OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 25 — CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, JAN. 2, 1925 — NUMBER 1

Dies in El Paso

M. F. Lovelace, a well-known citizen of Lincoln, died in El Paso, Tuesday morning at the home of his brother, W. R. Lovelace. Mr. Lovelace had come to Carrizozo to spend the Christmas holidays with his children, but suffered from an old attack and was hurried back to El Paso, where he succumbed on the date given above.

Mr Lovelace, a native of Texas, was in his 65th year; came to New Mexico in 1898, but went to California, where he resided for 12 years, returning to New Mexico in 1921, where, since, he has been engaged in cattle ranching.

The funeral took place in Carrizozo Wednesday, from the home of a daughter, Mrs. S. W. Wells, and interment was made in the local cemetery. Morgan Lovelace, a son, who also resides here, is the only other direct descendant of the deceased. Three brothers also survive, one of whom, W. R. Lovelace, is a prominent stockman of the Corona country.

Rev. John H. Shinner conducted the funeral ceremonies.

License Plates

Comptroller's Office,
Santa Fe, Dec. 29

The following letter has been received from the secretary of state of Michigan dated Dec. 2:

"Pending legislation in Michigan makes it necessary to defer issuing 1925 license plates until Feb. 15 or March 1. Michigan has therefore authorized the use of 1924 license plates of all kinds until such time as the legislature passes on the proposed new tax bills.

A number of Michigan cars will doubtless be operated in your state, and we request that you extend the courtesy to Michigan to motor vehicle owners the regulation of these 1924 plates until they can secure their 1925 plates.

"I assure you that Mirigan will be pleased to extend a similar courtesy, should the occasion for same arise.

"Chas. J. Leland,
Secretary of State."

In view of the request contained in the letter above quoted, this office is disposed to extend the courtesy requested, and requests that all peace officers of the state be governed accordingly.

R. H. Cutter,
State Comptroller.

Wilson Peace Award Goes to Cecil

New York, Dec. 29.—Before a distinguished gathering, which included Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Viscount Cecil of Chetwood was presented last night with the $25,000 peace award and medal given under the Woodrow Wilson foundation for meritorious service in the cause of international co-operation and peace. The presentation was made at a dinner at the Hotel Astor.

In accepting the award Viscount Cecil asserted that the advance in the last five years in the direction of international co-operation had been little short of marvelous.

Praising the United States for having consistently stood for peace, Viscount Cecil said that he would not utter a word of criticism of the attitude of America towards the league of nations. He stressed, however, the accomplishments of the league since its inception under the leadership of Woodrow Wilson, who he characterized as a "great American and a great citizen of the world," adding:

"There is no title to fame higher than that."

Mr. Wilson's contribution, he said, was the idea that peace was based on unity and solidarity of mankind, an idea contrary to that motivating that of the pre-war system which Viscount Cecil called "international anarchy diversified by war."

In explaining the actions and attitude of the league throughout its existance, Viscount Cecil dwelt on the problems raised by the Egyptian and Corfu controversies. He championed the stand of the league in both cases, affirming that the outcome had been a victory for peace.

"The league is there to deal with international relations, not with relations affecting the national administration of any country," he explained, and he pointed out that "the relations between England and Egypt are of a very special character."

He asserted that "no objection can be justly raised to the British action," regarding Egypt, which he said was not an international matter.

England's offer after the controversy to lay before the council of the league a full statement of her action in Egypt, he declared to be "one of the most striking testimonials to the progress of the idea of international unity."

Arthur T. Hannett Becomes Governor

Santa Fe, N. M., Jan. 1.—Arthur T. Hannett, the seventh governor of the state of New Mexico, was inaugurated at noon today in the chamber of the house of representative. At exactly noon the governor's party and other official parties filed into the chamber as the Santa Fe band played the Star Spangled Banner.

After the short address of welcome by retiring Governor James F. Hinkle, the oath of office was administered by Chief Justice Parker, of the Supreme Court.

Chief Justice Parker administered the oath of office at 12:12. In a brief address Governor Hinkle thanked the people of the state for the support given during his incumbency and said simply, "The present governor will now address you."

Governor Hannett received an ovation lasting several minutes. A crowded auditorium and gallery expressed approval of his remarks by frequent applause.

Mrs. William C. McDonald, wife of the first governor of the state, who was in the inaugural procession, received a tremendous ovation as she entered the house of representatives.

The inaugural ceremonies were favored with brilliant weather and the house of representatives was overcrowded, many standing in the galleries.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies, the governor's guard fired a 17-gun salute.

In one of the shortest inauguration speeches ever made in America, Governor Hannett spoke simply and sincerely of his aims for the coming administration. He stressed the necessity for tax reform, and suggested the necessity of legislation which would make a collection of delinquent taxes possible.

"The most important departments of the state are the Highway Department and the Department of Education," Governor Hannett said. "State government should be conducted so as to interfere as little as possible with the affairs of its citizens. Prosperity has never been and never will be brought about by legislation. It is dependent on industry, frugality and intelligence of its people and the only assistance government can give is to function efficiently and at a minimum cost."

Governor Hannett also advocated new legislation to regulate the registration of voters, for "the preservation of the honesty of the ballot." The present system in this state invites fraud, he said.

Farmer-Consumer League Demands Relief

(Producers and Consumers Magazine)

In calling upon the farmers of the country to unite for self-protection along economic lines with a view to urging immediate farm relief legislation by congress, a Temporary Organization Committee of the Farmer-to-Consumer League has opened a national headquarters at Washington and New York.

The organization is a national, non-partisan association working for the relief of agriculture through cooperative marketing and centralized distribution.

It may be of interest to those directly concerned with the subject of farm relief legislation that no bill will be satisfactory to farmers' cooperative marketing organization in the hands of either government officials such as the Capper-Williams Bill provides, or the friends of the middlemen. "We might as well suggest," says the League, "that the government enter the steel business or the rubber business as to enact legislation that will put the government in the farming business. This is, of course, the main objection to the present Capper-Willams Bill, now before the senate. We hardly believe that such a measure has the approval of President Coolidge, since in his various messages of late, he has put particular emphasis on the fact that the only way of rescuing agriculture must come through simple and direct methods put into operation by the farmer himself as the only real source of restoration."

"In helping the farmer to become a merchant, as well as a producer, as suggested by President Coolidge, the League will achieve its highest aim. But not until the farmers of the country are organized under an act of congress to control their marketing can they ever be in a position to really expect fair and equitable prices for their products. Farming is the only industry not operating today under a concrete organized system. Labor, finance, transportation every other industry protects its members and their interests through organized, collective bargaining.

"The League is fully aware of the fact that not only the farmers, but the consumers as well, must join forces in the fight ahead of us to obtain proper legislative recognition and justice. Reports indicate that the opposition, led by middlemen, are determined to block any legislation promising effective aid to farmer and consumer. In discussing the various relief bills, the Western Breeders Journal says, 'Perhaps the most promising of those measures already prepared that will come to the attention of the committee, is the Curtis-Aswell bill. The Curtis-Aswell bill calls to establish voluntary cooperation in every branch of agriculture and involves no demands upon the government except the means of initiating the plan.'"

Rollands' Drug Store Burglarized

New Year's night a burglar, driven, apparently, by his desire apparently for the drug that lulls to sleep, entered the Rolland Bros. drug store, and, from all indications discoverable the next morning, took an inventory of the prescription case, in a search for "dope."

The result of his efforts, however, must have been somewhat disappointing, for, under the law, the druggist is required to place narcotics in safe or vault, and the nocturnal marauder found little to satisfy his longing, although the case showed evidence that he had gone through it rather methodically. Some strichnine tablets were missing, and perhaps similar preparations, to a small extent, and Mr. Rolland's automatic constitute the principal loot taken—the cash register not even been disturbed.

The burglar entered by the rear door, having forced ingress by the aid of a drill, with a bit, a pick and jimmies. He left the tools where he used them, evidently, one who believed in the proverb, "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof."

Thames on Rampage

London, Dec. 30.—The Thames is now a mile wide near London, following the wettest year in a century. Many farms and cottages are inundated and the river is still rising.

