Filipinos Demand Withdrawal of General Wood

All Members in Legislature
Solidly Behind Movement
To Oust Governor General;
Appeal to President.

Manila, July 23.—Immediate recall of Governor General Wood was demanded here tonight in a joint resolution of both houses of the legislature. The resolution was addressed to President Harding. All of the parties mentioned participated in the action endorsing the stand taken by the cabinet when its members resigned recently. Governor General Wood is now in the province of Samar, making an investigation of health conditions at that place. The split between the Governor-General and Manuel Quezon which resulted in the resignation of all leading officials of the Philippine government, has developed into a political embroglio with the Democrat party supporting General Wood and the Collectivista party opposing him.

The Democrat leaders have adopted resolutions opposing the joining of the parliamentary mission which is to leave for Washington within the next two weeks to lay the controversy before the President. The Democrat leaders favored a plan giving the resident commissioners full power to lay these facts before the President and Congress.

Carrizozo Entertainers Make Formal Announcement

The Carrizozo Entertainers announce an entertainment to be given shortly after the middle of August. Half of the program will be musical, the other half to be a comedy entitled, "The Darktown Strutters' Ball."

Unless present plans miscarry, a professional dancer from El Paso is on the program. As yet, arrangements with the lady have not been completed, but by the time this paper goes to press again, the Entertainers hope to be able to announce definitely, who the dancer will be. A special trained chorus, with special costumes, will be a principal feature of the entertainment and alone, will be more than worth the price of admission, and aside from this, the lady dancer and the "Darktown Strutters' Ball," will furnish all the comedy an appreciative audience can desire.

Camper Killed; Wife Burned by Lightning

Casper, Wyo., July 24.—William Browley, said to be from Walden, North Park, Colorado, was instantly killed and Mrs. Browley was severely burned by a lightning bolt which struck their camp in southwest Casper during a thunder storm early today. The tent in which the couple were sleeping was completely wrecked, but their automobile, which was standing nearby, was not touched.

Returned to Douglas

Mrs. H. S. Fairbanks and children of Douglas, Ariz., returned home last week after a visit with friends here. They also spent a short time at the Eagle Creek Club grounds.

Indian Foundling, Heir to a Fortune, is Found in Missouri

Plattsburg, Mo., July 24.—James White Young, a Cherokee Indian, reported to be sought as heir to a large fortune in Oklahoma, lives on a farm near here. Mrs. Manor Fry, secretary of the Red Cross Association in Plattsburg, asserted tonight. Mrs. Fry said the young man was sent to Plattsburg from Nashville, Tenn., where, she declared, he had been in an orphan's home.

The young man sought by the Oklahoma authorities was traced to Nashville, where, 25 years ago, a wandering group of Indians abandoned him, then a little child.

"I am in possession of papers and letters which will positively identify Young as the heir," Mrs. Fry declared.

When informed that he was probably heir to wealth, Young declared: "If it is mine, I will be glad to get the money. When I become rich, I am going to help the people who have been good to me."

Leonard Defeats Tendler

New York, July 24.—Benny Leonard holds the lightweight boxing sceptre today without a real challenger in sight. The title holder repudied the most dangerous menace to his throne last night, when he felled and battered Lew Tendler, Philadelphia southpaw, in to overwhelming defeat in a fifteen round match at the Yankee stadium.

Decisively outpointing his rival from the start, Leonard had Tendler on the verge of a knockout with a slashing whirlwind attack in the last three rounds. There was no question of his superiority at any stage of the fight.

U. S. Girls at Lowest Ebb, Says Church Head.

New York, July 25.—"The American girl is at the lowest ebb in her history," the Rev. Dr. F. H. Knobel, president of the United Lutheran Church of the United States and Canada, declared today, before sailing on the Lapland for Germany, where he will attend the world conference of the Lutheran church in August.

"American girls and young women," he said, "should mend their ways, because the men despise them. They drink cocktails, smoke cigarettes, and altogether their conduct is shocking."

Down From Corona

Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Mayer, of Corona, were visitors here Sunday at the C. D. Mayer home. Mr. Mayer has recently taken charge of the Stockmen's State Bank of Corona, having been transferred from the First National Bank at this place.

Died in Nogal Canyon

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Donaldson, Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Wells, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Farris and daughters, S. L. Northlane and Walter LaFlour motored up to Nogal Canyon Thursday afternoon and dined under the pine trees in the early evening. The gentlemen mentioned are all train dispatchers at the local station.

Europe Wants Only U. S. Gold and U. S. Men

Senator Johnson's First
Address on Return from Europe a Direct Challenge to President Harding.

New York, July 25.—Senator Hiram Johnson of California was cheered by a thousand persons tonight when, at a dinner given in his honor, he denounced America's proposed entry into the world court and declared America's gold and man power and not her wisdom were wanted by European nations in the settlement of European affairs.

The dinner, which had been heralded by the senator's friends as the occasion for launching him on the political sea as a candidate for president in 1924, did not materialize as such, although there were those at the tables who, when the applause for the emphatic notes in his address was at its height, gave vent to their enthusiasm by shouting, "Hiram in 1924."

Among the guests was Col. George Harvey, ambassador to Great Britain, and staunch supporter of President Harding's plan for America's joining the world court.

Senator Johnson returned on Monday from Europe, where he talked with leading statesmen of many countries.

The committee in charge of the dinner was composed largely of men who supported Theodore Roosevelt in his third party campaign for the presidency in 1912.

Many friends of the senator have boomed him for presidential candidate next year, and it was noted with interest that his views on America's entrance into the world court directly opposed those set forth by President Harding.

"Nobody in Europe cares a rap for the international court," he declared. "Many may care very much whether we get into it. Many expect that if we can be lured into it, the United States is on the way not only to the league of nations, but to full participation in European affairs."

"The world court is an utterly futile agency for peace—it can not and will not prevent wars, and has jurisdiction of nothing except what countries may see fit to submit to it, and the four great members, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, have specifically declined to submit to its compulsory jurisdiction."

Here from Winfield, Kansas

H. T. Fisk and daughter, Miss Nona Fisk, of Winfield, Kansas, are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy L. Keating. Mr. Fisk is Mrs. Keating's father and Miss Fisk is a sister to Mrs. Keating. R. C. Fisk, a brother of Mrs. Keating and assistant signal engineer of the E. P. & S. W., came up from El Paso on Sunday to visit with the folks in general.

Spent Sunday in Lincoln

Contractor Frank English and family spent Sunday in Lincoln, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Burleson, parents of Mrs. English, and returned accompanied by Miss Glenneth English, who had been visiting with her grandparents for several weeks.

Sam Langford Battle is Ready at Old Juarez.

Battle for Championship of Mexico all set for Tonight and Enormous Crowd is Expected to be Present.

El Paso, July 27.—Both Sam Langford and Clem Johnson the principals in the national heavyweight championship bout to be staged tonight for the heavyweight title of Mexico, finished training yesterday at the International Club. The largest crowd of the year, it was estimated, visited the training quarters on Wednesday to see the big huskies go through their final training. The fans were rewarded for their trip, as both fighters went through stiff sieges of training. At the finish of the work-out, both men showed themselves to be in first-class condition for the battle and each man expressed himself as being confident of victory.

Langford seems to be in better condition than fans here have ever seen him and Johnson looks to be equally his match. With both men in the best of shape for the gong, the fight promises to be one of the hardest fought heavyweight battles ever staged in a local ring. No passports will be required and the bridge will be open until 12:30 o'clock.

Terrific Heat Reported from Mexia.

Mexia, Texas, July 25.—East central Texas oil fields today sweltered under the hottest rays of the summer. Temperatures at the United States weather bureau registered 105 degrees at one time during the afternoon making conditions almost unbearable around drilling operations, where temperatures stood around 130.

