The Legion Honors Dead In Memorial

Impressive Ceremonies Held at Graves of Departed Comrades Monday. Amid Sweet Flowers, Loving Hands and Tender Hearts, Fallen Heroes Were Honored.

Sunday being Decoration Day, services were held on Monday at the cemetery by the American Legion. Those interested in the exercises met at the First National Bank, and after instructions given out by Post Commander E. M. Brickley, the parade started from that point with a large representation.

After reaching the cemetery, the Post Commander halted the Legion at the grave of Harvey Hughes where Commander Brickley, after a short address read Lincoln's Gettysburg speech and was followed by Rev. L. S. Smith, who, with a well directed and patriotic talk, expressed the deep and solemn sentiments that each one present must have felt in his, or her heart. At the close of Rev. Smith's remarks, the Commander called the names of the deceased soldiers, and was answered by Comrade H. V. Bamberger, who gave the place of burial, each answer being followed by a wreath of flowers being placed on the grave alternately by the following young ladies: Misses Hilary Cooper, Clarite McQuillen, Grace Moss, Josephine Clements, Lois and Kathryn Stidham, Grace and Leora Taylor.

These exercises were repeated at the graves of Gladney White, Cecil Morgan and Susano Sanchez after which flowers were placed on the grave of Amos Akers, a former confederate soldier. The services closed with prayer by Rev. Smith and the assemblage dispersed. The roll call of the deceased soldiers together with places of burial, follows: Analla Pedro, Tinnie, Capitan; Benjamin I. Berry, Carrizozo, Overseas; Charles Beever, Corona, Corona; Leland S. Bond, Corona, Overseas; George Chavez, Capitan, Capitan; Jim Dearman, Carrizozo, Overseas; William Randall Greer, Parsons, Angus; Roy Hamilton, Carrizozo, Overseas; James Robert Hagee, Alto, Alto; Harvey Hughes, Carrizozo, Carrizozo; William Knowles, Ancho, Ancho; Richard Cecil Morgan, Carrizozo, Carrizozo; Candido Montoya, Hondo, Hondo; Luis Moys, Arabela, Arabela; Susano Sanchez, San Patricio, Carrizozo; Gladney White, Carrizozo, Carrizozo.

"On fame's eternal camping grounds Their silent tents are spread, And glory guards with solemn round The bivouac of the dead."

Boone-Clements

Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 at the bride's home with the Rev. A. C. Douglas performing the ceremony occurred the wedding of Mr. Reuben Boone of Capitan and Miss Pearl Clements of Carrizozo. The wedding was a private affair attended only by members of the two families which arrangements were according to the wishes of all concerned. Outside of the Clements family circle in Carrizozo, relatives from other places were as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Atkinson, Corona; Mrs. P. H. Kersey, Corona; Mr. George Clements, Jr., Corona. Other relatives unable to attend sent their regrets.

The bride is a daughter of County Clerk George C. Clements. She was born in the state of Texas, but the family moving to New Mexico when she was but a child and being raised here Lincoln County may well call her its own. Between Carrizozo and Corona where the family resided until two years ago, the new Mrs. Boone has many friends and admirers who wish her a future of undisturbed happiness. The groom was born and raised in Capitan, N. M., where, like his accomplished bride, his friends are numbered by the amount of his acquaintances. The young couple have known each other for years. When the war broke out, they were seriously considering the ending of their single lives, by having the nuptial knot tied, but fortunes of war carried Reuben across the waters to help win the contest for his Uncle Sam so the matter was postponed until his return. As his good ship guided him safely over hidden submarines of the enemy, so may the ship of life guide the young couple safely over hidden submarines of sorrow, adversity, and misfortunes of the future.

After the wedding ceremony was performed, the couple left for Roswell, Pecos, and other places to spend their honeymoon, after which they will return to Capitan to take up their future residence at the Boone Ranch about three miles from town. The newly married couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

Fire at Alamo

(Alamogordo News)

The home of I. R. Danley was burned to the ground together with the contents last Thursday night. The Danley family had barely sufficient time to escape in their night clothes. The fire had gained a great headway before being discovered and when the alarm was turned in to the department the sky was illumined brightly in the direction of College Addition.

The fire department got to the scene in good time after the alarm was turned in but could do nothing.

Mr. Danley's loss on the present replacement value is about $2,000, it has been estimated.

Iron Light Posts Have No Terrors for Ford

Last Monday Mr. Thomas Bragg and family were in from Nogal, and being detained longer than usual arranged in a hurry to make the homeward trip which is about twelve miles from Carrizozo. As before mentioned in these columns, the new street lamps are arranged directly in the middle of the streets but between crossings. Mr. Bragg came down Alamogordo avenue at an ordinary rate of speed but on nearing the lamp post at Alamo ave. and 5th street, he became aware of the fact that he was driving directly in line of the post. He shifted his gearing suddenly in order to pass that object but the Ford lurched to one side throwing car and occupants into the post with a crash.

In an instant the street was full of dust, wire, and crushed glass but the Ford passed on. Mr. Bragg slowed down at the distance of a half block and backed up to ascertain the damage to car and lamp; the lamp was shattered beyond all repair, but outside of one small rod being slightly bent, the Ford was unharmed. Mr. Bragg was accompanied by his entire family and we are glad to say that aside from a few moments of excitement, no harm was done, which was very fortunate. Moral—You can't hurt a Ford.

