OLDEST AND LEADING NEWSPAPER IN CIRCULATION IN THE COUNTY OF LINCOLN, NEW MEXICO

VOLUME 25 — CARRIZOZO, LINCOLN COUNTY, NEW MEXICO, FRIDAY, MARCH 20, 1925 — NUMBER 12

Local School Situation

Many people have asked with regard to whether or not the schools will have funds to run on for the balance of this year. This with regard only to the schools of Carrizozo.

We can only state that they will not unless the following incomes, that are figured against the budget before the county-wide levy is laid, come through 100 per cent, and at least 90 per cent of the taxes for this school fiscal year are collected.

Following are the chief incomes:

State apportionment;
Forest Fees;
Poll Taxes;
Merchandise Licenses;
A 90 per cent collection of a .014289 mill tax levy applied over the county.

You can help by paying your poll tax—the law has been repealed but does not apply to the taxes for this year—these taxes were figured as an income when the budget was figured; if they are not collected the school maintenance fund will be short. R. E. Lemon is collector of poll tax; they may also be paid at the First National Bank.

Delinquent tax collections will not help this school fiscal year; there exists indebtedness behind this year on which they will have to be applied. In the case of this school fiscal year we have only the incomes mentioned and the levy for this year to depend upon. A frank discussion of the situation will appear in the local papers from time to time, as we believe that only when folks are fully advised of the situation can the matter be corrected and placed on a business basis.

Scalded—Dies from Burns

We are in receipt of a letter from a friend in Las Cruces, conveying the sad intelligence of the death of William, the five-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Mathews, at Mesilla Park, last Saturday. Our correspondent stated that the little boy fell into a basin of boiling water and was so badly scalded that he died four hours afterward. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews will be remembered as owners of the I—X ranch, in this county, where they lived for a long period, and have many friends in this section who deeply regret to learn of the death of their little son.

Judge Holloman Disqualifies in Hannett-Otero Contest

JUDGE MECHEM SELECTED TO PRESIDE

Santa Fe, March 18.—Judge Reed Holloman of the district court granted a request by counsel for Governor A. T. Hannett not to sit at the trial of Manuel B. Otero's election contest in the district court of Santa Fe county.

The judge now will be chosen by the supreme court.

Judge Holloman says he had determined to adopt this course a month ago and gives the reasons for his decision in a lengthy order.

In asking him not to sit, the respondent's counsel gave no reason. Referring to the case as a political case, Judge Holloman says: "In a case of this character if any party to the action really doubts that he will receive a fair trial before me as presiding judge, I will not hesitate to disqualify myself without any investigation as to whether those doubts are well founded or not."

He says criticism has been levelled at him, since he reached this decision, with the purpose of driving him from sitting in the case. The only effect of this might be to "cause me to adopt the opposite course," he says, and adds, "I realize, however, that a judge should not permit himself to assume an improper attitude merely because of occasional attacks, irrespective of how unfounded they are."

Any statement that he has insisted upon trying the case is "absolutely false," he says.

Santa Fe, March 18.—Chief Justice F. W. Parker, of the supreme court, today named Judge Edwin Mechem, of the Third Judicial District, to try Manuel B. Otero's election contest. He said both sides had agreed to Judge Mechem. The judge is expected to be here Friday to hear arguments on a demurrer.

Land in New Mexico and Arizona Opened for Homesteaders

Washington, March 16.—Classification orders published by the interior department designated 50,000 acres in Arizona, Idaho and Washington as non-irrigable and declared them open to homestead entries.

Nearly 150,000 acres in Idaho, New Mexico and Utah were listed under the stock raising homestead law and designated for entry in tracts of 640 acres or less.

About 40,000 acres in Colorado were classified as power site lands and nearly 15,000 acres in Colorado and Utah previously included in power site withdrawals were restored to entry.

Governor Hannett on the Legislature

The following article, relating to the record made by the legislature which has just adjourned, and containing comments by Governor Hannett, is taken from the Santa Fe New Mexican:

While disappointed at the failure of the election and banking bills, Governor A. T. Hannett believes four acts that did succeed in getting through the seventh state legislature enough to justify its existence, aside from any other beneficial legislation it may have passed.

The outstanding acts in the governor's judgment, are:

A practically new school code.

Provision for the collection $6 million delinquency in taxes.

The three-cent gasoline tax to furnish additional highway revenue.

Repeal of the $2 poll tax.

"The house passed legislation to carry out every Democratic platform pledge and the fact that all of it didn't get past the senate is no fault of the house," said the governor.

"The senate not only failed to pass the election measure we prepared, which passed the house, but also failed to offer any plan of its own to help purify elections in New Mexico," said the governor. "This election law was not an untried innovation. I was keenly interested in it and studied house bill 179 carefully. The provisions of this bill were taken from the Kansas and Oklahoma statutes, where they have been in force for years and found to be workable and successful."

The banking act passed the house. The senate also passed it but with amendments in which the house refused to concur. As to this Governor Hannett said the senate amendments "mutilated the bill and took practically all of the salutary amendments out of it." One of the senate amendments was to abolish interlocking directorates and the governor said personally he had no objection to this.

Governor Hannett called attention to the fact that the senate, where the Republicans were in full control, also killed the free school books bill, passed by the house, and the tobacco tax, which was intended to raise money to purchase the books for the children of the state.

Another message recommendation of the governor's to find a graveyard in the senate was the bill extending the Workmen's Compensation act to state highway department employes.

"That was unfortunate," said the governor. "When I was on the highway commission an employe had an eye blown out by a blast. We had no legal authority to help the man and the state, being a sovereign power, he was unable to sue it. Had he been working for a private corporation he would have been entitled to compensation."

Ancient Egyptian Tomb Closed and Sealed

Cambridge, Mass., March 18.—The name of Sneferu or Snefrew, ancient Egyptian king, appears on a gold mat in the tomb recently discovered by the Harvard-Boston expedition at Giza, Dr. George A. Reisner, director of the expedition, has been informed by those in charge of the excavations. In a statement issued today Dr. Reisner said:

"Before sealing the new tomb discovered at Giza by the Harvard-Boston expedition, the inscription on the gold mat was clearly read as follows:

"'Lord-of-the-two crowns Sneferuw, the horus web ma'at.' The name of the person buried in the coffin remains unknown. The presence of the name of Sneferuw on the mat does not prove that this king was buried in the tomb, but only that the burial was made in his reign. The conclusion that the tomb is not Sneferuw or Cheops, is not affected by the new evidence."

The tomb was closed and sealed by the Egyptian authorities at the request of Dr. Reisner until he can return to Egypt and take personal charge of the work.

Second Class Navy Costly Says Admiral

San Diego, Calif., March 16.—Speaking before the American Legion lyceum here last night, vice-admiral Josiah H. McKean, commander of the United States scouting fleet, said that "of all the luxuries a nation may indulge in, a second class navy is the most expensive.

"It is like trying to play four deuces against four queens," Admiral McKean said. "If you know poker, you are just the person who would be likely to try it."

Admiral McKean spoke on the navy, what it has done, why it is needed, what kind is wanted and how much it will cost.

"The cost of the navy all depends on the other fellow," he said. "The United States can not afford to have less than a navy of first class. If we accept the responsibilities of the great policies laid down for us in the past, we must have the navy that can maintain these responsibilities.

