DEATH OF EUGENE KEMPENISH

Considerable excitement was caused in the northern part of the state the latter part of last week by the death under suspicious circumstances of Eugene Kempenish, one of the members of the state highway board.

GOVERNOR URGES AID FOR GUARDSMEN FOR CAMP ATTENDANCE

Santa Fe, N. M., Oct. 8.—An appeal to all the citizens of New Mexico to assist the members of the national guard to attend the encampment at Fort Bliss has been issued by Governor Morrill C. Blocher.

CHILD'S FOOT CATCHES IN TRACK AND LOCOMOTIVE THUNDERS DOWN UPON HER AND CUTS OFF BOTH LEGS

Brush, Colo., Oct. 7.—Three-year-old Dora Hollman, daughter of Philip Hollman, a farmer living five miles northwest of Brush, tried to cross the Union Pacific railroad track near her home in front of a fast moving freight train Thursday afternoon.

AMERICAN SO DRY HE WROTE FOR DRINK

A man rushed into a wet goods place in Juarez recently after a quick trip across the Mexican border and made for the bar. He pulled out a sheet of paper and a pencil and wrote "Give me a drink of whiskey."

WHO REMEMBERS

"And Casey he walked with a Straw-herry Blossom, while the band play away."

OIL LEASE MONEY FOR SCHOOLS

Santa Fe, N. M., Oct. 8.—Thirty-nine national and state banks and trust companies of New Mexico were drawn upon by State Land Commissioner Nelson A. Field, for the total amount of $286,685.89, which has been remitted to the state treasury and apportioned among the several funds which are the beneficiaries of the federal land grants.

CARRIZOZO SCHOOL NOTES

Visitors' Day, the first Wednesday of October, was a success, as was evidenced by the number of parents present.

Wednesday, October 12, was Columbus Day and was observed by the schools of Carrizozo in a very appropriate way.

The Boy Scouts met October 6, in the assembly room. One new member was elected to membership and nine who had been recently received, were initiated.

The presentation of the beautiful bas relief, "The Spirit of '76," given to the High School by the class of 1921, occurred October 5.

Supt. Cole met the high school teachers last Tuesday. The high school literary society was especially discussed, and the faculty given supervisory work as follows:

Mr. Casier, Current Events and General Supervision; Miss Fordson, The School Paper; Miss Layet, Debates; Miss Cowan, Spanish Dramatics; Dr. E. E. Cole, Music and Scientific.

On four days of last week the superintendent visited the seventh and eighth grades in the high school to see the yellow tie to be used in "rooftops."

For the Carrizozo basketball team in their games with Captain on Field Day. Did you hear them yell? The girls' team of the Carrizozo high school defeated the Captain team 25 to 7; the boys' team of Captain defeated the boys' team of Carrizozo High School, 25 to 14.

FALL FESTIVAL AND FIELD DAY NOTES

Notwithstanding the fact that Friday, the first day of the big festival met with reverses on account of a violent wind storm, the second day dawned bright and calm, putting new life and enthusiasm into the committees and patrons in general.

The first, a basket ball game between the Captain and Carrizozo girls' teams, followed by a game between the boys' teams of the same towns, the results and particulars of which will be found in Dr. E. E. Cole's School Notes, were highly interesting as the neighboring teams fought in friendly competition for supremacy. The horse racing, boxing which ended with a real "hum dinger" between "Red" Woodson of Washington and Jess Kennedy of Carrizozo which resulted in a decision in favor of Woodson. Neighboring towns were well represented at the festival in fact, as the old saying goes, "Everyone and their cousins were here."

Some small debts and credits may yet come in and change the above report, but the change will be very slight and will not vary much either way.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION TO MEET IN SANTA FE

The 1921 convention of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of New Mexico will be held in Santa Fe October 14, 15 and 16, according to an official call to the various local chapters, sent out by Mrs. Anna Wilder Franquist, state president and Mrs.

Minna E. Byrd, state secretary.

The call outlines the work which the organization has before it in New Mexico. "We must consider" says the call, the need of our services in finding and exposing lawbreakers, whether ordinary bootleggers, people of prestige or officers of the law who wink at crime and ridicule the laws that they have taken oath to uphold.

TULAROSA POULTRY ASSOCIATION

The Tularosa Poultry Association, organized last March is a fair illustration of what such an organization can do in a small community where the membership gets after results.

The association is composed of about 15 members, and Carl Haynes is the president. The association is now getting 10 cents per dozen for eggs more than non members are getting on the local markets.

On next Tuesday County Agent J. W. West will be at the home of the several members of the Tularosa Poultry Association to demonstrate poultry culling and how to select the legs that are layors and the proper brooding stock.

Salvation Army

The Lincoln County Advisory Board of the Salvation Army is a branch of that great International Organization for practical Christian work, that has for the past forty years, given assistance to so many unfortunate people throughout the world.

The local Advisory Board was organized for the purpose of carrying this work into every home in Lincoln County where the need exists. No community is too remote for us to reach and every case reported will be promptly investigated. If you know of a needy person or family in your neighborhood, please notify the Board at once. Address, Salvation Army, Carrizozo, N. M.

NO DANGER OF MIXUP BETWEEN U. S. AND JAPAN

Tokio, Oct. 7.—Talk of trouble between the United States and Japan was deprecated by Leonard Wood, in an address before the American-Japan Society here last night. He insisted there was no reason why Japan and America should be unable to arrive at an understanding on all points upon which there is the slightest disagreement, and declared that there were no misunderstandings between the two countries.

CALIFORNIA GRAPES DO WELL HERE

State College, N. M., Oct. 6.—The European or so-called California grape does well in the lower and warmer parts of the state, but it is not quite as hardy to cold weather as the native varieties, and occasionally the whole vine or stump may be winter killed, especially during a very dry and severe winter. Consequently, the grower should take precautions against loss from this source.

The distance between the plants may vary from 8 by 8 to 10 by 10 feet. If the former distance is used about 650 vines may be planted to the acre. If the latter distance is used there will be about 437 plants. The more common distance to plant is 8 by 8 feet.

While the grape grows on a great variety of soils, the best results, everything considered, will be obtained from the lighter soils. Therefore, wherever possible, a sandy loam to a loam that should be selected. The heavy adobe soils should be avoided if possible. Such soils are hard to work, particularly in the winter when the European vines are being covered up.

The European grape is trained on what is known as the stump system, and the pruning is a comparatively easy operation. After the vines come into bearing better crops, other things remaining equal, may be produced by pruning back to two, and not over three buds on each cane. As a rule, the grape is later in starting to grow in the spring than the other fruits, and since the crop is produced from the shoots grown from the base buds of last year's canes, an effort should be made to retard the growth of the base buds as late as possible.

This seems to be done to some degree by delaying the pruning of the grape as late as possible in the spring. However, care should be taken not to delay the pruning after the base buds have started to grow.

