OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 24 | CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, JULY 4, 1924 | NUMBER 26

Southern Pacific Offers $57,400,000 For South-Western

Purchase price of the El Paso & Southwestern by the Southern Pacific is to be $57,400,000, including $28,000,000 par value stock in the Southern Pacific and $29,400,000 5 per cent collateral trust bonds.

Statements issued by William Sproule, San Francisco, president of Pacific system of the Southern Pacific, and A. E. Sweet, vice president and general manager of the El Paso & Southwestern here show.

Mr. Sproule's statement was received Tuesday night by Edward McClanahan, assistant general freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific here. Both statements were apropos of the filing for approval of the merger with the interstate commerce commission Tuesday.

Application also was made of the commission to build the Phoenix, Ariz., main line, in the name of the Arizona Eastern, from Picacho, 46 miles west of Tucson, through Peoenix to Dome, 23 miles east of Yuma. Track from Phoenix Hassayampa would be rehabilitated.

Included in the El Paso & South western is the Nacozari, Son., Mexico line and other subsidiaries Obligations of the El Paso & Southwestern outstanding on April 30, date of merger agreement, do not exceed $71,100,000 it is stated.

"Two years after the certificate is granted the Southern Pacific will have, except for 64 miles, a double track service from El Paso to Yuma," said Mr. Sproule. "The new lines to be constructed and the service that will follow are to themselves great factors toward the development of this rich territory. The cities of this territory, notably El Paso, Deming, Douglas, Bisbee, Lordsburg, Tucson, Mesa, Temple, Phoenix and Yuma, will find their interests surely advanced by the construction of this line and the development that will follow the enlarged activities of the railroad. It is their purpose in presenting this case to the interstate commerce commission to do all they can to secure its approval."

Berkley's Bludgeon

A copy of the initial issue of Berkley's Bludgeon came to our desk this week. It is published in Las Vegas, by Earl Berkley, with Omar Barker and O R. Moen as associate editors. It is a newsy and pointy eight page, four column sheet. Its object, apparently, is to reform, or bludgeon, corrupt politicians of all parties. Following is a sample:

"New Mexico is noted for her politics. The Sunshine State may not contain in its boundaries many blooming farms nor belching smokestacks of huge industrial plants but we can boast of our politicians. They have placed New Mexico on the map—the whole nation knows about New Mexico now, for we have had "Fall's Ring," "the Czar of San Miguel county," and "the handsomest sheriff in the United States." However, the Bludgeon is not going to "Turn on the Light" but rather will shield all politicians—the proudest product of New Mexico—from the glaring rays of publicity and censure. We are going to be the 'Protector of the Poor." Sympathy is our motto and get what you can, while you can get it."

"We are so discouraged. Our most noted citizen broke faith with his native state. Why could not Albert B. Fall have located his Teapot Dome in New Mexico? Throughout all the seething sensations and thrills of the Teapot Dome investigation, we have been very peeved at Mr. Fall, not on account of the little black satchel with the "wad," but because he neglected to give his state of New Mexico any of the publicity about its oil resources that has redounded to the credit of Wyoming. We hope the next cabinet officer from New Mexico will remember his native state. Serve some California spirits, please!"

"With all the Democrats in New York for the national convention, it would be an opportune time for the New Mexico Republicans to bombard the Capital city with chlorine gas bombs, like the Rhode Island state senators, and capture the state government."

Youth Gets Pardon from Mrs. Chacon

Joseph Maloney, a youth who was serving a term in the state reformatory, was given a conditional pardon by Mrs. Soledad C. Chacon, acting governor—the first granted by her since she took charge of the chief executive's office.

Maloney was committed in 1923 for breaking into the Rolland drug store at Carrizozo, and was serving from three to five years. He was sent up from Lincoln county.

One of the terms on which Mrs. Chacon released him is that his father pay his way back to his home in Chicago and get employment for the youth.

The superintendent of the reformatory recommended clemency saying Maloney had an excellent record, was a splendid worker, courteous and obedient to all the rules of the institution.

Nomination Of LaFollette Regarded Sure

Cleveland, Ohio, July 2.—Communists will not have a part in the conference for progressive political action, which meets here July 4th, if the sentiment of the national committee, meeting here today is carried out.

This committee agreed that the credentials of all delegates shall be critically inspected and that communists, when known to be such, shall not be seated. Each delegate, it was said, will have to report an accredited organization.

Final plans for the conference of progressive political action convention here July 4th were to be discussed by the national committee at its first session in Cleveland today. The credentials committee also was expected to meet.

With the nomination of Senator LaFollette virtually a certainty, the committee was expected to discuss vice presidential possibilities, this question apparently being the only important one not decided. Bishop Francis J. McConnell of the Methodist church man of the inter-church world committee, D. B. Robertson, president of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, and virtually all of the progressive list of senators have been mentioned. Arthur E. Holder, executive secretary of the conference, said.

Mr. Volstead can not object to the party platforms. There is no kick in them worth mentioning. —N. Y. Herald Tribune.

A Receiver Appointed For Electric Light & Power Plant

Henry Lutz, of this city, has been appointed Receiver of the Electric Light & Power Plant property, of White Oaks, by Judge Edwin Mechem on the application of James L. Tyler, in a case entitled: "Tyler vs. Oldfather and Gaylord."

The Electric Light and Power Company property was recently transferred to Tyler and Gaylord by the owner, H. B. Oldfather.

The Company's office is now in in the Carrizozo Trading Company's store, where those knowing themselves to be indebted to the company are requested to call and settle their account with the Receiver.

The School Bond Election

The special school bond election was held in the court house Monday, June 30, the object of which was to get the wish of the people as to the wisdom of issuing bonds for $6,000 for a heating plant, drinking fountain, etc. in district No. 7, Carrizozo.

The vote was very light, very little interest being taken in it pro or con, as but 26 votes were cast—22 for and 4 against. The pupils can study this winter in properly heated, comfortable rooms, and have plenty of water for all purposes.

Freight and Wages

"A railroad today," said Dr. David Friday, a well known student of economics, "must haul a ton of freight seventy-five miles to buy a cross tie, to buy a machinist wrench 113 miles, to pay a machinist for one days work 634 miles.

These are vivid figures. They will change nobody's views about the rate of freight charges or the necessity of regulating those rates but they show why railroad operation today is not a primrose path. They show, too, what co-operation does. Suppose the machinist had personally, instead of doing a day's job for a day's wages, to transport a ton of household furnishings and provisions across the state of Nebraska, as so many men did in the great treks westward in the fifties?

Whether the machinist is better off now than he was then can be argued, but that the world has seen for hundreds of lives how to use it could support that is quite interestingly obvious.—Los Angeles Examiner.

Sundays Ball Game At Fort Stanton

The ball game pulled off at Fort Stanton last Sunday was, we learn, a gruelling contest between two good teams. Quite a number motored over to see it. The Indians put up a first class game, but were defeated by the Stanton team by a small margin—training and head work turned the trick.

Those who will be at Nogal, or elswhere, on the 4th, should make a date for Fort Stanton on the 5th or 6th to see the El Paso "Spinners" mix with the Fort Stanton nine. It promises to be the cleverest exhibition of ball playing ever seen in Lincoln county. A large number of people who have decided to spend the 4th at Nogal say they will be at Fort Stanton the following day or Sunday, or bust a tire.

Deadlocked

New York, July 4.—The situation remains practically the same. The wisest heads at the convention are unable to settle question. McAdoo and Smith seem determined to fight to a finish, while the most likely "dark horses" have withdrawn their names.

Spinners Win Ball Game

The El Paso Spinners won the ball game at Fort Stanton on the 4th by a knat's heel. It was a fine exhibition of base ball. The score was 5 to 4. The games scheduled for Saturday and Sunday are expected to draw large crowds.

A Big Thing for New Mexico

This is interesting and significant. A high official of the Southern Pacific writes:

"Considering the merger of the Southern Pacific and El Paso and Southwestern lines, I am at a loss to understand why there should be any objection to this. It is [illegible] strength and [illegible] attitude and puts New Mexico [illegible] much with a great deal of territory direct that they have never enjoyed before, certainly cannot help but result in an increased production and [illegible] and economy of coal from New Mexico mines. New Mexico will profit to Texas and to every [illegible] from the latest map will help [illegible] from highway fund and $74,805 from fuel [illegible] New Mexico will get from the federal government fund.

State Bank Department

Santa Fe, July 1.—The agricultural depression in New Mexico and its concommittant result of causing a large number of banks to close has placed a great burden on the office of the State Bank Examiner.

But despite the department's increased and exacting duties, State Bank Examiner L. B. Gregg and his two deputies, J. D. Herron Jr., and W. P. Saunders, have maintained their office without exceeding the appropriation, allowed their department by the state legislature of 1923. In their observance of the pledge of the administration of Governor Hinkle, State Bank Examiner Gregg and his department severely taxed their physical strength but, according to reports, from the leading bankers of the state, the department has operated very efficiently and has afforded much assistance to the banks.

The department last year cut down expenses of administration by the sum of $1800. Although the court work and receiverships in the case of closed banks has hindered the examination of banks to a considerable degree, the department has collected in fees as much money as has been expended.

More Road Money

The Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1925 makes an appropriation of $6,000,000 for forest roads and trails and authorizes the secretary of agriculture to incur obligations, approve projects and enter into contracts for an additional $4,000,000. The $6,000,000 appropriation includes the $1,000,000 as authorized for expenditure in the agricultural appropriation act for the fiscal year 1924. Therefore, the additional amount made available for the fiscal year 1925 is $5,000,000. By Section 23 of the federal highway act, this amount is divided into two equals—$2,500,000 for the Federal Highway Fund and $2,500,000 for the Forest Service Road.

The appropriations have been made to the states which contain [illegible] and [illegible] of the [illegible] for an increased production and [illegible] and economy of coal from New Mexico mines. New Mexico will profit to Texas and to every [illegible] from the latest map will help [illegible] from highway fund and $74,805 from fuel [illegible] New Mexico will get from the federal government fund.

RAILROAD MERGER APPLICATION MADE.

El Paso, Texas, July 1, 1924

Application on behalf of the Southern Pacific Company and El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Company was filed today with the Inter-State Commerce Commission, Washington, by representatives of the two companies, asking for an Order approving and authorizing the proposed unifying of the two properties through an exchange of securities.

There was filed at the same time with the Commission an application on behalf of the Arizona Eastern Railroad for certificate of convenience and necessity covering proposed new construction between a point near Toltec (about 31 miles east of Maricopa) on the Southern Pacific via Phoenix to a point on the Southern Pacific just east of Yuma. It is the intention of applicants to do all they can to secure favorable action by the Commission as soon as possible.

The El Paso & Southwestern will receive from the Southern Pacific $28,000,000 par value of Southern Pacific stock and $29,400,000 face value of Southern Pacific five per cent bonds. These securities cover not only the El Paso & Southwestern Railroad but the Nacozari Railroad and other valuable assets in the treasury of the El Paso & Southwestern.

"Dear child," he said, "if I could roll back the years, if from all my deeds of sin, as the world knows sin, I could cancel one, there is nothing in the world would make me happier than to ask you to come with me as my cherished companion to just whatever part of the world you cared for. But I have been playing pitch and toss with fortune all my life, since the great trouble came which changed me so much. Even at this moment, the coin is in the air which may decide my fate."