To Drill for Oil at Vaughn

Vaughn, Dec. 29.—Oil interests took a boom last week with the arrival of prominent oil men from California, who are going to drill several test wells on leased blocks held by them north of this town. A standard rig is being shipped from Oklahoma. The exact site for the test will be made at once.

It is reported here that the old Tularosa well south of here has been taken over by Pacific coast oil men and that they will complete the well. Other oil men are here in the field and it is rumored that several test wells will be drilled shortly.

Furs Are Used to Trim All Apparel

Fashion creators today acknowledge another reason for trimming gowns with fur than that given by the young woman who said she did it to show she could afford it. Since fur is the distinguishing feature of this season's styles, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times, the best designers in Paris have illustrated the possibilities and the beauty of fur in countless artistic ways. Fancy has had full sway in many of the lovely things from the best-known ateliers.

Gowns of the finest, softest fabrics, deep piled woolens and velvets of luxurious silky feeling, all are helped to the additional suggestion of warmth with fur—fur about the neck, fur bordering the bottom of skirts, fur cuffs in which hands are sheltered, and fur in bands that add lines of grace from throat to hem.

The evidence of fur on gowns, wraps and millinery is almost universal. Almost no coat, evening wrap, street or sports suit is seen without some fur, and those garments in which it is omitted seem to lack interest and modishness. The makers of bonnets, of occasional garments and of accessories have followed the lead of the costume designers, and so there is fur on almost everything that is offered for women's wear.

Variations of Design.

The variations of design in which these directors of style present their models are interesting. Lelong, for example, cuts fur with the abandon with which one might put the shears into flannel; he cuts it into a circular flounce to form the bottom, 18 inches deep, of the silk coat in an afternoon costume. This fur, being beaver, in an ensemble of heavy beige silk, borders also the cuffs of the flaring sleeves, and the high, overturning collar.

Worth likes to trim many things with fur, and most often uses it in straight lines—as often on silk or satin as on the heavier materials. Renee and Doucet have done some particularly charming frocks and suits in colored cloths, bordered and banded, collared and cuffed with the brown furs fox and skunk.

Lanvin uses the pony skin and other flat furs. Patou has a flair for frocks and coats of soft velvets, and prefers for their trimming the superlatively fine furs, especially the foxes in blues and grays. Paul Caret is content to add large bands or squares of fur on a wrap fashioned of handsome wool or silk, and Doeuillet, whose newest models are severely straight in line, cuts his fur in bands which outline a coat all about the edge and at the wrists.

Cheruit, losing the sweep of soft material and the introduction of a scarf, when it is possible, crosses a gown and coat of fall sweeping width with fine fox placed several inches above the hem, and carried in circling softness around the neck, down the front and about the bottom. Premet's newest and best idea also is bellishment and comfort for women in the world of fashion.

Any of these is seen on the gowns, coats and ensembles on everything designed for street, sports, or afternoon wear. Fox, skunk, kolinsky, seal, mink, sable and ermine and many skillfully dyed imitations of these with catchy names are introduced in evening gowns and wraps. Some of the designers are making the fur trimming of a costume its most conspicuous feature and are using it with extravagance. Worth, for example, does something striking, almost freakish, in trimming an afternoon gown of black satin with jet and two furs, black fox and ermine, and a conspicuous motif formed of ermine tails.

Another creator given to outre types alternates, in an elaborate wrap for formal afternoon or evening wear, black velvet, cloth of gold and seal skin, broad crosswise bands of these forming the entire garment. In an eccentric tailleur, fur skins and tails, as if trophies of the hunt, form the somewhat startling scheme of decoration.

Attractive Slimline Coat of Chipmunk Trimmed With Monkey.

How Fur Is Used.

Many models present a far more conventional line in the use of fur—wide or narrow bands, deep cuffs and high, voluminous collars, of the new soft rolling stand collar that follows the line of the coat as it opens from collar to hem.

Gowns of soft satin or crepe, wraps of metal brocades, velvet or heavy silks are made sumptuous by the addition of fur. Black satin trimmed with ermine is thought to be extremely smart, and ermine tails and skins are lavishly used on evening frocks and wraps. The blend of ermine and of white seen on some of the best scarf velvet wraps foretells the vogue ahead in the new styles. Such garments have a regal appearance.

Hence gowns, the fabrics chosen by some of the best designers in the world's centers, both plain and brocaded, in satin crepes, velvets, velvet and chiffons, the more delicate tea gowns and negligees of the crepe, chiffon, georgette, voile and these types take on more chic and style by the introduction of fur. It is cleverly added as trimming for the neck, or border ing the skirt or drapery, and in one model it appears in diamond-shaped pieces of seal appliqued on the front of a coat-shaped negligee of Liberty satin.

Ingenuity seems to be the limit in the number of original ways of introducing fur in the smart table. A separate collar, high and deep, is made so that it can be adjusted to the neck of a coat or wrap.

Long Straight Scarf.

Cheruit has brought out some charming examples, and others that are prizing their popularity are by Lelong, one being a particularly amusing design. It consists of a long straight scarf of crepe chiffon that is wound around the neck from front to back, where the ends are crossed and draped to each side of the sleeve, each attached to a wide, flaring cuff of fur that turns back, half covering the lower arm.

Lucien Lelong builds the upper half of a satin wrap of beaver fur, giving the effect of a jacket, hip length, over a circular skirt, but being in reality a part of the whole garment. Collar in scarf shape, cuffs and a deep band on the skirt are all of the fur, leaving little of the satin in evidence. Separate pockets are shown on some of the new cloth dresses, a novelty in detail that appears to take the fancy of Bertin, who adds a band of skunk fur to the bottom of a blouse that has no touch of fur elsewhere in the costume.

great restraint in the use of fur, and some ultra smart suits bearing the stamp are of delightful stuffs, but furless, except for high, enveloping collars and deep cuffs, or, as in some of the softer gowns, just a scarf of lovely fox or priceless sable.

Characteristics expressed by the great number and variety of fur-trimmed garments this season are diverting. Fashionable women wear the coats of every sort of animal, domestic and wild, and these are known by as many names, sometimes most amusing. The latest thing in sports coats is likely trimmed with leopard, or leopard cat, or the entire wrap may be made of one of these, the most popular of the sports furs. Leopards, wild cats, chipmunks, monkeys, opossums, wolves, bears, beavers, foxes, squirrels, goats, gazelles, rabbits and beagles from nearer the barnyard supply contributions to the list of furs that are proving their popularity are by Lelong, one being a particularly amusing design. MR. FOX'S SNOWBALL

WHEN Mr. Fox opened the door to his home one morning the snow came tumbling all over him. It had snowed so hard in the night that his house was almost covered up.

Mr. Fox's house stood on the side of a hill and when at last he did make a place big enough for him to get out and look around he found that everything as far as he could see was covered with snow.

The fences between his home and the farm where the plump poultry lived were not to be seen at all.

"If I try to get down to the farm," said Mr. Fox, "I'll sink into the snow and freeze. Now, if I had a sled or even a plank I might slide right over fences and land right up against the barnyard fence.

"Those hens and chickens will be sure to come out some time today. And Mr. Dog won't go far from his warm place behind the kitchen stove today if I know him, and I think I do.

"Talk about a dog's life being a hard one! I never knew of a dog that did not have an easy time of it except ing when they try to catch me." And here Mr. Fox had to stop and laugh before he went on with his planning.

"Now, I have breakfast on sled," said he, thinking about his breakfast again. "I could roll down the hill, I suppose, but I might strike the top of a wall or something—"

Mr. Fox went in the house and put on his cap, which he pulled down all around his head. Then he put on some old gloves and over them his mittens and some long woolen stockings on his feet.

He then came out and sat down in the snow, pushing it all around his feet. Then he began to pull about gathering the snow all over him as he went. And pretty soon nothing but a great big ball of snow was to be seen. Mr. Fox was inside a huge snowball.

Mr. Fox knew he could only roll down the hill; he could not roll up very well. And when the ball was heavy enough it started to roll down. It went along making a path and gathering more snow on its way.

