New Mexico Has a Real United States Senator

(From the Santa Fe New Mexican)

The Santa Fe New Mexican, the oldest and perhaps the strongest republican newspaper in the state, publishes the following article, showing why Senator A. A. Jones should be returned to Washington, on November 7:

New Mexico should be thankful that she has had a thinking senator at Washington, the slave of no party slogan, cringing before no party whip, a senator who opposes a Democratic or a Republican president when he thinks it right, who votes and speaks for even-handed justice to producer and manufacturer, to farmer and laborer, to civilian and service man, according to his convictions, and thereby wins highest respect and golden opinions from political friends and opponents.

A Democrat whose ability and honesty won the friendship and respect of such men as Gallinger and Aldrich and who has the admiration and respect of present Republican leaders.

A man who flings aside the moth-eaten party label from the vital tariff problem, and goes to the heart of it in a fight for the welfare of the people at large.

A man who does his own thinking and his own voting and has the courage and the industry and the brains to find the facts and demand that legislation be based upon them.

Such a man is Andrius A. Jones.

Opposing him is S. B. Davis, whose tariff argument consists in endless repetition of the word "protection";

Who wants a low duty on wool, to the financial loss of New Mexico's chief industry.

Who regards the nation's fighters as "Pan Handlers"; who takes the field for the rich manufacturers of Connecticut to raise the cost of living in New Mexico.

Who ignores the issue of a scientific tariff raised by Jones, ignores the tribute paid his ability by leading Republican senators. Who was laughed out of Fort Bayard by the veterans when he weakly sought to whitewash the veto of the bonus bill.

Whose campaigners declare the Fort Bayard hospital, Camp Cody, hundreds of thousands for federal buildings, drainage of the Mesilla valley and other such accomplishments are worthless to New Mexico.

Who has shown no qualification for the position of senator save that he will vote the party label when told, without investigation and without argument.

Down with the pan-handling bonus bill; protection that doesn't protect; republicanism directly opposed to that senate Republican leaders; a fight for the Connecticut manufacturers; keep the tariff in politics.

These are Mr. Davis' claims so far to election, his arguments against New Mexico's First Citizen, who has made New Mexico a power at Washington.

Does New Mexico want to make the change?

Carrizozo Entertainers

The proceeds of the entertainment given Thursday Oct. 19, 1922 by the Carrizozo Entertainers was $71.00 of which all but about $4.00 was net and applied on the indebtedness.

All debts are now paid except the rental of the Hall for the last year of the course; this is all owing to the manager of the Crystal Theatre at that time who has never been paid anything. If the next number is well attended, and every one is solicited to buy a ticket for this one which will contain a number of new features, we believe that we can pay this account in full, then under our agreement with the present manager of the Crystal Theatre we give one entertainment the proceeds of which go to him for the rental of the Theatre by the Carrizozo Entertainers, which will be the last. Do not refuse to buy a ticket for the next number which will be the best ever given.

Enthusiastic Democratic Meetings Throughout County

JOHN MORROW, DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR U. S. CONGRESS

Monday afternoon a number of well-filled autos met the candidates coming from Capitan, where they held a large meeting, and escorted them to Carrizozo. At 8 p. m. the Lutz hall was filled to capacity. A good sprinkling of republicans was present.

The party was accompanied by Hon. J. S. Vaught of Deming. In the absence of Jno. A. Haley, Democratic chairman, E. M. Brickley introduced the speakers.

Mrs. Louise Coe, candidate for county superintendent of schools, who met the party at Capitan was given a place on the program, and was first introduced. She made a very convincing talk on schools and how they should be conducted, stating that the office of school superintendent was, or should be, non-political, and if elected she would make no distinction between Jew and Gentile, democrat or republican, protestant or catholic, but would devote her whole energy to the education of the youth of the county.

John Morrow, candidate for congress, was next introduced, and spoke on national matters in a most convincing manner. Also on the future development of New Mexico, and the educational strides the state had taken, and was now taking. He compared Arizona and New Mexico, showing by figures that Arizona had the largest increase in population in the last ten years, and that if New Mexico was to advance as it should, development must come. New Mexico, he stated, has infinitely more natural resources, awaiting development, than our sister state on the west—both mineral, agricultural and horticultural. He suggested a project of reclamation in the state for the development of its artesian waters and drainage, and named as the method for securing this, a request to the U. S. government for deeds to the public lands within the state, now under national control. "The wealth promised prosperity of the republican party has not come." He also dealt with the injustice of the present tariff, which, he said, contributed millions to the trusts and special interests of this country which the consumer had to pay. If elected, he said, he would work for the greatest good to the greatest number. He was loudly applauded as he resumed his seat.

Sam G. Bratton was next introduced. The audience was a little disappointed when he stated that owing to a gentleman's agreement with his adversary, he could not address them as he would wish to. However he spoke for about 10 minutes, confining himself to generalities. His agreement is a dignified one and worthy of the man and the office he seeks.

J. S. Vaught of Deming was the next speaker. Mr. Vaught is from Deming, and aspires to no office. While lacking the oratorical power of Judge Morrow, he is a pleasing speaker, and by his wit and pathos, touched the hearts of his audience. He illustrated his address by many funny stories, each of which had a sharp point bearing on the issues of the state campaign. He is a convincing speaker, and, apparently without half trying, switched from comedy to tragedy and back again, referring to state affairs. Some republicans present did not like his broad touch of humor in presenting his facts, nor did they relish his pathetic description of the recent state prison scandal, which the republicans wanted "waived" at this time, with other "irregularities." He appealed to the women of the state to help "clean out" the republican pie men in office, and their masters, who are tarnishing the fair name of New Mexico.

Mr. Vaught was loudly applauded, and after a few words from E. M. Brickley, the meeting ended.

Buttons, Buttons, Who Got the Buttons?

