Grand Jury Findings And Court Matters

The grand jury, after a week's deliberations, reported in 19 no bills and 21 true bills, most of the true bills being of a minor nature except those of George L. Ulrich and F. J. Sager of the Exchange Bank, who were indicted on three counts for having and holding in their possession, liberty bonds, $300 belonging to A. V. Swearingen; $500 to Hal Young; and $7,500 to S. F. Miller.

The three men, Titworth, Hobbs and Simer, who were accused of being connected with the killing of Robert Hurt near Capitan some time ago and were bound over, were indicted for murder in the first degree.

E. D. Boone, former cashier of the Lincoln State Bank was indicted for forging a note to the amount of $800.

In the case of James Goodall, charged with making and attempting to sell illicit liquor, he received a penitentiary sentence which the Judge afterwards suspended and fined him $50 and ordered his team returned to him.

"Light Horse Harry" Lee, who pled guilty to forging a check on N. B. Taylor & Sons to the Titworth Co., was first given a penitentiary sentence, but the same was suspended on his promise to leave the state.

The case in which Titworth, Hobbs and Simer were indicted for the murder of Hurt will be tried in the January, 1925 term of court in Alamogordo on a plea for a change of venue.

Vanishing Trails Of Romance

As we all know, Colorado is rich in legendary lore. "Vanishing Trails," by Warren E. Boyer of Denver, was written for the laudable purpose of preserving the Colorado legends of such trails.

In this issue of the Outlook, there appears an excerpt from the book, a legend of the Arapahoes, who dwell in the Rocky Mountain National Park many years ago, before the white man entered this wonderful national playground. It is a story of the triumph of Trail Ridge, with the "roof of the world" as its background. It is a tale of Ne-o-ta, an Indian maiden and Nakos, the Indian brave, who conquered his rival and won her love. Read it.

Lifting Silver Out of the Rut

Under the Pittman Purchasing Act, United States silver producers will urge upon the government Treasury, through a measure introduced in the Senate, to purchase 14,589,730 ounces of silver and coin 29,000,000 silver dollars originally intended during the war.

Producers contend the United States Treasury must pay for the silver at $1 an ounce under the old Pittman act. The silver dollars, if it contained, were those melted down and used to break down the market for metal in China, when it sold above $1.50 an ounce. The dollars were supplied by the New York Federal Reserve Bank to banks with branches in the Far East, and it is alleged that the step was not only detrimental to the interests of silver producers but that the Federal Reserve Bank acted without authority, since

Carrizozo School Notes

(By Supt. E. E. Cole)
In the small building the banner for best attendance for the month of April was captured by the second grade, Mrs. Lowe's room. In the High School building the banner is kept during the month of April by the eighth grade, Mrs. Harold Clarke's room.

We had a very pleasant visit, last week, from Mr. Rokey, Assistant State Superintendent of Schools, and State High School Inspector. Mr. Rokey tells us we are fully up to the standard in our academic work. We knew this already, of course, since several of our high school pupils have gone from Carrizozo to some of the best high schools in the country and made good from the start.

We are very glad indeed to have Mrs. Clarke back with us in the schools.

The students of all the commercial classes lately challenged all the rest of the high school to a spelling match and defeated them. The same commercial students were spelled down by the fifth grade. Some of the little words were pretty hard to spell. Some of these days we are going to have a spelling match among the teachers.

Baccalaureate sermon will be preached by Rev. McPherson of the Methodist church on Sunday evening, May 11, at eight o'clock. The public is cordially invited.

Commencement exercises will be held on the evening of May 15, at the Crystal Theatre, at eight o'clock. The program will appear in next week's papers.

At the last meeting of the Boy Scouts, the annual election of officers took place. E. E. Cole was elected Scoutmaster, T. E. Kelley Assistant Scoutmaster, D. A. Saunders, Albert Ziegler, and E. M. Brickley members of the Troop Committee. Mr. Cole showed the Troop the working principle of the wireless telegraph outfit which had been lately set up by the class in physics. He also gave some of the early history of wireless.

Program of the Rainbow Club which was given last Friday has been omitted for want of space.

Subsequently it was brought out that the Pittman Act does not confer such authority. The producers would require the Treasury to repurchase and recoin the dollars so used.

As for the silver metal, the 14,589,730 ounces were originally located for subsidiary silver coin under the same act by the Secretary of the Treasury. Later this order was revoked and the silver treated as a "loan" to be returned. The producers will demand that this metal be repurchased.

United States silver producers, now mining the white metal under adverse conditions, see in this new movement a means of maintaining a normal production with attendant steady payrolls. In the passage of the measure, no loss would accrue to the United States Treasury by reason of the maintained price because it would only be replacing coins "loaned" in an emergency.

The silver conference at Salt Lake in June, of which W. Mont Perry is chairman, is expected to develop other plans for stabilizing the industry.

Capitan News Notes

(By Supt. F. S. Copeland)
Do not forget the Sophomore Class night this coming Saturday, May 3. A splendid entertainment will be given.

Miss Fritz and Mrs. Ostorn were Roswell visitors over the week-end.

Cadets from the N. M. M. I. spent two days in camp at Hondo last week.