But it did not go in the direction Mr. Fox had intended. Instead of rolling straight to the barnyard, as Mr. Fox had hoped it would, it struck a tree not very far from the farm with a bang, and out tumbled dazed Mr. Fox.

He jumped up and shook himself, but he did not look up in the tree. If he had he might have seen Mr. Crow staring down at him with feathers bristling with anger.

But he didn't see Mr. Crow, and Mr. Crow did not make a sound. Instead, he kept his bright eyes fixed upon Mr. Fox to see what he was up to.

When his head stopped swimming, Mr. Fox made his way toward the barnyard. It was hard work getting through the snow, but at last he reached the fence and peeked through the cracks, his eyes fixed upon the poultry feeding on the other side.

Mr. Crow, of course, made his way easily and swiftly to the barnyard fence. He did not mind traveling when the snow was on the ground.

Mr. Fox did not see him until Mr. Crow's jarring voice cawed loudly just above the cry that tells Mr. Man or Mr. Dog that "a fox is nearby."

Mr. Fox jumped. He tried to run, but the snow was deep and he stumbled and floundered about trying to get away before Mr. Dog started after him. But Mr. Crow had no intention of letting him off even in that way. He flew right along over him, cawing that he would teach him to jump against his house.

"Scratch my house again, will you?" he cawed, following right up to Mr. Fox's door. And even when he banged it in Mr. Crow's face he could still hear him cawing outside.

"Now, what bad luck sent that snowball rolling against his house? There was no use telling Jimmy Crow it was all an accident," said Mr. Fox, as he toasted his toes before the fire. "When Jimmy gets started talking no one can get a word in edgewise.

"Hi-ho-hum," he sighed as he stretched himself. "That snowball ride was a great one if only it had worked out as I planned it. But the hen was good. Yes, sirree, it was a dinner time." And Mr Fox gave his knee a resting slap to assure himself that this was so.

Pulpwood Could Be Grown in U. S.

Washington: Under intensive forest management sufficient pulpwood to meet further domestic requirements could be grown in this country, but if our pulpwood paper industry is to be maintained, forest destruction must give way to timber culture," William B. Greeley, chief of the forest service declares in his annual report to the secretary of agriculture. He estimates that in 1925 the United States consumed 9 million tons of paper more than half the world consumption and that one million tons of it were imported. He thinks estimates that in 1930 the paper industry will require 13 million cords of wood annually, 40 of the 9 million cords of pulpwood used in this country in 1923, he adds, only 3 million cords were grown from the land.

Reed Grills Prohibition Laws

Washington: National prohibition, as it now exists was placed on the grill by Senator Reed, Democrat, Missouri, at a Senate committee hearing on the Vestead bill to make the prohibition and a separate treaty between Germany and the United States. Questioning witnesses to test the attitude of the prohibition forces, the Missouri senator asked what they would do to make perfect a law's failure, and his response to one such witness suggested that the unlimited addition of poison to industrial alcohol to prevent its use in liquor consumption was "approaching cruelty."

Airplane Hooks onto Dirigible

Chanute, Kan.: The double feat of an airplane hooking itself on to an airship while both were in full flight, and then freeing itself to sail away again was accomplished for the first time at Scott field, that being a few days ago. The airship used was the navy C-7, and the plane was a Curtiss Hawk pursuit, a small type. A metal hook attached to a trapeze on the center of the plane was used to cut in on to a small trapeze extending from outside cage under the forward part of the ship.

Alaska Gold Production $994,182

Fairbanks, Alaska.—Gold produced in the Fairbanks district and handled through the First National Bank here, amounted to $994,182 during the fiscal year of 1924, ending June 15, or $231,276 greater than in 1923, R. G. Woods, manager of the bank declared in an annual report published last week.

Colorado Coal Production Increased

Denver.—The decrease in Colorado coal production manifested during the late summer and fall months this year is fast being wiped out by increased production during the winter months, it was proved when the monthly coal report of James Dalrymple, state coal mine inspector, was issued for November. The November production in this state was 906,804 tons, bringing the total production this year to 8,007,000 tons.

THROUGH THE GLAD EYES OF A WOMAN

By JANE DOE

THE BEST RESOLUTION

THANK goodness!

The same to you!

And always!

I turned up at the office the other morning and found all sorts of the letters from all sorts of nice people sitting on a heaps here there.

Making me feel very pleased with myself.

Oh! It is jolly to feel pleased with oneself.

Isn't it?

And what magic there is in getting one!

It doesn't last long to be as nice as I know how.

Unless the other hand if the results are to continue like the pretty I use to feel on returning with the Santa Claus smiling content and the last farthing in my purse, I can only conclude it is best not always to give at least.

So here goes.

"To live sweet child and let others live with me sweet."

Perhaps if everyone were really nice to everyone else all the time, all our social problems would be solved.

To smile, instead of frown!
To praise, instead of scorn!
To laugh, instead of snigger.
To be loyal, instead of selfish.
To sympathize, instead of chide.
To help, instead of hinder.
To be kind, instead of unkind.
To help, instead of hate.
To be good, instead of bad.
To be friendly, instead of indifferent.
To cheer, instead of gloom.
To be cheery, instead of sad.
But ALWAYS to SMILE.
What more could we want?

It seems to me it is good enough for anyone.

I'm going to have a shot at it any way.

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name, it's history, meaning; whether it's destined, significant your lucky day and lucky jewel

EDITH

EDITH has a charming surgery like name which happens to be Anglo-Saxon, as it is believed to be derived from the "ead." Which it is a perplexing name to follow in its various interpretations. It has the same root as Edward, Edwin and Edgar and curiously enough, Edith appears early in the history as the consort of Edgithe, which seems to have been the earliest authentic form.

If we accept Eadgithe as being the "correct," Edith then its interpretation is somewhat different as the emphasis is placed upon the "gith," which is thought to be a phonetic variation of gift or gift, meaning gift. In that case, Edith means rich gift.

Gytha was a popular feminine name among the Norse, and Gytha was the daughter of Sweyn, king of Denmark. Gytha was a Norse goddess and became the old, crafted conception of womanhood.

The first Godgyth was the daughter of Earl Godwin of whom legend said: "Great spikes poison, peculiar Godwinson Eightman." But in the roll of her lands in "Domesday," she is called Eddeva. Eddid and Edgith were much used by the Normans, but the queen of Henry I, who bore the name, was not permitted anything to Saxon and she became Edith.

College Fraternity

The organization of the Chi Psi Greek Letter fraternity has twice changed its membership, and in the present form of organization dates from June, 1907. Originally it was a sophomore society organized at Yale in 1846 by some members of the class of 1848. In 1857 a chapter was established at Yale as a general university society, and in the same year a convention at Marietta, Ohio, perfected a national organization.

Wants New R. R. Hearing

Santa Fe, Dec. 29.—Renewing his request for another hearing of the state corporation commission's request petition to allocate the New Mexico Central Railway with the Southern Pacific group, Hugh H. Williams, chairman of the commission, has announced that the fight has just begun.

Chairman Williams wrote to Henry C. Hall, chairman of the interstate commerce commission, responding to his recent denial of request to reopen the hearing, stating that "we disagree with you that the people of New Mexico have been given every opportunity to be heard in the proceedings."

The letter said in part:

"The New Mexico Central Railroad is considered by the people of New Mexico as absolutely essential to the development and growth of this state, and we confidently believe that its inclusion with the Rock Island-Southern Pacific group will meet with practically unanimous approval. Any attempt to allocate the line to System No. 16 (Santa Fe) will be strenuously opposed. It has always been our idea that the consolidation of the railroads into a limited number of systems should be done piece meal gradually along natural, normal lines, instead of trying to put into effect a nation wide scheme at one and the same time which would inevitably lead to a great deal of confusion and consequent disruption of business."

Investigate Power Trust

Washington, Dec. 29.—Senator Norris of Nebraska, chairman of the committee on agriculture, introduced a resolution yesterday calling for investigation by federal trade commission of the alledged existence and activities of the power trust.

