The President Talks Coal

Cheyenne, Wyo., June 26.—Nationalization of the coal mines would be a step towards "national paralysis, which a sane America will everlastingly avoid," President Harding declared in a vigorous speech here. The president asserted that nationalization is one way not to solve the coal problem.

"There can be no coal mining in free America under the force of arms," said Mr. Harding. "But if we understand the situation fully and offer justly, and men accustomed to producing coal will not work to meet the public need, the public will produce their successors."

"We will find the solution. I hope we shall find it without further hardships or endangered life or menaced industry. But we shall not find it in nationalizing the mines. That would only be another step to the national paralysis which a sane America will everlastingly avoid."

"Nor shall we solve it by maintaining a basic industry, like that of bituminous coal production, under a plan of operation which affords the mine workers only 100 or 150 working days a year."

Mr. Harding told of the investigation being made by the coal commission, declaring that too it is too early to say whether the commission will suggest plans which congress will adopt. "I do know that it will bring us to a new understanding of a problem which must be solved. We shall have a publicity that will make greed impossible."

"Doubtless there will be recommendation of vast storage during seasons of light consumption. Probably there will be recommendations for enhanced distribution, the need of which is already proved."

"There may be revelations as to cost of production which will destroy price-making abuses through insistent public opinion."

"I hope for the elimination of the economic blunder of operating mines half and quarter time, by which the higher labor

A Ranger's Cabin on Look-Out Point

Ed. Pfingsten of the Mesa and several others are building a forest ranger's cabin on Look-Out Point on the White Mountain. The cabin will be 12x18x10 feet, built of hewn pine logs, at an altitude of 11,500 feet—almost two and a quarter miles above sea level—and will command a sweeping view in all directions. Apart from the walls, the other material, roofing and furnishing, has to be transported on pack horses. A ranger, equipped with strong binoculars, will be stationed there during the summer and early fall months, to look out for forest fires. The Forest Service has rangers stationed on most of the high points on the Reserve, all of which are connected by telephone, and whose business it is to look out for fires and wire the other stations when smoke is seen.

There were eleven forest fires on the Lincoln Forest Reserve this year, one of which near Corona covered 200 acres, but the greatest damage was on the White and Sacramento mountains where much valuable timber was destroyed.

This station on Look-Out Point is bound to be means of detecting forest fires before they gain too much headway. An idea may be gleaned of the elevation of this station by comparison with other high points on the Lincoln Reserve: White Mountain is 12,043 feet, Nogal Peak is 9,980 feet and Look-Out Point is 11,500 feet.

costs are made necessary.

"Meanwhile we shall the better guard against inconvenience and hardship if the consuming public will help as best it can, without expecting the government to assume all the responsibility."

Discussing the last coal strike, he asserted that "many mine operators who were as much responsible for the strike as the workmen who struck, insisted that under law enforcement they could produce all the coal that was needed. The law enforcement was provided, but no coal was produced."

Official Wool Standards

The Extension Service of the New Mexico Agricultural College has issued the following on wool gradings:

Official standards for grades of wool have been established by the Secretary of Agriculture, effective July 1, 1923. All wool in warehouses licensed under the warehouse act must be graded in accordance with official grades. While the adoption of these grades by the trade generally is not compulsory, except where state laws or ordinances make it so, it is expected that these grades will soon be quite generally adopted all over the United States, thus doing away with much of the confusion that has previously existed in the grading of wool.

The grades established are fine, one-half blood, three-eighths blood, one-fourth blood, low quarter blood, common and braid. These are determined by length of fiber and spinning qualities. There are also three classes of wool determined by the length of fiber. These are strictly combing, French combing and clothing.

Grade, class and shrink are the principal value determining properties of wool. Since the official grades have now been definitely established, and much of the confusion of grading eliminated, it is possible for the wool grower to become familiar, himself, with these things that determine the value of his clip. Since there is nothing particularly difficult connected with this matter, it is expected that wool growers in general will interest themselves in it.

Salvation Army

The Salvation Army met in the courthouse Tuesday afternoon, pursuant to call of Frank J. Sager, chairman of the Advisory Board. The old officers were re-elected for the coming year. Plans for a drive were postponed to a later date, and the chairman authorized to call the Advisory Board together, when it was deemed necessary to make a drive. Reports indicated that there had been less call for help the past year than the one previous, due probably from the fact that the county is now taking care of its indigents, which was not done the preceding year.

Truth from Liars

San Francisco, Calif. June 26.—Where courts of law, clever attorneys, penitentiaries and prisons have failed to check the ever growing increase in crime, medical science has stepped in to make the world unsafe for crooks to live in.

Texan Gives Thrill

Such was the sensational statement of Dr. R. E. House, of Ferris, Texas, which afforded a thrill to the opening session of the American Medical Association convention here.

By an anesthetic submitted to the suspected criminal he loses the power to tell a lie, Dr. House says.

He must tell the truth, for the anesthetic, for the time being, makes that part of the brain which would urge caution and lying sleep. The man tells the truth in spite of himself.

Must Tell the Truth

"The truth serum," called scopolamin, has no after effects and serves its purpose equally well in freeing a man wrongly convicted of a crime and in convicting a man who pleads innocence when guilty. The truth simply will out.

An absolute revolution in criminal procedure was predicted by Dr. House, who said that criminals would be robbed of their ancient defense—perjury on the witness stand—if given scopolamin.

Dr. House has tested his serum on a number of men in Texas, men who were instructed to answer untruthfully questions put them. They were given the serum and then told the truth instead of lying.

Carrizozo Again Loses

Carrizozo lost to Vaughn last Sunday in a magnificent struggle on the latter's grounds. The game ran into the 12th inning, Vaughn scoring the winning run. The score was 4 to 3 at the close. It was the best contested game of the season, and, though it went against our team, its loss only spurs the boys to greater effort. This is the second game our ball team has lost this season, and it still has reason to be proud of its record. A defeat once every so often lends spice to the game and creates added interest.

Declares Republicans Will Lose with Harding

One Republican paper, a weekly in Chairman Adams' own state, welcomes the row between President Harding and the Chairman of the Republican National Committee and frankly says so, adding that it is indicative "that the re-nomination of President Harding would be equivalent to the abandonment of the next election."

This is the Iowa Forum, "a Republican Journal of Public Affairs," published at Des Moines, Iowa, which further says: "President Harding is now leading the Republican party up against a wall, and recognizing him as so doing is the first step toward telling him he will have to quit."

The Iowa Forum then continues:

"The substance of the matter is that the Republican party may be led as a lamb to the slaughter under Harding; but as for the Republican party putting up a fight under Harding, what fighting it will do will be with itself and among its own members and factions. With all of this the Forum does not care to charge the President with anything worse than incapacity, if that is not the worst charge that can be made against a man in his position; but he does not know how to take strong position for the things the party and the people believe in and how to maintain that position in such a way that people will believe that he is acting and speaking from conviction and not merely because he has been persuaded that something in particular is the politic thing to say. There is no rally to him; there is never going to be any rally to him; and the situation, instead of growing better, as his friends would have us believe, grows worse and worse at every test of public opinion. He is beaten now, and the party is beaten if it stays with him."

Will Move to Lincoln

The Rice family of Parsons are moving this week to Lincoln, for the benefit of Mr. Rice's health, which has been poor for some time. The change is being made on the advise of the family physician, who believes he will improve at a lower altitude. Parsons is 8,600 feet elevation, and Lincoln is less than 5,000. The family have leased the residence formerly occupied by Dr. T. W. Watson. The Rice family will be missed by their neighbors along the Bonito, where they have lived for many years. It is hoped that the change will benefit Mr. Rice's health.

Jefferson and Monticello

Jefferson is the first American who has consulted the one art to know how he should shelter himself from the weather.—Marquis de Chastellux.

THE THOMAS JEFFERSON Memorial Foundation is raising a million dollars by popular subscription to acquire Monticello and maintain it as a national memorial to the man whose hand put the Declaration of Independence on paper. The 400 letters that have heretofore prevented the acquisition of Jefferson's Virginia home as a permanent memorial have been overcome, Jefferson M. Levy, present owner of Monticello, whose family has held title to the property since his uncle, Commodore U.S. P. Levy of the United States navy, bought it in 1833, seven years after Jefferson's death, has always been an ardent admirer of the author of the Declaration of Independence and was loath to part with Monticello. Patriotic motives finally influenced him to enter into an agreement with the Memorial Foundation.

Monticello was Jefferson's home from 1770 till his death July 4, 1826, and therefore famous. But with its passage out of the possession of the Jefferson family a little more than a century ago, it was all but forgotten by the public; not completely, however, because in 1863 the legality of the will of Commodore U.S. P. Levy, leaving the estate to the federal government for use as an agricultural college, or to Helvetia, a charity organization, was contested in the courts by his family. In 1912 a bill was introduced in congress by Representative Martin W. Littleton providing for the purchase of Monticello by the nation. Although the time was propitious because the Democratic party had just returned to power, the bill was not passed nor was it in 1917 when it was revived.

Jefferson, an every good American known or should know, was third President of the United States, 1801-09. He was born in Virginia April 13, 1743. He was graduated from William and Mary college in 1762 and admitted to the bar in 1767. He was member of the Continental congress, 1775-1776, member of the committee—Jefferson, Adams, Sherman, Franklin and Livingston to draft the Declaration of Independence; one of the signers; a leading member of the Virginia legislature, 1770; governor of Virginia, 1776; member of congress, 1783; minister to France, 1784-1789; secretary of state, 1789-1791, and Washington; vice president, 1797-1801 in the administration of John Adams; founder of the University of Virginia; married, 1772, Martha Wayles Skelton; died July 4, 1826, at Monticello; left one son and five daughters.

While President, Jefferson pursued a vigorous policy of economy; hence the phrase "Jeffersonian simplicity." He made many political removals from office, the beginning of the "spoils system" of Jackson's time. The principal events of his administration were these: The war against Tripoli, because of piracy against American vessels; the Louisiana purchase from France; the passage of the twelfth amendment to the Constitution; the duel between Hamilton and Burr and Burr's trial for treason; the Lewis and Clark expedition; Pike's expedition to the Rocky mountains; England's assertion of the right to search American vessels for British deserters; the embargo act; Fulton's Clermont in regular service between New York and Albany; an act prohibiting the slave trade.

SIGNING THE DECLARATION

Monticello is peculiarly fitted to be a Jefferson shrine because he himself planned and built the mansion. Its location is about three miles from Charlotte, the seat of the University of Virginia, which Jefferson founded. On every side from the spot which Jefferson selected as the site of his home stretch great reaches of some of the most beautiful country in the United States.

The site of Jefferson's birthplace, Shadwell, is only a short distance away. He himself selected the site for his mountain home, drew the design and plans for the house, selected the stone and timber used in the structure, looked after the construction of the brick and he nails made by his own servants, devised advanced and ingenious contrivances for comfort and convenience, designed the decoration of the interior and personally selected the furnishings and ornaments, and not only planned but gave personal supervision to the laying out of the various buildings on the estate, the gardens, the walks and the roadways. Work was begun on the house in 1764.