White Oaks Girl Weds at Oklahoma City

News has just been received by relatives of the former Miss Lottie Collier of White Oaks, but now of Oklahoma City, that three weeks ago she was united in marriage to Mr. T. L. Bailey of that city. The bride is a sister of Mrs. Jack Cleghorn and Mrs. Harry Gallacher of White Oaks, where she was raised, the family leaving for Oklahoma in the year of 1900 where she has since resided. Being as we have said, raised in this locality, Lincoln County has a claim on her and her many friends here wish her a full measure of happiness in her future life.

The groom is a buyer for a grocery firm in Oklahoma City and like the new Mrs. Bailey, enjoys the confidence of a large circle of friends who showered the happy couple with congratulations. After the ceremony the Newlyweds took an east bound train for Kentucky to spend their honeymoon among relatives of the groom after which they will return to Oklahoma, to make that place their future home.

Masonic Light Shines

The local Masonic lodge communication last Saturday night and Eastern Star meeting Thursday evening were well attended, degrees being exemplified in both orders, each reporting good budgets of applications for membership. At the Eastern Star meeting, a social session followed the regular order of business and initiation at which refreshments were served. In connection with the rapid growth of both orders mentioned, the usual Masonic interest and harmony prevails.

Newlyweds Visit Carrizozo

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burleson of Lincoln paid a visit to their Carrizozo friends Monday. This is their first visit here since their marriage which occurred last week at Roswell. The bride was the former Miss Grace Carrington of Lincoln, where she was a teacher for the past school term, and it is the hope that she may be induced to teach for the coming term. The Burlesons have the best wishes of their many friends.

Infant Body Found In "Lost" Suit Case

New York, June 3.—The body of a two-month-old male infant was found in a suitcase which had been in the lost property room of Grand Central since November 9, 1919.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Wauson of Corona, came down on No. 3 Wednesday and, after staying over for the day, left for El Paso to spend the week-end. Mr. Wauson has disposed of his stock of merchandise to J. M. Crisp of Roswell, and will enter the wholesale mercantile business in Corona. He says that Corona and vicinity has had an abundance of rainfall this season, consequently, things are looking full of promise for the future.

Gov. Lowden Denounces False Attack

People's Economy Governor Gives Out Statement Attack as Coming From Enemies as Without Foundation. His Popularity Gaining, Prophet Faulkner Wires.

Chicago, Ill. June 3.—Governor Frank O. Lowden in a statement issued today, disavowed for himself and his campaign manager, L. L. Emmerson, any illegitimate expenditures from his campaign fund. He denounced the two Missouri delegates who testified before the senate committee as having received or expected to receive contributions to vote for him. Money was paid to the men for organization purposes only and before Mr. Emmerson knew they would be delegates, said the Governor. He declared that he would not accept the votes of these men in the convention, if cast for him.

It is surprising that some still think the so-called Missouri disclosures will have an ill effect on Lowden's chances. James W. Faulkner, wiring the Cincinnati Enquirer from here said: "The 'Old Guard' can muster enough votes to nominate Lowden if it seems of a certainty at the time of the nomination, that he can be successful in the coming election." Sentiment for the Governor is gaining.

Corona Will Celebrate

At a mass meeting last week in Corona, it was decided to hold a 4th of July celebration. Plans were immediately made and quite a large fund subscribed on the spot. At this time, it was not known that the Lincoln County Community Celebration was under way, and the same did not come to the knowledge of the promoters until the Carrizozo papers came out with notices of the coming event. The Corona people wish to announce that their celebration will in no wise conflict with the Lincoln County Community affairs, and while it was at the time of the meeting the intention to have the Corona celebration on the same date as the Nogal affair, still there may be some chance of having their date changed to Monday the 5th.

The committees will, during the coming week, get into communication with each other, the result of which will be announced next week, which will be ample time to give due notice of the agreement so that all may have a full understanding of the dates. In having the Nogal celebration on the 3rd, and the Corona on the 5th, would give everybody the opportunity of attending ours, resting over Sunday and attending the Corona affair on the 5th. However, the two committees will adjust these matters for themselves, and the particulars will appear next week. The Corona celebration will be larger and better than ever before.

It filled Andrea with a premonition and brought her a desperate courage. She took off her high-heeled slippers and climbed down several rungs of the ladder that led to her platform; then seating herself and getting a good knee-grip on the limb, she leaned down and gradually worked loose the cleat below her. After that she took the next above and then the next, depositing each cleat as she removed it in her room.

No sooner had she finished, leaving herself cut off from easy access to the outside world but in compensation having established a substantial obstacle to sudden assault from below, than she was aware of the whispering, wheezy sound of heavy breathing. Immediately afterward came to her distended nostrils an overpowering odor of gin, nauseatingly sweet and sour at the same time. She looked down into the shadowy gloom and saw MacCloster's bulk moving slowly upward, rung by rung, each movement as deliberate and repulsive as that of a giant sloth.

Gripping one of the loosened cleats in her right hand, she knelt on the edge of the platform and watched breathlessly his progress. When he came to the break in the ladder his hairy paws groped helplessly for a moment only; then they embraced the tree-trunk and he began to swarm up the easy slant. "Waiting up for me, dearie?" he whispered.

Andrea suppressed an instinctive impulse to fly before his advance, all the more terrifying because it was so deliberate. Her face went white, her eyes narrowed, but her lips set in a straight line as she waited, trying her best to quiet her excited breathing lest it betray her pitiful agitation. She measured the distance between the edge of the platform and those slowly sliding hands. Only when they got so close that she could see the mist of fine yellow hair on them did she strike first at one and then at the other, and not with the edge of the cleat, but with the three jagged balls that protruded from its flat side.