Forest Protection Week was fittingly observed by a large general program given by the Capitan schools last Friday night. A large crowd attended. Coffee and cake were served after the entertainment.

Commencement exercises will be held on Friday evening, May 16, at 8 o'clock. Senator Brickley will deliver the address. Several special musical numbers will be given.

The typewriting students are getting well along towards the completion of the necessary amount of work to obtain one point of credit. Geometry class's finishing book five.

In connection with the program last Friday night an exhibit of grade school work and of the sewing section of the home economics department was held. This proved very interesting to the many patrons attending.

An active part was taken in the Forest Protective essay contest by the pupils of the Capitan schools. The two best from the high school and the grades were sent to the Supervisor Arthur in the general contest from from the schools of the Lincoln National Forest. In the intermediate room, local prizes were won by Jane Provine and Frances Gardenshire.

White Mountain Association I. O. O. F.

The White Mountain Association I. O. O. F., composed of eight lodges of Odd Fellows and Rebekahs of Carrizozo, Alamogordo, Tularosa and Vaughn, held their annual convention at Alamogordo last Saturday. Dr. Miller, mayor of Vaughn, and Mrs. King of the same place, were elected president and secretary and Vaughn chosen as the next meeting of the association.

J. L. Lawson gave the address of welcome and Mrs. A. E. Thomas welcomed the visitors in behalf of the Woman's Club and the Eastern Star. J. Bert Leck, of Carlsbad, grand master of the order, delivered an address on the organized work of the state.

The degree team of Carrizozo conferred the Rebekah degree and a mixed team from Tularosa and Vaughn conferred the initiatory degree for the Odd Fellows.

On Monday night, grand master Leck was an honored guest of the local lodge at a special meeting held for that purpose. He gave a historical address that was of much value, after which refreshments were served. The friendly, becoming, brotherly attitude of this distinguished gentleman endeared him to the hearts of all who were fortunate in meeting him.

The Masonic ball on page 5, for a Special has been postponed. Announcement of the date will appear next week.

Carrizozo 10; Ft. Stanton 8

You see, folks, we have changed the figures in this head from what they were last week for the reason that the best team (last Sunday) won, and with only a portion of the old team, too.

You noticed that Barnett did the twirling of the horseshide for 7 innings, with Gallacher finishing up and neither of these players claim to be in the class of regular pitchers, but they went some at that, don't you think?

The attendance at the game was just fine and the team wished to thank the patrons and express the hope that the good attendance will continue through the season. Thank you, ever so much!

We're not boasting about winning this game, for the Fort Stanton boys are a good bunch of fellows and we wouldn't hurt their feelings for the world, but we promised you a winning ball team, if you would do your part which it seems you are going to do and if we both live up to our agreements, that's our business. That's all (till the next winning dose is given out).

Yours Boostingly,
One of 'em.

Easter at Fort Stanton

Easter for the patients, started about 8 p. m., Good Friday, when Mrs. Hoover of Capitan and Miss Monroe, our popular public school teacher, appeared first at the Seamen's Social Club and later in wards 10 and 11 with their arms laden with apple blossoms, and Mr. Bonnell, as he does every spring, gave them all his car would hold. Some were left at the club, each of the men in bed given a spray and the balance were arranged in the wards on Saturday morning by Miss Monroe.

On Easter Sunday morning, each patient in wards 10 and 11 was visited by the Easter Rabbit represented by the above mentioned ladies. Each Easter Sunday for the past seven years, the boys in the wards have been remembered by Mrs. Hoover in some becoming manner. This year she, assisted by Miss Monroe, had prepared for each patient, a miniature nest made in form of a flower and filled with a dyed egg, some candy eggs and an Easter greeting card. As the ladies, accompanied by Carl Anderson, President of the Seamen's Social Club, made the rounds of the wards, going from bed to bed and leaving their little mementoes with each sufferer, they were met with smiles and words of thanks for thus remembering those who were unable to be up and take part in the celebration of Easter.

When the visitors departed, they left in each ward a blooming plant, to still remind the boys of their friendly visit. Nor were those who were up and about, forgotten in the visit of these ladies; the clubhouse of the Seamen's Social Club was materially brightened by a red rambler rose in full bloom left for all "My Boys," because she is always seeking ways in which to make life a little more pleasant for those confined to beds of pain. Mrs. Hoover has endeared herself to the patients and her visit on Easter is to "her boys," as they term themselves, is but one more piece of evidence that she never forgets them.

Although she has been at the Fort but a few months, Miss Monroe will be remembered by the patients for the pleasant smiles and cheerful words she has for everyone, particularly those who are unable to be about. If any who are ill at the Fort didn't know it was Easter, it certainly cannot be blamed on Mrs. Hoover and Miss Monroe.

The promised bank re-openings do not materialize very fast and so far as can be determined from the outside it is because "financiers" concerned can not agree on how they are going to take out additional profits, always from the depositors, let it be understood. The depositors can not learn the reasons for their losing, because such knowledge would cause new banking legislation, and the only thing actually known is that no money is safe under the present banking laws, because even good and honest banking can not protect it if the laws are followed. It is claimed that the reserves provided for are entirely too low, and rediscouinting of paper, as provided for in the federal reserve law, is more than dangerous, almost necessarily fatal.

