OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 22

CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1922

Capitan Notes

Albert Pungaton has sold his ranch and other interests on the Nogal Mesa, and expects to leave the end of this week, with his family, for Virginia, and make a fresh start. Albert is considered a good, hard-working farmer, who hewed close to the line and came nearer making "dry" farming a success than many. He will make the trip overland in two trucks, and when he finds the right place to locate in the "Old Dominion" will try "wet" farming for a spell. He has farmed for close to a quarter of a century in this county and was considered one of its most progressive farmers.

J. H. Morris, who for the past five years has lived in Capitan and vicinity, will leave for north-west Arkansas in about ten days. He has purchased a farm and land there of 1300 acres—40 acres in cultivation, with a good orchard of 200 trees, some cattle, hogs and poultry, team and wagon, horse and buggy, and among the improvements a five-room residence ready to move into, all for the ridiculously low price of $1450 cash. He has sold his lease in the old Rentfrow Smithy to a local man, and has also disposed of a section of land located near the Block ranch.

There has been some street talk going around for some time of incorporating the Village of Capitan. If, in the early days of the village, when the railroad came in and some six or seven hundred men working in the mines, there had been a move of that kind made, Capitan today would be the County Seat; or if the community at that time had exhibited a little enterprise, a water system could have been developed, shade trees set out along the principal streets of the village, besides small orchards and gardens under irrigation. But what is the use of talking? Ten years from now the people living in your hustling little windy village can, perhaps, say the same. The trouble is we can't see things until they happen.

At this season the trees in the main part of Capitan are a relief to the eye of the tourist, after passing through such semi-deserted villages as Lincoln and Nogal, and causes him to hunger awhile longer than his schedule called for. But should we decide to incorporate later, we will have more than shade trees to build on. We are proud of our little town it suits us as it is, and pleases the eye of the tourist who has just passed through such semi-deserted places as Lincoln, Picacho and Nogal.

The long continued drought in this vicinity has been discouraging. Farms are as dry as a bone. Stockmen have been losing cattle all around—from 3 to 4 for the little man to 100 and more for those owning larger herds. Slight snows the past and previous winters impoverished the range and lack of early spring rains retarded vegetation. Some men have sold their herds at a loss to keep from losing all.

Jehu M. Penfield, the Lincoln Merchant, reported stock losses from lack of range. But the fruit crop around Lincoln and Mesado will run from a half to a three-quarter crop. Yet in some places fruit will be almost a complete failure.

The people are preparing to furnish transportation from Capitan to the Post and return at $1.00 a head, if the railroad runs a special for July 4th.

W. CARPENTER,

Miller-Miller

Frank R. Miller was up this week from Alamogordo and when confronted with the change of having committed matrimony ingeniously confessed the soft impeachment. Mr. Miller was married to Mrs. Mary Miller last week in Alamogordo, the home of the bride. The contracting parties had made Carrizozo their home for a number of years, but will probably locate in Alamogordo where Mr. Miller is considering a business proposition. In this nuptial arrangement a Miller was neither lost nor gained; yet their friends wish them just as much happiness and prosperity.

Washington News Letter

By Wallace Bassford

Special Correspondent

Washington, D. C., June 19—When Oscar Underwood, of Alabama, was in the House of Representatives he built up a great reputation as an expert on the tariff; he became Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and his name became fastened on the tariff law which his committee compiled and put through the House. Under that measure the country enjoyed the greatest prosperity it ever knew, and it remained for the greed of American manufacturers to find fault with the law. Mr. Underwood is now the Democratic leader in the Senate. He has written for the New York Times a long article on the proposed tariff law now before the Senate. Here are some of the most pertinent paragraphs:

"I have always opposed in principle the theory of protection, and have leaned strongly to the idea that customs taxation should be levied primarily in the interest of revenue for the Government, and that all rates of taxation should be so adjusted as to allow a reasonable inflow of goods from abroad in order that the Custom House might have an opportunity to take its toll as they passed through and some degree of competition might be established. I have never contended that, in the interest of a revenue tariff, it is necessary to bring about destructive competition, but a tariff that fixes the rates of taxation so high as to practically prohibit foreign goods from entering the American market at all has been abhorrent to my ideas of the proper use of the taxation power of the Congress of the United States.

"The Democratic Party is often charged with being a free trade party. So far as I know from the beginning the Democratic Party has never abandoned the system of raising taxes at the Custom House. There are free traders in the Democratic Party and I have known of some in the Republican Party. As I understand it, the position of the Democratic Party is that taxes levied at the Custom House should be for revenue purposes only, that the Custom House is a place where revenue may be obtained to run the Government, and that it provides a convenient way of raising a certain amount of revenue; that if a revenue tax be levied at the Custom House in such a way that it does not unduly stifle competition from abroad, and the person who pays it really pays it to the Government, it is a reasonable way to raise revenue. But when a tax is levied so high that very few imports come in—and if imports do not pass through the Custom House they leave no taxes behind them—the result is merely that of raising the price, which goes into the pockets of the home producer.

The argument is advanced that since taxes are to be levied on manufactured products, taxes should also be levied on agricultural products, and that if the people are to be penalized for the benefit of the manufacturer they should likewise be penalized for the benefit of the farmer. Where the fallacy of this argument comes is that under the guise of doing something to help the farmer in some particular item, their support is asked for a bill that as a whole means that for every dollar the farmers may derive from the bill they will pay $100 in taxes for the benefit of somebody else. In other words, for every 1 per cent, of protection they are given they pay 99 per cent, of protection for the benefit of other people. I do not think there is any question about that.

"Take the wool schedule, known as Schedule K in the Payne-Aldrich bill, but having a number in the bill that is now before the Senate. If the tax proposed in the bill is levied the farmer will have to pay the tax the same as does the man who lives in the city, the man who works in the store, machine shop, the foundry or in an office. If the analysis be worked out it will be demonstrated that the tax of 33 per cent on scoured wool will cost the public nearly $200,000,000, of which those engaged in the growing of wool will receive something like $72,000,000, against which the farmers as a whole will pay about $99,000,000, the rest of the people will pay in proportion, while the Government will receive as its share of this enormous tax less than $20,000,000. Yet, it is contended that this duty on wool will help the American farmers. I admit it will help the men whose business is raising sheep, but the other farmers of the country, those who do not grow wool but raise wheat and corn and cotton, will pay the bill—that is, a most substantial part of it—and for every wool grower there are a thousand farmers who do not raise sheep. I do not have in mind the little farmer who raises cotton or wheat and has a few sheep on the side, but the men whose business is growing sheep and who are only a few in number when compared with the great mass of farmers who will pay so large a proportion of the tax proposed in the pending measure."

Financial Statistics New Mexico

Washington, D. C., June, 1922.

—The Department of Commerce has just issued a Census report showing the costs of government for the state of New Mexico for the fiscal year ended November 30, 1920. The total amounted to $3,458,119, was a per capita cost of $15.09. In 1917 the per capita cost was $8.17, and in 1914, $4.06, the totals for those years being $2,873,390 and $1,394,824, respectively. The per capita costs for 1920 consisted of expenses of general departments, $9.23; payments for interest, $0.53; and for outlays, $5.33.

The total revenue receipts in 1920 were $5,884,714, or $16.27 per capita. For the fiscal year the per capita excess of revenue receipts over governmental costs was, therefore, $1.18.

Property and special taxes constitute the greater part of the revenue in a majority of states. In New Mexico they represented 38.3 per cent for 1920, 49.1 per cent for 1917, and 55.1 per cent for 1914. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected was 4.9 per cent from 1914 to 1917, and 100.4 per cent from 1917 to 1920. The per capita property and special taxes for the three specified years were $6.23, $3.20, and $3.14, respectively.

The net indebtedness (funded and floating debt less sinking fund assets) of New Mexico is increasing, being $8.83 per capita for 1920, $7.96 for 1917, and $3.01 for 1914.