With a bellow of rage MacCloster snatched back his pierced hands, trusting to the grip of his knees. Andrea clutched the cleat tightly, leaned forward and struck him across the side of the head with all her strength. He lost his balance and fell. She heard his body crashing from limb to limb until it landed with a terrific thud on some platform far below. Up from the depths came a liquid stream of curses; he could no longer bellow, he was whining with the rage that means to kill.

Andrea sank back and covered in the corner of her hotel. She was through; that last blow had drained her of all energy and courage, she was no longer conscious of a desire to live. Her head rang with incredible sounds. Hallucination tortured her and even brought to her longing ears the far-away hum of Trevor's airplane motor. So vivid was her imagination that the hum grew louder and louder, as it would have done in reality, and finally attained a staccato roar. She smiled wistfully, her face illumined by all the love of the White Man which she had hidden under a mask of slypancy but which, now that hope was dead, proclaimed itself frankly and seemed to be trying to rock her to comfort and oblivion.

Suddenly a terrific ripping crash above her head tore through her numbed senses and brought her staggering to her feet. The whole masonry structure of the case swayed and bent as though it had been struck by a tornado. Strong limbs creaked and cracked with reports like pistol shots and a shower of leaves fell with a fatal click-clicking that could be distinctly heard as if through the interstices of the general and grosser commotion. The roaring of the airplane that she had thought an hallucination suddenly ceased. Presently smoke, pearly-gray, began to seep through the thatch of the roof.

Andrea came fully to her senses and called in a clear, high voice: "I'm here, White Man; I'm here, White Man." She repeated the cry steadily at short intervals until he shouted an answer. Following the sound of his voice, her eyes caught the gleam of his hunting knife, beckoning a way through the thatch and when, finally, his feet were thrust through the opening, she seized and guided them to a foothold. In another second he was standing before her. Even in the dim light she could see that his face was blackened, his eyebrows, eyelashes and mustache entirely singed, his hair burnt off in patches. "Oh! White Man!" she gasped, throwing out both hands toward him.

"Drop it," said Trevor shortly. "Which way to the ground?" She showed him. He slid down the branch until he struck the first cleat, and waited there to catch her. "Come on, now," he said. "In thirty seconds whoever's left in this hell-hole will be baked."

From below them and outside the case came the ululating of a thousand panic-stricken voices, overlaid but not dominated by the bellowing of MacCloster, issuing drunken and impossible orders intermingled with horrible and obscene oaths. As Trevor and Andrea reached the platform at the main intersection of the tree's branches the pall of smoke that had been following close on their heels descended with a swirl and enveloped them. He turned, caught up her skirt and throw it over her head; then he seized her in his arms, buried his face against her breast and staggered blindly down the spiral stairway.

In the van of the smoke, almost as though he were being propelled by it, he stumbled through the exit into the cool air of night and a glare that paled the face of the full moon. He dropped Andrea to the ground, stepped over her and stood face to face with the ravag MacCloster. On the instant the giant fell silent. He stared vacantly for the space of a second; then his ravaged face writhed into such an expression of sublimated hatred as no man lives to see twice. Murder wrote itself large across his features, slow murder with bare hands for this enemy who had sent up in smoke and flame the one beloved earthly possession of the wreck of a life. With a choking gulp that seemed to rend his throat he charged, head down, arms thrown wide, talons clutching in anticipation.

His mouth twisted in a thin smile, Trevor shot from the hip. The bullet of the heavy service revolver caught MacCloster in the shoulder and spun him around three times. Trevor fired again. The giant's body seemed to waver in the air, then crumpled and fell sprawling toward the gun, face down.

"You've killed him," sobbed Andrea, still on her hands and knees. "In a way," said Trevor calmly and half to himself. "He really died years ago."

CHAPTER XII.

The memory of that tragic moment, strangely enough, was not to live in Andrea's mind by reason of the sight of the collapse of MacCloster's bulk, but by what followed immediately after. Never could she forget the sudden stilling of the ululating and the instantaneous smile, broadening to a grin, that dawned on the face of every native.

The black throng backed step by step before the terrific heat of the flaming case. Their scorching faces glistened with sweat, but their eyes lunged greedily on the crumpled, sprawling mass that was all that was left of MacCloster. In the pleasurable self of the moment they were careless of the fact that the doom of the entire crew was fixed.

Trevor turned on them in a white rage and with a well-aimed bullet shot an assegai from between the legs of a great hulking brute whose mouth was slavered with revolting enjoyment of the scene. The black's face went gray with fright; his eyes came back with a snap from their sensual fever. Many of his companions laughed aloud, but others only licked thick lips in bestial hunger for more slaughter.

"You!" cried Trevor, pressing the muzzle of his revolver into the quivering naked stomach of the man he had frightened. "Get your crew together. Take me home."

Half an hour later Andrea found herself once more in MacCloster's boat, but in spite of the fact that all its appointments and the crew were the same with the exception of the one black who had been killed, it seemed utterly strange to her eyes, now no longer glazed by misery. She turned to Trevor, who had not spoken to her since first he had joined her in the case. "The boat is quite different," she said. "It's as though I saw it for the first time."

He gave her no answer beyond a noncommittal grunt, nor did he look at her. His eyes were fastened far ahead on the river, tracing out the swirl of the current and deep water. A troubled look came into Andrea's face; she glanced at him and her lips parted twice in the half-smile that precedes kindly speech. "You think I ought to thank you?" she asked. "I haven't the words; if I tried my heart would choke me."

