OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 21

CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1920

NUMBER 42

The Political Pot is Simmering

Reports from the east are to the effect that the people in the thickly populated centers are very much enthused over the political situation. The great question is whether we, as a nation, are to associate ourselves with the thirty-nine most progressive nations of the world that form the League of Nations, for mutual protection and for the prevention of further wars, such as the one from which we are just recovering, and make the whole world a safe place in which to live, or join hands with revolutionary Mexico, Bolsheviki Russia and the bloody Turk. That is the principal question in this campaign, and more particularly so since Senator Harding has announced that he has turned his back on the League; that he doesn't believe in reservations or interpretations, but in rejection. The issue is, at last, well defined, and the battle is expected, to wax warmer as election approaches.

Someone has expressed the situation a little more epigrammatically by putting the situation this way: "Cox and Civilization versus Harding and Hell." Democrats assert that Cox is in the lead and that when the votes have been counted that it will be shown that the people endorse peace, progress and prosperity as preached by Cox. On the other hand, to use the expression of an enthusiastic Republican, "All hell can't beat Harding!" So there you are.

However, since Senator Harding has come out positively against the League, a decided change has become noticeable in the ranks of those who were supporting him. In fact, large bodies of women in the west have notified the senator that he has alienated the women vote by taking such a position, and in the east, many of the leading Republicans have announced their intention to support Cox. There appears, in fact, to be a ground swell against the Republican nominee since Senator Harding's Nebraska declarations, and it begins to look like the senatorial candidate will have to execute another summersault in order to stem the tide of revolt that so unmistakably shows itself.

The hardest fought and most active campaign in the state of

New Mexico is in progress, with the odds easily in favor of the Democratic ticket, headed by Judge R. H. Hanna. This has been brought about by the high handed manner in which a few—a very few—Republicans handled the Republican state convention at Albuquerque, which has produced the most serious break in Republican ranks in the history of the state. Many counties hitherto strongly Republican are in the doubtful column, and well informed Republicans concede the Democrats will sweep some of them. This is due to two quite substantial reasons, the first of which is that the ticket headed by Judge Hanna is regarded as possessing all the qualifications that go to make up an honest and capable administration of public affairs, and the second is due to the distrust of the men behind the Republican state ticket—a distrust so widespread in the Republican party that the managers of that party despair of electing their ticket and are now turning their attention to the election of a legislature, particularly the senate, so that they may be able to block the reforms that are demanded in the Democratic platform and which are receiving the hearty support of Republicans throughout the state. "The poorest citizen of America is the one who always votes the straight ticket, not liberal, not open-minded." So spoke Judge Hanna in a short address before the High School here Monday, and that is the sentiment that is governing a large portion of the Republican in New Mexico—they are tired of the manner in which the state has been run, want a change and know the only way to get it is to turn down the nominees on the state Republican ticket.

Legislative candidates are active throughout the state, and for the first time since statehood the Democrats feel that their opportunity to win a majority of the seats in the legislature has come; and yet they know that is practically impossible, by reason of the unfair manner in which the state was districted, but for the fact that Republicans, realizing the necessity for a change, are joining hands with them in the hope of bringing about a rule of the people, which has not existed since the advent of statehood. They, (these independent Re-

THE PEOPLES' CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR

JUDGE RICHARD H. HANNA

Judge Hanna is making the fight for the People of New Mexico. The issues are:

1. Shall the Mines pay their just proportion of the State's taxes!
2. Shall W. A. Hawkins, author of the infamous Personal Injuries Law, repealed by Congress, and sponsor for the equally infamous Mine Tax Law, John M. Sully, general manager of the Chino, and H. O. Burann, field marshall for the tax-dodging interests, continue to run the state?
3. Shall the iniquitous gerrymander of legislative districts by which these men control the legislature and write the laws, be allowed to continue?

Hanna is fighting for lower taxes on the common people and for higher taxes from the mines, so that we may have better roads and better schools and better teachers.

W. A. Hawkins, the big boss of them all, speaking before the Special tax commission, argued against raising mine taxes, but advocated taxation of all leases—leases of land for oil, for grazing, and leasing of business houses and residences.

W. A. Hawkins spoke in opposition to the effort to secure from Congress cessation of the unreserved public lands to the state, by which from lease or sale the state could have an annual income of not less than $2,000,000.

To prevent increase of mine taxes and to impose taxes on leases an effort is being made to elect Judge Mechem governor, and to pack the State Senate with corporation attorneys and mine owners.

Hanna is for the square deal—VOTE FOR HIM.

publicans) don't want to see the hands of Judge Hanna tied—don't want to see him confronted with a hostile legislature, and are therefore going the "whole way," going to support the Democratic nominees for the legislature, or independent Republicans who stand for the same principles for which these Republicans are fighting—good government.

The county campaign is also taking a swift pace, and will grow warmer as election day approaches. The candidates of both parties are in the field, and every nook and corner of the county will be visited before the campaign ends. The voters will not lack an opportunity to make an acquaintance with the county nominees and they will have the best means of finding who are the proper men for the offices in the county. This county is close, but conditions seem to favor the nominees of the Democratic party, for the reason that the ticket is composed of good men and men acquainted with the duties of the offices for which they are asking the suffrage of the people. Good reason exists for this belief and well informed citizens of the county feel that the 2nd of November will justify the prediction.

Democratic Headquarters

Democratic headquarters were opened last week in Barber & Bonham's law office, east of the First National Bank, and the party is getting lined up for the coming election. Woman voters are especially urged to visit the

The League of Nations and the Monroe Doctrine

Every great step in human progress has met with opposition. Washington faced it, Lincoln faced it, Wilson faces it.

When the Constitution of the United States was under consideration, it was violently opposed in many quarters on the ground that, if adopted, the boys of North Carolina might be sent to help quell disorder in Maine.

When the Monroe Doctrine was under consideration, the same kind of people had visions of America's young men dying on the battle fields of South America to maintain this doctrine.

Now we have the League of Nations issue with the same reactionaries stating that our boys will be sent overseas to help settle European quarrels.

Without a League of Nations two million of our boys, were sent overseas and two million others were ready to go overseas. With a League of Nations future wars will be well nigh impossible and America will never again see four million of its men under arms.

Governor Cox has declared that he will present the League of Nations to Congress as soon as he can do so. Senator Harding has pledged himself to "scrap the measure."

The covenant of the League of Nations is in the hands of the President. His action is necessary to bring it before Congress. Governor Cox promises to do this. Senator Harding says that the League is dead. The issue is clear-cut. It is either the League or the boys of North Carolina and the boys of Maine.

The Deer and Turkey Season

Next Wednesday, Oct. 20, will open the hunting season for large game. It is said that there are more deer in the mountains this year than for several years past, also wild turkey; but, notwithstanding our stringent game laws, much large game is killed before the season opens. In speaking to a resident of Nogal Canyon this week, it was learned that out of five flocks of turkeys in his neighborhood all summer, about 169 in all, in riding through the hills recently he saw only about half a dozen birds. What became of the others he is at a loss to know, but is inclined to believe they were bagged by "sooners." This may be so, but turkeys change their habitat, and the ones referred to may have only moved to some other place in the mountains, and will be located after October 29 by the "sports." Coyotes and other predatory animals account for a large number of young turkeys; those living in the mountains get an occasional gobble for a Sunday dinner, as they believe they are entitled to, from the amount of damage done their crops, without contributing a dollar or two to the state for the privilege. But the farmers and ranchmen protect the young birds by making war on their natural enemies—the coyote and wild cat. We believe there is sufficient game in the mountains to provide ample sport for the gunners this fall.

