BARNEY

"Can I get a horse for tomorrow?" I asked the stable man at the hotel. "Yes," he answered. "Have you ever ridden before?" I admitted that I had. "Barney's the best horse in the stable," he continued, "but he's high-strung and will-willed and most riders are afraid of him."

State Men Work in Rhodes Canyon

Hot Springs Maverick: "Billie" Ferguson, State Highway Maintenance man of Nogal, was in town yesterday conferring with the members of the Chamber of Commerce regarding the Tularesa-Hot Springs road. Mr. Ferguson, through the State Department, has been allowed $500 to repair the damage done to the highway during the recent rains, and came here to seek the co-operation of Hot Springs as he had done at Tularesa a few days previous, in order that the money spent might do the most good.

Modest Loss Indeed!

Santa Fe, Sept. 10.—The controversy over the losses to the state through personal bonds put up as security for state money in failed banks has brought forth more bad news for the taxpayers. It has been found that the county, municipality and school district losses in failed banks has been about seven hundred thousand dollars with a very considerable part of it secured on personal bonds alone.

Fort Stanton News

In Radio, the summer static is gradually waning, good results are being had. Mr. Kincheslo and a group of patients, listened in to the speech of Senator Davis at their home the other evening, caught Pittsburgh and gave a treat to the listeners. At the Social Club they are making a cabinet for the Radio sent last spring to Chaplain Stanley by Geo. E. Cabot of Santa Barbara, Cal., and it is hoped, they will soon be enjoying concerts at the Club.

Dr. Reid, Messrs. Gentry, McNeff, the Misses Kincannon, Kinan, Bowdish, and Mays went on a trip the other day to Elephant Butte Dam. Mrs. Kincheslo, the Misses Rice, Buhrman and Welch attended the Eastern Star meeting at Carrizozo Thursday evening. Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Bates and patients J. Johnson and K. A. Hefferman returned recently from a Seventh Day Adventist's Conference at Portales, N. M., having had a delightful trip, they say.

John Rainer is in El Paso securing parts for his Buick. J. C. Mitchelmore is also in El Paso. Leaving the Fort are Ralph Stearns and Harold McCarty, who is reported to have gone to Denver. Arriving are Harry Paulson and George Burke from Chicago. John E. Smith and Niles J. Larsen from Savannah, Wm. Watkins from Athens, Ga., John Erickson, Travis Hoffman, Robert Morrison, and Lawrence Holmberg from New Orleans.

Gratitude is expressed at the Seaman's Social Club to Fred Pfingsten in furnishing, at such low cost, such delicious plums at their last social and to ranger Edward of the forest service for sending a large number of Geographic to the patients. The magazines, especially, are most gladly received and desired.

There is great interest being shown in the Educational department; thirty-one have enrolled and are doing excellent work. This is not only a sign of returning health and hope to the patients, but of wisdom in preparing for some lighter work when they are discharged. All who can are urged to join these classes.

In the O. T. Department, Mrs. H. F. Clark is a student of basketry and is showing great skill under the efficient teaching of Prof. Carl Jensen, and T. Erickson is rejoicing with his splendid brood of canaries which will soon be ready for the market.

Fireman and Mrs. L. J. Adams arrived home Tuesday night from their 4,000 mile trip which took them through several different states, ending at Berpie, Mo., where they visited Mrs. Adam's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay, remaining there for several weeks. On the return trip, they stopped over at Tulsa, Okla., to pay a visit to Mr. Adams' mother. They made the entire trip by motor and encountered no trouble save that of a few harmless blow-outs. TALES OF THE OLD FRONTIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

BUFFALO BILL'S FIRST REHEARSAL

NOT the least of Col. W. F. Cody's contribution to history was the fact that in his Wild West show he kept alive the memory of the American frontier long after the last frontier had vanished. When he organized it he determined that realism should be the keynote of the enterprise and the first rehearsal proved realistic beyond his wildest hopes.

It was staged on the fair grounds at Columbus, Neb. The feature act was an Indian attack on a stage coach and a rescue by Buffalo Bill and his cowboys. Six young ladies, barely broken to harness, were to draw the coach and Sam Matthews, a veteran of the Overland route, was secured to drive them. The attacking Redskins were young Pawnees from a reservation nearby, under the management of Maj. Frank North, commander of the famous Pawnee Scouts.

Cody invited the city council of Columbus and the mayor, "Pop" Clotfelter, a quaint but exceedingly hot-tempered old fellow, to ride in the coach and "Papa" pride swelled almost to the bursting point at the honor. The whole population of Columbus was out to see the show as Buffalo Bill's guests. The mules were visibly nervous from the start and when, at the appointed signal, the Pawnees charged firing blank cartridges and whooping their loudest, the mules promptly stampeded. Around and around the race track they tore at dizzy speed and the Indians, mad with the joy of chase, redoubled their efforts at noise-making.

As the coach tore past the grandstand, the spectators saw "Pop" Clotfelter thrust his head out of the window, wave his arms at Matthews and shriek "Stop! Stop! Stop! Let us out! Let us out!" It was a useless plea for it was taking all of Sam's skill as a driver to keep the wayward, lurching vehicle from overturning. Finally Cody and North succeeded in cutting out numbers of the Indians, as they would cattle, and the mules eventually ran themselves down. As the coach came to a stop an enraged man burst from it and to Buffalo Bill's astonished explanation roared "Heathen! Heathen! Let me get hold of you! I'll show you something realistic!" And only the restraining hands of the city council and the mayor, prevented the addition of a "massacre" to the program.

Odd Fellows Open Fall Campaign

An enthusiastic meeting was held at the Odd Fellows' Hall Tuesday night at which plans were laid for the fall work of the order. Workers reported several prospective applications ready for the coming week. A big meeting is planned for next Tuesday night and all Odd Fellows are urged to be present. The drill team captain announced himself ready to inaugurate the work and everything looks extremely promising for a substantial growth of the order during the fall and winter months. After the big meeting next Tuesday night, refreshments and a smoker will be held in the dining room. This call is for all Odd Fellows—be sure to attend.

This locality has suffered more perhaps than any other part of the state. Everything, it would seem, has been against it, but why chew our finger nails, hump up in a corner and say that all is gone. The fall season is approaching and with it, the Woman's club will begin its entertainments. The dance season opens September 20th. We can win yet, but it requires effort. If we lose heart, we are gone; a kick, they will begin to roll. It depends on us, after all to revive the country. Gloom solicitors should be prosecuted.

E. M. Brickley of the local First National and Miss Ula Edmiston of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, are attending the Bankers' state meeting at Albuquerque this week.

THE STEPMOTHER

SYNOPSIS.—Ellen and Joe Latimer, Ephraim, without means, make their home with their Aunt Elsie, at Port Washington, small New York town. Ellen is studying art, her expenses being paid by Mrs. Sewall Rose, girlhood friend of her mother. Mrs. Rose is a wealthy widow who is giving a house party and the girl is delighted.

CHAPTER II

All the way up in the train she was busy identifying the various groups about her, as either being bound for the Rose house party, or being unworthy of that classification. Ellen was so excited by this time that she could not breathe naturally; her cheeks were blazing, and her heart beat fast. With her little new suitcase she got down from the train in a sort of joyous panic of expectation. The Rose's chauffeur made himself known and Ellen, a gray-haired, elderly man and an exceptionally handsome and self-possessed young woman all got into the limousine. Ellen imagined the pair to be father and daughter, and thought it would be romantic to be rich and travel abroad with an adoring father.