"You mean?" she ventured.

"I mean," he continued, "that after the event of which we spoke last night, nothing in life has been more than an incident, and I have striven to find distraction by means which none of you—not even you, Lady Cynthia, with all your breadth of outlook and all your craving after new things—would justify."

"Nothing that you may have done troubles me in the least," she assured him. "I do wish that you could put it all out of your mind and let me help you to make a fresh start."

"I may put the thing itself out of my mind," he answered sadly, "but the consequences remain."

"There is a consequence which threatens?" she asked.

He was silent for a moment. When he spoke again, he had recovered all his courage.

"There is the coin in the air of which I spoke," he replied. "Let us forget it for a moment. Of the minor things I will make you my judge. Ledsam and Margaret are coming to my party tomorrow night. You, too, shall be my guest. Such secrets as lie on the other side of that wall shall be yours. After that, if I survive your judgment of them, and if the coin which I have thrown into the air comes down to the tune I call after that—I will remind you of something which happened last night of something which, if I live for many years, I shall never forget."

She leaned towards him. Her eyes were heavy with longing. Her arms, sweet and white in the dusky twilight, stole instinctively out.

"Last night was so long ago. Won't you take a later memory?"

Once again she lay in his arms, still and content.

As they crossed the lawn, an hour or so later, they were confronted by Hedges who hastened, in fact, to meet them.

"You are being asked for on the [illegible]," he announced. "It is a trunk call. I have switched it through to the study."

"Any enemy?" Sir Timothy asked in undertone.

The man hesitated. His eyes sought his master's respectfully but charged with meaning.

"The gentleman refuses to give his name, sir, but I fancied that I recognized his voice. I think it would be as well for you to speak, sir."

Lady Cynthia rose into a chair.

"You shall go and answer your telephone call," she said. "And have Hedges to stand by with one of those strange drinks. I believe I see some of my faults in champagne."

Sir Timothy made his way into the house and into the low, oak-panelled study with its dark furniture and latticed windows. The telephone bell began to ring again as he entered. He took up the receiver.

"Sir Timothy?" a rather hoarse, strained voice asked.

"I am speaking," Sir Timothy replied. "Who is it?"

The man at the other end spoke as though he were out of breath. Nevertheless, what he said was distinct enough.

"I am John Wanet."

"Well?"

"I am just ringing you up," the voice went on, "to give you what's called a sporting chance. There's a boat from Southampton sailing tomorrow. If you're wise, you'll catch it. Or better still, get off on your own yacht. They carry a wireless now, these big steamers. Don't give a criminal much of a chance, does it?"

"I am to understand, then," Sir Timothy said calmly, "that you have laid your information?"

"I've parted with it and serve you right," was the bitter reply. "I'm not saying that you're not a brave man, Sir Timothy, but there's such a thing as being foolhardy, and that's what you are. I wasn't asking you for half your fortune, nor even a dab of it, but if your life wasn't worth a few hundred pounds—you, with all that money—well, it wasn't worth saving. So now you know. I've spent ninepence to give you a chance to hop it, because I met a gent who has been good to me. I've had a good dinner and I feel merciful. So there you are."

"Do I gather," Sir Timothy asked, in a perfectly level tone, "that the deed is already done?"

"It's already done and done thoroughly," was the uncompromising answer. "I'm not ringing up to ask you to change your mind. If you were to offer me five thousand now, or ten, I couldn't stop the bally thing. You've a sporting chance of getting away if you start at once. That's all there is to it."

"You have nothing more to say?"

"Nothing! Only I wish to God I'd never stepped into that Mayfair agency. I wish I'd never gone to Mrs. Hilditch's as a temporary butler. I wish I'd never seen any one of you! That's all! You can go to h—l which way you like, only, if you take my advice, you'll go by the way of South America. The scaffold isn't every man's fancy."

There was a burr of the instrument and then silence. Sir Timothy carefully replaced the receiver, paused on his way out of the room to smell a great bowl of lavender, and passed back into the garden.

"More applicants for invitations?" Lady Cynthia inquired lazily.

Her host smiled.

"Not exactly! Although," he added, "as a matter of fact my party would have been perhaps a little more complete with the presence of the person to whom I have been speaking."

Lady Cynthia pointed to the stream, down which the punt was slowly drifting. The moon had gone behind a cloud, and Francis' figure, as he stood there, was outlined and ghostly. A thought seemed to flash into her mind. She leaned forward.

"There," she said, "he told me that he was your enemy."

"The term is a little melodramatic," Sir Timothy protested. "We look at certain things from opposite points of view. You see, my prospective son-in-law, if ever he becomes that, represents the law—the Law with a capital 'L'—which recognizes no human errors or weaknesses, and judges crime out of the musty books of the lawgivers of old. He makes of the law a mechanical thing which can neither bend nor give, and he judges humanity from the same standpoint. Yet at heart he is a good fellow and I like him."

"And you?"

"My weakness lies the other way," he confessed, "and my sympathy is with those who do not fear to make their own laws."

She held out her hand, white and spectral in the semi-dusk. At the other end of the lawn, Francis and Margaret were disembarking from the punt.

"Does it sound too shockingly obvious," she whispered, "if I say that I want to make you cry now?"

It would have pained anybody, except, perhaps, Lady Cynthia herself, to have detected the sudden alternation in Sir Timothy's demeanor during the following day, when he made brief appearances at the Depository, or at the dance which was served a little earlier than usual, before his departure for the scene of the festivities. Once he paused in the act of helping himself to some dish and listened for a moment to the sound of voices in the hall, and when a fanfare there up he set down his glass and again betrayed some interest.

"The mail with my frock, thank heavens!" Lady Cynthia announced, landing out of the window. "My last anxiety is removed. I am looking forward now to a wonderful night."

"You may very easily be disappointed," her host warned her. "My entertainments appeal more, as a rule, to men."

"Why don't you be thoroughly original and issue an invitation to women at all?" Margaret inquired.

"For the same reason that you adorn your rooms and the dinner-table with flowers," he answered. "One needs them as a relief. Apart from that, I am really proud of my dancing-room, and there again, you see, your sex is necessary."

"We are flattered," Margaret declared, with a little bow. "It does seem queer to think that you should own what Cynthia's cousin, Davy Hinton, once told me was the best floor in London, and that I have never danced on it."

"Nor I," Lady Cynthia put in. "There might have been some excuse for not asking you, Margaret, but why an ultra-bohemian like myself has had to beg and plead for an invitation I really cannot imagine."

"You might find," Sir Timothy said, "you may even now—that some of my men guests are not altogether to your liking."

"Quite content to take my risk," Lady Cynthia declared cheerfully. "The man with the best manners I ever met—it was at one of Maggie's studio dances, too—was a bookmaker. And a retired prize-fighter brought me home once from an Albert Hall dance."

"How did he behave?" Francis asked.

"He was wistful but restrained," Lady Cynthia replied, "quite the gentleman, in fact."

"You encourage me to hope for the best," Sir Timothy said, rising to his feet. "You will excuse me now? I have a few final preparations to make."

"Are we to be allowed," Margaret inquired, "to come across the park?"

"You would not find it convenient," her father assured her. "You had better order a car, say for ten o'clock. Don't forget to bring your cards of invitation, and find me immediately you arrive. I wish to direct your proceedings to some extent."

Lady Cynthia strolled across with him to the postern-gate and stood by his side after he had opened it. Several of the animals, grazing in different parts of the park, pricked up their ears at the sound. An old mare came hobbling towards him; a flea-bitten gray came trotting down the field, his head in the air, neighing loudly.

"You waste a great deal of tenderness upon your animal friends, dear host," she murmured.

At the entrance to the great gates of the Walled House, two men in livery were standing. One of them examined with care the red cards of invitation, and as soon as he was satisfied the gates were opened by some unseen agency. The moment the car had passed through, they were closed again.

"Father seems thoroughly medieval over this business," Margaret remarked, looking about her with interest. "What a quaint courtyard, too! It really is quite Italian."

"It seems almost incredible that you have never been here!" Lady Cynthia exclaimed. "Curiosity would have brought me if I had had to climb over the wall!"

"It does seem absurd in one way," Margaret agreed, "but, as a matter of fact, my father's attitude about the place has always rather set me against it. I didn't feel that there was any pleasure to be gained by coming here. I won't tell you really what I did think. We must keep to our bargain. We are not to anticipate."

At the front entrance, under the covered portico, the white tickets which they had received in exchange for their tickets of invitation, were carefully collected by another man, who stepped the car a few yards from the broad, curving steps. After that, there was no more suggestion of hospitality. The front doors, which were of enormous size and height, seemed to have been removed, and in the great domed hall beyond Sir Timothy was already receiving guests. Being without wraps, the little party made an immediate entrance. Sir Timothy, who was talking to one of the best-known of the foreign ambassadors, took a step forward to meet them.

"Welcome," he said, "you, the most unique party, at least, amongst my guests. Prince, may I present you to my daughter, Mrs. Hilditch? Lady Cynthia Mitton and Mr. Ledsam you know, I believe."

Sir Timothy, later, in a moment's respite from the unceasing stream of guests, came once more across to them.

"I am going to leave you, my honored guests from the Embassy," he said, with a fabulous smile, "to your selves for a short time. In the room to your left, supper is being served. I want you to direct me in a room which I will show you, at a quarter to twelve."

He led them down one of the corridors which opened from the hall. Before the first door on the right a manservant was standing as though on sentry duty. Sir Timothy tapped the panel of the door with his forefinger.

"This is my sanctum," he announced. "I allow no one in here without special permission. I find it useful to have a place to which one can come and rest quite quietly sometimes. Williams here has no other duty except to guard the entrance. Williams, you will allow this gentleman and these two ladies to pass in at a quarter to twelve."

The man looked at them searchingly.

"Certainly, sir," he said. "No one else?"

"No one, under any pretext."

Sir Timothy hurried back to the hall, and the others followed him in more leisurely fashion. They were all three full of curiosity.

"I never dreamed," Margaret declared, as she looked around her, "that I should ever find myself inside this house. It has always seemed to me like one great Bluebeard's chamber. If ever my father spoke of it at all, it was as of a place which he intended to convert into a sort of miniature Hell."

Sir Timothy leaned back to speak to them as they passed.

"You will find a friend over there, Ledsam," he said.

Wilmore turned around and faced them. The two men exchanged somewhat surprised greetings.

"No idea that I was coming until this afternoon," Wilmore explained. "I got my card at five o'clock, with a note from Sir Timothy's secretary. I am racking my brains to imagine what it can mean."

"We're all a little addled," Francis confessed. "Come and join our tour of exploration. You know Lady Cynthia. Let me present you to Mrs. Hilditch."

The introduction was effected and they all strolled on together, Margaret and Lady Cynthia led the way into the winter-garden, a palace of glass, tall palms, banks of exotics, flowering shrubs of every description, and a fountain, with wonderfully carved water nymphs, brought with its basin from Italy. Hidden in the foliage, a small orchestra was playing very softly. The atmosphere of the place was languorous and delicious.

"Leave us here," Margaret insisted, with a little exclamation of content. "Neither Cynthia nor I want to go any further. Come back and fetch us in time for our appointment."