Here from Bushton, Kansas

E. T. Kemper, brother of Dr. H. E. Kemper, of the New Mexico Sanitary Sheep Board, is here from Bushton, Kansas, for a two week's visit with his brother's family. Mr. Kemper is one of the June graduates from the law department of the University of Kansas, and has recently been admitted to the bar in that state.

Home from Artesia

Mrs. Zoe Glassmire, son Haven and sister, Miss Kathleen Doering, have returned from a two week's visit with Mrs. Glassmire's sister, Mrs. A. F. Roselle, in Artesia, N. M. Mr. Roselle motored them home and returned to Artesia on Tuesday.

At the Duke City

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Langston left last Saturday for Albuquerque, where after a short stay, W. J. will go to California to attend to some business matters, during which time, Mrs. Langston will remain with her mother, Mrs. T. W. Rowden, at the Duke City.

And Her Name is "Alamo"

Friday the 13th ushered into Alamo its first colored baby. It was a girl, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Pete Davenport, who have named the little stranger, "Alamo."

Former El Paso Narcotic Agent Held on Dope Charge.

Somerset, Ky., July 25.—L. H. Sheehan, 26, a former federal narcotic inspector of El Paso, Texas, was arrested in a hotel here today, when narcotics valued at $1,000 were found in his possession. His wife was also arrested.

Sheehan admitted, according to the police, that he had intended to deliver the drugs to persons in Somerset.

New Windmill and Tank For Court House Yard

Contractor English has erected a new wind mill in the yard of the courthouse and has sunk the old well ten feet deeper, which increases the water supply to twenty gallons per minute. He is now erecting a concrete tank seven feet high and five feet deep, the inside measurement of which will be 22 x 22 feet. From this tank the entire courthouse yard will be irrigated. This is a much needed improvement, and will save the young trees and insure the grass.

Jonathan H. Wagner Resigns at University

Jonathan H. Wagner resigned as president of the New Mexico Normal University on July 18, giving as his reasons, the opposition to him of the state administration and a majority of the board of regents of the institution, which his letter said, rendered it impossible for the school to do efficient work under the conflicting conditions and made it necessary for him to resign for the best interests of all concerned. At the same time, Mr. Wagner received a letter from the board of regents in the acceptance of his resignation, stating that the board "has had and now has, no grounds for preferring charges against you."

Ex-Senator Tulley Here

Ex-Senator J. V. Tulley was down from Glencoe on Monday and said that the Ruidoso country was looking better than it has for several years.

Commissioner Sowder Back From Santa Fe.

Highway Commissioner R. C. Sowder returned Sunday from Santa Fe, where he attended an important meeting of the State Highway Commission. This was the first meeting of the commission since that body paid a visit to Washington in the interest of better and cheaper roads.

Ladies' Aid Society

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Church will meet at the home of Mrs. W. W. Stadtman on the afternoon of Tuesday, July 31. The meeting is called for 8 o'clock and a good attendance is desired. Those who are not members of the society and are interested in the work, are cordially invited to attend.

Dr. Guido Ranniger and Chas. Thornton, of Osceola, were visitors here on Monday.

W. B. Payne, merchant, and E. H. Goodall, U. S. Land Commissioner of Capitan, paid this office a friendly visit yesterday.

Disability Pay For Veterans Is Settled On

Director Hines Adopts Rating
Plan Eliminating Re-examination as Suggested by Legion. For 150,000.

Washington, D. C., July 23.—In a far-reaching order which will give a permanent compensation to approximately 150,000 ex-service men who were partially disabled in the late war, Director Frank T. Hines, provides a permanent rating settling problem for this group of veterans. The order will effect a great saving in the operation of the bureau by the elimination of much personnel and will save the soldiers suffering from diseases and wounds from further loss of time and worry over their monthly compensation checks which has been one of the chief causes for complaint against the bureau in the past.

It is estimated by some statisticians here that the move will make necessary, a permanent outlay of $75,000,000 each year in monthly checks varying from 8 to $75 per man. This is about twice the rate paid in the form of pensions to Civil war veterans of like status. Twenty-one thousand disabled men in the New York district alone will be benefited by the order, according to estimates made by Major W. L. Lott, manager of the bureau office there, subject to the order in the Chicago district. General Hines' order was made at the request of Joe Sparks, chairman of the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion.

Compliments on Cheerful Killing of Husband

Cincinnati, July 24.—Mrs. Beattie Bush, 38, was complimented and discharged for the killing of her husband, William Edward Bush, after being arraigned on a charge of murder in municipal court here today. Judge Meredith Yeatman in dismissing Mrs. Bush, said she was justified in killing him in defense of herself and child. Mrs. Bush shot and killed her husband after she said, he threatened to kill her and her step-child. She told the court that Bush objected to the child going to Sunday school.

Teachers' University Scholarships Awarded

Washington, D. C., July 26.—(Capital News Service).—The American Child Health Association, Hon. Herbert Hoover, president, announces the award of fifteen scholarships for summer courses in universities to teachers who have qualified as especially able in the promotion of child health and welfare.

These scholarships were established to stimulate teachers to develop better methods of teaching health to children in school rooms, through trained interest and individual experimentation. The awards are made to the successful applicants in recognition of their past work in health teaching and to equip them through the most approved training for extended service in this field. Miss Lucy Oppen, secretary of the teacher scholarship committee, said, in announcing awards

CHAPTER XIX

The Hideout.

The row that had culminated at the Waterline ranch, ending in the trouble between Pillsoll and Wyatt, had brewed steadily. There had collected, besides Pillsoll's riders, Butch Parsons, Hahn and others of Pillsoll's following who had been forced from their livelihood as gamblers. They still hung together, waiting for Pillsoll to make a clean-up of his horses and move to places where they were less discredited.

Pillsoll had lost caste as a leader. His moods were morose or bragging. His ascendancy was gone. The crowd, clinging to him like so many leeches, waiting for a split of the proceeds of the sale of horses that no one appeared eager to buy in quantity. Ready cash was short. There were frequent quarrels; through it all there worked the leaven of Wyatt's jealousy, fermenting steadily.

When the split came, after an all-night session with cards and liquor, following the refusal of a dealer to buy the herd, it was not merely a matter between Wyatt and Pillsoll. Sides were taken and the weaker driven from the ranch. Preparations were made for departure.

"It's a rotten mess," Butch Parsons told Pillsoll. "Wyatt or one of the others'll tell all they know. We'll go South. That's my plan. You can find a buyer in Tucson. Put the horses in the Hideout. There's grub there and a safe place to lay low if anything goes wrong. They'll have a fine time proving up the horses are stolen. We've got to take a chance. There's a good chance of a sale in Tucson."

Within an hour the herd, already corralled for the chance of a quick sale, was being driven to the glen known as the Hideout, a little mountain park with water and good feed where Pillsoll placed the horses that his men drove off from far-away ranches, or Pillsoll bought from other horse dealers of his own sort, keeping them there until their brands were doctored and possible pursuit died down. There were two entrances to the Hideout, one through a narrow gut almost blocked by a fallen boulder, with only a passage wide enough to let through horse and rider single file, a way that could be easily barricaded or masked so that none would suspect any opening in the cliff. The second led by a winding way through a desolate region, over rock that left no sign and wound by twists and turns that none but the initiated could follow. The place, accidentally discovered, was perfect for its purpose. There was feed enough for the entire herd for a month. There was a cabin in a side gully of the park, near the blocked entrance, the whole place was honeycombed with caves, in the towering sidewalls and underground.

