TALES OF THE OLD FRONTIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE DIED GAME WHEN a man of the old frontier came to the end of the trail...

Once some Texas cowboys who had made a semi-official punitive expedition across the Rio Grande were captured by the Mexicans...

Up on a Michigan river a crew of lumberjacks were trying to break a log jam. They were "dry-picking"...

Lieutenant Brickley

Senator E. M. Brickley has received a commission of First Lieutenant, Q. M. O. R. C., of 410th Infantry at Roswell.

The commission which came unsolicited on Mr. Brickley's part, is in recognition of his services during the war...

Declares Third Dividend

Receiver Patterson of the First State Bank of Capitan declared another dividend this week of 15 per cent to all depositors.

Fort Stanton News

Hunting, here and elsewhere, has been the thought of the recent period since the season opened.

Interesting and painful to Messrs. Cavanaugh and Mickey was a charge of shot exchanged between them when each were mistaken for game.

Captain West has returned from a month's vacation; James Hebron from an eight-day vacation, a portion of which time he spent with Bill Kersey on a hunting trip.

Socially speaking, Mrs. Dr. Warner will entertain at her home with a Thanksgiving bridge and dancing party.

Dr. and Mrs. Anderson entertained at a bridge party Tuesday evening.

At the basket ball game last Saturday, Tularosa won by the score of 14 to 2.

Recent arrivals were, the welcome nurses, the Misses Madeline Wilkinson from Chicago and Anna O'Brien from San Francisco.

Accidentally Shot While Deer Hunting

The first accident of a serious nature during the hunting season happened on Thanksgiving Day near White Oaks.

AMENDMENTS WIN AND LOSE

The Taxpayers' Association is gratified over the adoption of the Grand Jury Amendment to the Constitution by a vote of 27,439 for, to 41,187 against.

The association is disappointed in the defeat of the two amendments providing for four year terms of office for state and county officials.

Less than half of those voting at the late election voted on the amendments. There was little said about them except a few editorial comments.

LECTION FORECAST BY THE LITERARY DIGEST PROVED NEARLY 100 PERCENT CORRECT

The forecast of the electoral college division of votes by the Literary Digest's pre-election poll was 94-100 per cent accurate.

The Digest poll showed a total of 379 electoral votes for President Hoover, 197 for Davis and 75 for Senator La Follette.

PARASITES BECOME LARGE FACTOR IN INSECT CONTROL

A well-known scientist once expressed the opinion that were it not for the tenacity of insects to prey upon each other, thus holding their numbers down...

The gipsy moth, which has done great damage in New England and adjoining states since its introduction, is being fought with various means.

JUDGE LEAHY DEFEATED

Albuquerque Journal: Judge Leahy's court has given New Mexico a good deal of unfavorable notoriety.

Of course the picture was out of focus. Judge Leahy's court was not more constituted than the whole system of judicial authority in New Mexico.

However the nation may regard Leahy, the people of San Miguel County very sensibly looked on his court as their own particular business.

RESTORATION OF LANDS TO ENTRY

By order dated November 14, 1924, the Commissioner of the General Land Office directed the following tracts of land opened to entry on restoration from school sections.

DAUGHTER OF COLLEGE BULL WINS AT NATIONAL

Extension Service Bulletin: Corium, Elizabeth's Dolores, a daughter of Marigold's Star, the Guernsey bull at the New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts.

The fifth prize in a class of 23 mature Guernsey cows was awarded to Marigold's Star's daughter Marigold's Star.

A half sister of Lone Pine Lady Evelyn, a Guernsey cow owned at the College, sold for $15,000 at the recent stock dispersal sale.

Ormsby Lavin of U. Neb., a half sister of U. Neb. Count Ormsby Gerben Allen, the Holstein bull at the New Mexico College, was first prize heifer calf and junior champion at the Nebraska State Fair this fall.

A son of the college bull was first prize bull calf at the International Fair and Exposition at El Paso, Texas.

Railroad News

Nightyardmaster O. S. Stearns brought down a fine young buck near his summer home on the Bonito shortly after the season opened.

Fireman Joe Phillips and railroad jeweler John Such, took a trip to the head of the Malpais as soon as the hunting season opened, returning the same day with a nice two-year-old buck to their credit.

D. S. Donaldson, who has been chief train dispatcher for several years, will leave shortly for Tucumcari to take the position of assistant to the chief train dispatcher of this spur of the Southern Pacific.

Train dispatcher S. L. North (retired) has been acting in the capacity of general relief man over town since leaving his trick at the local station.

Call Boy Harkey is on a deer hunt and Albert Roberts is calling during his absence.

Last week we said that S. O. Sproles killed a deer, but it appears now that it was fireman Frank Abel instead of Sproles.

Trainmaster's Clerk Frank Gauchat, who has been on a vacation with relatives in the south, returned last Friday.

Station agent B. S. Burns and wife of Oscura have returned from their eastern visit and operator Gaines is still filling the position until Mr. Burns returns from his hunting trip.

Operator Elmer Eaker has checked in for a period of relief service at Three Rivers.

F. L. Sherman shipped seven car loads of calves, all in the pink of condition Tuesday night. They were sold to parties who took them to southern Colorado.

Brakeman T. H. Dillon has been taken off the extra board and is now working out of El Paso.

Dispatcher D. A. Saunders is expecting his family home from Seattle on or about December 6.