"Thank me?" said Trevor, casting her a casual look. "What for?" Andrea's lips trembled. If only the fire hadn't happened just when it did, she thought, if only it had given him time to find her, to take her in his arms! "For saving me," she answered simply.

"For saving nothing," affirmed Trevor. "For saving the nothing that is left of your beauty and freshness and honor after the touch of that beast."

Overwhelming shame stained her cheeks; she felt all that was noble and generous within her shriveling into a strangling knot. She tried to speak, to protest against his hardness and injustice, but she could only gulp. For hours they sat in absolute silence, and gradually the cold that had struck her heart spread through all her body until her teeth began to chatter.

"Why are you doing that?" asked Trevor sharply. "It isn't really cold." "I'm a—d—doing it b—because I c—can't help it," chattered Andrea. "I am c—cold!" She pressed herself against his body, as though she begged for his arms around her. He drew away from her.

She crouched back in her corner and turned upon him the accusing eyes of a child that has been cruelly wounded; then her womanhood came to the rescue. It reasoned with her, told her that the time for pride had passed, for if she lost this man she lost all men forever. No longer could she say "my world" and think of parties, Bond street, tuxedos and the smartest restaurants; her world was here beside her, to win or lose.

When it came to describing her hours with MacCloster, she harped with supreme feminine intuition on a single fact. Again and again she gave him to understand that except for lugging her across his shoulder to the boat, MacCloster had not once so much as laid a finger on her. So careful was her narrative in its logical sequence of detail that it could not fail to carry conviction with it. Trevor gradually melted to the extent of filling his pipe and lighting it.

She told of her entering the court around the great case with MacCloster, of his discovery that a case of gin had arrived with his freight and of the oily change that had come to his voice. At this point in her story Trevor forgot to smoke. He clutched the hot bowl of his pipe in a grip that made his knuckles show white. She could feel him listening with his whole tense body. She hurried on to her climax; to the description of her strategy in removing the cleats and of MacCloster's terrifying attack. She even repeated some of his words. "He said, 'Waiting up for me, dearie?' and then I drove the nails into his hands and when he snatched them back, I hit him across the head and he fell. And then I heard you coming. I thought I had gone mad, that it was not with my ears but with the longing of my heart that I heard you coming. When I called and you answered I forgot that I had ever known fear; I knew that I was safe, forever and forever."

"Good girl," said Trevor huskily. He reached out and patted her hand but his thoughts were not altogether with her; they were lingering behind, hovering over the scene of her elemental battle with MacCloster as though he sought to steep his soul in that recollection in an effort to drown for once and all time the memory of twenty-four hours of torturing jealousy.

"So you're not jealous any more, are you?" pleaded Andrea.

"Jealous!" exclaimed eternal man impatiently. "Who said anything about jealousy? It's one rotten quality that, thank God, I don't possess. It's the cancer-worm that eats into the heart of trust. A man that feels it, demands the woman he loves."

"How extraordinary," murmured Andrea, "because I don't believe any woman in the world ever really loves an unjealous man. Of course," she added thoughtfully, "we suppose jealousy—but that doesn't keep us from adoring it in just one man."

Trevor was silent for a long time, pondering on this absurd and unanswerable argument. The sun arose and set to work at once to overheat the world; Andrea grew warm and then drew away. She began to nod and her body to incline. If it had drooped in a direction directly opposite to that in which it actually did, she would have fallen into the river; as it happened, she fell against Trevor's shoulder. He first assured himself that she was really asleep and then slipped his arm around her and held her close.

He forgot his burns and bruises, his fatigue and hunger; he looked back with exultant pride upon the maelstrom of emotions that he had ridden to reach this haven of his soul's peace. The feverish haste with which he had dug out the airplane and patched it up, the white rage in which he had hurried himself with it into the air, the absolute and marvelous determination of the steady, unwavering flight that had carried him straight to MacCloster's crash, all became emblems to him of the power of that which is within us to rise eternally to superhuman heights on the wings of a little love.

He glanced downward at the fair head pressed so close to his shoulder that the wide brim of his helmet shaded it as well as his own and let his eyes follow along the curled-up length of Andrea's figure. She seemed very small, very young, infinitely poignant. For the first time in their intercourse he consciously remembered who she was and all his bravado in the face of false values, all his logical indifference to established forms, fell from him. He trembled for the things he had done to, the murder he had coolly committed on the person of the Honorable Andrea Pellori!

She had said that she knew herself safe with him forever and forever and while he recognized the gentle mood that had so overburdened her tongue, he felt now an aching within him to guard, not the Honorable Andrea Pellori, but this much dearer creature of his own making, from the harming touch of tongues as well as hands.

He threw up his head as though to a revived and ennobled determination that was above fear and murmured a confirmation of the creed that had been born, full-fledged, from her lips. "Whether you want me or mock me, the die is forever cast; your truth and your untruth, your weakness and your strength, purity or taint; I shall take you all and taking you, take only myself; for love is an indivisible, an integral possession!"

CHAPTER XIII.

Andrea did not awake until Trevor withdrew his arm, which was when they were already in sight of their home landing.

By the time she reached the camp she was in no mood to welcome the astonished sight of three white men calmly taking a sleaz in Trevor's most comfortable chairs, their helmets and dolmans tossed aside and their short-sleeved undershirts unbuttoned at the neck. The only thing to be discerned in their favor was that they were all freshly shaven. It did not cheer her to see that upon catching sight of them, Trevor's face cleared.

