R. C. Sowder Resigns

R. C. Sowder, of this county, tendered his resignation as a member of the State Highway Commission to Governor Hinkle, which was accepted. Mr. Sowder's letter of resignation and the filing is herewith given:

Carrizozo, N. M., Dec. 1, 1923.

Gov. James F. Hinkle,
Santa Fe, N. M.

Dear Governor: I find that it is necessary to give all of my personal attention to my ranches and other personal interests, so I have decided to ask you to accept my resignation as one of the highway commissioners of New Mexico, to take effect at once.

With kind personal regards,
I remain,
Yours very truly,
R. C. Sowder.

Accepted this 4th day of December, 1923.

J. F. Hinkle,
Governor.

Mr. Sowder was chairman of the commission, and in that capacity it is alleged that he purchased a new car at state expense and also a quantity of used road equipment of the state. This responsibility, however, according to reports given out, has been assumed by the State Engineer, James A. French, who is credited with the assertion that he purchased the car in order to give the chairman and members a better opportunity to get out and give more attention to the roads. Be that as it may, much adverse criticism has resulted, all of which, no doubt, had something to do with Mr. Sowder's resignation.

Find Fairyland in Arctic Region

Explorers Mapping Valley Area Covered With Grass and Flowers.

Washington.—What may prove the future fairyland of the far North is being placed on maps of the United States for the first time.

It is a long, narrow valley, or succession of valleys, shadowed on both sides by snow-covered mountains, where ever mile after mile of level country rich herdsgrass grows five feet tall, where a rainbow-like profusion of flowers extends in ribbons along the foothills, and from which even wandering Indian families have been driven by a superstitious fear.

The existence of this country was unrecorded and hardly suspected until two parties of explorers from the United States geological survey, made up of Washington men, entered it with pack horses early this summer. The leaders of both parties, R. H. Sargeant, 3758 McKinley street N. W., and Richard A. Lyut, 1815 Lawrence street N. E., have returned full of enthusiasm over the wonderland of the North and are engaged in making exact topographical records of the territory.

First White Men to Explore.

With one exception they are perhaps the first white men ever to have entered the country. One lone prospector has built a cabin at the upper end of the valley, where he is guarding, year after year, a copper claim.

The country lies at the extreme northwestern base of the Alaska peninsula. It is less than 100 miles overland from that section of the territory which is most familiar to tourists, the barren coastline surrounded by the Aleutian islands. Numerous ships skirt the shore, but the prospect is so unenticing that none suspect what lies beyond the desolate coast.

Mr. Sargeant led his party into the valley from the north. Mr. Lyut went in from the south, making his way northward through the famous "Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes," the two pairs of scientific men along the way and coming together somewhere in the center. Once the mountain range was crossed the two parties were as much cut off from mankind as if they were on another planet. During the entire summer they did not meet a human being or barely a trace of any who had gone before.

Each party carried its entire supplies, food, tents, blankets, over the mountains on its pack horses.

Silence Held Supernatural.

The valley is one of almost supernatural silence. Just prominently above it looms the volcano Katmai, which has the reputation of being the most active in the whole North. The explorers claim, however, that it gradually is becoming quieter. Its frequent eruptions long before frightened away the Indians.

The country is well watered. Mountain streams thunder through it at almost regular intervals. It has a considerable stock of game. The explorers met frequently with the Kodiak bear, the largest creature of the species. Mr. Lyut killed one. These creatures dominate the valley, feeding on the smaller animals and on the great herds of caribou, which take advantage of the excellent grazing.

The explorers report the Kodiak as a comparatively inoffensive animal, which will fight only when very hungry or when wounded. They have become so accustomed to their supremacy in the country, however, that they show no fear of man.

Speak in Praise of Climate.

Mr. Sargeant and Mr. Lyut praise the country particularly for its climate. The grass was so thick that the packhorses barely nibbled the tops. In especially favored places it grew eight feet high.

The two mountain ranges cut off fierce winds, which sweep the coastline, but the valley still is very windy at times. This is held partly responsible for the absence of large trees.

There are, however, very thick groves of alnus alders. The explorers found travel through these like penetrating the dense South American jungles.

The explorers found some evidence which may indicate oil in the valley. There is some trace of copper in the surrounding mountains. The territory is about 150 miles long by 50 miles wide, making approximately 7,500 square miles added to the map of the United States.

FINE GIFT FROM LONDON

LOST $200 RESTORED TO OWNER AFTER 3 YEARS

Post Office Department Locates Man After Long Search.

New York.—How $200 in currency traveled back and forth in the mails for three years looking for its owner, and it finally reached him, is told in a recent post office publication. The loss occurred in Milwaukee, the loser being a subject after his vaudeville performer. That was in 1920 and the bills were in a wallet, but in a Department store in that city. The wallet contained $200, besides a lot of personal papers.

It would appear, says the post office paper, that whoever found the wallet took out for himself or herself all bills in excess of $200 and then placed the wallet with the remainder of the money in a small paper box, and this box, wrapped very loosely in a single thickness of ordinary wrapping paper, secured by a light piece of string, was offered at the post office for mailing. It bore the address of the owner of the wallet.

When the package was offered at the post office for mailing, as parcel-post packages are required to be, the receiving clerk evidently requested the sender to write his or her name and address upon it, as required for parcel-post packages, but, instead of complying with this request, the sender wrote upon the package the name of a store, without local address, and then deposited the package to go forward in the mails.

The owner of the wallet had removed from the address in question by the time the package reached its destination and, as there at the address had forgotten his new one, delivery could not be effected. As a result, the package was marked as undeliverable and twice was sent to the store name which had been written on the package in lieu of the correct name and address, but as this proved to be fictitious, the package was finally sent to the division of dead letters.

Opened in the dead letter office, the $200 was found. Using the address on the other letterhead, a determined effort was made to locate the addressee. He was traced across the continent and even to Germany, and eventually he was located through information obtained from a relative, when delivery was effected. The post office has never been able to find out who found the wallet or who mailed it to the owner.

"Apparently," says the writer, "the finder, though obtaining $40 as a reward, which he could by honest and safe conjecture, for he could have retained all of the money as well as that part of it."

U. S. Wars on Rodents.

Approximately 62,800 acres in New Mexico were treated during August for the control of destructive rodents. The work was done by the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture and co-operating state forces. As a typical result of this poisoning campaign in one three-acre tract which was treated in the Black Lake district, 252 dead prairie dogs of the white-tailed species were found. This species of prairie dog is very difficult to poison.