Fireman Jimmie Lane has been transferred to this district from El Paso.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS A. CLARK

THE BARBER SHOP

If I were asked to name the great moral and educational influences of the country I should, of course, begin with the home, the church and the public schools.

It is, of course, first of all a center of recreation and rejuvenation. One man enters all raveled and ragged around the edges and makes his exit looking like a hundred thousand dollars.

And within there is constant comment and criticism—frank comment and franker criticism. I always have a self-conscious feeling when I pass the window.

There is nothing too sacred or too private to be discussed in a barber shop; there is no problem of society or athletics or politics or religion or education too difficult or too complicated for immaculate and final settlement by any consociated trio.

Any way of looking at him, the barber is a great institution. He is an analyzer of character, he is a character molder, he is a purveyor of useful and useless information.

U. S. SHOULD BE PREPARED SAYS SECRETARY HOOVER

America Must Not Sacrifice Independence or Weaken Strength. Los Angeles, Calif., Nov. 11—Another war would be the cemetery of civilization, but the United States in his hope to end all wars must not sacrifice its independence or weaken its strength in defense.

"The world has learned many lessons from the war," he said, "but none more emphatic than its increasing ferocity will, if repeated again, destroy civilization itself. The mobilization of whole peoples to the war, the inventions of science turned to destruction and the killing of men will make any other great war the cemetery of civilization.

"This day of memories should bring to us a surer resolution that we not only proper step in statemanship to eliminate the causes of war in the world—for never again do we wish our sons to leave our shores in our defense.

B. L. Stimmel's customer, A. C. H. Tanner of Amarillo, was here again this week, buying and shipping three car loads of cattle to pastures near Amarillo.

Educational Notes

I AM EDUCATION. I bear the torch that enlightens the world, fires the imagination of man, feeds the flame of genius. I give wings to dreams, and might to hand and brain.

From out of the deep shadows of the past I come, wearing the scars of struggle and the stripes of toil, but bearing in triumph the wisdom of all ages. Man, because of me, holds dominion over earth, air and sea; it is for him that I leash the lightning, plumb the deep and shackle the ether.

I am the parent of progress, creator of culture, molder of destiny. Philosophy, science and art are the works of my hand. I banish ignorance, discourage vice and disarm anarchy.

Thus have I become freedom's child, the arm of democracy, the hope of youth, the pride of adolescence, the joy of age. Fortunate the nations and happy the homes that welcome me.

The school is my workshop; here I stir ambition, stimulate ideals, forge the keys that open the door to opportunity. I am the source of inspiration; the aid of aspiration. I AM IRRESISTIBLE POWER.

(By the Better Schools League for Education Week.)

Lincoln Forest Notes

A. E. Gray, Director of Rodent Control in the State of New Mexico for the Biological Survey, was in Alamogordo last week conferring with forest officials regarding co-operation in the eradication of prairie dogs from forest ranges.

H. B. Herms, Deputy Fiscal Agent of the District Forester's office at Albuquerque, spent last week auditing the books of the local office.

Recent information from the Compensation Commission at Washington, D. C., is that Mrs. Maggie Pfingsten will receive a monthly compensation of approximately $65.00 on account of the loss of her husband Ed. C. Pfingsten, while employed as a fire fighter on the White Mountain-Patos district of the Lincoln Forest.

Indications are that there has been a greater number of murders in the mountains this year than ever before.

Catarrah Cannot Be Cured

With LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease, Catarrah is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal medicine. There is a cure for Catarrah. It is not a blood disease, but a disease of the blood vessels. It is caused by the blood being impure. It is cured by the use of a special medicine. It is not a disease of the eyes, but a disease of the blood. It is cured by the use of a special medicine. It is not a disease of the eyes, but a disease of the blood. A prominent psychiatrist recently made the statement that great danger lies in failing to prepare properly for leisure time in early life. Many people wait until they can be relieved of cares and burdens with the hope that they can then enjoy life, says the Thrift Magazine. A tragedy lies in the fact that when this time does come they are utterly lost and do not know how to enjoy the leisure which they have.

Thrift in the use of leisure is more than a personal problem. It is a home problem, a community problem, and a national problem.

The foundations for a happy, healthful and useful life are laid in the early habit-forming years, and childhood's happiest memories are of the playtimes at home.

Joseph Lee, president of the Playground and Recreation Association of America, says: "The home needs the child playing in it and the child needs the home to play in. Mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters, have the same need. An essential part of the life of all of us is in this play."

"A mother who does not play with her child is not a mother; a vital part of the relation has dropped out. The great educators from Plato to Froebel have taught us to play with our children not only on their account but on our own."

A Stalk Would Do It

"What made Jones act so stiff after dinner?" "Can't say—unless it was the steak I saw him swallowing when I came out."

Cure for Bronchitis

Chlorine gas is being used successfully as a cure for the colds of numerous senators and congressmen, according to the chemical warfare service. It is equally helpful in curing distemper among horses, according to the Prairie Farmer. Recently the disease broke out in virulent form among the horses at Fort Hoyle, Md. When the experts were called in more than forty animals were effected. Concentrations of about one part chlorine to 100,000 parts of air were made in a sealed chamber and the horses were exposed to the treatment for about an hour a day. After three days the animals had entirely recovered. Chlorine is said to be almost a sure cure for common colds, bronchitis, whooping cough and influenza. The cost of treatment is less than 5 cents per person.