'FLESH! FLESH!' SYNOPSIS—Wentley and his highly placed in the Chicago business world, Benjamin Corvet is something of a recluse and a mystery to his associates. After a stormy interview with his partner, Henry Spearman, Corvet seeks to distance Sherrill, daughter of his other business partner, Lawrence Sherrill, and secure from her a promise not to marry Spearman. He then disappears. Sherrill learns Corvet has written to a certain Alan Conrad, in Chicago, Kansas, and exhibited strange satisfaction over the matter. Corvet's letter summons Conrad, a youth of unknown parentage, to Chicago. Alan arrives in Chicago from a statement of Sherrill it seems probable Conrad is Corvet's illegitimate son. Corvet has deserted his house and its contents to Alan.

What Sherrill had told Alan of his father had been irritating itself again and again in Alan's thoughts now he recalled that Sherrill had said that his daughter believed that Corvet's disappearance had had something to do with her. Alan had wondered at the moment how that could be; and as he watched her across the table and now and then exchanged a comment with her, it puzzled him still more. He had opportunity to ask her when she waited with him in the library, after dinner was finished and her mother had gone upstairs; but he did not see how to go about it.

"I'm sorry," she said to him, "that we can't be home tonight; but perhaps you would rather be alone?" "He did not answer that."

"Have you a picture here, Miss Sherrill, of my father?" he asked.

"Uncle Benny had had very few pictures taken; but there is one here."

She went into the study and came back with a book open at a half-toned picture of Benjamin Corvet. Alan took it from her and carried it quickly closer to the light. The face that looked up to him from the heavily glazed page was regular of feature, handsome in a way, and forceful. There were imagination and vigor of thought in the broad, smooth forehead; the eyes were strangely moody and brooding; the mouth was gentle, rather kindly; it was a queerly intelligent, haunting face. This was his father! But, as Alan held the picture, gazing down upon it, the only emotion which came to him was realization that he felt none. He had no emotion of any sort; he could not attach to this man, because he bore the name which some one had told him was his father's, the emotions which, when dreaming of his father, he had felt.

Alan stood still a moment longer, then, remembering the book which he held, he drew a chair up to the light, and read the short, dry biography of his father printed on the page opposite the portrait. It summarized in a few hundred words his father's life. Alan shut the book and sat thoughtfully. The tall clock in the hall struck nine. He got up and went out into the hall and asked for his hat and coat. When they had been brought, he put them on and went out. He went down the steps and in the center and turned west to Aster street. When he reached the hall of a neighbor he dropped under a street lamp, looking up at the big, stern old man's questioning eyes.

He Could Not Call Up Any Sense That the House Was His.

He could not call up any sense that the house was his, but he knew that he should be the guest, the friend of such people as the Sherrills? No one as yet, since Sherrill had told him he was Corvet's son, had called him by name; when they did, what would they call him? Alan Conrad still? Or Alan Corvet?

He noticed, up a street to the west, the lighted sign of a drug store and turned up that way; he had promised, he had recollected now, to write to those in Kansas—he could not call them "father" and "mother" any more—and tell them what he had discovered as soon as he arrived. He could not tell them that, but he could write them at least that he had arrived safely and was well. He bought a postcard in the drug store, and wrote just "Arrived safely; am well!" to John Welton in Kansas. There was a little vending machine upon the counter, and he dropped in a penny and got a box of matches and put them in his pocket.

He walked the card and turned back to Aster street; and he walked more swiftly now, having come to his decision, and only that one quick look up at the house as he approached it. With what had his father shut himself up within that house for twenty years? And was it there still? And was it from that that Benjamin Corvet had fled? He saw no one in the street, and was certain no one was observing him as, taking the key from his pocket, he ran up the steps and unlocked the outer door. Holding this door open to get the light from the street lamp, he fitted the key into the inner door; then he closed the outer door. For fully a minute, with fast-beating heart and a sense of expectation of he knew not what, he kept his hand upon the key before he turned it; then he opened the door and stepped into the dark and silent house.

CHAPTER V

An Encounter.

Alan, standing in the darkness of the hall, felt in his pocket for his matches and struck one on the box. The light showed the hall in front of him, reaching back into some vague, distant darkness, and great rooms with wide portered doorways gaping on both sides. He turned into the room upon his right, glanced to see that the shades were drawn on the windows toward the street, then found the switch and turned on the electric light.

Alan had the feeling which so often comes to one in an unfamiliar and vacant house that there was some one in the house with him. He listened and seemed to hear another sound in the upper hall, a footstep. He went out quickly to the foot of the stairs and looked up them.

"Is any one here?" he called. "Is any one here?"

His voice brought no response. He went half way up the curve of the wide stairway and called again, and listened; then he fought down the feeling he had had; Sherrill had said there would be no one in the house, and Alan was certain there was no one. So he went back to the room where he had left the light.

The center of this room, like the room next to it, was occupied by a library table-desk. He pulled open some drawers in it; one or two had blueprints and technical drawings in them; the others had only the miscellaneous which accumulates in a room much used. There were drawers also under the bookcases all around the room; they appeared, when Allan opened some of them, to contain pamphlets of various societies, and the scientific correspondence of which Sherrill had told him. Alan felt that seeing these things was bringing his father closer to him; they gave him a little of the feeling he had been unable to get when he looked at his father's picture. He could realize better now he lonely, restless man, pursued by some ghost he could not kill, taking up for distraction one subject of study after another, exchanging such in turn until he could no longer make it across him, and then absorbing himself in the next.

On the top of a chest of high drawers in a corner near the dressing table were some papers. Alan went over to look at them; they were invitations, notices of concerts and of plays twenty years old—the well, probably, of the morning when Corvet's wife had gone away, left where her maid or the kurnel had laid them, and only picked up and put back there at the dinner table when the room was cleaned. An Alan touched them, he saw that his fingers left marks in the dust on the smooth top of the chest; he noticed that upon one chest, behind the chest, were some other marks of the same sort as he had seen. The front edge of these other marks marked what Alan had seen marks upon yet, too, was not a large man, Alan's own hand was of good size and powerful, but when he put his fingers over the marks the other hand made, he found that the other hand must have been larger and more powerful than his own. Had it been Corvet's servant? It might have been, though the marks seemed too fresh for that; for the servant, Sherrill had said, had left the day Corvet's disappearance was discovered.

This proof that some one had been prying about in the house before himself and since Corvet had gone, startled Alan and angered him. Who had been searching in Benjamin Corvet's—in Alan's house? He pushed the drawers shut hastily and hurried across the hall to the room opposite. In this room—plainly Benjamin Corvet's bedroom—were no signs of intrusion. He went to the door of the room connecting with it, turned on the light, and looked in. It was a smaller room than the others and contained a roll-top desk and a cabinet. The cover of the desk was closed, and the drawers of the cabinet were shut and apparently undisturbed. He tried the cover of the desk, but it appeared to be locked; after looking around vainly for a key, he tried again, exerting a little more force, and this time the top went up easily, tearing away the metal plate into which the claws of the lock clamped and the two long screws which had held it. He examined the lock, surprised, and saw that the screws must have been merely set into the holes; scars showed where a chisel or some metal implement had been thrust into who had come back? That, though not impossible, seemed improbable. Alan stooped quickly, unlaced and stripped off his shoes, and ran out into the hall to the head of the stairs, where he looked down and listened. From here the sound of some one moving about came to him distinctly; he could see a light below, but when he ran down to the turn of the stairs, it became plain that there was a very dim and flickering light in the library. He crept on farther down the staircase. His hands were cold and moist from his excitement, and his body was hot and trembling.