One day last week some state republican campaigner agents in Lincoln were distributing "Hill and Davis buttons," and left the box containing the little emblems outside a garage. The agents left town, forgetting to take the box with them. In the meantime somebody, needing a box came along, and noticing the box, thought it had been thrown away and appropriated it. The agents returned later for their box of H. & D. buttons, and failing to find it, roared loud and long, stating it was a democratic trick. Some republicans who were there denied that there was a democratic in Lincoln, of their acquaintance who would be guilty of stealing their buttons. About this time a car drove up, and the owner got out and produced the missing box stating he did not notice the contents of the box until he reached home. He stated he was a republican, but if a democrat, he would return them just the same, as it was the box he needed, not the buttons. The agents drove away with their buttons, forgetting to thank the man who returned them, or apologize to the democrats present who they accused of stealing their campaign ammunition. The by word in Lincoln since is "Buttons, Buttons, who got the buttons?" Even the native kids may be heard shouting "Botones, Botones, quien tiene los Botones?"

Ralph M. Treat, by reason of careful attention to the duties of the office, is entitled to re-election as county clerk. Service to the people is exactly what he has given the past two years, and more could not be asked of any official.

The business interests of Lincoln county, the taxpayers, need men on the board of county commissioners who can and will give the county an economical administration of its affairs. As members of the board in the past, Robert H. Taylor and Melvin Franks did just that thing. This is certainly no time to trade the real for the prospective. And Eugene C. Dow, though never having served in this capacity, is so far ahead of his opponent that the thoughtful voter should have no difficulty in making the selection.

"OR I'LL SHOOT."

SYNOPSIS.—At Thornton Fairchild's death his son Robert learns there has been a dark period in his father's life which for almost thirty years has caused him suffering. The secret is hinted at in a document left by the elder Fairchild, which also informs Robert he is now owner of a mining claim in Colorado, and advising him to see Henry Rodaine, a lawyer. Rodaine tells Robert his claim, a silver mine, is at Oshadi, thirty-eight miles from Denver. He also warns him against a certain man, "Spirit" Rodaine, his father's enemy. Robert decides to go to Oshadi on the road to Oshadi from Denver. Fairchild assists a girl apparently in a frenzy of haste, to change a tire on her auto. When she has left, the sheriff and a posse appear in pursuit of a bandit. Fairchild, bewildered, mistakes them as to the direction the girl had taken. At Oshadi Fairchild is warmly greeted by "Mother" Howard, boarding-house keeper for his father's sake. From Mother Howard Fairchild learns something of the mystery connected with the disappearance of "Satan" Larson, the father's co-worker in the mine. He meets the girl he had assisted, but she declares her husband is Anita Richmond. She is Anita Richmond's daughter. Viewing her father, Fairchild is shadowed by a man he recognizes from descriptions as "Spirit" Rodaine. He is Anita's father's old friend, Harry Richmond, a Cornishman, mentioned from England by "Mother" Howard. Fairchild has a fight with him. The mine is closed and he has no sufficient funds to have it pumped dry. Later in the day "Spirit" Rodaine has been taken to the hospital. Harry Richmond has a fight with him. Anita Richmond is Anita's daughter. Anita Richmond is Anita's daughter. Anita Richmond is Anita's daughter.

CHAPTER IX—Continued.

From for many the drama of the call he needed in a voice familiar, and Fairchild looked up to see the narrow-eyed, swarthy face of Spirit Rodaine who was addressing at the wheel. He lost interest in the game; he had already he played the buttons on their squares on the numbers were shouted, finally to brush them all aside and desert the game. His hatred of the Rodaine had grown to a point where he could enjoy nothing with which they were connected, where he despised everything with which they had the remotest affiliation—excepting, of course, one person. And as he rose, Fairchild said that she was just entering the dance hall.

Only a moment he hesitated. Maurice Rodaine, sitting in a naive frank seat and the inevitable accompanying beaver, had stopped to talk to some one at the door. She stood alone, looking about the hall, laughing and nodding and then she looked at him! Fairchild did not wait.

From the platform at the end of the big room the fiddles had begun to squeak, and the caller was shouting his announcements. Couples began to line up on the floor. The caller's voice grew louder.

"One more couple—then the dance starts. One more couple, lady and a gent! One more—"

"Please!" Robert Fairchild had reached her and was holding forth his hand. She looked up in half surprise, then demurred.

"But I don't know these old dances." "Neither do I—nor any other, for that matter," he confessed with sudden boldness. "But does that make any difference? Please?"

She glanced quickly toward the door. Maurice Rodaine was still talking, and Fairchild saw a little gleam come into her eyes—the gleam that shows when a woman decides to make some one pay for rudeness.

Fairchild's hand was still extended. Again Anita Richmond glanced toward the door, chuckled to herself while Fairchild watched the dimples that the merchant caused, and then—Fairchild forgot the fact that he was wearing hobnailed shoes and that his clothes were worn and old. He was going forward to take his place on the dance floor, and she was beside him!

Some way, as though a haze, he saw her. Some way he realized that now and then his hand touched hers, and that once, as they whirled about the room, in obedience to the monarch on the fiddle's rostrum, his arm was about her waist, and her head touching his shoulder. It made little difference whether the dance calls were obeyed after that. Fairchild was making up for all the years he had plodded, all the years in which he had known nothing but a slow, grinding life, living them all again and rightly, in the few swift moments of a dance.

The music ended, and laughing they returned to the side of the hall. Out of the haze he heard words, and knew instinctively that they were his own: "Will you dance with me again tonight?" "No!" she cried.

"But will you?" "But will you?"

For just a moment her eyes grew serious.

"Did you ever realize that we've never been introduced?" Fairchild was finding more conversation than he ever had believed possible.