After the first season's growth it is desirable, though not absolutely necessary, to tie the vines of the European grape to stakes, which are driven down in the soil close to the plant. The vines are kept tied to the stakes until the stump is well formed. The stakes may be from two and a half to three feet in length and from two to three and a half inches in diameter.

Many varieties of the European grapes grow well, but care should be taken not to plant too many varieties in a vineyard, especially if it is going to be a commercial plantation. Some of the varieties that might be considered by the prospective grower are Thompson Seedling, Black Hamburg, Gormon and Flame Tokay. Among the popular varieties of the native grapes are Moor's Early, Delaware, Niagara and Concord. The Concord is quite susceptible to the disease known as the yellow leaf disease of the native grape. The European grape has very few insect or plant pests.

The grape leaf hopper is occasionally troublesome. The honey bee has been noted during late years to cause more or less damage to the ripening fruit on the vine by breaking through the skin and sucking the juice out of the berry.

BABE COMES BACK

Synopsis.—Young Carlyle Wilburton Dale, or "Bill Dale," son of a wealthy coal operator, John K. Dale, arrives at the Halfway Switch, in eastern Tennessee, abandoning a life of idle ease and incidentally a bride, Patricia Claverling, at the altar—determined to make his own way in life. He meets "Babe" Littleford, typical mountaineer girl. Heck, a character of the hills, takes him to John Moreland's home. Moreland is chief of his "clan," which has an old feud with the Littlefords. He tells Dale of the killing of his brother, David Moreland, years ago, owner of rich coal deposits, by a man named Carlyle. Dale believes the man was his father. Dale makes his home with the Morelands. "Talking with Babe, Dale is ordered by "Black Adam" Hill to leave "his girl" alone. Dale whips the bully. He arranges with John Moreland to develop the coal deposits. Ben Littleford sends a challenge to John Moreland to meet him with his followers at the hills. Moreland agrees. The two clans line up for battle. Babe, in an effort to stop the fighting, crosses to the Moreland side of the river, and is accidentally shot by her father and seriously wounded. The fight stops and Babe is taken to the city. Doctors announce she is not seriously hurt. Dale meets an old friend, Bobby McLaurin, who has married Patricia Claverling. Dale's father admits he killed David Moreland and offers him funds to develop the coal. Dale declines and gets funds elsewhere. He realizes he loves Babe, who goes to live with Patricia to be educated. Henderson Goff, a coal man, appears on the scene. Dale has an exciting encounter with Goff, and is saved by "By Heck." He tries to end the feud.

Came a silence that was heavy. Each was depending upon the other to make the advance. The two clansmen stared at each other more and more sharply, and soon shadows of bitterness began to creep into their eyes. Then Major Bradley, guest of Ben Littleford, strode into the room with a patrician and soldierly air, and he understood the situation perfectly. "Gentlemen," he urged, "shake hands. Be friends."

The Two Clansmen Stared at Each Other More and More Sharply, yet very thorough. He went to his feet. John Moreland, too, arose. "We'd as well go, hadn't we?" Dale clipped, and there was disgust in his voice. "I reckon we had," agreed Moreland. They walked out of the cabin, hearing Major Bradley and Ben Littleford gazing silently after them. At the gate Dale caught John Moreland's sleeve and halted him. "Why on earth," he demanded, "didn't you make the break?" "Bill Dale, I went into his house!" Dale put his hands on one of the weatherbeaten gateposts and looked over to where a bright star burned like a beacon light above the pine-fringed crest of David Moreland's mountains. He continued to look at the star, his face gray, until it glimmered. Then he began to blanch himself; he was the hope of a benighted people, and he had foolishly lost his per at a crucial moment. He wondered whether it was yet too late, and turned his eyes toward his silent companion. He saw that John Moreland was looking toward the beacon star. The voice of Ben Littleford came to them plainly because the night was so very still; he was reading from the Gospel according to Saint Mark, preparatory to his bedtime prayer. The two at the gate listened intently. The way in which the illiterate giant stumbled over the simplest words was pitiful. The hillman closed the Good Book and placed it on the table beside him. There was the low shuffling of feet as half a dozen persons knelt at their chairs. The prayer, which followed was much like John Moreland's own bedtime prayer; it had in it less of supplication than of thanksgiving. And in the tall of it there were words that were like bullets to the mountaineer at the gate. "Bless the good man who is with us here tonight, and all o' our folks, and all o' our friends, and all o' our enemies—and specially the Morelands, Aymen!" Dale's hand came down hard on John Moreland's shoulder. "You told me he wouldn't do it!" The old clan leader hung his head, like a man suddenly broken. He replied not a word; he seemed amazed into speechlessness. He had been wrong in his estimate of Ben Littleford; he had lied about a man who had just asked the good Almighty to bless him. John Moreland choked a little and started toward the cabin. He walked as though half blind across the porch, and entered without knocking, and went in to Ben Littleford with his right hand outstretched. "Let's begin anew," he said huskily. "Let's be friends, yore people and my people, you and me!" Littleford arose and groped for his old-time enemy's hand, found it and grasped it in both his own. "You're better 'an I am, John Moreland," he said—"you're a d-d sight better 'an I am."

When Dale left them, they were talking over a great bear-hunt that they had taken together a score of years before. The moon, full and as bright as new gold, had risen just under the beacon star when Bill Dale reached the doorstep of the cabin that was home to him. He faced about. The broad green valley lay very serene and very beautiful there in the mellow light. There was no sound save for the gentle murmuring of the crystal river. "You wonderful place," he said softly, then added: "My own country!"

CHAPTER X

The Barbarian Princess Goes Home. Miss Elizabeth Littleford beheld an interesting sight when she alighted from a northbound afternoon train at the Halfway Switch. Just below the long siding a shorter siding had been put in—the railway company had been hastened, no doubt, by the great influence of old Newton Wheatley—and from it had been unloaded a small geared locomotive, a dozen or so of little coal cars opening at the bottom, and miles of light steel rails with kegs of spikes for them. Out toward her home a crew of men worked like bees at the building of a trestle of round timbers that had been cut from the nearby woods; she at once recognized these men as Morelands and Littlefords, and she knew it meant peace! They didn't recognize her, because of the distance and the clothing she wore, and because they were too busy to pay any particular attention to her.

Farther, out toward Doe river another crew of men was at work clearing the way for the little narrow-gauge. She heard the sounds of the ax and the saw, and the hammer and the steel, and once there came to her ears the great dull roar of exploding dynamite as a cliff was blown clear of its foundations. Miss Elizabeth Littleford smiled happily. And she had not been happy for a long time. Patricia McLaurin, with whom she has been staying, had been kindness itself, but the mother of Bill Dale, her Bill Dale, had snubbed her—and besides the longing for the old home hills was riotous in her blood. So she had come back, run away at less than a moment's notice—as had Bill Dale before her, and now good it seemed to be at home! She would have gone to see the men, had it not been that she feared she would be a bother.

