He had been taken out of his cell for a bath together with another prisoner and while the jailers attention toward his fellow prisoner Darling forced a hole through the wall and made his get-a-way. The falling adobes attracted the attention of jailer Brady who immediately gave chase. Bernardo Salazar the eight year old son of Francisco Salazar was the first to discover the prisoner in the hog pen close to the jail, but upon being discovered he ran and took refuge in a large bush, there he was caught, taken back to the jail and his feet placed in 25 lbs iron organ boot. A reward of $250 offered by Sheriff Stevens was awarded to the little boy.

Shorty McCabe, his better half, Sadie, and their laughable adventures in New York society can be found and enjoyed only in the Sunday Magazine of THE CHICAGO RECORD HERALD.

It is fortunate for New Mexico and the Republican party in particular that there is no truth to the rumor that Territorial Secretary Jaffa intends to resign. Mr Jaffa is one of the few officials whose resignation is not desired by any one. He is giving good service as an official. He is loyal as a Republican, but best of all, he is esteemed as a citizen and as a business man. He is as popular in Santa Fe as he is in Roswell, and is esteemed as highly in Albuquerque as he is in Las Vegas. Wherever he has lived or has been actively engaged he has made a host of friends and he is to lay easy the man with the fewest enemies in New Mexico's public life, in fact the New Mexican has yet to hear an adverse criticism of him officially or as a citizen.

Ray Jerzykowski a, taylor from Alamogordo has started a dancing school held every Monday evening over the skating rink.

El Paso, Tex. Sept. 17- The biggest baseball tournament yet to be held in the Southwest to decide the championship of the district will be the tournament to be held in connection with the El Paso Fair and Exposition, Nov. 1-7. All of the leading teams of the Southwest have entered for the tournament and are now recruiting the strongest men obtainable for their teams in order to win the $2000 in prizes offered by the Fair association.

The races in the Southwest is getting hotter all the time and with two more months to play the teams should be playing real professional ball by the time for the El Paso Fair. The El Paso team has been reorganized, a manager secured from the Texas League and a number of new players signed. Douglas has done likewise also Bistic Morenci' Colonia Dublin and the other crack teams in the Southwest, familiarly known as the "Cactus League" country. The tournament games are to be played as a part of the Fair and Exposition program and the finals will be the feature event of Fair week.

Have you made the acquaintance of the latest hit in American humor Sewell Ford's "Shorty McCabe" stories? If not you are missing a heap of fun. Shorty is a "hard-boiled" in every sense of the word. As an artist in humorous slang he can match George Aple's fables, and as a creator of original and witty phrases he can match Mr. Donley. Wherever you go you will hear people talking and laughing over them. Thousands of people take THE SUNDAY RECORD HERALD simply for its Sunday Magazine and the inimitable Shorty McCabe. It begins to be a question whether Shorty is not a more popular personage than Mr. Donley.

"THE HOUSE WHERE PRICE AND QUALITY MEET"

Joe, Nurse and Cowboy

By William Russell Ross

"Just a week ago to-night," he told the woman, "I sat by a campfire out in the prairie and ate my supper with two Sioux Indians and a French Canadian. I don't know what we ate—I didn't much care to know." Then he laughingly added, "This is different."

"I am glad you like this," said the woman, "although we can't offer you as much variety in dining companions."

Joe laughed at the contrast. "Do you know," he said, "that if traveling was all like this I think I'd like to travel forever?"

They were two happy days for Joe that followed his first encounter with the woman and her children.

She was a real lady, Joe told himself, and it was a delight and an education to listen to her talk. And Joe learned many things from her—being quick at observation and clever at imitation.

As for the woman, she liked this clear-eyed, willing boy, who strove so hard to please her. And because her children liked him, the little Elsie being almost as fond of him as Eddie, she liked him all the better.

"And what are you going to do when you get to Chicago?" she asked him.

"I'll find something to do," he confidently replied. "I may have to

"Hands Up, Everybody!" He heard knook around for a while, but I don't intend to starve."

"What would you like to do?" "I think," replied Joe, "that I'd like to be a railroad engineer."

The woman laughed merrily. "And ride on car trucks?" she asked.

"Not as long as there are nursemaids' places to fill," Joe quickly answered.

And the woman laughed and said that was very good, and Eddie patted his hands—dimly understanding that applause was due—and even Elsie looked up and softly cooed.