News Items From Over The State

The Dawson coal camp sent 1,105 trained men to the government first aid fees held by the Bureau of Mines, Car No. 2 during its stay at Dawson. This is said to be a record, but Dawson miners have the advantage of one of the best equipped and efficiently manned mine rescue stations in the country, and the P-D button showing a man has passed this training is A-1 wherever there is coal mining. As the course is longer than the required government course these men were fully trained.

The annual review issued by the New Mexico Taxpayer's Association takes some of the state officials to task for extravagance and bewails the lack of efficiency. This, very naturally, has started a row and the chief officials of that association are not overly popular at the state capital at the present time.

It is useless for those engaged in the controversy over "auditing" of the state highway department to estimate expenses beyond the known payments. The state comptroller has employed one man at $25 a day, four men at $15 a day each, and three men at $10 a day each to do the work and has agreed to pay all of the expenses, transportation, etc., and beyond the payment of $20,000 for each month of twenty six working days as salaries there is no guess a good one. The money is to be paid from the state road funds.

Chairman Miller of the State Republican Central Committee, is of the opinion that the deflation started by the Wilson administration in 1920, is largely responsible for the troubles over the state, although he admits that the fight made on the surety companies by the present state administration through the "public monies act," might have done much to demoralize things. It is estimated that between the two causes, that from twelve to sixteen millions of dollars were withdrawn from this state during that period and financial institutions could not stand the drain.

Old Soldiers, Attention!

According to the opinions of students of pension legislation and papers of fairness over the state, Senator Bursum has made a reputation for himself with his pension bill which has passed both branches of the National legislature, passing the House by a record vote. A veteran has compiled its features for the benefit of those of the Southwestern who may be interested.

The bill properly and uniformly provides for the forty widows of the war of 1912 and the veterans of the civil war who now now show an average age of 78 years. Their widows are likewise cared for.

It provides for an age pension for the veterans of the Indian wars beginning at the age of 62 years and increasing to 75.

It applies the age features to veterans of the Spanish war at 62 years, with increases at 68, 72 and 75 years.

Those interested in pension legislation claim that this measure if signed by Coolidge, will remain the law as long as the nation continues its pension system. It will remove all pension questions from politics.

It will provide for a more effective and uniform distribution of the money paid out for pensions.

It will save taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars and for this reason, it was not opposed by the same interests fighting the bonus bills. It has the approval of all soldiers and their friends.

Lincoln Forest

Range conditions are good, water supply plentiful. Some cattle are being sold and sheepmen anticipate a good lambing season on the Guadaloupe district, according to Supervisor O. Fred Arthur, who returned from that district last week. Mr. Arthur attended a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce at Carlsbad, during his absence where Stephen T. Mather, Director of the National Park Service spoke on National Parks and Monuments. Mr. Mather visited the Carlsbad cave in company with Dr. Willis Lee, who is in charge of the exploration work.

The Department of Agriculture will show the film, "The Flery Lance," at Carrizozo and other places in connection with meetings conducted by county agent Ware, in the near future.

The Lincoln National Forest was featured in the April 15, edition of the "West Texas Today." This paper is the official publication of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. Cuts of scenes through the forest are shown and much space devoted to the forest and to cities adjacent, so that our neighbors in West Texas may know what we have to offer them.

The Public Be— Satisfied

"GIVE A service limited in extent only by public demand, good in quality and in every way satisfactory to the public."

That is a general order for every man or woman engaged in the Bell Telephone System. It is the first instruction and it is never varied, never modified.

The young woman at the switchboard, the lineman on the pole and the clerk at the counter all work under that order. It sets forth in a sentence the desires of nearly half a million telephone stockholders and the management in fulfilling their obligation to the rest of the nation which uses the telephone.

The telephone people in this town are trying to live up to those instructions. Service must be their first consideration; satisfying the public their impelling objective.

The Triumph of Trail Ridge

INTRODUCTION BY JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

Warren E. Boyer, a newspaper man of Denver, has written "Vanishing Trails of Romance" with the laudable purpose of preserving Colorado legends of such trails. Colorado is rich in legends of old. Its history goes back to the Spaniards of the sixteenth century. The Cliff Dwellers of Mesa Verde are prehistoric. Fortunately for the American people Trail Ridge is within Rocky Mountain National Park and so is safe forever. Moreover, it is easily accessible by car. The famous Fall River Road from Estes Park to Grand Lake over the "Roof of the World" follows it for several miles. Road and trail diverge at an elevation of 11,707 feet. The panorama of a hundred miles is probably unequalled on any automobile highway on earth. Most of the other places named may be seen from a car. Chasm Falls is close to the road in Fall River Gorge. Marys Lake and Wind River Trail are on the Estes Park-Louis Park Road. But only the auto-bus travel Windy Gulch—"Where the Women Walk" and the men, too.

DANCE festivities were in preparation at the summer camp of the Arapahoes at Marys Lake, just outside the eastern boundary of Rocky Mountain National Park. Spring sports, with the ponies and running ponies, had carried the Ojibwa, with great ceremony, of their winter camp on the Colorado River, about seven miles above Grand Lake. Squaws, children and aged warriors had crossed the Continental Divide by way of Trail Ridge, the old Ute Trail, while most of the braves took the harder but shorter beaten path over Flat-top Mountain to reach what is now called the Estes Park region.