When Shadwell was destroyed by fire in 1770 Monticello was far enough completed for the family to move in. Two years later he brought his bride, Martha Wayles Skelton, there, although a greater part of the house was still unfinished. Indeed, throughout his life, Monticello continued in minor ways, as his biographer Raynor puts it, "to be in a state of almost constant edification and re-edification. In 1803, there were still rooms to be plastered, in 1808 the north house itself might be said to be completed, but long after that he experimented with garden temples and other smaller buildings.

Though architecture was only a hobby with Jefferson, today he is acclaimed a great architect. Anyway Monticello is not the only example of his work; he is responsible for the structure of several other plantation houses in the neighborhood and took great delight during his last years in planning the buildings of the University of Virginia and overseeing their construction.

long extending coastal plains to the east. The appearance is of one story and entering the hall one is still deceived, for Jefferson disliked staircases to such an extent that he shut them all up in closets. The hall shows only a gallery on which the bedrooms open. In the same room Jefferson planned a billiard room, but a law was passed by the state before it was completed, forbidding the game and so it was left in an unfinished state. The wings of the house end in octagonal projections; the northern one containing the dining room, ten rooms and two guest rooms, the southern forming Jefferson's private suite sitting room, library and bedroom. Under the dome on the west is the great drawing room, famous for its parquet flooring of native woods and its pillared portico. There were 532 acres in the estate.

More notable of the architectural features of the house is the "hiding away of all signs of kitchen, laundry, stable and the many workshops necessary on a plantation of that period when almost every article in daily use was manufactured on the estate by servants and slaves. The sharp declivity of the mountain made it possible to have these offices all at a lower level than the house. A tunnel from the basement leads right on left to ancillary pavilions, used by the slaves. By this contrivance dish washers, cooks, butlers, maids, troops of slaves with wood for fires, cans of ashes, pails of hot or cold water did their work without disturbing the tranquility of the family and their guests. An oddity contrived by Jefferson is a dumb-waiter for holding wine from the cellar, with a capacity of but one bottle.

Monticello, undoubtedly the finest mansion in that section of Virginia, cost its owner, according to his account-books, about $7,200. The ornamental stone was brought from Philadelphia to Richmond by water and hauled from Richmond in carts.

When Jefferson in 1800 completed his second term as President, he has tened to Monticello; there he hoped to find privacy, freedom and leisure. In a measure, perhaps, he realized them. He enjoyed society, but he did not relish the intrusion of idle, curious fellow-countrymen who came to stare and gape.

Capt. Edmund Baker, for 20 years Jefferson's overseer and man of business, said that Jefferson's visitors "ate him out of house and home." Any way, on Jefferson's death the estate was so impoverished that his heirs were compelled to part with Monticello.

Science Is Not the Foe of Religion

WASHINGTON.—A joint statement holding that there is no antagonism between science and religion is issued here as representing the conclusions of a group of 40 distinguished Americans on a subject which recently has aroused bitter and widespread controversy.

The names of two cabinet officers, Secretaries Hoover and Davis, three bishops and many others in positions of leadership in the political, business, scientific and religious worlds are attached to the declaration, which was prepared by R. A. Milliken, director of the Norman Bridge Laboratory of Physics at Pasadena, Cal.

"The purpose," said an accompanying explanation, "is to assist in correcting two erroneous impressions that seem to be current among certain groups of persons. The first is that religion today stands for medieval theology; the second that science is materialistic and irreligious." The statement follows:

"We, the undersigned, deeply regret that in recent controversies there has been a tendency to present science and religion as irreconcilable and antagonistic domains of thought, for in fact they meet distinct human needs, and in the rounding out of human life they supplement rather than displace or oppose each other.

"The purpose of science is to develop, without prejudice or preconception of any kind, a knowledge of the facts, the laws and the processes of nature. The even more important task of religion, on the other hand, is to develop the conscience, the ideals and the aspirations of mankind. Each of these two activities represents a deep and vital function of man, and both are necessary for the life, the progress and the happiness of the human race.

"It is a sublime conception of God which is furnished by science, and one wholly consonant with the highest ideals of religion, when it represents Him as revealing Himself through countless ages in the development of the earth; as an abode for man, and in the age long labored of life into its constituent matter; culminating in man with his spiritual nature and all his godlike powers."

Those whose names were attached to the statement included Bishops William Lawrence and William Thomas Manning of the Episcopal church, and Bishop Francis J. McConnell of the Methodist Episcopal church; Dr. Charles W. Walcott, president of the National Academy of Science; President Angell of Yale, President Burton of the University of Chicago, and Dr. W. T. Mayo.

Canada's Minister to United States

THE appointment of a Canadian minister plenipotentiary at Washington, which has been under advisement by succeeding Canadian governments for four years, is unlikely to be made until after the imperial conference in London in October. Such is the intimation in official circles both at Ottawa and Washington.

The proposition originated when Sir Robert Borden was prime minister, and was the subject of prolonged negotiations with the British government. When London did not object to Canada having a representative at Washington, the British idea in the first instance was that such an officer should have only the status of a commissioner or glorified commercial agent.

Sir Robert Borden and his government maintained, on the other hand, that in view of Canada's part in the war and the increased constitutional status indicated by their dominion being a separate signatory to the treaty of Versailles, its representative at Washington should be vested with a standing in consonance with the newer conception of Canadian dignity.

Finally this view prevailed and an agreement was made whereby the Canadian minister should have plenipotentiary powers and also should be the deputy of a British ambassador in case of his absence. No appointment was made, however, the reason assigned being that a suitable man for the position could not be found.

Since the government changed in 1921 the matter has remained in statu quo. The reason put forth by the liberals was also the difficulty of securing a man properly equipped intellectually, diplomatically, and materially—particularly the last—for the post. The government, however, has indicated that the proposal of the Canadian minister being deputy of the ambassador was not to their liking, it being feared that complications might readily result from such action.

Another consideration is the attitude of the other dominions and how they would regard Canada having a representative there with plenipotentiary powers, although the adjacency of this dominion to the United States places it in a position utterly dissimilar from the rest of the British commonwealth.

Warship Still Backbone of U. S. Navy

LOADING ships will continue the backbone of the United States navy and the airplane will serve as an adjunct, not as a substitute, for the dreadnaught. This is indicated finally by a series of statements issued semi-officially by the Navy News Service, forecasting with certainty the findings of the general board. The statements include opinions from Secretary Denby, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt and Admirals Cointz, Rodgers and Moffett. The general board, after weeks of research, will recommend that congress be asked to appropriate funds for building not less than twelve and not more than twenty in each type of 10,000-ton cruisers, mine-laying and scout submarines and six gunboats, next session.

The summary of the general board as to its findings of the importance of aircraft has not been made public, but aviation enthusiasts who believe that the airplane has eclipsed the battleship will find the deathknell of immediate hopes in Secretary Denby's sentence that "the battleship is still the strongest element in the nation's sea defense and will be so long as most of us now living are concerned with mundane affairs."

The general board has been conducting an exhaustive research into the merits of various types of fighting weapons, and has sought opinions from officers of every school, from the old bitter-ops who believe that weight and metal is the cardinal factor in seafighting to the extremists who would carry the fleet into the air. Summed up by opinions issued in the Navy News manifesto, the board believes that "aviation as a vital branch of the service cannot be pushed too strongly, but at the same time the surface fleet must be rounded out to the 5-5-3 ratio provided for by the naval treaty."

Secretary Denby points out that once the battleship is accepted as doomed by aircraft supremacy, the logical conclusion must be to scrap all ships since the floating craft must speedily be extinct. This is not true, he warns, and since the battleship is still the most powerful weapon of a fleet, the ships which float upon the sea, are a nation's strongest power.

"The tremendous importance of the new weapon, the airplane, is clear," he says. "Every effort is being made to develop it and make it as effective as possible for offense and defense. The place of the airplane in armies and navies is assured and vital but the ships that float upon the sea are still the nation's strongest power."

Motor Tourists Given Spice of Life

IF VARIETY is the spice of life, motor tourists get plenty of spice when they undertake to inform themselves concerning the vehicular and traffic laws of different states and municipalities and to conform thereto. And if they are not nimble witted and quick to learn, they may find themselves with ample time to pursue their studies during a few days in jail or hospital, or an indefinite sojourn in that bourne whence no traveler returns. For the law as applied to motorists speaks a decidedly "arid language."

Headlights that are approved in one state are taboo in another.

You pass around to the right of the traffic officer in making a left-hand turn in one city, and if you try it in another the next thing you know you hear yourself saying, "Good morning, judge!"

In Pennsylvania you pass a trolley car, traveling in the same direction that you are going, on the left-hand side. Once over into New Jersey intersections in some places; in others, an effort to comply with that regulation may prove a short cut to the repair station and station house.

With due consideration for other traffic you may turn around any place in the streets of some cities; in others, you do your turning at corners only or you are out of luck. As to speed, in some states you can use your own judgment, provided it is good, while in others every little village has a limit all its own.

As standardization is the watchword of the hour in industry, so the same idea has been taken up with respect to traffic laws. Motor vehicle administrators from the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine have formed a conference which is making a drive to secure uniformity in laws.

Strangely enough, one of the great set obstacles in the way of this traffic movement is to be found in the

Eagle Nests Endure

Describing the bird eagles which make their nests on the "Roosts" in the town of South Carolina, Herbert Edwards has written in Harper's: "There is something characteristic of the great bird itself, and something striking in the mind, in the performance of the eagle's nest. Most birds eagle's home is like an ancestral mansion. It stands year after year, enduring for a longer time than many a man lives, cared for and kept in repair by the skilled architects who build it and who seem to have a general attention for it. On a plantation near the coast there is a nest in a pine 112 feet above the ground. For more than 20 years the same pair of eagles have inhabited this nest, and bar with which one must now be content, have fallen into ruin."

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to medicines. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it.

A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it gives excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmor's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism.

You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmor & Co., Baginham, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

THE BIRDS' REVENGE

MR. AND MRS. WOODPECKER had finished their house and had four eggs nesting on the soft sawdust inside when one morning they heard some one at the door.

Mr. Woodpecker flew to open it, and who was it but Mr. Squirrel asking if the house was for rent.

"The very idea," said Mrs. Woodpecker, when her husband told her what Mr. Squirrel had asked; "he knew perfectly well that we were living here. What he wanted to find out was if we were at home and if we were not he would have come right in and taken possession."

"I gave him a good sharp peck," said Mr. Woodpecker, "and he knew his home now and that possession proved it.

Mrs. Woodpecker flew away to find her husband, but he met with no better success. For Mr. Squirrel told him the same thing he had told his wife and drove them away.

But the Woodpeckers knew that Mr. Squirrel would not stay in the house all the time so they patiently waited for revenge.

It was not until the next day that Mr. Squirrel ventured far from the new home. Then he came to the door and took a look all around, but he did not see the Woodpeckers, who were flattened against the tree far over his head.