The lady looked at her admirably enough, but did not speak. Presently they turned in at a snow-powdered gate and could see a splendid stone mansion, lying along a hillside draped in bare vines, but with heartening smoke arising from a dozen chimneys. They all went up the stone steps, and were admitted to an enormous warm hall, where fires and tables and rich rugs and great bowls of flowers all were jumbled together before her confused senses. Here was Mrs. Rose, magnificent and distant, murmuring that the children were about somewhere; perhaps they had gone out, giving a maid directions in an aside, and looking a little blankly at Ellen until the girl reminded her brightly: "It's Ellen Latimer!"

"Well, of course it is, you dear child," she said then, with a warning kiss, "and you came up in the car with Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn. Tom, this is a little friend of mine, Miss Latimer; and this is Mr. and Mrs. Josselyn, Ellen. I hope you all talked to each other?" Ellen was just going to say, "We weren't introduced," but the young and beautiful Mrs. Josselyn spoke first, with a sort of pretty languor, "I always talk on all occasions!" and then they all laughed. Ellen knew, suddenly, that the two women did not know each other very well, and that the man was quite at home in this house.

"Where'd you put us, Abby?" he asked. "Don't come up; I know my way about."

"I've got to go up," Mrs. Rose said, interrupting a low-toned conversation she was having with an elderly maid. "I declare," she went on, mounting a dark, carved stairway that was spread with rugs, ornamented with potted palms, and lighted with a stained-glass window, "I declare, I get perfectly frantic sometimes when the children have these affairs. Arthur brought down four boys from Harvard on Wednesday, and Lucia—presumably not out yet, if you please—all I can say is, that I don't expect to live through it until she is out—and it's rush to this, and rush to that—I don't know what they're doing now."

Ellen perceived that the matron was really deeply enjoying the responsibility and confusion, and the strain on meals and beds. They went upstairs now, and had left the Josselyns at the door of a delightful room.

"Which explains," said Mrs. Rose, "why I've tucked you in here, on a couch in my sewing room, my dear. You needn't hesitate to come in and out, for Mr. Rose is up at Great Barrington, for the night."

"It's lovely," Ellen smiled. "It's a perfectly wonderful house," she added bashfully.

"It's comfortable," Mrs. Rose said carelessly. "Josselyn did it." And with a sudden twinkle she added: "How did you like the bride and groom?"

"I thought they were father and daughter!" "Every one does. I've known Tom Josselyn all my life; we knew his first wife well. She only died a year ago, and ten months later he married this—Lillian Keeler. Nobody knows anything about her. Doris Potter—you'll meet her tonight—says that she was a model for Madame Xvonne, but I don't believe it—Young Gibbs Josselyn, this son—of the dearest fellows that ever lived—has never gotten over it. Tom Josselyn is sixty-five, you know, and she's twenty-eight. He broke with his father the day he heard the news, hasn't seen him since. He was in the firm, too. I guess the old man felt it pretty much. Now I hear that Gibbs is going to study painting—he's a gifted fellow. Well, now I'll leave you. Brush up a little, and then come down and have tea."

It was just like an English house party in a novel. Ellen smoothed her hair, and put on the gray velvet dress with the fresh frills, and went down to the library in a tremor of happiness. She was early, and had time to enjoy a book of photographs and a fire before her hostess came down. Then the Josselyns came, and an old aunt of Mrs. Rose, and two friends of the aunt, paying a tea-call. When was such the youngest, and Mrs. Rose concluded her by letting her pass somewhat and take, and bring back the cup for more tea. It was a wonderful hour.

She was able to see now how really beautiful young Mrs. Josselyn was. Her golden-brown hair was wound carefully in glorious waves and coils above her white forehead, and her white hand, heavily ringed, lay against the dark wood of the chair-arm with all the pure beauty of alabaster. She sometimes raised her glittering eyelashes, brown eyelashes with a hint of gold in them, to smile lazily at her husband, but for the most part she was inert, making no effort to be more than a lovely picture.

Mrs. Rose asked her about Paris, and she answered caqually. Ellen did not know that she was trying to make the older woman think that travel, wealth and the free purchase of gowns and jewels were but an ordinary part of the day's work to Lillian Keeler. Ellen was deeply interested and even thrilled by their talk. Her loyalty and affection were bound to Mrs. Rose; she decided that young Mrs. Josselyn was not a gentlewoman. All those blazing jewels at informal tea!

A great-grandfather's clock in the dimness of the room boomed half-past five. And with a cold and joyous rush, the youngsters came in for their tea.

That was Ellen Latimer's last happy minute in the Rose house. The little velvet dress did not fall from her as the clock struck, but she would have been happier running away from them all into the night, bare of feet and hair, and in her shabbiest kitchen dress, than she was to be here, in all their luxury and warmth.

They were introduced, and they nodded, flinging furs and wraps into the arms of silent, patient, waiting maids. Ellen marveled at their sports-clothes, the soft Swiss coats, the smart, shaggy little caps, the velvet blouses with their big buttons, the silk blouses so immaculately white. Lucia was not pretty, but how smart she was, and how she chattered! Doris was pretty, and everything else that Ellen would have liked to be as well. The five boys were all quite young, fresh-faced, well-groomed, superlatively poised in spite of their youthful clumsiness. There were nine of them, altogether. They talked only to each other, in a sort of running fire of growling and chattering and laughing. It was impossible for an outsider to follow their conversation, and even when the older people had drifted away, and Ellen was left with them, they made no concessions for her.

She Was Able to See Now How Really Beautiful Young Mrs. Josselyn Was.

Oh, what a fool she was to come here at all, she thought, undressing late that night. And how she hated them all! They felt her unwelcome, and shabby, and different, and the bitter thing was that Ellen knew that they were right. She could not speak their language, nor understand them when they spoke; her little attempts at merriment fell flat, her best gown was not so smart as their simplest sporting outfit. She had gone downstairs timidly, in the fussy little lace dress, to have them presently follow in their exquisite simplicités of sheer linen and lawn, with girlish touches of pink baby roses or childish wide Roman shades, plain silk stockings, plainly dressed little satiny heads, with jeweled pins tucked trimly against the coils and plaits. How fresh, how virginal, they were; schoolgirls just on the threshold of womanhood, seventeen, eighteen, nineteen! Ellen's twenty-two years seemed suddenly grimy and gray. A sense of injustice seized her. She had never been as young and sweet and confident as they were!

They were all in love with life, and with each other; it was a pity that they could not spare a little love for Ellen, too. But Dorothy complimented Lucia, and Lucia, Doris, and Doris in turn told Mary that she looked adorable. No one of them gave to Ellen the word for which she hungered, or better than praise, made the slightest effort to bring her into the group, gave her any reason to believe that with eyes like hers, and cheeks like hers, the lace gown mattered not at all,

The elaborate dinner was served, and the young people began to dance. Then Ellen slipped upstairs, equally unable to review the events of the day, or to anticipate those of tomorrow, with any equanimity. There would be a big dance tomorrow night, and a ride to the "Red Lion" for lunch. Ellen did not ride. Well, she would go with old Mr. Josselyn and Mrs. Rose in the closed car. Unless she had a wire from Aunt Elsie saying that Grandpa was dead—ah, if only she might!

But Grandpa was far from death, and Saturday had to be endured. It was all worse than Ellen's fears. Mrs. Rose was not going on the ride, after all; she and the aunt and the Josselyns were going to play bridge. Lucia unobtrusively from her indifference long enough to urge Ellen to try to ride. But Ellen, although she was eager to dare it, did not like to risk the danger of making herself absurd on a horse.

There was another choice; but that, too, Ellen did not see until long afterward. She might simply have pleaded indisposition, have begged to be left quietly at home, and so have watched the bridge, which interested her, and have had another pleasant tea-hour.

But instead she let Lucia separate herself from her friends to drive the funny girl from Long Island in a small roadster. The roads were heavy, but Ellen knew nothing of cars, and did not know that really difficult driving was angering the already exasperated Lucia. For perhaps fifteen minutes out of the long two hours the girls talked naturally.