"The 5-5-3 treaty is not as important as has been supposed to be. It has just two important provisions. First, it makes us equal with Great Britain. Second, it places Japan on a ratio of three-fifths of our strength. It is not a question of privilege. It is a question of responsibility. It is an agreement which places on the United States the responsibility that goes with being a great world power.

"The United States will soon be forced to seek world markets. She will have no right to ask them if she is not ready to assume the responsibility that goes with such a request. We are too big and too honorable to ask any favors without accepting the responsibilities that they entail.

"The limit placed by the arms limitation treaty does not apply to submarines, cruisers up to ten thousand tons or destroyers. Every nation has a right to build as many of these as it wants or can afford and is a fool that doesn't. We can do the same thing. We don't need destroyers, but we do need cruisers and cruiser submarines and we will be fools if we do not build them.

"The treaty is a three-cornered agreement and it is up to each to see that the other is living up to its terms. We will be negligent of our responsibilities if we do not maintain our navy in accordance with the agreement we have signed."

Robbery and Attempted Murder

Oscuro, at eight o'clock Wednesday night, was the scene of a burglary and shooting. The C. F. Grey store was entered, after the burglars, six in number, who, were masked, had shot Edwin Corn—the shot, fortunately, proving to be only a flesh wound—and forced Corn to open the store safe. Others rifled the postoffice while the safe was being opened.

Edwin Corn's sister, Miss Ida, who was also in the store, made her escape early in the game and notified the depot agent, who in turn notified the authorities here. Sheriff Kelsey immediately repaired to the scene, and upon learning from Corn that he recognized one of the burglars—Campo by name—the sheriff phoned his deputies to arrest Campo, who was seen driving in this direction. This was done, and Campo was given a hearing before Justice Stadtman this morning. Campo confessed and implicated others, some of whom the authorities have apprehended. Further arrests are expected.

Former Resident Dies

William Graham, formerly well known and highly respected citizen of Lincoln county, died Sunday last at his home, at Hot Springs, Sierra county.

Mr. Graham and his family lived on the Bonito during their residence in Lincoln county, but left here about seventeen years ago, and for the greater portion of that time made Hot Springs their home.

Mr. Graham had reached an advanced age—about 90—before he was called to answer the last summons. His widow and son survive him, and he also leaves a sister, Mrs. Sarah Hughes, who has made her home in Carrizozo for many years. The passing of William Graham removes one of the old landmarks of the Southwest, characters who were instrumental not only in the settlement but the upbuilding of this section, and of whom few remain.

ADVENTURE, FIGHTING—AND LOVE

He turned his examination first to the cut in her head. He tore strips from his shirt, went down to the water and cleansed them thoroughly, then, returning, he proceeded to wash and bandage it. It was a bad gash from a rock, and she had bled a good deal, which was a good thing, relieving the concussion which had no doubt been the cause of the prolonged insensibility. Having ascertained that she seemed to have received no bodily injuries beyond contusions, Lee examined her limbs. He saw that one knee hung awry. In a moment he had the gaiter off, and discovered that the joint had been dislocated.

It was unnerving, holding that white knee between his hands, so instinct with life, so fragile, delicate, so wonderful when viewed as a piece of mechanism which he was to manipulate like some clumsy journeyman, called in to repair the work of a master.

Fortunately Lee had assisted at precisely that same operation several times in the field; and, trying to disregard the moans of pain that came from the girl's lips as he proceeded, he fumbled with the displaced bone.

But that struggle was terrible, for the body of itself knows no dignity. Conscious, Lee knew that the girl would neither have flinched nor moaned, but unconscious, she could not control the protests of the body, which had to be restrained by something almost brutal in its frank violence.

But Lee struggled on, feeling the shaft head of the bone scour the edges of the socket under the cap. A final struggle, the weight of his whole body and shoulders thrown to his task—and suddenly it was accomplished.

Here you have the hero and heroine: Lee Anderson, Royal Canadian Mounted Police sergeant, and Joyce Pelly. They have been thrown down a cliff by an explosion of dynamite, set off by the Free Traders. The girl's memory is gone from the shock; they are in a wilderness and are being pursued by the Free Traders, who are bent on killing the hero and recapturing the girl, whom Rathway their leader, greatly desires. Moreover, Anderson, who has met the girl on the trail by chance, is there to arrest Joyce's father. The Free Traders, wilderness hooch-runners, think he is after them. And Anderson, in rescuing the girl from them, has beaten up Rathway in a fight. So the story starts out with the hero and heroine in difficulties.

Who is the author? Why, Victor Rousseau. And that tells you a lot—among other things, that the adventures of the young couple to date aren't a circumstance to what's coming. The hero is shot at, thrown into a cataract and generally manhandled. The heroine is abducted again by Rathway. But someway both manage to escape death. And in the end of course the brave deserves the fair and wins her, even if his purpose to arrest the heroine's father mighty near wrecks the exciting romance.

CHAPTER I

Sergeant Anderson Rides Into Little Falls

Lee Anderson, sergeant in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, had been treating his horse up the last mile or two by walking and leading it, his pipe, filling the animal's nostrils with the spicy smell of burning tobacco and the sharp scent of a few blades of the sparse grass that grew among the rocks and raspberry canes beside the cart track.

There were perhaps fifty houses in the village, built of logs and of frame, with here and there a few of fear years to its credit. His rather tired, dusty sensations knew and almost welcomed contact with the sights of white dust at the verge of his eyes still. Lee, in the professional sense of the word, appeared to be formally the sort of man termed "quiet" and "well-behaved" even when the spirit broke.

His rather bony face, a combination of dark and sandy, was well tanned behind the soiled blankets that formed a pillow across his shoulders.

Lee looked with critical but pleased eyes at the various evidences of the vanity, and with the added calm of the year he raised and looked forward beyond the settlement of Little Falls, over at the foot of the slope in front of him, the foot of the valley cut by the side of Stony range.

It was an orderly, cozy little place, created by the advent of the railroad connecting it for many hours, and which, among the hundreds already of which that might claim kinship in the West, has flourished at the same time as the railroad.

After he should settle down there, only to find the old North-west vanished, of which he had been a member, buried in the new Western body. Lee himself had been stationed at Blackstone. He had been in the police eight years before the war. It was the only life that appealed to him. His service had expired during his term at the front, but his first act of returning had been to re-join.

Inspector Cranley had sent for him a few days later.

"Anderson," he said, "I want you to be ready to start for Stony range in the morning to pick up a man named Pelly. He's on the list of wanted—badly. If he gives trouble, take care. I guess you don't know anything about the case, though?"

"No, sir. If that have happened while I was in France?"

"Oh, it happened a dozen of a time before you went to Vimy, Anderson. Twenty-five years ago, more or less. Might have left the poor devil alone, especially as he's been a fugitive so long. But it's murder, Sergeant, and sooner or later the new police have got to show themselves just as effective blood hounds as the old force. The papers in the case have just come through Ottawa."

"This man Pelly appears to have killed a man in Toronto in the days for knocking his wife. These details are not given. It appears a drunken row some time ago that Pelly has been living in the Slocan lake region, on the other side of Stony range, for a good many years. Pelly appears to have got wind of this and made a quick getaway. Now the words come in that he's been seen in the district. May be true or false.

"Probably it won't be possible to receive new. If it is possible, I don't suppose he'll get much of a sentence, but headquarters are anxious that we should establish our presence by getting after him—to show that we're on the job—as preliminary work I want you to ride in, and, if he's alive, pick him up and bring him back with you."

Anderson saluted. He was about to leave the office when the inspector called him back.