Five of the nine left of the Waterline outfit drove the herd. Hahn and Parsons could both ride, but they were not experts at handling horses. They chose to go with Pillsoll and the outfit-cook, while the rest took the long way round to the other way in. The four lingered to give the rest a start.

"I hate leaving the country without evening up some way with the Bourke outfit," said Pillsoll. "D—n him and the rest of them, they broke the luck for us. As for the girl, if . . ."

"Oh, quit throwing the bull con about that, Jim," said Parsons bluntly. "Sandy Bourke's a d—n good man for you to leave alone an' you know it. Talk ain't goin' to hurt him."

"I'm coming back some time," said Pillsoll with a string of oaths. "Then you'll see something besides talk."

Parsons jeered at him. Pillsoll was no longer the leader and he knew it. But he hung on to the semblance of authority that an open quarrel with Butch might shatter. Butch was a bully, but Pillsoll respected his shooting. And Hahn sided with him. The cook did not count.

Pillsoll carried with him a fine pair of binoculars and, as they rode leisurely on and reached a vantage point, he swept the tumbled horizon for signs of any strange riders. It was the caution of habit as much as actual fear of a raid.

At times Pillsoll rode aside from the trail to a ridge crest for wider vision. At last, coming up the pass of Willow creek, he sighted Molly and Donald with Grit trotting beside them. It was the dog that confirmed his first surmise. He had heard that Molly had returned, but he had not dared a visit to the Three Star. Who the rider with her was he did not care. That it was a tenderfoot was plain by his clothes and by his seat. As he adjusted the powerful glasses to a better focus Pillsoll's face glowed to an ugly smile.

"I'll show you if I do nothing but talk," he said to Butch after he told them of his discovery. "We'll wait for them along the trail. We'll send the chap with her back about."

"And what'll you do with her?" asked Hahn. "We've had enough of skirts, Pillsoll. This is no time to be mixed up with them."

"Isn't it?" The drink had given Pillsoll some of his old swagger, and the prospect of hatching the revenge over which he had brooded as long took possession of him. "Then you're a bigger fool than I thought you, Hahn. That particular skirt, aside from my personal interest in her, represents about a quarter of a million dollars—maybe more. She's got a quarter interest and a little better in the Molly mine. The Three Star owns another quarter. How much will they give up to have her back? Bourke's her guardian, remember. I think the chap with her may be young Keith. We won't monkey with him. He'll do to tell what happened. But we'll take the girl along and we'll send back word of how much we want to let her go. After I'm through with her. She may not go back the same as she came, but they won't know that and they'll pay enough to set us up and to h—l with the herd."

"You'll have the whole county searching the range," objected Parsons. "There's a lot know something about the Hideout and they'll use Wyatt to show 'em the way. Bourke'll guess where she is."

"Let him. Wyatt don't know about the caves, does he? We can take her some other place tomorrow. We won't say anything now to the kid about a ransom. We'll mail a letter after we fix details. But we'll take the girl into the Hideout now. That tenderfoot'll be lucky if he drifts back to the Three Star by nightfall afoot. We'll be out of the place long before that. And we'll put her where they can't find her till they come through. I'm running this."

The cook had ridden on ahead. Now he was waiting for them, looking back. Parsons shrugged his shoulders. "How do we split?" asked Hahn.

"Three ways," said Pillsoll. "We'll take her to the cabin. The rest'll be at the other end. We'll keep Cookie with us—for the present. No need for the boys to know about it. We can manage that all right. Three ways, and I handle the girl."

Butch Parsons grinned at him. "I thought you'd lost all your nerve, Jim, but I guess I was wrong. All right, it goes as it lays. Now, then, how'll we bring it off?"

Pillsoll talked glibly, convincingly. Hahn had some objections, but Pillsoll overruled them plausibly enough. "I don't see the sense of letting the kid go," questioned Hahn. "He's good for a big split as well as the girl."

"You're a fool when it comes to looking ahead, Hahn. You always were," answered Pillsoll. "Keith—the old man—is too big a fish to monkey with. Got too many pulls and connections. He'd have the whole country out and the trick played up big in every dinky newspaper. We've got one fish—or will have—no sense straining the net. We don't want the kid. Let him string along back beat way he can. We'll get all the start we need. What else would you do with him?"

"Stow him away somewhere and send a tip where they can find him in a day or two."

Pillsoll shot a look of contempt at Butch, making the proposal.

"You and Hahn make a good team," he said. "No. One's enough. He may get lost—we'll take his horse—and that won't be our fault. He may make Three Star late this afternoon. I wish I could be with him when he tells what he knows. Time they locate the Hideout, we'll be miles away through the south end and they'll send a tip where they can find him in a day or two."

have one h—l of a time trailing us over the rocks. The horses can stay in the park. If we put this deal over right we don't need to bother about horse-trading. We can get clean out of the country with a big stake, go down to South America and start up a place. There are live times and good plays down there, boys. All right, Cookie, we're coming. I'm going to take another look. It's ten to one they're making for Beaver Dam lake on a picnic."

He laughed and the two laughed with him as he went for his survey and returned, announcing that the girl and her escort were entering the ravine at the other end.

"They didn't recognize me," he said. "We've got to take Cookie into this. You and Butch ride on through the trees a ways, Hahn, till you get back of them. Then we'll get 'em between us. I'll wise Cookie up to what we are doing."

It was more than doubtful whether the three ever intended for a second to allow Cookie to share in the ransom money, but Pillsoll easily persuaded him that he would be a partner, adding that it would be foolish to let all the riders into the pot.

"She's Molly Casey of the Casey mine," he told him. "Sandy Bourke's her guardian. We'll make him come through with twenty or thirty thousand, safe? But there ain't enough to go all round and make a showing."

Cookie was a willing rascal and a natural adept at the double-cross. He raised no objections and the trap was set and sprung.

"You go ahead, Cookie, and open up the gate," said Pillsoll. Hahn and Butch were speeding Donald Keith on his way with close-fung bullets. "I'm going to have a little private talk with this lady. Go to the cabin and get some grub ready. There's plenty there. Spread yourself. We'll be along in a little while. That was a nice job of roping you did. I won't forget it."

"Allus c'ud lass fair to middlin'," grinned the man through yellow, stumpy teeth. "That's why I tote a rope. An' I sure had a purty target."

Pillsoll scowled at him and he rode off. Molly, the lariat twisted about her upper body from shoulders to waist, constricting her arms, fastened where she could not reach it, by a hitch, sat on Blaze, looking with steady contempt at Pillsoll, who held her bridle rein. He regarded her with sleek complacency and then his eyes slowly traveled over her rounded figure, accentuated by her riding trowsers.

"Grown to be quite a beauty, quite a woman, Molly, my dear," he said. "Never should have suspected you'd turn out such a wonder. Clothes make the woman, but it takes a proper figure to set them off. And you've got all of that."

"What are you going to do with me?" she asked.

"I'm not going to tell you—yet. It depends upon circumstances, my dear. We'll all have a little chat after lunch. I'd take that rope off if I wasn't afraid I might lose you. You are quite precious."

She looked through him as if he had been a sheet of glass. From her first sight of him, back in childhood, she had known instinctively the man was evil. But she was not afraid. The blood that ran in her veins was pure and bore in its crimson food the sturdy heritage of pioneers who had outfaced dangers of death and torture. She was all Westerner. The blood was fighting blood. She felt it urged in her pulses while her brain bade her bide her time. Rage mounted as she faced the possible issues of this capture, the flaunting dismissal of young Keith. She heard the laughter that followed the rifle shots and surmised that they were having their idea of a joke with the lad.

If he got back—then Sandy would come after her. She was very sure of Sandy and that he would find her. Until he did she must use her wits.