They reached the "Red Lion" an hour after the others, and immediately had a large and noisy lunch in a sort of club-lunchroom, with stage-antlers and bearskins, a roaring open fire, and exposed rafters of dark wood to give a rustic effect. After lunch skis were brought out, and Ellen was dragged several cold miles on a sort of combination walk, scramble, slide, and skate. The boy called "Red" drove her silently home; he had had a good zesty cocktail before and after the walk, and drove recklessly.

They got home none too early to dress for the dance, an experience that Ellen never forgot. The young guests in the house had been indifferent to her yesterday; today they actively disliked her, and she afforded them delicious material for laughter. No one asked her to dance; she might have been an invisible witness to the gaiety, as she heartily wished herself, for any attention that was offered her. The girls, perfumed, powdered, laughing, pushed by her without a glance, and the boys, gathering eagerly about them, saw her as little. At twenty minutes to one Ellen found herself watching the bridge game. Mrs. Rose was playing with Mr. Josselyn, and it was evident that the luck was running against them.

"There's no bidding hands like these! I declare I never saw anything like it!"

"I suppose we can't start another—we said we would stop at one," young Mrs. Josselyn smiled. Ellen saw Mrs. Rose give her a venomous look as the jeweled hands tumbled the cards tidily, and the army man earnestly and quickly added the various scores.

"I'm going upstairs, now," Ellen put in shyly. "I am—a sort of headache—I think I'd really better!" And Mrs. Rose, will you tell me about trains tomorrow—I think I had better—Aunt Elsie expects me—

She had nerved herself for opposition, but Mrs. Rose made none. "I'm sorry you can't stay," she said. "Better stay—and have a little more good time. Auntie will forgive you! Anyway, come down and have some supper now!"

But Ellen murmured of her headache again. She slipped upstairs. And, once in the safety of her own room, she began to undress automatically, with scarlet cheeks and a heaving breast. They had been rude to her, they had been rude to her! She had only wanted to be innocently happy, she had only asked that they be reasonably kind, and they had turned her world upside down, and scarred the old happy confidence forever!

In Mrs. Rose's room, beyond the bathroom, a fire was burning, and Ellen went in to it, and at dawn, huddled in her wrapper, she was dreaming over the coals, when the door was pushed open, and she turned with a smile, expecting to see her hostess.

But it was young Mrs. Josselyn who came in, wrapped in a splendid oriental robe, and with her thick, soft brown hair hanging in a loose coil between her shoulders.

"I saw the door open," she said, dropping into the chair opposite Ellen. "I'm tired to death, but I don't feel like going to bed!" She stretched, her slippered feet to the blaze, locked her hands behind her head, and yawned, as unconscious as a cat. Ellen studied the lovely white arms, the smooth low forehead from which the hair was swept, the dropped bronze eyelashes. She dared not open a conversation, and risk another snub.

The other woman took a framed picture from the table, studied it for a few minutes, and again moved her eyes slowly to Ellen.

"So you've been having a perfectly rotten time?" Ellen laughed nervously.

"Why, no, I couldn't say that!" "I suspected it, the way you hung around the card table," said young Mrs. Josselyn, frankly. She extended the picture she held to Ellen. "Know him?" she asked briefly. Ellen shook her head. She looked at the face of a young man, thin, earnest of mouth and jaw, keen of eye. Even in the picture she could see that the thick crest of hair was gray, and even in the picture the handsome face showed character and power. At one corner, in a small square hand, was written: "To Lucia's Mother, from T. G. J., Jr."

"He's not spoken to his father since our marriage," Mrs. Josselyn said, dispassionately. "I've never met him. He's good looking—"

She stared silently for several moments at the face of her unknown stepson before replacing the silver frame upon the crowded table behind her. Ellen, whose sense of the romantic had been touched by this situation, looked at her with new interest. Mrs. Josselyn, again stretching her lithe body with luxurious pleasure, apparently dismissed the subject from her mind, for when she spoke again, it was of Ellen.

"So you've had a nasty time, and they treated you badly?" she said ruminatively. "Well, that's your fault, my dear. You mustn't try to play their game; they'll have you there. Make them play yours!"

"Dasher said than done!" Ellen said, sensitive and girlish.

"Tell 'em you hate walks, and you think they're all silly. Tell 'em you won't dance until you feel like it—they'll fall for anything! I'm going to bed—good-night!" she said sleepily, and was gone.

CHAPTER III

The morning came with glorious winter sunlight, and Ellen Latimer, turning luxuriously under her warm soft blankets, stared blankly at a clock that was rapidly moving toward nine o'clock. They must all have had breakfast by this time—evidently nobody cared whether she was alive or dead.

Ellen had had a white night, one of the few in her experience. For long hours she had lain awake, thinking soberly about the events of the past two days, and, quite unconsciously, assimilating their bitter lesson.

These girls were not better than she, nor wiser, nor really happier. But their circumstances were utterly different, and it was Ellen who was to blame, not they, for trying to bridge the gulf between their lives. She still had her own home, her own admiring and affectionate group, her books to read by the fire, her garden to dream over in the spring, and the swimming and boating and tennis that absorbed all youthful Port Washington from June to October. Lucia and Doris were not real, and Ellen's life dealt only with what was practical and sane. One might sigh for the prettiness, the gaiety, the irresponsibilities, of Lucia's life, one's face might burn because this pretty butterfly could be so triumphant in ride, and so self-centered, but it was wiser to forget it all, or remembering, remember, too, that the dainty superfluities were a mere accident of income. Ellen Latimer would have something that Lucia Torrey might envy some day, and through no accident of birth.

The breakfast room was deserted. Ellen was the first of all the household to appear. She smiled over her carefully served courses, and presently was "hungry absorbed" over a big-soup puzzle that had been scattered upon one of the library tables—the day before. Her train went at half-past eleven, it was not yet ten o'clock.

As the young people straggled downstairs she looked up to nod at them in composure. She presently went quietly upstairs to pack, and pinned on the fur-trimmed hat, and fastened a little clump of fresh violets, from a vase, against the sober little suit. It was only good-bye now, and the whole experience was over.

"The limousine's coming 'round, dear," Mrs. Rose said. They stepped out to the stone veranda that Ellen had crossed with such high hopes two days ago, and looked down upon a panorama of scattered homes and gardens powdered with the light snow and washed with brilliant sunshine; stone fences, brick fences, clean-swept driveways, everything shining and prosperous in a bath of Sunday peace.

Ellen began her thanks and good-byes. "Don't say one word, dearie," said kindly Mrs. Rose. "I'm only sorry you have to go." Her eyes suddenly were fixed upon the gate; and Ellen, turning, too, saw a low-slung, powerfully built roadster turn in, and come quickly up the drive. "Now, who's that?" wondered the older woman, disconcertedly eyeing the two furred men who occupied the car. "I never all down to a game of—why, it's Ward! It's my husband and Gibbs Josselyn!" She turned excitedly to Ellen. "For heaven's sake, what shall I do?"

Ellen, aware of an emergency, had yet not at all grasped the situation when the two men came laughing up the steps, and greeted her hostess. Mrs. Rose dazedly kissed the small, gray-haired man who was her husband, and dazedly introduced Ellen.

"Ward, this is Nellie Buckley's girl you've heard me talk about, and Miss Latimer—Mr. Josselyn," she said.

Nothing heavenly about the first taste of high life. But how about the next?

BIRDS

The Flamingo Was Also Very Awkward.

"I can't have everything," said the flamingo, and he looked at his beautiful feathers better than I like gracefulness and beauty or shape.

"My feathers are bright and pink and gay. When there are a number of us around we make a beautiful sight because of our magnificent coloring."