Whoever it was that was moving about downstairs, even if he was not one who had a right to be there, at least felt secure from interruption. He was going with heavy step from window to window; where he found a shade up, he pulled it down brusquely and with a violence which suggested great strength under a nervous strain; a shade, which had been pulled down, flew up, and the man dabbled it as though it had startled him; then, after an instant, he pulled it down again. Alan crept still farther down and at last caught sight of him. He was a big, young-looking man, with broad shoulders and very erect vigor; Alan guessed his age at thirty-five; he was handsome—he had a straight forehead over daring, deep-set eyes; his nose, lips and chin were powerfully formed; and he was expensively and very carefully dressed. The light by which Alan saw these things came from a flat light pocket searchlight that the man carried in one hand, which threw a little brilliant circle of light as he directed it; and now, as the light changed to fall on his other hand—powerful and heavily muscled—Alan recollected the look and size of the finger prints on the chest of drawers upstairs. He did not doubt that this was the same man who had gone through the desk; but since he had already rifled the desks, what did he want here now? As the man moved out of sight, Alan crept on down as far as the door to the library; the man had gone on into the rear room, and Alan went far enough into the library so he could see him.

Somewhere Within the House, Unmistakably on the Floor Below Him, a Door Had Slammed.

under the top to force it up. The pigeonholes and little drawers in the upper part of the desk, as he swiftly opened them, he found entirely empty. He hurried to the cabinet; the drawers of the cabinet too had been forced, and very recently; for the scars and the splinters of wood were clean and fresh. These drawers and the drawers in the lower part of the desk either were empty, or the papers in them had been disarranged and tumbled in confusion, as though some one had examined them hastily and tossed them back. To Alan, the marks of violence and roughness were unmistakably the work of the man with the big hands who had left marks upon the top of the chest of drawers; and the feeling that he had been in the house very recently was stronger than ever.

Alan ran out into the hall and listened; he heard no sound; but he went back to the little room more excited than before. For what had the other man been searching? For the same things which Alan was looking for? And had the other man got them? Who might the other be, and what might be his connection with Benjamin Corvet? Alan had no doubt that everything of importance must have been taken away, but he would make sure of that. He took some of the papers from the drawers and began to examine them; after nearly an hour of this, he had found only one article which appeared connected in any way with what Sherrill had told him or with Alan himself. In one of the little drawers of the desk he found several books, much worn as though from being carried in a pocket, and one of these contained a series of entries stretching over several years. These listed an amount—$150—opposite a series of dates with only the year and the month given, and there was an entry for every second month.

Alan felt his fingers trembling as he turned the pages of the little book and found at the end of the list a blank, and below, in the same hand but in writing which had captured slightly with the passage of years, another date and the confirming entry of $1,500. Alan looked through the little book again and put it in his pocket. It was, beyond doubt, his father's memorandum of the sums sent to Blue Temple for Alan; it told him that here had been in his father's thoughts. He grew warm at the thought as he began putting the other things back into the drawers.

He started and unaccountably shuddered; then he listened attentively, and his eyes were on the door. He heard some one come and go, and he saw a light in the hall; but he did not see the man who had been in the house. He went back to the desk and looked at the book again; he saw that the entries were in the same hand as the one which had captured slightly with the passage of years, and he felt that the man who had been in the house was the same man who had been in the house.

As the man moved out of sight, Alan crept on down as far as the door to the library; the man had gone on into the rear room, and Alan went far enough into the library so he could see him.

He had pulled open one of the drawers in the big table in the rear room and with his light held as high as to show what was in it, he was tumbling over its contents and examining them. He went through one after another of the drawers of the table like this; after examining them, he rose and kicked the last one shut disgustedly; he stood looking about the room questioningly, then he started toward the front room.

He had, as yet, neither seen nor heard anything to alarm him, and as he went to the desk in the front room and peered impatiently into the drawers, he slammed them shut, one after another. He straightened and stared about. "D—n Ben! D—n Ben!" he ejaculated violently and returned to the rear room. Alan, again following him, found him on his knees in front of one of the drawers under the bookcases. As he continued searching through the drawers, his irritation became greater and greater. He jerked one drawer entirely out of its case, and the contents flew in every direction; swearing at it, he gathered up the letters. One suddenly caught his attention; he began reading it closely, then snatched it back into the drawer, crammed the rest on top of it, and went on to the next of the files. He searched in this manner through half a dozen drawers, plainly finding nothing at all he wanted; he dragged some of the books from their cases, felt behind them and shoved back some of the books but dropped others on the floor and blasphemy burst from him. The beam of light from the torch in his hand swung aside and back and forth. Without warning, suddenly it caught Alan as he stood in the dark of the front room; and as the dim white circle of light gleamed into Alan's face, the man looked that way and saw him.

The effect of this upon the man was so strange and so bewildering to Alan that Alan could only stare at him. The big man seemed to shrink into himself and to shrink back and away from Alan. He roared out something in a hollow thick with fear and horror; he seemed to choke with terror. There was nothing in his look akin to mere surprise or alarm at realizing that another was there and had been seeing and overhearing him. The light which he still gripped away back and forth and showed him Alan again, and he raised his arm before his face as he recoiled.

The consternation of the man was so complete that it checked Alan's rush toward him; he halted, then advanced slowly and watchfully. As he went forward and the light shone upon his face again, the big man cried out hoarsely:

"D—n you, d—n you, with the hole above your eye! The bullet got you! And now you've got Ben! But you can't get me! I'll get you to hell! You can't get me! I'll get you—I'll get you! You—can't have the Miwaka!"

He drew back his arm and with all his might hurled the flashlight at Alan. It missed and crashed somewhere behind him, but did not go out; the beam of light shot back and wavered and flickered over both of them, as the torch rolled on the floor. Alan rushed forward and, thrusting through the dark, his hand struck the man's face and seized his coat.

The man caught at and seized Alan's arm; he seemed to feel of it and to be afraid of it. "Flesh! Flesh!" he roared in terror, and his big eyes stared at Alan. He was screaming and shouting and men's face. The man struck back—a heavy blow on the side of Alan's head which dazed him but left him strong to strike again, and his knuckles reached the man's face once more, but he got another heavy blow in return. The man was grappling no longer; he swung Alan to one side and off of the floor, and rolled himself away. He scrambled to his feet and dashed out through the library, across the hall, and into the service room. Alan got to his feet; dazed and not yet familiar with the house, he blundered against a wall and had to feel his way along it to the service room; as he slipped and stumbled down the stairway, a door closed loudly at the end of the corridor he had seen at the foot of the stairs. He ran along the corridor to the door; it had closed with a spring lock, and seconds passed while he felt in the dark for the catch; he found it and tore the door open, and came out suddenly into the cold air of the night in a paved passageway beside the house which led in one direction to the street and in the other to a gate opening on the alley. He ran forward to the street and looked up and down, but found it empty; then he ran back to the alley. At the end of the alley, where it intersected the cross street, the figure of the man running away appeared suddenly out of the shadows, then disappeared; Alan, following as far as the street, could see nothing more of him; this street too was empty.

He ran a little farther and looked, then he went back to the house. The side door had swung shut again and latched. He let himself in at the front door and turned on the light in the reading lamp in the library. The electric torch still was burning on the floor and he picked it up and extinguished it; he went upstairs and brought down his shoes. He had seen a wood fire set ready for lighting in the library, and now he lighted it and sat before it drying his wet socks before he put on his shoes. He was still shivering and breathing fast from his struggle with the man and his chase after him, and by the strangeness of what had taken place.

When the shaft of light from the torch had flashed across Alan's face in the dark library, the man had not taken him for what he was—a living person; he had taken him for a specter. His terror and the things he had cried out could mean only that. The specter of whom? Not of Benjamin Corvet; for one of the things Alan had remarked when he saw Benjamin Corvet's picture was that he himself did not look at all like his father. Besides, what the man had said made it certain that he did not think the specter was "Ben"; for the specter had "got Ben." Did Alan look like some one else, then? Like whom? Evidently like the man—now dead, for he had a ghost—who had "got" Ben, in the big man's opinion. Who could that be?