And Grit, gallant Grit, wounded and lying in the chaparral!

Though she still gazed through Pillsoll rather than at him, the scorn showed in her eyes and bit through his assumption of ease as acid bites through skin, eating its way on. He burned to wipe out his own trickeries, his cowardice, his failures, to wreak a vile satisfaction on this girl who sat so disdainfully, with her chin lifted, her lips firm, oblivious of him. She baffled him. A mind like Pillsoll's never had the clarity of prevision to see the strength of character that had been in the prospector's child, even as he had never suspected her unfolding to beauty. It roused the vandal in him—he longed to break her, mar her.

The return of Butch and Hahn brought him back to the fact that he was not playing this deal alone. While they might allow him some personal license, to them the girl represented so much money.

He cut short Butch's boast of the way they had scared young Keith. Both Hahn and Parsons felt a coil of embarrassment at the silence, almost the serenity, of their captive. They had expected her to act far differently, to rage, threaten, cry out. She almost abashed them.

"See if you can round up that d—n dog, Butch," said Pillsoll. "I plugged him but we want to be sure he don't get away. He might help Keith's kid, for one thing. And he clamped my arm."

swift care that showed familiarity with their task, so placing them that they appeared as if a part of the wall.

Below them, Molly saw the hidden park that lay so snugly back of the barrier walls. It was an irregular oval that appeared to curve at the far end. The trail down was plainly marked. It forked after they reached the general level and the branch they took led into a side gulch where a log cabin stood, smoke coming from its chimney. Pillsoll took the rein of Blaze again and they broke into a canter. At the cabin Pillsoll took Molly from the saddle and carried her into the rude interior. There he set her on a chair. Cookie was busy at a stove frying ham and eggs, with coffee simmering.

"You'd better sit up and eat nicely, my dear," said Pillsoll as he unbound

"No Sense in Being Stubborn."

her. "You'll have to sooner or later, you know. No sense in being stubborn."

She said nothing; but he saw a gleam in her eyes as she glanced toward the table where Hahn was setting out plates and cutlery.

"You'll eat with a fork, Molly," said Pillsoll. "Those steel knives are too handy for you. There's a nasty look in those blue eyes of yours that will have to be tamed—have to be tamed," he repeated as he took a demijohn from a corner and poured out a liquor that sent the rock of its raw strength sickeningly through the cabin. "Here's to your health, Molly—Molly Mine!"

The others laughed and drank their share before they ate the food that Cookie, placed before them, talking louder, glowing flushed with the crude whisky, while Molly sat facing the door, striving to catch something that might help, might give some clue. But the talk was all of the brawl at the Waterline with contemptuous mention of Wyatt and the rest. They seemed by common consent to ignore her once she had refused the food.

This attitude weakened her resistance though she strove against it. She had nerved herself to meet action. Now, she seemed to count for little more than a bundle, of more or less value, that, having been secured, could wait its time for utility. Yet, before she had telescoped her vision to extend through and beyond Pillsoll, she had seen devils looking from his eyes, smug devils, but none the less menacing, risen from the man's own private hell pit.

Pillsoll looked at his watch.

"The horses should be showing up pretty soon," he said and rose, a little unsteadily. The effects of the liquor were patent on all of them.

"Butch, you and Hahn go down with Cookie and keep 'em down at the south end. Got 'em to turn the horses loose. And get them out of the place as soon as you can after they've eaten. Better take what stuff you want, Cookie."

"Keep your eyes peeled on Cookie," Pillsoll said in a lower voice as the ranch chef went out of the door with his arms piled with provisions. "He might take a notion to talk too much."

"Where are you going to stow her?" asked Hahn. "Leave her here in Split Rock cave?"

The callous reference to her as if she was something inanimate chilled Molly. If only she had a gun! She had laughed at Donald's tenderfoot insistence upon carrying the one he had brought West as a part of his outfit and had never attempted to use. The cook's too well thrown rope would have probably thwarted any move of hers if she had had a weapon. Her fingers crept up toward her throat touching a slender chain upon which, ever since she had returned to the Three Star, hung a gold disk, the coin with which Sandy had gambled, the luck-piece. To Molly, even now, it was a talisman that held promise. If they left her behind them, somehow Sandy would unearth her. But that hope died.

"She'll stay in sight and touch," said Pillsoll. "Then we'll know she's safe. We'll make Windy quick to-night and stay there. It's as good a place as I know. One of us can ride over the mountain to Redding and mail the letter."

Butch nodded. "Come on, Hahn," he said. "Let's leave 'em together." (TO BE CONTINUED.)

Wit and Humor

REBUKED

Old Lady (to druggist).—I want a box of canine pills.

Druggist.—What's the matter with the dog?

Old Lady (indignantly).—I want you to know, sir, that my husband is a gentleman.

The druggist put up some canine pills in profound silence.—Congressionalist.

Hit Was the Owl.

A Londoner looking over a country estate was startled by a peculiar screeching noise.

"I say, old chap," he asked the agent, "what was that?"

"An owl."

"I know that, my dear fellow, but 'oo's doin' the 'owling'?"

Quite Unthinkable.

He—I make ten thousand a year—though you probably would not think it to look at me.

She—No, and I wouldn't think it to hear you say it.

A Hot One.

He—I suppose it's pride of intellect, but I can't help despising a man who knows less than I do.

She—I don't see what else you could do.

Still Practicing.

"I suppose your friend, the doctor, having married a very wealthy woman, has given up his practice."

"Not entirely; he's now treating her pocketbook for obesity."

DINNER TALK

Reggie.—We should waste nothing; I advocate using even calf's brains, doncher know.

Miss Diggs.—As articles of diet, Mr. Pinhead, or as organs of thought?

Fire Precaution.

Second Girl.—No, but I keep a lovely pair where I can get at 'em quick in case of fire.

On the Campus.

"Come to the party and bring a few nice girls," said Freshman Fred.

"I'll be there with belles," declared Sophomorton.

The Difference.

New Yorker.—You Bostonians are a strange race. The difference between you and I—

Bostonian.—Yes, that's the difference.

Shocking.

Barr.—I hear that Martin is a prude.

Carr.—I'll say he is. Why, he won't even look through the women's advertising pages of magazines.

Hard to Find.

"Where is your ideal place to spend the summer?"

"Any place where I don't have to spend very much else."

VERY CLOSE

She—Next to me, what do you like best in all the world?

He—I like to be right next to you.

Talked Too Much.

Mrs. Benham—Money talks.

Benham—Ask your banker to stop payment while I read the paper.

Knew What Was Wrong.

Owner.—What will it cost me to have my car fixed?

Garage man.—What's the matter with it?

"I don't know."

"Forty-eight dollars and fifty cents."

Then he headed north and found it up near the "jumping-off place"

No matter what part of the world you may find yourself in, few things make you feel more at home than to walk into a store and discover your favorite smoking tobacco for sale.

You get a great thrill from seeing your home newspaper in a strange land and an even greater thrill on meeting someone from the old home town. But tobacco certainly comes next in the order of importance in away-from-home thrills.

With your favorite tobacco in your favorite pipe, life is worth living in almost any corner of the globe.

This thought was inspired by the following interesting letter from Mr. W. E. Bromley, an Edgeworth smoker from Fort Wayne, Ind.:

Larus & Brother Co.,
Richmond, Va.
Gentlemen:

In some of your advertisements from time to time I have noticed letters from different users of Edgeworth Smoking Tobacco and I wondered if anyone ever had a more varied experience than I have had.

When in Valparaiso, South America, I could get it; and when I was as far north as a man could well go without going to the "jumping-off place," I could get Edgeworth Ready-Rubbed.