"My mother sat upon a nest of mud, with her legs drawn up beneath her while I hatched out into a handsome flamingo. At least they all say I am handsome now."

Billie Brownie agreed that the flamingo was certainly very handsome. But the flamingo was also very awkward and got into the strangest of positions.

Billie Brownie went to call on the Asiatie White Crane next.

He was beautiful with the most perfect of feathers and as he walked upon his thin legs and webbed feet there was a great deal of grace about him.

His beak was long and he reached down into the mud of the pond to see if he could find a nice frog or tadpole for supper.

Billie Brownie called upon a pigeon who had hurt himself far away from home, but who had traveled all the way to his dear little home Pigeon Cote even though it had taken him almost two weeks to make the trip.

Billie was devoted to this pigeon who had suffered, but who had made such valiant efforts to get to his home. And Billie was delighted to see him there.

He called on the vultures in the zoo, but the vultures would not say a word, for vultures are the only birds who do not care to make any sound at all.

"You're very unsociable," Billie Brownie said.

But the vultures looked at Billie Brownie and their eyes looked most unattractive and hard, he thought.

He called on the eagles next and the eagles told him they were very fond of their food.

Their keeper had told them lately of some of their relatives who lived along the Pacific coast who ate so many young salmon that they could hardly fly.

The eagles thought that was a great joke and they said:

"If boys and girls and ladies and gentlemen sometimes eat so much they can hardly walk, because they have not time to 'realize' such good foods, you can see them that the Bald Eagles, the national birds, sometimes can't resist eating too much themselves!"

Next Billie called on another pigeon. This pigeon had arrived exhausted near a harbor with a message tied around his leg.

The message was a call for help from some stranded seamen and it was all because of the little brave pigeon who had been with the seamen and who had not stopped even though he had felt many times as though he could go no further, that these men were saved.

Billie Brownie was amazed, too, at the modesty of the pigeon. If he had saved three lives he would be pretty proud.

But the pigeon said:

"What else would I have done? Of course, I was tired, but as long as I could possibly keep on, I kept on. For I knew what an important message I was bringing."

"Oh, I did nothing more than any pigeon would have done. It is nothing to make a fuss over," Billie Brownie, though I am delighted to have your kind thoughts and your good wishes and your friendship."

So Billie Brownie went back to Brownie and told them of the birds he had seen, but especially he told of the brave pigeon who was so naturally brave that bravery meant nothing unusual to him.

And the Brownies were thrilled hearing about him.

Horse Population Decreases

Startling figures showing the decrease in the number of horses in the United States have been given out by the National Horsehoers' Protective association. This decrease has run from 63 to 75 per cent in the last ten years and there was a falling off of more than 200,000 head in 1923 alone, when the horse population was put at 18,853,000 against 19,099,000 in 1922. In ten years the decrease of 55 per cent in Chicago and of 63 per cent in Baltimore has been slower than in any of the other large cities.

Greatly Enthused

The Republicans are greatly enthused because Coolidge pledged the republican party to flood control, water storage, power development and the immediate relief of those under reclamation projects, all of which was urged upon the president by Senator Bursum. Republicans claim that Coolidge should, and will, carry the state on these declarations alone, and that Senator Bursum will undoubtedly be given full credit by the voters accomplishing the greatest real good for the future yet recorded for any man in either house of congress from this state. The development of power will bring prosperity to the entire state, as the stored waters of the Rio Grande, the Pecos, and tributary streams, also the San Juan, will develop power enough and so well located for distribution as to supply the entire state. These same waters will be used afterwards for irrigation. Flood control will make possible the reclamation of hundreds of thousands of acres of good land in the flooded valley of the state and the people will be relieved the necessity of mortgaging their properties for more than value in order to bring them again under cultivation. The Republican party is pledged to those policies, and the future will increase their importance. The entire west will insist that the democratic party take similar action.

Miller is Right

Santa Fe, Sept. 10. --Chairman Prager Miller, of the state republican committee, is sending out appeals to republicans everywhere in the state to attend their primaries and do their part in bringing about the selection of a winning ticket. Mr. Miller reports the republicans of every county in the state as taking much interest this year and believes the best way to get a real expression of the party sentiment for any of those yet mentioned as possible candidates is to get the voters of the party into the primaries. The republican voters of the various counties should send good men to the state convention and in the primaries for nominating the county tickets the party voters should see to it that the delegates selected represent the sentiments of the majority of the voters. Mr. Miller says that republicans should attend the primaries as a matter of duty to both party and state, and through that attendance make possible the selection of tickets satisfactory to the voters, and therefore winning tickets. According to all reports the fight this year will find the republicans again harmonious in the state, which means a close contest.

Brought Surprises

The democratic primaries in Bernalillo county brought surprises, and leaves the democrats in some doubt as to the exact meaning of the final result. The largest precinct in the county, 26 Albuquerque, went distinctly anti-administration, and Tinguely, a county boss, was permitted to be on the delegation by courtesy, but Judge Hanna and others as prominent could not get recognition. The next largest precinct went for the administration and some bad acting is charged there. Magee had supporters on both tickets in the factional fight. The outside precincts of the county will decide the contest and the result will not be known until late Saturday the 13th, the date of the county convention. The State Tribune claims that the reactionary, or administration, faction was badly beaten in the county, which, if true, is quite a surprise.

Famous Old Venetian Hotel Has Centenary

The Hotel Danieli, known as "the first hotel in Venice," celebrates its centenary this year. This building is on the famous Slavonian wharf where the wealth of the Orient was once unloaded from vessels near the palace of the Doges and the prison from which Casanova escaped.

Every king, prince and other celebrity who visited Venice once stopped at the Danieli and it was here that Alfred de Musset and George Sand had their famous intrigue.

All the biographers of these "Venetian lovers" do not agree as to the date of their departure, writes Georges Michel in L'Illustration, Paris (translated by the Kansas City Star). "It was my fortune to discover in the cellars of the hotel the old register of arrivals and departures for the year 1834 in which the names of the illustrious travelers were entered. The thing, however, that lends a picturesque touch to the idyll is that George Sand's name appears on the same line with that of 'M. Musset,' and is written as 'Mister Dedesiant.'"

Gotham's Phone Calls

Rising and falling throughout the day, the distribution of telephone calls has been likened to the pulse of a city's activities. To show these fluctuations with accuracy, a chart has been made of the amount of business handled by the exchanges in New York city. Until five o'clock in the morning the number of calls is negligible, and may be considered as zero. A slight increase sets in a little after that hour, and by six o'clock the curve begins to sweep upward, reaching its highest peak for the day at 9:30. This follows a slow decline until 11:30, when the curve suddenly takes a sharp downward turn and falls until 12:30, the lowest level of the business day. The highest point during the afternoon is at 1:30, after which there is a steady decrease. Popular Mechanics.

EUROPEANS WANT "LONG DISTANCE" LIKE AMERICA'S

Hope for Continent-wide Toll Lines Similar to Those of the United States

Europe wants a long distance telephone system like that in the United States. The possibility of establishing such a comprehensive international telephone service...

Recently there has been further discussion of the matter in the technical press of Europe.

"American experience," writes a German authority, "is in many respects helpful on account of the problems set by the size of the country." The writer points out that "the longest distance in Europe, from Gibraltar to the Ural Mountains (4,350 kilometers), is far short of the distance from New York to Key West via New York (about 4,000 kilometers), over which telephonic conversation is already possible; and he adds: "Furthermore, there is no traffic between Gibraltar and the Ural Mountains, and the distances between the capitals of Europe are still shorter."