Mr. Squirrel had been busy storing away food and while the Woodpeckers knew they would never be comfortable again in their home they determined that bad Mr. Squirrel should not live in comfort there either, and as soon as they had watched him running down the path they flew over to Reddy Squirrel's and told him about the food in the hollow of the tree which had once been their home.

Now Reddy Squirrel liked nothing better than to find a store of food which Mr. Gray Squirrel had hidden. When he heard the news he did not even stop to thank the Woodpeckers, for Reddy is not a very polite creature. Off he scampered.

It was late in the day when Mr. Squirrel returned to his new home, and when he discovered he had been robbed he ran to the door of his home and chattered angrily.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodpecker knew that they were revenged, but before they flew away from the limb where they sat watching, Mr. Woodpecker said, "Reddy Squirrel called while you were out, Mr. Squirrel, and we told him to go right in and make himself at home."

"Who Was It, but Mr. Squirrel!"

I was at home and on guard. He won't come back. I think we are quite safe, my dear."

But Mr. Woodpecker was wrong, for Mr. Squirrel had his mind set upon that very house for a home and he intended to have it, so he ran up to a place where he could watch unseen by the Woodpeckers and waited.

By and by Mr. Woodpecker flew away and after a while Mrs. Woodpecker came out and off she went. Mr. Squirrel knew that she would quickly return and he must not lose time, and he didn't, for he was in her home before Mrs. Woodpecker was out of sight of the tree.

Then that wicked Mr. Squirrel ate the four eggs for his breakfast and when poor Mrs. Woodpecker returned home he met her at the door like an angry cat, chattering that this was

Hatch Eggs in Decaying Plants.

The Australian brush turkey lays its eggs on the top of a heap of decaying vegetation, which it has piled up to a height of fifteen feet or so. The eggs are laid at a depth of five or six feet, and left to hatch themselves by the warmth generated by the decaying matter.

TOPICS TABOO

THERE are some people—one finds them everywhere—who seem to like to bring up for conversation topics of a morbid or salacious interest. Sometimes you will find the most prudish women in the world, who would be extremely indignant if anyone told a questionable story in her presence, who has a penchant for talking in a shocked way about immorality and unconventionality and this really is just as much to her discredit as it is to the discredit of the woman who jests about such matters. It shows an underlying and abnormal interest in subjects which are quite properly taboo in polite society.

Stop and ask yourself if you are of this number. It is really an indication that you are living a narrow, one-sided life, that you are losing your youthful attitude, and that your mental attitude is not as normal nor as wholesome as it should be. And when you permit yourself to verge on these subjects taboo you just increase this unwholesome, crabbed side of your nature.

And remember that in this country well-bred persons generally keep off topics of this sort. You will never queer yourself socially by keeping clear of them and there is much probability that you will spoil your chances for social success if you don't keep clear of them.

Odd Expression.

Sister Cora had just returned home from the hospital, where she had had her tonsils removed, and Betty asked her for some money to buy some flowers for Cora. She got the money and hurried to the corner, purchasing a large bunch of sweet peas. Arriving home, she left the flowers in the hall, went to the writing desk, and found an old business card.

Mr. Squirrel watched the Woodpeckers fly out of sight and then he ran down the tree and away from that part of the wood to look for a new home, for he knew it was no use living there now that Reddy Squirrel had discovered his storehouse.

"I wonder if they told him," thought Mr. Squirrel. "I guess I won't let any bird know where I make my home this time. Little birds are always telling things you don't want known."

"What's in a Name?"

Dr. MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel

NINA

THOUGH Nina has a typically French sound, the name is regarded as English. However, it came to us through the French by a lengthy process of evolution. The Hebrew Chanach was its earliest source and from this word it derived its significance of "grape."

Through the English Hannah, it came to France as Anne and was soon given the diminutive, Annette. An Nanette, it appeared simultaneously, but the French love of variety changed the latter form to Nanon and finally Ninon.

The beauty and fame of Ninon de l'Enclos, superwoman and court "vamp" in the reign of Louis XIV, spread her name afar. It became almost a synonym for charmer and the maids of several countries coveted it. But Ninon is too Gallic for English ears, so, in its transportation across the channel, the ending underwent a change and Nina was the final result. It has enjoyed extraordinary vogue in this country.

The diamond is Nina's talismanic gem. It is the emblem of fearlessness and invincibility and promises its wearer success in all undertakings

YOUR HAND

How to Read Your Characteristics and Tendencies—their Capabilities or Weaknesses That Make for Success or Failure as Shown in Your Palm

"SHALL I TRAVEL?"

IN SOME rare cases the line of travel (either horizontal or vertical, on the mount of the moon) runs into the line of the head, which is the lower of the two main lines crossing the palm horizontally. We may then forgetful, or hold as indicated in the past, some danger to the head, or some other quality, arising from a journey. This is confirmed when the place of joining the two lines is marked by a spot, an island or a break.

When travel is indicated by the little hair lines that leave the line of life (encircling the thumb) and travel with it, the indication is similar to that shown by the line of life. If one branch of the divided line goes on its way around the mount of Venus, the ball of the thumb, while the other proceeds to the base of the mount of Luna, the subject will make a great change from his native land to another. When the line of life divides toward its end and there is a wide angle between the branches the subject will most likely end his days in a country other than that which gave him birth.

"Tanlao Can't Be Beat," Declares This Albuquerque Citizen.

"Three years ago Tanlao rid me of a nervous, run-down condition, built me up from a hundred and twenty-five pounds to a hundred and fifty-five, and I have felt fine ever since," declared Henry G. DeBaco, popular member of Company No. 1 of the Albuquerque, N. M., fire department, residing at 313 E. Cromwell St.

"I got so weak and run down that my work was an awful strain and I thought I would have to quit. My nerves were so frayed and shattered I would roll and toss all night without getting any sleep, and get up mornings feeling as worn-out as when I went to bed. What I ate never seemed to give me much nourishment, and the result was I fell off from my usual weight of a hundred and fifty pounds to a hundred and twenty-five."

"Well, sir, I started getting better on my first bottle of Tanlao, and I stuck to it till I finished the full course of six bottles, and by that time was feeling like a new man. That's what Tanlao did for me, and I never miss a chance to say a good word for it."

Tanlao is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Freezing Eyeglasses.

Since optical glasses cannot be cut unless they are fixed in an immovable position, it has been the practice to glue them to iron frames of various sizes and shapes. Until a few years ago the plates of glass, when finished, were knocked off the frame by means of a light mallet, the blow being delivered cautiously upon the edges of the plates. Naturally enough, this was a delicate and dangerous bit of work, and unless performed by the most expert of workmen resulted, of course, in the injury of the lens.

But the discovery was made that the blocks of crystal separated more readily when they had been exposed to a certain degree of cold. The result has been what might be called a revolution in the making of special glasses.

He indicated that he would act if proper evidence of such treatment were laid before him.

Silver Purchase Halted by Government

Washington.—Director Scobey of the mint has closed the treasury books to all offers of silver for purchase by the government, and it was officially stated, no further tenders are likely to be accepted for two or three years. Actual treasury purchases of silver ended June 1, when offers estimated at two hundred million ounces had been received under the Pittman act. Since the offers all were on the basis of estimates, Mr. Scobey had no way of ascertaining definitely whether the amount required by the law would be entirely filled. Consequently he has continued to receive and file offers. The two hundred million ounces purchased is to replace that loaned by the treasury to Great Britain for use in India during the war. When that bullion is again in its vaults, the government will be out of the silver market. Officials believe the treasury will have no further need for additional stocks for several years.

Jefferson and Monticello

Jefferson is the first American who has committed the fine arts to know how he should shelter himself from the weather.—Marquis de Custine.

THE THOMAS JEFFERSON Memorial Foundation is raising a million dollars by popular subscription to acquire Monticello and maintain it as a national memorial to the man whose hand put the Declaration of Independence on paper. The $1,000,000 that have heretofore prevented the acquisition of Jefferson's Virginia home as a permanent memorial have been overcome.

Jefferson M. Levy, present owner of Monticello, whose family has held title to the property since his uncle, Commodore John M. Levy of the United States navy, bought it in 1823, seven years after Jefferson's death, has always been an ardent admirer of the author of the Declaration of Independence and was forth to part with Monticello. Patriotic feeling finally influenced him to enter into an agreement with the Memorial Foundation.

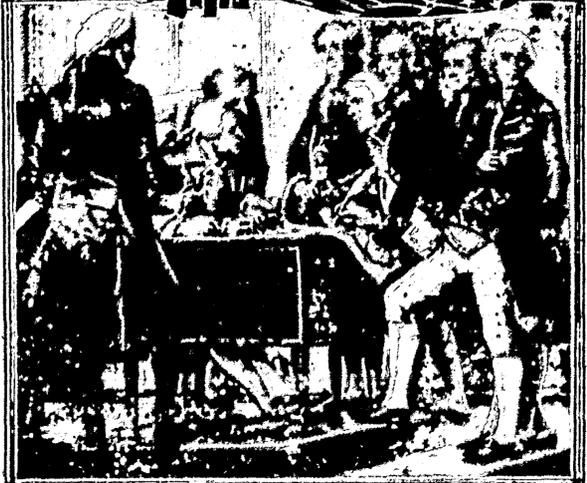

Monticello was Jefferson's home from 1770 till his death, July 4, 1826, and therefore famous. But with its passage out of the possession of the Jefferson family a little more than a century ago, it was all but forgotten by the public, not completely, however, because in 1845 the legality of the will of Commodore John Phillips Levy, leaving the estate to the federal government for use as an agricultural college, or to help charity organizations, was contested in the courts by his family. In 1912 a bill was introduced in congress by Representative Martin W. Littleton providing for the purchase of Monticello by the nation. Although the time was propitious because the Democratic party had just returned to power, the bill was not passed nor was it in 1917 when it was revived.

Jefferson as every good American knows or should know, was third President of the United States, 1801-1809. He was born in Virginia April 13, 1743. He was graduated from William and Mary college in 1762 and admitted to the bar in 1767. He was member of the Continental congress, 1775-1779; member of the committee Jefferson, Adams, Sherman, Franklin and Livingston to draft the Declaration of Independence; one of the signers; a long member of the Virginia legislature, 1774; governor of Virginia, 1779; member of congress, 1783; minister to France, 1785-1789; secretary of state, 1790-1793; Washington, vice president, 1797-1801 in the administration of John Adams; founder of the University of Virginia; married, 1772, Martha Wayles Skelton; died July 4, 1826, at Monticello; left one son and five daughters.

While President, Jefferson pursued a vigorous policy of economy; hence the phrase "Jeffersonian simplicity." He made many political removals from office, the beginning of the "spoils system" of Jackson's time. The principal events of his administration were these: The war against Tripoli, because of piracy against American vessels; the Louisiana purchase from France; the passage of the twelfth amendment to the Constitution; the duel between Hamilton and Burr and Burr's trial for treason; the Lewis and Clark expedition; Pike's expedition to the Rocky mountains; England's assertion of the right to search American vessels for British deserters; the embargo act; Fulton's Clermont in regular service between New York and Albany; an act prohibiting the slave trade.