The Stingiest Man

A man who is noted for squeezing his pennies until the Indian gives a war whoop and who also smokes a cigar until it is necessary to stick a pin through what is left of the cigar to keep from burning his fingers, met a friend at Pennsylvania and Washington streets several days ago, and engaged in friendly conversation. Finally the friend gazed intently at his clove-stuffed friend and remarked: "Say, Fred, your chew's on fire."—Indianapolis News.

Just Mention Castor Oil

"Castor oil is a great family remedy," said she. "Do you give it to your children?" asked the neighbor. "Sometimes," was the reply, "but I don't have to give it often. On schooldays when they wake up complaining I have only to mention it and they seem to recover almost instantly."

WORK STARTED ON NEW DENVER RADIO STATION

General Electric's Broadcasting Trio Will Be Complete When New Voice Goes on the Air.

In the late fall or early winter a new voice will be on the air—KGO, the Denver, Colorado, broadcasting station of the General Electric Company. This station will complete the General Electric's nation-gridding system of three stations, the first of which, WGY, opened at Schenectady, N. Y., early in 1922, and the second, KGO, at Oakland, Cal., early in 1924.

The use of movable hangings and floor coverings. As a program varies from speaker to band, or soloist to orchestra, different degrees of soundings are required to secure perfect tone quality, and the Denver station will be so equipped that it may be readily changed to care for the different extremes of sound. Separated from the main studio by the control room will be a second and smaller studio. This arrangement has proved most successful at KGO.

New General Electric Broadcasting Station at Denver, Colo.

Oakland broadcasting plants. Every technical advance proved by extended use will be included in the equipment. The entire plant, like the Oakland station, will be housed in its own building. Provision will be made in the equipment to go to higher power than is now permitted should the regulations of the Department of Commerce be changed.

Two Studios Provided

The station, a two story structure, will be located on a 300x250 foot plot, four miles from the heart of Denver and on the main eastern motor highway. The studio building will be 52x47 feet, and the first floor will be divided into reception room and offices for the executives, the correspondence and the program forces. On the second floor will be two studios, a waiting room and a control room for the station's amplifying equipment.

The first and main studio will be 45x22 feet in size, big enough to comfortably accommodate large musical organizations like bands and choruses. The deadening or reverberation period will be made variable through in that one number may follow another with only the spacing of an announcement between them. This means that the listener is saved the annoyance of waits between numbers.

Towers Close to Buildings

The power house will be a one story building, 22 feet long and 42 wide, and will be directly back of and connected to the studio building.

Unlike WGY, where the towers are located on top of a five story building, a quarter of a mile from the control room, or KGO, where the towers, built on the ground, are also a quarter of a mile from control room and studio, the towers of the Denver station will be built on the ground, one on each side of the studio building. The towers will be of steel, 125 feet high and triangular in shape.

Plans for the new station have been prepared under the direction of Martin P. Rice, manager of broadcasting for the General Electric Company. H. D. Randall, Denver manager for the General Electric Company, will have direct supervision of the Denver broadcasting station.

Apache Indians Cling to Ancient Customs

R. Mildred Lang, secretary of Young Women's Missionary Societies and Leagues for Service, in a report of Indian activities, says that the twelfth birthday of a Jicarilla Apache Indian maiden marks the turning point in her life. She pulls out her eyebrows, which is a sign that her girlhood is over and that she is ready for matrimony. Her parents give her a coming-out dance which lasts for several days, and she often meets her future husband for the first time. She enjoys great freedom before coming of age; but thereafter she must accept her parents' choice. Many of the Indian parents have low moral standards and are ignorant of the sanctity of marriage.

The Indians are a very superstitious race. The house and belongings of every Indian who dies are burned so that the spirit of the dead will not be able to find the relatives and haunt them. The Indians have such a fear of death that they often leave their sick and go off to order the wooden box before the person is dead.

"They have great faith in the cures of the medicine man," continues the report. "When a baby has convulsions the medicine man will take the child by its feet and bounce it up and down, chanting all the while. If a man has a pain in his chest one cure is to slash the chest with glass and let the pain out."

Seal Meat Used in Parts of Cornwall

An appeal has been presented to the British government by North sea fishermen for assistance in killing off seals which are playing havoc with the fishing industry in the Wash. A writer commenting upon their action says these fishermen might take a tip from their confreres in Cornwall in days gone by. Stephen Hawker used to tell how he once asked the landlady of the Ship, Boscastle, what she had for dinner, and was told "Meat and tatties." "What kind of meat?" he inquired, and was told, "Meat; rice, wholesome meat, and tatties." When the dish was served it tasted like veal, but had no vestige of bone to suggest its origin. Years afterward the poet-person read in an old history that the people of Boscastle were accustomed to catch young seals in the summer, which the thrifty housewives "did roast and make thereof, a savory meat."

Italy's Grain Imports

Into the port of Naples comes about one-sixth of all the grain imports of Italy. Little of this is shipped to other parts of the country, most of it being milled and used in the local bakeries and macaroni manufactories of Naples and its suburbs. There are about 150 flour mills in and about Naples, which are more than adequate for the work. In the first nine months of 1923 Italy imported 18,000,000 bushels of hard wheat, 76 per cent of which came from the United States, and 67,000,000 bushels of soft wheat, about 60 per cent of which also came from here.