Alan got up and went to look at himself in the mirror he had seen in the hall. He was white, now that the flush of the fighting was going; he probably had been pale before with excitement, and over his right eye there was a round black mark. Alan looked down at his hands; a little skin was off one knuckle, where he had struck the man, and his fingers were smudged with a black and sooty dust. He had smudged them on the papers upstairs or else in feeling his way about the dark house, and at some time he had touched his forehead and left the black mark. That had been the "bullet hole."

He had smudged them on the papers upstairs or else in feeling his way about the dark house, and at some time he had touched his forehead and left the black mark. That had been the "bullet hole."

The rest that the man had said had been a reference to some name; Alan had no trouble to recollect the name, and, while he did not understand it at all, it stirred him queerly—"the Miwaka." What was that? The queer excitement and questioning that the name brought, when he repeated it to himself, was not recollection; for he could not recall ever having heard the name before; but it was not completely strange to him. He could define the excitement it stirred only in that way.

Sherrill had believed that here in this house Benjamin Corvet had left—or might have left—a memorandum, a record, of an account of some sort which would explain to Alan, his son, the blight which hung over his life. Sherrill had said that it could have been no mere intrigue, no vulgar personal aim; and the events of the night had made that very certain; for, plainly, whatever was hidden in that house involved some one else seriously, desperately. There was no other way to explain the intrusion of the sort of man whom Alan had surprised there an hour ago.

The fact that this other man searched also did not prove that Benjamin Corvet had left a record in the house, as Sherrill believed; but it certainly showed that another person believed—or feared—it. Whether or not Alan had sent Benjamin Corvet away four days ago, whether or not there had been guilt behind the ghost which had "got Ben," there was guilt in the big man's superstitious terror when he had seen Alan. A bold, powerful man like that one, when his conscience is clear, does not see a ghost. And the ghost which he had seen had a bullet hole above the brow!

"For this was the man whom he had fought in Benjamin Corvet's house the night before."

"Flesh! Flesh!" he roared in terror, and his big eyes stared at Alan. He was screaming and shouting and

men's face. The man struck back—a heavy blow on the side of Alan's head which dazed him but left him strong to strike again, and his knuckles reached the man's face once more, but he got another heavy blow in return. The man was grappling no longer; he swung Alan to one side and off of the floor, and rolled himself away. He scrambled to his feet and dashed out through the library, across the hall, and into the service room. Alan got to his feet; dazed and not yet familiar with the house, he blundered against a wall and had to feel his way along it to the service room; as he slipped and stumbled down the stairway, a door closed loudly at the end of the corridor he had seen at the foot of the stairs. He ran along the corridor to the door; it had closed with a spring lock, and seconds passed while he felt in the dark for the catch; he found it and tore the door open, and came out suddenly into the cold air of the night in a paved passageway beside the house which led in one direction to the street and in the other to a gate opening on the alley. He ran forward to the street and looked up and down, but found it empty; then he ran back to the alley. At the end of the alley, where it intersected the cross street, the figure of the man running away appeared suddenly out of the shadows, then disappeared; Alan, following as far as the street, could see nothing more of him; this street too was empty.

When the shaft of light from the torch had flashed across Alan's face in the dark library, the man had not taken him for what he was—a living person; he had taken him for a specter. THE WEDDING

"A thing of custom—'tis no other."—Shakespeare.
"All about to be married," is the way one correspondent starts her query, "but we have not announced our engagement, as we wish to give our friends a genuine surprise. We are going to slip off some day soon and get married, but want to send wedding cards. Will you kindly tell me how they should be worded?"

To begin with, do not attempt anything original or informal. It is quite all right to announce an engagement in an original way, but the wedding announcement should be entirely formal. In most cases the announcements should be sent out in the name of the bride's parents, or those who stand in the place of a parent in case the bride is an orphan, or an aunt, uncle or grandparent. If possible, have these announcements engraved and send them out the day of the marriage as soon as it is over. Have all envelopes addressed and stamped and ready to send out directly. All announcements should be sent at exactly the same time. Here is the usual form:

Mr. and Mrs. John Brown have the honor to announce the marriage of their daughter
Anne
to
Mr. James Smith Jones
on Thursday, May the eighth nineteen hundred and twenty-two at St. Thomas' Church
New York.

If it is a grandparent, sister or brother whose name need not be the same as the bride, then in place of the single word Anne, on the fourth line should be inserted "Miss Anne Brown."

In the unusual event that the contracting persons have no near relatives to send these announcements they may send an announcement worded thus:

and
Miss Anna Brown have the honor to announce their marriage
on Thursday, May the eighth etc.

If you do not feel that you can afford engraved announcements the best thing to do would be to write letters on the day of the wedding, to be posted immediately afterwards, telling your nearest friends of the event, but

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"JUBILEE"

THOUGH a number of etymologists maintain that this word is derived from the Latin jubilate, to shout for joy, its pedigree really antedates the birth of the Latin language, going back to the Hebrew, where we find the word yobel, meaning literally the blast of a trumpet, and by extension, the year of jubilation which was announced by this trumpet.

According to the law in Leviticus 25, this was an epoch of general restoration and emancipation, celebrated every fifty years, when liberty was to be proclaimed throughout the land with the blowing of trumpets in the synagogue. During this jubilee year the land was not tilled, all lands that had been sold were returned to their original owners or their heirs, and all bondsmen of Hebrew blood were liberated.

The Christian church adopted the term from the Jewish, and in turn, a number of secular governments took up the idea, the jubilee of George III and Queen Victoria being two of the most famous in modern history. (Copyright.)

Beginning of "Bootlegging"

Conflict between private makers of whisky and the government began with the passage of the Alexander Hamilton excise law in 1791. This led to the whisky rebellion in 1794, when it was demonstrated that organized and public opposition to the law was futile and such distilleries began to resort to secrecy and evasion.

THE WORLD

BAD old world? Well, I don't know.
When I see the lilacs blow;
When I watch the roses bloom
With their beauty and perfume;
When at dawn I see the Light
Rise triumphant from the night;
When I note the golden fields
Of the autumn harvest fields;
When I hear the birds hard by Singing, winging through the sky;
When I hear a Mother's song—
Even with its wealth of wrong
This old world appears to be Fairly good and sweet to me.

WOODY'S BATTLE

LITTLE WOODY CHUCK found himself one day all alone in the big world, for his mother had put him, with his brothers and sisters, out of their home, and told them they must look out for themselves.

Mrs. Woodchuck is not a very loving mother—not at all like Mrs. Fox, who takes the greatest care of her children, or Mrs. Possum, who often is bringing up two families at the same time.

And so it happened that little Woody Chuck found himself looking for a home one day when La was quite young.

He was not at all afraid, because he had never seen a dog or a gun; so he hunted around and found a place to make a new home. Now, woodchucks are not very hard working animals; so, when Woody had finished his home he went inside and stayed until the next day, when the sun was nice and warm, for woodchucks are very fond of sunning themselves.

For a long time Woody Chuck thought the world was a very nice place. The garden was near, and of course he thought all the vegetables were grown for his use; so he ate all he wanted.

But one day he had a rude awakening, for Mr. Dog saw him, and after him he ran; but as Woody is a good runner, he easily reached his home ahead of Mr. Dog and turned around in the doorway to chuckle naively at poor Mr. Dog. But Mr. Dog went right up to the door and began to dig, and pretty soon Woody knew that he would have to move, or the chuckling would be done by Mr. Dog this time.

So Woody Chuck began to burrow, filling up the hole as he went and keeping ahead of Mr. Dog, who kept right on digging, for he knew Woody must be in there somewhere.

Woody intended to make an opening when he was far enough away from Mr. Dog; but, to his surprise, he came upon a rock, which seemed to hold him prisoner, and it was then he found out he had good, sharp teeth.

Mr. Dog kept right on digging, and coming closer and closer, Woody Chuck knew then he would have to fight to save himself; so he started, and just as the end of Mr. Dog's nose came through the earth, Woody set his sharp teeth in it, with the result he ran for home, stopping every now and then to rub his hurt nose.