"Say a moment, Sergeant. You can guess that this man Pelly was probably betrayed by someone with a grudge against him. I suppose you know that the Five Tribes opened up at Slocan lake during the war?"

The Five Tribes, as Anderson knew, were a gang of Doukhobors, originally from Montreal, and working in spells for and with Doukhobors in the back country, cultivating and cutting ice. The Five Tribes built to-bacco sacks as well as for and whisky, they were the most lucrative thing that had so far entered the northern territories.

"There's a man named Jay Hall, way who seems to be handling them work for us on them. Talk to him a little chat to with this lady called Pelly's way. Inform Jay to see for Pelly and locate him with his gang. Pelly's arrest comes first. Soon as you locate him, bring him out of the range."

At dawn Lee was upon the road.

There had been rumors—recurrent rumors of a gold find in Stony range that summer, but the nearer Lee got to the range the less explicit the news became.

He passed a number of men on their way south, morose and sullen, but ready enough to pour out their grievance that a summer's prospecting had failed to show even a trace of color anywhere.

Lee had listened to their stories and then gone on, leaving the impression that he was a prospector on a belated journey to the range.

And now at last the range lay in front of him, uplifting its wild peaks into the glory of the autumn sunset. Lee felt his heart uplifted too. This was life at its most zestful—the world spaces, and the hunting of the king of all created beings—Man.

So, leading his horse, Lee passed down the long slope toward the settlement of Little Falls. Soon he was abreast of the first shacks, set in the clearings among the stumps. Then came rows of uniformly ugly wooden cottages, a small mission church with a tin roof, a bank, and a small hotel announcing itself by a dilapidated shingle.

Lee fastened his horse to the hitching post in front and entered. On the right of the interior passage was the dining room, on the left the parlor, with the furniture piled up in corners and the floor strewn with duffle-bags and blankets.

A passage ran past a flight of rickety stairs, and from a room at the end of this came the clamor of voices.

Here Lee found the bar, packed tight, and running wide open. Behind the mahogany stood a fat and cynical looking landlord.

"How about a room and stabling for the night?" asked Lee.

The landlord slid a schooner of beer from one end of the bar to the middle, and turned to Lee, his fat body quivering, apparently with mirth, though his face did not relax anything of its solemn, cynical aspect.

"Stabling? You said it. Room? You c'n have six feet by four of the latter floor, stranger," he answered.

"Pretty full, eh?"

"Fuller 'n h—'s full of fire-bugs."

"Leaving crews signing up?"

"Leavin', nothin'. Town's full, of three-four fool guys that's been prospectin' Stony range all summer. Got cold feet all to cent and all quit together. Feeling pretty sore over it, I guess. I'm not aiming to start for the range myself at this time of year."

"I guess there'll be time to watch a few pans of dirt," answered Lee. "Don't expect I'll need my horse here at all long, at the winter."

He led his horse into the stable, gave it some corn and raked out a suspicious meal, beans, and potatoes that had apparently been frozen to death in bed.

Lee, who had taken a seat opposite the door, surveyed the other guests with that quiet watchfulness which was a part of his nature as well as of his training. For the most part he summed them up as being of the average prospector type.

Among them, however, appeared to be a few of those hard-bitten characters who are to be found in every gold rush. Most of them had been drinking hard, and all seemed embittered by their experiences of the summer. They were freely cursing their ill-luck.

Lee's attention was first drawn to the two men who were seated opposite him by the fact that they took no part in this chorus of denunciation. A glance showed him that they were not prospectors, and that the understanding between them was an intimate one.

One was a short, thick-set, muscular red-haired man, with one of the hardest and most repulsive faces that Lee had ever seen. The other, apparently his partner, was a huge half-breed with a great muscular torso covered with black hair, and long gorilla-like arms.

"If I had that guy here what started that yarn about the gold in Stony range—" began a man on Lee's right.

"Ah, for the love of Mike, cut out that spiel, Bill!" shouted another across the table. "D'you think you're the only real fool's been summerin' in the range?"

"Old Pelly never found no gold mine. He was cracked about it. If he had, wouldn't others have got wise to it, with half the district hangin' about the range spyin' on him?"

"Nobody knows what happened to him, do they?"

"Just disappeared. Mebbe he had a stroke in the woods or somethin'. Nobody's seen any board of him this good while past."

Lee shunted this conversation without feeling that he had got very far. Pelly had discovered a problematical gold mine. Pelly had disappeared; it began to seem probable that the report of his return was false. If three men had been prospecting the range all the summer, it was probable that if Pelly had returned to the vicinity they would have heard of it. In which case someone would have corrected the statement that nothing was known about it.

While he listened Lee noticed that the two men opposite him were likewise taking in every word. The big breed was obviously under the influence of liquor, and his little companion was not only watching the company but also watching him. At times he would turn and whisper in his companion's ear. And once, in the close scrutiny of the company, he turned his gaze on Lee.

For a moment Lee felt chilled by the eyes of the little red-haired man. They were pale gray, almost green, in color. They looked like a snake's eyes. Lee, though his gaze was directly at the others, did not like the look of the little redhaired man.

The conversation drifted. By and by and three the men began to make their way back to the bar. Lee had risen from the table and left the dining room, intending to take a smoke on the step, when he heard a familiar voice, and found himself staring in surprise at a girl who had just come in and was in conversation with the landlord.

For she was not in the least the type of girl whom one might look for to meet a place as Little Falls.

CHAPTER II

A Girl Rides Into the Range

She was perhaps two or three and twenty, slender, of medium height, with clear, grey, fearless eyes, and hair of pale brown with gold flecks in it, curled by beauty about her head.

Her open mackinaw revealed an almost boyish figure, slender and long-waisted. She wore corduroy breeches and riding gaiters, and there was about her that hardy delicacy but unmistakable air of breeding that crops out in such unexpected places along the Anglo-Saxon frontier.

From a respectful distance the men were staring at her, each asking Lee's unspoken question as to what such a girl was doing in Little Falls.

That she was riding into the range was evident. Had she been riding out, the men would have known of her. But—whose daughter was she?

There was no one in the new deserted range to whom she could be going. The only possible destination might be the Mexican mission on the other side. But—there were no women at the mission.

"Well, ya see, Miss," the fat landlord was saying, "we're pretty well filled up so far as rooms is concerned. But the wife's over to Old Landing for a few days, an' I guess you c'n her our room till she comes home. It's the first room on the right at the top of the stairs. You just walk up and make yourself comfortable, Miss, and I'll take your hoss into the stable, and see that he gits fed and watered. And supper's ready."

"Thank you, but I had mine on the road. And I shall be going on early in the morning."

By now the crowd of ex-prospectors had formed a wide circle about the girl, standing as far as the passage would permit, staring and scrutinizing her frankly, and looking sheepishly away whenever her unembarrassed glance fell upon any of them. Lee, hearing a muttering behind him, turned, to see the big breed staring at the girl and whispering excitedly to his companion. His red-headed partner was tugging at his arm as if to restrain him.

"You d—n fool, Pierre!" Lee heard him expostulate.

Suddenly the breed shook off the other's grip and lurched forward, planting himself in front of the girl, he leaned toward her, with an expression on his face that brought the blood into her cheeks.

From a Respectful Distance the Men Were Staring at Her, Each Asking Lee's Unspoken Question as to What Such a Girl Was Doing in Little Falls.