"Lillian's going to that dinner at the Plaza—Mrs. Wallace. Your father begged off, but she says she has to go." Ellen reminded him.

"Oh, so she is! And she stays overnight, doesn't she? Well, if dad doesn't need the car, I may keep Torrens in, then, and drive out after the dinner. I could just as well stay at the studio; I have to be in town tomorrow—but we'll see. Don't worry if I'm not here. Come on, Tom, we're all ready!"

Ellen followed them downstairs, her heart dark with suspicions well in keeping with the foreboding sky and the cold, dull air. When the plans for the day were discussed at the breakfast table, she listened, her tongue fast moving from her husband's face to Lillian's serene face.

"I wish I could go into town when you do, Gibbs." Lillian said indifferently, giving Tommy the cherry from her grapefruit, "but I'm not going until late, and I'm furious at having to go at all. I hate the Wallace, I'm worried about your father's cold, and altogether my dolly is stuffed with sawdust!"

"I suppose we couldn't be rude to them again?" the old man said, doubtfully.

"I suppose we couldn't!" she answered, smiling. "No, and I wouldn't have you go in with that cold, either! I'll go in about five and stay at the Plaza, and have a really nice time, so don't give it another thought! You have to go this morning, Gibbs!"

"Now!" he answered, rising. "I'm painting a lovely society lady, weight three hundred, and a mustache!"

Tommy laughed gaily, danced with his father to the door, and watched until the roadster disappeared down the drive.

The day wore on. At eleven o'clock Lillian, whose woman was shampooing her hair, wandered, with all its glory spread loose over her shoulders, to Ellen's door.

"Snow, Ellen!" Ellen had been writing, but had stopped, and was staring blindly ahead of her through tear-filmed eyes. She was glad she did not have to face Lillian as she looked out of the window.

"No it is!" she managed to say huskily.

Lillian wandered on, stood in the bathroom door, where Lizale was working mittens and warm woolen wraps upon the excited Tommy. When she turned back into Ellen's room the younger woman had entirely recovered her self-control.

While they lunched, snowflakes sifted softly down from a leaden sky. A wind began to whistle about the corners of the house. Outside there was great emptiness, an appalling silence. Ellen forced herself to settle down with her father-in-law in the study after lunch; the old man seemed supremely happy as she opened "Jean Christophe." He was established in his great chair by the fire, with a plaid over his knees, and interrupted the reading now and then to congratulate himself upon having escaped the necessity of going out that night. But Lillian seemed as restless and nervous as Ellen did.

At four o'clock she came in to say good-by, exquisite in her furs, and Ellen suddenly decided to try to walk herself into a better frame of mind. She saw Torrens walking about the big car, as she went down the drive, and presently it passed her and she waved to Lillian in farewell.

"It was bitterly cold, and a strong wind was blowing. The snow fell fitfully; the storm was coming, but it was not yet fairly under way. Ellen, usually normal and sensible enough, felt a sense of impending horror close upon her. She did not want to go back to that dreadful house, where selfishness, and deceit, and cruelty flourished.

But she did go back, and sent her wet shoes downstairs by Kenn, and stowed got herself into something warm. She went to the study, where just before dinner Joselyn, Senior, joined her. Ellen was almost frantic now with undimmed nervousness, her hands were icy cold, her face burned, and when one of the maids dropped a spoon at dinner she gave a sharp little cry. She and her father-in-law were alone at the stately meal.

"Here comes the storm!" he said pleasantly, as a wild assault of wind raved violently against the windows.

"Oh, I wish Gibbs were here!" Ellen exclaimed, with suddenly watering eyes. "Here—or that I were anywhere in the world, with him!" her heart added.

And tonight where was he, while she sat alone and heavy-hearted about this house of shadows and menace? The thought tormented her like a gnawing pain. Where was he? Who was enjoying the smile she loved so well, the accents of that wonderful voice? She was not beautiful, as Lillian was, she was thin and nervous, and slow to be attracted, but she was his wife, after all—she was the same Ellen who had talked with him there at the yacht club, in her pink dress, and given him the freshness and the glory of her youth.

"Oh, I could be pretty again!" she mused, beside the study fire. "I could be gay again! But not here—not here!"

Her back lay like in her lap, and after awhile, placing toward him, she saw that her father-in-law was dreaming.

"I'm a little worried about Lillian," he said, as their eyes met. "I'm afraid they had a bad trip!" And the finely groomed old hand was stretched for the telephone. She heard him call the Plaza hotel, and ask for Mrs. Rainsbridge Wallace. Ellen watched him with a sort of fascination.

"She not with the Wallace," he said, in a puzzled tone; "that's odd. They say she telephoned at about six o'clock that she could not reach the city, and was staying with a friend."

Ellen's face was deathly white.

"They're together!" she whispered. And with a gesture as primitive as it was unconscious she wound her hands together, and pressed them to her face.

"They're at the studio—together!" she muttered, blindly beginning to pace the room. "Oh, Gibbs—Gibbs—"

The old man stared at her for a moment in utter bewilderment. Then the slow blood of age crept slowly into his colorful cheek, a hundred half-forgotten episodes rallied to support the new suspicion. His gallantry, courtesy, untiring animation and geniality were a deliberately adopted philosophy.

He had not been Lillian's husband for eight years without perceiving the real woman beneath the soft and lovely surface. He felt for her at times the angry contempt of a genuine nature forced to trusty with what is false.

