he protested, but she would not let him go on.

"Yes, at first, I thought it was only a coincidence—your coming to Wahaska—but now I know better. You came here in goodness knows what spirit of reckless bravado, because it was my home; and you made the decision apparently without any consideration for me; without any thought of the embarrassments and difficulties in which it might involve me."

Truly, the heavens had fallen and the solid earth was reeling! Griswold lay back in the deep lounging chair and fought manfully to retain some little hold upon the anchorings. Could this be his ideal; the woman whom he had set so high above all others in the scale of heroic faultlessness and sublime devotion to principle? And she was so much a slave of the conventional as to be able to tell him coldly that she had recognized him again, and that her chief concern was the embarrassment it was causing her? Before he could gather the words for any adequate rejoinder, she was going on pointedly:

"You have done everything you could to make the involvement complete. You have made friends of my friends, and you came here as a friend of my father. You have drawn Edward Raymer into the entanglement and helped him with the stolen money. In every way you have sought to make it more and more impossible for me to give information against you—and you have succeeded. I can't do it now, without facing a scandal that would never die in a small place like this, and without bringing trouble and ruin upon a family of our nearest friends. And that is why I sent for you today; and why I say you owe me something."

Griswold was sitting up again, and he had recovered some small measure of self-possession.

"I certainly owe you many apologies, at least," he said, ironically. "I have really been doing you a great injustice, Miss Farnham—a very grave injustice, though not exactly of the kind you mention. I think I have been misapprehending you from the beginning. How long have you known me as the man who is wanted in New Orleans?"

"A long time; though I tried not to believe it at first. It seemed incredible that the man I had spoken to on the Belle Julie would come here and put me in such a false position."

"Good heavens!" he broke out; "in your position all you have been thinking of is that the only reason why you haven't set the dogs on me?"

"It is the chief reason why I couldn't afford to do anything more than I have done. Goodness knows, I have tried in every way to warn you, even to pointing out the man whose shadowing you. To do it, I have had to deceive my father. I have been hoping that you would understand and go away."

"Wait a minute," he commanded. "Let me get it straight; you still believe that the thing I did was a criminal thing?"

"We needn't go into that part of it again," she returned, with a sort of placid impatience. "Once I thought that there might be some way in which you had justified yourself to yourself, but now—"

"That isn't the point," he interrupted roughly. "What I want to know is this: Do you still believe it is a crime?"

"Of course, it is a crime; I know it. You know it, all the world knows it. Again he sat back and took time to gather up a few of the scattered shards and fragments. When he spoke it was to say: "I think the debt is on the other side, Miss Charlotte; I think you owe me something. You probably won't understand when I say that you have robbed me of a very precious thing—my faith in the ultimate goodness of a good woman. You believe you have always believed—that I am a criminal; and yet you have been weak enough to let expediency seal your lips. I am truer to my code than you are to yours, as you shall see at the day ever comes when I shall be convinced that I did wrong. But that is neither here nor there. You sent for me; what is it that you want me to do?"

"I want to give you one more chance to disappoint the Wahaska gossip," she replied, entirely unmoved, as if doomed by his harsh arraignment. "Do you know why this man Broffin is still waiting?"

"I can guess. He is taking a long chance on the chapter of accidents,"

"Not altogether. Three days ago, Mr. Galbraith had Miss Grierson telegraph to New Orleans for some one of the bank officials. Yesterday I learned that the man who is coming is the teller who waited on me and who gave you the money. As soon as I heard that, I began to try to find you."

Griswold did not tell her that the danger she feared was a danger past. "Go on," he prompted.

"You are no longer safe in Wahaska," she asserted. "The teller can identify you, and the detective will give him the opportunity. That is doubtless what he is waiting for."

"And you would suggest that I make a run for it? Is that why you sent for me?"

"It is. You are tempting fate by staying; and, notwithstanding what you have said, I still insist that you owe me something. There is a fast train west at ten o'clock. If you need ready money—"

Griswold laughed. It had gone beyond the tragic and was fast lapsing into comedy, farce.