The resolution is part of the campaign being conducted by Norris against the adoption of the Underwood bill, providing for the leasing to private interests of the power plant at Muscle Shoals. He and other senators have openly charged that the Underwood bill is looked upon with favor if it is not actually sponsored by the power trust through some of its subsidiaries.

Senator McKellar of Tennessee for instance, has repeatedly declared on the floor of the senate that should Muscle Shoals be leased to private parties it would of necessity fall into the hands of the power trust.

It has also been charged that the power trust has maintained a gigantic lobby here, which is making a desperate drive to force the Underwood bill through congress.

Under the resolution the federal trade commission is directed "to investigate and report the degree of concentration and interrelation in the ownership, control, direction, financing and management of power companies, public utilities and other related concerns."

The president is requested to direct the secretary of the treasury to give the federal trade commission access to all records and official reports in the various bureaus of the treasury department which may aid the investigators to get the investigators to get the information desired.

Attorney W. A. Hawkins Retires

W. A. Hawkins, general attorney of the El Paso & Southwestern System, which was recently acquired by the Southern Pacific company, retires from service the first of the year.

Although the general attorney's office at El Paso probably will be eliminated, a legal office will be retained, if plans under consideration are carried out.

Mr. Hawkins came to the south west when a young man and is widely known around this section of the country.

He was prominently identified with the development of the El Paso & Southwestern system from the time its construction was started in 1877 as the El Paso & Northeastern.

For Dry Enforcement

Washington, Dec. 29.—Provision in the treasury postoffice appropriation bill for expenditure of $11,000,000 for prohibition enforcement during the coming fiscal year was approved today by the house.

No effort was made to alter the amount, which is $141,770 less than the amount available this year, but $782,120 more than cuts than budget estimates.

The house also approved without amendment an allotment of $20,207,856 for coast guard activities, part of which would be available for curbing rum-running. This amount is $11,753 less than the total appropriated for this year.

France Must Pay Says Penna. Senator

Washington, Dec. 29.—A revival of reports that French statesmen might be veering toward a repudiation of that country's war debt to the United States led to a sweate debate today on which Senator Reed, Republican, Penna., declared France should thoroughly understand she would have to pay.

Paris, Dec. 29.—Finance Minister Clementel pledged himself in the chamber of deputies today not to bind the government to any settlement of the inter-allied debts during the discussion in the forthcoming finance minister's conference without first obtaining parliamentary approval.

Fire Destroys Cotton Gin

Carlsbad, Dec. 30.—One of the most disastrous fires in this part of the valley occurred the last of the week when the four-stand cotton gin of Tipton & Son was totally destroyed by fire with a loss of $24,000. Included in the loss was about 40 tons of cotton seed out of a pile of over 300 tons. Hundreds of people from the surrounding country rushed in the scene of the blaze but the flames spread so rapidly that little could be done. The gin was one of the largest in this part of the valley and has been working at top speed for several months to take care of the season's crop of cotton. The owners announce that the plant will be rebuilt in time to handle the 1925 crop.

State Bonds Burned

Santa Fe, Dec. 30.—Bonds retired during Governor Hinkle's administration in the total sum of over $1,700,000 were formally burned at the state capitol yesterday in compliance with the law, with the governor, state auditor Vigil, Attorney General Helmick and state treasurer Graham as spectators. Vigil officiated as chief fireman, stuffing the bonds in the state house furnace and handling the paper.

The cancelled bonds were:

Santa Fe and Grant counties, $1,205,000; Armory building, $3,000; Agricultural college, $25,000; general refunding, $28,000; institutional certificates of indebtedness, $74,000; national guard certificates, $83,365.79; highway bonds, $40,000, and highway debentures, $445,000.

$100 Prize for an Essay

The following letter has been sent to superintendents of schools throughout the state:

Department of Education,
Santa Fe, Dec. 12

It affords me pleasure to announce a "State Essay Contest" for High School students. The subject chosen is particularly pertinent and worth while. It is, "The Federal Constitution and the Courts."

We are very grateful to certain members of the New Mexico Bar Association, whose foresight and good Americanism has led them to choose so vital a topic, and whose generosity has made available prizes totalling $100.

This is an opportunity to vitalize your teaching of history, English, civics, sociology, etc. It is a chance to develop a spirit of community co-operation through the aid of the local members of the Bar.

For your convenience, the regulations governing this contest have been mailed you. Contest closes March 15. We expect all high schools to participate in this contest, for nothing is more vital to a great nation than that its boys and girls shall have clear concepts of the basic principles upon which are founded its material and spiritual greatness.

What Farmers Need Costs More In 1924

Prices of Agricultural Implements Show Large Increases While Farm Products Decline or Remain Stationary.

Washington, D. C.—Farmers were paying higher prices for the necessities they bought on January 15, 1924, than on the same date of the previous year, according to a report of the Department of Agriculture recently issued. At the same time agricultural producers were receiving less for many of their products last January than in the same month of 1923.

In the latest Year Book of the Department of Agriculture (page 1153) appears a table showing "prices of articles bought by farmers, 1923, and January 15, 1924." There are 69 articles in this list. All but fourteen of them cost the farmer more last January than on January 15, 1923. The increases in 1924 over the prices in 1923 range from a fraction of 1 per cent to 10 and 15 per cent.

Four of the fourteen articles which were cheaper in January this year than last were the farmer's own products—bacon, beans, flour and linseed meal.

Agricultural machinery and implements showed considerable advances in 1924, when cereal grains were selling for less money than for a long time previously. Harrows that cost $53.16 on January 15, 1923, were priced at $57.74 on January 15, 1924; horse-drawn riding plows that sold for $85.10 in 1923 were $95 in in 1924; grain binders were $201.61 in 1923 and $222.31 in 1924. Wagons increased from $123.25 in 1923 to $135.65 in 1924; two-horse sulky hay rakes, from $40.67 to $44.91; 5-foot mowers, from $76.29 to $81.22; centrifugal hand cream separators of 250 gallon capacity, from $79.19 to $86.31.

The same relative increases are to be found throughout the list. Barbed wire went from $4.87 to $5.19 a 100 pounds; dairy milk cans (10 gallons) from $4.85 to $5; binder twine from 12 2-10 cents to 13 6-10 cents a pound; leather horse collars from $5.05 to $5.40 each; rubber boots, knee length, from $4.12 to $4.32; wire nails from 5 8-10 cents to 6 2-10 cents; 2-inch framing lumber from $37.37 to $37.51 a 1000 feet; and so through the list of utensils, furniture, clothing, etc. For example, a suit of clothes that cost a farmer $25.83 in 1923 was nearly 5 per cent dearer in 1924, and socks and overalls were, respectively, 11 and 15 per cent higher.

Republican politicians and newspapers are telling farmers that the tariff is an advantage to them. It is evident, however, that while the tariff on agricultural products is practically worthless to the producer it is collectible from him on what he buys from others in the way of necessaries.

There is an attempt to prove that the tariff does not increase the cost of agricultural machinery and implements because these are on the free list. Farmers are not told that the iron and steel from which these machines and implements are manufactured are taxed heavily. The tax increases the cost of agricultural machinery and implements about $100,000,000 a year.

DAVIS BECOMES BOY SCOUT IN COLORADO

Denver, Colo.—When John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate, was in Colorado recent he climbed to an altitude of 9,000 feet in the rugged Rockies to become a member of the Boy Scouts of America, and remained there for a time as the guest of the organization. He is now enrolled as a Boy Scout in good standing of Troop No. 2, which includes Colorado. At the suggestion of James E. West, executive director of the Boy Scouts, Mr. Davis spoke to the members of the conference in session there.

Mr. Davis praised the movement undertaken by the Boy Scouts to bring voters to the polls at local, state and national elections.

"You can do better work for the men and women of this day and for the men and women who are to come after us than to bring these boys to feel that that is their task in life, and that, young as they are, hunters as they are, the hour for them to begin had already struck," Mr. Davis said.

TARIFF TAX ON HOMES

Woman Lecturer Says Cost is $126 For Each Family.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Women are the purchasing agents for all of the 25,000,000 families in the United States, and as such they are the heaviest sufferers under the Fordney-McCumber high protective tariff, according to Mrs. Dora Bolton Lewis, of Indianapolis, who has been delivering a series of lectures to women on the tariff.