After a time the men rejoined Margaret and Cynthia and then came suddenly face to face with Sir Timothy, who had escorted a little party of his guests to see the fountain, and was now returning alone.

"You have been visiting, I am glad to see," the latter observed. "I trust that you are amusing yourselves?"

"Excellently, thank you," Francis replied.

"And so far," Sir Timothy went on, with a faint smile, "you find my entertainment normal? You have no question yet which you would like to ask?"

"Only one—what do you do with your launch up the river on moonless nights, Sir Timothy?"

Sir Timothy's momentary silence was full of ominous significance.

"Mr. Ledsam," he said, after a brief pause, "I have given you almost carte blanche to explore my domains here. Concerning the launch, however, I think that you had better ask no questions at present."

"You are using it tonight?" Francis persisted.

"Will you come and see, my restless young guest?"

"With great pleasure," was the prompt reply.

Sir Timothy glanced at his watch.

"That," he said, "is one of the matters of which we will speak at a quarter to twelve. Meanwhile, let me show you something. It may amuse you as it has done me."

The three moved back towards one of the arched doorways which led into the ballroom.

"Observe, if you please," their host continued, "the third couple who pass us. The girl is wearing green—the very little that she does wear. Watch the man, and see if he reminds you of any one."

Francis did as he was bidden. The girl was a well-known member of the chorus of one of the principal musical comedies, and she seemed to be thoroughly enjoying both the dance and her partner. The latter appeared to be of a somewhat military type, tall, with rather pasty cheeks and eyes almost unnaturally dark. He danced vigorously and he talked all the time. Something about him was vaguely familiar to Francis, but he failed to place him.

"Notwithstanding all my precautions," Sir Timothy continued, "here, fondly believing himself to be unnoticed, is an emissary of Scotland Yard. Really, of all the callous, the cynical, the dry-as-dust, I must say that in my experience of three kind of people I ever met, the chaps of detective to which this man belongs can produce the most blatant examples."

"What are you going to do about him?" Francis asked.

Sir Timothy shrugged his shoulders.

"I have not yet made up my mind," he said. "I happen to know that he has been hiring his plans for weeks to get here, frequenting Soto's and other restaurants, and scraping acquaintances with some of my friends. The duke of Tadchester brought him—not a few hundreds from him at baccarat, I suppose. His grace will never again lend those doors open to him."

Francis' attention had wandered. He was gazing fixedly at the man whom Sir Timothy had pointed out.

"You still do not fully recognize our friend," the latter observed carelessly. "He calls himself Manuel Lobo, and he professes to be a Cuban. His real name I understand, when you introduced us, to be Shepland."

"Great heavens, so it is!" Francis exclaimed.

"Let us leave him to his precious pleasures," Sir Timothy suggested. "I am free for a few moments. We will wander round together."

They found Lady Cynthia and Wilmore, and looked in at the supper-room, where people were waiting now for tables, a babel of sound and gayety. The grounds and winter-gardens were crowded. Their guide led the way to a large apartment on the other side of the hall, from which the sound of music was proceeding.

"My theater," he said. "I wonder what is going on."

They passed inside. There was a small stage with steps leading down to the floor, easy-chairs and round tables everywhere, and waiters serving refreshments. A girl was dancing. Sir Timothy watched her approvingly.

"Nadia Elliatoff," he told them, "She was in the last Russian ballet, and she is waiting now for the rest of the company to start again at Covent Garden. You see, it is Metzger who plays there. They improvise. Rather a wonderful performance, I think."

They watched her breathlessly, a spirit in gray tulle, with great black eyes now and then half-closed.

"It is 'Wind Before Dawn,'" Lady Cynthia whispered. "I heard him play it two days after he composed it, only there are variations now. She is the soul of the south wind."

The curtain went down amidst rapturous applause. The dancer had left the stage, floating away into some sort of wonderfully-contrived nebulous background. Within a few moments, the principal comedian of the day was telling stories. Sir Timothy led them away.

"But how on earth do you get all these people?" Lady Cynthia asked.

"It is arranged for me," Sir Timothy replied. "I have an agent who sees to it all. Every man or woman who is asked to perform, has a credit at Cartier's for a hundred guineas. I pay no fees. They select some little keepsake."

Margaret laughed softly.

"No wonder they call this place a sort of Arabian Nights!" she declared.

"Well, there isn't much else for you to see," Sir Timothy said thoughtfully. "My gymnasium, which is one of the principal features here, is closed just now for a special performance, of which I will speak in a moment. The concert hall I see they are using for an overflow dance-room. What you have seen, with the grounds and the winter-garden, comprises almost everything."

They moved back through the hall with difficulty. People were now crowding in. Lady Cynthia laughed softly.

"Why, it is like a gala night at the opera, Sir Timothy!" she exclaimed. "How dare you pretend that this is Bohemia?"

"It has never been I who have described my entertainments," he reminded her. "They have been called everything—orgies, debauches—everything you can think of. I have never ventured myself to describe them."

Their passage was difficult. Every now and then Sir Timothy was compelled to shake hands with some of his newly-arriving guests. At last, however, they reached the little sitting-room. Sir Timothy turned back to Wilmore, who hesitated.

"You had better come in, too, Mr. Wilmore, if you will," he invited. "You were with Ledsam, the first day we met, and something which I have to say now may interest you."

"If I am not intruding," Wilmore answered.

They entered the room, still jealously guarded. Sir Timothy closed the door behind them.

CHAPTER XIX

The apartment was one belonging to the older portion of the house, and had been, in fact, an annex to the great library. The walls were extremely old and hung with a collection of old prints. There were some exquisite, a trifle, and some wretchedly feminine. There were one or two bizarre studies of gladiators, a wonderful study of two wrestlers, an ancient ornament. Sir Timothy glanced at once back at what he had to say.

"I promised you, Lady Cynthia, and you, Ledsam," he said, "to divulge exactly the truth as regards these gatherings of entertainers here. You, Margaret, under present circumstances, are equally interested. You, Wilmore, are Ledsam's friend, and you happen to have an interest in this particular party. Therefore, I am glad to have you all here together. The superficial part of my entertainment you have seen. The part which renders it necessary for me to keep closed doors, I shall now explain. I give prizes here of considerable value for boxing bouts which are conducted under rules of our own. One is due to take place in a very few minutes. The contests vary in character, but I may say that the chief officials of the National Sporting Club are wont to be found here, only, of course, in an unofficial capacity. The difference between the contests arranged by me, and others, is that my men are here to fight. They use sometimes an illegal weight of glove and they sometimes hurt one another. If any two of the boxing fraternity have a grudge against one another, and that often happens, they are permitted here to fight it out, under the strictest control as regards fairness, but practically without gloves at all. You heard of the accident, for instance, to Norris? That happened in my gymnasium. He was knocked out by Durgin. It was a wonderful fight.

WORK ON MOFFAT TUNNEL IS PROGRESSING SATISFACTORILY

Denver.—With main heads on the Moffat tunnel bored to a distance approximately 10,000 feet, or two-thirds, the length of the railroad and water tunnels, consulting engineers for the tunnel commission reported that "the work to date has been well advanced and excellent progress attained at economical cost."

Up to the present, the report sets forth, an aggregate of 60,000 cubic yards of rock have been removed, representing work accomplished since September, 1923, in addition to construction, under winter conditions, of the plants and camps at the portals. The main headings have been advanced an aggregate of 11,317 feet, 8,101 in the east portal of the railroad tunnel, 1,910 on the west portal of the railroad tunnel and 3,216 and 3,105 feet on the corresponding water tunnel portals.

"We are particularly glad to state that the plant and camp installations have been economically constructed and the cost to date is within the estimates governing the contract," the engineers reported. "We are much impressed with the good type and character of the labor on the work, in fact, as it does not simply the entire district, but also the good living conditions provided, which both attract and hold labor employed and which in turn beneficially affects the progress and quality of the work performed and the resulting economical cost of the same.

"The rock on the east end is hard and self-cleaning, in which very rapid progress has been made under electricity mucking machines.

"At the west end, however, the rock is green, crushed and softened, but which is gradually becoming harder. The first 2,000 feet or more must be fully timbered, when enlarged, making progress in that portion of the work slow. At the same time the headings are being driven rapidly and satisfactorily.

"There is no necessity to come to a present determination as to whether any concrete lining may be needed."

The engineers reported that the tunnel system for heading excavation on the east portal is satisfactory in increasing progress and cutting costs. Later it may be possible to extend a similar system to other classes of labor they said.

The report was made after a survey and inspection of the tunnel completed last week by the consulting engineers, J. Vipond Davies, L. D. Blatchley, D. W. Brunton and J. Waldo Smith. In their report the engineers detailed the work already completed on the tunnel.

Fire Destroys Entire Block

Raymond, Neb.—Fire of unknown origin destroyed almost an entire block of the business section here. The Denver General Merchandise store was completely destroyed, the roof of the Bank of Raymond was burned, but the rest of the building was saved, and a drug store was also badly damaged. The fire was discovered by Robert Manderlke of Valparaiso, Neb. He roused several persons and notified the fire department at Lincoln. Early estimates place the loss at between $10,000 and $20,000.

Will Search Pueblo Bonito Ruins Again

Hunting for Pre-Columbian Trinkets Among Freight Trains of Debris.

Washington, D. C.—A National Geographic society expedition, headed by Neil M. Judd, left Washington recently to begin its fourth year of exploration at the ruins of Pueblo Bonito, New Mexico, giant "apartment house" of prehistoric times.

More than 800 rooms have been cleared and many kivas, or circular ceremonial chambers, already have been exposed to the desert sunlight. Only three years ago the great ruin was only a vast heap of rock and earth, fallen walls and wind-blown accumulations of uncounted centuries.

The explorations revealed that Pueblo Bonito was a busy village confined within a single dwelling. When inhabited it stood four stories high, included some 800 rooms and sheltered 1,200 or more persons.

Explorers Operate Railroad.

Four teams and a miniature railroad operate to remove the vast quantities of debris from the huge ruins. Last summer alone 20,000 tons of debris—enough to fill a freight train of 400 gondola cars—were removed.

If in this haystack of the centuries a ton of litter yields a bit of pottery, a tiny bell or a wisdom tooth the history prospector thinks he has struck "pay dirt." Most of the actual work is performed by Indians.

The many treasured specimens thus far recovered have been forwarded to Washington and, upon the conclusion of the expedition's work, they will be presented to the government. They will constitute an outstanding donation of their kind.

No written record or hieroglyphic inscription was left by these ancient Americans. But it already is possible to piece together their life story from the evidence of the silent walls of their abandoned rooms and the scattered objects recovered from their deserted dwelling. Their daily activities, their civic organizations, their communal enterprises and their struggles against more warlike tribes can be pictured. It is evident that the Bonitans, who lived in what now is the Chaco Canyon National monument, in northwestern New Mexico, probably had the most pretentious settlement in the southwestern United States in pre-Columbian times.

