OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 24 | CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, APRIL 25, 1924 | NUMBER 16

District Court

The Spring Term of District Court opened here Monday, Judge Edwin Mechem presiding. The other court officials present were District Attorney Newell, Assistant District Attorney Simmons, Court Reporter Paul A. Bringer and Interpreter P. S. Pedregon.

The grand jury was empaneled from the original list, C. R. Dean appointed foreman, the jury sworn and charged and it immediately assumed its duties. A great many witnesses have been examined and the session may come to a close tomorrow, but it must have been a week of strenuous work. No indictments had been turned into court up to last night, and we were informed that all bills would be withheld until the grand jury made its final report.

In the meantime, the Court has been engaged in getting cases, hearing motions and also cases on the civil docket and completing all the preliminaries preceding the calling of the petit jury next Monday.

The following is the list of grand jurors:

No.	Name	Prec't
1	Romulo Salazar	1
2	Jones Pennington	16
3	W. P. Loughrey	14
4	W. I. Robinson	12

Stenographer, Grace M. Jones; Interpreter, Clement Hightower; Bailiff, Gorgonio Wilson.

William Macdonald and Billie Stevens were visitors from Nogal the early part of the week. They are making preparations for active mining on the Bender group of properties in Dry Gulch.

The Bonito Attractive to Summer Vacationists

Applications have been received by the forest authorities for sites for something like forty cabins and bungalows in the Bonito Valley and the picturesque canyons adjacent. There are few places—not excepting the upper Ruidoso and Eagle Creek, with established reputations for beauty and grandeur—where a few weeks may be spent during the summer to better advantage than along the Bonito stream.

Trout fishing is always good there, while lofty mountains and beautiful shady canyons offer much to those who wish to break away from the daily grind in towns and cities, and get close to nature, for rest and recreation during the sultry summer period.

A small charge is made by the National Forest for a generous building lot, where those cabins are to be built, and the applicant may choose his location.

It will make the Bonito a lively place in the summer, besides giving employment to many, and create a market for the farmer and gardener in touch with the location.

The applications for sites were filed a month ago and were principally from people residing beyond the limits of the state.

Woman's Club Notes

Regular meeting of the Carrizozo Woman's Club was held at the home of Miss Ella Brickley, April 18. Hostesses, Mesdames Adams, Caldren and McDonald.

Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Hofman had charge of the program which was delightfully rendered by a group of small children.

The next regular meeting will be at the home of Mrs. H. L. Stimmel May 3rd.

Our club had a large representation at the Third District meeting at Tularosa. Great benefit was derived and many good suggestions offered for the improvement of the Club.

The offering at the Easter Cantata amounted to $22.06; expenses $6.75; (Music $4.00 and lights $2.75).

We wish to thank the people for the splendid contribution and for the interest manifested by their presence.

Call for Democratic State Convention.

A Democratic State Convention is hereby called, to be held in the City of Las Cruces, N. M., on the 24th day of May, 1924, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, for the purpose of selecting delegates and alternates to the National Democratic Convention to be held in New York City on June 24th, 1924, as per call issued by the National Committee and for such other business as may properly come before the convention.

The Chairman of the County Central Committee of each county in the state is hereby authorized and requested to promptly call a county convention or arrange for a primary election in his county for the purpose of selecting delegates to the state convention in which the representation will be as follows:

County	Delegates

Precinct chairmen are requested to invite all persons of legal voting age who may wish to support the principles of the Democratic party, regardless of past party affiliations, to take part in such primaries.

The credentials of all delegates to the state convention and any notice of contest should be in the hands of the chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee at Las Vegas, N. M., on or before the 15th day of May.

Proxies of delegates to the state convention will not be recognized except when held by persons who are residents of the county from which the delegates elect are chosen.

A meeting of the Democratic State Central Committee will be held at nine o'clock in the morning on the same day of the meeting of the convention for the purpose of preparing temporary roll call of the convention and hearing of contests, if any, and for the transaction of such other business as may be properly considered by said committee.

By order of the State Democratic Central Committee.

Geo. H. Hunker, Ch'man.
Byron O. Beall, Sec'y.

Appendicitis Operation

J. C. Hester, assistant cashier of the First National Bank, underwent an operation for appendicitis at the Johnson Hospital Tuesday. Drs. Mann and Nesbit of Fort Stanton assisted Dr. Johnson in the operation. Mr. Hester withstood the operation well and his condition is quite satisfactory.

Capitan High School Notes

B. W. Weber, Principal

Topic: "Success is in the Man."

Success in the man depends nine-tenths on the man. It is generally recognized that when we get the right man behind the gun, results will follow as a matter of course. Can you blame luck for anyone's failure if he persists in misrepresentting his work, or is lazy, or ignorant, discourteous, indifferent, pessimistic, etc.? There is no excuse for dishonesty, ignorance, discourtesy, etc. He has no one to blame but himself if he fails. He is master of his own destiny. His choice decides.

A good memory is a matter of training. To remember anything, we must develop attention, alertness, concentration and observation. Our will power must be called into play. We must force ourselves to remember.

Psychology says that we remember by association of ideas—the new with the old. The man who has ambition for a position of prominence in the future is the man who builds that position. His imagination develops within him a conquering spirit and iron will that pays no attention to obstacles except to use them as stepping stones to success. Finally he puts himself at the head of a big business.

Clear thinking is the prime requisite for a good memory. If our thoughts are right, we will develop the right kind of ambition. If we think along the right lines, we will act along the right lines.

There is nothing clearer in Psychology than the fact that our thoughts will express themselves in action unless sidetracked by other thoughts. We must keep our thoughts right if we wish success.

Every child born into the world possesses in an embryonic or undeveloped state two sets of qualities, constructive and destructive or good or bad. By constructive qualities I mean qualities that build up personality and character, such as honesty, kindness, reason, sincerity, pep, work, etc. By destructive qualities, I mean their opposite—the ones that tear down personality and character, such as Laziness, Insincerity, Stupidity, Harshness, dishonesty, etc.

Apply these qualities to great men. What do you find? They are optimistic, honest, courageous, sincere, have indomitable will power and a capacity for unlimited hard work. Thoughts become actions. An action oft repeated becomes a habit. Habits form character and character is what we are. It is clear then why great men have what we call strong personalities. They have kept their thought along constructive lines. Consequently they have acted along constructive lines until these qualities are a matter of habit with them. You can revolutionize your personality in a few years by a course of positive constructive thinking. It takes an effort. You have time on your hands. If God wants a pumpkin, He grows it in a season. When He wants an oak, he takes a century. You don't want to be a pumpkin, but an oak.

Keep uppermost in your mind that thoughts become habits, habits make character and character is immortal. Keep repeating to yourself, "I can, I must and I will." Wilson, Lloyd George and Clemenceau are leaders in the matters. Why? Simply because they have the ability to meet and convince others. They make people think as they think, feel as they feel and act as they act. We must have constructive qualities at all times.

Relating to the cause of the automobile accident, Saturday, March 29, wish to say that it was not the strong and bright lights of Mr. Bates's car, but the condition of the road that caused the front wheels to lock and resulted in the immediate accident. This is original source.

Thaw Found Sane

Philadelphia, April 21.—After a period of seven years the doors of the Philadelphia madhouse again will swing open for Harry K. Thaw, who was adjudged sane by a jury Tuesday night after seven hours deliberation. Notice of an immediate appeal was given by the opposing counsel, so Thaw still will be held in the asylum.

The first act of the eccentric millionaire, who has been seven times found insane and three times found sane since he killed Stanford White, 18 years ago, will be to clear away a criminal indictment in New York for perverted assault on Freddie Camp of Kansas City.

The Jones' Million Dollar Act Goes into Effect

Las Vegas, April 24—According to George H. Hunker, democratic state chairman, arrangements are being rushed in Washington, with the idea of putting the Jones' farmers relief plan into effect, since its passage by the lower house of congress, making one million dollars available as loans to New Mexico dry farmers. The measure is now up to the President for its signature, which is expected this week.

As passed by the house, with a minor amendment, the Jones bill provides for furnishing seed and feed for actual farming purposes, according to a wire from Senator A. A. Jones.

As soon as the president approves it the secretary of agriculture will send out full information as to how to get loans under this plan, together with forms for applications, which are to be distributed through local banks.