Before he could utter a word, however, Lee stepped quietly into the breed with that deliberate air of authority which he retained, despite the shedding of his uniform.

"That'll be all," he said crisply.

The breed turned on him and broke into a string of oaths.

"Say, what's eatin' you?" he shouted. "You don't know me. He don't know who he's talking to, eh, Sherry? I'm Pierre Cardon." He doubled a brawny forearm. "Say, young fellar, you see that? That's the other side of the range can say 'don't be all' to Pierre Cardon. You fink you can fight, mebbe?"

Lee, mindful of the cold code of conduct that binds him, shook his head.

"I never fight if I can help it," he answered.

The two men muttered, and there came a murmur of assent from the crowd, which, in that moment, had been definitely favorable to Lee.

The breed turned about. "He never fight if he can help it," he jeered. "You hear dat, boys?" He turned to Lee again. "Mebbe you like to set up de drinks, den?" he inquired blandly.

"I don't drink," answered Lee with complete equanimity.

"Well, whadya fink of dat?" cried Pierre to the crowd again. "He don't fight an' he don't drink. You sure are one d—n four-flusher," he grinned belligerently to Lee's face.

Lee, refused to see, without turning his head, that the girl had taken the opportunity to slip away, relieved Pierre's glare calmly. The breed was poising himself ready to strike, but something in Lee's aspect, some uncertainty, the inability to size him up, checked him. Perhaps he sensed how quickly Lee's right arm, hanging negligently before him, would rise to the defensive; perhaps he did not like the look of Lee's left.

Looks as if the sergeant was in for a tough time. And who is the girl he has befriended?

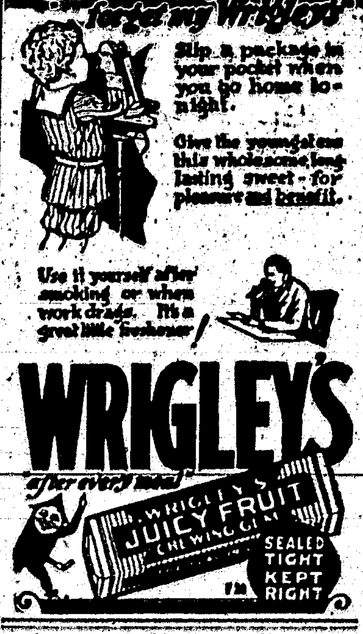
Homemade Lancet

A good surgical needle of the lancet type for home use can be made from a large darning needle. The point is ground and whetted to the shape of a spearhead, which gives a keen, penetrating and cutting edge, says Popular Science Monthly. A cork pushed on the eye end serves as a handle. Before using the needle, sterilize the point by holding it in the flame of a gas jet or match.



Use it yourself after smoking or when work drags. It's a great little freshener.

The SANDMAN STORY

NIGHT IN A PLAYROOM

THE playroom certainly was a disorderly looking place the next morning and the little mistress, when she opened the door and looked in tried to tell her mother she was sure she had not left the toys scattered about in such a manner, but of course no one told her just how it all happened and so her mother blamed her for leaving such an untidy room.

But the truth of it was that when the clock struck the magic hour the night before Calico Cat, who was leaning against Jack-in-a-Box dozing, felt a sharp tap on her nose; it was the cover of Jack's box which suddenly flew open when the clock struck.

But this Calico Cat did not know. She saw Little Dog on Wheels close by and thinking he was to blame for the sting on her nose she humped her back and flew right at him, boxing his ears soundly.

"Let Go My Trunk," Called Out Cloth Elephant.

Poor Little Dog was so upset that he just started running and Easter Rabbit, who was always afraid Little Dog would take to hunting, thought he was after him, so off he ran and so shot he flew that off popped his little head.

Easter Rabbit just could not run about without his head, so he stopped to hunt for it, and not being able to see where he was going, he bumped into Teddy Bear, who was just stretching his legs and arms to get them in working order.

"What is the matter?" called Teddy as he picked himself up. "Is there a fire?"

"Who said fire?" called out the Fireman Doll, and thinking it was the best on his little cart on the floor beside him, he caught poor Cloth Elephant by his trunk and started after Teddy Bear, who was running with Easter Rabbit, he having found his head.

"Let go my trunk," called out Cloth Elephant. "I don't care if there is a fire; you can't have my trunk for a hose."

"Now, who started all this fuss?" inquired Teddy Bear after finding no one was hurt. "Who started to run first and why?"

Little Dog on Wheels said he was not a coward, but he objected to having his ears boxed by Calico Cat and he was just running so he could turn around and face her.

"Well, don't you hit me on the nose, then, if you don't want your ears boxed," snapped Calico Cat. "There I was sitting as quiet as a mouse by Jack-in-a-Box when all at once something hit me right on the end of my nose."

"I didn't do it," said Little Dog. "It was the cover of Jack's box that flew up and hit you. I saw it."

"Well, why didn't you say so, then?" snapped Calico. "What do you mean, Jack, by flying open like that and hitting folks on the nose?"

"I'm sorry, Calico, I am sure," said Jack, so full of laughter he could hardly speak. "The fact is that a fly got in my box yesterday and he was crawling all over my bald head. If ever you lose your hair, Calico, as I have, you will know what I suffered, so when the clock struck I flew up and chased him out."

"Huh," said Calico Cat as she began to wash her face, "you certainly did upset things around here."

"I didn't do it; you did, Calico," replied Jack, and if he had not bobbed back in his box and pulled down his cover he would have been treated just as Little Dog was, for Calico Cat did not let any one contradict her.

And that was the reason the next morning when the little mistress came to the playroom that her mother scolded her for not picking up her toys when she finished playing with them, for the toys talked so long, each telling how it started to run, that the sun was streaming in the window before they had time to get back to their places.

And I expect many a little girl never dreams what happened in the night in the playroom with the dolls all of her toys strewn about the floor in the morning.

Have You This Habit?

FACING FACTS

THEY were driving along a quiet place, that Del spied Mr. King out the door, and remembering cases of selling, and thinking since Mrs. Hope was such a high powered salesman, that Mr. King might want a car, he suggested that Mrs. Hope drive over to the King home, and Gay agreed quite cheerily to that as Peter, Gay's brother, sat also at the same time. They drove into the King yard, Gay pointed to Del to let Mrs. Hope to the front door as the servant answered the bell. Mrs. Hope looked upset, then she said:

"Oh yes, I'd think I'd get to know Mr. King, I do depend on the salary, we had a little argument of certain kind, you see, and these things went the other way and I had to stay at home."

It was Mrs. Hope who had introduced Mrs. King to cold cream talcum. She called one day to find her friend surrounded by huge boxes like the size of telephone books.

"Do you know," Mrs. Hope said, "that you can write for premiums and here it declared to not have to sell one cent's worth of it?"

"Why, I could buy a harness for one dollar."

"But you don't want a harness, do you?" Mrs. King cried. "And you know you couldn't put it on yourself."

"How can one say a certain thing?"

"Isn't it the fact about the flowers they have grown? I'm about everything they have. It's hard enough to get along at all."

A few hours later Mrs. King saw Mrs. Hope at the automobile show room and saw the new car looking at. Mrs. Hope said, and as they passed in front of a high-powered car whose price ran into the thousands, Mrs. Hope began to ask about salary and earnings. Until the prince she had heard proved false, Mrs. King left her, hoping that the new as-

Hoot Gibson

"We'll pay you five a day, and five for every fall you take," said a studio casting director to Hoot Gibson, the popular broncho-busting "movie" star, when he first applied for a job. There was no premium on poor riding, but the company paid extra for thrilling falls taken before the camera. Gibson's work is liked by the millions who see him in the pictures.