Eagle Nests Endure

Describing the bald eagles which make their nests on the "Sawtooth" side of South Carolina, Herbert Ravenel has written in Harper's: "There is something characteristic of the great bird itself, and something attractive to the mind, in the performance of the eagle's home. Most birds' nests are ephemeral things. After a few weeks or months they are gone, and not only gone but forgotten. The eagle's home is like an ancestral mansion. It stands year after year, enduring for a longer time than many a man lives, cared for and kept in repair by the winged architects who build it and who seem to have a genuine affection for it. On a plantation near the coast there is a nest in a pine 112 feet above the ground. For more than 50 years the same pair of eagles have inhabited this nest, and it is possible that they will still be living there when because that nest are building today, out of the kind of lumber with which one must now be content, have fallen into ruin."

SIGNING THE DECLARATION

Monticello is peculiarly fitted to be a Jefferson shrine because he himself planned and built the mansion. Its location is about three miles from Charlottesville, the seat of the University of Virginia, which Jefferson founded. On every side from the spot which Jefferson selected as the site of his home stretch great reaches of some of the most beautiful country in the United States.

The site of Jefferson's birthplace, Shadwell, is only a short distance away. He himself selected the site for his mountain home, drew the design and plans for the house, selected the stone and timber used in the structure, looked after the construction, of the brick and he built made by his own servants, devised advanced and ingenious contrivances for comfort and convenience, designed the decoration of the interior and personally selected the furnishings and ornaments, and not only planned but gave personal supervision to the laying out of the various buildings on the estate, the gardens, the walks and the roadways. Work was begun on the house in 1764.

When Shadwell was destroyed by fire in 1770, Monticello was far enough completed for the family to move in. Two years later he brought his bride, Martha Wayles Skelton, there, although a greater part of the house was still unfinished. It need, throughout his life, Monticello continued in minor ways, as his biographer Raynor says it, to be in a state of almost constant addition and re-edification. In 1803, there were still rooms to be plastered. In 1808 the main house itself might be said to be completed, but long after that he experimented with garden temples and other smaller buildings.

Though architecture was only a hobby with Jefferson, today he is renowned a great architect. Anyway Monticello is not the only example of his work; he is responsible for the structure of several other plantation houses in the neighborhood and took great delight during his last years in planning the buildings of the University of Virginia and supervising their construction.

The exterior of Monticello—"Little Mountain"—is in the Doric order of architecture. The interior is in the Ionic style. A portico, the full height of the house, with stone pillars and steps projects 25 feet. It is a brick mansion 100 by 100 feet, with white pillars, cornices and balustrades supported by a dome, standing in the midst of a lawn overlooking river, meadows and fertile valley, with a view of mountains to the west and of

Motor Tourists Given Spice of Life

IF VARIETY is the spice of life, motor tourists get plenty of spice when they undertake to inform themselves concerning the vehicular and traffic laws of different states and municipalities and to conform thereto. And if they are not nimble-witted and quick to learn, they may find themselves with ample time to pursue their studies during a few days in jail or hospital, or an indefinite sojourn in that bourne whence no traveler returns. For the law as applied to motors speaks a decidedly "arid language."

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Science Is Not the Foe of Religion

WASHINGTON.—A joint statement holding that there is no antagonism between science and religion is issued here as representing the conclusions of a group of 40 distinguished Americans on a subject which recently has aroused bitter and widespread controversy. The names of two cabinet officers, Secretaries Hoover and Davis, three bishops and many others in positions of leadership in the political, business, scientific and religious worlds are attached to the declaration, which was prepared by R. A. Milliken, director of the Norman Bridge Laboratory of Physics at Pasadena, Cal. "The purpose," said an accompanying explanation, "is to assist in correcting two erroneous impressions that seem to be current among certain groups of persons. The first is that religion today stands for medieval theology; the second that science is materialistic and irreligious." The statement follows: "We, the undersigned, deeply regret that in recent controversies there has been a tendency to present science and religion as irreconcilable and antagonistic domains of thought, for in fact they meet distinct human needs, and in the rounding out of human life they supplement rather than displace or oppose each other.

Canada's Minister to United States

THE appointment of a Canadian minister plenipotentiary at Washington, which has been under advisement for succeeding Canadian governments for four years, is unlikely to be made until after the imperial conference in London in October. Such is the intimation in official circles both at Ottawa and Washington.

The proposition originated when Sir Robert Borden was prime minister and was the subject of prolonged negotiations with the British government. When London did not object to Canada having a representative at Washington, the British idea in the first instance was that such an officer should have only the status of a commissioner or accredited commercial agent. Sir Robert Borden and his government maintained, on the other hand, that in view of Canada's part in the war and the increased constitutional status indicated by their dominion being a separate signatory to the treaty of Versailles, its representative at Washington should be vested with a standing in consonance with the new conception of Canadian dignity.

Warship Still Backbone of U. S. Navy

FLOATING ships will continue the backbone of the United States Navy and the airplane will serve as an adjunct, not as a substitute, for the dreadnaught. This is indicated finally by a series of statements issued semi-officially by the Navy News Service, forecasting with certainty the findings of the general board. The statements include opinions from Secretary Denby, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt and Admirals Conz, Rodgers and Moffett. The general board, after weeks of research, will recommend that congress be asked to appropriate funds for building not less than twelve and not more than twenty in each type of 10,000-ton cruisers, mine-laying and scout submarines and six gunboats, next session. The summary of the general board as to its findings of the importance of aircraft has not been made public, but aviation enthusiasts who believe that the airplane has eclipsed the battleship will find the deathknell of immediate hopes in Secretary Denby's sentence that "the battleship is still the strongest element in the nation's sea defense and will be so long as most of us now living are concerned with mundane affairs." The general board has been conducting an exhaustive research into the merits of various types of fighting weapons, and has sought opinions from officers of every school, from the old bitter-enders who believe that weight and metal is the cardinal factor in seafighting to the extremists who would carry the fleet into the air. Summed up by opinions issued in the Navy News manifesto, the board believes that "aviation as a vital branch of the service cannot be pushed too strongly, but at the same time the surface fleet must be rounded out to the 5-5-3 ratio provided for by the naval treaty."

Motor Tourists Given Spice of Life

Intersections in some places; in others, an effort to comply with that regulation may prove a short cut to the repair station and station house. With due consideration for other traffic you may turn around any place in the streets of some cities; in others, you do your turning at corners only or you are out of luck. As to speed, in some states you can use your own judgment, provided it is good, while in others every little village has a limit all its own. As standardization is the watchword of the hour in industry, so the same idea has been taken up with respect to traffic laws. Motor vehicle administrators from the states of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine have formed a conference which is making a drive to secure uniformity in laws. Strangely enough, one of the greatest obstacles in the way of this reform movement is to be found in the attitude taken by the motorists themselves in many instances. They do not like to be bothered by the

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it. A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it almost excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism. You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. ## THE BIRDS' REVENGE

MR. AND MRS. WOODPECKER had finished their home and had four eggs waiting on the soft sawdust inside when one morning they heard some one at the door.

Mr. Woodpecker flew to open it, and who was it but Mr. Squirrel asking if the house was for rent.

"The very idea," said Mrs. Woodpecker, when her husband told her what Mr. Squirrel had asked.

"The very idea," said Mrs. Woodpecker, when her husband told her what Mr. Squirrel had asked. "He knew perfectly well that we were living here. What he wanted to find out was if we were at home and if we were not he would have come right in and taken possession."

"I gave him a good sharp peck," said Mr. Woodpecker, "and he knew his home now and that possession proved it. Mrs. Woodpecker flew away to find her husband, but he met with no better success. For Mr. Squirrel told him the same thing he had told his wife and drove them away.

But the Woodpeckers knew that Mr. Squirrel would not stay in the house all the time so they patiently waited for revenge.

It was not until the next day that Mr. Squirrel ventured far from the new home. Then he came to the door and took a look all around, but he did not see the Woodpeckers, who were flattened against the tree far over his head.

Mr. Squirrel had been busy storing away food and while the Woodpeckers knew they would never be comfortable again in their home they determined that had Mr. Squirrel should not live in comfort there either, and as soon as they had watched him running down the path they flew over to Reddy Squirrel's and told him about the food in the hollow of the tree which had once been their home.

Now Reddy Squirrel liked nothing better than to find a store of food which Mr. Gray Squirrel had hidden. When he heard the news he did not even stop to thank the Woodpeckers, for Reddy is not a very polite creature. Off he scampered.

It was late in the day when Mr. Squirrel returned to his new home, and when he discovered he had been robbed he ran to the door of his home and chattered angrily.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodpecker knew that they were revenged, but before they flew away from the limb where they sat watching, Mr. Woodpecker said, "Reddy Squirrel called while you were out, Mr. Squirrel, and we told him to go right in and make himself at home."

Then that wicked Mr. Squirrel ate the four eggs for his breakfast and when poor Mrs. Woodpecker returned home he met her at the door like an angry cat, chattering that this was

Antonio Moreno

Antonio Garrido Montezgudo Moreno, the "movie" actor, was born in Madrid, Spain. He received most of his schooling in America. Before entering the motion picture business he played in stock, also in vaudeville. He has appeared in a number of prominent productions with well-known players. In time he aspires to be a director.

We knew that was the way you did when folks were not at home."

Mr. Squirrel watched the Woodpeckers fly out of sight and then to run down the tree and away from that part of the wood to look for a new home, for he knew it was no use living there now that Reddy Squirrel had discovered his storehouse.

"I wonder if they told him," thought Mr. Squirrel. "I guess I won't let any bird know where I make my home this time. Little birds are always telling things you don't want known."

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel.

NINA. THROUGH Nina has a typically French sound, the name is regarded as English. However, it came to us through the French by a lengthy process of evolution.

Through the English Hannah, it came to France as Anne and was soon given the diminutive, Annette. As Nanette, it appeared simultaneously, but the French love of variety changed the latter form to Nanon and finally Ninon.

The beauty and fame of Ninon de Lenclos, superwoman and court "vamp" in the reign of Louis XIV, spread her name afar. It became almost a synonym for charmer and the maids of several countries coveted it.

But Ninon is too Gallic for English ears, so, in its transportation across the channel, the ending underwent a change and Nina was the final result. It has enjoyed extraordinary vogue in this country.

The diamond is Nina's talismanic gem. It is the emblem of fearlessness and invincibility and promises its wearer success in all undertakings.

When travel is indicated by the little hair lines that leave the line of life (encircling the thumb) and travel with it, the indication is similar to that shown by the line of life. If one branch of the divided line goes on its way around the mount of Venus, the ball of the thumb, while the other proceeds to the base of the mount of Luna, the subject will make a great change from his native land to another.

When the line of life divides toward its end and there is a wide space between the branches the subject will most likely end his days in a country other than that which gave him birth.

FIRE FIGHTER GAINS 30 POUNDS

"Tanlao Can't Be Beat," Declares This Albuquerque Citizen.