"We are each of us appearing in a new role tonight, Miss Farnham," he said, with sardonic humor; "I as the hunted criminal, and you as the equally culpable accessory after the fact. If I run away, what shall be done with the 'swag,' the bulk of which, as you know, is tied up in Raymer's business?"

"I have thought of that," she returned calmly, "and that is another reason why you shouldn't let them take you. Right or wrong, you have incurred a fresh responsibility in your dealings with Mr. Raymer; and Edward, who is perfectly innocent, must be protected in some way."

It was not in human nature to resist the temptation to strike back.

"I have told Raymer how he can most successfully underwrite his financial risk," he said, with malice intentional.

"How?"

"By marrying Miss Grierson."

He had touched the springs of anger at last.

"That woman!" she broke out. And then: "If you have said that to Edward Raymer, I shall never forgive you as long as I live! It is your affair to secure Edward against loss in the money matter—your own individual responsibility. Mr. Griswold, He accepted the money in good faith, and—"

Again Griswold gave place to the caustic humor and finished for her.

"—And, though it is stolen money, it must not be taken away from him. Once, when I was even more foolish than I am now, I said of you that you would be a fitting heroine in a story in which the hero should be a man who might need to borrow a conscience. It's quite the other way around."

"We needn't quarrel," she said, retreating again behind the barrier of cold reserve. "I suppose I have given you the right to say disagreeable things to me, if you choose to assert it. But we are wasting time which may be very precious. Will you go away, as I have suggested?"

He found his hat and got upon his feet rather unsteadily.

"I don't know; possibly I shall. But in any event, you needn't borrow any more trouble, either on your own account, or on Raymer's. By the merest chance, I met Johnson, the teller you speak of, a few minutes ago at the Winnabago house and was introduced to him. He didn't know me, then, or later, when Broffin was telling him that he ought to know me. Hence, the matter rests as it did before—between you and Mr. Galbraith."

"Mr. Galbraith?"

"Yes. That was a danger past, too, a short time ago. I met him, socially, and he didn't recognize me. Afterward, Broffin pointed me out to him, and again he failed to identify me. But the other day, after I had pulled him out of the lake, he remembered. I've been waiting to see what he will do."

"He will do nothing. You saved his life."

Griswold shook his head.

"I am still man enough to hope that he won't let the bit of personal service make him compound a felony."

"Why do you call it that?" she demanded.

"Because, from his point of view, and yours, that is precisely what it is; and it is what you are doing, Miss Farnham. I, the criminal, say this to you. You should have given me up the moment you recognized me. That is your creed, and you should have lived up to it. Since you haven't, you have wronged yourself and have made me the poorer by a thing that—"

"Stop!" she cried, standing up to face him. "Do you mean to tell me that you are ungrateful enough to—"

"No; ingratitude isn't quite the word. I'm just sorry; with the sorrow you have when you look for something that you have a right to expect, and find that it isn't there; that it has never been there; that it isn't anywhere. You have hurt me, and you have hurt yourself; but there is still a chance for you. When I am gone, go to the telephone and call Broffin at the Winnabago house. You can tell him that he will find me at my room. Good-by."

He was half way to the foot of Fabb-view avenue, striding along moonily with his head down and his hands behind him, when he collided violently with Raymer going in the opposite direction. The shock was so unexpected that Griswold would have been knocked down if the muscular young iron founder had not caught him promptly. At the saving instant came mutual recognition.

"Hello, there!" said Raymer. "You are the very man I've been looking for. Charlotte wants to see you."

"Not now," she doesn't," was the rather grim contradiction. "I have just left her."

"Oh."

There was a pause, and then Griswold cut in morosely.

"So you did take my way out of the labor trouble, after all, didn't you?"

Raymer looked away.

"I don't know just how you'd like to have me answer that, Kenneth. How much, or how little, do you know of what happened?"