"Who are the interlopers?" she asked shortly.

His eyebrows went up. "Interlopers, Andrea Pellori?" he asked with a smile. Then his face turned grim. "Will you do what I ask this time?" he inquired.

She stifled the feeling of rebellion that immediately rose in her at this recurrence of his fighting voice. "Yes," she said meekly.

"Please slip quietly to your room, have your tea and bath alone and dress in your smartest khaki outfit, leggings and all. When you have done that, please wait till I come."

Andrea could not resist a single shot. "Yes," she said demurely. "Just for a change I'll go and have my tea—and bath—alone."

Trevor ignored the hit. "Good girl," he said, his attention already swerving to his snoring guests. "And you won't tell me who they are?" asked Andrea. "Or don't you know?"

He fixed her with a meaning stare. "Certainly I know," he said, "for I went for them at considerable expense and trouble. Also I pay as well tell you now that one of them at least is a priest of the Church of England."

A flame of color stained Andrea's cheeks and her eyes went suddenly wide. Things were moving and only by a tremendous effort did she catch up with them. "Great expense," she murmured. "Something under three pounds, I suppose."

Undoubtedly a hit but also ignored by Trevor, whose mind was intent on far more weighty affairs. He shrugged his shoulders and pointed to her but with his chin, an expressive but most reprehensible adoption of native habit. She took the hint, nevertheless, and as she started he said, "Please remember. Please don't show yourself this time, will you?" The tone of his voice was a great improvement on all that had gone before. She threw him a smile over her shoulder and proceeded to cross to her hut on exaggerated tiptoe.

Trevor did not bother to awake his guests; he went straight to his room and gave himself up to a long-drawn-out orgy of tea; hot bath, sharp razor and clean clothes; to say nothing of the cleansing, anointing and bandaging of his many burns and wounds. When, hours later, he had completed the complex operation to the best of his ability if not entirely to the satisfaction of his vanity he opened his door a crack and looked out. The three guests were awake and reading. They seemed quite comfortable as well as quite at home, a bottle and three glasses having magically accreced to the table in their midst. It seemed a shame to disturb them at that particular moment and Trevor decided not to. He closed the door, barred it, disconnected the alarm gong and left his room by the covered way.

It is a matter of record that while this same inclosed alley was certainly not over thirty paces in length and could have been traversed in half as many seconds, it took him exactly thirty minutes to get from his end of the passage to Andrea's door—and knock. She opened to him at once and the sight of her made him tremble.

Never before had she seemed so altogether adequate to every demand of life. He looked upon her lovely tumbled hair that was still laughing from its bath; on her deep blue eyes, each cuddling a devil of mischief; on her adorable nose, always smiling for trouble; on her red lips, ready to call a man on; and on her hard sets, backed by sturdy youth, still more ready to keep him off, and felt the bones of his determination turning to water. She stood with her feet slightly astraddled, her hands stuffed in the side-pockets of her khaki jacket—a pose often assumed by professional fighters. He glanced nervously about her room and deciding that he would feel more at home and perhaps more secure in his own, asked her to precede him there. She consented and upon arrival made naturally for the couch.

"I think," said Trevor hastily, "you had better sit here—for a change." He drew out a straight-backed chair by the table. She cast him an inquiring glance but sat down without remark. Trevor did not sit; he paced up and down before her till she could stand it no longer; then she said brightly, "Now I know how our old cat used to feel, watching the canary swing on his trapeze."

"Extraordinary inverted coincidence," remarked Trevor. "I feel like the canary."

Both pondered on this rejoinder for some moments; there was something about it that reminded Andrea of "first blood." Finally she realized that it was her turn to speak. "I'll let that go for the present," she said with dignity. "Suppose you say what you've got to say."

The man stood squarely before her. "All right," he said. For a second he hung on the verge of further speech as though he were counting "one, two, three—go;" then he plunged: "Will you marry me?"

Here was a game that Andrea knew from its infancy to its old age. The first move on its checker board was as fixed as it was easy. "No," she said promptly and automatically and glanced up with a half-bored look that said: "Your turn to play."

That look was destined to die a sudden death. "Thank God!" said Trevor, fervently, apparently looking into space, but in reality taking in her galvanic start through the corner of one eye. "You see," he continued. "I've come to my senses and begun to get your point of view. It's still true that you asked me to bring you, but it's no less true that you thought you were just going up for a morning breeze, while I knew that once you were in that flying machine it was good-bye to a world. If I'd told you that, of course you wouldn't have come."

"Of course," said Andrea, faintly. Her heart was aching and inside of her its pulse was drumming an old familiar childish refrain of helpless rage. "He didn't play fair! He didn't play fair!"

"Under the circumstances and acknowledging my fault, I could do no less than offer to marry you in spite of your high station in life. I felt that you might think yourself compromised to such an extent that even my humble person would prove some sort of an amend. It's a great relief to know that I overestimated the situation all around."

Andrea realized that the false start had thrown her out of the normal stride of the game and she was ready to clutch at a straw. "Why, I hadn't thought of that—I mean, I'd forgotten it somehow—but I do feel compromised awfully." She looked hopefully at his set face.

Ruthless Souvenir Hunters.

It would seem almost incredible were it not vouched for on good authority that women touring the battlefields have been seen removing steel helmets from the rude crosses marking the lonely graves of soldiers, and that parties of tourists have been met boasting of their trophies. It must be taken as another proof that there is no law of decency governing the tourist who is also a confirmed souvenir hunter. In these people there is the true embodiment of Jekyll and Hyde—at home and in their ordinary conduct they may be excellent citizens, with at least the ordinary standard of public and private decency; when they are souvenir hunting they are entirely different people.