State Democrats to Meet at Las Cruces

The first democratic state convention to be held in New Mexico this year will be at Las Cruces on Saturday, May 24—at that place in recognition of Dona Ana county's turn-over from the Republican to the Democratic column at the 1922 election. The number of delegates will be 617. The chief purpose of this convention is the choosing of the New Mexico delegates to the national convention. The state will have six votes there. In view of an unusual demand for places it is believed that the convention will select twelve delegates with a half vote each.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Report of Dawes Committee on German Problem—Johnson Won't Quit

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

"THE plan submitted is fair and reasonable in its nature, and, if accepted, is likely to lead to ultimate and lasting peace. The rejection of these proposals by the German government means the deliberate choice of a continuance of economic demoralization, eventually involving her people in hopeless misery."

Saying which, at the close of his covering letter, General Dawes submitted to the reparations commission the long-awaited report of the committee of experts which he headed. At the same time the report of the second committee, on German concealed moneys, was presented. Both documents must be considered by the reparations commission before the governments concerned act on them.

The Dawes report is a triumph of business sense, skillful adjustment and diplomatic wording. As the chairman said: "It must be considered not as fulfilling realities but as surrendering [pay?" and "How much can she pay each year?" the experts have responded positively and clearly. They have said Germany can pay and how much she can pay annually. Not only did they answer the question but they have constructed a machine for payments which is a remarkable piece of clockwork. Tomorrow, if desired, the machine can be put into movement. If it is desired! That means Germany. What is Germany going to do? The only question for the reparations commission to put up to Germany is demand a yes or no answer. And the only thing France has to say to her allies, 'Do you underwrite the work of your experts? If you underwrite it, will you help to make it work? Will your pressure go to the extent of using force?'

The Temps thinks the Dawes plan offers the best basis of settlement of the reparations problem which has yet been proposed, and says the French army is ready to back it if necessary.

Great Britain is pleased with the Dawes report, generally speaking, but doubt is felt in London that France will agree to the abandonment of the Ruhr control and the four years' partial moratorium for Germany.

HUGO STINNES, the richest man in Germany, if not in the world, died Thursday after several operations in a Berlin hospital. He was only fifty-four years old, but through ruthless methods and extraordinary plan to have it passed at this session of congress so it will apply to this year's national election. It will provide for:

1. Limitation of the total campaign expenditures by any political party.

2. Limitation of the amount that may be contributed by any individual.

3. Publicity of contributions to liquidate deficits in party hands after an election, as is required of contributions before the election.

4. Penal punishment for violation of any provisions of the law.

SENATOR LAFOLLETTE has made public the radical platform which his Wisconsin delegates will submit for adoption at the Republican national convention. It includes all the senator's well-known ideas and is designed to appeal to almost all progressives or radicals. Its rejection by the convention is certain, and it is supposed the Wisconsin bunch will then withdraw and join with other elements in nominating LaFollette on a third ticket.

CHAIRMAN SMOOT of the senate finance committee introduced in the senate the tax reduction bill as approved by the committee. ROAD BUILDING

HIGHWAY SIDEWALKS PREVENT ACCIDENTS

The increase in automobile traffic of late years has brought among others one very serious problem, the protection of pedestrians who have to travel along the public highways.

Recent figures compiled by a large life insurance company, covering casualties on highways of a certain state for the heaviest traffic season, showed that out of 427 deaths in automobile accidents, 47 per cent of them were of persons who were walking along public highways and were struck by motorists.

As a result of the alarming increase in accidents of this type, authorities have instituted campaigns of various kinds to reduce casualties, they have broadcast rules which pedestrians should follow when forced to travel along the highways. People afoot have been warned to carry lanterns after dark and to walk on the left side of the road so that they will see oncoming vehicles in time to get out of the way.

But all these precautions cannot eliminate these accidents altogether; they can only reduce the number.

Realising this, state, county and city authorities in various parts of the country are now building concrete sidewalks along the highways in the more heavily-traveled regions to safeguard pedestrians. And this plan as shown in the illustration is really the only one which can prevent accidents to pedestrians along the highways.

AFTER AN OPERATION

Mrs. Wilks Couldn't Get Back Her Strength Until She Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rochester, Minnesota.—"I had a very serious operation and it seemed as if I could not get my health back after it. I suffered with pain almost constantly. My sister came to help take care of me, and she was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for nervousness and a run-down condition. She had me try some of it and in a very few days' time I began to feel better. In two weeks I hardly knew myself and after taking a couple of bottles more I was up and helping around, and now I am strong and healthy again and am still taking it. It is a pleasure for me to write this to you, and I hope that many other women who are suffering like I was will find out about your medicine. I will give any information I possibly can." — Mrs. JAMES WILKS, 328 E. Center Street, Rochester, Minn.

Remember, the Vegetable Compound has a record of fifty years of service and thousands of women praise its merit, as does Mrs. Wilks.

New Antiseptic to Protect Surgeons

Doctor Who Faced Death Has Remarkable Recovery.

Baltimore, Md. — Septic poisoning, long considered the most terrible peril physicians encounter, is being successfully combated by a new antiseptic developed at Johns Hopkins hospital here.

Although the experiments at the Brady Urological institute have covered a period of five years and have been successful in many instances in the last year, the new treatment has become known to the public only through the remarkable recovery of Dr. Carl Y. Vischer of Philadelphia.

Dr. Vischer, a surgeon at the Hahnemann hospital, suffered a needle-prick while performing an operation at the hospital last summer. He contracted septic poisoning, and though his most skilled associates undertook the treatment of his case, it was believed he had a very small chance of surviving. In the months that followed, he fought a steadily losing battle with death. The tip of the finger was sacrificed, but the disease continued to spread.

Dr. Vischer's physicians experimented with other "antiseptic dyes," which are being used in other cases of blood poisoning."

Mercurochrome, it is said, long has been used as an antiseptic for external application, but its injection into a vein is new. It is not a serum, however, but comes under the head of chemo-therapy.

Perhaps more than any other medical discovery, it is of value to physicians themselves, for they, more than any other class of persons, always have been sufferers from the ravages of this disease. It very often is caused by infection resulting from a tiny prick with a surgical instrument when performing an operation, as in the case of Doctor Vischer. Once septic poisoning sets in, the patient's chance for recovery formerly was very small—a chance which has been multiplied many times by the new use of mercurochrome.

Doctor Vischer's illness attracted widespread attention in the medical fraternity. His father, Dr. C. V. Vischer, died 17 years ago from the same disease.

The property conveyed cost about $170,000. The deed of gift provides that $40,000 of income from rentals may be expended in the construction of a sewer system. Once the system has been built the net income from water rentals is to be expended for the benefit of the inhabitants of the village.

DEFENDS ILLICIT LIQUOR

STRANGE WILL OF ENGLISH ENGINEER

Directed That All of His Books Be Burned.

The British courts have been occupied of late with a curious case, which turns on the right of a person to provide by will for the destruction of his property. The will in question is the testament of a retired engineer who had passed his active life in India, and who went back to England to shut himself up in a room in a London hotel and devote his days and nights to the study of English authors of the Shakespearean period. He collected a library that contains many rare and valuable folios and quartos and kept it in storage, bringing books to his hotel as he wanted them to study or annotate. When he died he left a will hastily scribbled on a scrap of paper in which he directed that all his books be burned, in order that other scholars might not see and use his marginal notes.

Of course the singularity of the will arrested public attention, and book-lovers who knew the value of the collection quite apart from—perhaps in spite of—the engineer's scribbled comments took action to postpone the execution of the will until it could be determined whether there was not some way of saving the books.

We have not learned what decision, if any, the courts have made, but it seems that legal ingenuity should be able to find some way of preserving the venerable volumes. Certainly common sense, if it were allowed to control, would set the will aside. The state has long had the power to determine, if it pleases, how much of a man's property he shall devise, and it has also asserted its authority to limit his right to distribute what he leaves. Why, then, should it lack the power to nullify his order to destroy it?

Conceivably a man might direct his executors to burn down a house to which he was attached, in order that no one else should ever enjoy it; or a woman might order her jewels to be destroyed in order that no one else might ever wear them. Would not a court be justified in setting aside such wills as these on the ground that the testators were of unsound mind—on one point at least? How valuable the engineer's library is we do not know; but it is incredible that the courts would permit such a library, for example, as that of Mr. Henry E. Huntington in this country to be destroyed. Mr. Huntington himself would, of course, be more horrified than any one else at the idea of burning the books that he has so lovingly collected, but would not the act of some mind

Watch Out for Foot-and-Mouth Disease

It is important that all livestock men in New Mexico be on the watch for any symptoms of the foot-and-mouth disease which is causing such a severe disturbance in California. In order to prevent this highly contagious disease from spreading into this state, owners of stock should take the utmost precaution in observing their cattle for signs of the affection.