First Certified Seed Grown by Boy.

The first seed potatoes to be certified in Wyoming were grown some three years ago by a Niobrara county farm boy belonging to one of the boys' clubs conducted by the county agricultural extension agent, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture. The success of this boy and other club members, it is felt, has contributed much toward inducing farmers in Niobrara county to undertake the growing of certified seed potatoes, now a profitable phase of farming in this dry land county. A county certified potato growers' association has been organized to aid in handling the product. About 100,000 bushels of inspected potatoes were produced in the county in 1922, some 40,000 bushels of which were certified for seed.

Health and good looks

—the reward of internal cleanliness

HEALTH and good looks go hand in hand. If you do not keep clean internally, your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks, and insomnia—each of which saps your health and vitality. Soon much more serious conditions follow.

Good Looks Throughout Life If You Keep Clean Internally

In constipation, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives Aggravate Constipation

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Medical science, through knowledge of the intestinal tract gained by X-ray observation, has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation.

Physicians Favor Lubrication

The lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Not a Medicine

Nujol is not a laxative and cannot gripe. Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world.

Chesterton Demands More Than Reading

Don't give disease a start. Adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. Nujol is not a medicine. Like pure water, it is harmless. Take Nujol as regularly as you brush your teeth or wash your face. For sale by all druggists.

NEW JERSEY COAST LINE SINKING INTO THE SEA?

Scientists Say Disturbances on Ocean Bottom Is Responsible.

New York.—Although only the waves are near enough to see just what is happening, great doings are reported from the bottom of the Atlantic ocean. The ocean floor is being thrown up into immense hills or mountains in some places, while in other places it is being depressed into deep basins. That accounts, in the opinion of scientists, for several earthquakes in mid-ocean, as reported by captains who recently crossed the Atlantic, for tremors along the American coast and for the gradual sinking of the whole New Jersey coast line.

Shocks felt along the Jersey coast which recently caused scenes of persons to rush out of hotel rooms and which kept the police in various towns answering questions as to reported explosions were explained by Waldo Dale, director of the weather bureau at Atlantic City, as being caused by the sliding of the ocean bed.

His opinion is concurred in by Dr. Frederick W. Sohon, in charge of the seismic station in Fordham university. "We do not know just what is occurring on the bottom of the Atlantic, but obviously it is something important," said Doctor Sohon. "There is a continuous adjustment. The heavy sides of the earth are sinking where there is not sufficient resistance to retain them. That accounts for the tremors or jerks. It is well known that the Jersey coast is gradually sinking. How many years it will take to submerge it probably would not be safe to predict."

Dr. Harrald Moyerhoff, psychologist of Columbia university, was inclined to doubt that any unusual changes were taking place in the formation of the Atlantic's bottom. He said it was one part of the sub-ocean world which had been pretty well settled.

Finds Radio Sleep Helpful to Students

Washington.—The "learn while you sleep" system of radio instruction received credit from the Navy department for the fact every student at the Pensacola air station had made a satisfactory mark.

Notwithstanding controversy over the efficiency of the system, under which students go to sleep with the receivers over their ears, the Pensacola authorities reported all of those with low ratings had been pulled up through the agency of the subconscious mind, which had absorbed those things missed in the classroom.

Farmer the "Goat"

Dallas, Texas, Dec. 3.—Efforts to free the farmer from "economic bondage" were stressed this afternoon by W. W. Fitzwater, of Bonham, Texas, president of the Farm Labor Union of America, in his address before the second annual convention here of the Texas branch of the organization.

President Fitzwater denounced the present system of marketing farm crops which, he said, "allows the middleman and speculator to control the price of farm products to both the producer and the consumer."

He assailed the mortgage system, asserting that the farmers of the country, through this system, are held in bondage. "By mortgaging our farms and crops," he said, "we have placed ourselves in a natural bondage from which there is no escape until the entire mortgage system is outlawed by law.

"This state of the farmer," he continued, "in which he is allowed to be downtrodden to satisfy the greed of the few is a national disgrace and a shame. Some say we are getting back to normalcy but this is not true. During the war the farmer got his first taste of prosperity. Nearly all of them had money in the banks then, but they haven't got it there now."

About 1,000 Deer Killed

An unofficial compilation of figures on the number of deer killed during the season just closed places the number in the entire state at 1,000, which may be slightly increased when all reports are in. The Gila National Forest reports nearly half that number to be exact, 475.

While there has been a radical increase in the number of deer killed the number to date having been recorded as 600 the turkey hunter was far less successful, the number killed this year being somewhat less than half that of last year.

Middle-Aged at 90

San Diego, Calif., Dec. 3.—A strange tale of a town in Lower California where 150 to 170 years is the average length of life of the inhabitants is told by Captain F. W. Fox, of the schooner Pinole, which has just returned here from a fishing expedition.

Punta de Lera, it appears from Captain Fox's story, made a mistake in going to Florida. He should have tried the Pacific ocean route and landed at San Ygnacio, where in this blessed village "boys" of 40 years are not allowed to vote.

The vegetable patriarch of San Ygnacio, instead of being three score and ten, is 135 years old, according to Captain Fox.

Ninety years is considered the middle age, said the seafarer.

Liquor holds no dread for these long lived folk, for they are all heavy drinkers and yet establish a record for longevity, according to Fox.

According to the skipper, an 85-year old woman recently presented her husband with twins.

A Successful Hunt

Dr. R E Blaney and Mr. and Mrs. Ohge, the latter from Iowa, and B S Burns, of Oscuro, returned Saturday from a two-weeks hunt in the Datil mountains, located in Catron county. They succeeded in bringing down three deer and bagged the same number of turkeys. Their hunt was not only successful but they also had a delightful outing.

Hondo News Items

Hondo, Dec. 3, 1923

The moisture that we would have enjoyed having so much last summer has been coming our way the past week.

The community has been suffering for the past few weeks from a number of cases of fever, but there seems to be a let-up to the number of cases now.

Ralph Werner and John Mercer, who have been so dangerously ill with typhoid for the past three weeks, are slowly improving.

The father and mother of J. W. Wilferth have been visiting with him this week. They were well pleased with our county and especially with our big red apples.

The Hondo school will give a play on Friday evening, December 14, entitled "Hunkers Corners." It is a lively play and will be worth the price of admission, five cents to anyone who sees it.

Mrs. J. E. Wootten has been on the sick list this week, but is better at this date.

The dance at the Hondo Hall was well attended Wednesday night.