Nevertheless, telephone conditions on the continent are such that "we must not let ourselves be lulled into thinking that the European long-distance system will be realized in a few years," for, according to this German expert, "the only course of development can be that in which telephone systems are built up in the busy districts of Europe for internal use, but with an eye to future international communication," so that "they will gradually get welded together by cables of steel wires, according to the amount of traffic between them."

"HOLD MIRROR UP TO NATURE" AIDS VOICE TRAINING

Practice Before Looking-glass Helps Operators Cultivate "Voice With a Smile"

The mirror, an age-old aid to beauty, is also used to help to "put a smile in the voice." In order to develop voice technique, telephone operators are taught to practice before a mirror so as to be able to study the action of the mouth, for a girl's voice is always a vital, elusive part of her charm and to the operator it is something more—her telephone personality.

The first objective of voice technique is to make telephone voices uniformly distinct and clear, so as to do away with misunderstandings and repetitions. Efficiency, however, is not the only consideration. Conservation of the voice is necessary to every operator, so that she can use it so skillfully, so sparingly and so quietly as to be able to talk with the least effort and prevent fatigue. It is at this point that the use of the mirror is invaluable to the operator in acquiring good enunciation and speaking in a pleasing manner. One of the most important factors in an operator's speech is the use of rising inflection. As the voice rises in pitch, the sound waves in the air become more rapid and more clearly understood. Practice in front of the mirror shows her how to have the voice float out clearly as it goes up.

Just as cheer, happiness, courtesy, sympathy and a desire to serve are reflected in a voice, so also are indifference, discourtesy, dullness and coldness. Many companies and business firms realize that the smile in the telephone voice is a strong factor in promoting friendly feelings, and they are concerned that when telephoning, the voices of their employees shall be refined, gracious and a reflection of intelligence.

PALM CANYON

Nature richly endowed this country with much of the most majestic scenery on the globe. The choicest places have been reserved for you, that you and your children after you may know and enjoy these unspoiled bits of native American. Uncle Sam is ever alert for new scenic assets of outstanding value in the old wilderness which comes down to us as left by nature and practically unchanged by the hand of man.

One of the latest selections to form a link in Uncle Sam's chain of unmatched beauty spots is Palm Canyon, which has been described as "a bit of Arabia transplanted to the western hemisphere," located in miles southeast of Roswell, Cal.

Here in a series of canyons but little removed from a desertlike section grow scores of magnificent Washington palms—tall, graceful, picturesque and centuries old, undoubtedly, the only native palms in all California, as well as a number of species of interesting and unusual cacti—the entire ensemble forming a botanical collection both unusual and extraordinary. These native palms are scattered along the banks of a tortuous little stream which flows through the canyon and clusters around it in groves where it engages from the hills. The scene is both surprising and romantic. It is likewise magnificent because almost directly overhead Mount San Jacinto rears its lofty head. In one direction the canyon appears to be closed by a great wall of colored rock. Righting about face the view leads out onto the desert beyond. Nearby may be seen other palms, larger perhaps, older too, possibly, which have been burned and scattered through enforced participation in certain Indian ceremonies having to do with the burning of the so-called "skits" while still on the trees. Many of these unusual and peculiar-to-America trees have been cut down by various people and carried away for numerous uses.

As proposed, there are 1,000 acres in the reservation. The consent and relinquishment of a remnant of the Agus Caliente band of Indians is necessary before the tract may become a national monument. Assuming that the Indians give their consent, the ride from Riverside to Palm Canyon and the trip through the canyon bid well to become a lure which will beckon untold thousands as the years roll by.

Uncle Sam Would Have Us Play

National Plan for Outdoor Recreation in the Making

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

UNCLE SAM would have us play out of doors. Incidentally, Uncle Sam here means the government of the United States; there is no politics in this article.

President Wilson was a good friend of out-of-doors recreation; it was he who backed the popular movement which forced through congress in his administration the act exempting the existing national parks from the jurisdiction of the new water power commission, thus heading off immediate danger of commercial invasion. Franklin D. Lane, in his cabinet, was the first secretary of the interior to see the economic, recreational and ethical value of the national park system. It was Lane, a Democrat, who induced Stephen T. Mather, a Republican, to become director of the new national park service. It was during the Wilson administration that Hawaii (1910), Lassen Volcanic (1910), Mount McKinley (1917), Grand Canyon (1910) and Lafayette (1910) National parks were established by acts of congress.

It was President Harding who announced through an authorized spokesman at the fiftieth anniversary of the Yellowstone, a national park policy, which promised, among other things, their protection against invasion by the commercial interests. It was Harding who visited Yellowstone and the new Zion National park during the summer of 1921 and confirmed that policy. It is President Coolidge who has gone a step farther than those two predecessors and would have the establishment of a definite governmental policy of participation in outdoor recreation and promotion of its advancement.

Emphasis is put upon the national parks because the national park movement is the exemplar of the many movements which now enter into the vast question of outdoor recreation. So important has the national park movement become that it is regarded by competent students of the times as the most important issue of the day. It has called together a "National Parks Army" with a nation-wide strength of between four and five million nature lovers of all ranks and conditions of life, all political creeds, all religions. The democracy of out-of-doors is the most democratic of all democracies.

The enrollment and functioning of this "National Parks Army" showed these things: The popular support of the recreation movement; the possibilities of a more effective organization, and the advisability of the participation of the administrative branch of the federal government. So the time was ripe for the National Outdoor Recreation conference this summer in Washington called by President Coolidge.

The appointment of the President's committee on National Outdoor Recreation was the first step. Secretaries Weeks, Work, Wallace, Hoover and Assistant Secretary Roosevelt were the members of the committee asked by the President to suggest to him how a national outdoor recreation policy could be formulated and put into action.

This committee is fittingly constituted. Secretaries Weeks, Work and Wallace are the three members of the federal power commission which has general administrative control over all water power sites on the public lands and reservations, existing national parks excepted. Mr. Weeks, as secretary of war, is interested in public roads, is in charge of the national military parks and is the author of the Weeks act, under which have been made extensive forest purchases in the White mountains and the Appalachians.

Doctor Work, as secretary of the interior, controls the National Park service, the general land office, the office of Indian affairs, and the bureau of education. Secretary Wallace is in control of the forest service which administers the national forests; and the bureau of biological survey, public roads and plant industry.

Secretary Hoover has charge of the bureau of fisheries and is officially interested in fishing and transportation. Moreover he is president of the National Parks association, an unofficial nationwide organization of nature lovers influential in directing the activities of the "National Park Army." Col. Theodore Roosevelt of the Navy Department is a nature lover by inheritance. He is executive chairman.

Congress has appointed an advisory committee consisting of representatives of the executive departments mentioned and Charles Sheldon of the Boone and Crockett club and Robert Sterling Yard, executive secretary of the National Parks association.

In response to invitations by Colonel Roosevelt, delegates representing 123 organizations of many kinds from coast to coast met in the auditorium of the National museum, erected a permanent organization and formulated a policy.

The government is represented by the President's committee. Its function is to determine an administrative policy and to serve as a medium between the people and the administration. It will assume none of the responsibilities of the people, who will continue, through their own organizations, to deal directly with congress. It does, however, insure the co-operation of the various departments of the administrative branch of the federal government—a thing that has been unfortunately lacking. It will also help in bringing both the administrative and legislative branches in accord with the popular will.

An advisory council of one hundred represents the people. It will serve between conferences. An executive committee, to serve between meetings of the advisory council, is made up as follows:

Chauncey J. Hamlin, New York, politician, World War veteran, expert in civic service, president American Association of Museums, chairman.

Dr. John C. Merriam, Washington, paleontologist, educator, administrator, author and vice president National Academy of Sciences, vice chairman.

Dr. George E. Scott, Illinois, treasurer and chairman finance committee.

Dr. Vernon L. Kellogg, Washington, world-famous zoologist and author, permanent secretary and chairman of division of educational relations National Research council, secretary.