With the penetration of the Pueblo Bonito ruins the early history of America has begun to attract world interest—an interest being augmented with the sending of a National Geographic society expedition to uncover the great mound of Cuicuilco in the valley of Mexico, which may be 8,000 years old. Of the relation of Pueblo Bonito to other explorations Dr. Judd says:

"There is a bare possibility that some cultural connection will be found between the former inhabitants of Pueblo Bonito and the Maya, ancient temple builders of Yucatan and Guatemala. There absolutely is no chance of tracing any relationship between our prehistoric southwestern tribes and those of the Old World. Tut-Ankh-Amen and his fellow Egyptians represent a high stage of cultural development along the desert borders of the Nile; the ancient Bonitans surpassed all their contemporaries in the desert regions of our Southwest, but the prehistoric peoples of America and Egypt had nothing in common."

Dr. Judd will have as his chief assistant this year Karl Ruppert of the University of Arizona.

Paints Butterfly Wings and Beats Nature at It

Hamburg, Germany. — The paint brush of nature has been outdone by science, according to a recent announcement, in which the contention is made that by artificial means the coloring of butterfly wings can be reproduced with much more effect and richness than the originals themselves.

Prof. Hans Zozher, in an address before the German Chemical society, asserted that he frequently had made artificial wings which would make any butterfly in the world turn green or black with envy.

The coloring in real butterfly wings is brought about by light reflections on the same principle which causes soap bubbles to glisten colorfully in the ray of light. Professor Zozher explained that he used resin as the basis in his experiments.

Natchez, Miss.—Rats are so numerous in this city that the woman's advisory board of the city council has arranged to bring a professional rat catcher to rid it of the pests. Thousands of dollars of property damage has been done by the rats.

Trade Women and Children for Animals

Sudden Death Is Commonplace in Remote Districts of Mindanao.

Manila.—There is a simplicity about the barbarous customs of the pagan inhabitants of interior Bukidnon and other scarcely scratched districts of Mindanao that is almost naive. Despite the law and the ubiquity of constabulary patrols, human life is cheap, sudden death is commonplace, women are bartered and children are kidnaped and sold into slavery. One day in March a Manobo, Ligdonan by name, was taking his ease in his bamboo hut in the ulilo Catanglasan while his wife and daughter, Julia, were preparing food. Cumbay, the son, was also in the hut, busy on some household duty. Presently along the trail from ulilo Marcil came Lomlay Mandingan and Hilobayan Manlinalda, both former acquaintances of Ligdonan. The latter invited the visitors to enter and partake of the meal, which shortly would be served.

Suddenly Attacks Host.

For some time the three men squatted on the floor, smoking and talking. The roving eyes of Lomlay took in the contents of the shack, including the wife, Mabiguin, and the daughter, Julia, who, though young, was pleasant to see. A girl of some price, evidently. So thought Lomlay, and with a swift spring he unsheathed his bolo and slashed at Ligdonan. All unprepared, the man had no chance. The keen blade clove through his right arm to the shoulder, and even penetrated his side to his lungs. For a few minutes the stricken man writhed on the floor, while his life blood poured through the bamboo slats to the ground below. Terrified, the wife and her two children tried to escape, but the assailants fripped them and held them, struggling. Thereupon three accomplices—Tiog Mandanay, Sayanap and a man unknown—who had been lying in a nearby creek, came up and helped to tie the hands of the three prisoners behind their backs.

The five raiders, after they had eaten their fill, departed with their captives and took them by devious trails through the wilderness until they reached the bank of the river Pulangi, where the party divided. Tiog Mandanay and the unknown man escorted the mother and the daughter. Sayanap climbed upon the back of Cumbay to enlarge for a time.

Boy Escapes.

"Most probably," adds the report, "the woman Mabiguin and her daughter, Julia, were taken to the pen of some other remote place where they could be bartered for a wife." Cumbay was taken to the home of Sayanap, where he was held a prisoner, and sent to the City. However, during the night, while all others in the house were asleep, he was permitted to break the bonds and escape through a window. Terrified by the fate that had befallen his family, he made his way back to Malaybalay and brought the news to the constabulary there.

"The motive of the crime is believed to be an offer Cbo Dal of an old picture of the Will Rogers and Peggy Joyce type, which pleased Ligdonan's fancy. It is reported that Sayanap is held pending, in a similar case, "Data Dago will please call and explain these captives for beads, and also cash."

A patrol under sergeant Eugenio Sevilla with company, was at once dispatched to Data to investigate the case and gather such information as would enable the authorities to deal with the situation.

BILL LIFTS TAX ON HER INCOME GIVEN TO GIRLS

Mother Superior Gives Her Share of Philadelphia Drexel Fortune to Charity.

Washington, D. C.—Buried within the 374 dry-printed pages of the new tax measure is a bit of romance—a clause that will bring joy to thousands of homeless girls.

It's just a sentence or two—that if a person has donated 90 per cent or more of income the first year the law is effective and for each of ten preceding years, no tax may be levied. But it was put there to cover the income of only one individual, Mother Catherine, head of a Roman Catholic sisterhood.

Mother Catherine once was a Miss Drexel of Philadelphia and every year she gets a share of the great fortune of the Philadelphia Drexels. But, as a sister, she cannot spend any of it. So, every year, she has donated her share to charity—the building of homes for friendless girls. It was taxed like any other income, however, and many a home for girls could not be built because of levies by the government.

But Senator Pepper (Rep., Pa.) got the exemption inserted and now Mother Catherine may use her entire income to help girls.

210 Miles of Jointless Pipe to Carry Gas

Kirbyville, Tex.—A continuous steel tube 210 miles long without a coupling or a screw-thread connection will be laid this summer, between the Texas-Louisiana natural gas fields near Shreveport, La., and Beaumont, Tex.

When completed, the longest sixteen-inch diameter pipe line in the world will cross two rivers, innumerable creeks and run underground through four counties to carry the natural gas to Beaumont.

Electric welding will seal every joint, supplanting the old method of screw couplings, thus reducing the upkeep of the line to the minimum cost, and preventing a great quantity of gas from the leakage which has always been unavoidable with threaded joints.

On Trial for Alcoholism, He Calls It Radiority

Norristown, Pa.—The "radio log theory" played a prominent part in the case before Judge Solly of Albert M. Luden, son of a cemeterian of Reading, charged with operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated. The defense said the haggard look of Luden's face after he was arrested was not caused by dissipation, but was the result of his being up late at night "tuning in." The jury found Luden guilty. He was fined $500.

Too Much Acting

Elsie Janis, at a dinner in her historic colonial mansion in North Tarrytown, which was recently damaged by fire, told a story of the stage. "A manager," she said, "refused the other day to engage a young married couple for a new play he was putting on. 'They're good people,' he said, 'and I'll engage one or the other of them, but not both.' 'Why not both?' said the playwright, a young man. 'They're both clever.' 'That may be,' said the manager, 'but the public don't care to see a man making love to his own wife.' 'Why not, I wonder?' said the playwright. 'It looks too much like acting,' said the manager."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Only One

Joyce plays golf and he prefers a solitary round with only the caddie present. He had a new boy one day recently, and played as usual.

"I fancy I play the worst game in the world," he confessed to the caddie.

"Oh, I wouldn't say that, sir," was the consoling reply. "From what the boys were saying about another gentleman who plays here, he must be worse than you are."

"What's his name?" asked the player hopefully.

And the caddie replied: "Joyce."—France's Magazine.

The village blacksmith as Longfellow saw him would be interested could he see his vocation usurped by the "weaker sex." What adds interest to Miss Swann's work is that she was a milliner before the war.

All He Wanted

Dupree Fountain, room clerk at the Rice hotel, likes to recall this incident from those he encountered during his early days in the hotel business.

Dupree was working in a hotel in a small Louisiana town. A tough sailor approached the desk. "Want a room, sir?" inquired Fountain, pen in hand.

"Naw," replied the sailor. "I think I'm a banana. All I want is a skin, so I can curl up in the fruit bowl."—Houston Post.

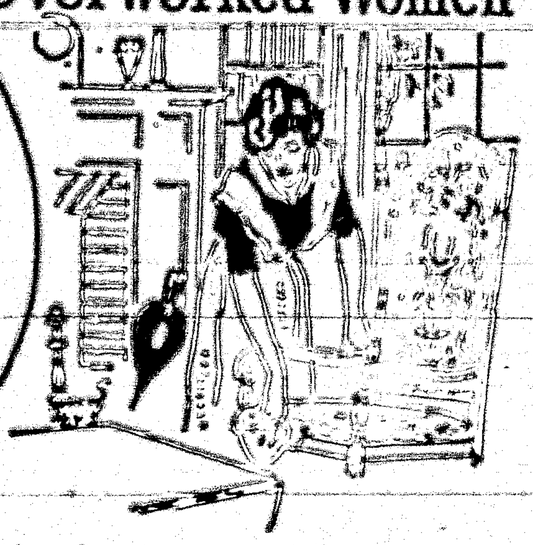
Helpful Advice to Overworked Women

Mrs. E. E. CHAPMAN



DAY in and day out, week in and week out the tired, overworked housewife and mother toils on, cooking, washing, cleaning and mending. Is it any wonder that after a time a weakness, such as Mrs. Chapman had, develops and the wife and mother pays a toll in physical weakness and pain for her efforts of love, the natural result of overwork?

Women who find themselves afflicted with weakness, pain, headaches, backache, nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness will be interested in Mrs. Chapman's letter, and should realize that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is especially adapted to overcome such conditions.

Mrs. Chapman's Letter Reads as Follows:

NEW ALBANY, Ind.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a weakness which many women have from over work. After I had taken it a while, I wasn't tired to do my work and my kidney ailment was relieved by its medicine. After the first few days the pain was not so severe as they had been and after taking a few bottles I was not bothered any more. I am doing my housework every day and I gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman suffering from female trouble. May yesterday I stopped one on the street and knowing what it did for me asked her if she had tried it, for at the drug store, as she meant to give it a trial."—Mrs. C. E. CHAPMAN, 1026 Elm Street, New Albany, Indiana.

Another Case of Nervous Breakdown

MORRISON, TENN.—"Two years ago I was completely run down and my nerves were a wreck. I could not sweep a room without resting. I could not do any work except a little at a time and the doctor's medicine did not help me. One day some one threw a little book on to my porch and in it I read several testimonials of women who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and before I had taken the whole of three bottles I knew it was helping me. I took six bottles and then in about three months I took two more. Now I am in perfect health. I do all my own work and could do more. I can truly say that I know Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound gave me my health."—Mrs. O. J. HINKLEY, 419½ N. Georgia St., Memphis, Tenn.

Uncle Walt's Story

FOIBLES OF ANIMALS

"PETERSHAW has an extremely gentle driving horse," said the veterinary surgeon. "He has made the animal a member of his family for several years, and it was so gentle anybody could drive it. The other day

Petershaw made up his mind he would sell Dobbin, as he couldn't afford to buy breakfast food for him any longer. A man who wanted a horse dropped around, and Petershaw hitched Dobbin up, and that fool horse just naturally ran away and the two men are going around on crutches. It's hard to understand such a thing, for there never was a gentler horse."