Mrs. Lewis points out that the Republican tariff increases the expense of every American home by at least $126 a year in extra cost on commodities in daily use.

COOLIDGE BACKS MELLON SCHEME

Would Regard Republican Success in November as "Mandate" to Repeal Present Law.

WOULD FAVOR MILLIONAIRES

President Still Wants Reduction of Surtaxes on Big Incomes, and Opposes Estate Taxes and Publicity of Returns.

Washington, D. C.—Republican success at the polls on November 4 would be regarded by President Coolidge as a "mandate" to substitute the Mellon plan" of taxation for the present Democratic law and thus deprive small taxpayers of the generous reduction in taxes they now enjoy and instead give most of the benefits to the millionaires and billionaires Mr. Coolidge and his Secretary of the Treasury have frankly favored in the past.

Partisan Republican newspapers, evidently speaking with inspiration from the White House, have repeatedly published the statement that Mr. Coolidge's election and Republican control of Congress will be the signal for a revision of the new Democratic tax law and the enactment in its stead of the Mellon scheme. The President's own language in his statement accompanying his approval of the Garner-Simmons (Democratic) bill is taken to justify the prediction made by Republican newspapers.

Mr. Coolidge declared his opposition to the surtax rates, running to 40 per cent, to the estate tax of 40 per cent, and to publicity for income tax returns, among other provisions of the bill, and asserted that the measure did not "represent a sound and permanent tax policy." In all the objections he raised against the new law, Mr. Coolidge explained, Secretary Mellon concurred with him.

Harvey's Paper Hints Plan

The Washington Post, whose editor in chief is George D. Harvey, is regarded as the most knowing spokesman of the White House on political subjects. This paper on June 4, two days after President Coolidge reluctantly signed the new bill, published a news article in which appeared the following paragraph:

"The statement [sent to Congress by Mr. Coolidge] is accepted as a declaration by the President of an election issue, and in this regard it is considered likely that if a Republican Congress is elected and Mr. Coolidge is returned to the White House, he will call a special session of the new Congress after next March 4."

What Pres dent Coolidge and Secretary Mellon demanded of Congress was a reduction of the surtaxes on the incomes of millionaires from a maximum of 50 per cent to a maximum of only 25 per cent, thus cutting the taxes of those with incomes of $100,000 and more by many thousands a year at the expense of the smaller taxpayers. This is shown by the fact that the Mellon plan," if adopted as its author and Mr. Coolidge urged, would have benefited 6,000 income taxpayers more than the Democratic bill, while the latter has actually granted substantial relief to 440,000 persons more than the Mellon scheme would have benefited.

Scheme Pleased Few

The reduction of 50 per cent in the surtaxes on the income of $100,000 advocated by President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon, would have meant a saving of $10,000 to that taxpayer. At the same time, had their plan been adopted, the saving to 1,613 taxpayers with an average income of $10,000 a year each, aggregating $2,000,000, would have been only $10,000. The Mellon scheme with which the President wants Congress to replace the present Democratic law, would have saved more money to a taxpayer with an income of $100,000 a year—and there are upwards of a thousand in this class—than it would have saved to 50 taxpayers whose incomes averaged $10,000 each.

Small taxpayers, who are now getting the benefit of tax reductions given to them by the Democrats of Congress have a special interest in defeating President Coolidge and Republican Senators and Representatives at the election in November. The powerful interests which have been attempting to force the Mellon plan on the people will succeed if Mr. Coolidge and a Republican majority in the Senate and the House are chosen. It was only the Democrats, with assistance from certain western Progressives, that prevented the enactment of the Mellon scheme in the recent session of Congress.

These millionaires and billionaires for whom President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon have fought so hard in the last fourteen months could well afford to spend millions to control the elections in November. The saving they could thus obtain through the reduction of their surtax and surtaxes at the expense of thousands of smaller taxpayers would make their contributions to Republican success a fine investment.

X. COUNTERPOISE

Before leaving the subject of aerials it may be well to call attention to the device known as a counterpoise and which, for sending, is far superior to using a ground, while with small sets the advantages gained by a counterpoise in receiving do not pay for the trouble of installing the device. This is because the counterpoise, while adding to the sharpness of tuning with a receiving set and, therefore, aiding in cutting out interference, will also cut down the strength of the sounds received. Therefore, with a crystal set where amplification is not possible, the device is practically valueless, whereas, with a vacuum tube set with two or more steps of amplification, the counterpoise will prove a very distinct advantage. Many people consider this device a complicated and difficult affair, but in reality, it is as simple, if not simpler, than an aerial. A favorite form of counterpoise consists of several wires extending fanwise as shown in the figures, but a single wire will often give excellent results and the only way to determine the best number of wires to use is by experiment. Usually it is desirable to place the counterpoise below the aerial, but this is by no means essential as it may be run in the opposite direction from the aerial and still work exactly as well, for the device has little or no connection with the aerial. In fact, its action is more like that of a condenser, except that it increases radiated energy, whereas, a condenser has a very small amount of radiation. It must also be borne in mind that with a counterpoise no ground wire is required, the lead-in from the counterpoise being connected with the set at the spot where the ground wire is usually connected. In setting up a counterpoise it should be just as well and as thoroughly insulated as the aerial (Fig. 22), and the lead-in wire from it should be kept at some distance from the aerial lead-in to obviate losses by induction between the two. The most desirable place for a counterpoise is about three feet above the earth, but as this height is usually inconvenient, not only on account of it being an obstruction, but because it may be injured by people or animals or may be buried under snow in winter, it is better to raise it about six feet, or just high enough so people may pass beneath it. Stout posts with guy wires are the best supports, wherein, if the device is placed on the roof, the supports may be chimneys, walls, etc. If placed on a roof beneath an aerial leave all the space possible between the two, either by keeping the counterpoise low or raising the aerial. Where this is not convenient, the counterpoise may be run in another direction instead of being placed below the aerial wires.

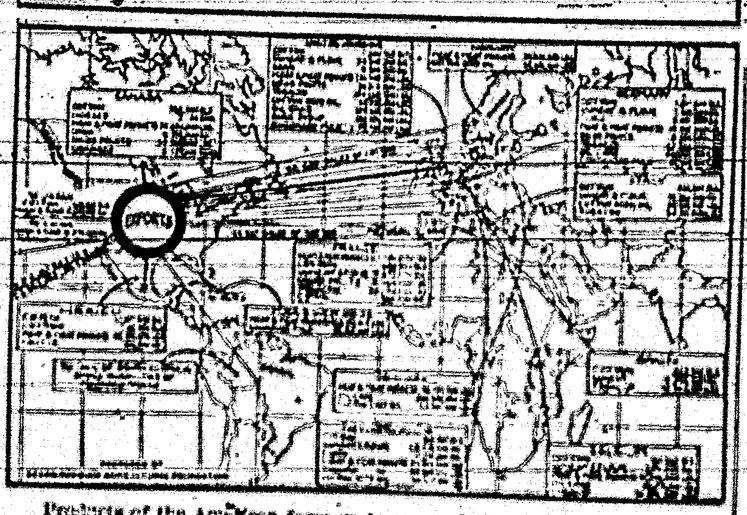
Where U. S. Farm Products Go

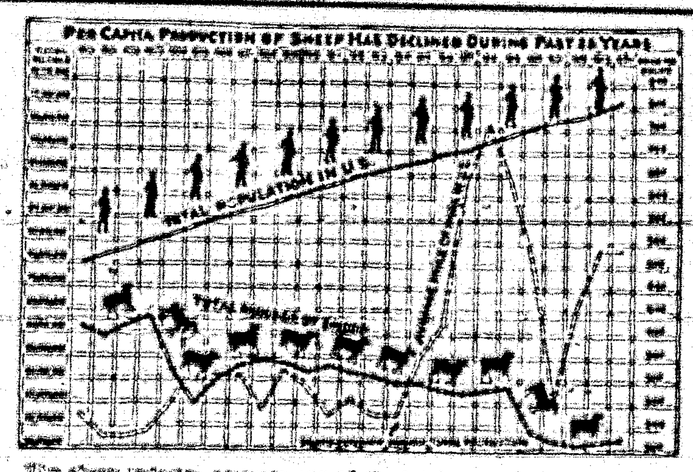


Products of the American farm go to every civilized country of the world. Out of the United States each year is sent approximately one half of the total cotton crop, one fourth of the yield of the wheat fields, one fifth of the prunes and huge quantities of corn and tobacco, dried fruits and other products of field and feed lot.