I have an old briar that I have had for ten years and it never had a crumb of any but Edgeworth in it.

If that isn't going some, "you tell me."

Yours truly,

If Mr. Bromley makes frequent skips from continent to continent, his record of keeping all tobacco but Edgeworth out of his briar is indeed noteworthy.

Although Edgeworth does reach the far corners of the earth, there must be times when the supply runs low in Zanzibar and other remote districts.

But as a rule Edgeworth smokers, wherever they are, generally manage to find a way to get Edgeworth, for they don't feel as if they are really smoking unless the tobacco comes from a little blue can.

If you are not an Edgeworth smoker but would like an opportunity to find out if you want to be one, send your name and address to Larus & Brother Company, 75 South 21st Street, Richmond, Va.

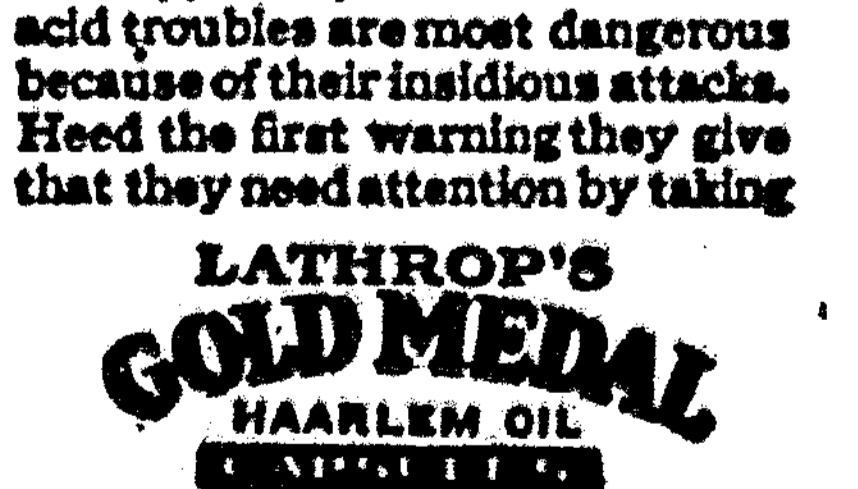

You will receive almost immediately free samples of both Edgeworth Plug Slice and Ready-Rubbed. Then you can judge for yourself what you think about this tobacco that so many smokers claim gives complete pipe-satisfaction.

If you will include the name and address of your regular tobacco dealer with your request for the free samples, your courtesy will be appreciated.

To Retail Tobacco Merchants: If your jobber cannot supply you with Edgeworth, Larus Brother Company will gladly send you prepaid by parcel post a one- or two-dozen carton of any size of Edgeworth Plug Slice or Ready-Rubbed for the same price you would pay the jobber.

An efficient and valuable man does what he can, whether the community pays him for it or not.—Thoreau.

Future of Education in the United States

The National Education Association, which has just closed its convention in San Francisco, has a very definite and concrete policy, which it is putting before the American people with every force in its power. Summarized, it is working for adequate public school finance, rigid Americanization of the foreign-born, a new rural school policy, a drive against governmental parsimony in education, and the passage of the Education bill.

The central features of a forward looking program covering at least the next decade of service, are:

- (1) A comprehensive education program to aid in assimilation of the foreign-born;
- (2) Such a reorganization of school curricula as will adapt the schools better to new conditions and needs in national life;
- (3) The reorganization and re-direction of rural education, that the best of American farmers may be retained on the farms;
- (4) A much more general equalization of both advantages and the burdens of education through a more extensive pooling of the costs for maintaining what is for the common good of all;
- (5) Provision for the placing of an adequately educated and adequately trained teacher in every class room in the United States; and
- (6) The nationalizing of education in the minds of our people with some intelligent form of national aid in school support to insure a better equalization of both the advantages and the burdens of education as between the states.

WASHINGTON VS. JACKSON IN BRONZE STIRS UP CAPITAL

By JOHN DICKINSON OHERMAN

LIEUT. COL. CLARENCE O. SHERRILL, U. S. A., is the handy man, efficiency wizard or something like that of Washington, D. C. He is the President's aid and is also in charge of the office of public buildings and grounds. So it's his business to keep things tidy in the nation's capital.

Colonel Sherrill is certainly a busy man. His duties "run the gamut from weed-puller to bridge-builder." Every day he is called upon to act as engineer, architect, artist, interior and exterior decorator, landscape gardener, tree doctor, florist, game keeper, fashion dictator, director of outdoor sports and censor of beauty, morals and safety.

He co-operates in selecting sites for monuments, makes plans for their dedication and memorial, and keeps them cleaned and decorated. He causes public squares to bloom, fountains and bands to play, and sandpiles to grow for the kiddies. He arranges patriotic parades and celebrations, issues permits and invitations, makes traffic regulations, erects pavilions, receives boy scouts, reviews high school cadets and serves on the floor committees of charity balls.

Well, last spring some of Colonel Sherrill's experts in metallurgy discovered that the bronze used in Mills' statue of Washington in Washington circle, Pennsylvania avenue and Twenty-second street, was being badly corroded by the elements; that the equestrian statue must come down and have the moth holes plugged up, the horse being positively mangy.

So derricks and tackle were employed in an attempt to get the general off his perch. George Washington was extremely "rot" in his ways. The statue refused to budge. So for days high-power flames and torches, mallet and chisels, blazed and backed away without result. But at last the first president and his steed were slowly swung from their granite base and ignominiously rolled through the streets on a motor truck to a gondola freight car, bound for a repair shop in Brooklyn.

Of course all this was watched by curious crowds. And no sooner had the statue been removed than this word went all over Washington—and the United States:

"Andrew Jackson's statue is to be removed from Lafayette square and replaced by that of George Washington in Washington circle!"

A roar of nation-wide protest followed from Democrats.

"Swap statues! Remove Andrew Jackson from his seventy-year-old place of honor in Lafayette square overlooking the White House and replace him with George Washington! Never, sir! Never! It's an outrage, nothing but the rankest sort of partisan politics!"

The storm broke when a story was printed that, in accordance with an expressed wish of the President, the office of public buildings and grounds, was seriously considering the change.

"One gloriously bright morning late last summer," ran the story of how the proposed idea was born. "The President and two very high officials of the government were standing looking out of a north window in the east room. During a pause in the conversation the President is reported to have said, 'There is the finest view in Washington!'"

"The fact that the statue of Jackson has for many years been the brunt of criticism and abuse by visitors, and even some of the old-time residents, principally because of its hobby-horse effect, was called to his attention," continued this recital. "He was asked if he did not think the view he admired so greatly could not be improved by the removal of the Jackson statue and the erection in the center of the park of a more pleasing work of art."

"When the suggestion was made to replace the Jackson statue with the greatly admired Washington statue, which is so little known by the residents of the city and is seen by only a few of the visitors because of its rather remote location, the President is said to have agreed most enthusiastically. He was familiar with the Washington statue. More than once he had passed it, and the office of public buildings and grounds was very shortly afterward acquainted with this little conversation in the window of the east room and thus was planted the seed of an idea that will probably develop into an actual fact within the next twelve months."

This series of supposed events had been known in Washington only a few days when Senator Shields of Tennessee fired the opening howitzer. The lower house of the Tennessee legislature supported Senator Shields by passing a resolution opposing the deposition of the rugged old president. When Tennessee was being welded into a state Jackson, a young man of twenty-one, went to the new region as public prosecutor and was afterward always identified with Tennessee, dying at his famous place, The Hermitage, near Nashville.