The Last Chance

October 22 will be your last chance to register, if you intend to vote on November 2. See that your name is on the register. The books are now open at the Treasurer's office, court house; at the Trading Company's store and at the Sanitary Market. The registration committee is composed of Harry G. Norman, Frank Lesnet and Ben Lujan. You have seven days yet. Don't wait until it is too late. If you are not registered, you will not be allowed to vote, except upon an affidavit supported by the affidavits of two witnesses.

Prominent Democrats Here

Senator A. A. Jones and Colonel J. D. Atwood were here Friday night and addressed a large assemblage at the K. P. Hall. Senator Jones confined his remarks, almost exclusively, to the League of Nations, explaining thoroughly the various articles in the covenant. It was a plain, strong explanation of the League and removed many doubts that existed in the minds of some of the people who had been misinformed on the question Col. Atwood, who is the Democratic nominee for Lieutenant Governor, spoke briefly on state affairs and his remarks were quite well received.

Monday night, in the same hall, another good crowd was present and was addressed by Judge R. H. Hanna, Democratic candidate for governor; Antonio Lucero, nominee of the same party for congress, and Robert E. Putney, a well known business man of Albuquerque. Judge Hanna gave his attention to state affairs and exposed the unjust system of taxation existing in New Mexico and condemned the few men responsible for the condition. He was followed by Mr. Lucero who made a highly appreciated talk on both state and national affairs. Then followed Bob Putney, who, as he admitted, was called by some the comedian of the party, but also the tragedian by others, and he kept the crowd in an uproar during the time he was talking. These men called a spade a spade, and, naturally, ran counter to somebody's feelings in the audience, but that could scarcely be avoided, and the people can stop such talk by putting an end to the cause of it. That they will do so on the 2nd of November seems so evident that the only question is as to how big a majority Judge Hanna and associates will have.

A wind that kept things humming all day Wednesday throughout this section was followed at night by rain and snow. The nearby hills were covered by snow yesterday morning and a heavy fall of snow is reported in the Corona country.

Synopsis.—Adventures and rock-throwing, rather than criminal, and excited by liquor, Curly Flandrau and his chum, Mac, both practically new boys, become involved in a hair-raising adventure. Disposition of the stolen stock in the town of Saguache, Ariz., the band separates. Mac is killed by a posse and Curly taken captive, after he has shot one and himself been wounded. The man shot is Luck Cullison, a former fighting sheriff. Cullison's friends determine to track Curly as an example to cattle thieves. With the rope around his neck he is saved by the intervention of Kate Cullison, Luck's daughter. Luck questions the boy concerning a notorious outlaw, Hoopie Stone, real leader of the outlaws. Flandrau learns that Hoopie Stone is Cullison's bitter enemy and exercises a helpful influence over the ex-hermit's son Sam, who has quarreled with his father. Cullison goes bail for Curly. Curly rescues Hoopie Stone from a bear trap. At the London ranch he discovers that the outlaw is Sam Cullison's rival for Laura London's hand. Flandrau, visiting Stone's ranch, is convinced a train robbery is being planned. Sam leaves the ranch for Saguache. Curly accompanies him. Flandrau, dropping Curly, Hoopie Stone and his lieutenant, Kate Cullison, arrange to hold up the train. The posse crosses and after the robbery shoot young Cullison and leave his body on the scene. Curly is accused by Stone of being a spy of Luck Cullison. They are separated, but part with the understanding that their next meeting will mean a fight to the death. Curly confides in Luck. Stone is forced to leave town.

New Cullison was going to put the legal seal on the matter by making legal proof on his homestead. One knew that if he did so it would practically put him out of business. He would be at the mercy of his foe, who could ruin him if he pleased. Luck would be in a position to dictate terms absolutely.

Fendrick felt that there must be some way out of the trap if he could only find it. Whenever the thought of eating humble pie to Luck came into his mind the rage boiled in him. He swore he would not do it. Better a hundred times to see the thing out to a fighting finish.

Taking the broad-brimmed gray hat he found on the rack Case passed out of the clubhouse and into the sun-bathed street.

Cullison and his friends proceeded down Papago street to the old plaza where their hotel was located. All along the route they scattered nods of recognition, friendly greetings and genial banter. One of them—the man who had formerly been the hard-riding, quick-shooting sheriff of the county—met also as once or twice, to which he was entirely indifferent. He had made enemies, desperate and unscrupulous ones, who had sworn to wipe him from among the living, and one of these he was now to meet for the first time since the man had stood handcuffed before him, livid with fury, and had sworn to cut his heart out at the earliest chance.

It was in the lobby of the hotel that Cullison came plump against Luke Blackwell. For just a moment they stared at each other before the former sheriff speaks.

"Out again, eh, Blackwell?" he said wally.

From the bloodshot eyes one could have told at a glance the man had been drinking heavily. From whisky he had imbibed a Dutch courage just bold enough to be dangerous.

"Yes, I'm out—and back again, just as I promised, Mr. Sheriff," he threatened.

The outlaws ignored his menace. "Then I'll give you a piece of advice past the two-gun man. He's gone to join the antelope and the painted Indian."

The fellow leaned forward, sneering so that his ugly mouth looked like a crooked gash. "How about the one-gun man, Mr. Sheriff?"

"He doesn't last long now."

"Doesn't he?"

The man's rage boiled over. But Luck was far and away the quicker of the two. His left hand shot forward and gripped the rising throat, his right caught the hairy throat and tightened on it. He shook the convict as if he had been a child, and swung him, black in the face, against the wall, where he hung, strangling and spluttering.

"I'll get you yet," the ruffian panted. But he did not again attempt to reach for the weapon in his hip pocket.

"You talk too much with your mouth."

With superb contempt Luck slapped him, turned on his heel, and moved away, regardless of the raw, stark just to kill that was searing this man's elemental brain.

The paroled convict recovered his breath and slunk out of the hotel.

Billie Mackenzie, owner of the Fiddleback ranch, laughed even while he disapproved. "Some day, Luck, you'll get yours when you are throwing chances at a coyote like this. You'll guess your man wrong, or he'll be one glass drunker than you figure on, and then he'll plug you through and through."

"The man that takes chances lives longest, Mac," his friend replied, dismissing the subject carelessly. "I'm going to tuck away about three hours of sleep. So long." And with a nod he was gone to his room.

"All the same Luck's too darned rash," Flandrau commented. "And he hadn't ought to be sitting in these big games. He's hard up. Owsa a good bit here and there. Always was a spender. First thing he'll have to sell the Circle O to square things. He'll pay us this week like he said he would. That's dead sure. But I swear I don't know where he'll raise the price. Money is so tight right now."

That afternoon Luck called at every bank in Saguache. All of the bankers knew him and were friendly to him, but in spite of their personal regard they could do nothing for him.

"It's this stringency, Luck," Jordan of the Cattleman's National explained to him, "I'd let you have it if I dared. Why, we're running close to the wind. Public confidence is a mighty ticklish thing. If I didn't have twenty thousand coming from El Paso on the Flyer tonight I'd be uneasy for the bank."

"Twenty thousand on the Flyer. I reckon you ship by express, don't you?"