Buffalo hunters were returning to their tepees, which the squaws had set up the day before while the braves prepared for the buffalo chase. The great hunt had been successful, and feast days were at hand.

No-to, an imaginative little Arapahoe maiden affectionately called the Deer Heart, because her eyes were large and soft and her manners shy and timid, stepped from the skin-covered shelter of her father's tepee, placing a light tunic. The fascinating recollection of a mythical creature known as the caracoma, feared even by trappers early in the nineteenth century, and realistic enough to her, set No-to's imagination a-fire.

On the trip across the mountains, her mother, Ni-ha-na-wu, had recounted tales of narrow escapes from this dreadful, devouring creature. She had pointed to precipitous heights where the beast had sprung over seemingly impassable gorges and had even scaled the cliffs through flaming cat-aracts. The caracoma, variously described by Ni-ha-na-wu, had a long, pointed nose and sharp ears like a wolf, and its cry was indescribable. Like the blasts of the North Wind, the monster destroyed everything in its path. So to ward off fear, No-to sang; to ward off fear of the beast and loneliness for Na-ko.

No-to's tender age was the ostensible objection raised by Ni-ha-na-wu to the admiration shown by the youthful Na-ko. Ku-ni-tha, another Arapahoe brave, likewise showed his attention on No-to as he likewise showed his attention on No-to as the pleasure of Ni-ha-na-wu; but his father, Oo-cho-ne, was war chief of the Arapahoes, which may account for the mother's preference for Ku-ni-tha. But Na-ko fondly loved the maiden, and she longed for him, despite her mother's wishes.

But she soon forgot the caracoma. For the air was filled with shouts and hurrahs. Oo-cho-ne, the old brave, rushed from his tepee, flourishing his bow and arrow in imitation of his bird-hunter's dipping wings. He confronted a buffalo coming into camp. The attitude he assumed, with arrows bent, excited great mirth among the assembled Indians. For it was all in play. (Continued) Within the buffalo hide was Ku-ni-tha, Oo-cho-ne's young son, who at dawn had dressed the unsuspecting herd of Indians with a trap for slaughter.

Now the "trap" northeast of Estes Park Village of today was a narrowing passage formed by a convergence of the mountains between "Devils Gulch" and "Long Gulch." Ku-ni-tha, with the hide and head of a great black buffalo skillfully fastened about him, mingled with the herd, and, assuming leadership, slowly enticed them into the death-trap circle.

It was from this escapade Ku-ni-tha was returning. The make-believe buffalo rolled over on its back, that the buckskin laces might be undone, and out crawled Ku-ni-tha, glad once again to stand erect after having traveled many miles on hands and feet. He quietly exchanged a few words with Oo-cho-ne, who started for the council tepee where he had assembled the warriors in anticipation of Ku-ni-tha's return.

While the squaws, led by Ni-ha-na-wu, sang praises of Ku-ni-tha's successful buffalo slaughter as they prepared the feast, the warriors, among them Na-ko, considered the menacing encroachment of the Utes. For Ku-ni-tha had devoted himself eagerly to the hunt, while Na-ko, thinking more of the safety of the tribe and of the beloved No-to, had abandoned the chase to spy on the skulking figures of Utes on Wind River Trail. He had then hurried back to camp and reported to Chief Oo-cho-ne that the valley was full of the enemy.

The old warriors sat long in meditation after Oo-cho-ne called the council gathering, but the younger men, absorbed by thoughts of the dance ring, disregarded the real significance of the alarm. Within the stone-marked rings they expected to dance to the drum during the afternoon and night, in celebration of the buffalo hunt. A small fire in the center of this ring would hold them enthralled in a strange sorcery of its power.

Just as the squaws had the meat pots ready for the feast, a wounded Arapahoe, bringing buffalo meat on his pony, staggered into camp. This development emphasized the imminent danger. Obviously another day would have passed while Utes assembled, only to be defiantly repulsed in battle by the waiting Arapahoes. But the wounded brave brought word of many smoke signals to guide the assembling Utes. His people would be greatly outnumbered. Even now Ute runners were spying on the camp.

In the discussion Na-ko was called for to tell the council the position and number of the band of Utes on Wind River Trail. But Na-ko had quietly slipped away. Nevertheless Oo-cho-ne was sustained in his proposal that the Arapahoes return to the winter camp across the Continental Divide, for the Utes had evidently come to kill mountain sheep and to escape the heat of the plains in summer. The Arapahoes could not dream peacefully in their tepees with their deadly enemies, the Utes, so close at hand.

So the plans for feasting were turned into hurried departures. Smoldering camp fires, buffalo meat and tepee rims of stones for weighing the ends of the skin tents, told the story of flight. It would require an all-night march, over the plastered reaches of the Snowy Range, to gain the retreat of the Arapahoes in a sheltered vale near Grand Lake.

The three hundred warriors, divided into an advance and rear escort for the women and children, started over the old Ute Trail, which we now call the Trail Ridge. A very sharp incline, to reach the ridge proper, was called "Where the Women Walk," because on this stretch the ponies could not carry any burdens in addition to their heavy trappings.