Woody Chuck came out, and, sitting up on his hind legs, he looked about and chuckled again: "I thought Mr. Dog was going to laugh this time," he said, "and if I had not found how long and sharp my teeth are, I know he would. I really must take good care of my teeth, for I have learned today that they are useful to me in other ways than eating. And now I must find a place to make a new home, for Mr. Dog has certainly wrecked this one."

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

Facts about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky hour.

VIVIAN

THE charming name of Vivian is almost the equivalent of the adjective "vivacious." It means lively, having been derived from the Latin vita signifying life, and was used by the Roman Christians to express their hopes of eternally.

The first feminine name formed from vita is Vivia, a name made famous by Vivia Perpetua, the noble young matron of Carthage, whose martyrdom is one of the most touching histories of the early church. Her many votaries gave vogue to her name.

In later Roman days Viviana came to be popular through a Christian maiden of that name who was put to death by a Roman governor on the charge that she had destroyed the sight of one of his eyes by magic. Much later a church was erected over her remains. Her fame and name lingered, and appears prominently again in "Morte d'Arthur" when Viviana is the enchantress of King Arthur's court.

Scotland took over the name of Vivian, applying it as both a masculine and feminine name. France adopted the masculine form as Vivien and straightway formed the now-popular feminine Vivienne. England has always favored Vivian and America received and popularized the same under that spelling. Viviana is the favored form in Spain and Italy, the latter country still employing the early Roman Vivia.

Vivian's tell-tale gem is the life-giving ruby. Its inexhaustible flame promises her dauntless courage, bodily health and strength, and dispels evil spirits. To dream of it signifies unexpected guests. Friday is her lucky day and three her lucky number. The lily, signifying purity, is her flower.

Petersburg Resident Says She Had About Lost Hope of Getting Better—Now Well and Happy.

"Tanlac has been such a blessing to me I can't help singing its praises," said Mrs. T. J. Archer, highly esteemed resident of 1147 Shepard St., Petersburg, Va.

"I had indigestion so bad I couldn't eat a thing without being in misery for hours, and the pain around my heart caused by the gas seemed all I could stand. I constantly had headaches and awful spells of dizziness. Then to make matters worse rheumatism in my arms, shoulders and knees almost drove me to distraction, and for three months I couldn't do a stroke of work."

"I had just about decided it was no use to take any more medicine when my husband brought me a bottle of Tanlac. Now I never have a touch of indigestion. Headaches and dizzy spells are a thing of the past, and rheumatism has left me entirely. I never have known a medicine to equal Tanlac."

WOMAN HAS HISTORIC PEN

Used by President Harrison When He Signed the Present American Copyright Bill.

The recent celebration by the League of American Pen Women of their twenty-fifth anniversary, or "silver jubilee," makes this story timely.

During the administration of Benjamin Harrison, the present American copyright bill was passed. William McKinley, then a member of the house of representatives, offered the bill, the data for which was supplied by Margaret Sullivan Burke, newspaper correspondent, and afterward first president of the League of American Pen Women. She gave this league its first home and its name.

Afterward, when President Harrison signed this bill, the pen with which he signed it was presented to Mrs. Burke by Elijah Halford, his private secretary, and one of her old Indiana friends. This pen is now in the possession of her daughter, Miss Burke.

THE PRAYER OF A HORSE

By Laurence E. Cash.

O MAN, my Lord and Master, hear Thou my prayer:

Water me, feed me, keep me clean and work me in reason. O Lord, when my day's work be done give me shelter from rain, wind and cold and a clean, dry bed in a stall wide enough for me to lie down in comfort. Do not tie my head in an unnatural position or cut off my tail, which is my only defence against flies. Do not, O Man, drive me rapidly down hill. O Lord, do be merciful and considerate of me in hot weather, and do not kick, strike or otherwise abuse me when I do not understand your desires. Plead me not with merciless spurs. Teach Thou me to understand Thy desires. Speak gently unto me, O Lord, Thy voice means more to me than whip and reins. I have a sense of humor. Play with me, and pet me, O Man, and I will gladly lead myself to Thee in willing service.

Have mercy on me, O Master, when I have colic, and do give me one spoonful of Di-Col-Q. It will relieve me quickly. When I have scours drench me with Di-Col-Q. And, O Master, when I be galled, have sores on shoulders or back, wire cuts, scratches, mange or swellings, apply Thee Di-Col-Q to mine affected parts and I will praise Thee for relief from mine afflictions. Di-Col-Q will enable me to do Thy bidding with delight.

O Man, Di-Col-Q is just as good for similar human ills.

Remember, O Lord, Di-Col-Q is made in mercy by New York Drug Concern, 401 Lafayette Street, New York City. Praise Thee thus for their alleviation of beastly ills.

O Master, when I fail to eat examine my mouth for the cause. Do not work me when I can not eat. Be merciful unto me, O Man, and I will serve Thee and Thy family many years with a glad heart.

Finally, O Lord, when my youthful beauty and strength be gone, and my days of service ended, neither turn me out to starve and freeze, nor sell me to some cruel man to be tortured. O Man, if Thou be financially unable to care for me in my old days, take Thou my life in the kindest way.

Hear and answer my prayer, O my Lord, and YOUR God will reward you both here and in the hereafter.

With all reverence I so pray unto Thee in the name of Him, who was born in a manger.—AMEN.

His father carefully explained the significance of the picture and added: "And you, my son, are one of His little lambs."

The child studied the picture a moment.

"And you are one of the old sheep, are you, daddy?" was his guileless comment.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

For Superintendent of Schools

We are authorized to announce the candidacy of Mrs. Louise F. Coe for Superintendent of Schools of Lincoln County, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

The absolute breakdown of the legislative branch of our government is so glaringly apparent that it is known to all men and admitted by everyone but partisans.

With an overwhelming majority in both branches of Congress, Republican leaders have the temerity to charge the Democratic minority with preventing legislation. Without debating the charge, is it not a sufficient confession of impotence?

The boast of the Republicans in 1920 was that, if given control of the government, the people would be shown what real constructive legislation and highly intelligent administration meant. The people are still waiting, but not with the same ardor that they accepted the persuasive promises.

Promises made two years ago, by the winning party, are still but promises, and as a distinguished Republican paper puts it, "the party has nearly enough left, unfulfilled, to make the congressional campaign this fall." Never, perhaps since the adoption of the constitution, has a great political party fallen into such straits.

For Superintendent

Mrs. Louise F. Coe was here this week from her home on the Ruidoso, and while here authorized the News to make announcement of her candidacy for County Superintendent of Schools, subject to the action of the Democratic party. Mrs. Coe was the nominee of the Democratic party for this office two years ago and, though defeated, made a magnificent showing, and where she was known and the people were acquainted with her school work she was very heartily supported, irrespective of politics. In the western sections of the county where her acquaintances were limited to those made during a short campaign, the lead of her opponent, a popular local candidate, was naturally strong. Conditions have changed quite materially in the past two years.

Mrs. Coe has become better acquainted, her work is more widely known and appreciated and she is now universally recognized as a woman of the highest attainments, a teacher of unquestioned ability and a woman of who know her appreciate her; those acquainted with her knowledge and accomplishments as a teacher commend her, and no better recommendation could be desired for the elevation of Mrs. Coe to the superintendency of our county schools.

All Druggists

To Eliminate Accidents

The following letter was received from President Harding by the Chairman of Safety Section, American Railway Association:

"The attention has been called to the fact that under the auspices of the American Railway Association an intensive campaign is to be waged for eliminating accidents at railroad highway crossings.