"Yes. Don't mention it to anyone. That twenty thousand would come handy to a good many people in this country these times."

"It would come right handy to me," Luck laughed ruefully. "I need every cent of it. After the beef roundup I'll be on Easy street, but it's going to be hard sledding to keep going till then."

"You'll make a turn somehow. It will work out. Maybe when money isn't so tight I'll be able to do something for you."

Luck returned to the hotel morosely and tried to figure a way out of his difficulties. He was not going to be beaten. He never had accepted defeat. He would not lose out after all these years of fighting. It had been his desperate need of money that had made him sit in last night's poker game. But he had succeeded only in making a bad situation worse. He knew his debts by heart, but he jotted them down on the back of an envelope and added them again.

Mortgage on ranch (due Oct. 1).....$12,500
Note to First National..... 2,500
Note to Reynolds..... 1,500
I. O. U. to Mackenzie..... 1,500
Same to Flandrau..... 500
Same to Yeater..... 500
Total.....$20,000

Twenty thousand was the sum he needed, and mighty badly, too. Absentmindedly he turned the envelope over and jotted down one or two other things. Twenty thousand dollars! Just the sum Jordan had coming to the bank on the Flyer. Subconsciously, Luck's fingers gave expression to his thoughts. Twenty thousand dollars. Half a dozen times they penciled it, and just below the figures, "W. & S. Ex. Co." Finally they wrote automatically the one word, "Tonight."

Luck looked at what he had written, laughed grimly, and tore the envelope in two. He threw the pieces in the waste paper basket.

CHAPTER II.

An Initiated Hat.
Mackenzie was reading the Sentinel while he ate a late breakfast. He had it propped against the water bottle, so that it need not interfere with the transportation of sausages, fried potatoes, hot cakes and coffee to their common destination.

Trying to do two things at once has its disadvantages. A startling knock tately swallowed, scalded his tongue and throat. He set down the cup, swore mildly, and gave his attention to the news that had excited him:

"While the citizens of Saguache were peacefully sleeping last night, a lone bandit held up the messengers of the Western & Southern Express company, and relieved them of twenty thousand dollars just received from El Paso on the Flyer."

"Perry Hawley, the local manager of the company, together with Len Rogers, the armed guard, had just returned from the depot, where the money had been turned over to them and receipted for. Hawley had unlocked the door of the office had stepped in, followed by Rogers, when a masked desperado appeared suddenly out of the darkness, disarmed the guard and manager, took the money, passed through the door and locked it after him, and vanished as silently as he had come. Before leaving, he warned his victims that the place would be covered for ten minutes and at any attempt to call for help they would be shot. Notwithstanding this, the imprisoned men risked their lives by raising the alarm."

Further down the page Mackenzie discovered that the desperado was still at large, but that Sheriff Bolt expected shortly to lay hands on him.

He folded the paper and returned to his room to make preparation to return to his ranch. The buzz of the telephone called him to the receiver. The voice of Cullison reached him.

"That you, Mac? I'll be right up. No, don't come down. I'd rather see you alone."

The owner of the Circle O came right to business. "I've made a raise, Mac, and while I've got it I'm going to skin off what's coming to you."

He had taken a big roll of bills from his pocket, and was counting off what he had lost to his friend. The latter noticed that it all seemed to be in twenties.

"Twelve hundred. That squares us, Mac."

The Scotman was vaguely uneasy without a definite reason for his anxiety. Only last night Cullison had told him not a single bank in town would advance him a dollar. Now he had money in plenty. Where had he got it?

Mackenzie's eye fell on a copy of the Sentinel protruding from the other's pocket. "Read about the holdup of the W. & S. express? That fellow had his nerve with him."

"Sho! This holdup game's the easiest yet. He got the drop on them, and there was nothing to it."

"How did he know there was money coming in last night?"

"There's always a leak about things of that sort. Somebody talks. I knew it myself, for that matter."

"You knew! Who told you?"

"That's a secret, Mac. Come to think of it, I wish you wouldn't tell anybody that I knew. I don't want to get the man who told me in trouble."

"Sure I won't." He passed to another phase of the subject. "The Sentinel says Bolt expects to catch the robber. Think he will?"

"Not if the fellow knows his business. Bolt has nothing to go on. He has the whole Southwest to pick from. For all he knows, it was you."

"Yes, but—"

"Or more likely me." The gray eyes of the former sheriff held a frosty smile.

In spite of that smile, or perhaps because of it, Mackenzie felt again that flash of doubt. "What's the use of talking foolishness, Luck? Course you didn't do it. I know you too well."

But the trouble was Mackenzie did not know him well enough. Cullison was hard up, close to the wall. How far would he go to save himself? In his slow, troubled fashion, Mac wondered if his old side partner's streak of lawlessness would take him as far as a holdup. Of course it would not, he assured himself; but he could not get the ridiculous notion out of his head.

Mackenzie drifted to the courthouse. He found Sheriff Bolt in his office. The Scotsman wanted to discuss the robbery, but was shy about attacking the subject. While he hokked at it, Bolt was off on another tack.

Inside of a quarter of an hour the sheriff had found out all he wanted to know about the poker game, Cullison's financial difficulties, and the news that Luck had liquidated his poker debt since breakfast. Moreover, he had talked so casually that his visitor had no suspicion of what he was driving at.

Mackenzie attempted a little sleuthing of his own. "This holdup fellow kind of slipped one over on you last night, Bolt."

"Maybe so, and maybe not." "Got a clue, have you?" "Oh, yes—yes." The sheriff looked straight at him. "I've a notion his initials are L. C."

Billie felt himself flushing. "What makes you think that, Nick?" Bolt walked to a cupboard and unlocked it. His back was toward the outlaws, but the latter could see him take something from a shelf. Turning

"Ever see this before?" Mac picked it up. His fingers were not quite steady, for a great dread froached his heart like a rash of icy water. Upon that gray felt hat with the pinched crown was stamped the individuality—and the initials—of Luck Cullison.

"Don't know as I recognize it," he lied, not very readily. "Not to know it. Why?"

"Thought perhaps you might know it. The holdup dropped it while getting away."

Mackenzie's eyes flinched. "Dropped it. How was that?"

"A man happened to come along San Miguel street just as the robber swung to his horse. He heard the cries of the men inside, guessed what was doing, and exchanged shots with the miscreant. He shot this hat off the fellow's head."

"Who was the man that shot the robber?"

"Case Fendrick."

"But he didn't claim to recognize the holdup?"

"Not for certain. He guessed a man whose initials are the same as those in that hat."

"If you mean Luck Cullison, it's a damned lie," exploded the cattleman. He was furious with himself, for he felt now that he had been unsuspectingly helping to certify the suspicions of the sheriff. Like an idiot, he had let out much that told heavily against his friend.

"I hope so. What about this hat, with the two holes shot through the rim?"

"Sho! We all wear hats just like that. Look at mine." Billie held it out eagerly.

"Has yours an L. C. stamped in the sweat band?" Bolt asked with a smile.

"I know you ain't my friend, Nick. But you want to be fair to him even if he did oppose your election." Mackenzie laid an appealing hand on the knee of the man seated opposite him.

"I'm sheriff of Papago county. It doesn't make any difference who worked for or against me, Billie. I was elected, and I'm going to enforce the law. By the way, I've got to pay for some supplies this morning. Can you cash a check for a hundred?"