Walter F. Martin, Washington.

John Barton Payne, Illinois, president 1911-24 board of South Park commissioners, Chicago, former judge, cabinet officer and director general of railroads, chairman American Red Cross.

Charles Sheldon, Washington, author, explorer, big game hunter, Boone and Crockett club.

Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, Colorado, the "National Park Lady," director American Forestry association, director Better Homes in America, manager Garden Week campaign, president General Federation of Women's clubs.

George Shiras, III, Michigan and Washington, lawyer, writer, naturalist, member advisory board Migratory Bird Treaty Regulations, president League of Wild Life Photographers.

James E. West, New York, chief scout executive Boy Scouts of America.

Mrs. Jane Beater Ripplin, New York.

This distinguished personnel represents, as is evident, a wide range of recreational functions and includes many of nation-wide fame who have devoted years of enthusiastic effort to the cause.

The advisory council, through its executive committee, assumes no power beyond planning and organizing work for the purpose of correlating the activities of organizations as a whole in the interest of greater harmony of effort. It will, however, have access to the national administration as a whole, instead of to government departments singly as in the past.

The executive committee of the advisory council has issued the following statement:

"The advisory council of the National Conference of Outdoor Recreation believes that it is not its function to take over the operation of any part of the field of outdoor recreation, but rather to support, endorse and seek assistance from the various national organizations already at work in this field.

"Pursuant to this policy, announcement is made that by resolution duly adopted the following national organizations have been requested to undertake certain fact-finding surveys which appear to the committee as fundamental to any carefully formulated national plan for outdoor recreation:

the field of outdoor recreation and conservation through teaching an understanding and love of nature.

"It is the intention of the advisory council to request other national organizations to make similar surveys in the field of the social significance of outdoor recreation, its relation to child life, health, industrial workers, rural recreation needs, athletic games, sports, etc., and also in the field of the value of natural resources to outdoor recreation with particular reference to forests, game and fur-bearing animals, fish, birds, plants, flowers, waters, etc.

"It is believed that through the close co-operation of such private agencies and government agencies, federal, state, county and municipal, it will be possible eventually to evolve a national plan for outdoor recreation in which each agency, public and private, will have and play its part to the end that our country will be a happier, pleasanter and healthier place in which to live.

There will be plenty for the new organization to do. There is, for instance, the matter of upholding the standard of the national parks. A feature of national park policy first promulgated by Secretary Lane in 1913 and confirmed by remarkable demonstrations of popular sentiment is that "the national park system as now constituted shall not be lowered, in standard, dignity and prestige by the inclusion of areas which express in less than the highest terms the particular class or kind of exhibit which they represent." It was the attempt of Secretary Albert B. Fall to abrogate this policy that largely led to his resignation.

Well, the pigeon-holes of the public lands committee of the two houses of congress are full of bills for new national parks. These include the Nicollet in Wisconsin; Grand Coulee and Yakima in Washington; Mean in Arkansas and Ozark in Missouri. There are bills for "a national park" in Georgia, Virginia and Pennsylvania. Texas has a bill appropriating $100,000 for the purchase of a national park in Jeff Davis county. Secretary Work has appointed a committee to study the question of a national park in the Southern Appalachians.

The long standing controversy between the national park service and the forest service over the boundaries of the proposed Roosevelt-Sequoia National park prevents action by congress. Senator Walsh of Montana has for four years been attempting to force through his bills for the damming of Yellowstone lake in the Yellowstone.

Perhaps the new organization can prevent the happening of a thing like this: June 7, the last day of the last session of congress, the general deficiency bill in the senate came up for final enactment. It contained the following appropriations for the national parks: Mesa Verde, $3,000; Mount Rainier, $18,000; Rocky Mountain, $35,171—all on account of wood damage; road construction, under $7,500,000 authorization of congress, $1,000,000. But it failed to pass. Senator Pittman of Nevada was angry because a reclamation appropriation in which he was interested had been omitted and ran a successful filibuster. The things they have been saying about him in the parks this summer!

Eighteen committees discussed as many aspects of outdoor recreation at the conference and the report of the committee on resolutions, as adopted, is quite comprehensive. Recommendations are made on many vexed questions. It is too long, however, for even a summary here. But it does serve a public policy upon Uncle Sam that there must be harmony among the departments, especially between the interior and agricultural; and that the pollution of waters must be stopped. The conference endorses nature study in the schools, for which the General Federation of Women's Clubs is campaigning, and the training of nature teachers in normal schools and colleges. And there is a whole volume in this first resolution:

"Resolved, that outdoor recreation furnishes opportunity to gain abounding health, strength, wholesome enjoyment, understanding and love of nature, good fellowship and keen sportsmanship and, above all, has a direct beneficial influence on the formation of sturdy character by developing those qualities of self-control, endurance, self-reliance, resourcefulness, and co-operation with others in team work which are so necessary to good citizenship.

The truth of the matter is that the Twentieth century civilization, especially in the big cities, is neither sane nor sane in many of its aspects. Our appetites are so strenuous and our passions so out of control.

That is why Uncle Sam would have us play—out of doors.

"The Playground and Recreation Association of America, a survey of county and municipal parks, forests, playgrounds, waters and other reservations.

"The National Conference on State Parks, a survey of state parks, waters, forests and other reservations.

"The American Forestry association and the National Park association, to appoint a joint committee to undertake a joint survey through their organizations of the federal parks, forests, reservations and other public lands and waters.

The American Association of Museums, a survey of the contributions that can be made by the natural history museums of the country in the field of outdoor recreation and conservation through teaching an understanding and love of nature.

Lonesome Job Is That of Lighthouse Keeper

One is considered to be a good station; a cone-shaped rock separated from our wives ashore by just one mile of turbulent sea.

Every man has two homes; there are excellent houses on the island with plenty of accommodation for wives and families. But some years ago the wisdom of Irish lights decided that we were better apart, and provided "ashore" houses for our families. We go there in the relief spells, wind and weather permitting.

It is better so for the children, who can go to school, and better for the wives, who are no longer cut off from the world.

We three lonesome men on the rock are thoroughly sick of the sight of each other's faces. We have far too much of our own company. There is not a surprise possible among us. For long periods we exchange never a word.

In every way a woman as constant companion is infinitely to be preferred. At any rate I have never grown used to my wife or tired of her in this way; perhaps because in 15 years I have never had a chance.

We are handy men; for our wives we can do almost anything—mend clocks, make or mend clothes, chairs and tables, toys and mats. Any one of us can cook and serve up the joint of meat passably, after the manner of men. The rest of our cooking is done mainly with a can opener.

One of the reasons why this is a desirable station, is because we can get a weekly joint of meat and pot, and regular relief. At the Skelligs, off the coast of Kerry, rightly selected by the monks of old as a safe refuge for women, we sometimes lived for weeks and months on rabbits and sea fowl. We had, luckily, a cocker spaniel who would catch a rabbit on request.

By the aid of a glass we can see plainly from this rock the front doors of our homes across the water. The whitewash is rubbed off our landward wall, and there is a groove on the top of it. There are no dilapidations on the seaward wall.

Only once have I known a man who joined the lights to get away from women. Soap, by marriage, he did his best to return to one of them.—Light Keeper, in London Mail.

Instinct of Bees

Bees are remarkable for the possession of instinctive qualities that fit them for almost every emergency of their lives, but in some circumstances their instinct fails to protect them. A writer in an agricultural paper says that in northern Massachusetts there is more loss of bees from flying in chilly weather than from any other cause. Bees that fly in freezing temperatures, or when it is too cold for them to fly except for a short distance, seldom survive to get back to the hive, he says. His remedy to discourage the bees from going out when the weather is cold or snow is on the ground is to shade the hive from the direct rays of the sun. Unless this is done they apparently think summer is coming and it is time for them to be on the wing.—Outlook Mag.azine.

