Col. A. H. Hilton, the pioneer merchant of San Antonio, Texas, was a very pleasant caller last evening and we were highly entertained with his reminiscences of early days in New Mexico. Mr. Hilton came to New Mexico from Iowa about 35 years ago for his health. He says he was a "lunger" but you would not believe it now.

Mr. Hilton is a Norwegian by birth and he is proud of his nativity. He looks like Ole Bull and and as proof that the family have the Norwegian love of music we need say only that the daughter Miss Eva Hilton has become famous as a violinist. She has devoted her whole life to the study of the violin and is a graduate of Boston Conservatory of Music.

The people of Carrizozo are soon to be favored with a concert by the Hilton Trio. Don't miss it.

"Scotty" drew a gun on a boy whom he seemed to have a spite against especially when intoxicated and he has been bound over to the Grand Jury but is ont under bonds furnished by Art Rollands. Scottie is a notorious character of Carrizozo He is a good fellow, his friends say but drinkis ruining his life

President Wilson, of the New Mexico Realty Syndicate came in last Saturday on the Limited to inspect the Highland Park addition, recenlty purchased by the syndicate and expressed great surprise at the growth of Carrizozo. The syndicate expects to put up a number of houses and dispose of them on the installment plan.

N. M. Scoggins has been appointed General Manager of the Carrizozo Improvement and Development Company succeeding Howard W. Hall, who recently resigned to accept a position with the E. P. & S. W. Ry. Co.

Mr Tom Chant wife and two children departed on Thursday for New York city from which point they will sail for England on the 7th of July on the "Oceanic". They will spend three months abroad in London with Mrs. Chant's relatives.

CHAPTER II.

Carrington faced her swiftly. He had not expected this. There was something in her handsome eyes that barred the way to subterfuge. The lie died unspoken, and he dropped his gaze and began to dig up the turf with the toe of his shoe.

"Is it my father, John?"

"Yes. Oh, Kate," with a despairing gesture, "I'm the most miserable fellow alive! To think that this should fall into my hands, of all hands in the world!"

"Perhaps it is better so," quietly. "Nothing is without purpose. It might have come to test your honesty. But you are sure, John; it is not guesswork?"

"All the evidence is in my pocket. Say the word, and the wind shall carry it down to the sea. Say the word, heart o' mine!"

He made a quick movement toward his pocket, but she caught his arm.

"Do nothing foolish or hasty, John. Tearing up the evidence would not undo what is done. Sooner or later murder will out. If my father is culpable, if in his thoughtless greed for money he has robbed the poor, he must be made to restore what he has taken. I know my father; what he has done appears perfectly legitimate to him. Can he be put in prison?"

"It all depends upon how well he defends himself," evasively.

She went on. "I have been dreading something like this; so it is no great surprise to me. He is money-mad, money-mad; and he hears, sees, thinks nothing but money. But it hurts, John; I am a proud woman. My grandfather—" Her lips shut suddenly. "Money!" with a passionate wave of the hand. "How I hate the name of it, the sound of it, the thought of it! I love my father," with a defiant pride; "he has always been tender and kind to me; and I should not be of his flesh and blood had I not the desire to shield and protect him."

"The remedy is simple and close at hand," suggested Carrington, gently.

"Simple, but worthy of neither of us. I abhor anything that is not wholly honest. It is one of those strange freaks of nature (who holds herself accountable to no one) to give to me honesty that is the sum total of what should have been evenly distributed among my ancestors. If I were to tell all I know, all I have kept locked in my heart—"

"Don't do it, girl; it wouldn't matter in the least. You are you; and that is all there is to love. Why, I could not love you less if your great-great-grandfather was a pirate," lightly. "Love asks no questions; and ancestors worry me not at all; they are all comfortably dead."

"Not always. But if my perception of honor were less keen, I should laugh at what you call your evidence."

"Laugh?"

"Yes, indeed. I very well understand the tremendous power of money."

"Not more than I," sadly.