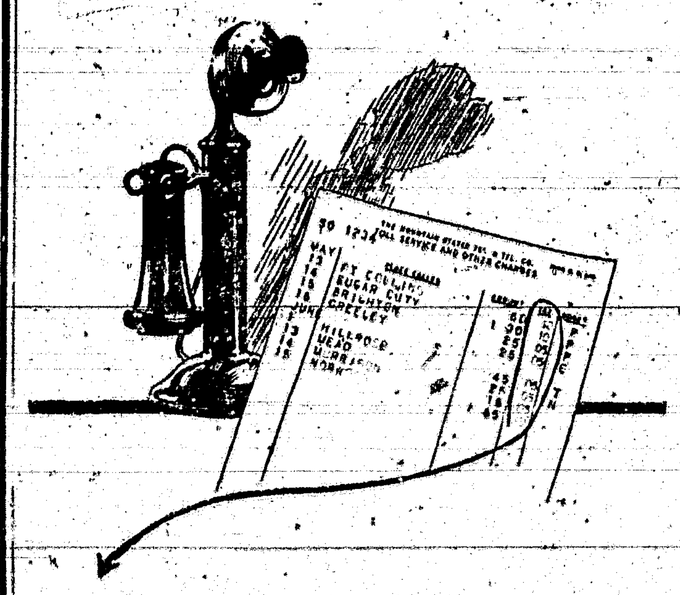
"There are several explanations," remarked the village patriarch. "It is possible, even probable, that the horse understands everything Petershaw says, and when it heard him talking about selling the noble animal put up a job to spoil the deal. Perhaps Dobbin has a strongly developed sense of humor, and thought such an escapade would be highly amusing, and we can't admit that it was. I cannot imagine anything more humorous than to hitch up a perfectly gentle horse, and then have it act like a famished leopard.

"There is no doubt that animals have a sense of humor. Unless we admit that it is impossible to explain many things they do. I think the mule is a great jester. When a mule looks most innocent, he is most dangerous. You can tell when a horse is going to hand you a few sample kicks as a testimonial of its esteem; it lays back its ears and switches its tail, and looks as vindictive as a rattlesnake. A reasonably active man can get out of the way when he sees a horse unlimbering its heavy artillery. But it's different with a mule. This highly facetious animal will stand munching its fodder, every motion and every glance expressing peace on earth, good will toward men. The innocent bystander is saying to himself that he never did see such an amiable expression on an animal's face, and just then the gentle critter lands him a terrific assortment of feet, and with its remaining countenance he can find words that properly express his sentiments.

"The cow is another humorist. I have milked some cows of low all of days, and they all were addicted to capricious ways. The cow I have now thoroughly enjoys hitting me over the head with her tail. Of course there is some excuse to the animal for a cow that keeps her tail waving, but there isn't any excuse to such exercise in the winter, when the flies are dead.

All the cows in my herd practice hot tail except at milking time. Then she knows it is going to finish the day's work, and she has become so expert with her tail that she paints me on the hill on about ten times a minute, and then I feel as natural as salt and water. I milked Sue the first time on the nine sixty train, and the nine twenty-seven knew her name.

"I had a cow once that I carried for four years and during that time she never kicked a foot or acted cranky in any way. I even petted her the natural way. I never saw that cow I never saw that cow I never saw that cow. One evening there were some visitors from the city at our house, and they went to the barn to see me milk the cow. There were two or three ladies in the party, and as I milked I explained to them that the animal was a natural when it came to dancing. I said I must first indicate she would kick if a stranger got near her, of course the cow hadn't any more I said and she simply couldn't resist the temptation to make me look like a fool, so just as I got my explanation in her name, she kicked a hole in my chair and put the cows for the count. Those city folks said that if she was a sample cow they'd give city milk to one anyway, and I suppose they do talk about the event yet."



Telephone Toll Messages Now Free From Federal Tax

THE federal taxes laid on telephone toll messages by the Revenue Act of 1921 have been removed by the Revenue Act of 1924, which was enacted on June 2, and became effective as regards these taxes on July 2. Under the act of 1921, the taxes imposed on telephone messages were as follows:

On a telephone message for which the charge was more than fourteen cents and not more than fifty cents a tax of ..... 5 cents

On a telephone message for which the charge was more than fifty cents, a tax of 10 cents.

These taxes were highest in proportion to the charge for service for toll messages over moderate distances, the tax in some cases amounting to one-third of the toll charge.

We have adequate facilities to care for any increased use of the toll lines which may result from the removal of these taxes.

The Wisconsin Platform

Wisconsin delegates to both national conventions presented platforms for public ownership of such utilities as railroads, street railways and hydro-electric power plants. This is the biggest contract yet proposed in the way of public ownership, and would involve an investment by the people amounting to billions of dollars. By a strange inconsistency, this platform denounces the failure of the government to deal with the disposition of the naval oil reserves charging great political demoralization and fraud among governmental departments in handling that one item of publicly owned lands.

Yet it proposes to extend enormously a system of government ownership and operation of great basic industries employing millions of people and creating thousands of new public offices.

The inconsistency of this un-American platform in proposing to put pretty nearly everything in the way of business under political management should be apparent even to a fourteen-year-old intellect.

Lincoln Forest Has 22 Fires

Alamogordo, N. M., July 2.—Several fires have occurred in the Lincoln national forest in the past ten days, according to reports coming to headquarters office here. The largest was at Church mountain in the Capitan district and covered 157 acres. Three in the Weed district and three near Cloudcroft were lightning fires, but were discovered early and kept within a small area.

Twenty-two fires have been reported this season, of which 14 were man caused and eight were caused by lightning. The man caused fires, it is estimated, have burned a total of at least 1500 acres. The lightning fires totaled probably less than two acres, according to forest officials.

"Blood and Sand" Tuesday Night

A story of colorful Spain, of moonlight, of serenades, of dancing and guitars—the land for passionate lovemaking—written by Vincente Blasco Ibanez, author of "The Four Horsemen," adapted by June Mathis, adapter of that production and directed by Fred Niblo, who directed "The Three Musketeers." Such is "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentino which comes to the Crystal Theatre Tuesday and Wednesday.

A story of hot, impetuous love against a background of the most dangerous sport known to man—bull fighting. Immense scenes there are of the bull ring, the tremendous crowds, the impressive opening pageant and the charge of the bull, the play, the fool work, the dangerous work of the devils who infuriate the bull, who dare the beast to kill them—and who often lose their dare.

The production is a distinguished one impressive in its sincerity, startling in its thrills, filled with the warmth of a fine love.

USES HIS RADIO SET TO GET MARKET TIPS

Farmer in Ohio Realizes Tidy Profit by Picking Up Wireless Market News Out of the Air.

Most radio fans find that their radio sets pay dividends in entertainment and instruction, but the farmer who tunes in WGY and other stations sending out produce market reports is in a preferred position. The farmer on occasion may turn radio market information into cash and make such information pay him dividends on his set. One such farmer is reported by F. R. Cozzens of Roxbury, O., in the Southern Ruralist recently:

John Weldon, a farmer of my vicinity, recently got a tip from the air which yielded him $19.69. The "tip" was an unexpected rise in the live stock market, coming at a time when Weldon was preparing to sell a shipment of hogs to a local buyer.

As a result he got in touch with the city market, and $19.69 was his profit over the local buyer's quotations after all shipping expenses were paid.

This was not a streak of luck, however, for Weldon gets such tips frequently, and they are a part of his plan for making his radio pay its way.

Keeps Market Ledger by Air

"When I installed my outfit in this I determined to get something from the air besides music," Weldon told me recently. "I could receive reports from two large city markets and a number of smaller ones, and to keep tab on these I bought a ledger.

"At the top of each blank page I wrote down the city where the market was located and names of the principal dealers therein with their addresses. This book is kept on the table where the radio is located, and when I have something to market I get in touch with one of these cities and write down quotations as I receive them. Then I 'tune-in' for another city and get their prices. Afterward I go over these reports and compare them.

"It is a simple matter then to estimate distance, shipping cost, and so forth, and from this I can select my market.

"Dealers in these cities are aware of my method, and I have made arrangements with them by letter to accommodate my shipments at any time. This not only applies to live stock, but to poultry, eggs and butter. The latter articles are shipped by parcel post the morning after the quotations are received.

In Genial Touch With the World and Its Markets.
S.E.D. Service

Range of Markets Increased

"I have a wide range of markets to select from, where formerly I was compelled to depend upon a local buyer's quotations or those in the newspaper, which were always two days late.

"And the radio offers another advantage: By getting weather reports and crop conditions from different parts of the country I can guess pretty accurately the trend of the market.

"From the news reports I learn beforehand about railroad strikes, freight tie-ups, grain pools and many other conditions which are likely to affect the price of products grown upon my farm. I have a ledger filled with information of this sort, and it has become a habit with me to keep it open for new 'tips' whenever an evening's program is broadcast.

"It is not difficult to make a radio pay dividends when rightly handled and scarcely a week passes without my outfit yielding me something of value."

Random Thoughts Along the Way

By Clement Hightower

Mrs. Governor Chacon's christian name is most fitting. "Soledad" is solitude in English, and the position she now occupies as the solitary female chief executive of a sovereign state in the American union would seem to make the name very appropriate.

In view of the complete harmony that prevails in the democratic ranks at this time, Mrs. Chacon would seem to be that party's best bet for candidate for governor this fall. Her candidacy would give the 'hard-boiled' ones in both parties something to think about.

The democrats in the eastern part of the county are worrying over the selection of candidates that can carry the west end vote. Two old-time democrats have been approached to seek the nomination for important offices.

The old settlers of Lincoln county, as those of other localities, have been slow to see the great undeveloped resources in their midst, and to take advantage of them. Note for example the splendid forests and noble mountains that afford the most delightful recreation grounds in the southeastern part of the state, which, until recently, were unknown to the people in the cities and towns in the hot valleys and plains east and south of us, and unnoticed by those living in their shadow; but now that these people have discovered them they are literally swarming to the grateful shade and pleasant scenery, while the old timer wonders how it happened.

Townsites are being laid off and lots are being sold, cabins and bungalows are being built and a market for the truck gardener, dairy and chicken raiser, far exceeding the local supply, is at hand. I have in mind the upper Ruidoso and the Sierra Blanca.

Aviation has its thrills, but there are no grade crossings.—Columbia Record.

Ninety-Four Dead In Storm In Ohio

Cleveland, June 34—Ninety four persons were known to be dead in Ohio as a result of Saturday's severe wind, rain and electrical storm, which swept the coast of Lake Erie from Sandusky to Lorain, wrecking a large portion of Lorain and parts of Sandusky. Although the loss of life was not as great as at first believed, relief workers said today that the list of dead may grow. Several hundreds of persons were reported injured, several score of them seriously and the property damage was reported at more than $30,000,000.

Fall, Sinclair and Two Dohenys are Indicted

Conspiracy, Bribe-Giving-and-Taking are Charges Made

Washington, June 30.—Albert B. Fall, former secretary of the interior; Edward L. Doheny, Sr.; Edward L. Doheny, Jr.; and Harry F. Sinclair have been indicted by the special grand jury which has been investigating the sale of the naval oil reserves.

Fall, Doheny, and Doheny, Jr., are charged with a conspiracy to defraud the United States, on one count; in the second count Fall is charged with accepting a bribe. On the third count the Dohenys are charged with offering a bribe. Harry F Sinclair is charged in the fourth count with conspiracy to defraud.

The Cost Of Carelessness

Not since 1906—the year of the San Francisco catastrophe—has there been such a heavy fire loss in this country as in 1923, when losses totaled approximately $$$3,000,000. In spite of this, average fire insurance rate has declined from $1 03 per $100 in 1914 to 90 cents per $100 in 1923.