"I reckon so," Mackenzie drew from his pocket the roll Cullison had given him two hours before. He peeled five twenties from it. The sheriff observed that the prevailing denomination was the same.

"Get these from Luck?" he asked carelessly.

The cattleman stared at him, and the suspicion grew on him that he had been trapped again.

"Why do you ask?"

"Because it happens the bills stolen from the W. & S. were all twenties."

From the office of the sheriff, Mackenzie wandered to the club in search of Luck. He was thoroughly dispirited, both dreading to meet Luck, and yet was anxious to do so.

Cullison had left the club, but Alec Flandrau was still there. Billie drew him into a corner, and learned that Luck had just settled with him.

"Anyone see him give it to you, Alec?"

"No. He took me upstairs to the library and paid me."

"In bills?"

"Yes—in twenties."

"For God's sake, don't tell anybody that." In a dozen jerky sentences the owner of the Fiddleback told Flandrau of the suspicious of the sheriff. Together they went in search of Luck. But though they looked for him all day, he was not to be found. The last that had been seen of him Luck was walking along the plaza toward the hotel, not a hundred and fifty yards from the latter. A dozen men had spoken to him in the distance of a block. But he had not been seen to reach his hotel. He had not called for his room key. Somehow he had vanished, and none could tell how or where.

"When I see a ragged man," said the chairman, virtuously, "I say to myself there goes one of life's wasters. There goes a man who has refused to make the most of his gifts. There is no excuse for poverty, gentlemen. Everyone should rise."

"Hear! Hear!" cried his hearers. "Everyone," exclaimed the chairman, "may carve out a good position for himself if he wishes."

"Perhaps you are right," interposed a member. "Only today I met a newspaper man who told me that 20 years ago he came to Chicago with exactly $5 in his pocket. Rents Hurt Ghost Industry.
In England desperate people in search of houses to rent or buy are advertising that ghosts are no drawback. Any one who happens to own a hitherto unrented house because tradition says it is haunted is assured that the seekers for a domicile will accept it at the rental asked for regardless of the haunter or hauntings. It is suspected that in England, as in several other countries, ghosts of landlords would be less objectionable than those of other folk. Whatever his losses in the past, the landlord as a rule is regarded in these days with deep suspicion as a profiteer. In many cases this attitude is probably unfair; there are some considerate landlords.—Toronto Globe.

Parr's Great Age Discredited.
Is it worth while, when money is needed for legitimate objects, to answer the appeal to save from sale the cottage in which Thomas Parr lived? His claim to fame is that he lived to be 152 and that he did penance for immortality at 100. Careful inquiry last century discredited the tradition as to the number of his years. His age was attested only by village gossip and by quacks, who sold what they falsely called "Parr's Life Pills." Brought to court in what was alleged to be his 153d year, Parr died in the course of a few months, killed by excessive diet.—London Mail.

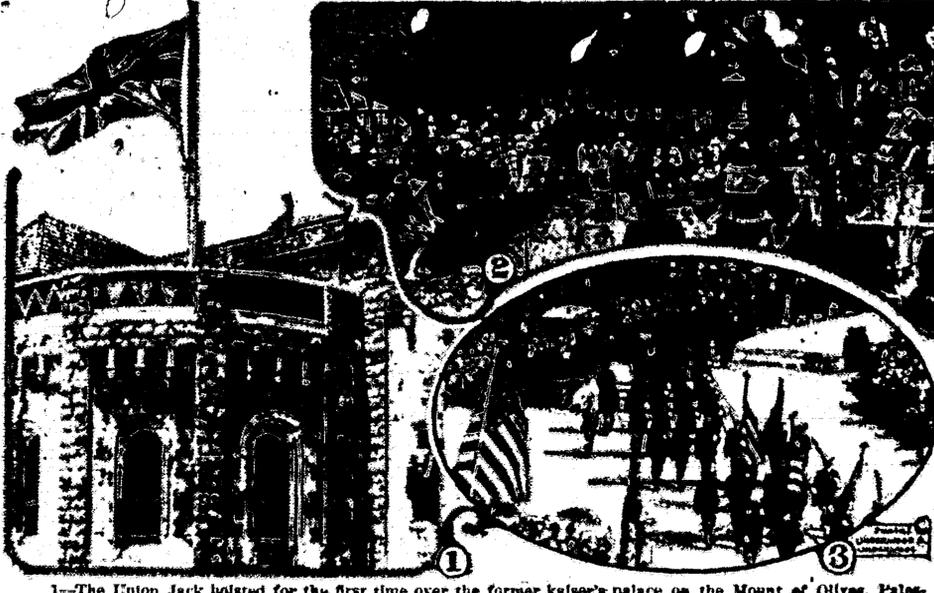

Making Sure.
"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "I am glad to see you taking as much interest in politics as you formerly took in racing."
"It is the duty of every man and woman to take an interest in politics."
"Do you wish me to vote for the same candidate that you do?"
"Why shouldn't you?"
"I thought it might be a good idea for me to vote for the other one. It would be a satisfaction to feel that one or the other of us has at last succeeded in picking a winner."

Disclosures of Crookedness in Organized Baseball Arouse Indignation and Grief—Poles and Russians Wrangle Still Driving the Reds—Moscow Eager for Peace.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

Despite the undoubted fact that the governments of the United States and Japan are earnestly striving to arrive at an amicable settlement of their differences, the relations between the two nations are becoming more strained daily. This does not mean that hostilities will ensue—such an eventuality is almost out of the question—but the situation is giving undesirable opportunity to the alarmists and the floggers of both countries and is really worrying the statesmen and those directly interested in international commerce.

The administration at Washington has sent to Tokyo a communication stating just how far it is willing to go to meet the desires of the Japanese, and this proposition was taken under consideration by the Japanese cabinet. At neither capital was any information given out as to the contents of the American note, but it was reported in Washington that one of the fundamental considerations insisted upon by the administration is that Japan shall give a new guarantee against immigration, in the form of an amendment either to the existing treaty or to the "gentlemen's agreement" under which since 1907 Japan has undertaken to prevent the emigration of laborers to America.

If Japan agreed to accept any such amendment, it probably would be to the gentlemen's agreement, for the Japanese people would scarcely stand for a formal treaty by which they, almost alone, would be set apart as undesirable immigrants into America. If Japan cannot bring about a definite settlement of the trouble at this time, she desires at least to reach an understanding that will quiet the talk of Japanese domination in California and induce the people of that state to reject, at the coming election, the proposed new alien-land law which is the cause of most of Japan's protests. The adoption of that law was prevented last year by the administration, but whether this could be done again is problematical.

We have thought in America that the Japanese people were considerably wrought up over this question, but according to Marquis Okuma, former premier, they are not sufficiently aroused. It is now announced in Tokyo that Okuma is going to devote himself to awakening the Japanese people against "the unlawful attitude of California Americans," and that he will call a meeting of 100 leading statesmen and other prominent citizens to exchange views on the subject. The marquis says his fellow countrymen are becoming weak and cowardly, like the Chinese, are indifferent to grave questions affecting the nation's interests, and that a strong, unified national opinion must defend the interests of the Japanese in California. He predicts that unless something is done to check the Californians, there will arise a similar state of affairs in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other British dominions.