But her arts had seemed to him so patent, so pitifully childish and apparent, that he had never dreamed—

No, he had never dreamed of Gibbs! And as the thing burst upon him, suddenly confirmed by much that he saw something admirable in the honest, earnest little face, and the wet blue eyes.

"You are a good woman, Ellen," he said. "Gibbs' mother was just such another! You shall have him back, my dear, and this will all be forgotten. It's the fault of the times, Ellen—but no harm has been done, yet. I'll think about it—I have been talking of going to England, and Lillian seems to want to go. She's like a child; she forgets. Only tell me again that you'll forgive me, Ellen, and be happy again!"

Ellen went up to bed comforted, and addressed while she dreamed of a new life for herself and Gibbs. They would take the little apartment that adjoined the studio, they would be alone again; the old happy atmosphere would be recreated. He loved her, under all this new madness—

Ellen saw herself in her mirror; her cheeks burning, her eyes starry; her loosened cloud of hair framing her thoughtful face. Hope came back, confidence came back, a dimple deepened in her cheek. It was all her foolish suspicion, after all. Gibbs had been at the dinner, and would come home on the midnight train, and turn the electric lights full in her eyes while he gave her a yawning account of the speeches, and tore off his white tie. And Lillian had been—she did not care where Lillian had been!

But when she had jumped into bed, and midnight struck, and one o'clock, and two o'clock, and he did not come, the anger and doubt returned in double force. The storm was still racketing about the house. Ellen felt cold under her thick blankets. She tossed and turned, locked her arms under her head and stared into the dark, turned and tossed again.

Her father-in-law had disposed of the matter simply and sanely. But suppose she was right, suppose Lillian and Gibbs had really thrown all honor to the winds, were really together tonight, then what? How could she—how could any wife, forgive that?

To have his father take away the danger, as she might take matches away from Tommy, proved nothing for him, and solved nothing for her.

And if he and Lillian did not choose to be separated, if that passion had carried them far beyond any plans that she and his father might make—?

The clock struck three; struck four. Ellen felt as if she would never sleep again.

The next morning she surprised Lizale and Tommy at their early breakfast; she was going into the city. The world was mantled with snow, but the sun had just risen, and Louis, the old butler, and Torrens, had the little service car at the door, and was confident that he could get Mrs. Joselyn as far as the station.

Just as Ellen was leaving, her father-in-law, also cloaked and gloved, came downstairs. Their heavy eyes met.

"I don't know why I'm going, or what I'm going to do," Ellen said. "I've got to go to the studio—and see if they—if he's there. I didn't sleep all night."

"I'll go with you," he said quickly. "I saw Louis come to the door, and I thought you must be going to town. I'll go too. Lillian's car may really have gotten into trouble."

"Or he may have been foolish enough to try to come out in the roadster," Ellen added. They went down the scraped steps together; not another word was exchanged on the drive to the train. It was an early train; commuters were stamping on the snow-tracked platform. Ellen placed herself at a window and stared blindly out, making no attempt to ascertain her companion, who rattled his newspaper with a great show of interest.

The world glittered under the risen sun. Smoke rose straight from a hundred chimneys into the clear cold air. Ellen saw a woman with a shawl lifted over her head, feeding chickens; another woman kissed two bundle-like babies at a gate. The little woman in front of her, in the warm train, was consulting an insignificant-looking, kindly little man about a Christmas list. "The children will go out of their senses when they see it!" Ellen heard her say.

Then they were in the big station; in a taxicab. The streets, where fag-end gangs of men were shoveling snow, went by. Forty-second Street: Fifty-ninth. They were at the door.

"You have some explanation of this early trip for Gibbs?" her father-in-law asked suddenly in the lift. She turned to him, lectured eyes.

"Oh, yes—tentative," she answered breathlessly, abstractedly.

A second later, outside the studio door, she caught his arm. They stood a moment transfixed. They could hear Gibbs' full, unmistakable voice: a woman's laugh—Lillian's rare laugh, sounded in answer.

Instantly Ellen's companion lunged upon the door.

Gibbs and Lillian were alone in the studio. Gibbs, in his painting apron, was busy with the wooden screen and soap that reflected his big nose. Lillian, hunched and wearing a spotted robe of Chinese green, was before the fire, eating hot rolls over the steam table before her; she was drinking her breakfast.

CHAPTER IX

Ellen had passed through several phases of violent emotion in the past ten days, like everyone else in the house she had been undergoing tremendous mental adjustments. But more sensible or more adaptable than the others, she had disciplined herself to accept the new order of things.

Ellen had the advantage of some preparation, whereas the events of the memorable Wednesday had fallen upon the others like a thunderbolt. She had suspected, doubted, and dreaded, for many heartless days and weeks before the crisis came, and now, while they all suffered in their separate ways from the shock, Ellen even experienced a desperate satisfaction. It was over; Gibbs loved her no longer, and she knew that she knew it.

For a few days the repetition of this fact gave her an empty, vague feeling, and a sensation of fatigue. She was always tired, and her head felt always confused. Gibbs loved her no longer.

Well, what next then? She had faced terrible things before. The old leather harness, for instance, and the feverish days of pain in the old dining-room, by the air-light stove. And later winter days, in Paris now, when she had roused in the night to listen to the baby's uneven breathing and had wakened to remember that the crib was gone, that Rose was gone—Rose was gone!