Electricity on Farms

Fourteen Minnesota farms have been provided with every known electrically operated household or labor-saving device, without cost to the farmer, in a three-year test supervised by professors of the agricultural college of the University of Minnesota to determine whether it is practical to use electricity on farms. The farms are in the Mississippi river valley, near Red Wing, Minn., and about twenty miles south of Twin Cities. They are situated along a trial power line which measures 52 miles. The farm houses are being equipped with electric ranges, washing machines, mangles, toasters and other devices. The farmyard is to be equipped with electrically operated cream separators, milking machines, feed graders, conveyors, thrashing machines and wood-sawing machines.

Natural Thought

He wore a long-tailed coat, a frock tie and a stiff hat that marked him as a small-town aristocrat of the old school. At the hotel he straddled around the lobby with an air of ownership that was very impressive. But in a three days' stay not a nickel had been scattered among the boys and the word had spread that the colonel was not all that he seemed to be.

He had just had his "boots" shined, and as the boy brushed him off, he remarked:

"George, what would you think if I gave you 50 cents for this shine?"

George answered right up:

"Ah would think you wanted forty cents change, suh!"—Kansas City Star.

History of Candy

It is impossible to say when candy as such was first used. The word "candy" was originally derived from Sanskrit "kanda," meaning "break." In one sense candy is as old as the use of extracted sugar. Sugar was probably first manufactured in India, whence it was introduced into Arabia, and through the Moors spread to Spain and the rest of Europe. But the manufacture of candy in the modern sense is comparatively new. Candy was used in England in the fourteenth and eighteenth centuries when it was prepared by apothecaries and physicians to disguise the taste of medicine and drugs. It was over a century later that it became widely used as a sacrament and confection.

On the Funny Side

PERFECTLY SUITABLE

Jack—I say, Frank, do you know what I'm going to call my new motor-bike?

Frank—No.

"Circumstances."

"That's a queer name for a motor-bike, isn't it?"

"Not at all. Haven't you ever heard of circumstances over which a fellow has no control?"—London Answers.

The Idea Different

He—How sweet it would be if we were two little birds who could fly out into the great world and build our nest in the top of a tree!

She—If would be much nicer to be married and to have a little flat with two rooms and a bath, a gas stove and warm water!

FROM THE OTHER SIDE

"I suppose she calls that old dress she turned inside out an imported one?"

"No—just refers to it as being from the other side."

An Air-Fall

"The night shall be filled with music, and the cares that infest the day" will expand more and more while the people next door are making the radio play.

Deep Water

"My dear young woman, if it is well known, that intellectual women are not good-looking."

"And how would you classify me?"

"Why, you are not at all intellectual."

"Oh, you flatterer."

Old Story

"Did you hear about Mrs. Farleigh's motor accident?"

"No. What happened?"

"She ran down her own husband."

"But she was being doing that ever since she was married."

Too Old to Learn

"Sweet are the uses of adversity," said the confirmed miser.

"I believe so," retorted the dissolute. "But somehow or another I don't seem to be able to cultivate a taste for it."

Wearing the Palm

Uncle Bob—I see you've been awarded the palm as the champion mosquito bopper of this block.

Bobby—That's right. It was dad's palm on the seat of my pants.

Too Steady!

First Merchant—The Smith boy who used to work for you wants me to give him a job. Is he steady?

Second Merchant—Well, if he was any steadier he'd been neckless.

COULDN'T SEE CHANGE

"You just swallowed five cents!"

"Well, I can't see any change in you if you have!"

Smolder Lost Control

As sixty miles.

Drive While Smolder:

He lost control.

His wife's a smolder.

A Parasitic Case

Mother—Mary, you let Reggie stay too late last night. It was one o'clock when he went.

Daughter—But you told me I must give him time to propose.

"Yes, but five hours!"

"Well, mother, you know he stutters."

The Only Kind

"Bill seems to be a confirmed pessimist. Is he never hopeful about anything?"

"Oh, yes, occasionally Bill imagines he is a fortune hunter about something or other."

Has the Lost-Page Habit

Edith—I hate those magazine serials.

Mattie—Why, dear?

Edith—You never can tell how the story is coming out until it is finished.

Combs Promise to Be Much in Favor—Spanish Shawl Popular Mode.

In this intermediate season some unfamiliar and entertaining things are disclosed in the shops, the small intimate places where exclusive novelties are shown and where odds and ends are to be found, says a fashion authority in the New York Times.

Combs are to be all the rage next season, judging from the attractive novelties that are offered in the shops and department stores patronized by the elite. The most diverting styles are shown; large ornate affairs of various kinds, in ivory, shell or filigree work in metal cord of the most delicate materials. There are combs overlaid with a floral pattern in gilt ribbon; combs studded with semi-precious stones and combs covered with "stardust." They are in many colors.

Just how these large hair ornaments will be adjusted to bobbed coiffures is not apparent, but that there is a demand worthy of attention is obvious. Bandoes are shown to engage the fancy of the lady of short locks; they are beautiful brilliant ornaments in rhinestones and pearls, classic models in gilt and silver color and the delicate flower fillets, among an elaborate collection offering many styles to suit as many costumes.

The vogue of the Spanish shawl and its many variants has made popular its traditional accessory, the Spanish comb, or some form of appropriate garniture for the hair, quite different from the simple headpiece that was fashionable a few seasons ago.

Original ideas would seem to have been exhausted in necklaces, yet the most captivating examples keep coming to meet the popular demand. Nothing is lovelier than a full-chain conventional necklace length-of-graduated beads of rose quartz. Others of crystal quartz are emblem of cool summer straight, and some are cubes alternating on a thin string, with beads of jade, aquamarine, topaz or abasely cut jet. An objet d'art is a necklace formed of large beads of Chinese jade, and beads of ivory, beautifully traced in brown lines, with a pendant of jade from which is suspended a large tassel of jade-green silk.

New Evening Wrap for Fall Has Fox Collar

The popularity of ostrich has brought out some unique and exceedingly catchy forms of trimming for dressy costumes. For evening gowns of thin material (tulle, georgette, gauze and the thin crepes) are shown beautiful motifs—long, trailing sprays of the feathery stuff, and large clusters.

New versions of the Spanish shawl seem to come out almost weekly. The latest is black and white, done in large scroll patterns and in entire scenes, hand-painted or embroidered on a solid background. The latest, Spanish, attaches to many lovely things in wraps for day and evening wear in the picturesque scarfs and shawls, heavily embroidered and fringed, that give a look of distinction to the most inconspicuous costume. They are of various origins, French, Italian, Russian, English, Scandinavian, and most are pretty and unusual.

New Fall Portrait Hat Has Wing-Shaped Brim

One of the attractions at a fall millinery show recently held in New York was a large portrait hat with a wing-shaped brim, with facing of king-blue velvet, crown and top-band wrapped with black panne velvet and a fan of peacock as sole trimming.

Fashionable Apparel as Noted in Style Centers

A fashion authority who has returned recently from style centers abroad, says the Kansas City Star, brings back these authoritative highlights of fashionable dress: Flared skirts are worn longer in back than in front. Sometimes heavy fringes make the boucra, instead of the fabric of the dress. The introduction of long, light-fitting lace sleeves in moon-queens effect is an important feature of semi-formal gowns.

One of the novelties of the season is a detachable "choker" that buttons at one side. It usually is made of some fur, matched by detachable cuffs on the dress. The only trimming that some of the smartest evening gowns have is heavy silver ribbon attached to the shoulders and tying at the waistline in back.