"Three years ago Tanlao did me of a nervous, run-down condition, built me up from a hundred and twenty-five pounds to a hundred and fifty-five and I have felt fine ever since," declared Henry C. DeBaca, popular member of Company No. 1 of the Albuquerque, N. M., fire department, residing at 318 E. Cromwell St.

"I got so weak and run down that my work was an awful strain and I thought I would have to quit. My nerves were so frayed and shattered I would roll and toss all night without getting any sleep, and get up mornings feeling as worn out as when I went to bed. What I ate never seemed to give me much nourishment, and the result was I fell off from my usual weight of a hundred and fifty pounds to a hundred and twenty-five."

"Well, sir, I started getting better on my first bottle of Tanlao, and I stuck to it till I finished the full course of six bottles, and by that time was feeling like a new man. That's what Tanlao did for me, and I never miss a chance to say a good word for it."

Tanlao is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 37 million bottles sold.

Freezing Eyeglasses. Since optical glasses cannot be cut unless they are fixed in an immovable position, it has been the practice to glue them to iron frames of various sizes and shapes. Until a few years ago the plates of glass, when finished, were knocked off the frame by means of a light mallet, the blow being delivered cautiously upon the edges of the plates.

Naturally enough, this was a delicate and dangerous bit of work, and unless performed by the most expert of workmen resulted, of course, in the injury of the lens.

But the discovery was made that the blocks of crystal separated more readily when they had been exposed to a certain degree of cold. The result has been what might be called a revolution in the making of special glasses.

Silver Purchase Halted by Government. Washington.—Director Scobey of the mint has closed the treasury books to all offers of silver for purchase by the government, and it was officially stated, no further tenders are likely to be accepted for two or three years. Actual treasury purchases of silver ended June 1, when offers estimated at two hundred million ounces had been received under the Pittman act. Since the offers all were on the basis of estimates, Mr. Scobey had no way of ascertaining definitely whether the amount required by the law would be entirely filled. Consequently he has continued to receive and file offers. The two hundred million ounces purchased is to replace that loaned by the treasury to Great Britain for use in India during the war. When that loan is again in its vaults the government will be out of the silver market. Officials believe the treasury will have no further need for additional stocks for several years.

TOPICS TABOO

THERE are some people—one finds them everywhere—who seem to like to bring up for conversation topics of a morbid or salacious interest. Sometimes you will find the most prudish women in the world, who would be extremely indignant if anyone told a questionable story in her presence, who has a penchant for talking in a shocked way about immorality and unconventionality and this really is just as much to her discredit as it is to the discredit of the woman who jests about such matters. It shows an underlying and abnormal interest in subjects which are quite properly taboo in polite society.

Stop and ask yourself if you are of this number. It is really an indication that you are living a narrow, one-sided life, that you are losing your youthful attitude, and that your mental attitude is not as normal nor as wholesome as it should be. And when you permit yourself to verge on these subjects taboo you just increase this unwholesome, crabbed side of your nature.

And remember that in this country well-bred persons generally keep off topics of this sort. You will never queer yourself socially by keeping clear of them and there is much probability that you will spoil your chances for social success if you don't keep clear of them.

Has a galoot-like this proposed to you? Symptoms: "Mincing"; that's what the novelists call his gait. His dainty hands, flowers in his buttonhole—all is mincing. Sometimes a monocle flashes forth to enlarge his vision. Oh, he may seem dashing, but—You should see him fuss over his boiled egg mornings! In fact, the only thing that he doesn't fuss over, his family says, is ocean bathing, and some one heard him say once that the ocean wasn't "the same" enough.

FRIDAY, JUNE 29, 1923

Cost of living is rising, gradually, not radically, but rising; and day by day, in every way, the dollar with which to pay for it is painfully harder to procure.

Failures are more this year than that of last year. There is an abundance of money in our country—more than any other country in the world—but the trouble is it is in the hands of the profiteers, and they have no disposition to put it in circulation.

Chairman Adams of the Republican National Committee, is trying to stack the cards on President Harding in the International Court game. While the President is addressing the people in behalf of the proposition, the chairman is button-holing Republican senators and committee-men against it. The chairman is building quite a back fire.

The profiteers' tariff has invited inflation of prices by prompting manufacturers, middlemen and dealers to add and pyramid duties even on products and commodities made in this country. This has happened in respect to building materials with the result that costs have at last become prohibitory and threaten to stop all activity.

Wheat is selling in Chicago and other western markets for a considerably less price than it sold in the same markets a year ago, and the future outlook is even less favorable. This decline in the price of wheat has come in spite of the tariff of 30 cents a bushel imposed by the Fordney-McCumber law, which was professed and proclaimed a boon to "American agriculture."

It takes hold. It grips hard. Its high, thick, sharp-edged blocks put up a wedge-like resistance to skidding. It is the maximum safety, traction and long wear you can put under your car—the reinforced, beveled All-Weather Tread of the new Goodyear Cord Tire.

Sugar at Home

Cane sugar for export is selling in New York for about 5 per cent less than the same kind and quality is bringing for domestic consumption, according to a trade journal. Sugar for export, it is reported, is offered at 7 40 to 7.45 cents a pound. This is equivalent to 9 15 to 9 20 cents a pound with the rebate of duty added. Quotations on fine granulated to the domestic wholesale trade range from 9.555 to 9.702 cents a pound.

The tariff of 1.7648 cents a pound on Cuban raw sugar and of 2 20 cents a pound on other foreign kinds give the sugar barons an opportunity to collect an exorbitant price from Americans while they meet competition in the rest of the world by selling at a less figure.

The water's fine at the pool—come on in.

A forest fire is reported from the Manzano mountains that destroyed fifty square miles of timber.

True Detective Stories

TEN YEARS LATER

Copyright by The Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

ONE of the first acts of William J. Flynn after taking charge of the New York office of the United States secret service was to order the arrest of two Italians, Vincenzo Lupo and Giuseppe Morello, on charges of manufacturing and passing counterfeit money. But the Sicilians, anticipating such a move, had taken care that their trails were well covered, and at the trial they produced a flock of witnesses who swore to alibis which effectually prevented a conviction.

As Morello and his companion passed out of the courtroom, after the case against them had been dismissed, Lupo remarked in a voice loud enough for Flynn to overhear: "Those pigs of American detectives haven't the brains to get the evidence they need. They'll never land us."

The man who later became the head of the secret service said nothing at the time.

It was three years before Flynn again came into contact with the two Italians, and again the federal forces had to be content with the losing end of the argument.

This time the case was the famous one of the "Morristown Fives"—five-dollar bills printed in precise imitation of the currency issued by the National Iron bank of Morristown, N. J. Flynn's men found that the trail led directly into "Little Italy" in New York, right up to the door of a grocery store owned by Giuseppe de Primo. But there, apparently, it disappeared into thin air.

Flynn investigated the matter very carefully from the outside, but the only suspicious circumstance that he could discover was that De Primo was importing a much larger quantity of olive oil than his business appeared to warrant. On account of the duty, olive oil is usually imported in barrels and then canned or bottled on this side—the empty cans being shipped from Italy ready for use.

Feeling certain that there must be some connection between the olive oil and the mysterious counterfeiters, Flynn first tapped several of the barrels consigned to De Primo. But these were filled to the brim with oil of the precise quality mentioned in the bills of lading. Then, merely to make certain that he had not neglected any possible angle of the case, the secret service man ripped open one of the boxes of "empty cans." Instantly the mystery was solved. The cans contained roll upon roll of the "Morristown Fives," manufactured in Italy.

In the roundup which followed this discovery, Lupo and Morello were gathered in by the government agents and charged with passing counterfeit money. It was a moral certainty that the two Sicilians had had a hand in the plot—in fact, Flynn suspected that they were the ring-leaders—but none of the others would implicate them, even to save themselves. De Primo and his associates went to the penitentiary, but Lupo and Morello walked out of the courtroom still sneering at the "brainless American detectives."

During the years that followed, counterfeiting operations and Black Hand murders, extortion and blackmail of all kinds were almost traced to Lupo and Morello—almost. Apparently they worked as far west as Chicago and south to New Orleans, but every time the police or the government agents started to close in on them, the pair slipped out through some legal loophole prepared in advance.

It was nine years after the original Lupo-Morello case that Flynn got wind of the fact that the Italian colony in New York was planning a big counterfeiting coup. The only thing lacking, according to the information which reached government headquarters, was a printer.

A few days later, a young Italian named Comito, who claimed to be a printing expert who had been forced to leave Italy on account of participation in a number of Mafia outrages, applied to Lupo for a position. The result was put through a grilling cross-examination, but Flynn had seen to it that he was supplied with the proper answers to all the questions, and it wasn't long before the secret service had an operative planted in the very heart of the counterfeit plot.

Comito reported that the gang was operating from a small farm near Highland, N. Y., and that thousands of dollars in spurious currency was ready to be released.

"But Lupo," he added, "is preparing to take a trip to Italy and won't be back until the spring."

"Very well," replied Flynn, "we can wait. Just lay low until he returns. Then we'll nail the whole bunch."

It was early in the following year—ten years after the first arrest and release of the Lupo-Morello combination—that the secret service sprung its trap and rounded up 15 Italians. During the trial which followed, physicians and other witnesses swore to alibis which had been previously prepared. But the government, aided by Comito's first-hand evidence and the testimony of the men who had been trailing the Italians, proved every point in its case, though it took the evidence of 300 people to do it.

As a result, Lupo and Morello went to the federal prison in Atlanta, Ga.

Hogs and Pork Chops

On the morning that hogs were selling in Chicago for $6.75 a hundred-weight, the price of pork chops in the Arcade Market (a building owned by the government) in Washington, was 48c a pound. A retail dealer in this market expressed the opinion that the retail price of pork in Washington was not likely to be materially affected by the decline in the price of hogs in Chicago.

The hog for which the farmer received $6.75 a hundredweight in Chicago would sell at retail in Washington—on the basis of present prices—at $25 a hundred pounds. The price of a hog at the farm is now only about $5.50 a hundredweight.

The Big Fourth

Next Wednesday will be the great American holiday—the 4th of July—and will be kept sacred wherever an American happens to find himself on that honored day.

The Fort Stanton Social Club has arranged to take care of all visitors to the Fort, where a number of sport events and a base ball game will be the attractions in the day time.

Some have arranged to go to Cloudcroft, where a three-day celebration will be held, backed by the Indians from the Reservation.

The Fourth being a legal holiday, the banks, post office, offices in courthouse and all business establishments in Carrizozo will be closed Wednesday.

Ziegler Bros. and the City Market are prepared to supply the picnickers with the choicest morsels for a Fourth of July luncheon.

Socorro Road Meeting

A delegation, comprised in five cars, from Capitan and Carrizozo attended the road meeting at Socorro Saturday. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the feasibility of early work on the road between here and Socorro.

Lincoln county pledged itself to take care of the road within its confines, whereas the county of Socorro agreed to make a levy covering the expense of the work in that county.

A long step forward has thus been made to link this section up with the highways of the Rio Grande valley.