She laughed brokenly. "More than you. I can picture to you just what will happen." She rose. "There will, of course, be a great newspaper clamor; the interstate commissioners will put their heads together; there will be investigations by the government. That will be the attack. The keenest lawyers are on the side of corporations; that is because the state is pledged with her pay. Let me mention the defense. Father will resign from his high office, to be re-elected later when the public wrath cools off. A new director will fill the place of the present one. Suddenly damning entries will be discovered, the head bookkeeper will have disappeared. All fingers will point to him. He will be in South America, having been paid several thousand to go there. All this will make the passing of the dividend perfectly logical. The matter will never be tried in court. Money will do all this."

"My dear little woman, you reason like a Machiavelli but," Carrington [illegible]

"Tearing Up the Evidence Would Not Undo What Is Done."

have only to say the word, and for the present nobody will be any the wiser."

"If I permitted you to do this, I should destroy my faith in both of us. It would erect a barrier which would be insurmountable. That is not the way out."

"I have weighed all these things," discouragedly.

He took the document from his pocket and caught it in a way that indicated how easily it might be ripped into halves, the halves into quarters, the quarters into infinitesimal squares of meaningless letters.

"Once more, shall I, Kate?"

"No, John. That would only make our difficulties greater. But I do ask this one favor; put your evidence into the hands of a strange attorney, have nothing to do with the prosecution; for my sake."

"I must have the night to think it over. Most of my attacks are not herein written; I dared keep them only in my head."

"I am very unhappy," said the girl.

He took her hand and kissed it reverently. He longed to console her, but no words he had in mind seemed adequate.

"Fore!" came lazily over the knoll. They were no longer alone. So in gether they wandered slowly back to the clubhouse. Tea was being served, and Carrington drank his abstractedly. From time to time he joined the conversation, but without any heart. Some of the busier ladies whispered that it looked this time as though Kate had given the young man his conge.

On the way home Norah, with her humorous comment on the weekly budget of gossip, saved the situation from any possible contretemps. Mrs. Cavenaugh was easy-going, but for all that she possessed remarkably observant eyes; and her eldest daughter was glad that they were occupied elsewhere.

Kate was very unhappy; her father was not honest, and the man she loved had come into the knowledge of the fact. Ah, how quickly shadow can darken sunshine!

"What did you make it in to-day, Mr. Carrington?" asked Norah.

"Make what?" he counter-questioned, absently.

"The course, Mr. Goose! What did you think I meant?"

"Oh," lamely, "I made a bad play at the beginning and gave it up."

By this time they had arrived at the gates, and everybody was thankful; Mrs. Cavenaugh, because her knee smarted with sunburn; Norah, because the gown she was to wear at the dance that night was new; Kate, because she wanted to be alone; and Carrington, because he wanted to learn whether the angel threw Jacob or Jacob threw the angel. The driver and the horses were glad to arrive because they were hungry.

It took the young lawyer some time to dress for dinner that night. His usually direct mind vacillated between right and wrong, wrong and right; and he bolted from one to the other like an unattached cork. He made a dozen annoying blunders in dressing. And when finally the pier-glass reflected an irreproachable and finished picture, he scrubbed his cast-off vest for his growing monster and transferred it to the pocket of his coat. Monster! More was no story-monster, like the creature of a Frankenstein! It was genuine, and was like to turn upon him at any moment and rend him. He shrugged and proceeded down the stairs, [illegible]

[illegible] and hospital Micawber; some [illegible] for the benefit of all concerned.

CARRIZOZO, N.M., JUNE 25, 1909

Editorials

Springer, Colfax County, and Estancia, Torrance County, are making arrangements to incorporate as most of the town in New Mex are doing, that claim any pretentions whatever. The first question asked by a stranger coming to town is; "Is the town incorporated?"

Incorporation seems to be one of the first steps towards municipal improvements and is generally so regarded by most people.

-Santa Rosa Sun.

The above is a gentle reminder to the people of Carrizozo. Incorporation is an important step in the proper developement of any town. Recent happenings have amply demonstrated the great need of incorporation. We cannot reasonably expect to suppress the unlawful element unless harmony exists in municipal affairs, nor can we expect to become the county seat of Lincoln county until after we become a united people. Who shall be the first Mayor of our City?