Floyd Mitchell and Thomas Kirkland went to Texas last week but five days later were back home. They say they ran their Ford into a Texas norther and when they looked back and saw the sun shining back home they made tracks that way pretty soon.

We thought that all the apples had been hauled away, but last week we went into an orchard and one pile had at least a thousand bushels in it, being sorted and packed, and many more in the orchard yet on the trees.

The high school class has been busily interested in the making of a mercury barometer, and watching its actions during the past few days of changing weather. The Science class seems to be the most interesting of all.

The Kellam Duo

"Decidedly the best ever given in Roswell" is the press notice concerning the appearance of the Kellam Duo in that city.

As a Lyceum and Chatauqua entertainer, Mr Kellam has had many years of experience and has a variety of means of giving his audience a most pleasing entertainment. Miss Lowrey has a splendid soprano voice, and, in addition, plays a novel instrument, the piano-accordion, an instrument of extraordinary size and tone. Their costumes, readings, solos and the use of a number of different musical instruments gives promise of a high-class entertainment for the third number of the Lyceum Course.

Do not fail to come, Friday evening, December 14, at the Crystal Theatre. Tickets, on account of financial conditions, have been reduced to 25 and 50 cents.

"Till We Meet Again"

It is said the play, off which the above heading is the title, reformed a gang of New York crooks. Burglars broke into a house and looted it. A week later the goods were returned, and the crooks left a note saying that they had brought back the stuff after having seen the photoplay, "Till We Meet Again."

When Jim Brennan agreed to commit a certain burglary for Arthur Montrose he had no idea what a weird trick Fate was about to play him. He did not know it was the home of the man who had risked his life to save him when they were trapped like rats in shell-hole in France. He did not know that the papers he was hired to steal concerned the fortunes and happiness of the strange girl he had befriended when she had been homeless and frightened.

This is one of the many gripping situations in the William Christy Cabanne production, "Till We Meet Again," to be presented at the Crystal Theatre, Saturday night, December 15, with an all star cast presenting Mae Marsh in the leading role and Norman Kerry, Martha Mansfield, Walter Miller, J. Barney Sherry, Julia Swayne Gordon and others.

BACKWARD CHILDREN COSTLY TO STATE

Report Survey Shows One State Paid $18,000 a Year for "Repeaters"

Retarded school children in one Western state last year cost that state $18,000, according to figures given out at the headquarters of the Southwestern District, American Red Cross, in St. Louis, after an investigation of the health of the school children in that state. These figures were based on the number of children who failed to pass their examinations and had to be sent back to do over again the work that they should have completed.

Only 5 per cent of these children were backward because of mental lack. The rest had physical defects easily corrected, but either could do their mental capacity and their body strength to do the school work. Of those who continued their normal progress easily only 10 per cent had physical defects.

The result is that the state has to pay for the cost of the extra year that the pupil spends in school.

The Atlanta committee of health and school authorities, of which Dr. Jackson Smith is chairman, co-operated with the Red Cross Institute for a considerable number of children and physical examinations, a few cases of serious defects were found. Correction of the latter was easily accomplished by properly adjusted glasses.

The safety idea now is an effort to eliminate the waste of public health during school life. The examination will include a physical examination of each child, and will be made by physicians who have had special training in the work. The examination will be thorough, and will be made by physicians who have had special training in the work. The examination will be thorough, and will be made by physicians who have had special training in the work.

According to the Director of Nursing Service in the Southwestern Division, one public health nurse should be employed for every 1,000 children. For instance of economy, however, the nurses frequently have many more than this number and they also have to look after the health and welfare of the adult community.

"Supposing in a given community," said this director, "100 children should have to repeat their school work because their physical condition made them slow in their studies and frequently absent. This would cost the state $45,000 a year. A public health nurse for the same period, whose duty it would be to see that the children kept their teeth and their eyes in good condition, would cost the state but $1,000 a year. Therefore, by the latter expenditure the state would save $44,000 a year."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senator Johnson Challenges Coolidge and Others to Direct Primary Fight.

STRESEMANN CABINET IS OUT

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SENATOR HIRAM JOHNSON of California, avowed candidate for the Republican presidential nomination, has started into make things lively for his rivals, including President Coolidge. He has warned them that he proposes to make a determined fight in every state against "hand-picked" delegations, and challenged them to meet him in the primaries in a straight-out contest. His statement, issued from Washington, is supposed to have been the result of unwarranted intimations that Mr. Coolidge would not make a direct campaign for state delegations, relying largely on delegates from states that have no direct primaries, and on those which would turn to him after their favorite sons have been eliminated from competition.

"I insist that the rank and file of the Republican party have a right to express themselves as to the candidate of the party for the presidency," Senator Johnson said. "I am seeking to have that preference expressed. I shall accept the determination of the voters with equanimity and philosophy. I do not fear to go before the people upon that which I believe, and no other man who is a candidate should hesitate to have those whose support he asks express themselves on his candidacy.

"The members of the party, rather than a few self-constituted bosses, are entitled to select the candidate. We are going to put it up to the American people. I hold that all candidates should go before the people on the same principle."

Senator Johnson intimated that he may visit such states as Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and New Jersey. He is looked on with considerable favor by many Republicans, but must contend with the strong followings of Coolidge and Lowden. In Indiana Senator James E. Watson says he may become a candidate "if for no other reason than to keep the state's delegation from Hiram Johnson."

While he is too radical for such men as Watson, the California is too conservative to suit the other Senator Johnson. Matter from Missouri that Republican visited in the national capital and told the pipeline world that Illinois was a battleground from the cause of progressivism, that the third party movement was growing very strong, and that the farmers must be given protection against high cost of living, the grain and dairy companies. He seems to be right about the third party movement. Indeed, a third party was formally organized in Chicago by a group under the leadership of J. A. H. Hopkins of New York and the call for its convention, to be held May 30, was issued.

Another meeting of progressive groups was held in Omaha and representatives of fifteen states indorsed Ford for president and called a convention at Detroit December 12.

WILLIAM G. McADOO had his first test of strength among the Democrats last week in South Dakota, where the county proposal conventions were held. Ford supporters were his chief opponents, and while results are not yet quite definite, it appears that McAdoo won throughout the state by at least two to one. The Republicans were fairly divided between Coolidge and Hiram Johnson. Most of the Farmer-Labor conventions named uninstructed delegations to the state convention.