If you'll forgive it. I—believe that I'm a gentleman." "So do I—or I wouldn't have danced with you." "Then please—" "Pardon me?" She had laid a hand on his arm for just a moment, then hurried away. Fairchild saw that she was approaching young Rodaine, scowling in the background. That person shot an angry remark at her as she approached and followed it with streaming sentences. Fairchild knew the reason. Jealousy! Couples, returning from the dance floor, jostled against him, but he did not move. He was waiting—waiting for the outcome of the quarrel—and in a moment it came. Anita Richmond turned swiftly, her dark eyes ablaze, her pretty lips set and firm. She looked anxiously about her, sighted Fairchild, and then started toward him, while he advanced to meet her.

"Yes," was her brief announcement. "I'll dance the next one with you." "And the next after that?" Again: "No!"

But Fairchild did not appear to hear.

A third dance and a fourth, while in the intervals Fairchild's eyes sought out the sulky, sullen form of Maurice Rodaine, fattered against the wall, eyes evil, mouth a straight line, and the blackness of hate discoloring his face. It was as much wiper to Fairchild; he felt himself really going for the first time in his life. And as the music started again, he once more turned to his companion.

Only, however, to halt and whirl and stare in surprise. There had come a shout from the doorway, booming, commanding: "Aids up, everybody! And quick about it!"

Some one laughed and jabbed his hands into the air. Another, quietly sending a stung surprise, followed the example. It was just the finishing touch necessary—the old-time hold-up of the old-time dance. The "bandit" strode forward.

"Out from behind that bar! Drop that gun!" he commanded of the white-aproned attendant. "Out from that roulette wheel. Everybody lies up! Quick—and there ain't no time for foolin'!"

Chattering and laughing, they obeyed, the sheriff, his star gleaming, standing out in front of them all, shivering in mock fright, his hands higher than any one's. The bandit, both revolvers leveled, stepped forward a foot or so, and again ordered speed. A handkerchief was wrapped about his head, concealing his hair and ears. A mask was over his eyes, supplemented by another handkerchief, which, beginning at the bridge of his nose, flowed over his chin, cutting off all possible chance of recognition. Only a second more he waited, then, with a wave of the guns, shouted his command: "All right, everybody! I'm a decent fellow. Don't want much, but I want it quick! This 'ere's for the relief of widlers and orphans. Make it sudden. Each one of you gets step out to the center of the room and leave five dollars. And step back when you've put it there. Ladies stay where you're at!"

Again a laugh. Fairchild turned to his companion, as she nudged him. "There, it's your turn."

Out to the center of the floor went Fairchild, the rest of the victims laughing and chiding him. Back he came in mock fear, his hands in the air. On down the line went the contributing men. Then the bandit rushed forward, gathered up the bills and gold pieces, shoved them in his pockets, and whirled toward the door.

"The purpose of this 'ere will be in the paper tomorrow," he announced. "And don't you follow me to find out! Back, there!"

Two or three laughing men had started forward, among them a fiddler, who had joined the line, and who now rushed out in taunting bravado, brandishing his violin as though to brain the intruder. Again the command: "Back, there—get back!"

Then the crowd recoiled. Flashes had come from the masked man's guns, the popping of electric light globes above and the showering of glass testifying to the fact that they had contained something more than mere wadding. Somewhat dazed, the fiddler continued his rush, suddenly to crumple and fall, while men milled and women screamed. A door slammed, the lock clicked, and the crowd rushed for the windows. The holdup had been real after all—instead of a planned, joking affair. On the floor the fiddler lay gasping—and bleeding. And the bandit was gone.

All in a moment the dance hall seemed to have gone mad. Men were rushing about and shouting; panic-stricken women claved at one another and fought their way toward a freedom they could not gain. Windows crashed as forms hurled against them; screams sounded. Suddenly, as the crowd massed between Fairchild and the small form of Anita in his arms and carried her to a chair, far at one side.

"It's all right now," he said, calming her. "Everything's over—look, they're helping the fiddler to his feet. Maybe he's not badly hurt. Everything's all right."

And then he straightened. A man hall, excited, shouting. It was Maurice Rodaine.

"I know who it was," he almost screamed. "I got a good look at him—jumped out of the window and almost-headed him off. He took off his mask outside—and I saw him." "You saw him?" A hundred voices shouted the question at once.

"Yes." Then Maurice Rodaine nodded straight toward Robert Fairchild. "The light was good, and I got a straight look at him. He was that fellow's partner—a Cornishman they call Harry!"

"I don't believe it!" Anita Richmond exclaimed with conviction and clutched at Fairchild's arm. "I don't believe it!"

"I can't!" Robert answered. Then he turned to the accuser. "How could it be possible for Harry to be down here robbing a dance hall when he's out working the mine?" "Working the mine?" This time it was the sheriff. "What's the necessity for a day and night shift?" "We agreed upon it yesterday afternoon."

"At whose suggestion?" "I'm not sure—but I think it was mine."

"Young fellow," the sheriff had approached him now, "you'd better be certain about that. It looks to me that might be a pretty good excuse to give when a man can't produce an alibi. Anyway, the identification seems pretty complete. Then he turned to the crowd. "I want a couple of good men to go along with me as deputies."

"I have a right to go," Fairchild had stepped forward.

"Certainly. But not as a deputy. Who wants to volunteer?"

Half a dozen men came forward, and from them the sheriff chose two. Fairchild turned to say good-by to Anita. In vain. Already Maurice Rodaine had escorted her, apparently against her will, to a far end of the dance hall, and there was quarreling with her. Fairchild hurried to join the sheriff and his two deputies, just starting out of the dance hall. Five minutes later they were in a motor car, chugging up Kentucky gulch.

Slowly, the motor car fighting against the grade, the trip was accomplished. Then the four men leaped from the machine at the last rise before the tunnel was reached and three of them went forward atop toward where a slight gleam of light came from the mouth of the Blue Poppy.

The sheriff took the lead, at last to stop behind a boulder and to shout a command: "Hey you, in there." "By yourself!" It was Harry's voice.