President Smith of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, before the annual meeting of that organization, declared that 75 per cent of all fires could be prevented by exercise of ordinary care. He added: "No country, however rich in created wealth, can continue to support such an enormous drain on its resources. Our wealth of today will surely be effected if we do not, as a nation, dam this annual waste."

The people rely upon insurance as protection against financial losses and overlook their own individual responsibility to prevent fires which destroy thousands of lives annually in addition to physical property.

George Murray, of Oscura, an employe of the Hatchet ranch, while working on a pumping plant, had his left hand caught in the machinery and badly lacerated, necessitating a hurried trip to Carrizozo for medical attention. New York, July 2.—Gaston B. Means, who sprang into prominence with sensational testimony before the Brookhart committee, was found guilty Tuesday in federal district court of conspiracy to violate the Volstead act.

Snake Bite Antidote

Best remedy for snakebite is not what, in a less enlightened time, we thought it was. It is permanganate of potash. Its efficacy is proved by a woman on the Ruidoso in New Mexico. Bitten by a snake and unable to get medical attention immediately, she used the potash remedy and suffered no ill effects from the bite. The United States forest service is furnished by the government with small tubes of permanganate of potash, and probably before long every wayfarer on the desert will have it in his equipment.—El Paso Herald.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Democratic Convention May Last Many Days—Boom for Houston Started.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

DEMOCRACY'S hosts—meaning the representatives of the Democratic party—assembled in Madison Square garden, New York, for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency and vice presidency, and the indications at this writing are that they will be there for some time before they make a choice. However, William G. McAdoo, who admittedly will have the largest vote on the first ballot, predicted as he arrived in New York that he not only would win the nomination, but would win it before many ballots had been cast. Leaders of the opposition to McAdoo scoffed at his claims.

This is intended to be a review of the events of the past week, not a forecast, but it can be said that the fight was centering on the proposition to abandon the two-thirds rule of the Democrats which requires a two-thirds majority for a nomination. McAdoo's generals naturally were for this change. Freeman of Illinois, who is determined to defeat the Californian, declared if the two-thirds rule were abolished, so, too, must be the unit rule—in which case the change would do McAdoo little good. One other thing the new boss of the party said: "I want to stand up and tell Ku Klux Klan plank in the platform, and they won't be able to make it too strong to suit me."

Next to the suggestion that the platform include a Klan plank, that matter of the Klan is perhaps the one most annoying that the committee on resolutions has to handle. A good guess is that the Democrats, like the Republicans, will evade both issues.

Toward the end of the week there developed a sudden and rather strong boom for Cordell Hull of Tennessee for Vice President. He will be nominated as secretary of agriculture and then of the treasury under Harding, and his boosters counted that, should he face his death Mr. Coolidge called the convention to 1924. Mr. Hull is a close friend to New York, is president of the Red Cross, the country and Congress to various financial schemes.

HAVING exhausted their battery here in Chicago the Republicans are busily waiting for the Democrats to get up a ticket to open the battle. Chairman Lenroot of the senate committee has been made chief of the speakers' bureau, which is the post likely to start the campaign in the Middle West, probably in Nebraska. Charles G. Dawes, vice presidential nominee, is likely to be sent there to make the first speeches. Mr. Dawes, addressing the Ohio Democrats of Cincinnati, O., last week, said a number of things that should be pleasing to the Anglican party regardless of party affiliations. In language characteristically vigorous he denounced "the curse of conspiracy in political Caucasians" by which he said, the real facts and the economic principles involved in questions of national policy are frequently obscured. He pledged himself to adhere, in the coming campaign, to the truth and to the common sense conclusions to be drawn therefrom, and concluded: "As to the demagogue on the stump, whatever may be his party, I want it distinctly understood that in the coming campaign I ask no quarter and will give none. I know that I will have the sympathy of all good citizens irrespective of party and I hope our political opponents will follow the same course. Let common sense reign."

UP IN St. Paul, Minn., assembled the so-called Farmer-Labor progressive national convention which had been denounced in advance by Senator LaFollette and Samuel Gompers because it was known that the Communists who take orders from the Moscow internationale would try to dominate it. These Reds, led by William Z. Foster and C. E. Ruthenberg, though seemingly in the minority, actually did get control of the convention, but when the Minnesota delegation threatened to bolt they toned down the platform until it was only pink and then decided to nominate Duncan McDonald, head of the Illinois Workers' party, for President. This, however, was only tentative pending the meeting of the Cleveland convention of the committee for progressive political action on July 4. It was understood that if the Cleveland meeting put up some other candidate, McDonald might be withdrawn and that man indorsed. Many of the delegates in St. Paul wanted to nominate LaFollette, despite his scathing denunciation of the convention, but were persuaded this would be wor[illegible]

William Bouck of the [illegible] ington was nominated [illegible] president.

W. J. Taylor of Neb[illegible] made a fiery speech denouncing the Russian redness of the convention and then led a bolt of 40 farmer delegates who refused to submit to the dictation of the Communists.

In the St. Paul platform are several interesting planks. One declares against "Jim Crowism" and calls for "full equality, economic and political, for the negro." Another urges a system of land tenure to abolish landlordism and tenantry and designed to secure the land to the user. Of course the platform contains a resolution demanding the recognition of the soviet Russian government.

The Farmer-Labor party of Minnesota, which last week renominated Governor Magnus Johnson, took no part in the convention.

WHILE the Japanese government was doing its best to put a stop to the boycott on American products, Secretary of State Hughes formulated and sent to Ambassador Hanihara his reply to Japan's note of protest against the exclusion clause of the immigration law and compared them with the old "gentlemen's agreement," showing that there is no official difference, Congress having only exercised its prerogative in putting by legislation the control of immigration instead of leaving it to international arrangements. The secretary concluded his note by explaining the constitutional limitations of the right of each government to legislate in control of its population abroad and brought to my notice from the earnest and well wishing friendship which have always characterized the relations of the two countries."

BECAUSE of the insistence of the foreign government that H. C. Cummins, British agent, get out of Mexico at once, that Mexico has severed all relations with Mexico, and there is to be no new wire in it will [illegible] to the present regime. Diplomatic relations in Mexico have been entrusted to the United States and Cuba. Prime Minister Obregon and his cabinet decided that the Mexican attitude was impossible for any self-respecting government to endure. Sir T. R. Hohler was getting ready to sail for Mexico to investigate the question of according recognition, but his mission has been called off. Mr. Cummins, who had entrenched himself in the British legation, was ordered home immediately. All the British had asked of Mexico was that Cummins be permitted to remain until the arrival of Hohler. This was refused in a note that was considered impertinent. Expulsion of Cummins was ordered because he sent "rude messages" to the Mexican government in trying to protect the interests of British subjects. He did everything he could in behalf of Mrs. Rosalie Evans, a widow, who has been fighting pluckily to prevent the expropriation of her estate.

FOR a time last week it seemed the rule of the Fascisti in Italy was about to come to an end, because of the great scandal arising from the kidnaping and brutal murder of Matteotti, a Socialist deputy who is said to have had in his possession full details of a huge bank failure in which certain Fascist chieftains were involved. So threatening was the situation that Mussolini's ministers tendered their resignations and the king called on the members of the Order of Annunciation—mostly former premiers and members of the royal family—to help form a general cabinet. Mussolini, however, arose to the emergency, displaced and replaced various high officials, directed the arrest of the guilty men and began a general housecleaning of the Fascist government. One of the accused is said to have confessed. By the end of the week the excitement over the affair was waning, but it was admitted that the scandal had dealt Fascism a severe blow. The truth is that the Fascist movement had begun to degenerate from a high moral crusade into a mere politicians' party, many of the members of which were concerned mainly in obtaining and retaining public office. Mussolini's dictatorial methods had begun to irk the people, and while he may continue in power, his rule is likely to be less autocratic.

EDOUARD HERRIOT, France's new premier, went to England Saturday to spend the week-end with Prime Minister MacDonald in conference over the application of the Dawes plan. Before he started he conferred with Foreign Minister Hymans of Belgium, and then said France and Belgium were in complete accord concerning the matter. Herriot also received Herr Breitscheid, German Social Democrat deputy, who told him the majority of the reichstag favored carrying out the Dawes plan and that France could count on Germany's sincerity in executing it. The necessary bills for carrying out the Dawes plan will not be introduced in the reichstag before the middle of July, being complicated and extensive.

Herriot disappointed the extreme radicals and many Germans in several matters. First, he declared his policy was to retain control of the Ruhr until Germany had given the requisite guarantees. Then he selected for his minister of war General Nollet, head of the allied control commission in Germany. This caused a great protest from German Nationalists and Monarchists, especially as Herriot said he chose Nollet because he knew more about the military situation in Germany than any other man and that while France's policy would be to take action against the growing militarism in Germany, France would sometimes help the young German Democracy.

Premier Herriot told the French parliament that he was preparing to recognize Russia, and that the French embassy at the Vatican would be suppressed. He said complete amnesty would be granted all war prisoners except those confined for treason.

PARLIAMENTARY contests in South Africa resulted in victory for the Nationalist-Labor coalition and gave assurance to the movement for an independent republic. Gen. Jan Smuts, former premier, was defeated by a Labor candidate, and General Hertzog, advocate of secession from the British empire, was elected. He may be the new premier.

FOR the fourth time Lieut. Ernest de Meyster of Belgium won the James Gordon Bennett balloon race with the balloon Belgica, and thus gained permanent possession of the trophy. He traveled about 500 miles and landed in Scotland.

America's globe encircling aviators made good progress last week, flying from Tokyo, French Indo-China, to Saigon and then 300 miles to Bangkok, Siam. They expected to reach Rangoon before the week ended.

POST OFFICE employees of Canada struck and tied up the postal service across the Dominion from coast to coast. Business was seriously hampered and its demoralization was feared unless an early settlement was arranged. The workers have been asking an increase of salary, but instead are facing a decrease. Their union has proposed that the government shall place the postal service employees under the industrial disputes act immediately for a settlement of the salary schedule. In the meantime the men will accept the present salary and all benefits antedate April 1, 1924.

"Well, if that is your attitude you will be out till h—l freezes over," was the declaration of James Murdock, Dominion minister of labor.

The seed crop for the state is estimated by buyers to be 22,000,000 pounds this year. It is bringing 22 cents a pound, which is worth in round numbers $7,000,000 to the farmers and sheep raisers, considerably better than in previous years, and the prevailing prices are much better, with an anticipated raise to 30 cents a pound in the near future. Wool that has been held in storage has been ordered for mills, which has caused sharp buying for the new crop.

With a capital and surplus of $100,000 subscribed by 150 stockholders, the American National Bank, which was closed in January, reopened in Silver City last week, and the owners of the institution have every reason to believe in the new bank was shown by the fact that at the close of the first day's business the deposits had increased nearly $70,000. The officers of the bank are as follows: President, J. H. Culp; vice president, Frank Wells and Frank Hall; cashier, H. C. Daily; assistant cashier, W. S. Hurley. Directors are the J. Barrett, J. H. The construction of the Rio Grande valley highway, which will soon be open to the public will open one of the greatest scenic routes in the country between Socorro and southern Arizona. The distance from Socorro to Phoenix will be shortened nearly 200 miles and the trip to the White mountains will then be one of the most popular in the Southwest. This section of the country, 150 miles wide and over 300 miles long, is covered with heavy forests and is one of the greatest hunting and fishing grounds in the entire West. The route will pass the famous Roosevelt lake and dam.