DR. STRESEMANN and his cabinet fell soon after the reassembling of the reichstag, as had been expected. The chancellor made a long and pessimistic statement, winding up with the declaration that Germany's internal condition was hopeless and that he could not see the slightest prospect of improvement, and the offer to relinquish office if the reichstag considered it necessary. He was heckled by the Communists and others, and when he demanded a vote of confidence this was refused him by a vote of 230 to 155. He and his ministers at once resigned. At this writing it seems likely that the new chancellor will be either Herr Leicht of the Bavarian People's party or Dr. Albert, who was in charge of the propaganda bureau of the German embassy in Washington before America entered the war.

Had Stresemann been able to defer the vote in the reichstag for a quarter of an hour he might have been upheld, for the news came, just too late, that the industrial magnates of the Ruhr and the Rhineland had signed a treaty with the French which is expected to bring comparative peace and prosperity to the occupied regions, since under it the coal and steel plants will resume operations.

In Upper Silesia the organized farmers, who are nationalistic, declared a food boycott against the towns until Stresemann and his cabinet should resign. Immediately the hungry townsmen flocked into the country by thousands and burned and looted the farmsteads. They were fought by the junkers and their employes and by the police, and there were many fatalities. The farmers' organizations, it is stated, could provide plenty of food for all of Germany until next March if they wished, but they will not do so until a nationalistic government is established.

ONCE more the Anglo-French entente, periodically mended by the foreign correspondents, has been saved. Notwithstanding its fury and defiant attitude, Premier Poincare yielded to the British view as to what was best to do in the matter of the return of the former crown prince to Germany and the resumption of the activities of the allied military control commission, and agreed that there should be no threats of sanctions nor anything that might send the ultimatum to Germany. The British gave in on some minor points, and thereupon the council of ambassadors were to permit two times. In case the Germans were not then there President Wilson already had returned, to right roads as a private citizen, but the government was asked to see that no steps be taken to place him on the throne. It was also warned that it must not permit the former kaiser to return. In the other communication Berlin was informed that "the allied governments have decided that the operations of military control and economic expansion must be resumed without delay under conditions which will be notified to the German government by the president of the conference of ambassadors and the committee of ambassadors' guarantee.

"Should these operations meet with opposition from German authorities or Germans nationals, the allied governments intend to take measures which may seem to them proper to assure execution of the treaty."

It was understood that the Berlin government would find the notes from the allies entirely satisfactory. The French press, except the government organs, was not so well pleased with them and the premier was rather severely criticized for his "surrender." But from its point of view France seems justified. Prime Minister Baldwin faces a hard fight in the coming British elections, and one of the chief complaints against him is that he has suffered so many diplomatic defeats at the hands of Poincare. The latter cannot expect that in the event of Baldwin's defeat the new British government will be even as friendly to his policies as has been the present cabinet. Therefore he could well afford to give Baldwin the diplomatic victory of last week. After the British elections the whole question may be reopened.

DESPITE the pleadings of Senator Lodge, Senator Borah and some other Republican leaders who fear it may mean disaster for their party, President Coolidge has decided to support Secretary Mellon's tax reduction program boldly and unreservedly. With a revenue surplus piling up it is the duty of the government to reduce the tax burden, the President holds, and he is confident that the radicals will be unable to put any extreme measure through congress. His attitude toward soldier bonus legislation has not been disclosed, but he probably will follow the example of President Harding and insist that if a bonus bill be passed, a means for financing it be provided by congress.

J. C. WALTON, suspended governor of Oklahoma, was found guilty of eleven of the sixteen charges presented to the senate court of impeachment and for corruption in office, moral turpitude, neglect of duty and general incompetence was removed from his office. The vote was 41 to 0, Walton's one consistent supporter being absent. Six of the original charges were dismissed. No evidence for the defense was presented, for Walton had withdrawn his counsel after announcing that he could not stand the "humiliation of an unfair trial." His attorneys, however, intend to try to carry the case to the Supreme court of the United States. A grand jury in Oklahoma City considered the evidence on which the deposed governor was convicted and indicted him for criminal offenses.

DR. FREDERICK A. COOK, the Arctic explorer who gained notoriety by his bogus "discovery" of the North Pole years ago, and who of late has been a spectacular dealer in oil stocks, has come to the end of his rope. Tried before Federal Judge Kilgo in Fort Worth, Tex., for misuse of the mails in connection with the operations of the Petroleum Producers' association, of which he was the sole trustee, he was found guilty and sentenced to fourteen years and nine months in prison and fined $12,000. Nineteen co-defendants were also found guilty. Judge Kilgo in passing sentence described Cook scathingly for robbing widows and orphans, comparing "You seem to be prepared as a political worker in every state where you have sold stock."

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HOOVER says the government is not considering any plan for the relief of the hungry people in Germany, though several persons have talked of the matter with the President. As to whether relief is needed, Mr. Hoover says the breakdown in Czechoslovakia, coupled with communistic unemployment, has caused suffering in the poor districts. Insecurity of business life has paralyzed many there, but Germany as a whole is still a powerful country to buy foodstuffs, agriculture, and trade. Purchases by Germany from the United States in the first six months of 1923 amounted more than $140,000,000, or about $280,000,000 gold marks. The industrial plan of Germany is better than it was before the war, and there is every chance that it is overcharged. Crops throughout Germany are reported generally good, in some instances being the best for three years or more.

Major General Allen's committee for relief of hungry German children is all ready to open its campaign for the collection of funds from American citizens and it is anticipated that at least $10,000,000 will be raised. The American Friends service committee will administer the fund and the German government will supply aircraft to the insurance, warehouse and other overhead charges.

FRIENDS of Coreo in America, who are organized, have filed with Secretary of State Hughes a formal protest against the alleged murder of about 300 Coreans during the great earthquake and fire in Tokyo and Yokohama. Dr. Floyd W. Thompkins, president of the society, who signed the protest, declared an eyewitness saw 300 Coreans "bound hand and foot, placed on an old junk, covered with oil and burned alive." What Secretary Hughes can do about it is not indicated.

KING ALFONSO, Queen Victoria and Dictator Primo Rivera of Spain all went to Italy last week and were received by King Victor Emmanuel and Premier Mussolini with impressive ceremony. It was said a military alliance between the two countries would be signed to balance the alliance between France and Jugo-Slavia.

In a voting contest which was staged during the first of the month at the State Teachers' College, in Silver City, Miss Thelma Ault was voted the prettiest young lady at the college. Miss Ault is a resident of La Mesa. Beatrice Brewer, a Silver City girl, was voted the most popular.