Dr. Hurst, the livestock specialist at the New Mexico College of Agriculture, states that the first symptom the average observer would be apt to notice is a drooling of saliva from the mouth of the affected animal, and a peculiar slicking, smacking sound caused by the movement of the mouth and tongue. The animal goes off its feed, and tries to drink often if given the opportunity. At this stage, there is a high fever. If the mouth is opened small blisters can be seen, varying in size, which break, leaving irregular bright red spots, or raw spots. These blisters continue to spread until the tongue, lips and muzzle may be covered.

If the feet are affected, they too will be covered with similar blisters around the upper edge of the hoof and between the toes. This inflamation may continue until the hoofs slip off, leaving the sensitive membrane raw and ulcerated.

Cattle, hogs, sheep and goats are most susceptible, but horses, dogs, cats and poultry may take it. Even man may be infected by coming in contact with diseased animals.

If any animals are suspected of having this disease, the case should be reported immediately to the proper authorities.

Smokers and Campers Cause Many Fires

Albuquerque, April 22.—Campers and smokers caused 84 per cent of all the forest fires on the National Forests of New Mexico and Arizona last year, according to District Forester Pooler of the U. S. Forest Service.

"Many people do not realize the dangers of carelessness with fire in the forests during the spring dry season," said Mr. Pooler. "Last year the rangers in the southwest had to handle 183 fires which might have been prevented if campers and smokers had been careful.

"Most of these fires are put out when they are small, but occasionally when it is very dry and there are high winds it is impossible to control a fire before it becomes large. It then takes many men to handle it and costs may run into thousands.

"Campers are encouraged to use the National Forests of the southwest, which contain some of the finest scenery in the country," continued Mr. Pooler. "We have no burdensome restrictions for campers on the forest. They may camp where they wish and they may take what dead wood they need for their camps. But we must insist upon care with camp fires. They should be put out with water when leaving and pursued with diligence."

Lincoln News Notes

It's apple blossom time in the Lincoln valley, and the orchards present an attractive appearance. Very little fruit was injured by the freeze of last week, and the prospect is good for another bumper fruit crop along the Bonito.

Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Rudulph and small daughter, Betty Jane, have returned to Lincoln after a winter spent in El Paso, and will occupy a cottage on the old Laws place for the summer. The popular Dick Rudulph travels for the Fish Tire Company, but will arrange to visit Lincoln every few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Carlos Vigil and family have moved to Carrizozo after wintering in Lincoln.

The school term is nearing a close, but the attendance is much depleted, as a whooping cough epidemic seems to have struck the town. Most of the cases, however, are of a mild form, but there are several very sick children, among whom are Dorothy and Woodrow Wright.

The five children of Lloyd Hulbert have whooping cough—three of them are very sick, as they have pneumonia to battle with. They are reported to be improving but their recovery is slow.

Mr. Rocky, of Santa Fe, high school inspetor, visited the Lincoln school this week.

Easter services were observed in the high school building at 2:30 Sunday afternoon. The room was attractively decorated with apple blossoms and flowering plants. The large attendance thoroughly enjoyed and appreciated the music of the Capitan singers who repeated the Cantata given at Fort Stanton in the morning. Those who took part in the program were Mr and Mrs Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Osborne, Mrs. Gerard and Mrs. Bates, of Capitan, and Mr. Robbins of Lincoln. Lincoln was represented on the program by a piano solo by Miss Helen Rice and by recitations by members of the Lincoln Sunday School.

Father Burns spent a day in town this week, taking over the work of this parish.

This community was shocked to learn of the death of F. M. Watson, while enroute to Denver for medical treatment. He passed away at Trinidad, Colorado, on April 5th. Mr. Watson assumed management of the White Mountain Inn about February first. His former home was in Oklahoma. While in our midst he made great many friends. The sympathy of all the community is extended to the wife and two little girls who survive him.

Mrs. F. A. Miller, who has been seriously ill the past month, is reported to be improving. Her many friends hope for her speedy recovery. She is now in Tularosa, whither she was taken to be near medical treatment.

Mr Meger, of White Mountain Inn, has won the highest record for speed from Roswell to the Inn, as he recently drove the distance in a Page roadster in one hour and forty five minutes.

The Sunday School at this place is progressing finely. The community is contemplating the purchase of an organ soon. Mrs. D. H. Lucas, the able, superintendent, merits praise for her untiring efforts in this religious work.

G. A. Pendleton, a former manager of the White Mountain Inn, has purchased forty acres of land near the Inn of the cacti and is selling it out as sheep cattle ranch.

Mrs. I. N. Wengerd was recently called to Parsons, where a niece, Jewel Bentley, was seriously ill. At this writing, the young lady is reported to be improving.

At our recent school election, Mrs. D. H. Lucas was elected as the new member.

Born on the Roadside, In a Dust Storm

J. F. Lackey and wife, of Gran Quivira, while on their way to Tularosa, traveling in a housed-in-truck, halted by the wayside, several miles out of Carrizozo, when the wife becoming suddenly ill, gave birth to an 8-pound boy. A passing auto brought word to town and a doctor hastened to the scene and found mother and baby doing very well, although his services were essential.

The party was moved to town Wednesday evening and will remain until the mother is strong enough to continue the journey or return home.

The experience is rather an unusual one, but the youngster who first saw the light of day, by the roadside, in a dust storm, through the curtains of a closed-in-truck, will have something interesting to relate to his descendants as to his advent in the world. Even at that, the young fellow will have one on John House, a member of the New Mexico Constitutional Convention, who when asked as to his birthplace, replied that he was born in a covered wagon, bound from Oklahoma to Texas. Just a generation apart—the wagon and the auto—but the late arrival has the further distinctive advantage in arriving in one of our periodical dust storms, which should make him a "gritty" man.

Carrizozo School Notes

(By Mrs. Lena E. Coe)

The Rainbow Club of the seventh grade, accompanied by their teacher, Mrs. Blaney, laid all care aside last Saturday and, with plenty of refreshments, made their way to the wet pais. A delightful day was spent and Monday morning all were ready for the reviews which precede the final examinations. The children are to be commended for their excellent behavior and obedience. Mrs. McCall and Mr. R. Shaver, a brother of our worthy citizen, Dr. P. M. Shaver, were guests of the Club.

Educational News

(By Mrs. Lena E. Coe)

We were pleased to have Mr. D. W. Rocky, State High School Inspector, visit the Corona, Carrizozo, Capitan, Lincoln and Hondo High Schools this week. Mr. Rocky reports that the grade of work being done in our high schools is up to the standard.

School budgets for the year 1924-25 will be made up on May 26. If you are not satisfied with the equipment in your school, the condition of the school grounds or building, please see your local directors, that they may report needed changes to the budget auditors before the above date. All equipment and repairs to your school building are paid for by a direct tax on your district.

Mr. Arthur, Supervisor of the Lincoln National Forest, will award cash prizes for the best and second best essays written on the subject "What I know about the National Forest." Send essays direct to Mr. Arthur at Alamogordo.

President Coolidge says: "The physical vigor, moral strength and clean simplicity of mind of the American people can be immeasurably furthered by the properly developed opportunities for life in the open, afforded by our forests, mountains and waterways. Life in the open is a great character builder. From such life much of the life of American freedom springs. Furthering the opportunities of all such life ranks in the general class with education."

Dull, Sluggish Feeling

"BLACK-DRAUGHT is our household stand-by," says Mrs. Thomas H. Kell, who lives near Ellijay, Ga. "We have been using it years and years. My mother's family used it and we do here and my four sisters do, too.

"I could not run my house without Black-Draught. I give it to the children whenever they need a purgative, and both Mr. Kell and myself take it. As a medicine for sluggish liver and headache, and the ills that come with constipation, Black-Draught is fine.

"Lots of times I have felt dull and sluggish, my head would ache and I had to make a great effort to do my work. A little dose of Black-Draught would correct this feeling. We always keep it on the medicine shelf."