"Come out—and be quick about it. Hold your light in front of your face with both hands."

"The 'ell I will! And 'oo's talking?" "Sheriff Adams of Clear Creek county. You've got one minute to come out—or I'll shoot."

"I'm coming on the run!" And almost instantly the form of Harry, his keychain lamp lighting up his bulbous, surprised countenance with its spraylike mustache, appeared at the mouth of the tunnel.

"What the bloody 'ell!" he gasped, as he looked into the muzzle of the revolver. From down the mountain side came the shout of one of the deputies: "Sheriff! Looks like it's him, all right. I've found a horse down here—'all swatted up from running."

"That's about the answer," Sheriff Adams went forward and with a motion of his revolver sent Harry's hands into the air. "Let's see what you've got on you."

A light gleamed below as an electric flash in the hands of one of the deputies began an investigation of the surroundings. The sheriff, snatching his search of Harry's pockets, stepped back.

"Well," he demanded, "what did you do with the proceeds?" "The proceeds?" Harry stared blankly by. "Of what?" "Of your kidding, 'ere. They've found your horse down here."

your accusations on this thing until you're a little surer of it? Harry hasn't any horse. If he's rented one, you ought to be able to find that out pretty shortly."

As if in answer, the sheriff turned and shouted a question down the mountain side. And back came the answer: "It's Doc Mason's. Must have been stolen. Doc was at the dance." "I guess that settles it." The officer reached for his hip pocket. "Stick out your hands, Harry, while I put the cuffs on them."

"But 'ow in bloody 'ell 'ave I been doing anything when I've been up 'ere working on the chiv wheel? 'Ow—?" "They say you held up the dance tonight and robbed us," Fairchild cut in. Harry's face lost its surprised look, to give way to a glance of keen questioning.

"And do you say it?" "I most certainly do not. The identification was given by that honorable person known as Mr. Maurice Rodaine."

"Oh! One thief identifying another?" "Sheriff!" Again the voice from below.

"Yeh!" "We've found a cache down here. Must have been made in a hurry—two new revolvers, bullets, a mask, a couple of new handkerchiefs and the money."

Harry eyes grew wide. Then he stuck out his hands.

"The evidence certainly is piling up!" he grunted. "I might as well save my talking for later."

"That's a good idea." The sheriff snapped the handcuffs into place. Then Fairchild shut off the pumps and stepped toward the machine. Back in Oshadi more news awaited them. Harry, if Harry had been the highwayman, had gone to no expense for his outfit. The combined general store and hardware emporium of Gregg Brothers had been robbed of the articles necessary for a disguise—also the revolvers and their bullets. Robert Fairchild watched Harry placed in the solitary cell of the county jail with a spirit that could not respond to the Cornishman's grin and his assurances that morning would bring a lighting of affairs. Four charges hung heavy above him; that of horse-stealing, of burglary, of highway robbery, and worse, the final assault with attempt to kill. Fairchild turned wearily away; he could not find the optimism to join Harry's cheerful announcement that it would be "all right." The appearances were otherwise. Besides, up in the little hospital on the hill, Fairchild had seen lights gleaming as he entered the jail, and he knew that doctors were working there over the wounded body of the fiddler. Tired, heavy at heart, his earlier conquest of the night sudden and overshadowed now, he turned away from the cell and its optimistic occupant—out into the night.

It was only a short walk to the hospital and Fairchild went there, to leave with at least a ray of hope. The probing operation had been completed; the fiddler would live, and at least the charge against Harry would not be one of murder. That was a thing for which to be thankful; but there was plenty to cause consternation, as Fairchild walked slowly down the dark, winding street toward the main thoroughfare. Without Harry, Fairchild now felt himself lost. Before the big, genial, eccentric Cornishman had come into his life, he had believed, with some sort of divine ignorance, that he could carry out his ambitions by himself, with no knowledge of the technical details necessary to mining, with no previous history of the Blue Poppy to guide him, and with no help against the enemies who seemed everywhere. Now he saw that it was impossible. More, the incidents of the night showed how swiftly those enemies were working, how sharp and stiletto-like their weapons.

That Harry was innocent was certain—to Robert Fairchild. Looking back over it now, he could see how easily Fate had played into the hands of the Rodaines, if the Rodaines had not possessed a deeper concern than merely to seize upon a happening and turn it to their own account. The highwayman was big. "Cousin Jack" accent—for all Cornishmen are "Cousin Jacks" in the mining country. Those two features in themselves, Fairchild thought, as he stumbled along in the darkness, were sufficient to start the scheming plot in the brain of Maurice Rodaine, already ugly and evil through the trick played by Harry on his father and the rebuke that had come from Anita Richmond. It was an easy matter for him to get the inspiration, leap out of the window, and then wait until the robber had gone, that he might start forth with his accusation. And after that—

Either Chance, or something stronger, had done the rest. The finding of the stolen horse and the carelessly made cache near the mouth of the Blue Poppy mine would be sufficient in the eyes of any jury. The evidence was both direct and circumstantial. To Fairchild's mind, there was small chance for escape by Harry, once his case went to trial.

Down the dark street the man wandered, his hands sunk deep in his pockets, his head low between his shoulders—only to suddenly galvanize into intensity, and to stop short that he might hear again the voice that he knew instinctively, for he had seen the shadow of a woman, hands outstretched, as she passed the light-strewn shade of a window on the second floor. More, he had heard her voice, supplemented by gruffer tones. And then it came again.

It was pleading, and at the same time angered with the passion of a person approaching hysteria. A barking sentence answered her, something that Fairchild could not understand. He left the old board sidewalk and crept to the porch that he might hear the better. Then every nerve within him jangled, and the black of the darknesses changed to red. The Rodaines were within; he had heard first the cold voice of the father, then the rasping tones of the son, in upbraiding. More, there had come the sobbing of a woman; instinctively Fairchild knew that it was Anita Richmond. And then:

It was her voice, high, screaming. Hysteria had come—the wild, racking hysteria of a person driven to the breaking point: "Leave this house—hear me! Leave this house! Can't you see that you're killing him? Don't you dare touch me—leave this house! No—I won't be quiet—I won't—you're killing him, I tell you—I!"