"Nothing at all"—shortly.

"Well, it was Margery who wrought the miracle, of course—I don't know, yet, just how she did it; but it was done, and done right."

"And you have asked her to marry you?"

"Suffering Scott! how you do come at a man! Yes, I asked her, if you've got to know."

"Well!" snapped Griswold.

"She—she turned me down, Kenneth; got up and walked all over me. That's a horrible thing to make me say, but it's the truth."

"I don't understand it, Raymer. Was it the No that means No?"

"I don't understand it, either," returned the iron founder, with grave naivete. "And, yes, I guess she meant it. But that reminds me. She knew I was looking for you and she gave me a note—let me see, I've got it here somewhere; oh, yes, here it is—gilt monogram and all."

Griswold took the note and pocketed it without comment and without looking at it.

"Were you going to Doctor Bertie's?" he asked.

"I was. Have you any objection?"

"Not the least in the world. It's a good place for you to go just now, and I guess you are the right man for the place. Good-night."

At the next corner where there was an electric light, Griswold stopped and opened the monogrammed envelope. The enclosure was a single sheet of perfumed note paper upon which, without date, address or signature was written the line:

"Mr. Galbraith is better—and he is grateful."

"You have just come from Doctor Bertie's?" she inquired.

"And Charlotte doesn't want to marry you?"

"Heavens and earth!" he exploded. "Who put the idea into your head that I wanted to marry her?"

"You did"—calmly.

"Then, for pity's sake, let me take it out, quick. If I were the last man on earth, Miss Farnham wouldn't marry me; and if she were the last woman, I think I'd go down myself in the lake!"

The young woman of the many metamorphoses was laughing again, and this time the laugh was a letter-perfect imitation of a schoolgirl's giggle.

"My!" she said. "How dreadfully hard she must have sat on you!"

"Please don't laugh," he pleaded; "unless you are the heartless kind of person who would laugh at a funeral. I'm down under the hoofs of the horses, at last, Margery, girl. Before you and laugh in his face. Are you glad—or sorry?"

His answer was the answer of the man who was, for the time being, neither the moralist nor the criminal. With a swift outreaching he drew her to him, crushed her in his arms, covered her face with kisses.

"I am glad—glad that I am your lover," he whispered, passionately. "God, girl! but you are a woman to die for! No, not yet!—when she would have slipped out of his arms—believe me, Margery; there has never been anyone else—not for a moment. But I thought it was Raymer; and for your sake and his I could have stepped aside. That is the one decent thing I have done in all this devilish business. Are you listening?"

She had stopped struggling, and was hiding her face on his shoulder. He felt her quick little nod and went on.

"Since you know the one decent thing, you must know all the horrible things, too. A dozen times I have been a murderer in heart."

She looked up quickly.

"No, boy, I'll never believe that—never!"

"Wait," he said. "It was there this evening—just a little while ago. Miss Farnham and Galbraith were not the only ones I had to fear; there was another; the teller who got here from New Orleans on the seven-forty-five train. You didn't know about him, did you? He came, and an old newspaper friend of mine was with him. I stumbled upon them on the sidewalk in front of the Winnabago house; and Broffin was there, too. We were introduced, the teller and I, and Broffin was so sure he had me that he got his handcuffs out and was opening them."

Margery shuddered and hid her face again. "And I—I didn't know!" she gasped.

"Luck was with me again," he continued. "Johnson didn't remember me; refused to do so even when Broffin stopped him and tried to tell him who I was. I had a pistol in my pocket, and it was aimed at Broffin. If he had made a move to take me, I should certainly have killed him."

She sat up suddenly.

"Give me that pistol, Kenneth—give it to me now!"

"I can't," he confessed, shamefacedly. "When it was all over, I smashed the pistol with a stone and threw it away."

She drew a long breath. "Is that all?" she asked.