Ben Young, car inspector at the Las Vegas Santa Fe shops, is at the point of death in the Tucumcari hospital, and his wife is suffering from a broken hip and arm and bad bruises as the result of a crash between the E. P. & S. W. train and the auto which was driven by the injured man.

What is said to be a record for pumpkin raising in southwestern New Mexico was made this year by Chris Pena, a farmer living near Deming. Pena reports raising 1,500 pumpkins on one and one-half acres of ground. Many of the pumpkins were choice specimens, it is said, several weighing more than forty pounds. The weight of the entire crop was 18,000 pounds, Pena said.

At the regular meeting of the New Mexico State Teachers' College held at Silver City recently it was decided to do away with the degrees of Bachelor of Pedagogy and Master of Pedagogy which have been given since the founding of the school for the completion of two and three-year courses. After this year the school will grant only the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Master of Arts, which require four years of work.

Sale of two and one-quarter million feet of saw timber by the United States forestry service to the Southwest Lumber Company was announced by the district office. The timber is located on the Lincoln national forest southwest of Cloudcroft. Provisions of the contract include the payment by the lumber company of the price, $2.15 per 1,000 feet, for all species except white fir, which sold for $1.25 per 1,000 feet board measure.

The decision of the Federal District Court in Santa Fe, which ordered the Albuquerque school board to return to the American National Bank, Oklahoma City, the $8,500 deposit made by the bank during the school bond transactions in 1921, has been reversed by the Federal Court of Appeals of the Eighth Federal Circuit, St. Louis, according to word received in Albuquerque by A. B. McMillen, counsel for the school board in this litigation.

In response to a statement made at Santa Fe by Clinton J. Crandall, superintendents of the northern pueblos, that he would pay a reward of $100 for proof of the statement of George Tinnerman, Isleta, that an Indian had drawn a knife on him and forced him to pay $10 for carrying his wife up La Bajada hill in Albuquerque after she had been seriously hurt in a fall of 100 feet from her motorcycle, Tinnerman reaffirmed his statement.

The fact that a race of pigmy people once inhabited the mountain fastnesses of the Guadalupes near Carlsbad has come to the attention of the Smithsonian institution, and according to communications from J. Walter Fewkes, chief of the bureau of American Ethnology, the Smithsonian is desirous of securing a skull of one of these people for examination by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, physical anthropologist of the U. S. National Museum. This race no doubt lived thousands of years ago, and Carlsbad Caverns, Carlsbad officials, also has been instrumental in bringing the matter to the attention of the Smithsonian, that following examination of the specimen, it be the desire of the Smithsonian people to send an expedition into the Guadalupe mountains to ferret out the ancient bones of these people.

Silver City lodge No. 461, B. P. O. Elks, now occupies its magnificent new home and club house, erected and furnished at a cost in excess of $60,000. The building acknowledged to be the handsomest Elks edifice in the state, if not in the Southwest, was completed recently and formally accepted from the contractors, John I. Kane & Co. of El Paso.

Because of exceptional service to the Gila Frontier Farm was given a commission to fourteen years by Governor Hinkle on recommendation of the state penitentiary board. Farm was set up from Grant county in 1917 to serve from eighty to 100 years for convicts, and Gov. M. C. Mechem commuted the sentence to twenty-five years in 1923.

F. Martinez, arraigned at Mora in the justice of the Peace court of Juan Navara, was bound over to await the action of the grand jury under a $500 bond. Martinez was charged with assault with a deadly weapon upon Ubana Lopez. Lopez alleged that the defendant struck him on the head with a heavy iron bar. Assistant District Attorney T. V. Trader represented the state.

Willard evidently is expecting a healthy growth in the number of its school children. In a report on that school district given by State School Auditor J. M. Owens says there are 440 chairs in the auditorium of the new four-room building completed this year. Of these, 300 opera chairs, bought at $3.15 each, are stacked in the rear of the room; 200 table-arm chairs, bought at $4.35 for the first hundred and $3.85 for the second hundred, are in place in the auditorium, and the remaining forty, also tablearm chairs, are stored away in a dressing room.

Child Crop From the Farms.

The nation's child crop, no less than the food crops, comes mainly from American farms, says Dr. C. J. Galpin, in charge of farm population studies for the United States Department of Agriculture. Of the 30,000,000 farm population as compared with the same number of urban population the number of children under ten years of age on farms is approximately 2,000,000 more than in the cities. There are approximately 7,700,000 children under ten years of age on farms with 5,700,000 in cities having equivalent total population, Doctor Galpin points out.

"When was the last time you came?" asked the superintendent.

$4,725,000 FUND FOR COLORADO HIGHWAYS PROGRAM IN 1924

Denver.—Tentative proposals for the expenditure of $4,725,000, which sum is available under the state highway budget for 1924, have been announced by the state highway advisory board here.

A serious problem has confronted the advisory board in its apportionment of available funds for state highways because of repeal by the Twenty-fourth General Assembly of the half-mill state road tax, combined with the fact that revenue derived from the sale of all automobile license tags must be used for the payment of interest and retirement of the $6,000,000 highway bond issue authorized last November.

The highway department must therefore, reduce appropriations for state projects to one-third of the 1923 appropriation, it, is declared.

Adequate maintenance will be the primary consideration, the use of funds for new construction being necessarily curtailed, according to the statement issued by the highway advisory board.

The $4,725,000 available for apportionment under the 1924 budget will be distributed as follows, subject, of course, to Governor Sweet's approval:

For maintenance	$ 811,000
For construction purposes.
Federal aid projects	3,000,000
For state projects	700,000
For property, equipment, administration and surplus war materials	264,000
For contingencies	150,000

The above appropriations are provided for by the following estimated receipts:

Balance 1923 highway fund	$ 300,000
One-half mill levy	750,000
One-half of 2c gasoline tax	675,000
Internal improvement	50,000
Sales to counties and miscellaneous	50,000
1924 bond sale to meet federal aid	1,500,000
Federal aid projects	1,500,000
Total	$4,725,000

Tyro Held for Death Threats

Chicago.—Charged with making threats to kill Everett P. Leonard, president of the Servicite Company of Chattanooga, Tenn., and Willard, his 16-year-old son, are in jail here, accused by Roger Nayler, president of the Santex Products Company of Chicago, of having kidnaped him in Chicago on Oct. 13 and holding him prisoner in Chattanooga for twenty-six days. Everett P. Leonard told the officers he and his son had come to collect $9,000 due them from Nayler, who admitted, police said, that he owed the debt.