There was another interesting sight when she had reached the crest of David Moreland's mountain. In the upper end of the broad valley, midway between the "settlement" and the opening of the Moreland coal vein, two large buildings were well along in their course of construction.

She put down her bundle of clothing, sighed her eyes with her hand, and tried to find Bill Dale among the buildings. But the distance was too great; a map down there was but a mere speck. . . . Before she went on, she removed her shoes and stockings. It was hard for Babe Littleford to become accustomed to wearing useless shoes and stockings in warm weather! When she had reached the foot of the mountain, she didn't take the by-path her people had been wont to use in order that they might avoid contact with the Morelands. There was no need of avoiding contact with the Morelands now, thank goodness! Then a voice hailed her from the laurels out at her right, the voice she loved better than any other—"Hello, Miss Littleford!"

Babe stopped and faced him, and she blushed furiously when she saw him. He was coming rapidly toward her with his hat in his hand, and his brown hair was ruffled and damp with perspiration. She saw that he was in boots and corduroys—the clothing of a timber-jack, and he looked bigger in them; about his waist there was a cartridge-belt, from which hung a big and dependable looking revolver in a leathern holster. "Hello, Mister Dale!" she mimicked. He shook her hand, then he dropped to a moss-covered log that lay beside the narrow trail.

"Sit down here beside me," he said; and he added: "I've been going hard all day, and I'm pretty tired." She let fall her bundle and her shoes and stockings, and obeyed. "Why did you come back, Babe?" he asked as though he were displeased. "Cause," she answered—and she corrected herself quickly, "I mean because."

"No reason whatever," smiled Dale. "Well," and her clear brown eyes looked at him squarely, "I come back because yore mother she said I would be a burden to Mis' McLaurin, that's why." "Mrs. McLaurin," said Dale; "not Mis' McLaurin." "A burden to Mrs. McLaurin, and I ain't a-goin' to be a burden to nobody!" vehemently. In a softer voice, she went on, "Mrs. McLaurin and her husband and her folks has done made up friendly, Bill Dale. Mrs. McLaurin's pap—I mean her father—he brung 'em a big lot o' silver things."

"Bill Dale, I had a big time! Everybody liked me but yore own ma—I mean yore mother. My goodness gracious—they dress awful fine, don't they? Why, silk ain't nothin'. But whar all o' their money comes from. I shore can't see. Say, I showed some o' Pat's friends how to dance our old hill dances, and the whole town was crazy about 'em when I left. Jimmy Fayne is awful good-lookin' and rich, ain't he, Bill? He liked me better'n any o' 'em. 'Less it was Pat herself. You know Jimmy, don't ye, Bill?" Dale nodded, frowned, and turned his sober gaze toward the toes of his high laced boots. Yes, he knew Jimmy Fayne, and he held him in contempt. The pampered son of a wealthy cotton speculator, weak, devoted to high nights, remarkably handsome to romantic and unsophisticated girls but not to men and women who had cut their wisdom-teeth—that was Jimmy Fayne.

Babe Littleford was speaking again: "I 'cided to come back here, Bill Dale, because I thought they might need me here as well as because I was afraid I would be a burden to Pat—I mean afraid I would be a burden to Pat. Seems like I can't talk proper at all! I've tried and tried, I've spent half o' my time jest a-tryin' to talk proper. Pat, she'd put down words I musn't say on a sheet o' paper, and I'd study 'em. Afeard, shore, pap, 'cause, ain't, haint—and all o' them. And she'd put down the right words with 'em so's I'd know. "Yore mother was the last to come to see me, Bill. 'So this,' she says to 'Pat, 'is the barbarian princess!' I didn't know what that meant, but I 'spect it's somethin' bad. I went into the house, because I didn't want to say anything, and her yore own mother. But I listened, and I heard her say the rest, and this is it: "What will you do when the in-innovation wears off, Patricia? she says. 'She'll be a burden to you, Patricia; you'll have a half-savage person tagging after you, like a lady bear!'"

"That's what it was she said, Bill Dale. . . . 'Em shore they'd need me here, and I ax ye this, Bill Dale: Are you sorry to see me come back?' "Perhaps they do need you," Dale slowly stripped the tiny leaves from a fern. "But that is not sufficient reason to warrant your staying here. Of course, I'm not sorry to see you, Babe. But you must go back to Patricia very soon. If you had been a burden to Patricia, she would have told you."

Babe put out a foot and idly rolled an acorn across the path with one bare big toe. "But I—I don't think I want to go back," she protested. "I'd rather stay here, a heap rather!" "But you must go back," declared Dale, "You really must!" Ben Littleford's daughter was silent. For a moment she absent-mindedly watched the playful antics of a little boomer squirrel on the side of a nearby hickory. Then she arose. "Look," she urged—it was one of the charming wiles of her—"Look at my new dress. Me and Pat made it, every stitch of it. Don't you think it's nice?"

"Sure, it's nice," Dale agreed. "But any dress looks nice on you, Babe. If only you'd stick with Mrs. McLaurin and—let her—educate you. You shouldn't have cared anything about what my mother said; my mother doesn't always see things in the true light. You'll go back, won't you?" She bent toward him and asked pointedly: "Bill Dale, what makes you so anxious for me to go?" "Because," readily, "I want you to have an education." "What makes you want me to have an education, Bill Dale?" "Because you'd be such a splendid woman, if you had an education." Babe Littleford pursued with child-like eagerness: "And what makes you want me to be such a splendid woman?" Dale lifted his gray eyes and answered her frankly: "Because I expect to marry you some day."

Babe Littleford flushed deeply. Her eyes were glad, filled with rejoicing. If he didn't love her now, at least just a weeny-teeny bit, he wouldn't be thinking of marrying her some day, certainly, and this conclusion made her happier than she had ever been in all her life before. She wished wildly that she could hug him with all her might—and she had a big notion to do it. "But what would he think of her?" Well, there would come a day, when she would surely hug him with all her might. She would simply break his blessed bones, almost. "Will you go to Patricia tomorrow?" he asked. She really believed that she ought to go. But the thought of leaving him smoke upward. "More of the game of bluff, perhaps," he suggested. "I'm inclined to think so," thoughtfully said Dale. "Well, we'll avoid trouble as long as we decently can; and when we can no longer get around it, we'll call it as much of the law as we can get, and meet it half-way, Eh, Hayes?" "Sure," nodded the mining expert. Dale was on his way to the new siding the following morning, when he met Henderson Goff. Again Dale was forcibly reminded of stories he had heard and read of Mississippi river steamboat gamblers of the long ago. Goff stepped out of the trail, smiled and spoke with apparent good humor. Dale passed him without a word. Then the shy coal man called out, "Ready to sell yet?" "The Moreland Coal company's manager haited and faced about with a frowning of his brows. "For a fair price, yes." "Just what would you call a fair price?" "Oh, somewhere between two and three hundred thousand," promptly. Goff sniffed, and the corners of his mouth came down. "You don't want much, you won't get it from me!" "I don't want it from you."