"Sonny"

Two characters, close doubles, appear in the picture with the above title, of which Richard Barthelmess, who made a great hit in "Tol'able David," plays the big role. Joe Peters, Hoboken poolroom proprietor, and Sonny Crosby, only heir of a wealthy blind mother, close doubles, but unknown to each other, bid affectionate farewell to their canine pals, "Lassie" and "Waggles," and don the khaki, when the big war starts. These two characters, of such striking resemblance, go "across," one is mortally wounded, and the Red Cross nurse is told how to save the dying soldier's mother great grief. The impersonation is perfect to everybody except the dog family, and from that circumstance grows double that cause distrust and difficulties—but you will have to see the picture to appreciate them. "WHY SHOULD YOU?"

SYNOPSIS.—Francis Ledsam defends Oliver Hilditch, a business man, in a murder case and succeeds in getting him off, only to be told by his wife that Hilditch is an arch-criminal. Ledsam, dining with his best friend, Andrew Wilmore, meets Hilditch and his wife and is invited to dine with them at their home. At dinner with the Hilditches Oliver shows Ledsam how he killed his victim and says his own death the same way would make his wife supremely happy. Returning home Ledsam receives a phone call from Margaret Hilditch saying Oliver has been murdered. Ledsam gets the coroner to set Oliver's death down as suicide. He admits to Wilmore that he has developed a keen interest in Margaret. He meets her father, Sir Timothy Brast, the evil shepherd, who tells him a crime will be committed before they leave the cafe.

CHAPTER V

It happened that the two men, waiting in the vestibule for Francis' car to crawl up to the entrance through the fog which had unexpectedly rolled up, heard the slight altercation which was afterward referred to as preceding the tragedy. The two young people concerned were standing only a few feet away, the girl pretty, a little peevish, an ordinary type; her companion, whose boyish features were marred with dissipation, a very passable example of the young man about town going a little beyond his tether.

"It's no good standing here, Victor!" the girl exclaimed, frowning. "The commissionaire's been gone ages already, and there are two others before us for taxis."

"We can't walk," her escort replied gloomily. "It's a foul night. Nothing to do but wait, what? Let's go back and have another drink."

The girl stamped her satin-shod foot impatiently.

"Don't be silly," she expostulated. "You know I promised Clara we'd be there early."

"All very well!" the young man grumbled. "But what can we do? We shall have to wait our turn."

"Why can't you step out and look for a taxi yourself?" she suggested. "Do, Victor," she added, squeezing his arm. "You're so clever at finding them up."

He made a feeble attempt, but lit a cigarette and turned up his coat collar.

"I'll do my best," he promised. "Don't go out without me."

"Try up toward Clarges street, and the other way," she advised earnestly.

Standing in perfect silence, with the attentive face of a hound, a word spoken as to demand carefully into the dark opening on the other side of the swollen door, was probably the last he was ever allured on earth.

Left alone, the girl began to shiver, as though suddenly cold. She turned around and glanced hastily back into the restaurant. At that moment she met the steady, questioning scrutiny of a pair of eyes. She stood as though fascinated. This was the second which every one talked of for possibly afterward. She could only see a man's head, a pair of broad shoulders, and the dark eye of which I spoke, followed by a crooked nose. A mass of dark, curling hair covered his forehead. Afterward, also.

There was the sound of some one pushing aside the wood of heavy revolving doors, the sound of hurried footsteps and excited voices. Then a terrific fuss, presently accounted. Something is believed to be a dispatch box of dimensions—was rushed in and left open the door, to the accompaniment of a babel of voices. Two men, Charles Bidlake, a well-known solicitor, and Dr. Ferrand, a physician, who, although not actively engaged in practice, was one of the few people allowed to remain within a short distance from the dazzling rooms, blocked out from the pavement even. On the fact that he knew he furnished the horrible record which the latter enjoyed in its way after its brief existence.

"Quick, girl! A doctor's here!"

Francis stood at the door in the girl's front, shielding her by a sweeping arm.

"A ballet?" he asked.

The doctor nodded.

"There's a hole a foot of the size before's heart," he whispered. "The murderer wasn't taking any chances, whoever he was."

The doctor rose to his feet.

"Nothing here can be done," he pronounced. "Keep the people out of here while I go and fetch my hat and coat. Afterward, I'll take the body to the mortuary when the ambulance arrives."

An attendant pushed his way through the crowd of people on the other side of the door.

"Miss Daisy Hyslop, young lady who was with Mr. Bidlake, has just fainted in the ladies' room, sir," he announced. "Could you come?"

"I'll be there immediately," the doctor promised.

The rest of the proceedings followed a normal course. The police arrived, took various notes, the ambulance followed a little later, the body was removed, and the little crowd of guests, still infected with a sort of awed excitement, were allowed to take their leave. Francis and Wilmore drove almost in silence to the former's rooms in Clarges street.

"Come up and have a drink, Andrew," Francis invited.

"I need it," was the half-choked response.

Francis led the way in silence up the two flights of stairs into his sitting room, mixed whisky-and-sodas from the decanter and syphon which stood upon the sideboard, and motioned his friend to an easy-chair. Then he gave form to the thought which had been haunting them both.

"What about our friend, Sir Timothy Brast?" he inquired. "Do you believe now that he was mystifying us?"

Wilmore dabbed his forehead with his handkerchief. It was a chilly evening, but there were drops of perspiration still standing there.

"Francis," he confessed, "it's horrible! I don't think realism like this attracts me. It's horrible! What are we going to do?"

"Nothing for the present," was the brief reply. "If we were to tell our story, we should only be laughed at. What there is to be done falls to my lot."

"Had the police anything to say about it?" Wilmore asked.

"Only a few words," Francis replied. "Shopland has it in hand. A good man but unimaginative. I've come across him in one or two cases lately. You'll find a little bit like this in the papers tomorrow. The murder is believed to have been committed by one of the gang of desperadoes who have infested the west-end during the last few months. You remember the affair at Albany court yard, and the smash-and-grab in Shepherd market only last week?"

"That seems to let Sir Timothy out," Wilmore remarked.

"There are many motives for crime besides robbery," Francis declared. "Don't be afraid, Andrew, that I am going to turn amateur detective and make the unravelment of this case all the more difficult for Scotland Yard. If I interfere, it will be on a certainty. Anyhow, don't think I'm mad, but I've taken up the challenge our great pal Brast-Lupin flung at me tonight. I've very little interest in who killed that boy, Victor Bidlake, or why, but I'm convinced of one thing—Brast knew about it, and if he is posing as a patron of crime on a great scale, sooner or later I shall get him. He may think himself safe, and he may have the courage of Beelzebub—he seems rather that type—but if my presentiment about him comes true, his number's up. I can't even grasp the meaning of his inviting us upon our presentation to-night. He made an enemy—he is thirsting for danger. He has found it!"

Wilmore lifted his glass thoughtfully. At the first whiff of tobacco he began to feel more normal.

"After all, Francis," he said, "aren't we a little overdoing tonight? Sir Timothy Brast is no adventurer. He is a person in the city, a persona grata wherever he chooses to go. He isn't a Bohemian in society. He isn't even dependent upon Debrett for his entertainment. You can't seriously imagine that a man with his possessions is likely to risk his life and liberty in becoming the inspirator of a band of cut-throats!"

Francis smiled. He, too, took the slip and had thrown himself into his favorite chair. He smiled confidently across at his friend.

"A millionaire with brains," he argued, "is just the one person in the world likely to weary of all ordinary forms of diversion. I begin to remember things about him already. Haven't you heard about his wonderful parties down at the Walled House?"

Wilmore struck the table by his side with his clenched fist.

"By George, that's it!" he exclaimed. "Who have?"

"I remember Baker talking about one last year," Francis continued, "never any details, but all kinds of mysterious hints—a sort of mixture between a Roman orgy and a chapter from the 'Arabian Nights'—dancers from Portugal, dancers from Africa and fighting men from Chicago."

"The fellow's magnificent, if any rate," Wilmore remarked.

His host smoked furiously for a moment.

"That's the worst of these multi-millionaires," he declared. "They think they can rule the world, traffic in human souls, buy morals, mock at the law. We shall see!"

"Do you know the thing that I found most interesting about him?" Wilmore asked.

"His black opals," the other suggested. "You're by the way of being a collector, aren't you?"

Wilmore shook his head.

"The fact that he is the father of Oliver Hilditch's widow."