"The complete success of such an effort would mean the saving of thousands of lives, the prevention of many more thousands of injuries and incidentally the prevention of a great property loss. Of course, the ideal solution is elimination of grade crossings, to which all possible energy and means should be unceasingly directed. But the extent of our country and its railroad mileage make apparent that not for many years of utmost effort could this be effected. There should be constant pressure for elimination of these danger spots, particularly in the more populous areas, pending which there is need for just the kind of preventive effort that your Association is planning. Among these measures, the most effective would seem to be to arouse in the minds of drivers a sense of their personal responsibilities. When thoughtlessness is allowed to usurp the place of vigilance, as too often happens, the scene is set for tragedy. Reminders, and still more reminders, of the need of caution at railway crossings are needed.

"Surely, the effort you are undertaking is appealing, and it ought to have the most generous and general support."

Hold What We Have

Viewed practically, laying aside partisan considerations, the candidacy of Senator Jones for return to the Senate is a chance for New Mexico to gain considerable foothold on future advantages.

The Senator today is next to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, the most powerful committee in the world. Senator Simmons now is chairman and Senator Jones will become chairman when the present head retires. Because of the advanced years of the chairman, Senator Jones now has on his shoulders most of the labor of the committee. However, for New Mexico to set aside an advantage such as the state holds in keeping Senator Jones in Washington would mean letting go of the potential benefits limited only by the state's needs.

With Senator Jones at the helm of the finance committee, New Mexico naturally would stand an opportunity of getting many of the things about which citizens now dream, but which would hardly make any more impression on future eastern chairmen than has been attained in the past.

Years were required for Senator Jones to reach his present standing in the Senate. Those years, so far as effecting the future of his state are concerned, would be lost if he is not continued in Washington. More valuable years would be required to put another man as high in the Senate.

It would be a grave mistake to retire the Senator.

We favor reform from within and our advice to our great party of progress and moral ideas is not to do quite so many things to make Cordell Hull happy.

The Republican party, as we have always said, is the party of conservation and here we find ourselves on the eve of another campaign with almost enough unused campaign promises left over from last time to see us through.

What Congress needs, and so we wired our great President in care of Senator Frelinghuysen yesterday, as he didn't seem to have thought of it before, is intimidation.

Princeton University just characterized our great President as a man of immense patience and self-effacing modesty, among other things, as it handed him an honorary degree the other day, but we have our moments of depression, as we watch Congress wiggling and wobbling around from day to day, when we wish it might conscientiously have added a little something about how terribly hardbolloed he is when occasion demands.

Railway Shopmen Taking Strike Vote Because Their Pay Is Cut $60,000,000.

WALKOUT MAY BE AVOIDED

Supreme Court Deals Organized Labor Severe Blow—France's Refusal to Reduce Reparation Blocks German Loan Plans—Radical Republicans Win Victory in Iowa Primary Election.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ABOUT $60,000,000 having been lopped off their yearly pay by the federal railway labor board, the railroad shopmen are taking a vote returnable on June 30, on the question of accepting the reduction or going on strike. The maintenance of way men, whose annual wages were cut some $20,000,000, also are taking a strike vote.

Thus, apparently, the country faces a strike, probably effective in the middle of July, that might come near to tying up its rail transportation. But there is hope that it will not eventuate. An affirmative strike vote and an actual strike are different things, and the vote is but seldom used only as a weapon in the hands of union officials in negotiating. Railroad executives profess to believe that the men will not vote to strike. A committee of six rail presidents issued the following statement:

"There is no talk of strike among the men," the statement says. "The disturbing statements are prepared by leaders of the unions, whose viewpoint has been distorted by months of efforts before the board to resist the inevitable downward trend of wages. The employees are in the main sincerely interested in taking care of their jobs and their homes, and few employees in any industry have more good reasons for doing so."

"The records show that the proposed scale of wages for the classes of employees involved in the two wage reduction orders already issued practically would restore the scale in effect at the end of federal control in 1920, which carried an increase for those employees of 110 per cent over the wages paid in 1916. The cost of living, as shown by the Department of Labor for March, 1924, was 42 per cent above 1916."

On the other hand, R. M. Jewell, head of the railroad employees' department of the American Federation of Labor, says: "The new wages do not permit a minimum living wage, and they are wholly at variance with the saving wage championed by President Harding and Secretary of Labor Davis." Mr. Jewell and other union chiefs who were in conference in Cincinnati predicted that unions with a membership of 1,000,000 would vote to strike.

Just as in the last previous wage decision by the board, the three labor members dissented, and this time they were especially vigorous in their dissenting opinion.

While the railings of the railway labor board are professedly being made quite without regard to the railings of the interstate commerce committee in the matter of rates, the two cannot be disconnected in the public mind, and the railway executives also complain bitterly.

UNION labor predicted what it considered another heavy blow last week in the decision of the United States Supreme court in the Colorado case. The United Mine Workers of America said certain provisions of the United Mine Workers' constitution were unconstitutional.

prime court, read by Chief Justice Taft, in effect sets aside the damages, finding the acts which caused the destruction of property were not inflicted for the purpose of restraining interstate commerce. But the court also held that labor organizations, even though not incorporated, are not only liable, but are amenable to the Sherman antitrust law, and under it may be prosecuted for restraint of interstate commerce.

Samuel Gompers, as might be expected, denounced this decision bitterly, saying that it set a precedent under which capital "can impose any condition on the working people of the country, and they would not dare resist." He declared he believed congress and the people of the United States would repudiate the ruling, and continued: "The court has, for the first time in the history of federal legislation, laid down the principle that a voluntary corporation is liable for damages by any act of one or a group of its members, no matter how far unrelated they may be in distance or supervision."

Unless it is nullified by congressional legislation, this decision of the highest court in the land will powerfully and widely affect the future relations of union organizations with employers and with the general public.

BRITISH, Italian and Belgian members of the reparations commission voted to enlarge the international committee of bankers that was trying to adjust Germany's financial affairs and to permit it to make its own inquiry into Germany's capacity to pay, ignoring the London schedule. America's unofficial delegate, Roland W. Boyden, though he could not vote, stated that he considered the reparations demanded—$33,000,000,000—to be too high. France's representative, however, voted in the negative. This created a tense situation, for although a unanimous vote is necessary for the reparations commission to reduce the sum demanded from Germany, until 1926 only a majority vote is needed to give Germany a partial or full moratorium.

The bankers, recognizing that unanimity does not exist among the nations that would be expected to participate in the immense loans they were planning for Germany, decided to give up all idea of an international loan, and so reported to the reparations commission.

EXASPERATED by the continual and increasing warfare in Ireland between the Sinn Feiners and the Ulster folk, the British government has undertaken to reduce control of the situation. Large reinforcements were sent to the troops already in the island and vigorous attacks were made on the republicans who infested the border and regions adjacent. The British used airplanes and small war vessels with landing gear. The Free State leaders and the British government are discussing changes in the Irish constitution which the latter demands, and both sides are awaiting the Dail elections, which come on June 12. It has been rumored that the De Valera government might win these seats because of the bitter feeling aroused by the fighting, and indeed it was indicated that the fighting was being stopped.

recede one step from its May 11 memorandum, which disrupted the Genoa confab. It will make no more concessions, he asserts, and rejects America's demands for additional guarantees as the price of recognition. He said America would recognize the futility of her policy, and then launched into an attack on Charles R. Crane and others whom he accused of assisting the counter-revolutionary movements.

Persistent reports come from places near Russia to the effect that Premier Lenin is a desperately sick man. His physicians have issued a bulletin stating that he "suffered an acute attack of gastritis, which affected his nerves and heart, but that he is now well on the road to recovery."

THE cabinet in Japan has resigned, owing to opposition in the parliament. But the privy council has decided that this does not affect the treaties and agreements signed at the Washington conference, these being international in character and outside the sphere affected by a cabinet change.

ALEXANDER, king of Yugoslavia, and Princess Marie of Romania were married Thursday in Belgrade in the presence of representatives of nearly every nation in the world. The affair was marked by all the splendor and display of medieval times and the ceremony in the ancient Byzantine cathedral was followed by a great procession of quaintly clad deputations from the provinces, with wonderful floats and pageants. Ordinarily the marriage of royal personages excites only passing interest in these days, but this one is of more importance in that it is linked the dynasties of three Balkan countries. It serves to strengthen the little entente, and possibly to lessen the danger of future wars in that long turbulent part of the old world.