Just Now.

"Pa, what's an optimist?" "He is a dealer, my son, who has a large stock of what people want very much, and who thinks that the high cost of living might be very much worse."

Conditions Far from Settled Below the Border

(By H. S. HANNER)

He who sees hope in the latest Mexican rumpus, is indeed an incurable optimist. All that has been accomplished in the latest civil strife there is, is the murder of Carranza, if that indeed be an accomplishment, and the destruction of what slight form of Government existed. Carranza's downfall was inevitable.

Despite the refusal of the President of the United States to take account of his weakness and insist upon more stable Government, Carranza was destined to fall; from the first. The murdered executive lacked character, poise, sincerity, everything that might be expected to inhere in a real leader.

He did not even possess a dictator's will, the one thing that could have made his rule a satisfactory expedient. Now that he is out of the way the outlook is no brighter.

Oregon is a patent rascal. The crew that runs with him are of no better stuff. Where is there any hope for Mexico, in Mexico? When, for that matter has there ever been? There is but one answer to the problem, the answer that this administration and the preceding one, has stubbornly refused to read—intervention. How much longer can we put it off?

The many groups of revolutionists in Mexico are rekindling their fires in various parts of the republic to combat the toe hold of Oregon. These groups are recognized as a possible nucleus for the organization of a new revolt, and their actions are high up on the Thermometer of thought that they are not in accord with the new regime, thus spelling more trouble in Mexico.

It was referred to the banking committee.

Important to all Women Readers of this Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it.

Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased.

You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition.

Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be dependent; it makes any one so.

But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine, will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive sample size bottle by Parcel Post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Adv.

SUBSIST MAINLY ON DATES

Fruit is the Mainstay of Life to the People of Egypt, Arabia, and Persia.

East is west so far as the palm is concerned, Hawaii, California, Florida, Cuba, Egypt, Palestine, they all know their palms. Of all varieties none is so dear to the heart as the date palm. We all know its delicious fruit, but few can conceive the desert dweller's love for it, for he only can appreciate its grateful shade in the sweltering desert heat.

The date palm is always a sure sign of water, for to thrive it must have this. Rising often to a height of 100 feet, it is a haven of refuge to the parched traveler, who knows that to dig near it is to find water. Then there is the delicious fruit to be considered, too. Many of us know the date as a luxury—sometimes stuffed or otherwise, but a considerable part of the inhabitants of Egypt, of Arabia and Persia, subsist almost entirely on its fruit. They boast also of its medicinal virtues. Then the camels feed upon the date stone.

METHOD IN THAT MADNESS

Why Dad Could Not Bring Himself to Make Serious Objections to Gerald's Smoking.

"Henry!" Mrs. Brown's voice was stern. Mr. Brown recognized the signs of a coming storm, so he prepared to listen.

"I saw Gerald—our boy—smoking a pipe today—actually, a dirty, smelly pipe!" the poor woman ended with a sob.

"Well, what can we do?" exclaimed her husband. "The boy's seventeen, and has two dollars a week pocket money. I don't see—"

"You mean to say that you will allow him to smoke? Why, it's sheer madness!"

Henry nodded. Then, after witnessing the unique spectacle of his wife speechless for once, he strolled off into the garden, where he came across Gerald in a corner with the pipe going full blast.

"Hello, my boy!" he cried. "This is something new, isn't it? Er—by the way, I've left my pouch in the house. Can you give me a fill?"

Then he, as he walked away puffing happily, murmured:

"It may be madness, but there's method in it. I can see Gerald's pouch being quite a money saver to poor old dad."—Rehoboth Sunday Herald.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by E. J.
 Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system.
 They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars

Shifting the Service

The high water along the A.
 T. & S. F. right-of-way has compelled the management to make arrangements with the E. P. &
 S. W. so as to run their trains over this road in order to reach
 El Paso. The Carrizozo Eating House has been taking care of passengers in whose behalf the company wired ahead for meals and accommodations. The guests of Mrs. Gurney with one accord praised the management for the hospitality extended, and laid emphasis on the fact that the fare, besides being of the very best,
 was more reasonable in price than at any place they had visited. This shows that parties entering Carrizozo need have no fear of profiteering within our borders.

Must Be Met, Says Taxpayers' Association

Santa Fe, N. M., June 3.—With the approval of the proposed increases in salaries of school teachers for the coming year, sentiment in favor of the increase in New Mexico has been made unanimous. The Taxpayers' Association is the most conservative organization in the state of New Mexico. In a statement issued this week it estimates the increase in school operating cost due to necessary raises in teachers' salaries, at $647,000 for the coming year. This, it says must be met because of the school crisis and the necessity of maintaining efficient schools. Economies in other departments of state and county government are urged by the association as a means of making up the difference in general operating cost of the state and counties.

Ford
THE UNIVERSAL CAR

The Ford car can well be called the "people's car," because there are more than 3,000,000 of them in daily operation. That is about four to one of the nearest follower in the motor car industry. This would not be so if the Ford car had not for sixteen years proven its superiority in service, in durability, and in the low cost for operation and maintenance; this would not be so if the Ford car was not so easy to understand, so simple in construction that anybody and everybody can safely drive it. MEXICO LEVIES TAXES

HEAVY EXPORT TAX PLACED ON OIL BY TAMPICO DE FACTO GOVERNOR.