Francis sat quite still for a moment. There was a complete change in his expression. He looked like a man who has received a shock.

"I forgot that," he muttered.

* * * * * * * *

Francis met Shopland one morning about a week later, on his way from Clarges street to his chambers in the Temple. The detective raised his hat and would have passed on, but Francis accosted him.

"Any progress, Mr. Shopland?" he inquired.

The detective fingered his small, sandy mustache. He was an insignificant-looking little man, undersized, with thin frame and watery eyes. His mouth, however, was hard, and there were tell-tale little lines at its corners.

"None whatever, I am sorry to say, Mr. Ledsam," he admitted. "At present we are quite in the dark."

"You found the weapon, I hear?"

Shopland nodded.

"It was just an ordinary service revolver, dating from the time of the war, exactly like a hundred thousand others. The inquiries we were able to make from it came to nothing."

"Where was it picked up?"

"In the middle of the waste plot of ground next to Soto's. The murderer evidently threw it there the moment he had discharged it. He must have been wearing rubber-soled shoes, for not a soul heard him go."

Francis nodded thoughtfully.

"I wonder," he said, after a slight pause, "whether it ever occurred to you to interview Miss Daisy Hyslop, the young lady who was with Bidlake on the night of his murder?"

"I called upon her the day afterward," the detective answered.

"She had nothing to say."

"Nothing whatever."

"Indirectly, of course," Francis continued, "the poor girl was the cause of his death. If she had not insisted upon his going out for a taxi-cab, the man who was loitering about would probably have never got hold of him."

The detective glanced up furtively at the speaker. He seemed to reflect for a moment.

"I gathered," he said, "in conversation with the commissionaire, that Miss Hyslop was a little impatient that night. It seems, however, that she was anxious to get to a ball which was being given down in Kensington."

"There was a ball, was there?" Francis asked.

"Without a doubt," the detective replied. "It was given by a Miss Clara Hallowell. She happens to remember urging Miss Hyslop to come on as early as possible."

They were waiting along the Mall now, motionless. The detective, who seemed to have been just a mouthful, had accommodated himself to Francis' destruction.

"Let me see, there was nothing stolen from the young man's person, was there?" Francis asked presently.

"Apparently nothing at all, sir."

"And I gather that you have made every possible inquiry as to the young man's relations with his friends?"

"So far as one can learn, sir, they seem to have been perfectly amicable."

"Of course," Francis remarked pensively, "this may have been quite a purposeless affair. The deed may have been committed by a man who was practically a lunatic, without any motive or reason whatever."

"Precisely so, sir," the detective agreed.

"But, all the same, I don't think it was."

"Neither do I, sir."

Francis smiled slightly.

"Shopland," he said, "if there is no further external evidence to be collected, I suggest that there is only one person likely to prove of assistance."

"And that one person, sir?"

"Miss Daisy Hyslop."

"The young lady whom I have already seen?"

Francis nodded.

"The young lady whom you have already seen," he assented. "At the same time, Mr. Shopland, we must remember this. If Miss Hyslop has any knowledge of the facts which are behind Mr. Bidlake's murder, it is more likely to be to her interest to keep them to herself, than to give them away to the police free grats and for nothing. Do you follow me?"

"Precisely, sir."

"That being so," Francis continued, "I am going to make a proposition to you for what it is worth. Where were you going when I met you this morning, Shopland?"

"To call upon you in Clarges street, sir."

"What for?"

"I was going to ask you if you would be so kind as to call upon Miss Daisy Hyslop, sir."

Francis smiled.

"Great minds," he murmured, "I will see the young lady this afternoon, Shopland."

The detective raised his hat. They had reached the spot where his companion turned off by the Horse Guards Parade.

"I may hope to hear from you, then, sir?"

"Within the course of a day or two, perhaps earlier," Francis promised.

CHAPTER VI

Armed with a powerful letter of introduction, Francis called on Miss Daisy Hyslop, who received him that afternoon in the sitting room of her little suite at the Milan. Her welcoming smile was plaintive and a little subdued, her manner undeniably gracious. She was dressed in black, a wonderful background for her really gorgeous hair, and her deportment indicated a recent loss.

She avoided his direct questioning for a time, but his cheque book finally loosened her tongue.

"I am afraid you will think that what I have to tell is very insignificant," she confessed. "Victor was one of those boys who always fancied themselves bored. He was bored with polo, bored with motoring, bored with the country and bored with town. Then quite suddenly during the last few weeks he seemed changed. All that he would tell me was that he had found a new interest in life. I don't know what it was but I don't think it was a nice one. He seemed to drop all his old friends, too, and go about with a new set altogether—not a nice set at all. He used to stay out all night, and he quite gave up going to dances and places where he could take me. Once or twice he came here in the afternoon, dead beat, without having been to bed at all, and before he could say half a dozen words he was asleep in my easy-chair. He used to mutter such horrible things that I had to wake him up."

"Was he ever short of money?" Francis asked.

She shook her head.

"Not seriously," she answered. "He was quite well-off, besides what his people allowed him. I was going to have a wonderful settlement as soon as our engagement was announced. However, to go on with what I was telling you, the very night before—it happened—he came in to see me, looking like nothing on earth. He cried like a baby, behaved like a lunatic, and called himself all manner of names. He had had a great deal too much to drink, and I gathered that he had seen something horrible. It was then he asked me to dine with him the next night, and told me that he was going to break altogether with his new friends. Something in connection with them seemed to have given him a terrible fright."

Francis nodded. He had the tact to abandon his curiosity at this precise point.

"The old story," he declared, "bad company and rotten habits. I suppose none are not to know that the young man usually carried a great deal of money about with him."

"It was so foolish of him," she answered eagerly. "I warned him about it so often. The police won't seem to do it but I am absolutely certain that he was robbed. I noticed when he paid the bill that he had a great wad of bank notes which were never discovered afterwards."

And with that information Francis had to be satisfied when he took his leave.

CHAPTER VII

It was after leaving Miss Daisy Hyslop's flat that the event to which Francis Ledsam had been looking forward more than anything else in the world, happened. It came about entirely by chance. There were no hints in the Strand. Francis himself had finished work for the day, and feeling disinclined for his usual rubber of bridge, he strolled homewards along the Mall. At the corner of Green park he came face to face with the woman who for the last few months had scarcely been out of his thoughts. Even in that first moment he realized to his pain that she would have avoided him if she could. They met, however, where the path narrowed, and he left her no chance to hold him. That curious impulse of Bohemianality which opens a conversation always with cut and dried banalities, saved them perhaps from a certain amount of embarrassment. Without any conscious suggestion, they found themselves walking side by side.

"I have been wanting to see you very much indeed," he said. "I even went so far as to wonder whether I dared call."

"Why should you?" she asked. "Our acquaintance began and ended in tragedy. There is scarcely any purpose in carrying it further."

He looked at her for a moment before replying. She was wearing black, but scarcely the black of a woman who sorrows. She was still frigidly beautiful, redolent, in all the details of her toilette, of that almost negative perfection which he had learned to expect from her. She suggested to him still that same sense of aloofness from the actualities of life.

"I prefer not to believe that it is ended," he protested. "Have you so many friends that you have no room for one who has never consciously done you any harm?"

She looked at him with some faint curiosity in her immobile features.

"Harm? No! On the contrary, I suppose I ought to thank you for your evidence at the inquest."

"Some part of it was the truth," he replied.

"I suppose so," she admitted dryly. "You told it very cleverly."

He looked her in the eyes.

"My profession helped me to be a good witness," he said. "As for the gist of my evidence, that was between my conscience and myself."

"Your conscience?" she repeated. "Are there really men who possess such things?"

"I hope you will discover that for yourself some day," he answered. "Tell me your plans. Where are you living?"

"For the present with my father in Curzon street."

"With Sir Timothy Brast?"

She assented.

"You knew him?" she asked indifferently.

"Very slightly," Francis replied. "We talked together, some nights ago, at Soto's restaurant. I am afraid that I did not make a very favorable impression upon him. I gathered, too, that he has somewhat eccentric tastes."

"I do not see a great deal of my father," she said. "We met, a few months ago, for the first time since my marriage, and things have been a little difficult between us—just at first. He really scarcely ever puts in an appearance at Curzon street. I dare say you have heard that he makes a hobby of an amazing country house which he has down the river."

"The Walled House," he ventured.

She nodded.