ROAD BUILDING

PLAN TO DRY UP IOWA MUD HOLES

A determined campaign to "pull Iowa out of the mud" by giving the state control of the road system, imposing a 2-cent-a-gallon gasoline tax and raising $85,000,000 for roads by a bond issue, is being waged throughout Iowa by the Iowa Good Roads association.

Iowa today has more than 600,000 motor vehicles. It stands to lose $2,000,000 a year, federal aid road money, unless it places its primary road system under state control for construction and maintenance. Driving over unimproved roads is estimated to cost the people of Iowa $25,000,000 a year in increased gasoline and oil consumption and wear and tear on cars and tires. On a "pay-as-we-go" basis it will take 10 or more years to complete the state's primary and secondary roads.

Under the program advocated by the association it will be possible to complete improvement of 6,500 miles of primary road in six years after funds are made available and to drain and bring to grade 11,000 miles of county roads within eight years. The program provides for paving 3,500 miles of primary road, so as to connect all the 99 county seats, and to surface the remaining 3,100 miles of primary road with gravel or sand clay.

It is figured that the 2 cent gasoline tax will provide four and a half million dollars a year, of which one and a half million dollars would go to the primary road fund and three million dollars to the counties for county road work.

The state legislature is to be asked to submit to the general election in November, 1920, a bill authorizing the [illegible] bond issue.

At present, property abutting paved roads is assessed [illegible] by treaty paying assessment of 15% per cent on assessed valuation. It is proposed, as part of the state program, that this special assessment be abolished and that taxpayers already paid under it be refunded to property owners.

Proposed Amendments

Several propositions to amend the State Constitution were submitted to the legislature which has just adjourned, but only two received favorable action. One was to increase the pay of legislators to $10 a day, and the other is to lump all income from institutional land grants in one fund and to make distribution to the different institutions in proportion to acreage.

Increased Appropriations

The legislature, which ended last Saturday, passed an appropriation bill carrying a total of $2,915,658.26. This exceeds the 1923 appriation by $405,630.88. The governor, it is believed, will do considerable pruning. No doubt, the legislature anticipated, and hoped for, this action, and passed the buck to him.

The original house bill was not so large, but increases were made by the finance committees of both houses, and when ultimately approved by the conference committee, and passed, carried the total given above.

The sum for the 14th fiscal year is $1,417,087.48; for the 15th $1,414,087.48, and an emergency appropriation for the current year of $84,483.30.

The free text book bill died in the senate, as did much proposed legislation demanded by the people.

The election law, the banking law and a primary measure all went by the board as the legislature passed into history.

The U. S. Senate again turned down the nomination of Chas. B. Warren for attorney general. The adverse vote was increased on the second ballot.

The popular demand for an election law failed to bring about favorable action the senate stood in its pathway. So it did with the primary and banking bills.

The state legislature passed 160 laws, some of which, however, it is known, will not get by the governor. The senate passed repealed about 50 of the previous legislation by 7.

The big oil case goes casually to Cheyenne. The court ruled that the property could not go into the Fall-Doheny case, which was a distinct victory for the defense, and over which ruling, it is said, Harry Sinclair smiled broadly.

Modern Life not as Bad as Pictured

St. Louis, March 17.—"The present generation isn't bad, it's just different, and so is everything else in the world."

In this manner Mrs. M. S. Bannister defends the flapperage. She bases her statement on observances extending over the 108 years of her life.

"I have seen generations come and go and each new one seems better than the others," she said. "The modern girl and boy are quite different from the kind we were in England, but times were hard in those days following the Napoleonic wars, which left all Europe suffering for many years."

Grandma Bannister celebrated her birthday Tuesday.

Club Expresses Thanks

On behalf of the Woman's Club, Mrs. E. M. Copeland and Mrs. A. Ziegler wish to thank the following persons for services which combined to make the Operetta a success:

Mrs. Ivy Adame for her assistance as vocal director;

Mesdames Lemmon, Saulsbury and Burke for their artistic flowers and designs;

Mesdames Williams and McCammon and their helpers for the lovely scenery painted for us on such short notice. Their efforts and hard work, which had to be done almost at the last minute, are highly appreciated by all. This scenery made the second act most realistic;

Mesdames Haley, Harris, McCammon, Burke and Williams for the hand paintings used on the walls in the first act;

The following gentlemen for their untiring and willing assistance: E. M. Brickley, G. T. McQuillen, J. M. Beck, J. B. French, F. J. Sager and Ben Sanchez;

The complete cast of "The Wild Rose" for their cooperation and for the lovely flowers presented to us, we sincerely thank you;

We are also under many obligations to those who so readily provided lamps, when the power went off, and made it possible for the entertainment to proceed.

Our friends and all the performers seemed to vie with each other in their efforts to do something lovely that would add to the success of the Operetta, and we thank you one and all.

Delgado Appointed Game Warden

Santa Fe, March 18.—Tomas P. Delgado, former sheriff of Santa Fe county, was appointed state game and fish warden at a meeting of the game commission attended by the two new members, Arthur Sisk and Charles Priesbtel. He will take over the office in a few days and J. M. McMath, of San Miguel county, will be his chief deputy. Delgado succeeds the first woman game warden, Mrs. Grace B. Nelson, who has held the office two years.

Died at Stanton

John Seaberg, who had been at Fort Stanton since 1913, died there there Monday, and the following day the Carrizozo Oddfellows conducted the funeral, interment taking place at the Fort Stanton cemetery. The deceased was a member of Columbia Lodge No. 1 I. O. O. F., New York City, and upon notification of his decease the members of the Carrizozo Lodge of that order attended and conducted the funeral.

Sic Transit

(Carlsbad Current-Argus)

In a scintillating burst of oratorical pyrotechnics the Seventh State Legislature reached adjournment last Saturday. Looking back over three days of contact with the people's representatives, the outstanding impression one needs is that there was a more friendly understanding of the department of public welfare than heretofore. Not only was there a lack of any serious opposition to our requests, but the leaders seemed sincerely anxious to do what they could to promote the welfare program of the department. While we failed to secure the entire appropriation that we felt was needed, yet the total amount for the next two fiscal years is greater by $1,500 than the maximum previously granted by the 1921 legislature, which was the high water mark. In addition, the deficiency created by the continuance of the state public health laboratory was provided for. When budgets have been worked out for both the bureaus of health and child welfare, and have been approved by the board, we shall be able to give more details.

Postal Rate Changes

Washington, March 17.—We're going to get acquainted with some new postage stamps a few weeks from now.

On April 15 provisions of the new postal bill become effective, and the high cost of mailing things become even higher.

A new one-and-a-half cent stamp is now being prepared by the postoffice department, bearing the same picture of Warren G. Harding that was used for the memorial two-cent issue, and printed in light brown. These stamps will be used on third class matter—books, circulars and merchandise weighing less than 8 ounces.

Possibly a half-cent stamp will be printed also, in order to meet the problem of fractions this new one-and-a-half cent rate thrusts on the public. This has not yet been decided.