Dale turned and went on. He was sorry that he had stopped to talk with the fellow. That afternoon he again met Goff in the trail. The bare sight of the shy coal man made him very angry now, and his right hand fell upon the butt of the big revolver on his hip. Goff was about to sidestep in the laurels, when Dale caught him roughly by the arm. "See here," he said sharply, "you've about cut your little swath. We've had enough of you. You can't get this coal at any price, and the sooner you get yourself out of this country the better and safer it will be for you. To be plain, I'm pretty apt to thrash you the very next time I see you. Now move on!" Goff went off laughing wretchedly. "Oh, ah, right, Dale; go ahead and build the little road for me!" he said. Late that night every sleeper in the valley of the Doe was awakened by a great, rumbling explosion, which was followed almost immediately by another great, rumbling explosion. Before the reverberations had died away, Bill Dale had dressed himself and was standing on the vine-hung front porch, and he was only a few seconds ahead of John Moreland. Then there came the tearing sound of a heavy explosion miles to the eastward.

"Do ye know what it is?" inquired the mountaineer. "They've stolen our dynamite from the tobacco-barn, and blown up the office and supplies building and the company building; also they've blown up the big trestle near the siding." Dale answered. "At my guess, too," said Moreland. Within the next half hour Dale and Hayes, Major Bradley, and the men-folks of the Morelands and the Littlefords had gathered around the wreck of the two big, unfinished frame buildings. Dale blamed himself much for having left dynamite unguarded in the tobacco-barn—but nobody else blamed him for it. "It's time to let the law in," he said when he had viewed the jumbled mass of broken planks and timbers by the light of lanterns. He turned to staid Luke Moreland. "You get on my horse and ride to Cartersville for the sheriff. Tell him he can get the best posse in the world right here, if he needs one. It's the proper thing, isn't it, Major?" "Yes," said Major Bradley. "It's the proper thing. You've got a real grievance now: But I fancy Goff had nothing to do with this; he is shrewd enough to know that a thing like this would cook his goose. Goff has been playing a bluff game all along, you know. Some Balls or some Torreyas, perhaps a mixture of both, have done this without Goff's knowing anything about it. I'd have Sheriff Flowers arrest several of the Balls and several of the Torreyas, and try to scare them into turning state's evidence to save themselves."

The major finished in a low tone, because of the probability for eavesdroppers, and in this he was wise. "We'll do that," Dale decided. He faced Hayes, his right-hand man, and began to give orders like a veteran general manager. The men were to take their rifles with them to work in the morning, but they were to fire no shot unless it was in defense of life or property. In the morning every available wagon in the valley was to be sent to the little sawmill that was in operation ten miles toward the lowland for more building material. By Heck joined them then. He guessed just what had happened, plucked at Dale's sleeve and whispered: "Spoken I takes a sneak or two toward them lowdown, walnut-eyed, knock-kneed, dahlamed Balls and Torreyas and finds out what I can find out; hey, Bill!"

The answer came readily: "Sure, you be detective. But be careful that you don't lose anything for us, y' know, if you don't kain anything!" By Heck and his rifle disappeared in the darkness of the mountain night. "You promised me you'd go back to Patricia and finish your education!" (TO BE CONTINUED.)

doesn't always see things in the true light. You'll go back, won't you?" She bent toward him and asked pointedly: "Bill Dale, what makes you so anxious for me to go?" "Because," readily, "I want you to have an education." "What makes you want me to have an education, Bill Dale?" "Because you'd be such a splendid woman, if you had an education." Babe Littleford pursued with child-like eagerness: "And what makes you want me to be such a splendid woman?" Dale lifted his gray eyes and answered her frankly: "Because I expect to marry you some day."

Babe Littleford flushed deeply. Her eyes were glad, filled with rejoicing. If he didn't love her now, at least just a weeny-teeny bit, he wouldn't be thinking of marrying her some day, certainly, and this conclusion made her happier than she had ever been in all her life before. She wished wildly that she could hug him with all her might—and she had a big notion to do it. "But what would he think of her?" Well, there would come a day, when she would surely hug him with all her might. She would simply break his blessed bones, almost. "Will you go to Patricia tomorrow?" he asked. She really believed that she ought to go. But the thought of leaving him

smoke upward. "More of the game of bluff, perhaps," he suggested. "I'm inclined to think so," thoughtfully said Dale. "Well, we'll avoid trouble as long as we decently can; and when we can no longer get around it, we'll call it as much of the law as we can get, and meet it half-way, Eh, Hayes?" "Sure," nodded the mining expert. Dale was on his way to the new siding the following morning, when he met Henderson Goff. Again Dale was forcibly reminded of stories he had heard and read of Mississippi river steamboat gamblers of the long ago. Goff stepped out of the trail, smiled and spoke with apparent good humor. Dale passed him without a word. Then the shy coal man called out, "Ready to sell yet?" "The Moreland Coal company's manager haited and faced about with a frowning of his brows. "For a fair price, yes." "Just what would you call a fair price?" "Oh, somewhere between two and three hundred thousand," promptly. Goff sniffed, and the corners of his mouth came down. "You don't want much, you won't get it from me!" "I don't want it from you."

Dale turned and went on. He was sorry that he had stopped to talk with the fellow. That afternoon he again met Goff in the trail. The bare sight of the shy coal man made him very angry now, and his right hand fell upon the butt of the big revolver on his hip. Goff was about to sidestep in the laurels, when Dale caught him roughly by the arm. "See here," he said sharply, "you've about cut your little swath. We've had enough of you. You can't get this coal at any price, and the sooner you get yourself out of this country the better and safer it will be for you. To be plain, I'm pretty apt to thrash you the very next time I see you. Now move on!" Goff went off laughing wretchedly. "Oh, ah, right, Dale; go ahead and build the little road for me!" he said. Late that night every sleeper in the valley of the Doe was awakened by a great, rumbling explosion, which was followed almost immediately by another great, rumbling explosion. Before the reverberations had died away, Bill Dale had dressed himself and was standing on the vine-hung front porch, and he was only a few seconds ahead of John Moreland. Then there came the tearing sound of a heavy explosion miles to the eastward.