And Fairchild waited for nothing more. A lunge, and he was on the

Street Clothes for Cool Days

This is the time of year when all clothes, no matter how elegant and how perfectly in repair they may be, look shabby and old to their owners. Something new is the cry of the moment.

We are not quite ready for winter, we are not quite through with summer, but we are ready for a new frock of some sort or other, says a fashion writer in the New York Times. We see hints of new styles and we feel like members of an old-fashioned era as we walk upon the streets in short skirts. We actually need, for our peace of mind, a new frock of some sort or description.

Well, there are any number of between-season frocks which will answer this purpose admirably, and this season more than ever before it seems they are appearing in great abundance. There are the printed silks, the costume blouses, the short, flaring coats, the circular cut crepe dresses. All or any of these are satisfactory for wear upon the street while the weather is in that uncertain condition between warm and cold, and when we just can't possibly bear to wear our summer frocks for another day.

Made With Flaring Lines.

The short coats are, perhaps, the sensation of the season. They have been adopted with great zeal by those who lead the fashions in America. There seems every reason to suppose that their popularity will go right on for many months to come. They have their distinct economical advantages as well as their artistic merits in their favor. They can be combined with a partially worn skirt, provided it is long enough for smartness, and they can be combined with one-piece frocks with the most startling effect of newness.

These little coats are sometimes made with flaring lines, at other times they are made to fit closely over the hips. But they are always short for coats, while possibly they might be considered long for blouses. One is made along the flaring lines which in Paris have been more popular. Coats of this variety are coming into our styles and we find them, on the smart women, looking most ravishing. Some of them are made of suede; others are composed of those heavy, new, embossed woolsen materials, some of them are made of wool broadcloth. Again, you will find them made of heavy silks and duvetines. All are lined with brightly colored silks, so that the lining, become part of the coat, even if they do not actually fold over on to the surface of the coats to form an obvious band of trimming. Another coat is made of a suede finished material, which is really a glorified duvetine. Its color is a deep chocolate brown and it is made with a wide and rolling collar that tucks closely under the throat. There are four dark brown shiny buttons arranged along one side where the coat closes. At the bottom of the little jacket there is a band of a lighter brown duvetine material arranged to making her take on a silliness of appearance which has been her desire all along. For her these newer styles are the greatest boon.

From abroad we hear hints of killed skirts to be worn with short and flaring coats. This is always a style very much to be desired, for it relieves a possibly ugly line, and the killed skirt is something of which women, from a long way back, have always approved.

The jacquette blouses are taking the place of coats for wear at just this season of the year. So, if there is a new something needed for the wardrobe, one cannot make a mistake in buying one of these with becoming lines and contour.

"The blouses that are partially coats in design are made with wide sleeves—in some instances with extremely wide waisted, with wrinkles about the normal waistline, and often with distinct bloused lines arranged over the hips. Usually there is a wide band at the hips, and often there is a buckle to fasten it snugly on one side. With the plaited skirt we have the practical long lines of the latest fashions in a costume blouse. You can find them in all of the shops, or you can have them designed for your own separate individuality. They are handsome or they are commonplace. But the jacquette blouse is the thing, and you will make no mistake if you decide to have one of them for use between seasons.

Some Trimmed With Fur.

Some of these outside or outdoor blouses are trimmed with fur in the most fascinating manner. There are bands of fur about the hips, and there are bands of fur across the sleeves, wide or narrow, as the case may be. Then, there is often a fur collar. After all this fur trimming has been applied you have something which looks more like a coat than it does like a blouse, and which, at the same time, is light enough for wear during the between-season months which, in a climate of this sort, last for a good part of the year. Another advantage in this sort of costume is that it can be tucked under a top coat when the cooler days come along, and after that outer wrapping is removed you are clothed in something that has every semblance of being a dress. So, you see, you cannot make any mistake about purchasing one of these blouses. They promise to last through a great many months and will be as good for one purpose as another.

If you wish to have your own blouses made, you can find the handsomest sorts of materials in the shops. They have silk surfaces and wool backs. They are covered with embroidery; they are a mass of machine stitching making intricate and interesting patterns. They are rich and luxurious in many ways and have every semblance of being either blouses or coats according to the demands of the activities of your day.

Then there are the printed silks. They are much more beautifully patterned than they have been at any time during the past. Also, they are done on heavier qualities of silks. For these dresses you need nothing at all except the silk itself. It is sufficient to make the design that is needed, but it needs to be handled in an artistic and thoughtful way in order that it shall show to its full and best advantage.

The One-Piece Frock.

One of these printed dresses is made in quite a formal manner and it shows the really lovely use to which silk of this character can be put. The whole idea of the frock is nothing more nor less than a one-piece frock

DYED HER BABY'S COAT, A SKIRT AND CURTAINS WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her old, worn, faded things new. Even if she has never dyed before, she can put a new, rich color into shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything. Buy Diamond Dyes—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed. Just tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade or run.—Advertisement.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promise of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an adobe chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, as many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmor & Co., Birmingham, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

DIDN'T GET AWAY FROM HIM

Discords . . . . . Have Been Omitted, But They Were Very Apparent to Mr. Spinks.

Spinks, the musician, and his wife were on their way home from a concert and were overheard discussing the merits of the entertainment.

"It set my teeth on edge," Spinks said, "to hear the orchestra playing 'Yankee Doodle' and 'Dixie' at the same time. The idea is all right, of course, and even commendable from a sentimental point of view, but the two pieces, when played together, are full of discords."

"But didn't you notice," said his wife, who is something of a musician herself, "that where certain notes or passages would have been discordant they were omitted from one air or the other and left to the drums?"