That the Japanese already are retaliating in such ways as are open to them is indicated by correspondence between Secretary of Commerce Alexander and Chairman Benson of the shipping board. Mr. Benson called to the attention of Mr. Alexander instances of Japanese procedure at Kobe amounting to discrimination der wrote: "The nature of the discrimination is in almost every case so subtle, notwithstanding its effectiveness, that it is almost impossible to take formal action. The best solution of the matter seems to be direct transportation of American goods in American ships wherever possible."

The proposed California law, it is held by its proponents, would deny to the Japanese in this country no rights or privileges not denied to Americans in Japan by Japanese law. It may be as well to give here the following summary of the chief features of the proposed law. It says:

That aliens, ineligible to citizenship in the United States, companies, corporations and associations, the majority of whose stock is owned by such aliens, are authorized to own and convey land only as provided by treaty and not otherwise.

That such persons, companies, corporations and associations shall not be appointed guardians for estates consisting wholly or in part of realty, but that the public administrator or other "competent person" shall act for the minor heirs of such estates.

That ownership or leases, acquired in violation of the law, shall become and remain the property of the state of California.

That evasions of the law governing conveyance of property shall be punishable by fine, not exceeding $5,000 nor more than two years in jail or both.

Governor Stephens says of it: "The bill does not and will not, because the state legally cannot, prevent Japanese control of our soil nor can it stop further immigration. The full solution of this question cannot be had short of an exclusion act passed by congress."

Hot indignation and genuine grief have been aroused all over the land by the revelations of crookedness in organized baseball in the grand jury investigation in Chicago. That hero and there might be found one or two players who would sell out would not be surprising, but that eight members on one club should be guilty of such shameful if not criminal conduct would be unbelievable were it not attested by the confessions of some of the accused. These men not only sold their honor and the respect and admiration of the American people, but they sold out for petty sums and to cheap gamblers, who "double-crossed" them, and now they have nothing left but bitter reflections and the remnants of their bribes.

The grand jury voted true bills against eight men, seven of whom are still members of the Chicago White Sox club, the eighth having been suspended last spring. They are accused of "conspiracy to do an unlawful act."

State's Attorney Hoynes was doubtful whether any crime as legally defined had been committed within the jurisdiction of the courts of Cook county, but the attorney for Charles Comiskey, the broken-hearted owner of the White Sox, says there are at least two counts on which each of the players named in the true bills may be prosecuted. He says the public paid admissions to see honest baseball played, and the conspiracy to throw the games thereupon by cheated the public. Also he asserts the men conspired to injure the property of Comiskey, consisting of contracts worth more than $200,000 and the drawing power of the team and other good will estimated at $300,000.

ing four nations may have been premature or over-enthusiastic. Lithuania and Poland, which were actually fighting, have not ceased yet, though they probably will before long. As for the dispute between Sweden and Finland over the Aland Islands, the former nation protests that there never was any danger of hostilities, as she always settles international disputes peacefully. Swedish officials said the quarrel with Finland would be amicably ended, though they added that Sweden never would give up the Aland Islands.

Both the Poles and General Wrangel continued their successful warfare on the Russian soviet forces. The former at last reports had captured the important cities of Lida and Pinsk, and were steadily advancing northward toward Vilna, whose fall was expected soon. Lida is the place where Trotsky was said recently to have established the headquarters of a new Bolshevik army of 90,000 for a fall campaign against the Poles. The Ukrainians, who are operating on that front, have recovered Kamanetz-Podolsk from the Bolsheviks and are said to be planning a drive to form a junction with Wrangel's forces and to sever the soviet line of communication between Kiev and Odessa. Wrangel, who is now well to the north of Alexandrovsk, is being aided by Makhno, the independent Ukrainian leader, and is taking large numbers of prisoners.

The soviet government has had more than enough war with Poland, and at the Riga conference is seemingly making every effort to arrange an armistice that shall lead to peace. According to a dispatch from Warsaw, Adolph Joffe, head of the Russian delegation, received instructions from Moscow to accept all the conditions laid down by Poland, however hard they may be, except those compelling Russia to partly or wholly disband her Red army. So far the chief matter in dispute has been the line of demarcation between Poland, White Russia and Ukraina.

There has been no cessation of the guerrilla warfare in Ireland. Nearly every day one or more members of the British police or army are murdered by Sinn Feiners, and in almost every instance reprisal is swift and bloody. Towns and villages are raided and the homes of well-known Sinn Feiners are burned, and often they are taken out and shot to death. The British government, though it has started an inquiry into the killings, seems rather helpless in the matter. Mayor MacSwiney of Cork is still alive, and a London paper says it has learned he is being given food in a concentrated form.

Though the effort to communalize the industrial plants of Italy is admittedly a failure, the disturbances there are increasing. The workers and owners in the metal plants are approaching some measure of agreement, with the aid of the government, but the employees in other lines and the peasants in Sicily and other districts are yielding to the efforts of radical trouble-makers. Seizure of lands by armed peasants, beginning in Sicily, spread to the north during the week and threatened to become nation-wide.

The best development of the week was the way in which prices in the United States began to decline. In most cases manufacturers and dealers who offered the reductions tried to make it clear that they were based on expectations of future conditions, in order to free themselves from the suspicion of having profiteered at the former prices. Economists called attention to two things: First, that safety demanded that prices decline gradually instead of tumbling; second, that the people must not let the lower prices lead them into another orgy of buying, lest the result be another rise.

America met with defeat in the airplane race for the James Gordon Bennett trophy in France. One of her entries was thrown out by an accident and the two others did not get far, owing to defects of construction in their engines. The race was won by

Uncle Walt's Story

VEEXATION OF SPIRIT

"WHEN I was in business," said the retired merchant, "I never had time to read much, and I used to look forward to the glad day when I could revel in literature. I felt sure I'd be entirely happy. I used to jot down the titles of books I intended to read, and when I retired from business I had a list as long as the Russian battle line.

"And now that I can read all I want to, I don't get any enjoyment out of books. They bore me the worst way. I get sleepy as soon as I begin to read, and my wife comes and tells me my snoring is disturbing the neighbors."

"It's that way with everything we look forward to," observed the hotel-keeper, sadly. "Man always will be, but is never blest, as some half-baked poet remarked. Young Gooseworthy was in here last evening, bubbling over with happiness. 'There wasn't anybody around, so he took me into his confidence. He's going to marry Gwendolin Jimalong, next month, and he's perfectly satisfied that his married life will be one long stretch of sunshine. He seems to have the idea that he's going to do something original when he gets married, but the idea isn't new. Men have been getting married ever since Christopher discovered Columbus, Ohio, and every doggone man jack of them had the idea that everlasting bliss was going to be inaugurated on the wedding day.

"I listened to Gooseworthy for three hours, and hadn't the heart to say anything that would dampen his enthusiasm. His twittering recalled the best vanished days when I was getting ready to be married. I felt about it then just as he does now. I thought the parson opened the gates of paradise when he joined two loving hearts. My wife lived up to all the plans and specifications, and was and is one of the best women in the United States, but I hadn't been married three months before I had a sneaking conviction that the man who gets married is a chump.

"A good many optimists say that a married man doesn't need any more money than a single one, if he marries the right sort of woman, but they might as well go to the blackboard and demonstrate that two and two make two, instead of four. I fell for that cheerful theory when I was married. I was earning enough to keep myself comfortably, and never had any financial worries. I could have been buried for less money than it took to be married, and the expenses from that time forward were double what they used to be, although my wife was so economical she used to make waists and such things for herself out of my superannuated shirts.