"Do ye know what it is?" inquired the mountaineer. "They've stolen our dynamite from the tobacco-barn, and blown up the office and supplies building and the company building; also they've blown up the big trestle near the siding." Dale answered. "At my guess, too," said Moreland. Within the next half hour Dale and Hayes, Major Bradley, and the men-folks of the Morelands and the Littlefords had gathered around the wreck of the two big, unfinished frame buildings. Dale blamed himself much for having left dynamite unguarded in the tobacco-barn—but nobody else blamed him for it. "It's time to let the law in," he said when he had viewed the jumbled mass of broken planks and timbers by the light of lanterns. He turned to staid Luke Moreland. "You get on my horse and ride to Cartersville for the sheriff. Tell him he can get the best posse in the world right here, if he needs one. It's the proper thing, isn't it, Major?" "Yes," said Major Bradley. "It's the proper thing. You've got a real grievance now: But I fancy Goff had nothing to do with this; he is shrewd enough to know that a thing like this would cook his goose. Goff has been playing a bluff game all along, you know. Some Balls or some Torreyas, perhaps a mixture of both, have done this without Goff's knowing anything about it. I'd have Sheriff Flowers arrest several of the Balls and several of the Torreyas, and try to scare them into turning state's evidence to save themselves."

The major finished in a low tone, because of the probability for eavesdroppers, and in this he was wise. "We'll do that," Dale decided. P. R. Increases Its Payroll 14,000

The Pennsylvania Railroad has recently added 14,000 men to its payroll. They are to be employed in putting idle freight cars in condition for the heavy traffic of the coming winter and spring. The action of the Pennsylvania is not only an effort on the part of the road to assist in President Harding's campaign to reduce unemployment, but it is the natural outcome of the Administrative policy to permit the railroads to fund their equipment debt to the Government. The roads have been sorely pressed for money with which to keep up maintenance of way and equipment, and in past months have been obliged to curtail expenditures for that purpose. With needed funds in hand, postponed work of that sort will be rapidly taken up and much relief to the unemployment situation will result.

West Must Present an United Front

There are so many great lines of development work carried on in the nation, that the west must present a solid front if reclamation work is to receive the attention from Congress that it deserves. The twelve great western states that have millions of acres under irrigation projects more or less completed and that have hundreds of millions of acres of land to reclaim, must act as a unit. In justice to the great undeveloped west, the Senators and Representatives from these western states must act as a block wherever this question is touched and public sentiment is developing. This is the purpose of the great reclamation organization that has the backing of all Executives of the west.

For a "Greater Colorado River"

JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN.
The Colorado river is one of the great rivers of the United States. A joint resolution of congress proposes a "Greater Colorado." This is to be done by adding 423 miles of stream. This addition is to be accomplished by changing to Colorado the name of the Grand river from its source near Rocky Mountain National park in northern Colorado to its junction with the Green river in southeastern Utah. The Grand and Green rivers together make the Colorado river.

The Grand is 423 miles long from its source to its junction with the Green. Eighty miles of this stream's length is in Utah. The Green rises just south of Yellowstone National park in northwestern Wyoming and is 700 miles long to its junction with the Grand. The Colorado, from Utah to the Gulf of California, is 1,000 miles long.

Through the Green is nearly twice as long as the Grand, the Grand carries the greater volume of water. Moreover, the Green runs 85 miles through the northwestern corner of Colorado and receives much of its volume from Colorado. It is, therefore, contended by Colorado that the Grand is the real upper Colorado and that the Green is a tributary.

It is the people of Colorado who are behind the joint resolution for the change of name. With them it appears to be a matter of deep sentiment. Representative V. T. Taylor of Colorado, speaking to the joint resolution, said:

"Mr. Speaker, for the past 35 years my home has been and is now in the beautiful little city of Glenwood Springs, Colo., on the banks of what has heretofore been called the Grand river, the principal tributary and, in fact, the main stream of the Colorado river, and during all those years I have always hoped and believed that sometime the state pride of the sons and daughters of our beloved commonwealth would bring about the change of the name of that stream to its rightful name, as the source and principal part of that wonderful river, and permit our citizens to fondly and proudly welcome the greatest river in our state as our great state's stream under the name that is dearest to every Colorado heart. And with the passage of this resolution that hope of many years not only of my own, but thousands of other Coloradans, will be consummated."

At its last session the Colorado legislature passed a bill officially changing the name of the Grand from Grand to Colorado, within the state boundaries. A bill was introduced in the Utah legislature at the last session to change the name of the Grand from Grand to Colorado within the boundaries of Utah. The Utah legislature did not act on the bill and will not meet again for two years.

In the meantime, inasmuch as the Colorado is an interstate and international stream and is classed as navigable, it has been decided that the change in name should be brought about by act of congress rather than by action of the states. Moreover, the Colorado bulks large in the public eye just now as a national river of tremendous importance. Already water power and irrigation projects of great importance—the Imperial valley in California, for example—mark the course of the river. Projects under discussion are apparently of still greater importance—the proposed Boulder dam across the Colorado just below the Grand canyon, for instance. This project may be undertaken by the federal government. It would be the most spectacular work of its kind in the world and would cost anywhere between forty and seventy-five millions.

The Colorado is a mighty river beyond doubt. Many rivers unite to form it. The principal branches of the Green are the Uinta, Price, Yampa and White; of the Grand, the Eagle, Roaring Fork, Gunnison and Dolores; of the Colorado, the Fremont, Escalante, Paria, Kanab and Virgin on the right and the San Juan, Little Colorado, Bill Williams and Gila on the left. The Grand canyon is on the main river in Arizona and extends from the mouth of the Little Colorado to the Grand Wash. The Grand Canyon National park encloses 217 miles of the river, which in places is 6,000 feet below the rim of the canyon. The lower Colorado runs through a low desert country. At Yuma, on the Mexican line, is an immense irrigation project which consists of a diversion dam nearly a mile long, 400 miles of canals and 70 miles of dikes and cost about $3,000,000. The water is carried to Arizona lands by a thousand-foot tunnel, which passes under the river.

An interesting feature of the discussion of the joint resolution was the bringing out of the history of the Colorado river and the early American Southwest in concise and accurate form. This was set forth in a report furnished by George Otis Smith, director of the geological survey on the history of the naming of the Colorado, Grand and Green rivers and of the state of Colorado. This report explains how the Colorado came to bear no less than nine names between 1540 and 1770. It also sets forth how the Green river came to be known as the "Ghost river" to geographers. Among the facts brought out are these:

It was the Coronado expedition of 1540-42, sent out by Viceroy Mendoza, that first explored the pueblo country of New Mexico and Arizona and the Great Plains as far northeast as central Kansas and discovered the Colorado river and the Grand canyon. Alarcon discovered the Colorado at its mouth and gave it the name of Rio de Buena Gula (good gulch) because that was Mendoza's "device." Diaz, traveling along the river, saw the Indians carrying burning brands with which to warm themselves; so he named it Rio del Tizon (firebrand). Cardenas discovered the Colorado at the Grand canyon, but for some reason refrained from naming it, probably because soon afterward it was identified with the Rio del Tizon. So the Coronado expedition gave the Colorado its two first names.