False Cotton Broking Investigated

New York.—Millions of dollars have been lost by small traders in the South through cotton transactions with unscrupulous persons posing as cotton brokers, Thomas Hale, secretary of the New York Cotton Exchange, declared in a statement made public here. The exchange is doing everything in its power to protect such traders, Mr. Hale said, and is now working with cotton exchanges in the South in an effort to weed out members of those exchanges who, the statement said, "we have reason to believe are not doing business in accordance with the rules."

Attorney's Residence Bombed

Macomb, Ill.—A bomb was exploded in the home of Deputy Attorney Andrew L. Hamilton here a few days ago. All members of the family escaped injury. All windows in the house as well as those in surrounding buildings were shattered. The damage has been estimated at $2,000. No clew as to who caused the explosion has been found. Mr. Hamilton would make no statement as to the bombing.

Brakeman Held for Autoist Killing

Phoenix, Ariz.—Andrew Edwards, a brakeman, was lodged in the county jail here on a charge of murder by authorities who brought him from Sentinel, Ariz., where he is alleged to have shot and killed Harold Mowrey of Childress, Tex. The shooting, according to advices received here from Sentinel, followed an altercation between Edwards and Mowrey, who, officers said, was found riding on a freight train. Authorities said Mowrey resisted the efforts of railroad employees to remove him from the train.

CAPTAIN SAZARAC

By CHARLES TENNEY JACKSON

"AND—DIE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Under the name of "Captain Sazarac," and disguised, Jean Lafitte, former freebooter of Barataria, proscribed, returns to the city of New Orleans. He is recognized by two of his old companions, Alderman Dominique and Beluche. At the gaming tables Sazarac has won much money from Colonel Carr, British officer, John Jarvis, the city's first bohemian of the arts and letters, an oldtime friend of Lafitte, tells of a woman's face and smile. As his last wager, Carr puts up a woman, presumably a slave. Custom compels Sazarac to accept the stake. He wins. His old associates and Count Raoul de Almonaster accost him as Lafitte. A project of the youthful adventurers of New Orleans is the rescue of Napoleon Bonaparte from St. Helena, and a ship, the Seraphine, has been made ready. From De Almonaster Sazarac learns that the girl he "won" at the card table is white, of high estate, and that the matter has been made a by-word in the city's resorts. Sazarac finds Mademoiselle Lestron, a fellow passenger on a river steamer a few days before, and with whom he had fallen in love, is the girl and in chivalry foregoes his revenge against Carr. Jarvis admires Mademoiselle Lestron. He is a witness of the meeting and picks up a camellia which the girl had thrown, unnoticed, to Sazarac. Jarvis is dangerous; he talks too much in his cups. His old associates of the Barataria days urge Lafitte to take command of the Seraphine, ostensibly to rescue Napoleon but really to fly the black flag and "cruise the seas." He hesitates. Jarvis is a witness of the kidnaping of Mademoiselle Lestron, but his story is not given credence. De Almonaster entertains Sazarac, now admitted by Jean Lafitte, at his country house.

"And were he to order those young scions of the city's blue blood to polyglene his decks, he would have to land in every isle of the Indies to settle the challenges! No, no—sir, Bonaparte is safe from those gentry!"

The two gentlemen smiled. But as they were to part, down the banquette of the rue Chartres came two figures, one supporting the other. A short, dark, ragged man whose gilt earrings glistened under kinky locks, struggling to save his basket of cooked crayfish as he steered his companion on.

"Let be—" growled Gorgio, the Catalan. "Come, Jarvis—the Cafe des Refugies for you, eh?"

"A ship!" bawled Jarvis. And being much the larger of the two he almost propelled the crayfish seller into the two elegant gentlemen, who stepped aside in a hurry to let them pass.

"A ship! A ravee, eh Lestrenee?"

He bowed to the banquette, and sat there blinking. Old Gorgio hauled in vain at his sleeve. "Come, be up with me!"

But the town's first bohemian remained to fondle at its dregs.

"It was the way they went, Gorgio, I am sure now on my way to the police to report of the attack. I shall appeal to the mayor—Bonaparte is not so dead as to refuse justice to a lady!"

"What does he babble of?" inquired Lestrenee harshly.

The painter got to his feet. He was bleeding from a gash across his brows. On his shirt he had crushed red clay stains. "Two days ago Mlle. Lestrenee and Clarisse Deslarge and Countess Dominique to see what might be the public market. And to them Jarvis suddenly showed his greenness.

"I was feasting along the rue St. Peter in the mist, after so my bonne was, save that the moon kept dying past me. And there came a carriage that all but ran me down. The horses stumbled—and a lady screamed. She thrust an arm from the curtains—a white arm, I reached to touch. And a fellow struck me . . . I got up later—I and my blossom. I swear she had more camellias in her hair! Eh, there—I have told it again! Now laugh, fools!"

"Where did you come upon this man, Monsieur Madge?" said His Honor.

"Here, as you see—dirty and bowling," returned the merchant.

"Gorgio take Him home, and come to my clerk for a dollar," frowned the mayor. "It's drunkard's rot."

"Home!" blustered Jarvis. "A lady seized, spirited away in a galloping chaise through New Orleans' streets—and you say: 'Home!' Then romance is dead, sirs! I shall paint a fish-woman's shawl on my lady's head, and sorrow in her eyes. It was not so when Jean Lafitte was here!"

"You have dreamed—" muttered Dominique, watching him covertly. "Come with me, Jarvis."

"My skinned nose and brow—is that a dream?"

"He has stumbled sightlong about the streets," said Gorgio sullenly. Between the crayfish seller and the rotund alderman there shot glances of alert understanding. The Catalan stretched his hand to the painter and bent upon him a look of implacable fury.

"Eh, ha!" grunted Jarvis. "Carnelias? Let's see? Why, Jean—last night—"

"Silence—fool!" whispered Gorgio. He seized upon the fellow; he bore him along with his bull-necked strength against his back.

"He is utterly drunk," murmured Dominique. "Come, gentlemen—let us to our morning coffee at Maspero's!" He took the mayor's arm, turning him hurriedly. A block distant the councilor looked back, fiddling with his velvet cuff nervously. The Catalan vagabond was dragging his comrade along.

But none save the alderman saw that the hand of the one-time buccaneer was under Jarvis' arm, that his knife-point pressed there until the coat was torn.

"A word more," hissed the crayfish seller, "and—die!" Then he whispered: "Sazarac . . . and the English woman? Jean—and the wager he won? Who, then, has a better right to the woman? Home, now!—get your paint pots and paint a poultice on your broken head!"