"Of course, I noticed it," he testily rejoined, "but I could hear the discords in my mind just the same!"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

An Honorable Degree.

Said the friend to the proud father of a college graduate who had just been awarded an A. M. degree.

"I suppose Robert will be looking for a Ph. D. next?"

"No he will be looking for a J. O. B."—The Christian-Evangelist (St. Louis).

Doctor Advised Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Happy Results in Both Cases

St. Joseph, Missouri.—"Both of my sides swelled and hurt me so that I could not move or do any of my work. There was heavy pressure and pains through my lower organs and the doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for these troubles. He said I had this one chance, and if the Vegetable Compound did not help me nothing but an operation would. After taking several bottles I felt it was helping me and now I am able to do my own work. If my testimonial will help others I shall be glad for them to read it and hope your Vegetable Compound will do them as much good as it did me."—Mrs. Wm. Lockman, 515 N. 4th St., St. Joseph, Mo.

White Plains, N. Y.—"I had such a pain that I could hardly walk and the doctor said that I needed an operation. I was sick for a year before I started taking your medicine and I could not work. I saw your advertisement in a little book and that is how I came to take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine. I have been taking the Vegetable Compound and Lydia E.

Pinkham's Blood Medicine, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and the capsules and prescription recommended. I am doing all my work and have gained twenty pounds. I am taking the medicines still, but I feel fine. You have my permission to use this letter for the good of others."—Mrs. MARY MARR, 37 Hamilton Ave., White Plains, N. Y.

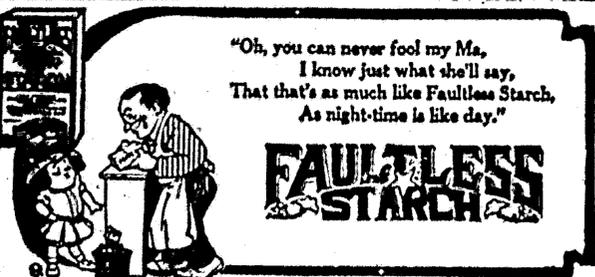

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors, or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

CONSIDER USE OF AIRSHIPS

Possibility of Their Successful Employment in Making Aerial Observations of the Himalayas.

Consideration has been given in the possibility of aerial observations in the Himalayas. The range, it appears, has only six peaks above 27,000 feet high, and an aviator flying at about 23,000 or 24,000 feet should have no difficulty in crossing if the highest peaks were avoided, while, if he chose certain of the gorges, an altitude of some 19,000 feet would suffice. The greatest of the many obstacles to be encountered is the mountain sickness, which occurs in the highest altitudes through deficiency of oxygen. The gradual climber, going up, is less handicapped in this respect than the aviator rising suddenly from sea level in his machine; on the other hand the pedestrian has more fatigue to undergo, and this practically equalizes matters. The chief consideration in any case is an adequate supply of oxygen, with a proper inhaler.

Hopeless.

She was a pretty young thing and terribly in earnest when she applied for a staff position on a Chicago paper. A woman reporter, emissary from the city editor, carried the usual message, "No vacancies."

"Well," she sighed, "I don't wish the women on the newspaper any harm, but I wish some of them would get out and give the rest of us a chance."

"They don't, though," the woman reporter assured her cheerfully. "Even when they get married they hold on to their jobs harder than ever."

The youthful applicant regarded her speculatively.

"And they live a long time, too, don't they?" she concluded.

An Interview with a Republican

A Republican business man of New Mexico was asked recently by a friend what he thought of the nominees of the State Convention and what his position was regarding the present campaign. He said:

"I was reared in the East in a Republican home in which the memory of Abraham Lincoln was revered, and I want to say that my respect for the teachings of that great American has grown with the years. We took our politics seriously. Political fealty was not of the milk and water sort. While we were not taught that all Democrats were horse-thieves, the natural inference in the political atmosphere in which I was reared would have been that all horse-thieves were Democrats.

"When I came to New Mexico, I affiliated with the Republican party and, as you know, took a more active part in party affairs than the average non-office-seeking citizen. I not only voted the Republican ticket, but had no compunctions of conscience because some Republican men and measures were not what they should have been. I suppose the World War has brought home to all of us our duty as citizens and caused us to give serious thought to public affairs.

"We all know the peculiar conditions in the Republican party of New Mexico, which enables comparatively few leaders to exercise almost despotic powers and we have had too many painful illustrations of the low standard of public service held by these leaders for the subject to require discussion.

"Charlie Spies said a few years ago, when these leaders were under attack, that without the support of the Old Guard the Republican nominees in New Mexico would not get ten thousand votes.

"It has been said that ingratitude is a public man's virtue, but we ordinary mortals cannot see it that way. When Menckem's ideals and the dictates of the bosses, who had elected him, came in conflict, the ideals went by the board. I do not care to discuss the personal of the Republican ticket further than to say that Governor Macken in public candidates, if they become office-holders, to turn a deaf ear to the demands of these leaders, nor that the leaders have been converted and have given up their old practices. On the contrary, the leaders will count the election of the Republican ticket as an endorsement of the practices and policies.

What would the Republican Candidate for Governor do?

What would the Republican Nominee do?

"Conditions political in New Mexico must change for the better, or we are headed for the rocks, and I see no prospect whatever of a reform within the Republican party while it is in power.

"This same narrow selfishness on the part of Eastern manufacturers is in a large measure the cause of the suffering in the West, where we produce the surplus of agricultural products and other raw materials. I believe in a protective tariff, but I do not believe in the practice indulged in by the committee of Congress, which framed the present tariff bill, in permitting these manufacturers to meet with the Republican members, the minority members and the public being excluded, and allowing the manufacturers to practically dictate the schedule in which they were interested. Senator Jones' scientific amendment should be adopted.