The Coronado expedition was disappointing and it was not until 1591 that an expedition under Rodriguez revisited the region. This revived interest in the conquering and settling of New Mexico.

The contract for the conquest and settlement was finally awarded in 1563 to Juan de Onate, who was made governor, adelantado and captain general of the province of New Mexico. In 1598, Onate reached the Santa Fe region with an army and a colony of 400 men, of whom 180 had their families. Onate ruled New Mexico until 1606. By 1605 he and his subordinates had reconquered practically all the ground covered by Coronado and opened new trails. In 1604 he made a journey from San Gabriel, his headquarters near Santa Fe, to the head of the Gulf of California. He went by way of Zuni, Mogul and Williams river to the Colorado and down the east bank of that river to the gulf. Crossing the Colorado Chiquila, or little Colorado "10 leagues" southwest of Mogul, he named it "Rio Colorado" because the water is nearly red. He is noted that the name "Colorado" is here given for the first time, not to the Colorado river but to one of its branches, the Little Colorado. To the Colorado itself, Onate gave the name "Rio Grande de Buena Esperanza" (good hope).

At some indefinite time during the next hundred years the name Colorado was transferred from the Little Colorado to the main river, and before the end of the century had been pretty well established. Father Kino, the great Piman apostle, 1683-1711, uses the name freely, as he does the alternative name Rio del Norte; and he even bestows upon it a new name, Rio de los Apostoles.

A revolt of the Pueblo Indians in 1680 resulted in the entire evacuation of New Mexico by the Spaniards until its reconquest by Vercas in 1692-94, when most of the missions were reestablished also. San Diego, the first of the California missions, was established in 1769; and in the next 30 years 17 others had been established, dotting the coast from San Diego to San Francisco bay. Father Silvestro Velez de Escalante, then stationed at the Zuni mission, spent eight days at Mogul in June, 1775, trying to discover whether there was an Indian trail across the Grand canyon. He failed to extract any information from the Indians and concluded that the canyon was impassable. In a letter on the subject written to Father Garcia August 18, 1775, he called the river the canyon Rio Grande de los Coninos. The Conino (Havayupai) Indians were settled on Cataract creek. The next year, 1776, Garcia himself traveled from Mohave to Mogul, and west into the Grand canyon at the bend below the Little Colorado on June 23. He named the canyon Puerto de Bucarell (Bucarell's pass) in honor of the then viceroy.

Grand river, both above and below its junction with Gunnison river, was named Rio San Rafael by Fathers Dominguez and Escalante in 1776. To the south branch, the present Gunnison river, they gave the name Rio San Javier (Xavier) and reported the Uto Indian name as Tomiechi. In this area Pike's maps, 1805-07, like other early maps, are difficult to interpret. His "Rio de los Animas" (las Animas) is much more like Grand river than his "Rio San Rafael." In 1843 Fremont lettered it Grand river, as did Captain Stansbury in 1849.

But for long years the maps showed great diversity of nomenclature. Below its junction with the Gunnison, this river was usually called Grand river, rarely Rio Colorado or Grand and even Colorado. Above the junction it was called Grand, Bunkara, Blue and North Fork of Grand river. Gunnison river was named variously Eagle, Eagle Tail, South Fork of Grand, Grande and Grand river.

In after years Captain Gunnison's name became gradually fixed on the branch which he explored, and the name Grand on the north or main branch, while the name Blue river now describes a small south branch of the latter in Summit county, Colorado. Green river was called Rio de San Buenaventura by Dominguez and Escalante in 1776, and Escalante says (Diario, Sept. 17, 1776), that it was so named in 1763 by Fr. Alonso de Posada. Thinking that it flowed to the west, the map makers represented it as crossing the Great basin and flowing into the Pacific ocean. Thus it was that the River Buenaventura became the famous "ghost river," which for years haunted the maps of the far West. Pike, 1805-07, mapped it with headwaters in the position of upper Green river, having an affluent, Rio de San Clemente (Escalante's name for White river, an east branch of the Green river), and flowing southwest into Sevier lake (nameless). Before 1811, however, upper Green river was known to be connected with the Colorado. The Astorians called it both Spanish river and Colorado river. It was called Rio Colorado by Jedediah B. Smith in 1824 and Rio Colorado of the West by William H. Ashley in 1825. Bonneville, 1837, lettered it Colorado of the West on his map of the territory west of the Rocky Mountains.

The name Green river dates at least as far back as 1824. Dale refers to a news item in the Missouri Intelligencer, June 23, 1823, of a party leaving Santa Cruz in November, 1824, to trap on "Green river." Fremont says that the Spaniards, contrasting "its timbered shores and green wooded islands with its dry sandy plains," named it Rio Verde (Green river); Bancroft speaks of an employee of Ashley's, "Mr. Green who gave his name to Green river"; and Chittenden advances the theory that the name may have been suggested by the color of the water.

The act of congress providing for the organization of the territory of Colorado was approved February 23, 1861. As introduced and as passed by the house, the bill named the proposed new organization the territory of Idaho—"Idaho" having been selected from many names proposed. In the senate, on motion of Senator Wilson of Massachusetts, the name of the territory was amended by striking out "Idaho" and inserting "Colorado." This was done at the suggestion of Delegate Williams for the reason that the Colorado river arose in its mountains, hence there was a peculiar fitness in the name. Bancroft, however, says that "The name Colorado was given to it at the suggestion of the man (William Gilpin) selected for its first governor"; and he quotes from a manuscript of Gilpin's as follows: "Some wanted it called Jefferson, some Arcadia. I said the people have to a great extent named the states after the great rivers of the country, and the great feature of that country is the great Colorado river. Ah," said he (Wilson of Massachusetts), "that is it; and he named it Colorado."

MOTHER, QUICK! GIVE CALIFORNIA FIG SYRUP FOR CHILD'S BOWELS

Even a sick child loves the "fruity" taste of "California Fig Syrup." If the little tongue is coated, or if your child is listless, cross, feverish, full of cold, or has colic, a teaspoonful will never fail to open the bowels. In a few hours you can see for yourself how thoroughly it works all the constipation poison, sour bile and waste from the tender, little bowels and gives you a well, playful child again. Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy. They know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for genuine "California Fig Syrup" which has directions for babies and children of all ages printed on bottle. Mother! You must say "California" or you may get an imitation fig syrup.—Advertisement.

Slight Resemblance.
One of the Texan friends of Representative Cooper met him the other day. "You smoke, don't you," he asked. "Sometimes," said Cooper. "Take this," remarked the Texan. "This is something like a cigar." Cooper took the weed, lighted it and puffed three or four times. "Yes," he assented, "this is something like a cigar. What is it?"—New Orleans Lawyer and Banker.

One can grin without an inner impulse, but a smile needs better backing.