One hundred and fifty braves, mounted on swift ponies, led the party, bounding across in advance as far as the head of Forest Canyon, where the Fall River Road crosses the old Ute Trail. The remaining braves brought up the rear, with the

He had tried to make love to her surreptitiously the previous summer, and now bore her swiftly into the forest. Ni-ha-na-wu gave chase, shrieking, but her cries were drowned by the trample of the ponies' feet, and in the confusion of the march their absence passed unnoticed.

Down the steep slope Ka-vi-a-wach staggered with his prize, a maiden from an enemy tribe. This feat would give him an enviable position in the eyes of his tribesmen. And so for hours he pushed through dense woods, over the rough, wild unfamiliar region. The old Ni-ha-na-wu, stumblingly followed as fast as her weary limbs could carry her. Finally they came to Chasm Falls, where Fall River plunges thirty feet into a rocky gorge nearly twenty feet wide. There was no means of crossing.

Ka-vi-a-wach decided to go down stream in the hope of finding a place to ford it when a black bear appeared from the direction of the falls, growling angrily. Now, a bear will not attack human beings if unprovoked, but rather shuns them. However, a mother bear will protect its cubs. Ka-vi-a-wach knew that not far away, and behind him on the narrow path, must be the cave-like shelter containing the cubs, and realized the danger to himself and his little captives.

Instinctively he prayed to the protecting spirit of the water; for the ancient custom of his people, Ka-vi-a-wach bore the name of the foaming white spray of the mountain stream, which was the first object his father saw when the child's birth was announced. Suddenly wild shrieks rent the air. Across the gorge No-to's startled eyes beheld the animal that gave the indescribable cry. In her frightened state she likened it to the wild monster. Only the deep, wailing raving could save them from the destroying bear. Terror seized them all. Old Ni-ha-na-wu folded her arms over her bent head and moaned. Even the old mother bear, maddened by the uproar, because the noise determined to reach its cave shelter.

But, look! The odd bear, running to the precipitous edge of the gorge, sniffed the air, growled, ran back, then returned and clambered up a tall spruce tree growing on the very edge of the ravine. The next moment it was swaying in the top of the spruce, one paw clutching a branch, the other outstretched to keep its pole as it rode high in the air.

Careening far over the gulch, the bear suddenly leaped from the tree, cunningly catapulted through spruce, then crashed into a smaller spruce on the other side, near No-to and Ka-vi-a-wach, thereby breaking the force of its tumbling fall to the ground. Stunned momentarily, it quickly recovered and closely embraced the unwilling Ka-vi-a-wach. In the death struggle the animal overpowered the Ute, and wresting from him the home dexter of defense, fatally wounded the Indian. Then it rushed the bear, which, bleeding, accompanied for the cub den.

The superstitious No-to fully believed that the caracoma, beguiled by her imagination, would eventually wreak its vengeance on her mother and herself. But the odd bear rolled over on its back with a cry, "No-to! No-to!" Scarcely able to believe her ears the Arapahoe maiden, recognizing the voice, quickly unfastened the shaggy hide of a grizzly, and set crawling Na-ko, his back bleeding from cruel scratches inflicted by the black bear.

Na-ko, eager to outshine Ku-ni-tha, had left the council tepee before noon to take his portions turn at scouting. Having determined the strength and numbers of the enemy, he was returning to the camp, unobserved of the sudden departure of his people. He scouted Ka-vi-a-wach, the Ute, and was Ni-ha-na-wu's opponent to marry her daughter, No-to. And during the night they overtook the Snowy Arapahoes.

WIND RIVER TRAIL

Smooth-Awned Variety Being Sought by Experts of Federal Bureau

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The farm boy, the hired man and the farmer himself, for that matter, will rise to a vote of thanks and give three cheers for the scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture when they succeed in developing on a commercial scale a variety of barley that can be sown in the fall with impunity on a hot summer day without wearing a cast-iron shirt and overalls. The saw-edged beards of the many varieties of high-yielding barleys have been instrumental in keeping down the acreage of barley, and only its ability to produce a high acre yield in pounds of feed has maintained the present acreage.

Smooth-Awned Variety. Attempts by the agronomist in charge of barley investigations for the department to develop a smooth-awned variety from the rough-awned Manchuria, which is a popular high-yielding variety, have resulted in considerable progress. Enough seed for general distribution is not yet available, however. Specimens of this smooth-awned barley are to be seen in the office of cereal investigations of the department. These awns are so smooth that they may be pulled across the face in either direction without any roughness being apparent except at the tip.

Act as Safety Valve. In these investigations it was found unwise to eliminate the awns entirely because they serve a definite purpose. When they are removed from the growing head by clipping, the ash is deposited in the rachis, or small stem to which the kernel is attached, making it more brittle and allowing the grain to shatter easily. The awns, it seems, act as a sort of safety valve or air-chamber for this excess material. It has been found more practicable to develop a variety with a smooth awn than to remove it entirely.

Smooth-awned barleys are still in the experimental stage. Several high-yielding strains adapted to different climatic conditions are ready for increase to larger plots and field culture. Whether they can compete with the rough-awned varieties remains to be determined.