"Oh, doggone it, there isn't any unadulterated happiness in matrimony. I wonder that young fellows like Gooseworthy don't look around them, and contemplate the dejected appearance of the majority of husbands. But even if they did, it wouldn't do them any good, I suppose, for they are full of pipe dreams, and they think the girls they are going to marry are different from all other girls, and that they will prove exceptions to the general rule.

"I had a wise old uncle in those halcyon days, and about a week before the wedding day, he backed me into a corner and handed me a dust-proof package of wisdom. He tried to lead me into taking a sensible view of the future. He talked about the cares and responsibilities that would be mine after the wedding, and wanted to know if I felt equal to them. He tried to show me that I wasn't going to marry an angel, but a human being, like myself, with a human being's faults and frailties.

"I let him get that far, and then I told him that his gray hairs alone saved him from having his head remodeled, and said I never wanted him to darken my door, and he never did. I had to darken it myself, with wail and woe. But many a time afterward, I recalled his wise words and wept over his grave."

Well Off.
"After all a man never knows when he's well off."
"What's happened now?"
"I was just thinking what a fool I was for trading off my Liberty bonds for oil stock."

Nut Walter Wanted.
An old lady, after waiting in a confectionery store for about ten minutes, grew grossly impatient at the lack of service. Finally she rapped sharply on the counter.

GOOD ROADS

FEDERAL AID FOR HIGHWAYS

Operations Aggregate in Length Nine Times Distance From New York to San Francisco.

The unprecedented stimulus given highway construction in the United States in the four years, that have passed since the federal government entered upon its policy of aiding road improvement, is shown by the fact that road operations under the federal aid road act thus far initiated aggregate in length nine times the distance from New York to San Francisco, according to Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the bureau of public roads, United States department of agriculture. The federal government's share in this stupendous undertaking is greater than the cost of the Panama canal. The participation of the national government in highway improvement marked a departure from a policy which had been followed for nearly a century. Federal co-operation with the states on approximately a "50-50" basis has counted more than any other factor, says Mr. MacDonald, in initiating highway construction that is being carried on under adequate supervision, and in accord with a program co-ordinating local, state and national needs.

Second only in importance to the size of the present road-building program is the excellence of the character of the roads being built. Sixty per cent of the total allotment of federal funds which has been approved to date will be spent for roads of such durable types as bituminous concrete, Portland cement concrete, and vitrified brick. These roads, when built, will increase by 7,000 miles the total of 14,400 miles of roads of this class which existed in the United States before the federal-aid road law was passed. But these figures by no means represent the total mileage affected.

In 1915 the total expenditure for roads and bridges by all the states and local governments was $207,000,000, while this year the estimated funds available for main road construction are nearly three times that amount, or $633,000,000. In all, federal funds to the amount of $260,750,000 have been apportioned among 48 states without a suggestion of favoritism—so adequate are the provisions for a just apportionment.

One of the early and most far-reaching results directly attributable to the adoption of the federal-aid program was the creation of adequate state highway departments in 17 states which previously had either no state department, or departments insufficiently equipped. Within one year after the passage of the federal-aid road act more constructive state highway legislation was placed upon the statute books than had ever been enacted in a similar period in the history of the country.

The insistence of the government upon the construction of federal-aid roads under the supervision of engineers of the state departments has resulted in placing a much larger proportion of road work under skilled direction. In 1915, the year before the federal-aid act was passed, only 30 per cent of the money for roads and bridges built in the United States was expended under the supervision of state highway departments. This year these departments will exercise control over fully 80 per cent of the large sums that will be spent for road building.

That Nagging Backache

Are you tortured with a throbbing backache? Suffer sharp pains at every sudden move? Evening find you "all played out"? Perhaps you have been working too hard and getting too little rest. This may have weakened your kidneys, bringing on that tired feeling and dull, nagging backache. You may have headaches and dizziness, too, with annoying kidney irregularities. Don't wait. Help the weakened kidneys with Doan's Kidney Pills. They have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

Jameson and Coleman

Since our last issue there have been filed in County Clerk Clements office certificates showing that C. H. Jameson was nominated for Senator from the 15th district, composed of the counties of Torrance, Lincoln, Otero and Socorro, by the Democratic district convention; and that M. M. Coleman was nominated for representative from the 30th representative district, which is formed by Torrance, Lincoln and Socorro counties. Dr. Jameson resides at Estancia, Torrance county, and Mr. Coleman at Quemado, Socorro county. As will be seen by a study of both these districts, the constitution created them for Republicans, and under normal conditions the Republicans would easily elect each. But it may be quite different this year, owing to the widespread revolt in the Republican party and the desire of the people to bury bossism. Voters desirous of a change can vote for Jameson and Coleman with safety.

History Repeats

Let us pause in the heat of a political campaign and consider George Washington, first president of the United States, Father of his country, idol and inspiration of the youth of America, the man whom all Americans speak of with reverence and pardonable pride.

In a letter to Thomas Jefferson under date of July 6, 1797, he wrote:

"I had no conception that parties would or even could go to the length I have been witness to; nor did I believe until lately, that it was within the bounds of possibility that . . . every act of my administration would be tortured and the grossest and most insidious misrepresentation of them be made . . . and that too in such exaggerated and in recent terms as could scarcely be applied to a Nero—a notorious flatterer—or even a common drunkard."

Can you not recall, you who read this, that Theodore Roosevelt came in for this same campaign and can you not today hear Republican orators reviling the President of these United States just as Washington was reviled. Washington was even accused of being untrue to the cause of the Revolution. Can you not discern the tirades on the President the same line of attack, the same absolute dishonesty of purpose, the same exhibition of utter depravity. It won't hurt you to read again the words of Washington and pause a moment and give them weight in the light of what is occurring in this presidential campaign.

Pains Were Terrific

Read how Mrs. Albert Gregory, of R. F. D. No. 1, Buford, Ill., got rid of her ills. "During . . . I was awfully weak. My pains were terrific. I thought I would die. The bearing-down pains were actually so severe I could not stand the pressure of my hands on the lower part of my stomach. . . I simply felt as if life was for but a short time. My husband was worried. One evening, while reading the Birthday Almanac, he came across a case similar to mine, and went straight for some Cardui for me to try.

GRAPE GROWER MAY BE HAPPY

FRUIT FINDS NEW OUTLETS

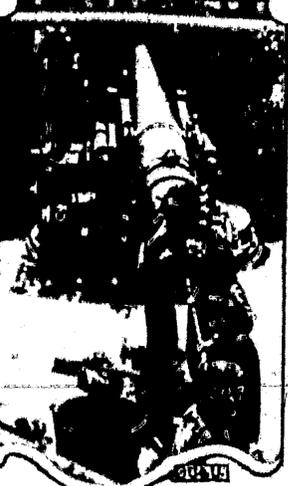

Makers of Unfermented Juice, Jams and Jellies Are Utilizing an Increasing Tonnage Each Year—Co-operate Handling Crop.

Washington—A note from California, the grape growing industry, in the United States practices seem to become of even greater importance than in the days before the making of wine was prohibited, according to an announcement just made by the United States department of agriculture. A big demand has developed for grape products and the shipments of grapes last year were the largest for the last four seasons under review. It is even predicted that within a few years an output production of grapes will not adequately supply the table stock and the unfermented juice, jam and jelly trade.