Some Men Swear—Others Just Smoke

This is just another fisherman's story. A pipe and tobacco have something to do with it. Somehow when a man is in the worst luck, a few pulls at the little old pipe help to buck up his courage, make him able to grin and yell. "Next!" But the story: The late William Marion Coody went tuna fishing off the Pacific Coast. "The tuna are kept in a roundhouse somewhere over near Japan," he wrote, "and one of them is released every so often to make the round trip of the Pacific."

Out in a motor launch with a boatman, he finally hooked one—a sixty-pounder—no, by Jove, an eighty-pounder. The boat had to do a merry-go-round to keep the line from going under the keel. He reeled and unreeling to keep the line from parting. For 1 hour and 11 minutes man and fish fought. Then the tuna seemed tired out; it began to come in, when "The boatman stoops for the gaff and the fisherman raises the pole to an approximation of the perpendicular—crack! The line parts like a fiddle-string and one end whips around the pole. The fish sinks like a stone.

"The fisherman looks at the boatman, who looks back one glance, then turns to his lover. Next word! The fisherman sits down and looks at the sea as if it were not there—as if the tuna had plunged away with the life of him. Warily, almost somnambulantly, he reaches for pouch and pipe and fills the latter from the former and strikes a match."

Some men swear—others just smoke. It helps a lot to have the right tobacco at hand in times of hard luck. That may be Edgeworth. Only you can tell that.

Without making any foolish claims that it must be the right tobacco for you, we invite you to try it and judge it. Simply send us your name and address on a postcard. If you will add the name of the dealer to whom you will go for more in case you like Edgeworth, we would appreciate that courtesy on your part.

We will dispatch to you samples of Edgeworth in both forms—Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed. Edgeworth Plug Slice is formed into flat cakes and then sliced into thin, moist wafers. One slice rubbed for a second between the hands furnishes an average pipeful; Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed is already rubbed for you. Both kinds pack nicely, light quickly, and burn freely and evenly. You use them by the little old pipe, tilt back your chair, put your feet on the desk or mantelpiece, and—pull, puff, puff—decide for yourself just how good a smoking tobacco Edgeworth is.

Both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed are packed in small, pocket-size packages, in handsome tin humidor and glass jars, and also in various handy in-between quantities. For the free samples which we would like you to judge, address Larus & Brother Company, 41 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va. The Retail Tobacco Merchants—If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus & Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-ounce carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

MACK, THE DOG.

"Many of you have heard about me before," said Mack, the dog. "But for those who haven't heard about me I'd like to introduce myself to you, bow-wow. I belong to a little girl named Mildred, and oh, she is such a nice little girl."

"I wouldn't be without her for anything and I wouldn't want anyone else to take care of me. I am sure she feels the same way about me, for I've heard her tell people so. She wants to have me with her always, or at least as much as she can."

"Of course I can't go to school with her, but I can meet her when she is coming home from school. And I can walk to school with her too."

"Then I know she wouldn't want to have any other dog but her Mack. I am an Alfrede dog, too, and I have quite a perfect disposition I have been told."

"I never get cross, and really I wouldn't see any reason for getting cross when I have such a lovely home and such a nice mistress who is so kind to me."

"I see no reason at all for getting cross, and I have never seen one so far, and I am sure I never will see any reason for doing such a thing."

"When I am told to smile I do smile. I show my teeth and I give my very best dog grin."

"If anyone thinks that a dog cannot smile they should see Mack, the dog, when he is smiling. Often I smile too when I am not told to smile. I always smile when I see Mildred and especially after I have been separated from her for quite a time. And I grin then, too, and bark happily and I jump up and down when she comes near me. I kiss her too."

BRINGS "SANDMAN" IN HURRY

As Sleep-inducing Amateur Psychologist Has a Scheme Far Superior to Counting Sheep.

"Counting sheep" used to be the great recipe for going to sleep. You simply closed your eyes, imagined a rail fence with a gap in it and white, woolly sheep jumping through, one at a time. You counted them carefully as they came, and about the time you got to about 200, why, off you dropped to slumberland."

But the amateur psychologist says counting sheep is old-fashioned and impractical now. The trouble was, he explains, the people used their imaginations too much. Instead of confining themselves solely to the sheep, they would imagine a whole pasture, with trees and hills and a sky full of clouds. Beyond, and their attention was so diffused keeping track of the landscape that they couldn't keep their minds concentrated on the sheep. Presently they lost interest and then old man In-somnia camped on their trail for several hours.

The newer and more scientific method for hypnotizing yourself to sleep, says the amateur psychologist, is to find out your particular drowsy obsession and concentrate. "Whenever I feel a nervous, wakeful night coming on," he says, "I imagine myself in the interior of a vast, dim cathedral. Only a single ray of light filters in and it falls on the crossing aisle. An endless procession of hooded monks is moving slowly down this aisle, and I count them as they pass through the ray of light, one at a time. My mind is wholly engrossed with this slowly moving procession, and the interior of the cathedral is so obscure and dim that it does not distract me at all. Sometimes I fancy I hear far off strains of a pipe organ. The suggestion of music speeds the sleep-inducing process."

Chinese Fossil Teeth. An European investigator has made a singular collection of fossil teeth from drug stores in various parts of China, where they are sold under the name of dragons' teeth and are valued for their supposed curative powers. Upon examining them it was found by this investigator that they are the remains of many species of extinct animals, such as the ancestral forms of camels, saber-toothed tigers, three-toed horses and other creatures of ancient times, some of which, like the ancestral forms of camels and antelopes, were supposed to have had their original home in America and in Africa. Judging from the quantities of these teeth sold, the investigator thinks they must exist in enormous numbers in some parts of China.

Doom Century-Old Bridge. The picturesque covered wooden bridge, near Chester, Orange county, New York, known for nearly a century as Brook's bridge, has been condemned by state highway engineers and will be torn down to make way for a steel and stone structure. According to tradition, the "Stour-bridge Lion," first locomotive built in America, passed over Brook's bridge before it was assembled. The Stour-bridge made its trial trip 91 years ago. The first run was at Honesdale, a mile from the bridge. The structure has not a nail or metal bolt in it. All the timbers are hand hewn and planed together with wooden pegs, which have held tightly throughout the years. It is said to have been completed in 1820.

Wood-Carving by Sand-Blast. A process of carving wood by special application of the sand-blast, reported in the Compressed Air Magazine (New York), is said to be giving highly satisfactory results in California, especially when applied to the redwood of that state. We read: "Portions of the surface are covered by protective stencils which leave figures in relief and a uniform background. Very rich effects are produced in paneling the walls of a dining room, hall or den. While much of the work is done in the natural color of the rich, reddish brown wood, striking effects are brought out by the use of paints, deep blues, reds, browns and gilt."