Western Newspaper Union News Service.
Houston, Texas, May 26.—May oil export taxes to the amount of about 1,500,000 pesos were paid in advance to the Mexican revolutionary government at Tampico upon the request of Manuel Pelaez, de facto governor of Tampico.
The payments were made under protest but with the American consul's assurance that the Washington government would see that such an advance collection would not be made again, according to the information. The request of Pelaez was reported as follows:
"In view of the abnormal situation and urgent need of funds for the sustenance of the military forces operating in this region, Cuartel General under my command has considered it convenient to decree an advance payment on account of May export taxes on oil due May 1, 1920."

Washington.—Advices from Mexico indicate that the revolutionists have much to do before a stable government can be established. Military leaders are reported in various parts of the republic with small forces of men under arms, either still loyal to the Carranza regime or for other reasons hostile to the de facto government. These groups are recognized by Mexican observers here to be possible nuclei for the organizations of new revolts. Representatives of the new government, however, minimize their importance, asserting part of them already are negotiating for terms, while others are on the defensive.

Francisco Villa, whose force of men is variously estimated at from a few hundred to several thousand, is reckoned the most important of the independent leaders.

Gen. Candido Aguilar, the late President's son-in-law, who during the past five years has become a military leader of the first order in Mexico, still is in the field. He was last reported at Jalapilla, on the outskirts of Orizaba, with 300 men. General Bertani, who brought the accusation of conspiracy against Cejudo in connection with which Obregon was ordered to Mexico City for the court martial and who acknowledges Aguilar as his chief is at Zongolica with 150 men, according to the latest reports. With Bertani is General Tello, also one of Aguilar's subordinates, with a force of 150 men.

Gen. Alfonso Cabrera has set up the state government of Puebla at San Miguel-Tefango, and there has been nothing in the news to indicate that he is not functioning as governor with troops at his command. The size of his force was reported at 2,000, all Puebla Indians. Luis Cabrera, known to be one of the most astute politicians of Mexico today, may join his brother—if he has not already done so—and aid in the struggle against the Obregon-Gonzalez de facto government.

Wood Alcohol Kills Two.
Tacoma, Wash.—Wood alcohol poisoning was responsible for two deaths here, according to the police. Charles Dick, an Indian, was found dead in a chair in a hotel. Arthur Lucey, a longshoreman, was discovered dead in his room. Investigation disclosed both men had been drinking what appeared to be wood alcohol, the police say.

STOMACH GOOD AS NEW. FOUR DOCTORS GAVE HER UP

Mrs. Hendricks, Bedfast Five Months, Was Able to Work in Two Weeks.

"I was sick last winter for five months with stomach and bowel trouble. Could not turn myself in bed without help. I was under the care of four doctors, and they gave me up. Then Mr. Mills, the druggist, persuaded my husband to try a bottle of Milks Emulsion. I had only taken it two days until I was sitting up in bed, and in two weeks I was doing my own work. When I began taking it I weighed only 70 pounds; now I weigh 120 pounds."—Mrs. Mary Hendricks, 300 Litchfield Road, Owensboro, Ky.
Thousands of people who have suffered for years from stomach and bowel troubles have found relief almost from the first dose of Milks Emulsion. And it is real, lasting benefit.
Milks Emulsion is a pleasant, nutritive food and a corrective medicine. It restores healthy, natural bowel action, doing away with all need of pills and physics. It promotes appetite and quickly puts the digestive organs in shape to assimilate food. As a builder of flesh and strength Milks Emulsion is strongly recommended to those whose sickness has weakened and is a powerful aid in resisting and repairing the effects of wasting diseases. Chronic stomach trouble and constipation are promptly relieved—usually in one day.
This is the only solid emulsion made, and so palatable that it is eaten with a spoon like ice cream.
No matter how severe your case, you are urged to try Milks Emulsion under this guarantee—Take six bottles home with you, use it according to directions, and if not satisfied with the results your money will be promptly refunded. Price 50c and $1.20 per bottle. The Milks Emulsion Co., Terre Haute, Ind. Sold by druggists everywhere.—Adv.

LIFT OFF CORNS!

Doesn't hurt a bit and costs only a few cents

Magic! Just drop a little Freezone on that touchy corn. Instantly it stops aching, then you lift the corn off with the fingers! Truly! No humbug!

Not Forgotten.
It is rather hard to decide which is the more maddening in a certain New Jersey town not far from New York, the taxi service or the telephone. One day, having waited almost up to train time for the taxi he had ordered, a prominent townsman picked up the telephone in a great rage and asked for the number of the dilatory taxi man.
"Hello, this is Mr. Henry," he said loudly and sternly, when he got his connection. "Have you forgotten me?"
"No, I haven't forgotten you, Mr. Henry," said the mild feminine voice at the other end of the wire. "This is Mrs. Brown."

Advantages of Our State School

State College, June 1.—Prof. A. F. Barnes, since 1914 Dean of the Engineering School of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, has resigned this position to work with Barblebough & Whitson, Architects, of El Paso. Dean Barnes' untiring efforts have made the Engineering Department of the State College the leading school of its kind in the Southwest. Professor R. W. Goddard of the Electrical Engineering Department succeeds as dean of the school. Professor Goddard is widely known among the engineers of this and neighboring states as a progressive and energetic engineer.