An Enterprise that Merits Your Support

Notwithstanding the amount of shipping that is now lying idle in the harbors and at the docks of the United States, ocean travelers are still obliged to pay high rates for trans-Atlantic travel.

They visualized a new ocean steamship line, plying between Boston and European ports, controlled by the people, which would offer to these same people a chance for ocean travel on comfortable commodious ships at a price within the reach of all.

In spite of the failure of the Ship Subsidy Bill, in spite of the opposition which each new competitor in an established field encounters, this Company is bringing its plans to maturity.

This, surely, is an enterprise that merits your support. [See advertisement on page 4.]

Biloxi, Miss.—"I had, for a year or more, nervous indigestion, or some form of stomach trouble," says Mrs. Alonzo Ford, 1117 Clay Street, this city.

that nervous, tight feeling was going, as was the pain in my side. I found I did not have to take it every night. HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

THE KING OF LIARS

SO FAR as successful impostures are concerned, Giuseppe Balsamo, better known by his adopted title of "Count Cagliostro" was undoubtedly the most remarkable man the world has ever produced.

His first venture on a large scale was the invention of an "elixir of life," of which he sold many thousand bottles at fabulous prices.

When the success of the "elixir of life" appeared to be imperiled by the death of a number of persons who had taken it, Cagliostro hit upon the scheme of organizing Masonic lodges for women.

By virtue of his various impostures, Cagliostro was able to accumulate a large amount of money and, when he decided to move the headquarters of his influence to France, it was a matter of only a few days before he became the most talked of man in Paris.

After drifting about Europe for a number of years, the prince of impostors finally returned to Rome and was condemned by the pope to life imprisonment as a dangerous foe to religion.

The geography lesson was about to begin, and the subject of it was France. Accordingly the teacher started off with the question: "Now in this past terrible war who was our principal ally?"

"France," came the answer from a chorus of voices. "Quite right," said the teacher, beaming. "Now can any of you give me the name of a town in France?"

A small boy at the back of the class almost fell over in his eagerness to tell. "Somewhere," he said breathlessly. — Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Bulgarian Revolution Alarms All the Other Nations in the Balkans.

M. STAMBOULISKY IS KILLED

Chancellor Cuno Working on Compromise Proposition to France—President of China is Ousted—Ford's Alleged Plan to Throw Election into the House.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

How would you like to see the presidential election next year thrown into the house of representatives? This may result if Henry Ford carries out his reported plan of running, not as head of a third party, but as an independent with a ticket of electors in each state.

Once more the Balkans, the hotbed of European wars, are ablaze. Bulgaria is in the throes of a civil war; Yugoslavia, Greece and Rumania have rushed troops to the Bulgarian borders, and Hungary has called three classes to the colors so as to seize whatever advantage may be offered. The conflict may be confined within the limits of Bulgaria, or it may spread over much of central Europe and ultimately involve some of the great powers. Reserve officers of the Bulgarian army, with the assistance of the active army, carried out a coup d'etat by which Premier Stamboulisky and his agrarian government were ousted and a new ministry installed headed by Prof. Alexander Zankoff. Some of the ex-ministers were arrested, but Stamboulisky fled and at once began organizing and organizing the peasants for the purpose of recapturing Sofia and overthrowing the "usurping" government. Thursday evening he surrendered at Eleusich on condition that his life be spared, but a few hours later he was shot to death. The official report was that armed peasants attacked the automobile in which he was being taken to Slavovitsa and that he was killed by a guard while trying to escape. Probably it was the application of the "ley de fuego" so familiar in Mexico.

Stamboulisky had angered the old war party, notably pro-German, by his perception of Macedonian autonomy, his attitude at the Lausanne conference, his concessions to Yugoslavia and his failure to obtain a corridor to the sea. The new administration says the actual crisis was brought on by his recent demand on King Boris that he be appointed dictator. After his flight, it is said, huge sums of money were found in his villa. The king is believed to have been privy to the plot by which the government was overthrown.

Though Premier Zankoff's first act was to visit the Yugoslav embassy and give assurance that he would respect the old government's treaties, the Serbs are suspicious that he will encourage and aid the Macedonians in their demands on Yugoslavia, and this probably would bring on hostilities. The Serbian foreign minister is reported to have said that Serbia was willing to force the new Bulgarian government to observe the treaty of Neuilly and the stipulation of the Nish conference, which obligated Stamboulisky to oppose the Macedonian movement. Part of Macedonia is held by Greece, and both Greece and Rumania, as members of the little league, would be bound to stand with Yugoslavia.

There is not a great deal to be said concerning the Franco-German situation. To date Belgium has been unable to bring the French and the British to an accord that a joint allied force could be sent to Chancellor Cuno. Foch will not invade an inch from his demand that German passive resistance in the Ruhr must first be officially ended. Cuno and a minority of the British cabinet sympathize with him, but Premier Baldwin and most of his ministers are determined that Great Britain shall not be put in the position of appearing to approve of the French adventure in the Ruhr.

German Foreign Minister von Rosenburg is said to be trying to work out a compromise proposition. His government would express its willingness to drop passive resistance during the opening of negotiations with France if assured the French would evacuate the Ruhr when satisfactory terms were reached and if amnesty were granted political offenders imprisoned or expelled by the French. Under the plan the German railway men in the Ruhr would resume their duties and the workers in the Rhineland would do their work under supervision of the French engineers. It is admitted in Berlin that the passive resistance is weakening because living conditions in the occupied region are becoming impossible. Meanwhile, stimulated by the nationalist societies, the Germans in the Ruhr are renewing their campaign of sabotage and violence. Within a week they have killed three French soldiers and wrecked several trains. The natural result is the sterner application of restrictive measures by the French. Eleven Germans have been killed for disobeying orders; some of them disregarded the curfew hour established in various towns where there was disorder.

Americans interested in the Chester concessions have learned with some dismay of a combination designed to control trade with Turkey, signed at Lausanne by Rustem Bey, representing Leslie Urquhart and a group of British banks, and Sherif Bey, representing a new Turkish syndicate. The combination, which is capitalized for $10,000,000, will begin operations as soon as peace is signed, and its Turkish charter is so broad it can embark in any business. The Urquhart group embraces most of the big London banks, which have bought control of the Anatolia railway from the German-Swiss interests, and most of the British corporations engaged in business in Turkey before the war. The financial backing of the group is almost unlimited.

With impressive ceremony the world court established by the League of Nations opened on Friday at The Hague, in the Carnegie peace palace. It publicly proclaimed its independence of the league, but for the present its clerical work is being done by men and women sent from the league's headquarters in Geneva. Three cases were on the agenda for the session. The first is the dispute between Finland and Russia concerning the autonomy of East Karelia, but Russia has denied the court's competence, saying the affair is an internal matter. The second, concerning the expulsion of German nationals from Poland, probably will not be contested by the Berlin government. The third case involves Germany's right to bar from the Kiel canal, in March, 1921, a British ship which was carrying French war munitions to Poland at the time of the Russian attack on Warsaw.

It would take more than a Philadelphia lawyer to figure out the situation in China and make clear its complexities. After his cabinet quit him, President Li Yuan-hung fled to Tientsin, where soldiers held him prisoner in his train until he formally resigned. The functions of the government at Peking were undertaken after a fashion by representatives of five ministries who requested Premier Chang to return and resume his office. Li was virtually driven from Peking by Feng Yu-shan, the "Christian general."

All the foreign captives of the Chinese bandits have been released and are again with their friends. By the "compromise" agreement with the outlaws 2,000 of them are to be enrolled in the army and they were paid $85,000.

and a way out. Already it has been informally suggested that treaties be made with each foreign nation by which the United States would be given the right of search within twelve miles of its coast in return for modification of the dry ship rule. What would be the attitude of other governments toward such a proposition is not known, but the comment of the British press is decidedly unfavorable. Anyhow, it is admitted in Washington that this plan does not offer an early solution of the problem, for senate ratification of the treaties would be necessary and the senate does not convene until December.

MR. LASKER, retiring chairman of the shipping board, received the O. K. of President Harding for the trial trip of the Lovthian with its 600 invited guests, and the Republicans who decried the affair as a useless and expensive junket have fallen silent. Not so the Democrats, however. Their national committee already has fulminated against the trip, and probably it will be kept alive as campaign material. There, if anywhere, lies its inadvisability.

IN HIS final report to the President, Mr. Lasker recommends the creation of eighteen subsidiary corporations, each to control one of the consolidated ship routes, as the basis of government operation of the federal merchant marine in case the efforts to transfer the ships to private operation finally fail. The government must assume complete control, Mr. Lasker declares, the system of operation agents having proved in his opinion a "vicious one," resulting in the placing of its "terminal facilities and the good will of its lines" in outside hands. He expresses the opinion, however, that government operation should always be with a view to ultimate sale to private owners.

The chairman numbered among the material results of his administration: Settlement of claims aggregating $200,000,000 for "12 cents on the dollar" and reduction of current deficit from $10,000,000 to $4,000,000 a month. At the end of the fiscal year, he says, the board will have $125,000,000 on deposit in the treasury against $4,000,000 when he took office. This sum is believed to be sufficient for the board construction financing, the report says.

HENRY FORD, it is now reported, is going to make the race for the presidency all by himself instead of as the head of a third party ticket. He is quoted as saying: "There will be four tickets in the 1924 election: The Republican ticket, the Democratic ticket, a third party ticket and the Henry Ford Independent ticket. No candidate is likely to get a majority of the electoral vote and the election probably will be thrown into the house of representatives."

There are 531 votes in the electoral college, and if the two old parties are fairly evenly matched in the 1924 election and the third or the Ford ticket won one large, state or two or three smaller ones no candidate would have a majority and the election would be thrown into the house of representatives of the Sixty-eighth congress. In this case the Constitution provides that the house shall choose the President from the candidates, not exceeding three, receiving the highest number of electoral votes. In making this choice, however, the house is required to vote by states, each state delegation having one vote, determined by a majority of the members of the delegation. A quorum shall be one or more members from each of two-thirds of the states, and a majority of all states shall be necessary to a choice. Thus at least 25 votes would be required to elect.

It happens that in the next house there are only 28 state delegations whose majority is Republican and 20 state delegations whose majority is Democratic, while five delegations are evenly divided between Republicans and Democrats would not be able to cast a vote. To effect an election it would be necessary for members in pivotal state delegations to repudiate party affiliations or absent themselves from the balloting. If there were a deadlock, and Ford were one of the three highest in the electoral college, he might conceivably be chosen by the house as a compromise.

Sports Clothes to Complete Wardrobe

Country club frocks—the sports clothes de luxe—have come to be a certain set portion of the American woman's wardrobe. She cannot hope to be well dressed, asserts a fashion authority in the New York Times, without a stated supply of them, for they are the outdoor things that are most popular for the moment, and that promise to keep a permanent place in American fashions for all time.

The beauty about these informal clothes is that they can be worn without too much corseting and too many dress-up frills. Whether they are so maner. The yoke, which is made of the plain yellow material, extends into a long, under-arm section and the bottom of the skirt is finished with another plain area.