"All but one thing; the worst of them all . . . that day in the bank vault—"

The daughter of men buried her face on his shoulder again at that. "Don't!" she begged. "You couldn't help it, boy; I made you do it—meaning to Therol and I said that wild horse should never drag it out of me!"

Again he said, "Wait," and covered the shining head on his shoulder with a caressing hand. "It wasn't love then, little girl; that's what it breaks my heart to tell you—it was just mad men. And it wasn't clean; you've got to know that, too."

She nodded her head violently. "I know," she murmured; "I know it at the time, and that was what made me cry. But now it's—it's different isn't it, boy? now you—"

"You have heard it all, Margery. You know what I thought I was, and what I have turned out to be. I'm afraid I am just a common crook, after all; there doesn't seem to be standing room anywhere else for me. But every living fiber of me, the good and the bad, loves you—loves you!"

"What do I care for anything else?" she flashed back. "You are you, Kenneth, dear; that is all I know, and all I care for. If you had stolen all the money in the world, and had killed a dozen men to make your get-away, I would be just the same. Only—"

"Only what?" he demanded feebly.

"It would be just the same to me; but—but . . . Oh, boy, dear! it will never, never be the same to you!"

"—I don't understand," he stammered.

"Some day you will. You call your self a crook—man, man! there isn't a crooked drop of blood in you! Don't I know? You persuaded yourself that you had a right to take this money; perhaps you did have; I don't say you didn't. When I see anything I want, I reach out and take it, if I can—and I guess most people would, if they dared. But you are different; you are good. Some day all these dreadful things that have come tagging along after the fact will rise up and gnaw their teeth at you and tell you that it was a sin, a crime. And then—oh, boy, dear! then I shall lose you!"

Very gently he took her in his arms again; and for a time all things sensible and tangible, the deserted driveway, and the plashing of the little waves on the sands, the staring moonlight and the stenciled shadows of the oaks, were forgotten in the great soul-healing silence that wrapped them about and enveloped them.

An American tourist had been boasting again in the village inn, says London Tit-Bits.

"Talking of scarecrows," he said, with a drawl, "why, my father once put one up, and it frightened the crows so much that not one entered the field again for a year."

He looked triumphantly around his audience. Surely that had settled those country bumpkins.

But he was to meet his match.

"That's nothing," retorted one farmer. "A neighbor of mine once put a scarecrow into his potato patch and it terrified the birds so much that one rascal of a crow who had stolen some potatoes came next day and put them back."

NEWS and GOSSIP OF WASHINGTON

Washington Police Guarding All Public Buildings

WASHINGTON.—"All that can be done is being done," is about the only thing Maj. Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of police, is willing to say about the safeguarding of public buildings, officials of this country and representatives of the several belligerent nations in Washington.

The guard at the White House has been increased to a considerable extent, operatives of the United States secret service working in conjunction with Major Pullman's force, and slight increases have been made at other places.

Uniformed policemen on duty at the entrance to the White House grounds are under strict orders to admit only members of the president's family and persons with whom the president has engagements. Others are not admitted, except under special orders.

Policemen are on duty in the grounds about the White House during the entire 24 hours of each day, and at the state, war and navy and treasury buildings identity of callers has to be established before admittance is gained.

There is a policeman on guard at each entrance to the navy yard grounds to enforce compliance with the orders of Rear Admiral J. H. Glennon, commandant, working with marines stationed at the gates.

Members of the police force have been doing extra duty at or near the homes of the representatives of the belligerent countries since the beginning of hostilities, and the home of Secretary Lansing also has been guarded during most of that time. Recent developments suggested the advisability of paying more attention to the home of the secretary of state.

Lost-Treasure Hunters of the National Capital

EVERY morning at daybreak there creeps forth into the gray light of the dawn a little pack of men and boys who prow about the deserted streets of Washington in quest of money, watches, rings, and valuables of every description which were lost during the night or the day before.