"While grapes may be produced almost anywhere," says a bulletin from the department, "there are, it seems, only a few districts where all the factors of soil and climate favor successful commercial production." It is pointed out that the extensive grape growing industry of central and southern California is not included in the article, which is limited to sections producing the eastern or American type of grapes.

COSTS BLOCK TRAVEL

Price of Passport Visas Has Been Greatly Increased, Especially for Americans.

Budapest.—The cost of travel for Americans in central Europe and Balkan countries is reaching extortionate proportions through the tendency to charge Americans the same price for passport visas as that of the American government for foreigners, which recently was increased from $1 to $10. If this tendency is continued, an American in the course of a few months, passing several frontiers, may have to pay $30 to $50 in tion occupied by this commodity in the leading producing sections of New York, Michigan and Pennsylvania during the past few years, local dealers have been able to dispose of practically all offerings on a f. o. b. basis by wire orders, so that consignment has been the exception rather than the rule.

"Co-operative shipping associations have been found to be most successful when handling crops of which a few standard varieties ripen about the same time. Thus they have proved of great value in the grape industry in Michigan and also in the leading grape-producing sections of New York, Pennsylvania and the Missouri valley. The co-operative association takes the place of the local dealer, the association receiving the grapes direct from the producer on wire orders, to city carlot receivers. An additional factor, a national distributing agency, sometimes comes between the local buyer or the co-operative association and the city carlot receiver."

Relative to the future of the grape industry, the government bulletin says: "The production of unfermented grape juice and of jams and jellies is utilizing an increasing tonnage each year and will do much toward using the surplus left by the cessation of wine production. These factories usually buy their supplies direct from the producer on advance contracts, agreeing to pay the current market price on the day of delivery. This method of sale is satisfactory from the standpoint of the producer, and, as the demand for manufactured grape products at present exceeds the supply, it is not unreasonable to suppose that in the not very distant future the annual production of grapes may not adequately supply the table stock, and the juice, jam and jelly trade."

"Because of the firm market position in New York and Ohio. In those regions which specialize in grape culture, certain well defined channels of trade have become established. It is the usual custom in such localities for vineyardists to sell their grapes in wagonload lots to local dealers, or carlot assemblers at their loading stations, at the current market price. The contract system being very common. These local dealers load the cars and sell to carlot receivers in city markets, who in turn sell to jobbers. Then the fruit passes to the retail trade and finally reaches the consumers.

TREASURE HUNT VAIN

Searchers for Buried Silver Are Sure to Fail.

So Says Galveston Expert of Efforts to Find Wrecked Hullion Ship.

Galveston, Tex.—Searchers after buried silver on the mainland opposite Pete Island, 18 miles southeast of Corpus Christi, Tex., probably are doomed to disappointment, in the opinion of Dr. J. O. Dyer, a local writer on historical and scientific subjects. The rush of treasure seekers began with the discovery recently of 25 skeletons, popularly believed by many to be those of members of the crew of a Spanish treasure ship which foundered off the Texas coast early in the eighteenth century. No record is available of any such wreck.

The "life" of a skeleton buried in the sands of the beaches of the coastal country, Dr. Dyer points out, is not over 40 years.

He also says treasure ships from Mexico to Spain were discontinued after 1820, partly because of the activities of Jean Lafitte's fleet of buccaneers.

Even before that time the Spaniards tried to avoid excessive losses from storms and Lafitte's fleet of buccaneering vessels and 50 Spaniards transported less than 20 tons of silver bullion to the vessel.

Then, the current rate in Mexico was approximately $10 a troy pound. The most valuable of all Lafitte's prizes, the Sevilla, carried only $150,000 in specie.

Lafitte's captured treasure, according to the records extant, was buried in three caches. Two of these were located on Galveston Island and the third on a small island to the east, which was completely washed away during a storm in 1820.

There have been many reports of the discovery on this coast of caches of coin or chests from trading ships containing from $3,000 to $15,000.

Mistook Monster Snake for an Automobile Tire

Paris, Ky.—When Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ross were returning from an automobile trip, they saw what resembled a black and white automobile tire lying in the road. Mr. Ross got out to pick up the "tire" when it moved, and glided away into the bushes. The "tire" was a boa constrictor, the property of a carnival company, that met disaster in a cloudburst near here. Employees of the carnival company later captured the snake.

Once More the Nicaragua Canal Project

WASHINGTON.—Recently the United States government, by a payment of $3,000,000, has acquired the exclusive right to dig a canal across Nicaragua—a step prompted by a report that Great Britain and Japan contemplated the project as a joint enterprise on their own account, anyway, so says report.

It was for a long time thought that we would decide upon a Nicaragua route in preference to that of Panama, but the final choice fell to the isthmus, mainly because of fear of the Nicaraguan volcanoes, which are very temperamental and sometimes fiercely explosive.

Nevertheless the proposed line of the Nicaraguan canal passed 50 miles south of the nearest active volcano and the route had certain conspicuous advantages. For one thing, the highest elevation to be crossed is only 355 feet (this being the lowest gap in the continent's backbone anywhere from Alaska to Cape Horn), whereas on the Isthmus of Panama it was 564 feet.

This is interesting because the Nicaragua canal may yet be dug to supplement for commercial purposes the facilities of the Panama ditch. The route would be 334 miles shorter from New York to San Francisco than by way of the Isthmus; and the canal would not cost more than one-third as much as that of Panama—barring, however, the risen price of labor and materials.

Looking at the map, one sees that Nicaragua is wide compared with the Isthmus of Panama. But also one observes that much of its narrowest part is occupied by an immense lake, 100 miles long and 45 miles broad, out of which a large river, called the San Juan, runs eastward all the way of the Caribbean sea. A strip only 12 miles wide separates the lake from the Pacific ocean; three-fourths of the river's length is navigable, and, thus, as it might be said, most of the digging has already been done by nature.

There would be, as a matter of fact, about 49 miles of ditch to be dug; but nearly all of this is through lowlands, and the job would be correspondingly easy.

The distance across the Tehuantepec neck is 125 miles as the crow flies.

First Wireless Heard Round the World

THE first message from the United States naval radio station, known as the Lafayette radio station, at Bordeaux, France, which is undergoing official acceptance tests, has been received here. The message follows: "This is the first wireless message to be heard around the world and marks a milestone on the road of scientific achievement."

Secretary Daniels sent the following message in reply: "My sincere congratulations upon the successful completion of the gigantic radio station named for that distinguished Frenchman whom all Americans honor. Designed to serve a military purpose, it will now serve to bind closer the cordial relations which have always existed between France and the United States. On behalf of the United States navy, I desire to express my pleasure upon the achievement of the Lafayette radio station in transmitting the first message to be heard around the world. We are happy to recognize in this powerful signal a symbol of that force and sympathetic understanding with which the voice of France shall be heard by its sister republic."

The Lafayette radio station was built by the United States navy department, under the direction of the bureau of engineering and the bureau of yards and docks. Its construction was begun during the war to maintain wireless communication between this country and our forces in France, since at that time there was grave fear that German submarines might be able to cut the trans-oceanic cables and leave Pershing isolated so far as immediate communication with the United States was concerned.

The station now completed is the largest in the world. It has eight 820-foot towers, and its engineering features, while in general modeled on those of our naval stations at Arlington and Annapolis, are unique both in their magnitude and in some features of their design.