Blackstrap Molasses Is Used to Fatten Steers

That there is a limit to the quantity of blackstrap molasses which can be added with economy to a ration of 64 pounds of cottonseed meal and 44 pounds of corn silage for fattening yearling steers was shown in a test made by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the Louisiana Experiment station.

Two lots of nine 700-pound steers were fed for 112 days. Forty-six pounds of silage per steer per day was practically the limit of their capacity. Lot 1 was fed 5.42 pounds of molasses per steer daily, while lot 2 was fed 8.07 pounds of molasses per steer daily. As lot 1 gained 248 pounds per steer daily, while lot 2 gained only 241 pounds per steer daily, it is evident that 6.65 pounds of molasses was wasted daily per steer. In lot 2, the results in lot 2 might have been more favorable to the use of so much molasses had the cottonseed-meal ration been reduced to 35 or 40 pounds. In the test lot 1 consumed 1,680 pounds of silage, 218 pounds of cottonseed meal, and 218 pounds of molasses per 100 pounds gain, while lot 2 required 2 per cent more silage, 3 per cent more cottonseed meal, and 54 per cent more molasses to produce 100 pounds of gain.

Sunlight and New Soil Needed by Baby Chicks

Sunlight plays an important part in the growth and development of chicks, experiments conducted at the Kansas Agricultural College indicate. An outside run where the chicks are exposed to direct sunlight as soon as they learn to return to the warmth of the brooder is recommended. When hens are used for brooding, the chicks may be allowed outside from the first. Chicks two weeks old, with access to open range and plenty of green feed, may be hopped fed on dry mash.

Whole wheat and kaffir may be gradually added to the grain feeds. Where possible, brooder houses and broody coops should be placed in new locations each year, so as to avoid contamination from the outside runs. This sanitation provision applies particularly to the control of intestinal parasites, poultrymen advise.

Tank to Treat Potatoes Is Highly Recommended

Those who expect to treat their potatoes before planting this season would do well to make their plans for building a treating tank if one is not available. These can be made out of concrete or wood and should be constructed so that they can be easily drained. Never treat cut potatoes. Corrosive sublimate solutions are weakened rapidly where cut potatoes are treated. The corrosive sublimate treatment for 1 1/2 hours is recommended. Complete directions can be secured from the county agent. Starch, an average increase of 15 to 20 per cent in yield can be produced by such treatment. It pays the large or small grower to treat all seed.

Control of Various Diseases of Potatoes

The presence of various diseases of potatoes affecting both the plant and the tuber constitutes a problem of great interest and concern to all growers. Investigations and studies made by the United States Department of Agriculture have in a large measure resulted in the development of methods for controlling these diseases to a great extent, with a saving of money and time. Although present methods are by no means perfect, yet in spite of their distinct limitations, when properly applied, they afford an effective means of raising better crops and of preventing their subsequent spoilage in cellars, in warehouses and in transit.

The brief description of each of the important potato-tuber diseases with reference to the most practical measures of control is given in a new bulletin just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture, as Farmers' Bulletin 1807, Control of Potato-Tuber Diseases. The measures for the control of the various diseases, says the author of the bulletin, should be in strict conformity with the nature of the trouble and its cause. Therefore, a clear conception of the peculiar characteristics of each disease is necessary for its successful combat.

The bulletin seeks to present this information in such a way that the grower and the dealer may be able to understand the various troubles and prevent them if possible or to seek the assistance of a specialist whenever troubles become perplexing or go beyond the possibilities of first-aid measures.

A copy of the bulletin may be secured, as long as the supply lasts, from the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Early Seeding Advised for Big Yield of Oats

Early seeding of oats is the first essential, says the United States Department of Agriculture, for maximum yields. In most sections oats should be sown as early as it is possible to get on the land to prepare a seed bed. This crop develops best in cool weather and frequently is injured by a few hot days during the ripening period. For this reason early seeding is practically always advisable.

The date of seeding largely depends on the locality and the season. In the corn belt the best time usually is during the latter part of March or early April. In the more northern oat sections seeding wheat usually is not possible until late April. In backward and unfavorable seasons the seeding may have to be delayed until early May.

Where oats follow corn, potatoes, or other cultivated crops, the land should not be plowed as a rule, but should be disked and harrowed sufficiently to make a loose friable seed bed about three inches deep. Spring plowing usually results in a less satisfactory seed bed, as there is not sufficient time for the soil to become well settled before seeding. Further, spring plowing is more expensive, and thus adds to the cost of production.

Combine Corn and Wheat for Flock of Chickens

While the war was on and wheat was high-priced and scarce, corn became the main grain for poultry feeding. Now "the shoe is on the other foot." In many cases it is cheaper and better nowadays to feed wheat.

Corn and wheat are really about equal in poultry feeding value, although wheat can be fed alone better than corn because the latter is more fattening. Best results are obtained when wheat and corn are combined about equally in egg-laying rations, along with other needed elements furnished by oats (sprouted or whole), ground bone or meat scraps, vegetables and green stuff.