"Have the American people forgotten that when the British in the War of 1812 burned the White House and tore down the American flag, it was Jackson who restored the White House and re-erected the American flag?" wrathfully asked S. O. Holskell, president of the board of trustees in charge of The Hermitage.

Another state with a claim to Jackson is South Carolina. There is still a controversy between North and South Carolina over which state "Old Hickory" was born in. North Carolinians say that he first saw the light of day in Waxhaw, a settlement in Union county, North Carolina, but South Carolina says he was born on Waxhaw creek in Lancaster county, South Carolina.

At any rate the South Carolina legislature passed a joint resolution objecting to the removal of Jackson from the spot on which his war horse has been rearing these three-score years and ten. Perhaps the legislature was stimulated by the editor of the Columbia Record, who three days before expressed the prevalent South Carolina idea on such a proposal, saying:

"The proposal to remove the Jackson equestrian statue is an outrage on the patriotism of the men from whose midst Jackson came. He was the first of the great leaders and fighters to step from the log cabin to the top of political and military pedestals, and as such the republic honors him for it."

Of course the adherents of Jackson did not have the field to themselves. Many entered the controversy in favor of the change. There was every prospect of a most interesting battle of opinions, to be carried on into the next congress. And then think of the oratory pro and con!

It seems a pity that President Harding had to go and spoil it all.

But Senator McKellar of Tennessee wrote the President, asking his intention. And of course the President had to tell the truth—that he had not the slightest intention of bringing about the swap in statues—and never had.

These two statues, many experts think, have many shortcomings from the viewpoint of art. Yet they are historic in more senses than one. The Jackson statue dates from 1853 and the Washington statue from 1900.

The Jackson statue is the more famous of the two—in fact is known the country over as "Jackson on his rocking-horse." Much fun has been poked at it. It is undeniably old-fashioned; to say the least, as is also that of George Washington. Borlino's statue of Sheridan is reproduced herewith for the sake of contrast and to show modern art in equestrian statues.

In connection with these two statues of Jackson and Washington there is a most interesting story. The statue of Jackson is the work of Clark Mills (1815-1890), and is the first equestrian statue by an American. It was cast from cannon captured in the battle of New Orleans, and was unveiled with great ceremony Jan. 8, 1853, the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, the orator being Stephen A. Douglas, then senator from Illinois.

Clark Mills, born in New York and early losing his parents, drifted to Charleston, S. C., where he obtained work in a plaster and cement mill. Art education he had none, but says Lorado Taft, in his "History of American Sculpture," Mills' Yankee wits were with him, and he soon discovered a new method of taking a cast from a living face. Then, resolved to try cutting in marble, he procured a block of Carolina stone, and commenced a bust of John C. Calhoun. Although unfamiliar with the professional methods, he invented a system of his own, and succeeded in producing the best likeness ever taken of Calhoun. The bust was purchased by the city of Charleston, and Mills was presented with a gold medal by the Commonwealth.

Fame followed quickly, and John Preston, a wealthy gentleman of Columbia, befriended the young artist. Mills started for Washington to see the statue in the capitol, but stopped off long enough in Richmond to view the Houdon statue of Washington. This was the first statue he had ever seen.

At Washington, continues Lorado Taft, "Mills eagerly looked at the statue of Washington, by Greenough, and though he thought the anatomy perfect, he could not associate General Washington with the statue. The crowd of visitors, so far as he could learn, invariably condemned it for want of historical truth. He came to the conclusion while standing there that should he ever have an order for a statue the world should find fault for his giving too much truth and not for the want of it." And it would seem that he carried out precisely this vow, when he created the much-maligned Jackson statue.

During Mills' stay in Washington he was approached by the Hon. Cave Johnson, then postmaster general and president of the Jackson monument committee, with an invitation to furnish designs for a bronze equestrian statue of the victor of New Orleans. Having never seen an equestrian statue, the sculptor felt obliged to refuse the flattering offer. But, pondering over the subject, Mills finally resolved to produce a design, and the final result of his labors now stands in the center of the park opposite the White House.

For nearly a year Clark Mills worked patiently on a small model on a new principle—that of bringing the hind legs of a horse directly beneath the center of its body, thus producing perfect balance. Mills bought land near Lanham, Md., and built a foundry and studio and as he was about to begin the melting and recasting of the bronze cannon from which the statue is made a gale destroyed his studio. Before he could rebuild it, the foundry was destroyed by fire. It was after all this, added to the breaking of cranes, the bursting of furnaces and six failures in the body of the horse that the first equestrian statue to be made by an American was completed.

From his original designs he produced a replica for the city of New Orleans and directly afterward began work upon the Washington statue—later removed for repairs from Washington circle. And upon the completion of this work he cast the statue of Freedom, atop of the Capitol dome, from designs by Crawford.

Of Mills' equestrian statue of General Jackson, Lorado Taft has this comment to make:

"Who today begrudges this brave pioneer his little meed of success? Let us hope he never became conscious of his defects. His grasp of his subject is purely a mechanical one; his motif in the statue, a problem in equilibrium. He had never seen an equestrian statue; there was none in this country to see. It seems at first thought strange that America's initial performance in this line should be of surpassing audacity, but it is the story of all beginnings; the intrepidity of ignorance; the inevitable approach in the most roundabout way, and equally important, the lack of genuine artistic inspiration. Having no notion or suspicion of dignified sculptural treatment of a theme, the clever carpenter felt nevertheless the need of a 'feature.' Perhaps he had heard of 'action.' At any rate, he built a colossal horse, adroitly balanced on the hind legs; and America gazed with bated breath. Nobody knows or cares whether the rider looks like Jackson; the extraordinary pose of the charger absorbs all attention, all admiration."

In comparison with the Jackson statue, the "prodigious congressional joke," Mills' next effort, the Washington statue, is tame. Instead of balancing the bronze steed on a single hoof, a logical sequence from previous effort, Mills, suggests Taft, "gave his admirers a Napoleon-crossing-the-Alps effect. But whatever we think of Clark Mills the sculptor, we owe a debt of gratitude to Clark Mills, our first professional founder of statuary."

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale
BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

TUESDAY'S ICE CREAM

"In a children's hospital," said Daddy, "when it was very hot the matron allowed the boys and girls who could get about fairly easily to go down into the yard."

"I have told you of these hospital children before, as they are the ones I go to see when I'm in the city, and you have been told of the surprise the matron had for them one time."

"You remember how every child who was well enough was given a bathing-suit and then, late in the afternoon, they went down into the hospital yard and Jerry, the wonderful janitor man, played the hose upon them and they jumped into its cooling spray. Oh, what a good time they had!"

"Sometimes, too, you know, a big table was taken down into the yard and there the children would have their supper."

"They called that a picnic! Yes, every time they had supper in the yard they said it was their picnic party."

"But every Tuesday night they had ice cream, and that was the big party of the week."

"It gave Father Week's son Tuesday much joy to think that upon his day there was such a treat."

"And one night the Dreamland King told Tuesday he would give an added treat upon his day."

"Tuesday was delighted and, of course, as it was not yet time for Wednesday to appear, Tuesday was about—"

"Wednesday would appear all right on the very second following midnight, but it was now only nine o'clock and there were three hours before Wednesday would appear."

"Tuesday was very much excited to see what would happen."

"Pretty soon he saw the Dreamland King coming into the hospital. How handsome he did look. His face was so kindly, and he walked so softly, and it seemed to Tuesday as though every child smiled as the Dreamland King walked along."

"I'll tell you what I'm doing," said the Dreamland King to Tuesday.

"Do," said Tuesday.

"I'm giving some dreams about," said the Dreamland King, "and some are about toys and some are about games and frolics and some are about the days when those who're sick now will be quite well and will be going home."