"You have your friends well trained," laughed the woman, and Joe thought this was very good, too.

They were booming through Iowa that evening when the train came to a sudden stop. It was a jarring, grinding stop, and almost instantly shots were heard ahead.

"Train robbers!" some one shrieked, and the passengers were in instant confusion.

Joe snatched his big hat and put it on.

"Don't be scared, ma'am," he said. "Hide your money!"

He stepped into the aisle just as the door at the opposite end of the car was thrown open and one of the robbers appeared.

"Hands up, everybody!" he roared.

Then he saw Joe. The boy's hat was pulled low and something gleamed in his hand.

"Next car," he shouted at the bandit. "Git! I'm workin' this lot."

No doubt the bandit was excited and nervous. He was deceived by the confident tone, the cowboy garb, the big hat and the shining thing in the boy's hand—and there were a half dozen men in the gang, and it was not easy to recognize faces in the length of the car.

The ruffian backed out. "Scream!" commanded Joe, as he walked up the aisle.

Some of the frightened passengers understood him and set up a wild outcry.

The shots outside continued and then came the long, shrill note of a distant locomotive whistle. Another train was approaching.

The shooting ceased. Joe listened a moment, then went back to his seat. He was laughing. And the lady, although quite pale, also laughed.

"That was fine," she said. The passengers were coming forward and patting Joe on the back.

"And what was the shining thing you had in your hand?" inquired a man. "I'm quite sure it wasn't a pistol."

Joe was still laughing. "Something right in my line," he said. He held it up.

It was a baby's silver rattle. The next morning as the train slowed down in the Chicago station a big, fine-looking man of 40 appeared in the doorway.

He started down the aisle, and then hurried forward and tenderly embraced the woman and kissed the children and started hard at Joe, who was carrying Master Eddie.

"How very well you are looking, dear," he cried to the woman. "I was afraid the trip would do too much for you. I just received a telegram from Anna, and Marie is much better. And what's all this I hear about a train robbery and only one car escaping the looters? Did they frighten you very much?"

"No, Robert," said the woman. "It was our car that escaped and all the credit is due to Joe here."

The big man grasped Joe's hand. "Good for you, son," the big man cried. "And now who is Joe?"

"You were just wondering, dear," said the woman, "how I stood the journey so well. It is all because of Joe's helpfulness. I don't think even Marie could have done more."

"Good for you, son," cried the big man again.

"And, Robert, he wants to be a railroad man."

"He shall be," cried the big man. "He looks like the right stuff—and his recommendations couldn't be better. You will come into my office to-morrow, son. What's your name?"

"Joe Rogers," replied the lad; "nursemaid and cowboy."

And the big man laughed loud and long.

SNOBBERY REMOVED.

Speaking of the pretensions of those who might be counted as in society, Mrs. Bloomfield Moore, in her book on "Sensible Etiquette," tells the following story: A snobbish young man and his sister, after their return home from an evening party, were criticizing the company, quite unaware that their sensible old uncle was lying awake in his chamber, and could hear every word from where they stood in the corridor. "Why, even the Grinders were there, and you know their father was a grocer; I was never in such a mixed company," said the sister. "And we will never be again, if I can help it," answered the brother. The uncle called out, "Children, what do you think your grandfather was? He was a bootmaker, and some people say not a very honest one, either. Now, go to bed."

HAD LARGE IDEAS OF DIGNITY

Courts and Judges of Colonial Days Surrounded Themselves with Much Pomp.

In colonial days York, Me., was the county seat to which the judges and lawyers from New Hampshire and Massachusetts often went, and the court sessions were attended with much official pomp and ceremony. In "Old Colonial Houses in Maine" Emma Huntington Nason quotes from a record left by John Adams, who as a young barrister, went to York in 1774, and who made at that time the following entry in his journal:

"When I got to the tavern on the eastern side of the Pisataqua river, I found the sheriff of York and six of his deputies, all with gold-laced hats, ruffles, swords and very gay clothes, and all likely young men who had come out to that place to escort the court into town."

"This gives us a hint of the pomp and splendor affected by the court officials of those days, when the judges wore robes of scarlet with large rambled bands, and immense wigs, and the barristers had gowns and also wands and ribbons."

As the judges approached the shire towns, the sheriff met them with an escort and flourish of trumpets. Their arrival was announced by cannon; and the daily summons to the court before bells were introduced was by beating a drum.—Youth's Companion.