And now she must keep sane, and face these new, strange things, Gibbs, her own husband, loved another woman more than his wife, and Joe, the little brother whose simple, sturdy integrity had seemed to shine in so brilliant a contrast to this life of hypocrites and affectations, Joe had caused misery and harm, and must take a tarnished record into his new life as a husband.

Brooding on these things day and night, yet Ellen forced herself to a certain desperate courage. She dressed in her usual, scrupulous, quaint way, she made herself walk and read, and enter into Tommy's life. She met Gibbs stern and moody unresponsiveness with tranquil gravity, with his father alone she was more like her old sunny self. Lillian and Ellen barely spoke to each other, except for the unavoidable civilities whose omission would have caused talk among the servants.

Josselyn, Senior, had somewhat withdrawn into himself since the trip to the studio, and had asked his wife to cancel all engagements for a week or two. Lillian amiably obeyed and after that the silence and chill of hidden anger and suppressed fear fell upon the "Villino dell'Orto." Once George Lathrop came to dinner, and for a few hours the shadow lifted, and now and then Joe came in, perceiving that something was wrong, but assuming, as they were all assuming, that everything was normal and pleasant between the Joselyns. Otherwise they were alone.

Lillian was bewildered and made a little uneasy by the suddenness with which this change in atmosphere had come about, because, as she told herself a dozen times a day, nothing had happened, after all. When Tom and Ellen had so abruptly entered the studio, on that eventful Wednesday morning, she had been ready with her laughing explanation of her presence there, and also had seen that they accepted it. Lillian was not the woman to be caught unprepared in such a situation.

The smiling greeting with which she had risen to meet them: "Ah, now—you've spoiled it all!" was daunting in its bright sincerity. She had had a kiss for her husband, she had had an arm about Ellen as she elucidated: "Tom, darling, we've been scheming and scheming for a chance to get my picture painted for your birthday—what bad luck brought you in today?"

And Gibbs had promptly and cheerfully followed her lead.

"And how'd you get in, Dad? The car broke down with Lillian yesterday on the Great Neck Hill—Torrens got in as far as the service station—did he telephone you?"

"And I had to telephone the Wall-laces," Lillian added, wide-eyed. "And Tom, I simply invited myself to stay with old Mrs. Pepper at Great Neck all night. I didn't telephone you because I had this date for an early sitting with Gibbs."

"Take a look at it!" Gibbs said, at the same time. "A wretched rough now, of course! It's just laid in." The old man, studying the canvas, nodded.

"Still, you've caught it!" he said. "Car broke down, eh?"

"No, it was skidding," Lillian, at her husband's side, also looking at the portrait, explained. "The road was simply lined with cars, Tom. It was snowing hard, you know, and I got terribly nervous. Finally Torrens gave it up, too. He's been talking about the brake, you know, and he was as nervous as I."

Her was smiling, vague, garrulous for Lillian.

They Like Felix

Felix, a slow-moving old rat, is a possessor of the Dorby railway station, London, and is justly mentioned by the station's staff. He will nibble his food, unwatched, in full view of the women that pass in and out. If anyone tries to molest him, the station employees are quite indignant. It is their belief that no dog or ferret does such a thing, and that he is too wise to take poison.

A Few Little Smiles

HIS LAST WISH

One evening just before dinner the wife came in to find her husband and a stranger—afterward ascertained to be a lawyer—engaged in some mysterious business over the library table, upon which were spread several sheets of paper.

"What are you doing with all that paper, Henry?" demanded the wife.

"I'm making a wish," responded the husband meekly.

"A wish?"

"Yes, my dear. In your presence I shall not presume to call it a wish."

Just Wanted to Ask

ICE PROFITABLE WINTER HARVEST

Cutting Ice Cakes Into Long Strips.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ice is a very desirable luxury on any farm; and on a large number of them, particularly dairy farms, it is a necessity.

Thousands of farms have an available water supply from which it is practical to put up a supply of ice when the right sort of building has been provided. It should go without saying that the water supply must be pure. In addition, to have a good product the pond or other source must be free of vegetable matter. All the vegetation which accumulates in ponds, or slow moving streams, should be raked out late in the fall.

Keep Clear of Snow.

When a layer of ice of sufficient thickness is formed, the surface should be kept clear of snow as this blanket retards freezing. When the ice has attained sufficient thickness the surface should be marked off into cakes of the desired size before cutting begins. The first strip of ice may be forced under the surface of the ice field and in that way a channel is opened to a landing place. Large strips may be floated down this channel and then sawed into smaller pieces before they are moved up into the ice house.

Not many tools are required for this purpose, two pairs of tongs, two ice hooks, one pointed bar, and one straight board for marking.

The size of the house and the quantity of ice required depend, of course, upon the size of the herd and whether whole milk cream is to be marketed. When cream only is to be cooled, a half ton of ice should be provided for each cow in the herd. For cooling milk allow one and one-half tons for each cow. These quantities usually will leave a little excess ice for household use. Forty-five cubic feet of space is needed for storing each ton of ice.

The best ice house is built in the form of a cube, and a desirable location is in a shady place near the dairy house and where there is good natural drainage. If built on clay soil, artificial drainage should be provided to carry away the water from the melting ice. Plenty of insulation is needed in the form of sawdust or mill shavings. Commercial insulation is more efficient and desirable than either of these other materials, but it is more expensive. Wooden houses insulated with sawdust or wood shavings should be ventilated. Houses with commercial insulation and cement finish need no ventilation.