PROGRESSIVES in the Republican party scored another victory last week in the nomination of Col. Smith W. Brookhart for United States senator from Iowa. Really this was a triumph for the radicals, for Brookhart is rated as more than a progressive. He is a former soldier and a lawyer, residing in Washington, Ia. It was necessary for him to obtain 55 per cent of the primary vote to obtain the nomination independent of the state convention. He got 41 per cent. Chairman McCormick of the Republican senatorial campaign committee says the committee "will join the national committee and the Republican state committee in Iowa to ensure the election of Colonel Brookhart. Colonel Brookhart bears the reputation of a citizen of high purpose and high courage and had a fine record of service during the war."

AT LAST the senate has before it the soldiers' bonus bill, as drafted by the finance committee. Chairman McCumber's accompanying report placed the probable cost to the federal government at $3,943,800,481, spread over a period of 48 years from next January 1. The estimate is based on the theory that 75 per cent of the 4,468,100 veterans who would be eligible for compensation would elect the adjusted service certificate option; 25 per cent cash bonus, home and land settlement aid, and 2 1/2 per cent vocational training aid.

With reference to financing the legislation, Senator McCumber's report said it was hoped that the reduction in governmental expenditures plus the payment of interest on the refunded foreign obligations would be sufficient to obviate the imposition of additional taxation.

LILLIAN RUMBLE.—Mrs. Alexander P. Moore of Pittsburgh—dead. For years she was the typical American stage beauty, but she was more than that. She was a first rate light opera singer, the hopeful and beloved friend of many in and out of her profession, a good newspaper writer and a devoted and hard working painter in time of war. In recognition of her services to the country during the war she was buried with military honors, and a monument of national fame stands over her grave.

Federal Aid Given State Highways.
Denver.—Federal aid has been authorized the State Highway department in connection with the construction of a steel bridge across the St. Charles river east of Pueblo and on the old Santa Fe trail and for the construction of five and eight-tenths miles of gravel-surfaced road between Delta and Grand Junction. The cost of the two projects is estimated at $12,000.

Officials of the State Highway Department announced they would receive bids on these two projects in addition to bridge projects to be undertaken in Lincoln, Adams and other counties. Bids will be received until June 23 for the construction of eleven small timber bridges in Lincoln county to replace those destroyed by floods, in addition to a proposed 320-foot bridge across Sand creek, one-half mile east of Denver. The estimated cost of the Lincoln county bridges is placed at $40,000, while that of the Sand creek bridge is estimated at $11,000.

Bids are to be advertised soon for the construction of four and four-tenths miles of concrete road on the O. L. D. route into Denver, southwest of Sterling and extending toward Brush. The estimated cost is placed at $175,000. Federal aid to the extent of 55.12 per cent has been requested of the United States bureau of public roads.

Approximately $1,000 has been set aside and approved for the construction of a 100-foot bridge over Breckenridge creek, eleven miles north of Ordway, in Crowley county.

Another Slash in Pay.
Chicago.—Another slash in the pay of railroad employees is imminent. Members of the United States railroad labor board went into executive session recently to consider a reduction in the salaries of all the railway clerical forces. It was reported that the cut would be the largest yet made, exceeding even the $100,000,000 annual slash into the wages of 1,200,000 other railroad men.

Men Get Increase.
Canton, Ohio.—Announcement of an increase in wages of 10 per cent throughout the large plant, effective June 5, was made by J. H. Miller, general manager of the company. This will put the pay of the men back to where it was before a cut was made in September, 1921.

Thousand Telegrams Received.
Pittsburgh.—More than a thousand telegrams of sympathy and condolence, attesting the admiration and esteem of friends and acquaintances of Mrs. Lillian Russell Moore have been received at the home in Pittsburgh of the famous actress. Among these was one from President and Mrs. Harding.

Arrested for Train Murder.
Portland, Ore.—Samuel Miller, alias Frank Foster, was arrested at Portland recently and turned over to a postal inspector to answer an indictment returned in Denver, charging participation in a $100,000 train robbery. Miller was arrested on a bench warrant issued in connection with the robbery, but the evidence was not sufficient to warrant an indictment as he was sent to Portland on a bench warrant.

Pollen Treatment for Hay Fever

In the Women's clinic in Washington a cure for hay fever has been perfected. It involves the placing of pollen of plants likely to cause hay fever on the scratch marks on the fore arm of the patient. The pollen causes a slight swelling around the scratch and the treatment is then directed against that specific pollen. The photograph shows a patient being given the pollen treatment.

Court Annuls Marriage When Circumstances Are Explained—Man Now Brilliant Student in Nebraska University.

Lincoln, Neb.—The recurrence of an attack of shell shock caused Thurman K. Williamson, World war veteran, to forget entirely that he was pledged to marry a Sioux City (Ia.) girl, and to wed another girl whom he had met but once. This was at Deer Lodge, Mont., a year ago.

FOUND FAMOUS CAVES

Bradley B. Zirkle, native Virginian, who on October 13, 1879, discovered the famed Endless Caverns of Virginia, Zirkle's story is that as a lad he was chasing a rabbit, and behind some boulders found the caves which travelers come from all parts of the world to see.

Officer in Montana.

Meanwhile Williamson went to Montana, where he was made an undersheriff at Deer Lodge. While there he kept up a constant correspondence with his fiancee, and all of his spare time was put in building a house for their joint occupancy when all the obstacles had been cleared away.

Williamson developed into an expert in running down bootleggers, and in one of the raids was compelled, in self-defense, to kill a negro.

BRINGS DOWN SOME ERMINE SKINS

Trapper Arrives From Alaska With Cargo of Costly Furs.

More Ermine Trapped in Far North Last Winter Than for Many Years—Cessation of Importation from Siberia Sends Price Up.

Seattle, Wash.—Of interest to milder's fashion creed and of potential concern to father's wallet is the arrival here from Ruby, Alaska, of Hugh Sobel, trapper and trader, with a pack of 2,300 ermine skins, one of the scarcest of all the Northern fur-bearing animals.

This past winter more ermine were trapped in the Far North than for many years. They appear to fluctuate in numbers periodically. Sobel arrived at a time when fur dealers were looking for the ermine skins for summer trade and will realize a nice profit from his collection, parts of which he trapped and most of which he traded for from Indians.

Ermine is one of the few furs that is never absolutely out of fashion. With the exception of the Russian sable and one or two others, there is no fur that seems better able to maintain its value than this. Its price, always high, has been driven to new levels on account of the cessation of importations from Scandinavian lands and Siberia.

Romantic Episodes on Train in Texas Beats Anything Movie Director Ever Thought Up—Supreme or Court Justice's Daughter

San Antonio, Tex.—It was a so-called that beat anything that has ever thought up. A railroad train, a Supreme court justice, a millionaire, a young rancher, a midnight, a clerk dashing to the station with a message in his hand, a telephone call to a preacher in his nightgown—all of these figured in the marriage here of William Bailey and Miss Maestra Wagoner. The wedding was held at San Antonio, Tex., last night.

Ball Hits Catcher Over Heart; He Dies on Field

Windsor, Ontario.—Clare Dalglash, twenty-three, catcher for the Maple Grove amateur baseball team, was killed at Windsor, Ontario, when a ball thrown by a pitcher during the warming-up period struck him over the heart.

remembrance of his old army trouble, the result of shell shock. Apparently the attack came upon him suddenly. He had but mailed a letter to his sweetheart, in which he outlined the plans he had made for their early reunion, when memory left him. He met on the street a girl to whom he had been introduced but a short time before, and proposed marriage. She accepted him, and he hurried her to a justice of the peace. His aberration was again manifested when, just as the justice was about to sign the certificate, he reached over and tore it up. Then he turned his back on the girl, searched out the room, and promptly forgot all about her. He never lived with her.