Two special delivery stamps will be printed. Up to the present time, a ten-cent special delivery stamp on either letter or package would insure rapid handling. Under the new law, ten cents will pay for special delivery of a letter, but it will take fifteen cents for quick work on a package weighing from two to ten pounds, and twenty cents for all heavier packages. The fifteen cent stamp will have the same design as the that of the ten cent stamp but will be printed in canary yellow. The twenty cent stamp will have the picture of a motor van backed up to the Washington city postoffice.

A fourth innovation is the new 25 cent "special handling" stamp. The stamp will be used on parcel post mail where the mailer desires to have his package given the same quick handling and transportation as first-class mail. This is an entirely new plan in the postal service, and officials are unable to estimate just how much time the 25 cents will save mailers. The stamp for this will be plain blue with the words "Special Handling" and the figure 25 on it.

After April 15th, the cost of sending a two-pound parcel post package from Washington to San Francisco, for instance, as rapidly as possible, will increase from 24 to 46 cents.

Zone rates remain the same, and on the two-pound package the rate is 24 cents. Under present laws, a ten cent special delivery stamp is the only additional charge. But after April 15 the special delivery stamp for a package of that weight will cost fifteen cents, a service charge of two cents is added, and if special handling is desired, that 25 cent charge brings the total to 46 cents.

The new regulations provide for the two-cent service charge on all parcel post packages regardless of zone.

These new charges are added to those already named.

Post cards will cost two cents each instead of one cent, and this means that the one-cent stamp will practically go out of circulation.

All merchandise weighing more than eight ounces must go as fourth class mail and pay zone rates. Formerly the minimum was four pounds.

Money order rates have been revised so that smaller orders cost two cents more, but the maximum fee for $100 money order will be only 22 cents instead of 30.

Registered mail will cost not less than fifteen and not more than twenty cents. The old rate was a flat ten cents.

When a return receipt is requested, a three-cent service will be made.

Severe Pains in Side

"I HAD had quite a bad spell and sickness," writes Mrs. Emma Patrick, of Casey, Ky., "and it was an effort for me to go about my home. I had a very severe pain in my left side that almost took my breath at times. I lost my appetite. I grew thin, pale and lifeless. I fell off till I only weighed about 115 pounds.

"Cardui was recommended to me and by the time I had taken one bottle I saw it was what I needed. I ate more and rested better. I kept taking it and my skin and flesh took on a more healthy color. I felt stronger and, as the nervousness left me, the pain in my side was less severe. After taking nine bottles, I eat anything, go anywhere and feel fine. I weigh 160 pounds and am well. I feel that I owe it all to having used Cardui."

Pain, in certain parts of the body, is a sure indication of female complications. The treatment needed is not the use of narcotic drugs, but—

Air Craft Contracts

Washington, March 16.—Contracts totalling more than $1,000,000, for new types of aircraft developed by the Curtis company of New York, and the Douglass company of California, were awarded today by the army air service.

The machines are new observation types which have been approved by the army air service as replacements for the war-built D. H.'S type. An award of $70,000 was given the Curtis company for development of the new machine and Douglass company received an award of $60,000 for similar work on its production.

Awards were made on the basis of tests at McCook field, Dayton, Ohio. Ten machines were ordered from the Curtis company at an estimated cost of $250,000 and 75 at an estimated cost of $883,000 from the Douglass company.

25,000 Acres in Cotton

Phoenix, Ariz., March 17.—The largest single planter in Arizon is the Southwest Cotton company, which this year will have 25,000 acres in cultivation on the outskirts of the Salt River Valley.

Most of the acreage lies outside the Salt River project and is irrigated from wells by pumping. The largest development is about 20 miles west of Phoenix, in the Agua Fria Valley. Manager R. Meixler is bordering the roads with cottonwoods and fan palms and is setting out date and grape fruit orchards.

About half the company's cultivated acreage this year will be in cotton; most of the balance planted to alfalfa, for the benefit of the soil, as well as for immediate return. Much of the cotton will be Pima longstaple, the product taken by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, of which the Southwest Cotton company is a subsidiary.

NOW YOU MAY TRY THIS VEGETABLE SYRUP FREE

This is Your Chance to Prove That Toning up Your Liver will End that Tired, Run-Down Feeling. Build Yourself Up! Win Back Sound Digestion, Strength and Energy. Feel Your Best Again!

In his private practice Dr. H. S. Thacher demonstrated that such symptoms as Indigestion, Gas on a Sour Stomach, Belching, Dizziness, Colds that Hang On, Sick Headaches, Constipation, that Tired Feeling and a general Run-Down condition of the System are often the result of a Sluggish Liver—and that relief in such cases comes quickly when the Liver is properly Cleansed and Toned and the System is working normally again.

Why This Gives Relief

When working as Nature intended your liver does three things necessary to keep you feeling your best. First, it purifies your BLOOD, every drop of which passes through the Liver every fifteen minutes. Second, your Liver furnishes the essences that are essential to perfect DIGESTION. Third, your Liver supplies the secretions Nature uses to lubricate your intestines so that your bowels can move naturally, gently and regularly every day. When your liver becomes sluggish it cannot do these three things; consequently you suffer from one or more of the symptoms above described.

Share It With Family!

Just to prove to you that you CAN get quick RELIEF, druggists are giving away FREE liberal trial size bottles of Dr. Thacher's Liver and Blood Syrup. It is a syrup of PURELY VEGETABLE ingredients known to Physicians for their CORRECTIVE and HEALTH-BUILDING properties. Each ingredient is chosen to help Nature to cleanse and tone the Liver—to correct this cause of constipation—to improve Digestion and Appetite—to Nourish and Strengthen the System—to Tone the Tired and Overtaxed Nerves, and to send purer, Healthier Blood coursing through your veins.

Clip the Coupon Below!

It will cost you nothing to try this health-building vegetable syrup. All we ask in return is you tell others what a few spoonfuls did for you. Keep up this helpful treatment after the sample bottle has demonstrated its merits in your case. Show your friends and relatives that the regular dollar size bottle is sold under the guarantee that every penny will be refunded if for any reason they are not completely satisfied.

GEORGE F. BAKER CALLED "NEW YORK'S LEADING CITIZEN"

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

THERE change and we dance with them. That was first said by a Roman many centuries ago. And it is so true that we seldom look upon it as a platitude. However, if you have any doubts just look at "Wall Street." Why, a banker who has been dead longer on Wall Street for more than a half years has just been given credit as being head to the end.

Here was a man, away back in 1863 a humble national bank clerk who was glad to get $100 a year. He died a few days ago worth $200,000,000 and it is estimated that he had been for years the richest man in America. Every banker and every business man knew that. Every one of them would be willing to trade places with him. Yet he was known to few outside of Wall Street and the bankers. He was a power in the financial world, but he was unknown to the general public.

Then one day he died and the world was startled to learn

Preliminary estimates indicate that the total world production of crude oil in 1924 may have equaled the 1923 output. Invention of Great Value

A chemical product resembling glass and useful for many of the same purposes recently was perfected by Fritz Pollak, a German inventor, says Popular Science Monthly. It can be rolled, bored, polished or cut, without the tendency to splinter that glass has. Because of this quality it is useful especially for automobile windows, optical instruments, ornaments and toilet articles. The inventor arrived at this product by condensing carbamide and theocarbamide with formaldehyde.

WASHINGTON SIDELIGHTS

Fine Bridge to Link North and South

WASHINGTON.—Completion within the next six years of the world's finest bridge and one of this capital's supreme adornments, was virtually assured when the house of representatives passed the senate bill for the construction of Arlington Memorial bridge at a cost of $14,750,000.