TUNIC IS POPULAR STYLE OF SEASON

Outfit Adapted to Tailored Mode as Well as to Evening Clothes

Georgette Crepe Beaded in Red, Gold and Blue

Whether it is part of an ensemble costume or is a separate garment, the tunic is unquestionably one of the most important fashion features of the present season, asserts a fashion writer in the Kansas City Star. And its vogue is not surprising, since its possibilities are infinite and it is confined to no special material or to any particular costume. One sees it adapted to the tailored mode as well as to the fashions for evening wear.

With the advent of cool days the tunic of kasha has made its appearance, and it is ideal for street wear. As a rule the foundation is made of black satin, but occasionally a few inches of velvet show below the hem of the tunic.

When velvet is employed it is also used as a trimming on the tunic. An interesting model to exploit this combination of materials is one that has a tunic of black kasha trimmed with narrow bands of French blue velvet and worn over a foundation slip bordered with velvet.

Beige and brown are shades which have a special affinity for each other and are especially effective when there is a contrast of texture as well as of color. A striking instance of the charm of these colors when combined is shown in an attractive model. A pifafro tunic of beige kasha opens over a slip of brown satin. Narrow bands of satin embroidered in gold trim the sleeves and pocket. With this is worn one of the new hats of brown satin simply trimmed with loops of ribbon. At the moment school and college girls' fashions hold the center of the fashion stage and in their combination of practical qualities allied to an unobtrusive but youthful smartness they are appropriate to the years and to the status of their wearers.

Nothing has yet been designed that quite takes the place of a beautifully made, smartly cut frock of navy blue tulle or serge whose simplicity is as artistic as it is intriguing. This year there are a number of new versions of this old favorite, each one distinguished by details of marked individuality. Bits of bright color are cleverly introduced, tiny metal buttons are skillfully employed, a feminine fastidiousness is added by finishing neck and sleeves with collars and cuffs of lingerie and lace, and a boyish aspect is given by scarfs and tips of plaid or gaily striped silk.

Next to the navy blue frock in popularity comes the plaid dress, which seems destined for a decided vogue and which is especially adapted to the needs of the school and college girl.

Pajamas With Kimono to Match, Late Style

In a recent exhibition of negligees and lingerie a gay little sign, done in Chinese letters, called attention to the influence that the Orient has had upon fashions for leisure hours. And to emphasize this fact there were shown the most alluring new models. These consisted of pajamas with a kimono to match. The upper part of the pajamas was cut on the lines of a Chinese coat reaching just to the knees and embroidered in bright colors.

Fashioned of black satin, which brings out in striking relief the vivid flower designs, they have shades of the same brilliant shade that lines the kimono. One exceedingly beautiful one is lined with crepe de chine, in color a rich tone of Chinese red. The flowers that decorate both the coat and the kimono are in shades ranging from a faint coral to a brilliant flame. Equally stunning is another costume, also of black satin, but exquisitely embroidered in silver. On this the snarl of satin is fringed with silver. Nothing more unusual or smarter has been introduced in many a day and the girl who wishes to be ahead where fashion is concerned will speedily provide herself with the latest thing in lounging attire.

Ensemble Costume

A most striking costume consists of a dress of red bengaline, trimmed with touches of black, and worn under a coat of plain wool in which green, red and black are the dominant colors. Collar and cuffs are of gray fur.

The popular Spanish influence predominates in this tansador sailor of black velvet with setrich pompons as a trim.

Accessories Can Make or Mar Chic Costume

"A lady is known," goes the old saying, "by her shoes and her pocket-handkerchiefs." And certainly care in buying the accessories of dress does to a very great extent, insure a well-proportioned appearance, says a writer in the Kansas City Star.

Care in buying accessories does not mean the expenditure of much time, money and energy in selecting all the gewgaws with which one can load oneself. Indeed the old rule for achieving a well-dressed appearance is still apropos—"Go to the mirror after you are dressed, and see what you can take off." Accessories—hats, gloves, fans, handkerchiefs, beads, bracelets, veils—may be counted upon either to add much to or detract much from the general effect; they are seldom neutral. So they must be tastefully selected, and, above all, they must not be indiscriminately worn.

Now, a hat is such an important adjunct to the costume that it is almost more than a mere accessory. It is important both as a frame to the face and in its relationship to the rest of the costume. If you wear a plain, tailored dress of suit, for instance, the sailor hat or some other tailored shape should be chosen. If your costume is more elaborate, you may allow yourself somewhat fancier headgear. In general, it is well, when you select a hat, to wear the costume with which you intend to use it.

Veils, now hats, must be appropriate to the costume; for, though beautiful and becoming when happily chosen, a veil often is out of place. The rule which should be your guide in knowing when you should wear a veil is this:

Wear it only when there's a logical reason for doing so, such as to add to the beauty of the hat, or to protect the face. Of course, your veil can never be attractive if it is not delicate and fresh.

Gloves, again, should be in harmony with the rest of the costume. Do not wear kid gloves with a lingerie dress, or, even worse, silk gloves with fur. Dainty handkerchiefs, too, may be selected to match the costume, though plain white linen handkerchiefs of excellent quality are always in good taste.