From Farming [N. M.] Enterprise

New Mexico has fewer murders in proportion to her population than many of the older states, though as she is considered "uncivilized" more news paper space is given to a single murder or shooting scrape than a dozen in any of the large cities.

Yes and, it frequently happens that the home papers devote altogether too much space to some disgraceful happening just to make a spread of news. Better say as little as possible about the disgraceful happenings and never condemn an official for doing what he believed to be his duty. Life should be sacred it is true but self defense is the first law of nature. The man who shot and tried to kill his wife, the mother of his child, should, and doubtless will meet the punishment he deserves. If a man and wife cannot live together happily, they should separate and put miles of space between them. Our moralists preach against divorce. There are things far worse than divorce and it is a positive crime for two mismated people to live together and raise children. They should separate peaceably and try and forget the past.

In our home town in the north there lived a man and wife who were continually scrapping. The woman had a tongue, of course and the man had two fists and, well the result was the neighbors were often compelled to act as peacemakers. There was a large family of children and home was a hell for them. Now who will say that marriage is always a holy institution and that separation, yes even divorce if the experience must be repeated, is not preferable to such a life.

IMITATING MAMMA.

Yeast—How's the baby?

Orimsbeak—Fine. He's the greatest little imitator you ever saw.

"Talk yet?"

"No; doesn't say anything, but keeps his mouth going all the time."

"Just like mamma, I suppose?"

"Sure thing."—Yonkers Statesman.

Mrs. Keeley of Grand Junction, Colorado, was a very pleasant caller Saterday afternoon. Mrs. Keeley was a resident of Lincoln county about 25 years ago when she and her husband published the Golden Eagle at White Oaks. A sister Mrs. Read still resides at Parsons, N. M. Mrs. Keeley comes of a family of newspaper people and is still engaged in newspaper work.

Sometimes it is worth a great deal to tell people what we think of them, especially when we know it do them good. Once in a while we find a scrub lawyer who imagines he has the eloquence of a Demostenes when all he really does possess is well inflated ignorance.

Millions of laborers are far superior to him and his kind in innate nobility of character and gentlemanly conduct.

Most laboring men respect a woman especially when that woman is earning a living for her family and herself in a descent and a respectable mauner

We purchased a newspaper once in the north. The man claimed that there was $600 in subscription on the books. We did not take possession of the office for two weeks and in the mean time the man had marked the subscriptions paid in advance and had collected $200 of the amouut. We sued him and he was compelled to return the money.

The Outlook family drove over to Oscuro, Sunday and spent a few hours on our homestead one mile east of town. We took the wrong road or rather the right road on our way over, for the mountain scenery was grand and it led us to the old Ellis Ranch about five miles east of Oscuro, a place we had wanted to visit since coming to New Mexico. Nestling at the foot of the mountains; a quiet rambling old house surronded by a velvety carpet of Bermuda grass, beautiful shade tress, orchards, vinyards and thousadds of range cattle upon the hills.

The place looked very inviring and we lingered in the shade for sometime, loath to depart, but the good people of the house were absent and we were not invited to enter, although we were very pleasantly entertained by Mr Phillips and Mr Woodland of Carrizozo, two employees of the ranch.

The old Ellis Ranch has had quite a history. The place was homesteaded about 35 years ago by Mr and Mrs Goodwin. Mr Goodwin died and Mrs. Goodwin married Mr. Ellis, a cowboy of the ranch. There were several children born to Mr and Mrs Goodwin tho the Ellis union was without issue, and the place being so isolated how to give her children an education was the question of paramount importance in the mind of Mrs Ellis.

She decided to hire a governess for her children; two were brought to the ranch and both committed suicide. Whether over some love affair or not we have not learned. Then Mrs Ellis parted with her children and sent them away to school.

The Ellis Ranch is ample proof of what can be done with water in this country. They have one small spring and three wells with windmills on the Ellis Ranch supplying irrigation for orchards vineyard and Alfalfa fields.

The man who gets mad at what the newspaper say about him should return thanks three times a day for what the newspapers have heard about him and suppressed.