The vote was yeas, 204; nays, 125. It was reached after four hours of debate, that was sometimes lofty and visioned, and sometimes acrimonious.

The project has a much larger significance than inheres in its artistic and its practical aspects, momentous as those aspects are.

By linking the memorial to Abraham Lincoln on the Washington shore of the Potomac with Arlington National cemetery and the old home of Robert E. Lee on the Virginia shore, the new bridge will become a tremendous symbol of union.

As an art project, the proposed bridge has been a matter of high concern to architects and artists throughout the country as well as to citizens of northern and southern states who have worked for the assuaging of animosities which have been inherited from the Civil war.

For fourteen years, the specific plan to link the Lincoln memorial with the Lee house and Arlington cemetery has been before congress and the country, and for more than eighty years a proposal to open the federal city to the south by means of a monumental causeway and bridge has been a dream of [illegible]oned men. Among them was Andrew Jackson.

Coming to the immediate present, ever since Calvin Coolidge became President of the United States, the bridge project has been much in his thoughts and close to his heart.

Throughout the debate, which was distinguished by significant modification of sectional and partisan lines, the supporters of the measure emphasized the proposal as a grand step in the ennoblement of the nation's city as its show city.

Venerable Representative Henry Allen Cooper (Rep., Wis.) received tumultuous applause from both sides of the chamber when he said:

"This bridge is not a District of Columbia matter. It is not a Main Street bridge. It is a national matter. It will touch the feelings of every citizen of the republic, every child of the republic, who enters this city. During the generations that come after us, millions upon millions will cross this bridge, and consider, gentlemen, what a vista of reconciliation they will survey as they look to the east and to the west from the Virginia approaches—the capitol, the Washington monument, the Lincoln memorial, Arlington cemetery, the amphitheater and tomb of the unknown soldier, and the home of Robert E. Lee. It is, gentlemen, the glory of this project that it will give not only architectural and historic unity to that matchless vista, but will also give it the tenderest and most solemn sentimental significance. It is a magnificent conception."

Other speakers commented on the fact that the proposed triumphal ways which will lead up to the new bridge at its Washington end and which are intended for pageantry, will wipe out what they described as "the Chinese joints, houses of unmentionable name, and tumbledown shacks that are today the disgrace of the nation's city."

Along other areas, B street, northwest, will be opened up from the capitol to the Potomac river as part of a system of triumphal ways.

Senators Stirred by Bathing Beaches

PERHAPS it was a longing for the tang of salt air—perhaps it was the lure of warm Florida sunshine, while Washington is damp and cold—

Perhaps it was a vision of strolls 'neath overhanging palms, dressed in sports clothes—

Perhaps it was a memory of surf board riding, and leaping the breakers—

But, anyhow, the dignified United States senate spent nearly all of one day discussing bathing beaches, one piece bathing suits and the charms of the bathers.

The grew out of a proposal that another bathing beach be installed in Washington's tidal basin, but the senate lost only [illegible] to appropriate for a new one, but cut off the money necessary to operate the present one.

"It would do you old gray-headed senators, yes, and the bald-headed ones, too, good to go down there with the beauty expert dynamites in the water there," declared Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska, who said he had often visited the beach.

"Did the senator visit [illegible] there after the one-piece bathing suits became popular?" asked Senator A. O. Stanley of Kentucky, who added that he "would like to hear the flowery senator from Alabama, Senator Thomas J. Heflin, describe the bathing beauties."

Although protesting that he could not, with his limited vocabulary, do justice to his subject, Senator Heflin declared that he had often gone to Washington's bathing beach, "where 10,000 tinted waves threw kisses at the sun."

"If congress remains in session this summer," said Senator Heflin, "so many of these old senators will be down at the water front, straining their eyes, that it will be impossible to maintain a quorum."

"I have only a few short hours remaining here, because I am expecting to receive a secret code which I must translate," said Senator Stanley, referring to his failure of reelection, "but I would not want to deprive the senators who remain of the few enjoyments they now have.

"I have been down to the bathing beach many times, but my conviction is that the young women there generally feel that old song

"'Maybe, may I go out to swim?'
'Yes, my darling daughter,
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
But don't go near the water.'"

To Educate Dealers in Buying Meats

WITH a view to educating the people how to buy meat, the government is conducting a nation-wide survey of the retail meat business.

Preliminary reports received by the department of agriculture indicate that consumers generally know less about differences in cuts and quality of meat than of any other commodity. Most of the housewives interviewed by the government investigators were able to mention only two or three meats which they could recognize by cut, and the average number of cuts with which they were familiar was less than five.

Research studies of the department of agriculture of the methods, practices, costs and consumer-buying habits in retailing meats have been made in the following fifteen widely separated cities and towns: New Haven, Conn.; Binghamton, N. Y.; Baltimore, Md.; Washington, Jacksonville, Fla.; Birmingham, Ala.; New Orleans, Cleveland, Illinois, Nebr.; Denver, Colo.; Salt Lake City, Portland, Ore.; San Francisco, Oakland and Los Angeles, Cal.

"A large number of people engage in the retail meat business who have no conception of its requirements and who lack practical knowledge from an operating standpoint," the preliminary report says. "A considerable [illegible] period is required by some representative merchants to correct their mistakes."

The need for saving meat on the basis of grade, and for efficient campaigns to acquaint consumers with the difference in cuts and quality, is also seen by trading retailers to prevent possible deception, substitution and misleading and unfruitful advertising. They believe that greater knowledge of comparative values of meats by the consumer would be beneficial to the trade.

Department in Clever Detective Work

HOW the government printing office turned detective and materially assisted in the conviction of seven men who participated in one of the biggest whisky frauds ever prosecuted under the prohibition law has been disclosed in the annual report of George H. Carter, public printer.

Three hundred suspected permits for the withdrawal of whisky from bonded warehouse had been seized by the department of justice and the bureau of internal revenue.

They constituted the only material evidence in the government's case against the distillery of A. Gucker-heimer Bros. company and 12 individual defendants, charged with the illegal withdrawal of large quantities of bonded whisky from Pittsburgh warehouses.

A number of these permits, however, had been so cleverly imitated by the photo-engraving process that they completely defied all attempts at detection by experts, and the defendants' conviction that they were legal permits issued by government officials seemed for a time to be irrefutable.

The public printer finally suggested that a test be made of the paper used in both the genuine and the false permits. It was learned that the true permits were on a 50 per cent rag paper, with the government's watermark running lengthwise on the sheet. The suspected permits, on the other hand, were printed on paper on which the watermark, although correctly reading "Internal Revenue Prohibition," ran across instead of lengthwise of the sheet. Furthermore, the paper varied in composition from 40 wood pulp to 85 per cent rag content.

The evidence submitted by the printing office appeared conclusive to the courts, and aided the government in obtaining the conviction, in May 1924, of seven of the defendants.

Wide Vogue in Print Materials

The sweeping vogue of printed materials, of printed silks most conspicuously, suggested much of the romance that surrounds their making. Long ago, writes a fashion correspondent in the New York Times, as far away in the dim past as silk weaving was first known, its lustrous surface was printed with patterns of various sorts, primitive in the earliest creating, but growing in artistic importance as the handicraft was perfected.

In those early days of hand looms, of wonderful dyes, of long hours and of infinite industry, the designs conceived by artists were blocked by hand, and there was none other than hand-printed silk. It was worn by the nobility and by the peasants, there being between the two the difference of quality only. Later, through the years when other styles have engaged the attention of a fashionable public, printed silk has come and gone in waves. Brocades and embroidered stuffs have had each a vogue from time to time, as high lights in luxury.