The accompanying chart, prepared by the Scarlet Book Agricultural Federation, shows where the principal exports go.

In the United Kingdom more of America's farm exports are consumed than in any other nation. The United Kingdom uses more American cotton than any other country, her annual consumption averaging around 1,280,000 bales. Germany is in the market for almost as much cotton, using 1,011,611 pounds last year. The United Kingdom is the best market for American wheat and flour, tobacco, corn, hams and condensed milk. She also takes large quantities of dried fruits, oil cake, meal, meat products and corn.

Bright Outlook for Sheep

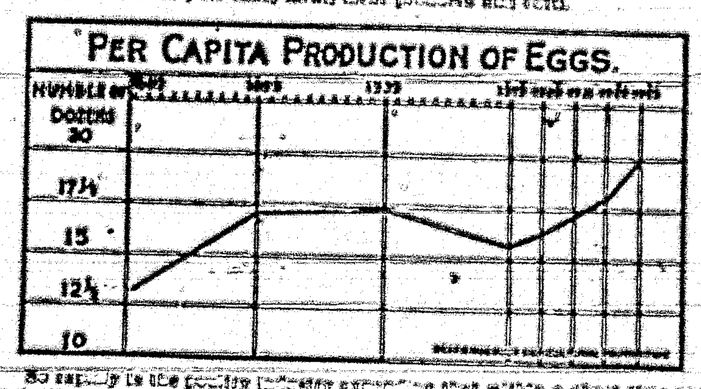


The sheep industry presents one of the bright spots in the present agricultural outlook, according to the Scarlet Book Agricultural Federation. The number of sheep in the United States has been increased for two years, but is still far from being back at wartime or pre-war figures.

The United States produces only about 10 per cent of the world's total wool crop but consumes 25 per cent of it. World carry over stocks of wool have been shrinking for four years and the consumption last year was 50 million pounds more than the year previous.

The prices of both wool and lambs have been strong the past two years and the outlook for reasonable profits in sheep is excellent for several years to come.

PER CAPITA PRODUCTION OF EGGS.



So rapidly is the poultry industry expanding that within a short time over production may cut the farmer's poultry dollar unless production can be maintained at a lower cost, according to the Scarlet Book Agricultural Federation.

A recent survey shows that more than 6,000,000 farms in this country produce poultry and eggs. It is estimated that there were 450,000,000 chickens on farms before the farmers season started—this is an increase of over 30,000,000, or nearly 12 per cent over figures of a year ago and 120,000,000, or over 36 per cent over the five year average.

Production of eggs increased 33½ per cent between 1909 and 1923 while the population increased only 15 per cent. In the past five years the estimate of egg production have shown a close correlation with the estimated number of chickens on hand at the beginning of the year, the ratio being 45 dozen per fowl. If the same ratio holds good, egg production in 1924 will gain 10 to 15 per cent over 1923 when it showed a gain of 33 per cent over four years ago.

Profitable poultry production at the present stage of expansion is dependent upon the present high level of demand. Up to date consumption has kept pace with production. In 1909 enough eggs were produced to furnish 20 dozen for every man, woman and child in the United States. This would mean 100 dozen for the average family of five.

President Disagrees With Wilbur About Building of New Vessels for Navy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

RELATIVE strength of our navy, and the possibility of war in the Pacific came prominently to the front during the week, and there was revealed a sharp difference of opinion between President Coolidge and some of his official advisers, notably Secretary of the Navy Wilbur. First, in regarding a bill authorizing the expenditure of nearly $300,000,000 for the maintenance and rebuilding of the navy during the fiscal year beginning July 1 next, the house appropriations committee told congress that there was no need for alarm over the reports that the navy was seriously retrograding. Then Secretary Wilbur made public what he called a cold statement of fact which he had submitted to the house subcommittee, being an estimate that to build up and maintain the navy on the 5-5-3 basis would require $3,000,000,000 expenditure at the rate of $150,000,000 a year for twenty years. In addition he told the representatives that Japan was hurrying the construction of new war vessels of types not included in the Washington limitation treaty, and gave them details of the recent Japanese naval maneuvers which had all the earmarks of being preliminary to war with the United States. Capt. H. H. Hough, director of naval intelligence, elaborated on Mr. Wilbur's statements and added:

"Japan is making every effort to provide adequate fuel oil reserves and to develop new sources of supply. There has been general movement of the increasing amount of war material and chemical shipments that have been going forward from Europe, especially Germany, to Japan. It is considered that the controlling element in Japan's naval policy is her determination to dominate the East."

This startling prologue took a back seat, being it became that he was out to sympathy with the efforts over the world to economy and [illegible] and [illegible] and was [illegible] against the [illegible] and work, while the [illegible] was largely responsible for the world war. He would promote scientific investigation to [illegible] and eliminate causes of [illegible] by the navy, but would [illegible] from [illegible] of economy [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"IT IS TOO LATE"

SYNOPSIS. — Nurses in the Southern hospital at Avonmouth are angered by the insolent treatment accorded them by Dr John Lancaster, head of the institution, and there is a general feeling of unrest, into which Joan Wentworth, probationary nurse, is drawn. Doctor Lancaster is performing a difficult operation, for which he has won fame. Joan, with other nurses, is in attendance. She is upset, through no fault of her own, and makes a trivial blunder at a critical moment. The patient dies and Doctor Lancaster accuses her of clumsiness. She is suspended, the action meaning the end of her hope of a career as a nurse. Without relatives or friends, and desperate, Joan, urged by her landlady, goes to Doctor Lancaster's office to ask him to overlook her blunder and reinstate her. She overhears a violent altercation between Doctor Lancaster and other men she does not see. Joan is struck by the favorable change in the appearance and demeanor of the doctor, recalling that at times in the hospital he has been gentle and thoughtful and at others supercilious and bullying. He tells her he can do nothing for her at the hospital, but offers her a position in a nursing institution in the country, telling her she can be of "great assistance" to him. A man named Myers demands she tell him what the doctor had said to her. She denies him the information, and he covertly threatens her. At the institution, which is owned by Doctor Lancaster, Joan finds Myers. He tells her he is the secretary. She instinctively dislikes and fears him. The only patient at the institute is a Mrs. Dana, demented but harmless. Joan is vaguely uneasy, feeling that there is some mystery about the place. Doctor Lancaster arrives. Joan accuses him of deceiving her, declaring her intention of leaving. He tells her she is the patient who needs her, saying he wants help in a "big fight," but makes no further explanation. She decides to stay. Suddenly Doctor Lancaster is afraid of Myers.

"There is no reason why you should not see him because he happens to be with Mr. Myers."

"Well, Miss Wentworth, you see, Mr. Myers is his secretary, and there's always a lot of business to be done."

"Under Jenkins, Doctor Lancaster is in no condition to attend to business," said Joan. "What is the matter with him?"

The doctor looked right and left, as if trying to find some refuge. But the girl was standing in front of him, and he could not enter the buggy without pushing her away.

"Miss Wentworth, please don't ask me about the doctor," he said. "I do my best for him. It isn't in my power to do more than I am doing."

"It is in your power to help him to be easier of mind. How can the most famous surgeon in the South come here and be at the mercy of a man like Myers?"

"Why, Miss Wentworth, you're not that wrong," protested Jenkins. "Mr. Myers is only the secretary. Mr. Myers does all he can for the doctor. We've got to keep the business decently, Miss Wentworth, and we're each doing our best. You see, the most fool word made over to the owner. He was lazy to attend to it, and when he died was lazier to attend him. And—and—"

He stopped as if he had carried himself further than he meant to go. Joan saw that there was something behind his words she dare not guess. She could make no headway against the wall of "hired help" he erected during his last sentence.