"I like you have heard of it. All London, they tell me, gossips about the entertainments there."

"Are they really as wonderful?" he asked.

"I have never been to one," she replied. "As a matter of fact, I have spent scarcely any time in England since my marriage. My husband was fond of travelling."

Notwithstanding the warm spring air he was conscious of a certain chilliness. Her level, indifferent tone seemed to him almost abnormally callous. A horrible realization flashed for a moment in his brain. She was speaking of the man whom she had killed!

"Your father mentioned a romance of mine," Francis told her. "I was at Soto's with a friend—Andrew Wilmore, the novelist—and to tell you the truth we were speaking of the shock I experienced when I realized that I had been dersthat every shirt of which I was capable to suing the life of—shall we say a criminal? Your father heard me say, he rather a contagious manner, perhaps, that in future I declared war against all crime and all criminals."

She smiled very faintly, a smile which had in it no single element of joy or humor.

"I can quite understand my father interesting," she said. "The power in being rather a patron of artistically perpetrated crime. Sue is his favorite sister, and I believe that he has exceedingly generous ideas as to dealing out lenient generosity. He was in prison once for six months at New Orleans for killing a man who insulted my mother. Nothing in the world would ever have convinced him that he had not done a perfectly justifiable thing."

"I am expecting to find him quite an interesting study, when I have him home," Francis pronounced. "My only fear is that he will count me an unfriendly person and refuse to have anything to do with me."

"The memory of what I have gone through will never pass."

Simple Line Now in Lead in Paris

A Parisienne well versed in the art of dress said recently that one saw as many and as smartly dressed women in New York as one would see in Paris. This may have been a subtle bit of flattery, says a fashion writer in the New York Herald, but in truth there is so much of interest in the costumes of the women in New York one may study them unceasingly without having finished the inexhaustible subject.

Lending additional point to the remark of the Parisienne is the protest from the other side that manufacturers on this side have exploited the very thing that the makers abroad have desired to feature. Before the directoire frocks from Paris had even had a chance to see the daylight of New York some of the shops were showing some very creditable productions in this period.

Both sides of the water the claim of creator of the tailor-made suit is put forth. Most authorities give the American designer the credit for its appearance in its present form, but it must be remembered that as long as three seasons ago the French designers began sending us an occasional suit which they called classic, from its perfectly plain, long lines. This suit had a slightly curved line at the sides.

Few Extreme Models.

At the present time the American woman is keeping up her reputation for clinging to a manner of dress very like a uniform. She adopts this form of dress because a costume quiet and not too extreme is in better taste in public places and in large cities. Perhaps this is the reason that the couturiers in Paris are very apt to have a second showing of gowns for their own Paris clientele after the openings for the American buyers are over. After they have shown them the extreme things—things which are frequently modified and changed later for the American woman—they settle down to picking and adapting for the French women, so the thing is about equal.

Few of the costumes seen at this time show anything startling in an extreme way, but the subtle changes that make for the correctness of dress are apparent. The extremely close small hat is worn by the younger set and the woman who can carry off the daring hats, but there are also hats which have more flare to the line as well as more trimming to soften the lines. The colors continue to be more or less conservative, too. Hats from Paris have not borne out the assertion that smallness was the desired note, although that is not to say that the extreme small hat will not be pushed by the milliner or demanded by the American woman.

Difference in Sleeves.

It is amusing to note that the length and breadth of sleeves varies with almost every make, and on whatever other point they may agree, the details of the sleeves seem to differ. The short sleeve is shown in the afternoon gowns by Paquin, or when they are long they are also loose. Other makers like the tight sleeve and introduce it on every occasion. A few of the frocks have the full gathered sleeve and the very elaborate dinner or afternoon dress is usually sleeveless. The very wide and open sleeve is not seen much on a very formal dress and then is of lace or chiffon.

Paris shows in his collection many white ensembles practical for many occasions when worn over a slip of black satin. The slips are, strangely enough, sometimes of the new artificial silk plaited. Embroidery in many colors is used to trim the blouses, which are either of white chiffon or crepe. A white chiffon blouse is belted at a low waistline and is open in front in coat effect. The embroidery is used as a border on the fronts and in a large triangular patch at the sides. The sleeves are long and at the wrist are gathered into very narrow cuffs, with great triangles of the embroidery just above.

Among the most striking of the models shown are those for the dinner hour or for late afternoon. Some rather more elaborate are practical for the dinner hour and then for the theater or informal dance afterward. One could find very useful for just such occasions a dinner frock of pink chiffon by Charlotte. It has two curved flounces at the bottom of the front of the skirt and at the back of the dress is a little cape of lace, otherwise the dress is a straight chemise. The flounces of the lace are raised at the sides so that they almost reach the hipline and a rosette of the lace is used as a finishing point to the ruffles.

For Afternoon Tea Hour.

For the restaurant or for the afternoon tea hour there is a frock by Caret which probably will be the forerunner of other models on the same type. It is of beige georgette, with wide bands of lace set in both the cape and the dress.

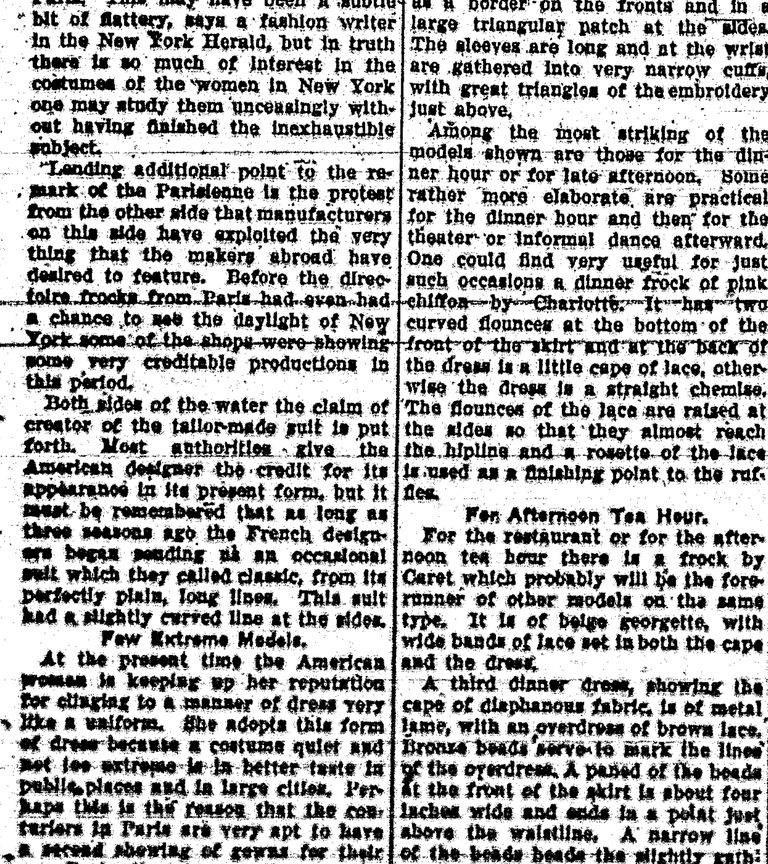
A third dinner dress, showing the cape of diaphanous fabric, is of metal lame, with an overdress of brown lace. Bronze beads serve to mark the lines of the overdress. A panel of the beads at the front of the skirt is about four inches wide and ends in a point just above the waistline. A narrow line of the beads beads the slightly gathered skirt at a low waistline. The waist of the lace is open in a deep point over the metal lame, and the cape is attached at the shoulder line and down the long, tight sleeves, also of lace. Underneath the metal cloth is cut in a straight line across from under the arms, with narrow shoulder straps making a plain straight slip.

Much amusement had been created by the choice of the names which the French couturiers have selected for their most fascinating gowns. Evidently they intend to convey a compliment when they select names which they consider typically American and the graceful set is received as such. Nevertheless one gasps at a most charming coat by Jean Patou when the name is announced as "Yes, We Have No Bananas." Other names are quite as strange.

Phildeh blonde is the color of the velvet of which the coat in question was made, and the embroidery was in a rather conventional design in gold, silver and bronze, with spaces cut out to show a lining of self-colored satin. Fitch fur was used for the very large collar on this wrap.

Trimming Ideas.