Prints have seemed somehow to belong especially to the Indian and the Portuguese cottons that are so much used in modern schemes of interior decoration. Occasionally a wandering gypsy wearing a printed square about her shoulders has flashed a hint of its picturesque beauty, and from Paris have been received now and then odd frocks and blouses made of silk of the old-time surah, or "China silk," type, printed with a Persian pattern.

Last year printed dress silks, crepes and chiffons were introduced as a standard of style, though they were accepted with some caution by the leading couturiers of Paris, and found but a timid audience on this side. This season they have carried over and are to be absolutely the accepted modes.

Replace the Bold Patterns.

With printed silk assured of an established vogue, both the designs and the colors are now and artistically significant. The sensation of the first presentation of the fabrics was, of course, the Prints Ferronniere, inspired by "The Ironmaster," Brandt, designer of the famous doors of the Verdun Memorial ornament, reflecting the modern art spirit as it is translated into silk. To speak in the language of silk merchants, these prints, the importance of which grows in appreciation, emphasize, in their composition, motifs in the graceful "feuille" and "coquille" in the delicate tracery of large patterns.

Brilliant and warm as the original design, they have an added beauty of warmth and color and are developed in the "Canaletto" color palettes of the season and in the Occitane color schemes. A striking bit of this type, in illustration, is a jacquard (coat brocade) reproducing a Brandt tableau.

Apart from this sensation in design, success and expeditiveness are the characteristics of the latest prints, replacing the bold patterns, quills and other schemes of last season's styles, which were distinctly oriental. With this natural difference from past styles, these [illegible] dots are other. These are especially clever in their adaptable possibilities, for they may be used in a variety of ways in Cross Designing and in trimmings."

An Army of Designs.

Variants in design are almost without limit. The [illegible]-bordered and well-spaced polka dot is presented in entirely new arrangement. It is clever, in the new silks, printed in "regular" spaces as heretofore, but is done with [illegible] and originality of pattern. There are prints having three lines of dots in successively increasing size, and these in which open and solid dots are combined. There are diagonal dots, regular plaids formed of very large dots and dots so placed as to form a border.

Another style of printed silk has a dance ineptitude to the Grand prix ball in the other side, very cleverly illustrated by the picturesque name of "El Cairoa." This is a fancy pattern in which the Spanish influence is apparent, in yellow, red and the copper tones. Much is due to the inspiration that from Spain is both dress and color in these most decorative prints. Some of the most popular lines are those printed in which is drawn a sort of cubist floral conception in yellow, brown and maroon.

Patterns always all over the dress are in vastly produced from a design artistically bold and arresting. All of these printed in one color on but the wrong of the fabric, in another color on the other face, offer the most intriguing possibilities to an ingenious designer, for the artificiality of a gown may thus be varied in many ways. Almost all of these patterns in color are printed on a "black" or "dead" ground.

Many Colors Are Used.

In contrast to the rich and brooding and gorgeous, with a perfect genius for red in all of its possible shades, some exceptionally beautiful silks are shown in periwinkle blue, the design clearly traced on a lighter ground, which presents it sharply. This blue is especially successful in the wash silks, and in the printed patterns shares the popularity of copper red, tomato red and the cyclamen pink.

Modistes and smart shops predict a "red" season, introducing many shades and sorts of red and cottons continuities on a "blond" background. "Toile de Soie (Interclis" is the name of a different weave that is printed in many artistic designs, generally of floral type, a charming fabric for skaters afternoon and evening gowns suitable for late spring or summer.

A ribbed silk shown both plain and printed bears the original names "Cote Dolphin" and "Cote Triton." The novelty, beauty and artistic significance of these printed silks are absorbing, for the moment, the attention of the Paris creators and among the best style designers in this country. And it has become known that while they are of French authorship, originality, they have been adopted by American skill as new presented to the world of fashion and are an altogether American product which the purchaser may thoroughly like, and presented in models from the best ateliers in Paris. They are from those creators who know well the origin, the ideal and the adaptation of the frock built of printed silk.

To quote from an authority: "Plaids supplant the tracers. Geometric designs with dotted effects take the place of large Oriental motifs. An interesting new technique, the 'Ottavere,' introduces several groups of prints. Three-tiered effects, borders and stripes are very popular. Bold prints with squares of large octagonals and dots and those in cross-stitch patterns are among the striking novelties. The trend toward the Directoire, illustrated in striped silks—'rayures,' as the importers call them—

St. Patrick Dinner-Dance

The dining room of the Carrizozo Hotel was the scene of a St. Patrick's dinner-dance, given Wednesday, by Miss Nada May Igo, in honor of Mr. Richard Lumley, of Dawson. St. Patrick decorations were used throughout. After dinner the party enjoyed dancing to music furnished by radio. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. French chaperoned.

The Operetta

"With dance and song—
That's how it was built—
And it all went along
With a glorious lilt."

Notwithstanding a manless presentation—and that is about the only criticism we have heard—"The Wild Rose" Operetta at the Crystal Theatre, Monday and Tuesday nights of this week, brought forth good crowds and hundreds of encomiums. It was a production sponsored and presented by the Carrizozo Woman's Club.

It is generally conceded that it was one of the best entertainments this distinguished organization has produced; and this, in itself, might well be considered sufficient praise of the effort; for the Club has given many pleasing entertainments in the past—in fact, it has been noted for producing nothing but the best.

"The Wild Rose," in its presentation, gave every evidence of systematic, thorough and painstaking effort, not only on the part of those in charge of its preparation but also the characters, themselves, who made it the success it was.

The stage settings and arrangements were attractive; many of the costumes beautiful; others quaint, befitting the period represented or the characters portrayed. The receipts were quite satisfactory, the audiences well pleased and the promoters and performers may rest assured that they met every requirement—and that about makes it unanimous.

Double Operation

Frank L. Standhardt, Corona, was brought down Tuesday and placed in the Johnson Hospital. An operation was determined upon, and the following day was made.

Dr. Johnson was the operating surgeon, Dr. Anderson of Fort Stanton administered the anesthetic, and the nurse, Miss Cora Veazey, assisted. A tumor, which had adhered to the intestines, the bladder and the pelvis, and had infected the appendix, was removed. It weighed about five pounds. The appendix was also removed. The patient is resting remarkably well following this double operation, and, while not out of danger, seems to have a good chance for recovery.

Aged Woman Dies

A telephone message was received here at nine o'clock last night announcing the death of Mrs. Ira P. Watmore in Roswell. Mrs. Watmore, who was in her 68th year, had been ill the greater part of the winter, but just preceding her death her condition was not alarming. Heart failure is supposed to have been the immediate cause of death.

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Hamilton, the latter a daughter, and Mrs. Maggie Watmore, left at once for Roswell.

A husband, a son, Ben, and a daughter, Mrs. Myles, who is in California, besides Mrs. Hamilton, survive.

Power Plant Damaged

The power plant at White Oaks suffered a serious breakdown on Tuesday night. The generator was definitely put out of commission, and the big belt, carrying the load, was torn into shreds. A temporary shift has been made to the big turbine, and the management has notified users of light and power that it can only supply juice at night for a short period. A slight inconvenience will result to users of electric power, especially, but all expect to make the grade, and hope the company will soon overcome the misfortune that has overtaken it.