But Gorgio had to drag the unconscious wastrel up the studio stairs and there lock him in ere he went to a whispered conference behind a cabbage stack in the French market.

CHAPTER VI

The Mask is Dropped.

It was after the heat of that same day that two horsemen rode out from a courtyard of the Faubourg St. Marie upon the Tchoupitoulas road.

Count de Almonaster breathed relief when the river willows hid them and the steeds broke into a gallop.

"My blacks are waiting at the ferry," he murmured; "now, Captain Sazarac, did the plainsmen teach you to ride? Come, then!" And the guest led the way in a cloud of dust. A half-dozen slaves uprose as the two darted over the levee, dismounted and flung rein to the grooms. Then the scow-boat swung off on the muddy Mississippi, propelled by the naked-backed oarsmen.

Sazarac stood watching the willowed shores. The city was invisible, but on the western bank arose the stately facades of plantation houses among great oaks. Beyond this, the bayous of the grim, gray forest wall, the impenetrable cypress swamp, with its watery aisles leading to fantastic, the legend haunted, even at this early day.

De Almonaster stepped ashore as the scow grounded, and led the way across the broad lawns to the high steps of the portioned gallery of the white mansion. Black boys dashed for the bridles. At the great glass doors arose a genteel major-domo.

"At your pleasure, sir," said Raoul. "A drink shall be brought, and the bath."

"I have thought it strange"—Sazarac smiled absently—"that few of the Spanish Almonasters, of wealth and connections beyond the province in the city—have chosen to like unattached."

"I have my dream—" De Almonaster said gravely, "A boy's dream . . . but it does not pass. For six years now, the loveliest face that could stir youth has been with me. It was for that I cruised last year about the Caribbean ports—aimlessly seeking, slowly trying to forget. Ah, well! I am trying to be a practical, sober man—planning the new sugar process!"

With a bow he left the guest. The stranger looked from the great windows upon the gardens. Beyond the narrow fields ran a rutted road, and Jean Lafitte smiled. Up, that same road had come the clumsy carts of the smugglers who met the gulf adventurers in the swamp rendezvous and brought the loot of silks and wines and jewels taken from luckless merchantmen on the Spanish Main. By gale-beat from the sunk, he gave to the river forest; and then, at dead of night, ferried by other agents across to the warehouses of the city. And to Pierre Lafitte's cloaking smithy on the rue Bourbon came the winking merchants to watch the slaves work the forges while they slyly murmured to the proprietor: "I hear that a ship from Bilboa strangely foundered in Yucatan strait? . . . What, pray, is the price of brocade and silver plate at Monsieur Lafitte's Red house at Grand Terre?"

"Hypocritical dogs!" muttered the master now. "I respect the roughest scoundrel of my own band more than the smug merchants who enriched themselves on our traffic, covertly protecting us while they profited; eager to denounce us when our last ship was driven from the Gulf!"

The liquor decanter was on a high-boy of heavy rosewood. The adventurer's melancholy eyes lighted as he examined it, the great four-post bed, the table and the mirrors.

"Loot from the Isle o' Pines! I recall Gambio's sweating blacks poling it from the swamp to be sold to a city factor! It turns up at De Almonaster's and I am entertained with it!"

His laughter had hardly ceased when he joined his host at dinner. Never a more well-appointed guest had Count Raoul greeted than the last sea-rover who sat across the board beyond the golden candelabrum.

Monsieur Sazarac raised a hand. He held a glass before him.

"As to the wine, young sir, I could swear there had been mischief in the cup's track!"

Raoul laughed ardently: "If ever, sir, one of my uncle's ships, which bring our wine from Bordeaux, had fallen your way, all the wars of Bonaparte had been nothing to the uproar he would have raised!"

"Come—" smiled the guest, "I would forget it all!"

"If we let you—" he signaled the serving men to withdraw. "Now, I am defeated by your own worthy suspicions for this—the Napoleon plot—is not that adventure enough?"

"More." Sazarac smiled distantly. "I am done with adventuring. I dream of a plantation in the Indies. In Louisiana, even if again granted amnesty, my presence would be a sore spot. Let any thieving brawl come in the ports, and at once Lafitte's old men are charged with it. They are peaceful men now, scattered on the coast—hunters, raisers of truck, and fishers. Let the dead past lie, my friend, I am an evil legacy . . . and I am forty-two!"

"And yet—the lady of the packet boat!" mused Raoul. "Sazarac?"

"To her, Sazarac, the prisoner—to you, Lafitte, the outlaw. And yet—" the elder man stopped. He gave out the glass door to the starlight.

"And yet, Monsieur Sazarac—what if you, of all men, brought Napoleon triumphantly out of exile to the New world! What proud city of all Louisiana would not be thrilled by the name—Lafitte!"

"Now, that is ghastly!" frowned the elder man. "Do my English Tory—as lawyer to aid Bonaparte with her approval?" He laughed: "Ah, well, a lovely lady for whom I would have fought, and I had to turn aside to sleep. I am Lafitte. What is the irony of it—all fortune, material, a throne under a mask . . . and she—she! Does the man who is the slave to other rule. I do not choose, Count Carl," he clenched passionately.

"I see that" Raoul repeated his curious wit. "The knew you went to control him." He shrugged. "Come, my Captain Jean! I, too, have greatly loved—and lost. Now, the ever is of the sea and sun. Won't you not dream? You have but left your old self to renew dueling with it!"

The guest stared hard at him. "Napoleon? The devil! Cry would care for him! Tush and all on the first merchantman—lead, musty, spend half-a-dozen of gold in the ports of South America—and then the fortunes for them all! Monsieur, the world has shelved all our gentlemen of fortune!"

"It is the English woman holds you from us," said Raoul, and then saw the black fire deepen on the other's brow. The host bit his lip; and then upon the silence, there came rapid footsteps. A doorman was expostulating at the broad gallery. There was a scuffle, an oath.

"But I shall enter, fellow! Out of the door!"

De Almonaster hid arises by the silver-laden board, with a hasty glance at his guest's impassive face under the golden candelabrum, when the burly privateer Johannsen charged from the hallway. He turned without greeting, staring at Sazarac.

"You, Captain Jean! See, I have fought for you! A customs guard, I think it was, went down by the rail-hake. Nez Coupe, Bobon and I stopped them from the first crossing, but the dragoons are here!"

"That You—of the Spanish Almonasters, of Wealth and Connections Beyond the Province in the City—Have Chosen to Like Unattached—"

"And what be it in reality Jean Lafitte, turned up from the dead?"