As soon as the newspapers make their appearance these "trovatores" or finders either buy or purloin one and hastily scan the "Lost" column. Then they make a beeline for a certain part of the city in search of that article which they imagine they will find surest and quickest. These "finders," whose corporation is a clone one, work in morning and afternoon shifts and formerly used to pool their interests.

This arrangement was abandoned sometime ago because of the frequent disputes which arose regarding the division of the spoils. The afternoon "finders" get their "dope" from the afternoon papers and are, as a rule, beginners. Those who take care of the morning "work" are experts and initiated in the art of "locating" and "finding."

A fat wallet dropped by some gentleman of leisure who perchance had indulged too liberally; a brooch of brilliants fallen from the bodice or handbag of some fair occupant of a theater box as she passed by her limousine; a scarf pin loosened from the cravat of some "sport," articles of little intrinsic value which will bring big rewards because of the sentimental value placed on them by the loser, are all the gain of the diligent searchers, the "trovatores" of Washington.

The finder takes his chances and is good-natured about it. He may find a crisp $1 bill within three blocks of his roost, or he may hit upon a fat roll five minutes after he has rubbed the sleep out of his eyes. Again he might go for a whole week without finding anything but a dog collar, a broken pipe or a cheap fake jewelry ring. When newsboys begin shouting "paper," the searcher buys, borrows or steals one. He must have one, the paper is his stock in trade.

By the time the city is up and snafu, the morning finders have finished their labor, and slunk out of sight, disappearing in some remote resort known only to themselves and their pals and confidants. They take it easy for the rest of the day and may be seen spending their profits in the evening at some cheap theater or Chinese chop suey "joint."

Blanton of Texas Promises to Stir Up Congress

THE next congress is due to have some thrills, if Thomas Blanton of Texas carries out his threats. Mr. Blanton succeeds Cyclone Davis, who was not renominated, and seems to be possessed of some of Cyclone's characteristics.

Mr. Blanton had never been closer to Washington than the Texas border at the time of the election, but he had read all about congress, and had pre-conceived ideas of what he proposed to do when he got there, and he was sure of getting there. He read in the papers that the senate and house convened at 12 o'clock, and sometimes adjourned as early as five. This, Mr. Blanton announced on the stump, was practically obtaining a salary under false pretenses. So he declared emphatically in his pre-election speeches that he believed that congress should do a good day's work six days a week, whether they were disposed so or not. "I believe," he said, "that when the laboring man on the railroad, on the farm and in the factories is doing his hardest work, the congressmen, whom we elect and whom we pay our hard-earned coin, should be at work also. I believe that the luxury of the ruling classes should be relegated to the scrap heap. Boys, when I am elected by your help I propose to work for a schedule of hours that will see congress convene at eight o'clock every morning and adjourn at six o'clock every night."

Mr. Blanton also said on the stump that he would see to it that Joe Tumulty's job at the White House is vacated as soon as he arrives in Washington, and that the position of secretary to the president be filled by a national election. All postmasters, he says, will be or should be fired from office and the positions filled by election.

Stuttering Over "Long Distance" Too Expensive

THERE is a certain member of congress who stutters except when he makes a speech or talks over the telephone. Recently he had occasion to call upon a friend in Seattle on a matter of personal importance. When the trans-continental connection had been made the man in Seattle shouted through the phone:

"Who is talking?"
"This is Tom Smith," answered the congressman at the capital end of the wire.
"No, it is not Tom Smith," snapped the man in Seattle.
"Yes, it is Tom Smith," I tell you," the congressman fairly bellowed.
"Why do you doubt it?"
"Why, Tom Smith stutters."

"Darn it, do you think I am going to stutter at a dollar a word?" the congressman retorted, as he banged down the phone in disgust.

Speaking of stuttering, it is not generally known that the high falsetto note in former President Roosevelt's voice, noticeable particularly when he is at the height of an oratorical outburst, is traceable to the fact that in his youth the Colonel stammered badly. By sheer will power he cured himself of the embarrassing affliction, but in moments of excitement his voice breaks despite his supreme endeavor to prevent it.