The technical schools of the country cannot meet the demand for trained men. Every member of this year's graduating class of the Engineering School of the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts has an excellent position to enter immediately upon graduation. Ernest Carson of Hope, N. M., and Richard Worcester of El Paso will accept positions with the General Electric Company of Schenectady, N. Y. John Redd of Canutillo, Texas, will probably take a position with the Electric and Manufacturing Co., of Pittsburgh, Milton Blackwell of Mogollon and Roy Bean of Las Cruces are to work with the Henry L. Taos County Wool Growers' Meeting

A telegram has been received from Mr. C. A. McNabb, Field Agent in Marketing, stating that the proposed meeting here shall take place from May 22 to June 18.

The meeting is called for the purpose of considering the matter of pooling wool for sale by the Wool Growers' Co-operative Marketing Association, recently organized, and for the further purpose of organizing a local unit of that association.

The future of the Marketing Association is already assured with more than three million lbs. of wool of the 1920 clip now signed up and the campaign has just begun.

The Association has now arranged for the handling of the 1920 clip and the advance of 75 per cent of the market value of the wool to be immediately available when wool is loaded for shipment, with interest at 7 per cent.

In Lincoln and Union counties some sheepmen have sold their wool for 55c a pound. Remember that in unity lies strength.—Taos Valley News.

The Just Judge

In his charge to the Grand Jury at the opening of District Court last week, Judge Mechem laid especial emphasis on two points of law. The first was what is commonly called "Gun Toting" and the Judge made it plain that there was not only no law allowing the carrying of guns, but no necessity for such acts. The other thing to which the judge called particular attention of the grand jurors was the investigation of any charges which the parents had failed or neglected to send children to school—commonly known as violation of Compulsory School Act. In both of these the court has the backing of the citizens generally and probably the finding of a few true bills in both such instances would have a good effect in future obedience to the law.—Ex.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

OF MARY GRAHAM BONNER

MR. AND MRS. MALLARD.

"You're a handsome fellow," said Mrs. Mallard Duck, "with your green back and your orange legs and brown eyes and purple touches upon the wings."

"I think you're a dear, neat, pretty Mrs. Mallard Duck," said her mate, "with your brownish frock and its white edges. You're very much like Cousin Black Duck but you're lighter and you're far more handsome."

"I don't mean that at all," Mr. Mallard Duck corrected himself. "I mean they-become you. They make you look so neat and nice and so handsome."

"I'm immensely flattered," said Mrs. Mallard Duck. "Do you know," said Mr. Mallard Duck, "I am giving a dinner this evening. I do hope you will receive my guests for me."

"Where are you going to have it, by the meadows where we can find some grain or near the water?" "I will have it near the water for there are some delicious mollusks about."

Mollusks are sea food—a kind of sea animal in a hard shell. "That sounds very nice, Mr. Mallard," said Mrs. Mallard, "and I will be delighted to receive the guests."

They began to send out more invitations, for Mr. Mallard had just found that there would be enough for quite a few more and they called out in their quacking voices which sound very twangy and as though they were talking through their beaks—or as people would say—through their noses, bidding the guests come to the dinner.

"Nice delicacies and the best of everything," said Mr. Mallard Duck. In fact, they called so loudly that all the guests who had been invited before came hurrying along thinking that the dinner hour had been set earlier than they had last been told and as they didn't want to miss anything they wanted to be in plenty of time.

In truth they were ahead of time. And all of those who had just been invited came hurrying along. Everyone came rushing to the party. They had a beautiful time and ate their mollusks in the shallow water near at hand.

The Mr. Mallard Ducks talked about some of their relatives who had lately been taken to the zoo to be shown off as beautiful ducks.

They also said that, sad to relate some of their relatives had gone to be the dinners for people. They said it was one thing to give a dinner party and another to be the food at the dinner. The Mrs. Mallard Ducks talked of the nests they had built in the spring, all lined with soft feathers with lovely grass to make the home so soft and comfy. And they talked of the grassy places near the water where they had hidden their nests and of the eight and nine little eggs they laid, dear, beautiful olive green eggs.

GOT CHARACTERS MIXED UP According to English Actor, History is Not a Strong Point With Theatergoers.

The late H. B. Irving once told in Philadelphia a story about his father's performance of Sardou's "Robespierre." He said: "Two dear old ladies sat in their stalls at the Lyceum, waiting for 'Robespierre' to begin. 'By the way, who was Robespierre?' said the first old lady. 'Why, don't you know?' said the second old lady. 'He's the man who was murdered in his bath by Marie Corelli.' 'Oh, no, my dear!' said the first old lady. 'That can't be right, for Marie Corelli is still alive. I remember who it was, now. It was Charlotte Bronte.' Then, at the end of the story Mr. Irving added: 'I once told this anecdote to a duchess. When I finished the duchess gave a kind of puzzled laugh and said: 'Poor Shakespeare!'

Florida's Shell Mounds Believed to Date Back to Before Beginning of Christian Era.

Florida's shell mounds, which are found in different portions of the state, are unquestionably of human construction, and were probably built by some race of people who inhabited the country about the beginning of the Christian era. These mounds were found overgrown with herbage and forest as long ago as when the first red man set foot in Florida, and the fact that the deposit of earth above them was sufficient to give place to the root of trees proved their great age.

There have been found in all these mounds pieces of pottery imbedded in the shell conglomerate, as well as articles made of shell and bone, rude stone implements and many bones of fish and animals, such as deer, terrapin, rabbits, alligators and others. There are in the entire state about forty mounds, the most important of which are those of King Phillip's town, near the outlet of Lake Harney, which are 450 feet long, from 100 to 150 feet broad, and with an average height of eight feet.