Michigan Girl's Essay in Safety Competition

Best essayist of more than 400,000 elementary school pupils, Theodora Poole, thirteen-year-old school girl of Pontiac, Michigan, now residing at Lansing, Michigan, is announced as winner of the second national safety essay contest conducted under the auspices of the highway education board.

As a reward she receives a gold watch and a trip to Washington with all expenses paid, awards offered at the beginning of the contest for the essay winning first national honors. Her prizes are the gifts of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

Miss Poole's essay is as follows:

In a game each person has his part to play. Let us think of the task of making a nation safe as a game in which each has his place to fill and his bit to do.

One might suppose we children have very little to do with the safety of our nation, but we are the coming generation and in our time shall uphold better and safer highways.

As in a game, there are rules to follow. These things we must do:

Always observe traffic before crossing a street.

When walking on a road keep to the left to meet on-coming vehicles.

Learn automobile signals to know what a motorist means to do.

When alighting from a street car stand until sure of a safe way to the curb.

Help those in need.

Keep close to the curb when riding a bicycle, and give correct signals when turning.

Thus we shall spread our safety interest and information.

Now these the things we must not do, rules just as important if we are to play the safety game.

Don't hurry! Most accidents are caused by the desire to save a few seconds.

Never play in the streets nor dash before moving vehicles.

Never jay-walk.

Never steal rides.

Never make a blind dash across a thoroughfare.

Never stand in the street while waiting for a car—you are safer on the curb. One cannot always stand on his rights.

A child's part in this safety game is to keep from being "tagged" by an accident. In the many automobile accidents in which the driver is blameless, a pitifully large number of children are victims.

Then there are always drivers who consider that responsibility ceases with the taking of the life. Have we stood less firmly than a telephone pole we had better be out of their way.

Our code is a code of honor. No body can make the play fair. Our schools foster athletics to encourage clean play. Your [illegible] play.

Every athletic is the game in which we save the screen of accidents and loss of life. If I could feel that by giving this safety talk I had saved one little child, I would consider my effort better spent than if I had won highest honors in athletics.

There things children can do. It is because of the attitude [illegible] of our elders that we are losing those things [illegible] before us while we are of an age when it is easy to learn. Both time, money, and thought are being spent to find us safer ways. And if we become men and women who think safety and are ready to shed their a vision of injury and life [illegible]

"Always Be Careful"

To Prevent Automobile Accidents by Low Walls

The Iowa [illegible] is to [illegible] up an approach to one of its grade crossings that, it hopes, will prevent automobile accidents. As the motor in approaches the crossing, low retaining walls force him to turn gradually to the right, then in order to get over the railway to make a sharp turn first to the left, then to the right again. As five miles an hour is as fast as the turns can be made, drivers will have time to look for on-coming trains. The cost of the low walls is [illegible].

Accidents Prevented by Keeping Highways Open

To prevent accidents by keeping the roads open for two-way traffic, parking of vehicles of all descriptions is prohibited on all state highways in Pennsylvania. Motorists are not permitted to stop at the foot of a hill, crest of a hill, or any portion of a curve. A fine of $10 to $50 is provided for each violation of the rule.

Sample Road Is Narrow.

A sample mile of paved road 18 feet wide is to be constructed in Monmouth county. This is not wide enough for the traffic under present conditions. A 20-foot roadway is safer for all concerned.

Walk for Auto Makers.

All the automobile makers who are reducing the price of their cars ought to get together and figure out a way to reduce the cost of widening the roads.

ANOTHER NURSE PRAISES TANLAC

Mrs. Leona Culpepper, 17 Lucile Avenue, who was a trained nurse for fifteen years, is another highly esteemed Atlanta woman whose gratitude and desire to help others prompts her to tell of the wonderful results she derived from the Tanlac treatment.

"I had suffered from nervous indigestion and loss of appetite for four or five years," said Mrs. Culpepper, "and was nearly always nauseated. I had heartburn so bad I could hardly stand it, and became so weak and nervous I could hardly do my housework.

"Reading what Tanlac had done for others, I decided to try it, and by the time I finished the first bottle I was feeling so much better that I bought two more. When I had finished the third bottle I was feeling fine and had actually gained sixteen pounds. Tanlac is all that is claimed for it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Take no substitute.—Advertisement.

Her Finish.

"Your daughter recites very well," the pastor's wife remarked to Mrs. Muddleby at the church social.

"Yes," said Mrs. Muddleby. "I'm goin' to give her a course in electrocution," she smiled and added, "To sorter finish her off, you know."—Boston Transcript.

School Notes

(By Supt. K. E. Cole)

The Christmas vacation will begin Saturday, December 22. School work will be resumed January 2, the day following New Years.

Mrs. Blaney, Mrs. Craddock and Dr. Cole were the Carrizozo teachers who attended the State Convention at Las Vegas last week. It was a wonderful affair, nearly one thousand teachers being present, and thoroughly enjoyed by all. The president, Ed White, presided at all times with a natural dignity fine to see. Everyone knows, and says, that John Vaughn did a wonderful work as secretary; that it was done so pleasantly and agreeably and that the convention would like to have him keep the secretaryship for the next fifty years.

One of the leading speakers was Francis G. Blair, state superintendent of public instruction of Illinois for the past twenty-five years. Of fine appearance, pleasing personality, with a splendid voice, with something to say, and knowing how to say it, he made a great impression on his audience.

The other leading speaker, William J. Long, author of our fifth school books on American and English Literature, easily captured the attention and the hearts of his hearers by his wonderful knowledge and his delightful way of expressing it.

Mary Mellish, a member of the Metropolitan Grand Opera of New York City, of charming personality, beautifully gowned, with a wonderfully clear and sweet voice, held the rapt attention of the Ilfeld auditorium, crowded to the doors.

It would take several columns to tell what we saw and heard. We are glad we went.

A long and happy married life to Mr and Mrs Bryan Coats. May they live long and prosper. May we all live long enough to help celebrate their golden wedding! All checks, bank certificates, the best collateral

The Sacramental Church pastor [illegible]

Mrs. Claude L. Bigsby of the Capitan school is taking a very interesting course in the Albuquerque State Normal. Mr. Bigsby was the soloist and gave Mrs. Bigsby a very high compliment on the excellence of her paper. Since coming home we have looked over the article and find it so full of good things that we can not select one paragraph as more desirable than another for publication. It would take two columns of this paper to publish the whole production, we regret that we cannot do so.