"Very well, Jenkins," she replied. "I'll go. But you will tell the doctor I am sorry I have been troublesome. Will you also tell him that I am going to keep my promise to him? I am going to help him in that fight."

He had seemed afraid for Dr. Lancaster, but for himself. That last statement made him the prey of fright. Had he suspected the truth of the business?

The question was a startling one. It was unbelievable that Lancaster should be a thief, besides, the explanation would not solve the problem at all.

She went back to the veranda. She was resolved to watch the bottom of the mystery for Lancaster's sake, to prove her loyalty although he had withdrawn his favors on her.

As she reached the front door she was startled to hear her name spoken in the curious tone. The speaker was Myers.

"But she knows nothing at all. Mrs. Fraser was asleep."

"She knows a good deal too much," Myers answered. "What do you suppose the doctor brought her here for, if not to try to publish his shame to the world?"

"Aye, his shame," repeated the man-servant literally. "It's hard work for three people to try to hold up the ruin, without a fourth coming in."

"Well, is that Mr. Grant?" demanded the secretary. "Is it or isn't it?"

"We want a nurse. You know we're often tried to get one, Mr. Myers, but they won't stay here. It's hard work taking care of the patients sometimes, when there's a rush."

"Rush!" repeated Myers scornfully. "What rush in this old place with the doctor's reputation?"

"They do come, and the people trust him," said Mrs. Fraser, half crying.

"Yes," scoffed the other. "And the doctor still has his grandiose ideas about building up the institution—him that wrecked it!"

"Well, that girl knows nothing, anyway."

"I tell you she means to help the doctor in his crazy plan of notoriety. She means to undo all our work in his own interests," cried Myers vehemently.

Joan walked away. She had overheard unwillingly, and enough to convince her that there was a mystery, with Myers at the bottom of it, and she had rightly sensed an enemy in him, and he in her. Now her mind was resolute to remain and fight for Lancaster. It was as if her decision, suddenly crystallized, had suddenly grown crystal-clear.

But she had not passed the entrance when the matron's door swung open violently and Myers came out. He stood confronting Joan with his insulting leer.

"Miss Wentworth," he began, "when you and I had our talk this morning you hadn't seen the doctor. You didn't know how things were situated, and I don't blame you. Now you've seen that the doctor needs a guardian. Well, I'm his guardian."

"I do not think that Doctor Lancaster needs a guardian, Mr. Myers," answered Joan, facing him steadily.

"See here, now, Miss Wentworth," said Myers, swallowing hard. "You don't get the drift of things, just as I thought. You think I'm trying to stand in the way of your work, when I'm only trying to reach a sort of working agreement to keep things in running order. That's my aim. Am I right?"

"I don't know whether you are right. I think you are extremely unkind. Take off your hat!" flashed Joan.

Myers removed the hard hat from his head and stared at her in astonishment. He could not understand her sudden following of hostilities.

"Well, I reckon that's my nature, and I'm sorry," he said. He was trying to be conciliatory now. "I'm sorry if I get on your nerves, Miss Wentworth," he persisted, "but I wasn't brought up to be a ladies' man. However, I know my job, and I reckon you know yours. If you think I'm trying to stand between the doctor and you, come and see him right now."

"I have no complaint to make, and I have made none," said Joan.

"Come and see him," persisted Myers. "You're the nurse, and I guess it's up to you."

She looked at him, dismayed by his expression. Is Doctor Lancaster worse?" she asked.

"Well, nothing that I didn't expect, but he might be better," said Myers, sneering.

He walked toward the door of Lancaster's cell and opened it. Through the opening Joan saw Lancaster stretched out on a large chair, his head bent forward on his breast, his face pallid. She turned into the room.

But Myers crowded her to Lancaster's side. He held the door open and closed on the three. Joan saw that the cell was clearly equipped with the comforts Lancaster was famous for, beauty and taste but even a little table with a pitcher and what looked like a little heap of a few cups of a pale color. Joan drew in her breath sharply. It was what she had feared.

"Doctor," said Myers. "He is worse than this when he comes home. Now you're present with a nurse to get at the cause. Use your influence with him. Get him to see reason. Be responsible for him. It's my job to keep him straight if I can. Help me. I try. Now you are present, with a nurse. Tell him what's wrong with him. Tell him why I have to keep after him. Use your influence, Miss Wentworth, and get him to see reason."

The fury in the man was curious to the nurse's mind. He drew off his hard felt hat.

"Because if you do, I will go my way, Miss Wentworth. I'm the man here. Understand that?" he continued, with a threat in it. "The doctor has all sorts of people who owe him their lives. He can't call on relatives either. He can't pay out to relatives either. It's on the machine. We want a nurse, and if you help to stay on you can. But if you don't you help me out as the doctor's relations, and you do what I tell you. That's straight. Is it clear or isn't it?"

Joan looked at him contemptuously. "He's got Doctor Lancaster on the hook," she said, "and they can't get me a bit quicker for it."

He scowled furiously, but he cleared her. And all the while Joan sat at Lancaster's side watching him, her mind ran over the questions that were puzzling her.

Why had Myers spoken of Lancaster as coming home, when he lived in Avonmouth?

Who had hired him to be the doctor's keeper?

And with whom had Doctor Lancaster been speaking so bitterly in his consulting room that evening when Joan called at the house?

Chapter VI

She sat for hours beside the sick man, conscious sometimes that Myers had come in and spoken to her. But she never answered him. As the pulse strengthened she let her mind wrestle upon the problem again. Lancaster had taken an immense overdose, one inconceivable in the ordinary morphine habitue. And he must have taken it during the brief period when Myers was with him; he must have taken it as soon as he got back to his room. Why had Myers permitted it?

At last Lancaster opened his eyes. His gaze fell upon Joan's face, at first without recognition, then with wonder.

"Water!" he gasped, after a few ineffectual attempts to speak.

Joan drew a glassful and gave it to him, and then another. Lancaster gulped down the liquid greedily. Presently he sat up, stood on his feet, and groped his way to the chair.

"I'm sorry," he said, looking at Joan with a whimsical expression, "I should have told you."

"Doctor Lancaster, I am ashamed of you," said Joan.

"God knows I'm ashamed of myself," he burst out fretfully. "Miss Wentworth, in the third drawer of that desk, beneath a pile of letters, you'll find a bottle—"

"No," said Joan decisively.

She knew by the wholly unnecessary secrecy in the concealment, characteristic of the drug habitue, that Lancaster had gone a long way down the declivity.

"Miss Wentworth, you misunderstand me. It's an antidote for alkaloidal poisoning. I was experimenting with a new drug."

Joan found herself sobbing, and she was astounded. It was the wreck of the man's moral nature that was unbearable. She saw the latent weakness in him, and it was as if the needless lie was the voice of the morphine devil that spoke through his lips.

Lancaster looked distressed. "Miss Wentworth, you had better leave me and go back to Avonmouth on the evening train," he said. "I ought never to have brought you here. It was pure selfishness on my part. Miss Wentworth, please don't cry. Go away now, and we'll talk it over before you start for the station."

"If I go away," wept Joan, "you'll take another hypodermic?"

"I pledge you my word of honor on," said Lancaster, with almost ingenuous candor. "I am really not accustomed to such a thing; that is why it mastered me out. I have been suffering from insomnia, and I tried a new alkaloid—not morphine, you know, but a derivative—for the benefit of my patients."

The words came from his lips so glibly that Joan was almost convinced—would have been had not the first lie been uttered. She believed the lie in intention of leaving the room, but she turned away.

Lancaster misinterpreted her action. With inevitable swiftness his hand shot out toward the little bottle. He had smashed it and plunged in the syringe before the girl could snatch it away.

"You won't leave?" said Joan.

He leaned back in his chair and looked at her with amazement.

"Miss Wentworth," he said, "you are a puzzle. Surely you are aware that I am not to be trusted, that my word of honor is worthless? That I am chronically devoid of honesty and decency? Don't you know that this accursed thing"—he patted lovingly the bottle—"has one of those hooks and eyes and fastens them through the fabric?"