Choose Veil of Color and Weave That Suits

Do you select your veil with a view to covering "a multitude of sins," or do you regard it only as a becoming "finishing touch" to your costume?

While it is true that a veil does minimize certain defects, it is not a mask or a disguise. And it should not only hide imperfections, but heighten charms, says a correspondent in the Kansas City Star.

Ask yourself these questions as you adjust your veil: Does it enhance the beauty of my hat? Does it give my toilet a more complete appearance? Does it protect my face?

Let your veil be of a color and weave that you know suit you; and never let it be straggly. The blue veil is perhaps the most becoming of all. It has the effect of clarifying the skin and heightening the color, and, if the eyes happen to be blue, it increases their color and brilliancy.

The face veil solely of white is the one most to be avoided, as it is unbecoming except to very youthful women, or those who have very clear, highly-colored complexions.

A woman with small features should, ordinarily, wear a veil with a light pattern. A heavier pattern may suit the larger woman. Similarly, a small, close-fitting hat usually requires a single-veiled veil; but where the veil is feathered away from the face, as on the large hat, the larger-patterned veil is smart and becoming.

The most satisfactory sort of veil for everyday use is the heavier, twisted, three-inch one, in brown, or in white with black dots. These veils are becoming to nearly every one, and they wash and wear well.

Cape Ever Practical

A cape that forms part of a costume has much to recommend it, not only from the point of view of appearance, but for its utilitarian purposes. A well-known woman sailing for Europe recently wore a simple little frock of tan and brown plaid wool, with a slightly circular cape of the same material. It was most effective.

Featuring One Color

Some of the smart New York shops are featuring one color. Thus, the latestst hermesa yellow is seen in chiffon frocks for evening wear. The deeper shades of yellow are used for afternoon costumes and wraps, while the most vivid yellows are reserved for sports clothes.

Bedspreads. Crinkle cloth bedspreads come in pretty colors and are practical for beds, for they launder without requiring any ironing, and many have a silky luster because they have strands of artificial silk.

Summer Fattened Steers on Grass

Interesting Experiments Being Made With Cattle in Blue Grass Region.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
Cattle feeders in all parts of the country may derive some benefit from the results of experimental work carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the West Virginia agricultural experiment station, especially those who winter steers with the intention of fattening them on pasture the following summer. Because the Appalachian region of which the state of West Virginia is the center, is a good bluegrass country admirably adapted to growing stockers and feeders, and to fattening them on pasture, most of the beef produced in this section is produced on grass alone. It has been a common practice in this area to winter steers on dry feed, such as hay, corn stover and wheat straw, and on corn silage to a less extent, in such a way that they are permitted to lose weight. They are then pastured the following summer and sold as stockers, feeders, or finished steers.

Causes for Experiments.
Because there are some who have maintained that it is profitable to allow the loss, which with other steers usually varies from 25 to 100 pounds, and others that believe that cattle wintered on silage, or on a ration of which silage is a part, will not do well on grass the following summer, these feeding experiments have been undertaken. Three years' results are now available and have been published in a new bulletin just issued by the United States Department of Agriculture. It is called Department Bulletin 1201, and discusses the effect of winter rations on pasture gains of two-year-old steers, also the cost of rations for wintering two-year-old steers.

From these results, it has been concluded that, generally speaking, the steers which made larger winter gains also made larger total gains for the year when fattened on grass the following summer. The steers which made only slight gains or which were allowed to lose weight during the winter made greater summer gains on pasture than the steers which made the larger winter gains, but were not able to overtake them in the final weight.

Winter Gain Is Best.
Consequently differences in weight of steers at the end of the winter, due to rations fed, are gradually minimized during the summer fattening on grass, but not wholly overcome. Since this is true, it is important that cattle which are to be marketed early should gain considerably more weight during the winter than if they are to be marketed late.

A copy of this bulletin may be secured free, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Pasture Is Essential as Feed Yard for Hog Herd

No successful feeder of hogs will attempt to get along without some kind of a pasture for them. Anything, even mixtures of grain, will help some, but alfalfa, clover or rye, perhaps make the best, in the order named. Alfalfa and clover furnish protein and at the same time some of the minerals needed for thrifty growth, says the Prairie Farmer. Fall rye makes an excellent pure pasture, and down in Christian county they are using a mixture of soy beans, oats, clover and rye with considerable success. The value of this mixture lies in the fact that the different ingredients come on at different periods, so that within six or seven weeks from seeding one may have a succession of good feed all the balance of the season. Anything which will make green feed will be reliable. For the hog the pasture lot is every bit as essential as the feed yard.

Increase Production by Freshening Cow in Fall

Other things being equal, the richer the milk the richer the cream will be in separating. At this time of year the test of herd milk is very apt to drop suddenly, due to the introduction of fresh cows into the herd and the sudden change from dry feed to pasture.

In addition to the usual slump in the test of the herd milk there is a tremendous increase in production with a corresponding slump in price of butterfat, and the consequent discouragement of the producer. There is no remedy available to the producer for the low price per pound, unless he uses this experience to his advantage by having his cows freshen in the fall and so have his increase in production come on a rising instead of a falling market.

Most Profitable Ducks

Ducks are most profitable if marketed between ten and twelve weeks of age. By this time they are nearly, if not quite full grown, providing they have done well from the beginning. At this age they usually go into a moult and from then on will make little or no growth for a number of weeks and there can be no profit in keeping them beyond this time. From the sixth week on a rather heavy ration of corn will fetch the ducklings in good shape.

No Internal Remedy for Poultry Pests

Medicine Will Not Control External Parasites.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
Manufacturing and selling preparations for controlling lice, mites, ticks (blue bugs) and other external parasites of poultry by serving to the fowls in their feed or drinking water is a popular pastime of a number of con-men, and one which the United States Department of Agriculture says should not be tolerated. A number of the mixtures advertised for use in controlling external pests by administering in the feed have been tested by the insecticide and fungicide board of the department and all have been found to be ineffective. Among the products which were offered as powders to be mixed with the feed are several containing mixtures of sulphur, charcoal, magnesium sulphate, ferrous sulphate, nux vomica, capsaicin, sodium carbonate, naphthalene, lime, salt and sand. Some of the mixtures were lime-sulphur solutions to be added to the drinking water; some calcium sulphide tablets of various percentages and having quantities of other chemicals as well. All were tested and found to be ineffective for the purpose advertised.

In view of these numerous tests the board has served notice on the manufacturers who may be selling or contemplating selling the above-mentioned products to be used in this manner for controlling external pests of poultry that they are guilty of violating the provisions of the insecticide act of 1910, and that the products are misbranded. The board is of the opinion that these tests are sufficient to strongly indicate that such a method is ineffective and further that it is extremely doubtful if any substance will be found which will be effective when used in the feed or drinking water. Tests have not been made of all of the mixtures advertised against all of the pests named, but taking into consideration the tests which have been made and the anatomy and physiology of chickens, it is believed that it is unlikely that any of the substances proposed, or any combination of them, when fed to chickens, will control any of the external parasites infesting them. These preparations are sold for the most part directly to consumers by parcel post.

Tuberculosis Found in Different Dairy States

Systematic tuberculosis testing of cattle conducted by various states and the United States Department of Agriculture co-operatively, show that nearly nine-tenths of premises contain no tuberculous cattle. The per cent of infection, however, varies greatly, the records show. In ten states infection exceeds 25 per cent, or one in four. In eleven states the average infection is less than five, or one herd in twenty. The other states have intermediate proportions of infection. Persons who have never had their cattle tested for tuberculosis and who desire to know the extent of infection in their locality, may obtain this information by application to the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. While the information given is believed to be of interest to cattle owners, the only certain method of knowing the health condition of a herd with respect to tuberculosis is the application for a tuberculin test by a competent veterinarian.