Farm Hints

- Rotten apples and poor sires go together.
- Sweet clover, especially white young, cannot stand much shade.
- Moth balls distributed in the runway of moles are effective in driving them away.
- Alfalfa raises the value of the soil that grows it and reduces the feed bill of the animal that eats it.
- Price statistics indicate that it takes about as much money to equip a farm today as it did to buy the farm 20 years ago.
- In sections suited to its growth, Sudan grass yields from two to four cuttings of one to two tons each, and the hay is of excellent quality.
- Buy the best in eggs and chicks even if the first cost seems a little high. You will have more birds in your flock than if a mixture of breeds and weak stock is installed on your farm.
- Grass says: "I always took the most care with my vegetable garden, because I was never sure of getting some of the things that grow there than I was of getting a profit from the other crops."

Zen of The Y.D.

A NOVEL OF THE FOOTHILLS

"YOU WILL BE STOPPED"

SYNOPSIS—Transley's hay-cutting outfit, after stacking 2,000 tons, is on its way to the big Y.D. ranch headquarters. Transley is a master of men and circumstances. Linder, foreman, is substantial but not self-assured. George Draxk, one of the men, is an irresponsible chap who proposes to every woman he meets. Transley and Linder dine with Y.D. and his wife and daughter Zen. Transley resolves to marry Zen. Y.D. instructs Transley to cut the South Y.D. "spite of 'em" an' high water" and a fellow named Landon. Draxk proposes to Zen and is neatly rebuffed.

George dropped behind, and an amused smile played on the foreman's face. He had known Draxk too long to be much surprised at anything he might do. It was Draxk's idea of galantry to make love to every girl on sight. Possibly Draxk had managed to exchange a word with Zen, and his imagination would readily expand that into a love scene. Zen! Even the placid, balanced Linder felt a slight leap in the blood at the unusual name which suggested the bright girl who had come into his life the night before. Not exactly into his life; it would be fairer to say she had touched the rim of his life. Perhaps she would never penetrate it further; Linder rather expected that would be the case. As for Draxk—she was in no danger from him. Draxk's methods were so precocious that they could be counted upon to defeat themselves.

Below stretched the valley of the South Y.D., almost a duplicate of its northern neighbor. The stream hugged the feet of the hills on the northern side of the valley; its ribbon of green and gold was like a fringe gathered about the hem of their skirts. Beyond the stream lay the level plains of the valley, and miles to the southwest, the next ridge of foothills. It was from these interlying plains that Y.D. expected his thousand tons of hay.

Linder's appreciative eye took in the scene; a scene of stupendous sizes and magnificent distances. As he slowly turned his vision eastward a speck in the distance caught his sight and brought him to his feet. Shading his eyes from the bright afternoon sun he surveyed it long and carefully. There was no doubt about it; a hay-cutting outfit was already at work down the valley.

Leaving his team to manage themselves Linder dropped from his wagon and joined Transley. "Some one has beat us to it," he remarked.

"So I observed," said Transley. "Well, it's a big valley, and if they're satisfied to stay where they are there should be enough for both. If they're not—"

"If they're not, what?" demanded Linder.

"You heard what Y.D. said. He said: 'Cut it, spite of 'em' an' high water,' and I always obey orders." They wound down the hillside until they came to the stream, the horses quickening their pace with the splash of water in their eager nostrils. It was a good ford, broad and shallow, with the typical bowlder bottom of the mountain stream. The horses crowded into it, drinking greedily with a sort of drooping noise caused by the bits in their mouths. When they had satisfied their thirst they raised their heads, stretched their noses far out and thumped wide-mouthed upon their bits.

denser milk, thin with marmalade and jam, and plates with butter sadly suffering from the summer heat. The cook filled their granite cups with hot tea from a granite pitcher, and when the cups were empty filled them again and again. And when the tables were partly cleared he brought out deep pipe filled with raisins and with evaporated apples and a thick cake from which the men cut hunks as generous as their appetite suggested. Transley had learned what women are said to have learned long ago, that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach, and the cook had carte blanche. Not a man who ate at Transley's table but would have split his blood for the boss or for the honor of the gang.

The meal was nearing its end when through a window Linder's eye caught sight of a man on horseback rapidly approaching. "Visitors, Transley," he was able to say before the rider pulled up at the open door of the covered wagon.

He was such a rigger as may still be seen in those last depths of the ranching country where wheels have not entirely crowded Romance off of horseback. Spare and well-knit, his figure had a suggestion of slowness which the scales would have belied. His face, keen and clean-shaven, was brown as the August hills, and above it his broad hat sat in the careless dignity affected by the gentlemen of the plains. His leather coat afforded protection from the heat of day and from the cold of night.

"Good evening, men," he said, courteously. "Don't let me disturb your meal. Afterwards perhaps I can have a word with the boss."

"That's me," said Transley, rising. "No, don't get up," the stranger protested, but Transley insisted that he had finished, and, getting down from the wagon, led the way a little distance from the eager ears of its occupants.

"My name is Grant," said the stranger; "Dennison Grant. I am employed by Mr. Landon, who has a ranch down the valley. If I am not mistaken you are Mr. Transley."

"You are not mistaken," Transley replied.

"And I am perhaps further correct," continued Grant, "in surmising that you are here on behalf of the Y.D., and propose cutting hay in this valley?"

"Your grasp of the situation does you credit," Transley's manner was that of a man prepared to meet trouble somewhat more than half way.