As a matter of fact the trimming ideas of the eighteen-thirties and any period available have been borrowed to trim certain types of dresses of the day. Paquin uses the looped fabric trimmings of the same material as the dress, and on his taffetas for afternoon wear trimmings of narrow pettings are seen which start at the waistline and continue in spiral fashion around the skirt to the hemline. The Miller Sears use tucks on many of their models, bands of the pucking being set between bands of the plain material. Clipped leather trimming is seen in border effects all around the edges of some of the wraps, either matching coat or capes for afternoon wear.



The material is black satin and the dress has a scarf intending in flesh pink crepe. The scarf is part of the dress in the front, being set on at a joint at the back and knotted in fanny fashion. At the right a beige dinner dress of georgette follows the mode in this rather elaborate design. Trimming consists solely in the pulled collar and the whole is set undone of lace dyed in the exact shade.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Third Child Labor Amendment Bill

WASHINGTON.—An amendment to the Constitution to give congress the power to regulate and prohibit the labor of children under eighteen years of age has been favorably reported to the house by the judiciary committee by a vote of 14 to 0. It provides for the suspension of all state laws that would conflict with the provisions of the amendment.

The committee requested the rules committee to grant a special rule giving the amendment an early place on the calendar.

The amendment is scheduled to come up in the house before very long. A definite determination to give it a place in the calendar already had been reached by the Republican steering committee, and Chairman Snell of the rules committee stated there was no doubt that the committee would grant a special rule. The plan is to call up the amendment after the immigration bill is disposed of.

The present effort to reach the child labor problem through a constitutional amendment resulted from the action of the United States Supreme court in twice holding federal child labor statutes to be unconstitutional.

The first of these laws was enacted in 1916. It sought to close the channels of interstate commerce to the products of child labor. It was in operation for only nine months and three days before being pronounced unconstitutional.

The second act was passed in 1919. This time the objective was sought through a tax of 10 per cent on the net profits of establishments employing children contrary to certain standards. This law was in effect for three years when it was declared unconstitutional in 1922.

Advocates of the amendment realize the requirement of a two-thirds majority in each branch makes the result somewhat in doubt. Many of the Southern Democrats and some of the Republicans are expected to follow the minority on the judiciary committee, which opposed the amendment on the grounds it invaded state rights.

In the event the amendment is submitted to the states, it will require favorable action of three-fourths, or 36 states, to ratify it.

Work Tells Congress of Colorado Dam

THE Colorado river is a "local menace" and the government should determine at once a definite plan for its control and conversion into a national asset, Secretary Work has declared in a report to congress.

"The scope of this subject in many directions, its urgency in some, and its opportunities for developments, together demand the determination of a definite government policy," the secretary said.

Accompanying the report was one compiled by the special committee of engineers appointed by Doctor Work to collect data on the subject prepared by the bureau of reclamation, geological survey and federal power commission. It contained no definite recommendations.

The proposed Boulder dam, the most important of all plans for utilizing the wasted energy of the river, with power plants and transmission lines, and the all-American canal which would supply water to thousands of farmers in the Imperial and Coachella valleys in California, after problems, the secretary said, "not to be passed upon by one man alone."

On the contrary, he added, they should challenge the judgment of the country's ablest engineers and be subject to deliberate review by the congress.

Declaring the cost of the dam and its subsidiary features, including the irrigation canal, should be estimated at $200,000,000 providing a margin of safety for the government, the secretary suggested that "congress itself should appraise the necessity of an outlay of such magnitude and justify the financial obligations to be assumed by the government before beginning this project."

Flood control, considered for that purpose alone, the secretary said, "appears to be practicable" and would "involve the minimum expenditures to effect, of approximately $20,000,000." A control project, as an individual proposition, he said, "promises no direct return of expenditure to the government." Irrigation of farm lands, he added, has been a recognized practice for more than twenty years, "but reclamation has not made adequate, direct returns to the government in dollars, although it has invited agricultural development not otherwise possible, and is a policy that should be fostered."

Regarding the all-American canal, the secretary said that water now was carried to the Imperial valley through a cut in Mexico, and for obvious reasons "this is open to many substantial objections." He estimated the cost of the canal, capable of irrigating 600,000 acres, at $31,000,000.

To Probe Northern Pacific Land Grant

CONGRESS is likely to do more investigating—this time into the claim of the Northern Pacific railway under a congressional grant of 1864 to 3,000,000 acres of land in the national forests.

The lands involved cover an area nearly three-fourths as large as Massachusetts, and are situated in Washington, Idaho and Montana. The forest service holds that the Northern Pacific land grants have been fully settled, and that inasmuch as the railroad has received from the sale of lands, granted to assure its construction, nearly twice the cost of the railroad, congress should now deny the corporation the right to take over the 2,000,000 acres which it claims under the original grant. Said Mr. Wallace in his letter to the President:

"I believe an investigation by congress would show: That the total gross receipts of the Northern Pacific to June 30, 1917, from the sale of the lands from its grant amounted to $156,115,388.14; the cost of constructing the road did not exceed $70,000,000; that the Northern Pacific failed to construct 1,397.21 miles of its railroad within the time required by law, thereby rendering the granted lands subject to forfeiture; that the Northern Pacific failed to dispose of certain of its lands to settlers at not to exceed $2.50 per acre, as required by law; that the Northern Pacific failed to dispose of hundreds of thousands of acres of its lands at public sale, as required by law; that hundreds of thousands of acres of poor land in the Northern Pacific grant were wrongfully classified; that under a rule of law laid down by the supreme court, the Northern Pacific has been erroneously allowed 1,900,000 acres too much land in the state of Washington; that over 800,000 acres of land credited to the Northern Pacific should be corrected because of erroneous location of the limit lines."

In his letter to Senator Lenroot, chairman of public lands committee, President Coolidge said in part:

"For the reasons set forth by the secretary of agriculture, I heartily endorse in his recommendation that the entire matter should receive the attention of congress. I therefore urge upon your committee the importance of action as early as possible, which shall look to the fullest protection of the public interests herewith concerned; that the legal and equitable claims of the grantees should be fully weighed and safeguarded goes without saying, but it is still more important that the interests of the public, both in the preservation and conservation of valuable natural resources and in the accomplishment of the purposes for which the grant was made, be adequately protected in an equitable settlement of this question."

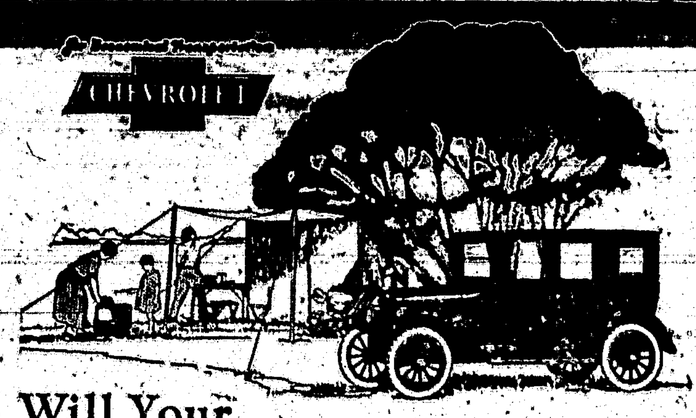
"Girl Scout Little House" Dedicated

MRS. CALVIN COOLIDGE, wife of the President, honorary president of the Girl Scouts of America, laid the cornerstone of the "Girl Scout Little House" the other day at a ceremonial ceremony at Eighteenth street and New York avenue.

The "Girl Scout Little House" will be former "Home, Sweet Home," which was erected on the grounds behind the treasury, and after much discussion as to its ultimate fate was given to the girl scouts by the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the organization which first had the building erected for "Better Homes in America" week last year.

Mrs. Herbert Hoover, wife of the secretary of commerce and national president of the Girl Scouts, with several members of the organization's executive committee, completed the cornerstone laying. Mrs. Hoover and Mrs. Charles Hamlin, District of Columbia commissioner of the Girl Scouts, spoke on the achievements of the organization from a practical standpoint, and Mrs. Arthur Choate of New York spoke on the spiritual benefits. It was explained that the "Girl Scout Little House" would be ready for use within a short time, and that it would be an experimental center for Girl Scout home-making activities.