He spoke as if at a club, and quite unconsciously there was the shadow of a whimsical smile about his lips, which induced confidence and calm.

"That does not refer to me," answered Joan. "You need me to help you to the utmost part of your duty. I am going to help you in that fight."

"It is the fight," said Lancaster, "against myself. You're the only person who is going to help me. Don't you know that a man of weak moral fiber becomes a victim to a drug except from inducement of natural pain or abnormal stress of mental anguish? If you really want to help me the only method would be these. I should fail a victim again. It is worthless to me, Miss Wentworth," he ended very wearily.

The truth is out at last. The mysterious habit is hard to cure. Will Joan succeed?

Many Legends Treat of Woman's Creation

Woman's first appearance has been a popular subject of legends. The Phoenician myth of creation is founded on the story of Pygmalion and Galatea. There the first woman was carved out of ivory by the first man, and then endowed with life by Aphrodite, says the Kansas City Star.

The Greek theory of the creation of woman, according to Hesiod, was that Zeus, as a cruel jest, ordered Vulcan to make woman out of clay, and then induce the various gods and goddesses to invest the clay doll with all their worst qualities, the result being a heroy ridge.

The Scandinavians say that as Odin, Vili and Ve, the three sons of Bor, were walking along the beach they found two sticks of wood, one of ash and one of elm. Stirring down, the gods shaped them and created out of these sticks, whistling the women from the elm and called her Embla.

DAINTIES FOR THE DAINTY

Something nice for a luncheon, to serve as the main dish, is the following:

Chicken Mousse.—Scald one-half cupful of milk and add to two well-beaten egg yolks, stirring constantly; add one and one-quarter teaspoonfuls of salt, one-eighth of a teaspoonful of white pepper, the same of chopped onion and celery salt, and cook five minutes in the top of the double boiler. Meanwhile soften one tablespoonful of gelatin in one-half cupful of chicken stock and add to the hot custard, together with two cupfuls of cooked diced chicken. Whip one cupful of thick cream and add carefully to the mixture. Pour into cold, wet individual timbale molds and chill until set. Serve on lettuce, garnished with pimento strips and mayonnaise or boiled dressing.

Salmon Piquante.—Take one can of salmon. Cut one onion into slices and cook in two tablespoonfuls of butter. Mix together seven tablespoonfuls of flour, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of chili powder; add to the onion, mixing well. When brown add two cupfuls of cold water, one teaspoonful of salt and three tablespoonfuls of ketchup. Cook until hot; add the salmon and reheat. Serve on buttered toast with any green salad.

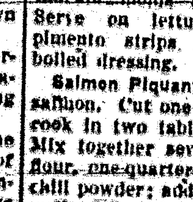
Chicken Neptune.—Wash and cook two dozen fresh shrimps; cook in boiling water for twenty minutes. Shell and remove the viscera. Wash two dozen large oysters and cook them in their own juice until the edges curl. Cook six fresh mushrooms and one-half of a green pepper, chopped fine, in two tablespoonfuls of butter for three minutes. Prepare a white sauce with two tablespoonfuls of butter and the same of flour with a pint of cream, seasoning to taste; cook until well blended, then add the shrimps, oysters, two cupfuls of cooked white meat of chicken, diced, one small can of crab meat, the mushrooms and green pepper and one-half of a pimento, chopped fine. Heat thoroughly and serve on small plates of buttered toast.

Relish Sandwiches.—These are good for the children, but through the meat chopper, using in the grinding and using a fine knife, one cupful each of raisins and pecans. Mix with one and one-half tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and use as filling on whole wheat bread.

"The man who takes the right to defeat his own real power of heart. He who refuses to face his worst defects the possibility of finding his best.—Percy C. Alexander.

SOME GOOD STEWS

A very new way to cook liver comes from Canada. Take one and one-half pounds of liver, cut in small pieces and cook in a pint of boiling water and one tablespoonful of salt for fifteen minutes. Drain, reserving the liquor. Dip the pieces of liver in flour and fry in hot fat. Add to the liquor in which the liver was cooked one cupful of tomato catsup, one-half cupful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-eighth teaspoonful of pepper, one-half cupful of celery cut fine. Cook all together for ten minutes. Add the liver and heat.



Fish Chowder.—Use half a pound of fat salt pork and fry to a light brown, remove the pork, add three onions, sliced, to the fat. Cut three pounds of fresh haddock or any fish, boiled fish may be used, into small pieces, rub with a tablespoonful of salt and some pepper. Lay the fish in a stew pan, add six boiled potatoes, then the onion and pork. Cover with boiling water and cook until the vegetables and fish are tender. Add three cupfuls of rich milk, six milk crackers, bring to a boil and serve.

Harvest of Melon.—Chop one medium-sized onion and one large pepper fine. Cook in two tablespoonfuls of bacon fat until tender. Then remove the onion and pepper. To the fat add one and one-half pounds of lean mutton, cut into pieces one and one-half inches square, and brown, then add the fried onions and pepper. Season with two and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of pepper. Add two cupfuls of water, cover closely and stew until tender—about one hour. Add one can of peas before serving.

Ham in Bean Pot.—Freshen if necessary one thick slice of ham and cut into serving-sized pieces. Place in a bean pot together with six scraped carrots, thinly sliced. Add one cupful of condensed tomato soup and one cupful of water. Cover tightly and bake three hours, or until it is perfectly tender. Potatoes may be used in place of the carrots if preferred.

Lizard Fathered Snake

Dr. W. H. Ballou, speaking before the American Society of Ichthyologists and Herpetologists at Smith college, Northampton, Mass., recently declared that a lizard that roamed through Texas more than 25,000,000 years ago was the father of all snakes. It took more than 10,000,000 years for the lizard to become a snake, he said. A Patagonian serpent that flourished 8,000,000 years ago was the conclusion of this particular development, in Doctor Ballou's opinion.

Post-War Soup

Novelist D. H. Lawrence was talking about post-war Europe.

"It's almost impossible to get a good meal in post-war Europe," he said.

"A chap in a Roman restaurant one night let out a loss word and snarled:

"'Waiter, you've spilled that soup all over my trousers.'

"'Don't be alarmed, signor,' said the smiling waiter. 'I know the soup here. It never stains after six o'clock.'"

One Cent Postcards May Be Discontinued

Washington, Dec. 29.—Two penny postcard is doomed if recommendations of the postoffice for revising postal rates are accepted by congress.

Hearings are now being held here before the congressional committee considering the Sterling bill, which would authorize increased postal rates so that the post office can grant a $68,000,000 pay increase to employes.

Nearly half a cent is lost on every postcard handled, it was revealed by the experts from the post office, testifying before the committee. Postmaster General New would increase the price of postal cards to one and one half cents and would have stamps of that fractional denomination printed for postcards.

Chamber of Commerce Holds Meeting

(Club Reporter)

The meeting of the Chamber of Commerce on Monday evening at the court house was very enthusiastic and, considering the cold weather, the attendance was very good.

The report of the committee on the constitution and by-laws was given and adopted by the chamber.

A membership drive is contemplated and every member urged to obtain one new member. If every citizen in this community will get into this organization it will help this town to be a better town.

There were many important committees appointed by the president, Mr. H. B. Hamilton, one of which is the Good Roads Committee. The chairman, Mr. J. B. French deserves much credit for the manner in which he and other members of his committee have helped Carrizozo to be benefited by the Corona and Oscuro Roads Project.

There are many other opportunities presenting themselves where organized effort alone can pull things our way. Let's lay aside our petty prejudices and make our slogan: EVERY WORD A BOOST FOR CARRIZOZO!

One thing for the liver—it rattles before it strikes.

Germany Issues Defi

Berlin, Dec. 30.—A challenge to the allies to "lay their cards on the table" regarding continued occupation of Cologne and allegations of Germany's failure to disarm, was voiced by Foreign Minister Stresemann in a statement to foreign press representatives.

Stresemann urged the allies not to overtax Germany's patience lest the peace of Europe be shattered.