"The war brought many new and grave national problems and they cannot be solved so long as the dominant party is under the influence of these Eastern leaders, who, apparently, are unable to take other than a narrow, sectional view of questions.

"As between the welfare of the country and the success of the Republican party, I have reached the conclusion, after calm and deliberate consideration, that the country's welfare comes first, and I have definitely made up my mind to vote the Democratic ticket; for I am firmly convinced that through it, and it only, we shall be able to overcome the strangle-hold the leaders have on the Republican party, which can be loosened only by defeat."

Harry G. Norman has, the past two years, given the office of treasurer the attention it requires. Based on efficiency and an intimate acquaintance with the office, his re-election should follow.

John L. Bryan has made an honest, conscientious effort to serve the people of Lincoln county the past two years as assessor—has played no favorites—and his official acts have been free from prejudice or favor. A record such as that is a most worthy recommendation for his re-election.

Ed W. Harris has made a good sheriff and has exercised care and discretion in handling the problems that have arisen during his term of office. All who know him feel that he has honestly acted the part of a good officer

Carrizozo School Notes

(By Mrs. L. E. Cole) We have just received one dozen recitation arm chairs. They have been placed in recitation rooms 9 and 10, where they were needed on account of the increased size of the classes in the high school.

The sophomore party, held last Saturday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Barnett, was a very delightful affair. During the social part of the evening, spent in games and contests, Mr. Cole won the prize, a beautiful little Cupie doll about as big as a minute. Delicious refreshments were served.

The literary society of last week was very good indeed. The debate was especially good. The question was: Resolved, That an eight hour law should be adopted for all vocations." The negative won. Will Kahler, and Kastler Taylor represented the affirmative; Archie Tuton and Clayton Hust, the negative. This debating club, recently formed in the high school, has fourteen members who wish to be put on the program for debate only. They wish to cultivate that art during the present year.

The basketball teams are working hard and enthusiastically to get ready for interscholastic games. Here's to the same good fortune they had the past three years!

Two new five-gallon glass bottles for the XXth Century Water Cooler have just been received and one of them placed in the school on the east side. It is a fine piece of apparatus and keeps the drinking water free from dust and other impurities.

Mrs. Vaughn's room, the sixth grade, is doing especially fine work in art. Visit her room and see for yourself.

We have heard considerable praise of the singing of the choruses from the seventh and eighth grades at the "Carrizozo Entertainers." Mrs. Mims is a wonderful help to us in our choruses.

Dawson Line Wreck A serious freight wreck occurred on the Dawson line, south of Mosquero, as a heavy coal train was coming down the grade and became unmanagable, and ultimately gained such momentum that it left the track on one of the sharp curves, piling coal and coke cars and engines in a mass. Every member of the crew was injured, some quite severely, and Cully Hines, one of the engineers was so seriously injured that he succumbed while being hurried to the hospital. Red Cantrell, a brakeman, was not found, and was thought to be covered up with the debris. With this idea in view, a large force of rescuers were at work in the wreckage in the hope of rescuing him alive. Up to an early hour this morning, however, no trace had been found, and little hope remains of finding him alive.

TRACTIVE ROAD RESISTANCE

Initial Results Secured Show That Information Will Be of Big Value to Engineer.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
Initial results secured from an investigation of the tractive resistance of roads indicate that information will be secured of great value to the highway engineer and the user of motor transport. The investigations are being carried on under the auspices of the advisory board on highway research of the national research council with which the bureau of public roads, United States Department of Agriculture, and the quartermaster corps, United States army are co-operating.

One phase of the investigation shows that there is a great difference in the power required of the engine when a truck is traveling over different types of surfacing, the amount being more than twice as great on some of the lower types when compared with that on higher types. It is also shown that the power required to overcome the road resistance is not proportional to the speed of the vehicle, and after a certain speed is reached increases very rapidly.

The investigation when complete will cover tests with various types of motor vehicles with the load, tire and spring equipment varied on different types of surfacing and at varying speeds. The data will include gasoline consumption, internal engine resistance, wind resistance, and road-surface resistance.

When carefully analyzed it will aid the highway engineer in determining under a given set of conditions what type of surface should be built for a given volume of traffic to result in the least total cost for road and vehicle operation. The same sort of study will be made as to expenditures for grade reduction to reduce operating costs.

The truck operator will be given valuable information on the effect of the tire and spring equipment, lubrication, size of load and speed of vehicle on fuel consumption which should aid him in producing cheaper transportation.

STRETCH OF MODEL HIGHWAY

Ideal Section of Lincoln Road Under Construction in Lake County, Indiana, Near Chicago.

A stretch of model road, to be known as the ideal section of the Lincoln highway, is under construction in Lake county, Indiana, to the southeast of Chicago.

Besides a 40-foot road bed ten inches thick, designed to carry heavy traffic, provisions are made for beautification of the roadside in boulevard fashion. A lighting system is to be installed. The entire cost will range approximately $100,000 a mile.

This strip of roadway is centrally located, as far as traffic on the Lincoln highway is concerned, and is intended to serve as a model for the gradual evolution of the entire route as traffic volume increases. The Lincoln Highway association will provide the funds required over the usual costs per mile.

HIGHWAY FOLLOWS AIR LINE

Association Formed to Build Hard-Surfaced Road Between Chicago and Omaha.

The proposed Chicago-Omaha Short-Line Highway association, formed in Des Moines, Ia., proposes to build a road that will follow the air mail route between Chicago and the Nebraska metropolis. The highway, according to plans, will be a hard-surfaced highway. Robert N. Carson of Iowa City, Ia., has been chosen secretary and general manager.

From All Over
New Mexico and Arizona

Rains came too late to benefit the ranges in New Mexico and cattle are being moved as fast as cars can be secured. Valley pasture is getting scarce in Arizona. Feeder cattle are coming into Yuma and Maricopa counties, Arizona.