Prints Are in the Lead. Cretonne prints of all sorts and conditions have taken position in the leading summer styles. It does not matter whether you resurrect your grandmother's shawl or take a piece of wood-blocked linen chair covering or utilize a strip of calico in extremely ornate design, the fact remains that you must be "patterned" in some particular in order to fit in with the present styles. Some girls can stand the dress made entirely of a conspicuously patterned and colored print and others find it necessary to supplement their wild designs with some plain frock. So the one who wears the printed coat has decided to have a plain frock to subdue in some degree the startling quality of the material from which her coat is made.

The skirt of the frock has three tiers according to the latest and most popular style for dresses of this character. The material is one of those rough, imported ratines that can be made to keep a flat line and that works up wonderfully into a skirt of the sort indicated. The frock is one-piece, the bodice being one that is made along simple kimono lines and then the whole dress, which is a light tan color, is bound with a flat silk black braid that gives it form and finish. The coat then is made of one of those very brilliant blocked linens which has tan for its background, but which is so completely covered with an all-over design in bright colors that it takes on a conglomerate color appearance which throws it neither into one class nor the other. If, too, is bound with the black silk braid to give it a finish which corresponds to that of the dress itself.

Coats Displacing Sweaters. You will find that coats of this type are taking the place of sweaters for afternoon and all more dressy sorts of sports wear. They are most becoming and they have found an ardent reception among the outdoor enthusiasts, especially those women who do not care to go in for the more mannish sort of attire. They constitute a happy medium between the strictly sweater type of thing and the more fluffy sort of clothes which have become taboo for all except strictly evening wear.

The accessories for these semi-sports clothes are all important matters, for unless the right sort of shoes, stockings, bracelets and parasols are chosen for accompanying interest, there is no use to think that the gown itself will be a distinct success.

Shoes should be flat with heels that hardly show they are heels. They are strapped sometimes, and again they are left quite plain. Others of them are made in Oxford style with applications of one leather upon another. Some women are choosing to wear the colored shoes with dresses that are expressly designed for wear with them, but for the conservative woman there plain that they are mannish, or whether they take on the more feminine lines of softness, they still dress the woman in the semi-formal character that she loves best, and for which the demands of her present life call for persistently.

The fact is that so thoroughly satisfactory have sports clothes become that they fit into many occasions of our lives when we are not really carrying out any sporting activities. That is, for summer and any semi-formal wear these things fit in so beautifully that we just naturally adopt them without giving a thought to whether or not they are right according to any old-fashioned standards.

Then, all of the modern materials are so constituted that they make dresses of this character in the most efficient way. For frocks of this type they are neither too thick nor too thin. They are substantial enough to disregard petticoats altogether, and still they have enough of the light, summery appearance to fit them into the exigencies of any summer wardrobe. The deduction, then, is that one layer of semi-thin material is cooler by far than several layers of very much thinner fabrics.

We are considering, then, the everyday dress in all of its various ramifications. Nothing for evening enters into our present calculations, but we take in all that goes between early morning and late afternoon, excluding only the actual clothes for rough sports wear, which after all are in an entirely different classification.

The calico dress, or the gingham one, which is its sister, fills an important place in these general sports clothes. The calicoes are perfected to so great a degree that they are inspirational in their very beings. They show the brightest and most interesting colors along with the designs that appeal to the heart of every woman. Now, some of the designs which are made for this material employ it as the basis for the whole dress, and others of them use only a portion of this calico, while the rest is helped out with areas of plain and unfigured material. A frock of the latter type is very interesting. There is a calico print of yellow and black making up the figured portion of the dress, and then there is a portion of plain yellow linen which constitutes the plain portion of the costume. Since the yellow section is outlined with a fancy stitching of black wool and since the girdle is made of a black grosgrain ribbon, you will see that the two portions of the frock are sufficiently tied together and that they are brought into is much chance of failure if she pretends to indulge in the colored shoes. She had better stick to the standard black, gray and tan things if she wishes to achieve the effect the most desired.

Little Stockings Favored. They are wearing little stockings. They look almost like silk, but somehow or other they are much smarter in appearance. They are thin—most of them, and they are made in grays and tans, but, with the heavier sorts of sports clothes they look much more in keeping than either the transparent silk ones or the woolen ones, which are not so by far as they are brought

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

Now Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Washington, D. C.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound saved me from an operation which a physician said I would have to have for a very bad case of female trouble. My system was all run down for two years after my little girl was born. Then I read of your wonderful medicine and decided to try it. I could hardly drag one foot after the other, and after taking six bottles of the Vegetable Compound I felt like a new woman. I now do all my housework, also washing and ironing, and do not know what real trouble is. My health is fine, and I weigh 140 pounds. When I started taking it I weighed 97 pounds. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any one who is suffering from female trouble or is run down. You may use this testimonial for I am only too glad to let suffering women know what the Vegetable Compound did for me."—Mrs. IDA HEWITT, 1623 Penna. Ave. S.E., Washington, D.C.

Such letters from women in every section of this country prove beyond question the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Metal Resists Tarnish and Corrosion. Following the discovery of a non-tarnishable silver, reported recently in the London Daily Mail, comes the news of a white metal which resists both tarnish and corrosion, and has a remarkably deep and brilliant luster when polished.

The day appears to have come when the chemist, by skillfully alloying his metals, can make them resist the ravages of impure air produced by modern industrial conditions. The new white metal, which, it is stated, can be produced at a price within everybody's reach, has good casting qualities and is both malleable and ductile.

SELLERS AND CARK

SYNOPSIS.—Cruising with his friend, Sir William Skelton, on the yacht Dryad, on the Bahama bank, Bobby Rattcliffe, wealthy, twenty-two and impressionable, becomes disenchanted with conditions on board. The arrival of a small fishing boat attracts his attention and he visits her, finding the vessel is the Sarah Tyler, owned and sailed by Satan Tyler and his sister Jude, the latter in the costume and having the manners and appearance of a boy. Following a quarrel with Skelton, Rattcliffe accepts the invitation of the Tylers to join them on their boat. Skelton in vain tries to get him to change his mind. Rattcliffe learns of buried treasure. He gets acquainted with the Tylers and finds them entertaining.

"He's been huntin' for us," said Satan, "course him!"

"Who is he?" asked Rattcliffe.

"Friend of Pap's, he was—"

"Pretended to be," put in Jude.

"Spanish," continued Satan, "and ever since Pap gave out he's been pretty much on our heels. Jude and me worked the thing out and we came to conclude he'd scented, somehow, from Pap, about the hooker I spoke of."

"The wreck?"

"Yep. Pap was keen on gettin' extra money into the business of salvagin' her, and I b'lieve he sounded Carquinez—that's his name—and how much he let out takin' his soundin' the Lord only knows! Cark's in the tobacco line. Does a bit of everythin'—has a shop in the Calle Pedro in Havana and a gambler's joint on the front, owns ships. That's one of them, and Matt Sellers runs her for him. He don't trouble-handlin' her; sits in the cabin all day smokin' cigarettes."

"He's been after us ever since Pap died," said Jude, "on and off."

"Cark believes Pap found that stuff and cashed it—that's what he believes, or my name's not Tyler," declared Satan.

"Well, let's get aboard," said Jude. "If they see us squinting here, they'll maybe think the stuff's hid here."

"They've seen us by this, though it's too far for them to make out who we are," said Satan, pushing his panama farther forward to hide his face. He led the way to where the boats were on the sand, and they re-embarked.

The abalones were got on board, and then they stood watching the approach of the stranger.

As she dropped anchor and swung her moorings broadside on to the Sarah, the rake of her masts became apparent, and her whole disreputableness spoke aloud.

Rattcliffe felt like a man who, having got into pleasant low company, suddenly finds himself drawn into unpleasant low company.

The Tylers and the old Sarah were all right, but this new crowd and that ratty old schooner he felt to be all wrong. And the newcomer somehow did not add honesty or moral stability to the appearance of the Sarah, nor did the half-disclosed character and activities of Cark shed luster on old man Tyler or his present representatives.

Satan had covered the heap of abalones with some sailcloth, and he was standing now working his lantern jaws on a bit of chewing gum, his eyes fixed on the stranger as though she were made of glass and he could see Carquinez sitting smoking his cigarettes in the cabin.

"They haven't shown a sign," said Jude.

"They're bluffin' us to believe they haven't spotted who we are," said Satan. "Cark doesn't want us to twig he's been lookin' for us."

"Well," said Jude, "let's get the mud-hook up and put out right away. They won't have the face to chase us."

"Yes," said Satan, "and leave them to hunt the island and find the cache! They've seen us ashore among the bushes. You shouldn't have gone ashore."

"I went to see we hadn't left no tracks."

"Traces be d—d! Cark wants no traces. Once he starts to hunt, he'll turn the darned island upside down and shake it. No, we've got to sit here till he goes, and that'll be this time next year, maybe."

"What's the name of Carquinez's schooner?" asked Rattcliffe.

"The Juan Bango," replied Satan, "named after the tobacco company people. Look, they're gettin' a boat off. That's Sellers, and he's comin' aboard."

Then he collapsed, squatting under the bulwarks. "Guy them," said he to Jude. "Tell them I'm down with smallpox; that'll make them shove."

"Leave 'em to me," said Jude.

It was Matt Sellers' right enough, a big wheezy man suggestive of Tammany Hall, but a more-energetic soldier in Like old man Tyler, Sellers had no use for people who talked of buried treasure, he knew the Caribbean and the Gulf too well.

If he was keen on the wreck business, then it was because he had excellent reasons for his keenness.

As the boat drew near, Rattcliffe noticed the villainous-looking crew, Spaniards, some of them with red handkerchiefs tied round their heads.

CHAPTER IV

Jude Overdoes It

"Hullo, kid!" cried Sellers as the boat came alongside the Sarah.

"Hullo, yourself," replied Jude.

"Where've you blown in from?"

"What's become of Satan? Ain't he aboard?" asked Sellers, ignoring the question.

"Satan's dead," said Jude. "Died of the smallpox."

"Well, I'm d—d!" said Sellers, casting his eyes over the Sarah and then resting them on Rattcliffe. "When was it?"

"A week ago."

Sellers gave a word to the boy oar and the boat pushed off a bit, the fellows hanging on their oars.

"I thought I saw three of you on deck," he shouted.

"The other chap's gone below," replied Jude.

The boat of the Juan hung for a moment as if in meditation. Then without a word more she turned back to the Juan.

Satan in the scupper seemed preparing to have a fit.

"What's the matter now?" asked Jude.

"What's the matter? What did you say I was dead for? Didn't I tell you to say I was down with smallpox?"

"Well, what's the difference?"

"Why, you mutt, wouldn't you have been snivellin' and cryin' if I was dead? And you handed that yarn out to him as 'em as if you were talking of a tomcat! I didn't believe you myself."

"Why, I told him you was dead a week," cried Jude. "D'you think I'd be snivellin' and cryin' a week if you was dead? Lord! what you do think of yourself!"