Among the board members present were Mrs. Leo Arnstein, Mrs. Nicholas Brady, Mrs. Choate, Mrs. Lyman Delano, Mrs. Frederick Edey, Mrs. Frank Mace, Miss Llewellyn Parsons, Mrs. W. N. Rothschild, Mrs. Percy Williams, Mrs. Oliver Wilding and Mrs. Jane Deer Ripple of New York; Mrs. Julius Rosenwald of Chicago, Mrs. John Barker of Minneapolis, Dean Arnold and Mrs. Arthur Hartt of Boston, Miss Gwen Martin of Philadelphia, Mrs. William Phelps of New Haven, Mrs. Clifford Smith of Cincinnati, Mrs. Edward Shaw of Detroit, Mrs. William Hoffman of Burlington, N. J.; Mrs. Tillotson of Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. H. H. Gingstead of Harrisburg, Pa., and Mrs. Harper, Mrs. Helen R. Sandler and Mrs. Frederick Brooks, all of Washington.



Will Your Family Be Happy This Spring?

Suppose you have definitely decided to buy a Chevrolet this Spring.

That does not necessarily mean that you are going to get it.

Anyone posted on conditions in the automobile business will tell you that thousands of families are going to be unable to get cars this Spring. That has been true almost every Spring for years, but the shortage in April, May and June, this year, is going to be more serious than ever before.

The only way to be sure of a Chevrolet this Spring is to order it NOW.

If you do not want to pay for it in full at this time, any Chevrolet dealer will arrange terms to suit your convenience, so you can pay as your ride.

You will be surprised to learn how easy it is to pay for a Chevrolet.

Will Chevrolet Advance Prices? Ten makes of automobiles have already advanced in price. In spite of increased costs of materials, the Chevrolet price is still the same. How long we cannot guarantee. To make sure of your Chevrolet at present low prices

LOCAL AND PERSONAL

Mrs. J. M. Cravens has returned from a visit to Santa Rita, Grant county.

Mrs. T. A. Hagee and son Scott were here Wednesday from their home on Little Creek.

Silas May came in Sunday morning from Hot Springs, and spent several days here.

W. H. Sevier was here Tuesday from Capitan, greeting old friends and looking at court proceedings.

Mrs M. F. Wells came up from El Paso Monday, and will visit with her sister, Mrs. Oliver Peaker, at White Oaks.

James E. Hurt arrived Tuesday from his home at Ovalo, Texas, and will probably remain through the term of court.

Mrs. J. P. Nash and her little daughter Jacqueline returned yesterday from a three weeks' visit to Mrs. Nash's mother in El Paso.

J. C. Gilbert, Roswell attorney, was here at the opening of court. He expects to return during the term to look after the interests of clients before the court.

W. T. Brothers, formerly a practicing attorney here but now located in El Paso, was here yesterday attending to some matters before the District Court.

Col. G. W. Prichard came in Sunday from Santa Fe, and will remain during the court term. The Colonel is an old Lincoln county citizen and enjoys a large practice here.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry G. Gallacher and Mrs. Fred Cleghorn were down Wednesday from the White Oaks to meet Mrs. Collier, mother of Mrs. Gallacher and Mrs. Cleghorn.

Ellis O. Jones was a visitor Tuesday from his home north of Capitan. Mr. Jones owns the old Jacobs place, and adjoining holdings, in the Capitans, which combined make a fine ranch.

J. M. Hawkins, an old and well known newspaper man, this state, now living at La Luz, was here yesterday. The smell of printing ink still attracts the old veteran and he drifted into our office while here and made a pleasant call.

Major W. H. H. Llewellyn came up from Las Cruces Monday to attend this term of court. The Major was formerly district attorney in this district, and is an old member of the bar.

John H. Phillips was in town Saturday from his ranch beyond White Oaks. Mr. Phillips has been ill during the winter and this was his first visit to Carrizozo for several months.

FOR SALE:—Wire, hog fence, chicken netting, etc.—The Titsworth Co., Inc., Capitan.

Mrs. Harriet Robertson was brought down Wednesday morning and placed in the Johnson Hospital. She was suffering from stomach trouble. Her condition now, however, is somewhat improved.

During the year 1920 the Ford Touring Car sold at $775.50 delivered in Carrizozo. Today the same car, with Starter and Demountable Rims and 42 other individual improvements, retails at $486.00 F.O.B. Carrizozo.

Mrs. E. W. Harris returned Sunday from Venus, Texas, to which point she had been been called by the illness of her mother. The mother improved and returned with Mrs. Harris as far as El Paso.

Peter E. Johnson returned Saturday from Mexico, and will probably not return. Little Pete accompanied the shipment of cattle to Mexico in December, 1922, and except for a visit or two since remained there until now.

Easter Cantata.

The Easter Cantata at the Crystal theatre, Sunday night, attracted a large crowd, and the program evoked much favorable comment. Illness interfered with the carrying out of the published program, but extra numbers were added—a saxaphone solo and a vocal solo—which supplied the deficiency and added greatly to the evening's entertainment. The silver offering produced a fund generously above the expenses incurred for which the promoters are duly.

Mrs. Maxwell Succumbs

Mrs. Frank Maxwell passed to her rest Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, following an illness of almost two months duration. She suffered an attack of rheumatism and for weeks her life hung by a thread, the malady affecting her heart. A heart specialist was called in consultation, but improvement was slow, and death hovered over the household many long days and nights. Finally her condition improved and family and friends breathed a sigh of relief, when pneumonia developed and the hard, stern fight began over again. The angel of death again drew near, but again she rallied, and it seemed the battle for life had been won. False were hopes, however, for she had another relapse last week and gradually continued to sink until the hour named, when death mercifully ended her suffering.

The funeral was held at the Methodist church on Wednesday afternoon, attended by a large number of friends by whom the departed wife and mother had been held in the highest esteem. Rev. W. R. McPherson conducted the service, following which the body was borne to the station and placed on No. 4 to be conveyed to the old home, Wardensville, West Virginia. The husband and little son and daughter, Warden and Mary, accompanied the remains.

Mrs. Maxwell, whose maiden name was Warden, was born in West Virginia, July 9, 1886, and was therefore in her 36th year. She was married to Frank Maxwell in 1912, and had since continuously made Lincoln county her home. Besides the husband and two children, Warden and Mary, she is survived by father and mother, two sisters and a brother in the east, and two brothers here, Guy and R. E. P. Warden.

Mrs. Maxwell was a woman of charming character, a generous and kindly neighbor, a staunch friend and a devoted wife and mother. Her death has cast a gloom over the entire community, and the deepest sympathy is expressed for the sorrowing husband, the little motherless children, and the brothers here and the family in the old home.

Death of W. H. Osborn

William H. Osborn died in Albuquerque yesterday morning, according to a wire received here during the day. Mr. Osborn was well known to many of our people, and his death is deeply regretted by all. He was operator at the local station for several years, and later was engaged in abstracting, real estate and rentals. He was a man of fine attainments and was one of the most pleasant men of our acquaintance. He left here about five years ago, and had spent the greater part of that period in Albuquerque.

Lost the Game

Carrizozo lost the ball game at Fort Stanton last Sunday by a score of 10 to 2. We have not heard any definite excuses for such a result, but Manager Dawson says we'll show a different score next Sunday when the same teams will battle on the local grounds. Let's all go and see of what mettle our boys are made; and, as an evidence of faith, let's all go to the dance tomorrow night to help swell the receipts to meet the expenses that will be incurred in bringing the visitors here.

Safe Blown and Contents Rifled

The safe of the White Oaks Mercantile Company was blown Sunday night, or in the early hours of Sunday morning, and its cash contents taken. Discovery of the burglary was not made until Monday morning, when Wayne Van Schoyck, the manager, opened up at the usual hour.

Mr. Van Schoyck made no investigation, in order that nothing would be disturbed, and immediately notified the officials here, and also wired the inspector-in-charge at Denver, as the safe also contained the post office funds and property.

Deputies Kemp and Dow took the two blood hounds at the jail and put them on the trail, after giving them a scent of the perpetrator, from the tools and other things handled about the safe. The dogs followed the trail directly to a certain house, and were again brought back to the scene of the burglary, and the dogs followed the trail to the same house as before. The man of the house was not at home at the time, but the man staying in the house was Clyde Fargier, and he has since been placed under arrest.

LATER—The accused man was released and returned home, no charge having been filed. The opinion seems to prevail that the guilty parties cleverly threw suspicion on Fargier while covering up their own trail.

Neither the authorities nor the ones losing the money have made public the amount lost, but it is surmised that it was a considerable sum, as both the company and post office funds were taken.