Friends of Robert Anderson, veteran mining man and owner of the oldest mine in New Mexico, who died in El Paso hospital recently, are searching for his relatives, who are heirs to a fortune estimated at from $150,000 to $200,000.

E. E. Miller, of Hope, N. M., has a new steam canner at work which he claims will turn out over 3,000 cans per day, and is now running on pears, apples and tomatoes. Mr. Miller says he is going to put up a new building for the canning factory.

Inheritance tax collections in Arizona for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, amounted to $5,104.23, according to a report made to Raymond, R. Earhart, state treasurer, by Norl Osborn, Jr., inheritance-tax collector. This amount was credited to the general fund.

George White, an employe of a paving company in Bisbee, fell into a pot of boiling asphalt, and was seriously burned. White screamed for aid as he fell from a plank into the asphalt, and was pulled out by L. A. Sullivan, a fellow employe. Physicians say he will recover.

The Fort Apache, Arizona, military reservation containing approximately 7,500 acres, has been declared useless for future military purposes and placed under control of Secretary Fall of the Interior Department. The reservation has been since 1877 under war department jurisdiction.

Neri Osborn, Jr., state tax inheritance clerk of Arizona, has been chosen state adjutant of the American Legion to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of D. A. Little, according to an announcement made public in Phoenix by Celora M. Stoddard, tax commander of the legion.

The Sisters of St. Mary, of Gallup, are busy with the plans for a new addition to the hospital which will be used for contagious diseases, and added over $300 to the building fund during the Indian fair by giving a tag day. The new structure will be so built that at any time additions can be added to take care of more patients. When completed the structure will cost $4,000.

The cotton gin at Roswell was nearly destroyed by fire recently and the loss is estimated at over $2,000, which was covered by insurance. Five bales of cotton were also burned with a loss to the owners of about $125 per bale. The fire started in the press room, and Chief Chas. Whiteman is of the opinion that the static conditions of the atmosphere, and friction from electrical machinery caused the blaze. By the time the department reached the gin it was a mass of flames.

In a further effort to help the livestock industry in the drought-stricken districts of the state, the Santa Fe railroad telegraphed the state corporation committee that the freight on feed stuff would be reduced one-half. The reduction will apply on cottonseed cake, meal and hulls, corn and articles taking corn rates; hay and alfalfa. It will be applicable from Santa Fe points, in Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Kansas; also from Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo., to all Santa Fe points in New Mexico. The reduction has been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and became effective October 20.

Playing through two matches in the morning and then facing a younger opponent in the finals for the men's singles championship in the tenth annual Border States Tennis Tournament, concluded at Tucson, Ferguson of El Paso, defeated Hutchinson, of Phoenix, Ariz., in straight-sets, 6-1, 5-2, 6-1.

At a recent meeting of the city council, the order to pave the main street of Artesia, N. M., was passed and it is planned to begin work as soon as the contract is let. If the present plans are carried out the work will be finished after the first of the year and will do much toward relieving the labor situation during the winter months.

L. C. Latham, owner of several claims in the Black Range in the vicinity of Kingston, recently discovered a fine vein of silver, which it is said will run over $1,000 to the ton of ore. This is one of the best strikes in that section of New Mexico for some time and plans are being made to develop the property after the first of the year. In the prospecting work several tons of ore have already been placed on the dump.

Governor Mechem refusing to commute the sentence, Steve Katonka was hanged at Axtec for murdering two Mexican drivers near Shiprock, N. M. Governor Mechem's statement was in regard to a petition accompanied by fourteen pages of signatures from San Juan county and a telegram signed by ten jurors who sat at his trial. The petition contained a strange request that the governor hold "Mrs. Katonka in prison the full length of time in his power." She was given a term in the prison.

Crossed Great Divide

Jim, Woodland, pioneer of Lincoln county, having come here in the late seventies, has crossed the river, and has now solved the problem of life, death and eternity.

Jim had a light attack of paralysis some months ago, but was able to get around with the aid of a cane. He went to El Paso two weeks ago for special treatment and while there suffered an additional and severe stroke, and on the advice of physicians was brought back to Carrizozo Tuesday night and breathed his last Thursday morning.

Jim Woodland was a happy, sunny dispositioned soul, known to almost every one in Lincoln county, and a friend to all. He worked for the late Governor McDonald and the Bar W company for more than a quarter of a century, and in his declining years made the old ranch home, now occupied by Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Spencer, his home.

He was buried in the local cemetery yesterday afternoon, just as the sun was sinking behind the western hills, and the remains were accompanied to their last resting place by a large number of early settlers and others who knew him. The casket was covered with a wealth of flowers and beautiful wreaths. Rev. John H. Skinner, who had known him for forty years, spoke feelingly at the grave side, referring to the generosity of the deceased, his consideration of others and especially his love for little children. Old time friends who had known him at White Oaks were the pall bearers and practically every member of the White Oaks colony was present and paid the last tribute to the memory of the deceased.

S. J. Woodland was a native of Pennsylvania. He had no relatives in this county at the time of his death. An aged sister, living in Philadelphia, is the only known surviving relative.

Nervous Break-Down

MRS. ANNIE LANGE, of R. F. D. 1, Burlington, Tex., writes as follows regarding her experience with Cardui: "Some time ago I had a nervous breakdown of some kind. I was very weak and so nervous. I had fainting spells and suffered a great deal, but more from the weak, trembly, no-account feeling than anything else. I knew I needed a tonic, and needed it badly. I began the use of Cardui to see if I couldn't get some strength, as I knew of other cases that had been helped by it. I soon saw a great improvement, so I kept it up. I used seven bottles of Cardui, and can say the money was well spent, for I grew well and strong. Am now able to do all my housework and a great deal of work besides."

If you are weak, run-down, nervous and suffer from the ailments peculiar to women, it is very likely that Cardui will help you, in the way it helped Mrs. Lange and has helped thousands of others, during the past 40 years. Ask for, and insist on, Cardui.