"But I'm giving a particularly nice dream to Tony. Tony is that fine boy in the bed yonder."

"And the Dreamland King pointed toward a bed in which Tuesday saw, sleeping, a very fine-looking boy."

"He looks ever so nice," said Tuesday, "and he is as nice as he looks, I know."

"For I'm about once a week, as you know, and I always find Tony the same, cheery and happy and making every one in the hospital cheery and happy, too."

"Visitors say they are awfully fond of Tony and that they admire him just ever so much."

"I don't wonder," said the Dreamland King. "Tony has always been a friend of mine."

"He doesn't know how much I like him. Well, I'm giving him my best ice cream dream."

"My best ice cream dream is a wonderful dream."

"Do tell me about it," said Tuesday.

"It's a dream in which the dreamer—or the one to whom I give the dream—dreams that there is a castle made of ice cream and that they've been invited to make themselves at home in the castle and eat all the ice cream they can."

"They eat of the walls of the castle and of the towers and of the turrets, and as they eat, more and more ice cream seems to come in place of that which they have already eaten."

LABOR SHORTAGE IS THE PREDICTION FOR THE WEST

Denver.—Industrial and employment conditions in Colorado and adjacent mountain states continue on an increasingly steady and prosperous basis, according to the report of conditions made by Quince Record, director of the United States employment service of the Department of Labor for this district. Record reports that this is especially noticeable in metal mining, agriculture and manufacturing and building, being manifested by a shortage of labor in these branches.

Compared with the report of the United States as a whole, issued in Washington, the mountain district is seeking labor, while throughout the country at large a small decrease in employment has taken place.

In Colorado, due to increased acreage in agricultural crops and vegetables, and sufficient moisture, there is an exceptionally strong demand for agricultural workers, with a shortage of several hundred field workers. The wheat harvest, now at hand, will require many more additional farm hands. Increased activity in sugar beet cultivation over 1922 has necessitated importation of several thousand beet workers into the state to care for the crop. Metal mining, with the exception of silver, and development work in conjunction is on the upgrade, resultant in a demand for experienced workers which is not being met.

Coal mining, however, due to low seasonal demands, continues on a part-time basis, with the majority of the mines operating on only a part-time basis.

Nearly all industrial plants continue capacity operations, particularly those manufacturing mining and smelting machinery, building materials, steel products and car equipment. Experienced mechanics are needed at these points.

In New Mexico industrial employment is "slightly increased and steady, particularly noticed in agricultural pursuits."

Twenty-six federal and state road construction projects and many municipal improvement programs raise a demand for workers, also, the report declares.

Apologizes for Falling Five Stories Los Angeles, Calif.—Falling five stories from his room in the Stillwell hotel, to the roof of the hotel garage, Windsor Putnam, San Francisco college student, got to his feet again, apologized to the man in charge of the garage for making his unexpected call, made his way from the roof and disappeared. Later Putnam was found wandering in the street, a block from the hotel. Examination by police officers proved the lad's jaws had been broken and that he possibly suffered a fracture of the skull.

Federal Road Aid Asked Salt Lake City.—An appropriation of $100,000,000 annually by the federal government as its share in state road building and construction of highways by states through Indian reservations in the West was favored in a resolution adopted by the Western Association of State Highway Officials. Before adjournment and decision to hold the next convention in New Orleans, the association also completed the organization of a permanent subassociation.

To Test Menace of New Ice Age

MacMillan Expedition Will Study Recent Movements of Glaciers in Greenland.

New York.—Is another ice age coming? Are the scenes of the latter Pleistocene age—the geologic period which immediately preceded our own—to be repeated? And, if so, what will it mean to the inhabitants of the earth?

In an effort to determine whether there is any likelihood of such a cataclysmic occurrence the MacMillan expedition recently left for Greenland to study the recent movements of glaciers on that island continent. The great ice age ended, according to scientists, about 25,000 years ago, but the ice has left its footprints, by which its advances and retreats and movements may be traced.

During the ice age, or the glacial period, there was a marked lowering of temperature over the whole earth, and 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 square miles of the globe's surface became entirely covered with ice. Half the region thus covered lay in North America; more than half the remainder lay in Europe. But far away, even to the tropical forests of India and the mountains of Asia, glaciation occurred where there had been no ice previous to the ice age. On mountains which now bear burdens of continual snow and ice the snow line descended 5,000 feet lower than it is at present.

Human Beings Succumbed.

Imagine great sheets of ice and hard-packed snow creeping over so slowly but surely over the temperate areas of Europe and America, and imparting to them an Arctic cold to which many of those early human beings, who in their savagery were little better than beasts, succumbed. These mighty layers of ice, miles and miles in thickness, spread over rivers and mountains and plains, filling up the valleys and the lakes and the seas. In Europe the ice moved forth from the Scandinavian highlands and buried the lowlands of Belgium, Russia, Denmark, Germany and Holland; and then, crossing the North sea, touched the shores of Britain. Besides these great continental ice sheets, large individual glaciers formed in the valleys of the Alps and spread out in all directions. Separate glaciers joined on the plains of France and Italy and in the Rhine and Danube valleys.

Four times the enormous sheets of ice advanced and covered the land. Four times they retreated after uncounted centuries, each time leaving a terminal moraine of boulders, earth and other debris which serves as an indication of the route of the ice on its advance southward. The second of these four glacial advances brought the ice farther south. In North America the terminal moraine of the ice can still be observed, and followed, in a roughly correct line, over Long Island through the town of Jamaica, as far south as Perth Amboy, N. J. The line then runs in a northwesterly direction through a point where the town of Morristown is now located. The smooth, low plains of the upper Mississippi valley were covered with ice, while the Ohio and Missouri rivers owe their beginning to the glacial advances of the ice age.

Leaves Its Mark.

Not only by the terminal moraines, which indicate the extent of the various ice advances, can the route of glaciation be read. The passage of ice over the hard, rocky floor of the earth leaves a peculiar kind of marking. This erosion, due to the work of glaciers and ice sheets, is of a smooth, rounded nature imparted to the rocks which contrasts decidedly with the pinnacled, irregular surfaces which are the work of ordinary weathering.

The whole of the enormous island of Greenland is covered with an ice cap or ice sheet which, pressing down under the weight of accumulated snow of centuries, imparts a gradual movement to the various glaciers along its edges.

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease. If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition, they may cause the other organs to become diseased. Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness, are often times symptoms of kidney trouble. Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store. However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. "Burlung if I know! You see, I was sorter mixed up in a swap when some feller came by and told it, and I didn't pay no pertickler attention. But I reckon likely they'd been quarrelling, or something that-g-way."—Kansas City Star.

Here's a New Word.

You can't beat the flapper for coin-ing new words and expressions. Two young girls were aboard a Walkikid car. One had on a new dress, the design of which might or might not have been semi-Egyptian. She was explaining to her friend that it was the latest style. "Quite tootankish, I'll say," her friend remarked.

New U. S. Rifle is Automatic

Demonstration of Latest Infantry Arm at Aberdeen Meets Government Tests.

Washington.—Every doughboy may be practically a machine gunner in future wars due to progress made by ordnance experts in developing a semiautomatic shoulder rifle to replace the regular service magazine gun.

Recent demonstration firing with the latest postwar model, the Garand semiautomatic, at the Aberdeen (Md.) proving grounds, has convinced many officers they are on the road to the long-sought solution of the proper weapon for the infantry.

The Garand, named after its inventor, John C. Garand, long employed at the Springfield arsenal, is one of numerous semiautomatics with which army experts have been working. It is approximately the same size and weight as the army standard Springfield magazine action rifle, with which all American forces are equipped, said to be the most effective military rifle in the world. The Springfield, however, with operation of the bolt action necessary to reload for each shot, has a maximum rate of fire of about twenty-five shots a minute, while the Garand developed a speed of sixty shots a minute during the firing at Aberdeen.