"And I may further surmise," continued Grant, quite unmoved, "that Y.D. neglected to give you one or two points of information bearing upon the ownership of this land, which would doubtless have been of interest to you?"

"Suppose you dismount," said Transley. "I like to look a man in the face when I talk business to him."

"I would be glad to, but I must get back to camp. I hope you laid a good string," and he saying Grant remounted, nodded to Transley and again to the men now scattered about the camp, and started his horse on an easy lops down the valley.

"Well, what is it to be?" said Linder, coming up with the rest of the boys. "War?"

"War if they fight," Transley replied, unconcernedly. "Y.D. said cut the hay; 'spite of 'em' an' high water," he said. "That goes."

Slowly the great orb of the sun sank until the crest of the mountains pierced its molten glory and sent it burning through their rugged heights. In the east the plains were already wrapped in shadow. Up the valley crept the veil of night, hushing even the limitless, quiet of the day. The stream bubbled louder in the lowering gloom; the stamp and clamping of horses grew less insistent; the cloudlets overhead faded from crimson to mauve to blue to gray.

Transley tapped the shins from his pipe and went to bed.

CHAPTER III

"How about a ride over to the South Fork this afternoon, Zen?" said Y.D. to his daughter, the following morning. "I just want to make sure them boys is hittin' the high spots. The grass is gettin' powerful dry an' you can never tell what may happen."

"You're on," the girl replied across the breakfast table. Her mother looked up sharply. She wondered if the prospect of another meeting with Transley had anything to do with Zen's alacrity.

"I had hoped you would outgrow your slang, Zen," she remonstrated gently. "Men like Mr. Transley are likely to judge your training by your speech."

"I shouldn't worry. Slang is to language what feathers are to a hat—they give it distinction, class. They lift it out of the drab commonplace."

"Still, I would not care to be dressed entirely in feathers," her mother thrust quietly.

"Good for you, Mother!" the girl exclaimed, throwing an arm about her neck and plinking a firm kiss on her forehead.

Now I'll try to be good and wear a feather only here and there. But Mr. Transley has nothing to do with it."

"Of course not," said Y.D. "Still, Transley is a man with snap in him. That's why he's boss. So many of these ornery good-for-nothings is always wishin' they was boss, but they ain't willin' to pay the price. It costs something to get to the head of the herd—an' stay there."

"He seems firm on all fours," the girl agreed. "How do we travel, and when?"

"Better take a democrat, I guess," her father said. "We can throw in a tent and some bedding for you, an' we'll, maybe stay over a couple of nights."

"The blue sky is tent enough for me," Zen protested, "and I can surely rustle a blanket or two around the camp. Besides, I'll want a riding horse to get around with there."

"You can run him beside the democrat," said her father. "You're gettin' too big to go campin' promiscuous like when you was a kid."

Y.D. said cut the hay; 'spite of 'em' an' high water," he said. "That goes."

Slowly the great orb of the sun sank until the crest of the mountains pierced its molten glory and sent it burning through their rugged heights. In the east the plains were already wrapped in shadow. IF ANYONE WANTS TO KNOW ABOUT TANLAC LET THEM SEE ME"

Says Joseph Baker of Memphis in Praising World's Greatest Tonic—Tells of Recovery.

"If anybody wants to find out about Tanlac, just let them see me," is the hearty suggestion of Joseph H. Baker, 530 North Third St., Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Baker went overseas with the famous Thirtieth Division during the World War and participated in the St. Mihiel, Valley of the Vosges and Argonne drives, having been cited for bravery in action in the Argonne. He is now a popular member of the Memphis Fire Department.

"When I came back from overseas," said he, "I was in a mighty bad fix. I had been gassed and after getting home I got down with pneumonia. This left me 'all in,' without appetite, down in weight, liver out of fix, and suffering from constipation, biliousness and headaches without end.

"Tanlac put me to eating as never before, shot my weight up fifteen pounds and made a strong, well man of me—and I feel fine even to this day. I can't say enough for Tanlac."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.

Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills.

WOMEN NEED SWAMP-ROOT

Thousands of women have kidney and bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease.

If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased. Pain in the back, headache, loss of ambition, nervousness are oftentimes symptoms of kidney trouble.

Don't delay starting treatment. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a physician's prescription, obtained at any drug store, may be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions.

Get a medium or large size bottle immediately from any drug store. However, if you wish first to test this great preparation, send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing, be sure and mention this paper—Advertisement.

Too Busy

The small girl met the doctor near her home.

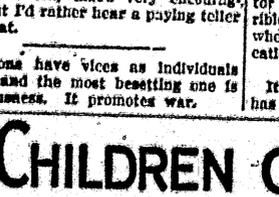

"You brought a little baby next door, didn't you?" she inquired.

"Yes," he answered; "shall I bring one to your house?"

"No, thanks," came the prompt reply. "Why, we've scarcely time even to wash the dog."

CORNS

Lift Off—No Pain!

Doesn't hurt one bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers.

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the foot calluses, without soreness or irritation.

How He Felt

Jimmy, not feeling very well, was advised by his mother to go and see the doctor.

"Now, my little man," said the doctor, "what is the matter with you?"

"It's like this, doctor," answered Jimmy. "You know how you feel when you don't know how you feel? Well, that's how I feel."