Satan did not reply. He was thinking that he had made a false move and that Jude had put the cap on the business. Cark would be certain now that there was something hidden on the island.

Satan was on the horns of a dilemma. One horn was the cache of provisions containing a couple of thousand dollars' worth of stuff, the other horn was the old wreck that might contain nothing.

To hang on here was useless, for Cark would hang on, too. Even if Cark went away, he would be sure to come back to hunt.

He sat with his back to the bulwarks, chewing and thinking. Then, heedless whether he was seen or not from the Juan Bango, he rose to his feet and leaned with his back against the rail. He had come to a decision. Jude, watching him, said nothing, and Rattcliffe waited without a word.

It was to Rattcliffe that Satan spoke first.

"Look here!" said Satan. "You're standing out of this, aren't you?"

"Which—the wreck business?"

"Yep. You're not keen upon puttin' money into it and havin' a share?"

"Oh, no. If you wanted me to, I'd be glad enough; but if you'd rather I stood out, I'll do so. I'm not keen about money, anyway; only I'd like to see the fun."

"You'll see fun enough," said Satan. "I'm fun to drag Cark in. First of all, if I don't, he'll keep hangin' round here and sniff the cache; second, he'll work the job for us with his crew. We've got to get help, and isn't he as good as another? If there's no stuff there, he'll have all his work for nothing. If he hadn't sighted us here, he'd have tried Little Pine Island, which is lousier than this place. You see he's got it in his noodle, as far as I can make out, that Pap hid the stuff and cashed it, and we were out to lift it for good. Well, he'll do the liftin' if it's to be done. Come on, I'm going over to see him right off. Jude, you stick here and clean up them abalones."

He got into the dinghy, followed by Rattcliffe, and they pushed off.

Sellers was hanging over the rail as they came alongside. "Hullo, Satan!" he cried. "Thought you was dead."

"Cark on board?" asked Satan without wasting time on explanations. "He's down below," said Sellers, accepting the attitude of the other. "Who's your friend?"

"Oh, just a gentleman that's come along for a cruise," said Satan. "So you've found me!"

"Seems so," said Sellers, "but tie up and come aboard."

Satan tied the painter to a channel plate and got over the side, followed by Rattcliffe.

From the fore'sle came the muffled thrumming of a guitar. It was Rattcliffe's first experience with a Spaniard. He followed Satan, who followed Sellers down a steep companionway and then into a cabin where a great shaft of sunlight from the skylight above struck down through a haze of cigarette smoke.

The place was paneled with bird's-eye maple; the seats were upholstered in thick-ribbed silk, worn and stained; the carpet was of the best, but threadbare in spots and burnt with cigar droppings; the metal fittings far too good for a trading schooner of the Juan type.

Everywhere lay evidence of splendor that had seen better days.

All these fittings had, in fact, been torn out of a yacht bought by Carquinez for an old song, and at the end of the saloon table, going over some papers with a cigarette in his mouth, sat Carquinez himself, a figure to give one pause.

The whole of the left side of this gentleman's face was covered by a green patch. It was said that he had no left side to his face, that it had been eaten away by disease, and that, were he to unweave himself, the sight would frighten the beholder. However that may have been, what remained visible was enough to frighten any honest man with eyes to behold the nose of a vulture above the peaked chin of a money changer.

"Hullo, Cark!" said Satan. "Come in," said Cark. "What'll you have?"

"Oh, I don't know," said Satan. "Something soft will suit us, and long."

Carquinez raised a bird's-shrill voice: "Antonio!"

"Si Signor," came a response from outside, and on the voice a dusky form at the cabin door.

"Bring us two Zin and Zinzibers for these two gentlemen, please."

"No gin," cried Satan, Rattcliffe concurring. "Ginger beer will do."

"Zinzibers," said Carquinez.

It was nearly all that he said at this interview, the trusty Sellers doing the talking.

Said Sellers to Satan, "Well, it's funny us hittin' on you like this, darned funny! We'd been down to Acklin looking up a location Cark was keen about, and comin' back; I shifted the helm, seen you lying here and not recognizin' the old Sarah. I thought it was Gundyman's boat."

Said Satan, taking up the drink just presented by Antonio, "Here's our respects to you both. Thought I was Gundyman, did you? Well, I spotted you on sight. Didn't want to see you, neither. Let's cut pretendin' and play on the square—are you willin'?"

"None better."

"Well, I'll put my cards out. You and Cark here have been after me pretty near since last fall; reason why, that wreck Pap told Cark of."

"Which was that?"

"I said Cark's cut pretendin' and play fair," said Satan sternly.

Cark wilted and raised his fingers in deprecation, and Sellers cut in.

"Yes, we'll play fair. There was talk of a wreck between your dad and us, and I'm not denyin' we had an eye after it. You see I'm open and honest with you. Heave ahead."

"I'm comin' to the point," said Satan, "and the point is you and Cark between you have got it in your heads that you've only to follow me, find out where she's located, and claim shares for not tellin'. Well, you've got it wrong. You may follow me till the old Juan rots to pieces and you'll never know, not if I don't want you to know—got that clear?"

"Clear as day," said Sellers.

"Well, then, here's something else. If that wreck is what she's taken to be, it's more than one man's job to shift the noodle and bank it. I've got to have help, and if we can arrange a deal I'd just as soon have you two in the show as anyone else."

"Now you're talkin'," said Sellers. "Not that I don't believe you'd kidoodle me over the business if you had a chance," continued Satan. "You would, sure; but you see I've got the weather gauge of you, knowin' what I do of you, and that's more'n I'd have with strangers."

"Sure," said Sellers.

"Holt and Rattcliffe—should think I did know them!"

Progress on American Hospital at Neuilly

The new memorial hospital building at Neuilly, a gift of Americans to Paris, is rapidly taking tangible form. The work is so far advanced that a fairly accurate idea of the completed structure can be gained by inspection.

Honor Heroes in Champagne

Monument to Be Placed in Middle of Sector Where Many Soldiers Fell

Paris.—A war memorial in which Americans will be deeply interested (for many American soldiers fought in the region on which it is to be placed) is the colossal monument to be erected on the Champagne front. It is to be built in the middle of the Champagne sector, on what was known in the war bulletins as the Navarin Farm, ten kilometers north of Sulpes and six kilometers south of Somme-Py.

The sculptor is Maximo Real del Sarte, a soldier who lost his left arm on the battlefield. He has designed a heroic three-figure group—one a light infantryman, one a grenadier and one a machine gunner (the last an American)—which will stand on a pyramid and be visible fifteen miles around. The three soldiers are in a posture of attack. The names of all the Champagne regiments will be inscribed on the sides of the pyramid.

General Gouraud in Charge.

The enterprise is in charge of General Gouraud, commander on this front in 1918. The honorary committee is composed of President Millerand, Premier Poincare, Minister of War Maginot, Ambassador Herrick and all the French marshals. On the main committee are all the generals who commanded in Champagne, the prefect of the Marne, the archbishop of Chalons and all the former chiefs of staffs of the armies of Champagne.

General Gouraud recently addressed to the public a moving appeal for support of the memorial undertaking. In it he said:

"Among the customs which all civilized peoples, and even barbarous ones, have observed, none is more general and worth respect than that of honoring soldiers who died on the field of battle.

"France has not failed in this duty. Already from one end of the fighting line to the other monuments are being erected. At Notre Dame de Lorette and at Rancourt-Bouchavesnes, for the bloody battles of the Yser, and of Lorette and of the Somme; at the Haute-Chevannes, for the hard battles of the Argonne; at Dormans, for the two great battles which, in 1914 and 1918, checked the tide of invasion; at Douaumont, for the heroic battle of Verdun; at Hartmannswillerkopf, for all the combats in the Vosges.

"But in this immense line the part called the Champagne front in the communiques, and which ran from Moronvilliers to the Bois de Gruerie, is empty. It still awaits a monument worthy of the hundreds of thousands of dead who watered it with their blood."

Battles in Champagne.

"Not only has the Champagne front been marked by continuous and often violent combats; not only were the guns never silent there, but the fatal gas waves were constant in their flow. But five of the most important battles of the war were fought there: The first battle of Champagne, of February-March, 1915, the first offensive in the grand style after the Battle of the Marne; the second battle of Champagne, the big offensive of September 25, 1915, leading us to hope so strongly that we could capture the hills of Moronvilliers, which was one of the most brilliant successes of the offensive of April, 1917; the third battle of Champagne, in which the Forty-second American division took part, and which on July 16, 1918, stopped short the last German drive and was the turning point of the war; finally, the fourth battle of Champagne, carrying on September 26, 1918, the old fortified front of the enemy to a depth of 17 kilometers, and continuing its successes, in which the Second and Thirty-sixth American divisions took part, and which, from September 20 to November 11, 1918, carried our flags to the Meuse, to Mezieres and to Sedan.

"Was it possible to leave this glorious Champagne front without a monument worthy of the valor of those who fell there and of their sacrifice? "Many officers and soldiers who fought there do not think so."

High Cost Holds Up Building Operations

New York.—Building operations to the extent of $700,000,000 are being held up here because of high and uncertain prices, Christian G. ### Dr. Hugh McGovern Succeeds in Penetrating Himalayas

Lhasa.—Dr. Hugh McGovern, the Irish Buddhist priest, who recently succeeded in penetrating the world's greatest rampart of mountains, the Himalayas, behind which lies the forbidden city of Lhasa, has just returned to Darjeeling after having been arrested by British frontier authorities for violating Tibet's sacred ground.

The doctor reports that in his attempts to get into Lhasa he and his four companions suffered intense privations and exposure in the snow-capped mountains, which are 500 feet higher than the highest peaks in the United States.

After battling with snow storms day and night and being compelled more than once to retrace his steps, McGovern at Lhasa was confronted with a strike of his servants, who refused to go further. He had to beat them into submission before they would resume the journey.

FLIGHT OF BIRDS BEING STUDIED BY GOVERNMENT

Department of Agriculture Issues Bulletin, Giving Data

Washington.—Sportsmen, ornithologists and others interested in bird migration and the protection of game birds will find information of value in a new United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin, 1145, "Migration Records from Wild Ducks and Other Birds Banded in the Salt Lake Valley, Utah," by Alexander Wetmore, assistant biologist, bureau of biological survey.

Bands were placed on 1,241 individuals of 23 species of birds, the majority on wild ducks of 9 species. Returns were received from 12 species. Of these, 185 birds were retaken out of 1,196 banded.

More extensive bodies of water are closed by ice. Such birds pass north in suitable localities as far as the Snake river in Idaho. The majority of green-winged teal, cinnamon teal and spoonbills seem to leave Utah to winter in California. Part of the pintails, after leaving Utah, go to California to winter in the interior valleys, while others cross to the great plains and go to the Gulf coast in Texas. The spring migration carries the latter birds northward through the plains again, and eastward as far as western Missouri and north at least into southern Canada.

Details concerning the returns on gadwalls, redheads, white-faced geese, blue-winged teal, snowy plovers, American coots and a double-crested cormorant are included in the bulletin.