It cost the state of New Mexico $5,970.21 less to maintain the State Insane Asylum at Las Vegas for the half fiscal year ending May 31, 1924, than for the corresponding six months in 1923, according to the report of Dr. F. H. Pratt to the board of directors. Not only does the superintendent's report show this 9.46 per cent decrease in expense but also that a considerably greater number of New Mexico's human unfortunates have been cared for. This increase in number some six to [illegible] 6.85 per cent for the six months period ending with May, 1924.

Study Electric Eel

Attendants at the New York zoo having been stunned by current from the electric eel, an investigation has been begun of the creature's power plant. Previous attempts at measuring the current have failed because the apparatus used was not sufficiently sensitive to register the sudden and intense shocks delivered. These, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine, are said to be powerful enough to stun a horse and are described by keepers who suffered them, as "sledge-hammer" blows that caused black and blue marks on the skin. A German professor, according to H. L. Dittmars, curator, has obtained light of dazzling intensity by connecting the current to bulbs, but the flash was over in an instant, defying attempts to measure it.

Plans to Trap Weevil

Hudson Maxim, inventor, recalls that the Indians used to scent their traps with the odor of the female tenner. This attracted the males and large numbers of them were trapped. The sense of smell which is extremely keen in insects guides them to the discovery of their mates, he says. For instance the male silkworm can detect the female by smell at a distance of two miles. He suggests that a scent, prepared from the bodies of female boll weevil moths or perhaps made synthetically, might be used to lure moths of the species to traps or poison.

Rivers Carry Salt Into the Ocean

At first it strikes one as strange that, although the sea must originally have been formed of distilled water—that is, congealed watery vapor—and though all the rivers that flow into it, estimated to amount in the aggregate to 6,500 cubic miles of water every year, are fed exclusively by rainfall, which is also distilled water, it should nevertheless be extremely brackish, very salt indeed in the tropics and less salt at the poles.

Yet it is chiefly the rivers that account for the saltness of the sea. It is estimated that they carry something like 100,000,000 tons of saline matter into the ocean every year and, further, that the ocean holds in suspension no less than 140,000,000,000 tons of salt, a sufficient quantity, if extracted, to cover the dry surface of the earth to a depth of 400 feet, says London Tit-Bits.

It is believed that 60,000,000 years have been required for the sea to attain its present saltness.

Siam's King a Poet

The king of Siam has had a villa built at his country place for the queen. It has been picturesquely named Suan Raj Rak, or the Royal Garden of Love.

While the king was attending scout maneuvers he wrote to the queen a daily letter which was in reality a love poem.

On the occasion of the house-warming for the queen's new villa, one of these poems, consisting of some thirty verses, was distributed to the guests. It depicted the king as a happy husband and gave an intimate glimpse of his life of love with the queen.—London Mail.

French Bar Radio Comedy

Comedy staging is here and for all banned before the microphone of the Postes, Telegraphes & Telephones station in Paris. Will blind confidence lead you to physical disaster at age 31?

This is the experience of the average American, United States Life Tables, 1920, indicate

For the average person, health—physical freedom and full vigor—starts only from age 15 to 31. Then the slump. After 31, average full of vigor. What do these startling facts (taken from the United States Life Tables, 1919) mean for you?

It is time to check up. It is time to take stock of the present, and face the future with open eyes. Blind faith in the power of the human body to absorb punishment has failed miserably. Unwise eating, stimulated nerves, sleeplessness; disregard of the simplest laws of health; the taking of the overwrought body to new exertions by the use of drugs—physical decay beginning at age 31! This is the tragic downgrade.

Nature provides a danger signal—fatigue—to warn when the body needs rest. Certain drugs have the power to deaden the fatigue signal. One of the most common of these drugs is caffein—a drug classified as a poison. The average cup of coffee contains from 1½ to 3 grains of caffein—a dose equal to that often administered by physicians in cases of heart failure.

Caffein, by deadening the danger signal of fatigue, appears to give new strength. Actually, this strength is robbed from the body's own reserve, stored up for life's emergencies.

Coffee contains no nourishment. Its only virtues as a beverage, are its warmth and flavor. A good, hot, drugless drink is a benefit with every meal.

Millions enjoy such a drink in Postum. A drink made of whole wheat and bran, skillfully roasted, with a little sweetening—nothing more. A drink with the rich, mellow, full bodied flavor of this wholesome grain. Every member of the family can drink it every meal of the day, enjoy its deliciousness, crave it, knowing there isn't a sleepless hour, a headache or a bad nerve in it.

For the sake of your years following age 31, we want you to try Postum for thirty days. You can't expect to overcome the effects of a habit of years in two or three days, or even a week. To make this a sporting proposition, we will give you a week's supply of Postum free. Enough for a cup with every meal for a week. But we want you to carry on for the full thirty days.

Essential Frocks for Short Visits

It is just as awkward, for the short trip, to carry along a too voluminous outfit as it is to omit certain essential frocks—and it's a whole lot more uncomfortable, observes a fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune. The primary function of the Friday-to-Monday visit is pleasure and, while the carefree male may choose his clothes with comparative abandon, the fair traveler must select with care and discrimination in order that her pleasure may be unalloyed.

The minimum requirements for the typical end-of-the-week visit are an evening dress—either formal or informal, depending on the occasion—a dress or alpaca suit for morning wear, an afternoon frock, a long coat suitable for the journey as well as for cool evenings, and two pairs of slippers, one for evening and one for afternoon wear. A single hat should meet all the emergencies of the short visit. The afternoon dress and coat may be worn en route, leaving only two frocks to be carried in the bag—the evening dress and the morning costume. In the event that the coat is not adapted to formal evening wear a Spanish shawl, light and occupying very little space, will lend a distinctive touch to the robe de soir.

The guiding principle for the woman who expects to spend her summer weekends in divers places is conservatism, and she should adhere religiously thereto for the very potent reason that a wardrobe with any stint just the proper note in one community may be severely frowned upon in another. One need be supersensitive to blush for the lady who steps forth in all her gladness only to discover that her hostess and friends have donned informal dress for that particular occasion. All, certainly, the intensely dressed visitor will spend most of her time in seclusion if she journeys to a place where absolute formality rigidly reigns. Indeed, even if the summer visit is to be confined to communities of known conservatism, it is wise to be only a follower in the rules of fashion.

Interesting Borderline Dress.

A borderline dress from Worthman's frock which will serve either as an afternoon dress or for the semi-formal summer dinner—is interesting. This model shows an interesting variation of the plait, which, incidentally, is one of the outstanding notes in summer fashions. The dress is plaited in sections closely stitched and alternating with plain strips of equal width. The plaited section is entirely separate from the foundation, which is narrow, close-fitting and slightly revealed at the sides. A round yoke, ending in a long scarf, is knotted at the right shoulder and makes an attractive neck finish. The waistline is unusually low and is marked by a belt made from petals of suede leather. If you contemplate making this dress at home, it is important to remember that the plaits, although fine, must be deeply laid in order that they remain in place.

For morning wear, whether it be on court or beach, or for the country stroll, a Fremet model is equally appropriate. It is a tailored dress of white crepe and limits the plaited note to a box-plaited fullness which appears at the front only. The idea of front fullness and back fatness is emphasized throughout the summer's novelty productions, and the contrast in this frock is most noticeable, the back being so narrow and close hanging that it is split 12 inches to give sufficient freedom.

The cost and the neglige are two essentials without which no traveler dares fare forth. A seven-eighths-length coat accomplishes an idea which is new this season and is particularly useful for the feminine week-ender.

An alluringly feminine three-quarters-length negligee is of cream crepe [illegible] with flesh georgette. Matter and the designer, with some small rum of truth, points to the fact that every new suggestion from the Parisiennes has been eagerly welcomed by her sartorially sensational cynosure.

Yet there comes a time in the history of fashion when even its most basic principles must be materially changed, and it is daily becoming more apparent that such a period is rapidly approaching. There has been a sameness about the styles of the last few seasons which refuses to credit upon the exhibitor. Straight silhouette, plait, choke, black and white, sleeveless lines, have all become phrases which are equally descriptive of every mode of recent years. Even the admirable beauty of some of the new frocks can not overshadow the fact that the current cycle of fashion has reached its senescence. Many times her critics have declared that she is on the verge of the obvious, but always she has managed to evade the issue with some new and startling innovation. Now, however, the critics are right. Fashion has reached the end of the road.

ROAD BUILDING

FOUR-WHEEL DRIVE AIDS ROAD SURFACE

When a man or a family gets used to eating pancakes for breakfast, it takes an extra effort and much advertising to make them believe that there is a breakfast food that is cheaper and better. It is the same with everything. Roads and automobiles are no exception.

We have our present style automobile driven by the two rear wheels. The two front wheels carry about the same load, many times there is more weight on the front wheels than the rear ones. And still the rear wheels are compelled to do the pulling for all four.

In traveling around the country on dirt or gravel roads you will notice the road surface is full of short little holes dug into the road by this pull on the wheels. Because the pull on the road surface with the present style drive is exactly equal to the pull on the tire surface, any dirt or gravel road will give way under such a pull or strain. This strain or pull on the road surface is entirely gone from the front wheels. If we used horses to pull the auto instead of an engine, we would do away with all this pull by the wheels on the road surface.

Now, it was never supposed that rolling a road did it any harm. Neither would rolling an auto over the road do much harm. By driving an auto over the road with all four wheels turning together we would be as near the rolling idea as possible. By turning all four wheels at the same time they simply act as rollers and do not dig into the road surface enough to pull it loose.

I claim that four-wheel drive will more than pay for the extra cost in saving on tires alone, writes J. H. Rerchum of Illinois, in Hoard's Dairyman. It would also save on gasoline; less horse power would be required. It is the big secret of good roads in this country. Until we get the auto perfected and a successful four-wheel drive, we will never be able to maintain any road system at a reasonable cost.

Our present automobile engineers are just about the same as the man that got used to the pancakes.

Highways and Railroads Need Billion Each Year

At a time when the railroads of America need at least $1,000,000,000 a year for their development, the public highways of the country are receiving that amount and more, says the Providence Journal.

In 1923 the sum of $1,520,000,000 was expended upon road improvement, while the total capital expenditure on railroads, including equipment, was only $750,000,000.

This means that we are starving our railroads and at the same time providing new means for their competitors, the motor cars and particularly the motor trucks, to flourish. The situation is crazy, because the trucks are permitted to operate without paying anything like their fair share of the upkeep of the modern highway surfaces of which they take advantage and on which they put a heavy tax of wear and tear.

Trails to Be Marked in Cascade Forest Reserve

The hundred miles of government trails in the Cascade national forest will have been marked with signposts every mile when inspectors of 500 that have just been received at the local storehouse of the forest service are placed. The posts will be painted in May, according to officials of the forest service.

The posts will be sent to the Ranger Patrol, Outdoor and Trail Bureau, officials of the forest. On the top points of the posts will be painted the name of the trail and beneath will be an arrow pointing the direction of travel of hikers.