These details were necessarily furnished by friends of standing in Deer Lodge, to whom the girl he had wedded and promptly returned turned for aid and explanation. The affair ended his usefulness as an officer in Montana, and he came to Lincoln and entered the State university as a student in mechanical engineering. He is doing this as a federal government vocational pupil, and is part of his reward for the distinctive service that he performed in the war, but which left him open to attacks such as the one that caused a sensation in Montana.

Officials from Deer Lodge corroborated Williamson's story in every detail. They said that he was a quiet and gentlemanly chap, and that at all times he was a student of the State university. The court thereupon annulled the Montana marriage.

The dispensation from Rome had meanwhile reached Williamson, and now that all legal and religious obstacles are removed, he is going over to Sioux City as soon as his intended fixes the date and marry her.

GOOD ROADS

MAKE TESTS ON BATES ROAD

Has 22 Different Sections and Represents That Many Kinds of Construction.

Final series of tests on one of the largest and most comprehensive road experiments ever attempted began March 27. This road, located at Bates, Illinois, was designed and constructed by the Illinois division of highways under the direction of C. M. Ford, chief highway engineer, with the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture co-operating. It is two miles long and includes 22 different sections representing as many different methods and kinds of construction, having various thicknesses of concrete, cement grout and asphalt-filled brick as well as asphalt concrete and concrete with rolled stone bases.

Since the completion of its construction in April, 1921, a corps of engineers has been kept busy making observations for effect of temperature changes, static and repeated loads and sub-grade conditions, thus collecting data which when analyzed will supplement the information necessary for the rational design of roads.

The road will now be subjected to the final test, that of very heavy truck traffic, for the application of which will be used a fleet of 10 motor trucks received by the state from the surplus of the War department. At first these trucks will be lightly loaded, but as the test progresses the load will be increased until a maximum is reached giving a 12,000-pound rear wheel load. The results will show definitely the types of pavements which can be expected to support heavy traffic, as well as those which will not satisfy the requirements of such traffic conditions as might be expected during the next 10 or 20 years.

The careful observation of the various sections in the absence of traffic which has formed the first part of the investigation, it is expected, will enable the engineers to ascertain the structural weaknesses which cause such failures as may take place in the traffic tests.

After the experiment has been completed, this road with its broken sections replaced will form a part of Illinois federal aid project No. 13 from Springfield, Illinois, to St. Louis, Missouri.

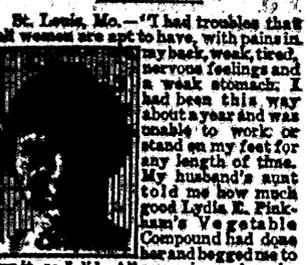

ROADS PAY DIVIDENDS

A wagon with a load of 3,000 pounds required an average draft of 105 pounds on a gravel road in dry condition, in a recent test at the Missouri College of Agriculture. The same load on a dry clay road required a draft of 521 pounds. This shows the great variation in the work done in hauling and in the size of load a team can handle, says J. C. Woolley, chairman of the agricultural engineering department, which conducted this test. The gravel roads prove their value even more completely under spring conditions. This load on the same roads after a heavy rain required a draft of 180 pounds on the gravel, and 372 pounds on the clay. This is only one of the many advantages offered by all-the-year roads.

Unnecessary Friction. Oiling a concrete road or any properly surfaced highway is not only a nuisance to the public, but is a lamentable waste of a natural resource, says H. E. Franklin, who claims that the oiling system, a hold-over from the experimental days, is no longer necessary and should be abandoned.

Answers Last Call

The sad news reached here yesterday morning, by a wire to Bernie Humprey, that John J. Sullivan died Wednesday, June 21, at his home in Lima, Ohio. The cause of death was the dilation of the aorta, which was disclosed by an examination a short time before Mr. Sullivan, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Murphy, the latter a slater, left for his old home in Ohio. His many friends, while realizing the gravity of his affection, hoped his life might be prolonged; but it was not to be so.

"Jack" Sullivan was a native of Ohio. He engaged in the boiler-makers' trade upon attaining his majority, and came west a number of years ago, and for the past ten years was in the employ of the E. P. & S. W., the last five of which he spent in the round-house here.

A loyal, honest citizen has answered the last call; a generous, faithful friend is mourned by all who knew him, and he rests peacefully in the bosom of mother earth awaiting the call to the judgment seat where even and exact justice will accord him all that comes to men, who, like him, lived a life filled with kindness and charity. Our heart is bowed with sorrow over his death and his associates, all of whom held him in the highest esteem, deeply regret his passing.

A Musical Treat

The program rendered Monday night at the Crystal Theatre by the Carrizozo Entertainers was one of the most pleasing and harmonious productions ever placed before a Carrizozo audience. From the time the curtain first rose on the opening chorus to its final fall at the conclusion of the program not a dull moment was experienced by the audience. To single out any particular selection is practically impossible, for every one possessed so much merit that the only safe thing to say is that it was an all-star production. It was a program full of harmony, the selection of the parts displaying an appreciative adaptation that was productive of a musical concord that was rhythmically lulling and caught the ear of the well-crowded theatre, which was fittingly attested by the encore that followed each production, and to which the artists generously responded. It had so much pep that it appeared the entire cast might have been performing in Ante-Volstead days—and this enthusiasm was communicated to the audience in such a striking manner as to indicate it, too, was stimulated by the product that made Kentucky famous.

Made a Stand-Off

The two games of ball played on the east side diamond last Sunday resulted in a 50-50 decision. The Tularosa team won over the East Siders by a score of 5 to 2, while the Carrizozo Nationals took the White Oaks boys to the tune of 10 to 5.

The Tularosa game was a hard fought affair, and, though losing, the East Siders put up a good exhibition of the national sport, and held the visitors scoreless for a greater number of the innings. The superior team work of the visitors and better training, however, told in the end, and the game concluded with the result stated above.

The White Oaks and Nationals game started off as though it might be a close contest, but the visitors failed to display any real interest in the beginning, and were finally left in the lurch in a one-sided game, the Nationals doubling their score. The Nationals are gradually strengthening their team and will be able to compete a good winning season.

Know Your Telephone Man

THE telephone people in this town are jealous of the reputation of their service.

You cannot do them a better turn than to report an irregularity in the telephone service. Give them prompt and intelligent information about the slightest discourtesy, the smallest fault in equipment or the least aggravating delay, and they will thank you.

They have no higher material ambition than to move upward in the ranks of telephone employes, and they know that as they give better service the road to promotion grows easier.

It pays any business man to get better acquainted with the people who help him do business. The telephone man in this town is worth knowing better. Tell him your telephone troubles, if you ever have any, and watch him get busy to correct them. And he'll thank you.

Help You Choose Tires

500 miles at 94.48 miles an hour—a relentless grind over a rough-finished, sun-baked concrete and brick pavement at record-breaking speed—that is the gruelling test Oldfield Cord Tires underwent successfully at Indianapolis Speedway May 30th. They were on the winner's car for the third successive year and on eight of the ten finishing in the money, upholding the confidence successful race drivers have in the trustworthiness and ability of these tires to meet the greatest demands of speed, endurance and safety. Their records in every other important race have been equally as good.

Consider this achievement along with another test of Oldfield quality made at Wichita, Kansas, this past winter and early spring.

24,525 miles on rutted, icy Kansas roads, running day and night on a Studebaker stock car without a single tire change. This test was made by a group of Wichita automobile dealers in a tire, oil and gasoline economy run. Mayor Kemp of Wichita was official observer and made affidavit to the mileage and service given by Oldfield tires.

You may never subject your tires to the gruelling experience of Indianapolis or the steady grind of bad winter roads, but it is good to know you can get such safety and mileage economy by buying Oldfield tires. Ask your nearest dealer.