The success of this station in transmission is exemplified by the fact that the audibility of its signals, as measured at the naval radio laboratory in the bureau of standards, is five times the audibility of the similar signals from the German radio station at Nauze.

Milk With a Delicious Sawdust Flavor mal food was described by E. C. Sherman and G. W. Blanco. White sawdust, finely ground, is treated with diluted sulphuric acid in a large boiler known as a digester, under steam pressure. This breaks up the fiber and extracts the sugar. To prevent injurious effects, the acid is neutralized by adding lime to produce chemical reaction.

The liquid thus obtained, when boiled down, is rich in sugar, and when mixed with the fiber produces a moist feed containing about 15 per cent of water, in which form it is fed to dairy cows.

At the forest products laboratory, United States department of agriculture, Madison, Wis., experiments proved that three cows thrived on this sawdust ration and not only gave more milk, but increased in weight. So says Uncle Sam.

The result was so satisfactory that the government has decided to take the matter up on a larger scale at the experiment stations throughout the country and furnish a detailed report on the value of hydrolyzed sawdust as cattle food. So says Uncle Sam.

So there you are. Probably milk, cream and butter, with a delicious sawdust flavor will soon be added to the H. C. L.

A Possible Election Hitch—Other Items

POSSIBILITIES growing out of the Tennessee suffrage tangle are being officially considered, notwithstanding the fact that Connecticut has since made a ratification of sorts. The possibilities arise out of constitutional provisions that a candidate must have a majority in the electoral college to secure his election. If courts should declare, after the election has occurred, that the Tennessee ratification of suffrage was illegal, all women's votes cast under authority of the nineteenth amendment also would be illegal, and there would be nothing to do but throw out the whole vote of states where such illegal voting had occurred. Thus, no candidate would have a majority of the electors and the house of representatives would elect the president.

THE recent demotion of Brig. Gen. George Barrett from the rank of major general, commandant of the marine corps, and the fact that no action has been taken on his application for appointment as major general to fill a new existing vacancy, is exciting lively comment in navy and marine corps circles.

SERGE OR SATIN FOR MID-SEASON

With the first breath of cool weather as the dying season's wardrobe begins to look like nothing at all, observes a New York fashion correspondent. And what is to be done for clothes, for something that resembles the proper sort of clothes, for this halfway period? That is the problem, and it is comparatively easy to solve when one regards the array of mid-season dresses that the shops are offering. Even on the streets and in the restaurants there have been evidences that, among fashionable women, there has been some thought of preparedness; for many are the new street frocks that have made their appearance. A study of them may save many mistakes.

The dresses of the intervening season are serge or satin, for they must be worn without coats and on the street, with hats and furs, just as any sort of the later fall days. Taffeta had its run through the summer months, but it has reached the time of discard. Black satin or meteor or any of the allied materials is the thing for street wear, and it has come back into its own. The newer black satin dresses are charming enough to lure even the purchaser who has decided to wait until winter is really upon us.

It sounds like an old story to say that the simpler the satin dress the more beautiful it is. Most of the newer satin gowns for the street are in black—a very few in the darkest of blues or in black—and they are cut on the straightest lines possible, with skirts just a trifle fuller than they have been and necks that are round or pointed, as the case of the individual taste may dictate. A touch of cially if they are cleverly distributed and if their colors are chosen with a view to making the most of a small space.

Woolen Stitches Effective.
Woolen stitches on blue serge or tricotine, or on any of these materials that in some way resemble one-another, are as effective as anything can be, and on many of the newer fall frocks they are seen. Red is the color that does the most in this respect. There are some serge dresses that show only long red woolen stitches, with here and there a stray motif to accentuate the idea of the color combination. Then there are others which are more lavishly worked up in this same color combination. It is a combination that carries an appeal because of its cheerfulness.

Embroideries following the Roumanian designs or those from Czechoslovakia are the most popular. It is the strip of many colors that has the first place in fashionable trimmings, and, applied to the frock of blue serge, certainly shows beauty and wealth of its texture. A frock of blue serge, one of the very newest to be seen anywhere, has a high girlish sort of belt curved in front to a width greater than at any other place around the waist. This strip is embroidered solidly in reds and greens and purples. Then, to repeat this brilliant bit of color, there are bands at the hips, each about two and a half inches broad and twelve inches long. They are applied so that they hold extra side fullness for the skirt. The neck of the frock is plainly finished by a cord, and the sleeves are ended in the same way, so that all the trim-some white thing about the throat and the neckline is a usual thing. It is more demure in aspect than were the flaunting fichus of the spring and summer.

Skirts Are Full.
The skirts of these later dresses are full, and they take on this extra width in various and interesting manners. For instance, there is the paneled skirt, with loose and floppy breadths at front and back or at both sides, but usually there is a suggestion of an underkirt which gently hugs the figure and allows the fullness of the outer skirt to hang loosely over it. The sleeves are long and loose or tight, as the case may be. Some of them are fitted at the armholes and others are cut in so baggy a fashion as to have almost no shape at all. It all depends on the figure and what it can stand and what is chosen for a particular case, for there is coming to be more and more of a regard for the individual note. Each woman for her own charm and expression of personality—that is the new slogan, and it is expressing itself in every direction, especially in this case of the street frock.

Then there is the serge dress, which at this season of the year particularly demonstrates its place in the wardrobe of reasonable frocks. There is nothing to take its place—nothing that can step in to make the assertion that it is "just as good." About this blue serge frock there is everything that is smart and chic. The newer serge frocks are almost sure to be embroidered, at least those which are shown now are so trimmed. This is an embroidery that can show originality, and there is the best of chances for a distinctive gown when taste is employed in the selection. The most beautiful of the embroideries are done by hand, of course; they show all colors of the rainbow combined in one narrow strip. The Oriental quality of these trimmings is most charming, and, with the darkness and plainness and richness of a background of blue serge, they have the character of utmost contrast.

Coats for Fall Suits.
The coats belonging to the new fall suits range in length all the way from the hips to the knees. Fur forms a generous part of the suits. It is not only used for collars and cuffs, but it is also used around the buttons, down

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited, to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."
According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact that it is a natural remedy, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments; corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by Parcel Post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Adv.

Something New in Accident and Health Policies for Railroad Men

See the CONTINENTAL CASUALTY MAN In Town All Next Week.

Henry Ford certainly started something when he slashed the price of Ford cars. A few other manufacturers followed his lead. Now, other necessities of home life are on the toboggan, and things are getting to look brighter as the winter approaches, for the poor man.

Drs. M. G. Paden and P. M. Shaver and M. B. Paden went to Roswell this morning. The two medical men went to attend the State Medical Association which convenes today in Roswell while Morgan went along as chauffeur and also with the hope of changing his luck.

Presentation of Work of Art

On Wednesday of next week, October 20, at the High School, will occur the presentation of two works of art, Thorwaldsen's "Night and Morning." Letters from Hilary Cooper and Linza Branum, presenting these beautiful bas reliefs, will be read. Eva Wack will give "The Life and Works of Thorwaldsen." Laureen Wilson will accept the present on behalf of the High School.

These pieces of art are the present of the senior class of 1920 of the Carrizozo High School, and are paid for by the proceeds of the Class Play.

The exercises will commence at 3:30 next Wednesday afternoon. Parents, relatives and friends of the High School are cordially invited to be present.

At the Methodist Church

Rev. C. C. Higbee arrived this week from Melrose to take up the duties of pastorate at the Methodist church.