Drive Against Billboards

Massachusetts has begun a state-wide drive against the billboards that line its highways. The state department of public works has been empowered to regulate billboard advertising by the process of licensing that industry. Violation of the new regulations is punishable by a fine of $100 for the first offense and $200 for the second.

Location of Best Towns

In traveling one cannot but note that the most prosperous towns are along the lines of good transportation, as good roads and good transportation help in the first element of the farmer. "The ability to make a comfortable living from the land."

Roads to Circle Earth

More than 8,000 miles of roads of all types were completed with federal aid during the year which ended June 30, 1923, according to a government report. This, added to the mileage completed previously, brought the total for finished projects up to 26,805 miles, or more than enough to circle the earth. The projects under construction at the close of the year amounted to 14,772 miles, and were estimated at 58 per cent complete.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Chlorine Cures Colds While You Wait

WASHINGTON.—It may safely be predicted that chlorine gas treatment for colds will shortly be the fashion all over the country. For one reason, it's a good thing. For another, President Coolidge has taken it. The President, suffering with a cold symptomatic of "rose fever," adopted a suggestion made to him by Secretary Weeks by taking the chlorine gas treatment with which army surgeons have been experimenting successfully for some months.

The President sat in an air-tight room at the army dispensary for 45 minutes while the treatment was being administered, and read. While he sat in this room Lieut. Col. Mathew A. De Laney of the medical corps, attending surgeon in the District of Columbia, watched the flow of gas. He saw that the President got the full treatment and said afterward that he believed the President's cold would yield to the gas, which had cured stubborn colds of many officials, including Secretary Weeks.

After the President returned to the executive offices he told his secretary, Bascom Slemp, that he was much better and felt greatly exhilarated. All of the depression and lack of energy which accompanies a cold, he said, had disappeared.

Brig. Gen. Charles E. Sawyer, the White House physician, who is of the homeopathic school, accompanied the President to the army dispensary, but did not breathe any of the chlorine gas.

Experimentation on the use of the chlorine gas as a cure for respiratory diseases was undertaken by the army medical corps in a serious manner as a result of an important discovery at the Edgewood arsenal in Edgewood, Md., at the time of the influenza epidemic in 1918. It was found that employees of the chlorine plant were practically free from the disease, which was rampant among employees of other divisions of the arsenal.

The various medical bureaus at Washington have been for some time systematically studying "the common cold." Though familiarity in its case has bred contempt, it is a very dangerous disease in that it paves the way for others more immediately serious. A people without colds would show an extraordinary decrease in the death rate.

Activities of Rockefeller Foundation

PASTEUR, the great French scientist, in addressing an international congress in Italy, said that "Science has no nationality, because knowledge is the patrimony of humanity, the torch which gives light to the world."

In his annual review of the work of the Rockefeller Foundation during the year 1923, President George E. Vincent tells an interesting story of what the foundation is doing to add to "the patrimony of humanity." By promoting the migration of scientists and administrators, he says, by helping to diffuse more rapidly new ideas, by strengthening world centers of teaching and research, in short, by fostering medical science and public health as forms of international co-operation, the Rockefeller Foundation seeks "to fulfill the purpose of its charter, 'the well-being of mankind throughout the world.'"

In its varied activities the foundation expended during the year approximately $8,500,000. Of the total amount, $3,174,508 was expended in public health work, the largest item being $1,467,400 for the regular program of the International board of health in control of hookworm, malaria and yellow fever, and in county health and laboratory service. The school of public health at Harvard university received $618,750.

Almost $5,000,000 was devoted to medical education, $1,354,012 going to the China medical board, $1,590,502 to the Canadian medical program, $621,472 to the London medical center and $1,046,925 to the University of Chicago.

Miscellaneous expenditures amounted to $155,928, the greater part of that going to the national research council. The income of the foundation for the year accruing from investments was nearly $9,000,000. The foundation now has $165,201,624 in its principal funds and owns lands, buildings and equipment to the value of $23,953,816.

In enumerating the many things that this organization accomplished in a year, Doctor Vincent lists first the supplying of fellowship funds for 764 individuals in 29 different countries, the support through the League of Nations of interchanging institutes for 54 public health officers from 27 nations and the arranging of international visits of one commission and of 24 visiting professors.

"If the scientific 'patrimony of humanity' is to be protected and enlarged" says Doctor Vincent, "there must be no break in the continuity of investigation and teachers."

Holmes, Root, Eliot—Roosevelt Medalists

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, in the East Room of the White House the other day, presented to three good Americans the 1921 Roosevelt gold medals in recognition of "eminent service to the American people." These three good Americans were Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes of the United States Supreme court; Elihu Root, former United States senator, former secretary of war and former secretary of state, and—by his proxy, Jerome D. Greene, the New York banker—Charles William Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard university. Holmes, active and judicial, is eighty-three; Root, administrative and truly major, is seventy-six; Eliot, teacher and guide of youth, is eighty.

The ceremony was so simple that it might have taken place in any American citizen's parlor, although fifty or more persons were present. Of Judge Holmes, who was deeply affected, the President bestowed these gracious and beautiful phrases:

"To you the medal for service in the development of public law. . . . President Roosevelt would have been peculiarly gratified to know that this medal now is yours. . . . During your long service on the Supreme bench, to which he summoned you early in his Presidential term, you have, I think, almost exemplarily interpreted the institutions and aspirations of your country with the liberality, the understanding and vision that would have certainly earned his approval." He closed with this description of Holmes' legal writing: "A monument imperishable and unforgettable."

Root, the President addressed as "soldier, lawyer, statesman, patriot," and gave him the gold medal "for public service." "You have made America more American and honorably made honored. You have made more secure the peace of nations and more certain justice among men."

Root's response was that he was made doubly happy by receiving the Roosevelt medal from a President who exemplified "Roosevelt's virtues of courage and dignity."

To Eliot's proxy, Greene, the President wrote, as if spoken to Eliot, were: "Life's ideal for individuals at youth and continued effectiveness character shall be yours. . . . You have made your long and beautiful life a very benediction. Yours has been a true and an especially impressive conception of the great business of living; you have been a guide in your time and a prophet of our future."

Work's Policy as to New National Parks

UNLESS the policy of the Interior department as to the creation of new national parks is changed as the result of the recent recreational conference in Washington, it will remain substantially as fixed by former Secretary Lane. A statement of the present policy of the department is contained in a letter addressed to Senator Fletcher of Florida by Secretary of Interior Work. It follows:

"Under the theory and practice of the United States government since 1872, when Yellowstone National park was created, our national park system is made up of areas including scenery of quality so unusual and impressive, or natural features so extraordinary as to possess national interest and importance as contra distinguished from local interest. Such outstanding examples of typical world architecture as the Grand Canyon, exemplifying in unequaled grandeur the highest accomplishment of stream erosion, or the rugged portions of Mount Desert island in Maine, which are incorporated in the Lafayette National park, exemplifying unique rock forms in association with quite extraordinary eastern forests, compelled immediate recognition of national park values.

"The national parks, therefore, must not be lowered in standard, dignity and prestige by the inclusion of areas which express in less than the highest terms the particular class or type of exhibit which they represent.

"Size is not important so long as the proposed park includes within its boundaries those scenic elements that meet established standards, but the area must be susceptible of effective development to make it accessible to the people, and of convenient administration and control. Duplication of exhibits already in the national park system must be carefully avoided in order that the individuality of the members of the system may be maintained.

"And when once established by the congress along well-studied boundary lines, they must be conserved in their natural state, untouched by the inroads of modern civilization so that coming generations, as well as the people of our own time, may be assured their use for the purposes of recreation, education and scientific research."

How American Fliers Gained Day on Trip

"A newspaper date line—'Paramashru Island, Kuriles, May 17'—has done more to make the international date line an understandable reality to millions of readers than could numerous chapters in school geographies," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

"This unusual date line appeared in the morning papers of May 17 that had gone to press about 4 o'clock in the morning. The dispatch told of the arrival the same day, Saturday, at 11:35 in the morning, of America's round-the-world fliers — apparently seven and a half hours after the papers were printed.

"But because the fliers had hurdled the date line immediately after leaving the last Aleutian island they had jumped twenty-four hours into the future. Their arrival was really about sixteen and one-half hours before the papers went to press. They had begun to speak a different language from America—their watch time was the same as 11:35 Friday in the United States."

The Estancia Valley on the north was visited the past week with several good rains, extending east to Corona. This means large crops in that bean growing country.

The stork has been busy the past month. That proverbial bird visited White Oaks early Sunday morning and left a package containing an eight-pound boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Haskins.

The cantaloupe rush on the railroad has partly subsided, but the second rush will soon be due, as the late melons are maturing. For several weeks there were from 12 to 15 trains a day passing this point for eastern points, which kept the train crews on the jump.

Scattered rains have fallen over the county past week which relieved ranch and range. Normally the summer rains are due the first week in July, and they got here on time. A nice shower Tuesday evening in this vicinity laid the dust and cooled the atmosphere. One or two more such showers wouldn't hurt a bit.

A party of Isleta Indians, comprising three full-blood bucks, a half-breed squaw and a papoose passed through here Tuesday on a visit to red brethren on the Mescalero Reservation. They traveled in a Ford car and disposed of some nice trinkets of silver and turquoise, of Indian workmanship. They were genuine and worth all they asked for them.

George Coe, Sr., and Elgy Perry, of Ruidoso, returned Tuesday from the Farmington oil fields Several producers and twelve new wells spudded in lately. The oil sand is encountered at about 850 feet. Some Carrizozo parties have a five year lease on 20,000 acres in that district close to a producing well.

The warm weather is causing large numbers to leave the cities. Some are going to the Ruidoso, Eagle Creek, Bonito and other cool retreats. It is estimated there are at least 100 summer cottages completed on the Ruidoso, and others in course of erection. The Bonito and Eagle Creek are getting their share of summer visitors but in a lesser.

Married

A wedding took place at eleven o'clock Tuesday morning in the parlor of the Carrizozo Eating House, Rev. W. J. Knoy, Methodist minister, performing the ceremony. The contracting parties reside near Alto, and are popular in that community. Miss Mamie Ann Cox, the bride, grew to womanhood near Alto, and Henry Hoagland, the groom, is a son of Ed. Hoagland, an old resident in that section of the mountains. The young couple, with their friends, left in the afternoon for Alto, where they will make their home.

Here from Capitan

H. L. Dockray, a progressive stockman and rancher from the Capitan district, was in Carrizozo Tuesday on business. His ranch is situated about four miles northeast of capitan, and embraces about 1900 acres of patented and leased State lands. He stated there were several heavy rains in his neighborhood lately—too heavy, in fact, to be of much value, as the water ran off the land before it had time to penetrate the baked soil. However, it helped the range some.

Pure Mesquite Honey

OUR CHOICE WHITE MESQUITE HONEY will be on the market in a few days. We cater to particular people. Here are some reasons why you should buy The "Hedstrom & Allen" Honey:

1st—We use Queen Excluders. These separate the young bees from the honey. You get the pure honey with the true flavor.

2nd—We leave honey in the hives and let the bees ripen it. This gives the honey the best flavor and it will keep its true flavor always.

We make prompt deliveries and our prices are low for this high-grade honey. Be sure and put your order in early if you want some of this delicious Mesquite Honey.