Marine Spectacle. A captain of an Atlantic liner was bothered by a woman passenger who was always inquiring about the possibility of seeing a whale. A dozen times a day she besought him to have her called if one were in sight. "But, madam," the captain asked her rather impatiently, after long suffering in silence, "why are you so eager to see a whale?" "Captain," she answered, "my dearest life is to see a whale blubber. It must be very impressive to watch such an enormous creature cry."

Very Much Afraid. "Gold" in that house over there" said the first tramp. "I tried that house last week. I ain't goin' there—any more," replied tramp No. 2. "Fraid on account of the dog?" "My trousers are." "Trousers are what?" "Fraid on account of the dog."

Chaves county, N. M., which already boasts of the best roads in the state, is making plans for the finest system of highways in the Southwest during the next two years. If the present plans are carried out it will mean a fine highway from Dexter to the Eddy county line, a road from the Roosevelt county line south to the Chaves line; a road from Acme to Roswell, and still another from Eight Mile draw to the Lucero school will cost about $8,500.

Directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Las Cruces, N. M., have been informed by the chairman of the civic committee that the improvements to be made in the school system of the city during the next year will cost about $70,000. The auditorium and gym of the high school with the heating plant will cost about $35,000; the new building in the south ward will cost over $30,000 and the two-room addition to the Lucero school will cost about $8,500.

A new project to carry the paved road from Albuquerque to Isleta is now being planned and the work on the first seven miles will be started soon. Work on the Baretas bridge will be started again about the middle of October and as soon as this is finished bids will be asked for on the paving job which will be of concrete. When all the work is completed, this will be one of the finest stretches of road out of the city and will furnish a splendid outlet for the farmers in that part of the county.

November 13 will be designated as Red Cross Sunday by Governor Thomas E. Campbell of Arizona. The announcement was contained in a letter from the governor to George Filmer, manager of the Pacific coast division of the Red Cross, who had asked the governor to designate Nov. 13 as Red Cross Sunday to add impetus to the annual roll call of the organization. Reorganization of the local Chamber of Commerce at Gallup, N. M., is now being planned and the big drive for members and funds will be started about the middle of October. A contract has been entered into between the local chamber and the American City Bureau, in which the latter agrees to place the local body on a paying basis for the next three years. On condition that he leave the state of Arizona, Fred "Slick" Brown, who was charged with assault on his wife in Douglas, Ariz., was given a five-year suspended sentence by Judge Lockwood in Division 1 of the Superior Court. "Slick" promptly showed his willingness to leave the confines of Arizona by taking the first stage out as soon as released and promised he would never return. Insurance companies doing business in Arizona must cease insuring owners of automobiles and other vehicles for violation of the prohibition laws, according to an order issued by the State Corporation Commission. The commission also directed that all clauses in insurance policies now in effect on this subject must be cancelled by Oct. 15, 1921. Plans are being made for a big celebration in Katon, N. M., on Armistice day and the affair will be in charge of the American Legion, assisted by other organizations of the city.

HOW WOMEN AVOID SURGICAL OPERATIONS

Some Are Extremely Necessary, Others May Not Be

Every Woman Should Give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Trial First

Chicago, Ill.—"I was in bed with a female trouble and inflammation and had four doctors but none of them did me any good. They all said I would have to have an operation. A druggist's wife told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I took 22 bottles, never missing a dose and at the end of that time I was perfectly well. I have never had occasion to take it again as I have been so well. I have a six room flat and do all my work. My two sisters are taking the Compound upon my recommendation and you may publish my letter. It is the gospel truth and I will write to any one who wants a personal letter."—Mrs. E. H. HAYDOCK, 6324 St. Lawrence Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Vermont woman adds her testimony to the long line of those fortunate women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after it had been decided an operation was necessary: Burlington, Vt.—"I suffered with female trouble, and had a number of doctors who said that I would never be any better until I had an operation. I was so bad I could hardly walk across the floor and could not do a thing. My sister-in-law induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it certainly has helped me wonderfully. I keep house and do my work and have a small child. I have recommended Vegetable Compound to a number of my friends and you may publish my testimonial."—Mrs. H. E. SHAW, Apple Tree Point Farm, Burlington, Vt.

Passing of Old Dobbin. Old Dobbin and the high-wheeled buggy, long since pushed from the city streets by the advent of gasoline and the flivver, are losing favor in the rural districts of the United States, according to the preliminary report of the bureau of census on the 1920 census of agriculture. American farmers now possess 2,140,512 automobiles, and this allows more than 822 machines for every 1,000 farms. Not only is the one-hoss shay on the decline in rural centers, but the report on motor trucks, tractors, telephones, water supply and gas or electric light indicates a rapidly increasing adoption by the farmers of urban conveniences.

Signs Significant. The days when camping was a novelty are over, and now camps for children and adults flourish from the Northeast to the far West. Driving down an Adirondacks road the Mid-Victorian lady noticed two signs within a few miles of each other that warned autoists of nearby camps. The lady wondered if the wording of the signs characterized the real difference between girls' camps and camps for boys. The first sign proclaimed: "Girls Camp—Go Slow." The second: "Danger—Boys' Camp Ahead."—New York Sun.

Cincinnati's Pride. Cincinnati has spent $3,000,000 on a city hospital, described as one in which it is a pleasure to be sick. Here is a suggestion for a pleasant and inexpensive summer vacation. Go to Cincinnati and fall ill.—Boston Transcript.

Notice to Automobile
Owners and Drivers

The law governing operation of motor vehicles is very stringent and penalties for violation are very severe. The new law limits speed to 35 miles per hour on public highways; 15 miles per hour in limits of towns and villages; prohibits driving by children under 14; and provides for arrest without warrant, of all violators. There has been two very serious accidents in Dona Ana County, recently, both caused by violations of this law. To prevent injuries and deaths, the sheriffs have been notified to arrest violators of this law and they will be prosecuted and punished accordingly. Your observance of this law may save a life and will obviate prosecutions.
J. BENSON NEWELL,
District Attorney.

First Methodist Church.

Rev. C. C. Higbee returned from the Conference at Artesia on the evening train Monday.
He reports splendid things from the work of the Methodist Church in the state; a net gain which is a net gain in membership of more than 1,700.

Rev. Higbee has been assigned to the Central Methodist Church, Albuquerque, for the ensuing year. Rev. Higbee has been diligent, brotherly, and obliging.
It is likely that no minister who has been in our midst is held in higher esteem than he. Rev.
Conkin, this state, has been assigned to the First Methodist Church for the ensuing year. We welcome him to our city.

The new pastor has requested
Rev. Higbee to conduct the services here Sunday, as he will not arrive until the following week.

The following are the subjects;
11 a. m., "Selecting Company";
7:30 p. m., "Keeping Company."

These constitute a part of a series on "Love Affairs" which will be particularly interesting to young people. They are spiced with humor. And being Rev.
Higbee's last public utterances among us, will doubtless be given a splendid hearing.

A new shipment of tricotine and serge dresses at exceptionally low prices, arrived this week.