Like 1903 Springfield. In many respects the new gun is an exact counterpart of the 1903 Springfield and it is lighter than the modified Enfield produced in quantity during the war. The automatic device applies only to the breech action for the purpose of ejecting shells and reloading.

It is necessary to pull the trigger each time to fire.

In the tests at Aberdeen a War department memorandum says:

"This gun was fired with great success and it at once became a matter of great interest to those who are watching it because of its possibilities for rapid, accurate and sustained firing from the shoulder, though being at the same time a light, portable gun which can be carried without fatigue to the individual soldier."

At another point the memorandum said the performance of the Garand under severe tests as to endurance promised "to fulfill the many requirements that will be imposed upon it."

Still to Be Developed. "Results thus far," concludes the memorandum, "justify the belief that such a weapon (a semiautomatic shoulder rifle) can be suitably developed and manufactured to replace the well-known magazine-fed hand-operated shoulder rifle."

Semiautomatic guns have been used for sporting purposes for years, but no mechanism suitable for military purposes has been produced. The Garand is still in its development stages; but there is no doubt that military experts expect it ultimately to replace the Springfield.

What changes in tactics will result have not yet been worked out.

With the infantry equipped to deliver nearly three times its present maximum volume of fire, however, and with infantry companies relieved of the job of packing present-day automatic rifles to the front and being greatly slowed down in movement thereby, it is obvious there will be radical changes in battle tactics when the new gun is issued.

Dewey's Grandsons Sailors Too

These two grandsons of the late Admiral Dewey have ambitions to capture an enemy fleet, too. They are starting at the bottom. The boys are Richard and Orville Dewey, both of them members of the District of Columbia Naval reserve. The photograph was made just before the reserves left on a practice cruise.

CATNIP PROVES AID IN TRAPPING MOUNTAIN LIONS

Wildcats Are Also Lured to Traps by Use of Oil.

Denver, Colo.—Catnip, the delight of the parlor tabby, is proving a monumental success in luring wildcats and mountain lions in the wilds of Colorado to their deaths in the traps of hunters of the United States biological survey, bureau of predatory animal control.

Stanley P. Young, chief of the bureau in Denver, in announcing the success of the experiment, reported the trapping of 40 bobcats and two mountain lions through the use of oil of catnip, diluted with oil of petroleum, which is liquid vaseline.

"Few members of the cat family in the Colorado wilds who have caught the scent of our catnip traps have passed us by," Young said. "We have not been able, however, to attract the kin of the dog, such as the wolf and coyote, nor have we been successful in luring predatory bears.

"We started the experiments last November with the state board of stock inspection. We anticipate using oil of catnip in our work on a more extensive scale."

The 40 bobcats caught by the bureau were trapped on the South Park range and the sheep drive north of Fruita, Colo., while one of the lions was captured in the trap of Bryan Morrison, government hunter, near Dolores, Colo., and the other met its fate when the steel jaws of a trap closed over its paws near Saltillo, Colo.

Catnip for the experiment was obtained from the government experimental farm, conducted under the bureau of plant industry at Washington. A ton of the plant was grown and about thirty ounces of the oil extracted. Two ounces were allotted the Denver bureau.

Dog Battles Rattler and Saves Boy's Life

Holton, Mich.—A big shepherd dog probably saved the life of Cornelius Willis, twelve-year-old son of Ambrose Willis, recently when the boy was attacked by a large rattlesnake while herding cattle. As the snake struck at the boy, the dog gave battle, and finally killed the snake. The dog was bitten by the snake and a veterinary was called to treat it.

The kill of predatory animals by the biological survey during May was the largest of the year, Young announced. The total of 249 predatory animals killed included 243 coyotes, five bobcats and one lynx. In addition, eight badgers were taken, along with 18 porcupines. The total kill of animals so far is 3,500.

The conditions of this remarkable offer are so simple and fair that every housewife in the United States has an opportunity to share in its benefits.

There Is No Other Food Like Grape-Nuts

Practically everybody knows Grape-Nuts as a delicious, nourishing breakfast food. And while it is common knowledge that Grape-Nuts with milk or cream is a complete food, many housewives do not know of the appetizing and economical dishes that can be prepared with Grape-Nuts.

Grape-Nuts lends itself, we believe, to more uses than any other cereal.

Thousands of women are finding varied uses for Grape-Nuts in their home cooking; and thousands of others would be glad to learn that Grape-Nuts adds distinctive flavor and nutritive qualities to a great variety of dishes.

So the thought back of our offer of over $7500.00 for Grape-Nuts Recipes is to bring out the new ways in which this wonderful food is adding to the health and pleasure of people everywhere.

Ask your grocer, or write to Dept. B, Postum Cereal Co., Inc., Battle Creek, Mich., for details of the offer of over $7500.00 for New Grape-Nuts Recipes, which must be mailed by August 31, 1923.

Sold by Grocers everywhere!

Boy Scouts Build Cabin

Alamogordo News:

Ten of the Alamogordo Scouts left for their reserve in Caballero canyon last Friday morning in charge of County Agent, W. J. Wase. The boys went as far as the Warnock mine in autos with a truck to carry provisions and equipment and from there, packed their baggage and supplies to the camp site, a distance of about two miles.

On Monday, W. B. Murrell went up and is assisting and supervising the construction of a permanent cabin. Merrill Fisher is deputy scout master in charge of the boys. The boys are reported to be having a good time by Mr. Ware, who came down on Monday.

A Few Glimpses of Masonic Activities

Former Governor Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois, made the principal address at the laying of the cornerstone of the new Masonic Temple at Elgin, Ill. Elmer E. Beach, Grand Master of Masons of Illinois, was in charge of ceremonies.

Admiral R. E. Coontz was the guest of honor at a farewell party given by the Sojourners' Club of Washington, an organization composed of Masons in the Army and Navy. Complimentary addresses were made by Rear Admiral L. E. Gregory, Capt. L. D. Hermle, U. S. Marine Corp, Col. John T. Axton, Chief of Chaplains of the Army, Brig. Gen. S. H. Wolfe, of the Finance Reserve Corps and Maj. Gen. Kenzie J. Walker, Chief of Finance.

Canadian lodges are holding "Father and Son Nights," on which occasions special entertainment is provided for the sons of the members. These gatherings are becoming very popular.

Medinah Temple, Mystic Shrine, Chicago, gives a series of Sunday lectures during the winter. Among the distinguished lecturers who appeared on the platform at Medinah Mosque are: Sir Gilbert Parker, Gov. Henry J. Allen, of Kansas, William Allen White, of Kansas, Former Governor Harding of Iowa, John Lloyd Thomas, of New York, and Dr. Edgar F. Smith, of Philadelphia.

Muskogee, Okla. will soon possess a new Masonic Temple, to cost $200,000, to take care of the needs of the three Masonic Lodges in that city.

There are 57 Masonic Lodges in Holland. The headquarters of the Craft is located at the Hague, occupying its own building, a gift of Prince Frederick of Orange, when he was Grand Master.

Country Residence Burned

The residence of J. W. Rigens burned Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Rigens was away from home and Mrs. Rigens was in bed sick when the fire broke out from an unknown source, and she only had time to get out of the house, dragging out a trunk and a few things over her arm. All their other household possessions were destroyed. The family resided on what is known as the Dalke Ranch, about four miles northeast of Capitan, which they bought from Ben Leslie last year. The house was a four-room, two-story building, well built, and a comfortable home, and the loss is a severe one to the family.