When it comes to beads, bracelets, artificial flowers and the like, wear them only when they are suitable for the time, place and occasion and when they add definitely to your appearance. It is quite proper for you to buy accessories to mix every costume you own—but it isn't proper for you to wear them all at once.

Sapphire and Diamonds For Engagement Rings

The approved symbol of betrothal is no longer the solitaire. The leading jewelers have brought out one large, square cut sapphire in a platinum setting, box-like in design. The diamond is cut only on the edges and looks remarkably like a piece of very clear glass. The square cut jewel, sapphire, emerald and amethyst and topaz are having a great popularity in the latest jewelry. Every diamond set with an emerald should be square cut. Hoops of pearls are held together by a square cut aquamarine or a pale amethyst.

Prune Grape Vines and Get Substantial Growth

When pruning young grape vines do not leave too much wood. The object of the early pruning is to develop a vigorous root system and establish a system of training. Overbearing during the second and third years is detrimental to the vines. Do not permit the vines to bear the second year and only the more vigorous should be permitted to bear the third year.

To prune vines after their first season's growth in the vineyard all the canes or shoots that grew the previous summer are cut away but one and that is cut back to two buds or eyes, the same kind of pruning as that given the tops of vines at the time of setting. The effect of this heavy pruning is to concentrate the whole energy of the vines into the development of one strong vigorous shoot.

A number of shoots usually start from the two eyes left on the vines but all should be removed but one. This one is to form the permanent trunk of the vine and should be tied to the lower wire of the trellis and again to the upper wire. If vigorous it is usually pinched off as soon as it reaches the height of the top wire to force out laterals; but, if only moderately vigorous no summer pinching should be done.

Flushing Ewes Helps to Increase Crop of Ewes

Flock owners interested in increasing the lamb crop should flush ewes before breeding season, says C. G. Hilling, sheep specialist, Kansas State Agricultural college, who calls attention to results secured in tests with 17 groups of ewes.

Ewes not fed grain during the breeding season gained 1.7 pounds and had a 123 per cent lamb crop. Those getting feed of various kinds gained 8 pounds per head and had a 147 per cent lamb crop. In terms of 1,000 sheep this would mean 230 more lambs. The ewes got only one-half pound of grain per day at that time. It made little difference how the ewes were fed so long as they gained. Some got extra pasture, some were fed oats, some corn and oats, and some various mixtures of corn, oats, bran and linseed meal. In the grain-fed lots, as well as in the pasture lots, some were above the 147 per cent average and some below.

Store Seed Corn in Dry Place With Plenty of Air

Seed corn should be stored in a dry place with good air circulation, neither too hot nor too cold. An airy attic room will serve to store enough for home use although it has the objection that it may bring mice into the house. The seed corn may be covered with dry threshed oats in a bin and allowed to remain there until spring.

Most corn growers are familiar with the plan of stringing the ears and hanging them outdoors on the sunny side of a building or tying two or more ears together by the husks and hanging them that way. Such methods of curing are usually successful unless the sunshine becomes too hot and causes germination of the corn. The strings of seed corn may be suspended from the rafters of a crib or even a garage.

Sheep Flock Should Be Given Good Protection

Take good care of the sheep and lambs during the fall months and early winter, says the sheep men at the college of agriculture at Ithaca, who point out that while sheep can obtain much nourishment until quite late in the season from the stubble and corn fields, they should be provided with protection from the cold rains.

This protection may be only a rough shelter in a fence corner, but some sort of protection should be provided. This will not only prevent injury to the fleeces, but will lessen the danger of colds or pneumonia developing in the flock.

It is also pointed out that it is best to keep the fleeces as free from burrs, straw, and chaff as possible, since cleaning wool is expensive. If feed racks are properly constructed the chaff problem can be solved, and the proper care of the pasture will eliminate burrs.

Dull Knives in Silage Cutter Are Not Favored

Experiments made at a number of agricultural colleges show that dull knives in a silage cutter mean not only a tremendous increase in the power required, but also decrease the fineness and uniformity of the cut material and add to the cost of doing the work. This conclusion is also borne out by the experiences of practical silo fillers in the field. One fruitful source of dilled knives is the sand and grit which adheres to bundle corn that has been thrown on the ground, especially if a beating rain strikes. This is one benefit of an elevator to a corn binder, by which the bundles are loaded directly onto the wagons instead of being thrown on the ground.

FARM NOTES

The farmer who sells representative produce gives away his reputation.

A scrub cow producing 4,000 pounds of milk in a year, still owes its owner 4,000 pounds more.

The time is not far off when the farmer must be a first-class business man, if he is to stay in business.

Refilling a silo generally means that from two to five more tons can be put in after the first filling has settled.

A little care in selecting the seed corn this year may save much disappointment over the crop next year.

Save the surface and you save life—the surface. The handles of some implements need attention, and the tractor comes under that heading.

The man who treats his horses well in the fall will treat them well the other three seasons of the year, and that's the only way to do anyone.

Were you unlucky enough to have some hay spoiled by the rains this summer? If so, don't forget to spread it around to draw it out the field, for it will weather the next crop in short order if left in place.

Important to All Women Readers of This Paper

Thousands upon thousands of women have kidney or bladder trouble and never suspect it. Women's complaints often prove to be nothing else but kidney trouble, or the result of kidney or bladder disease. If the kidneys are not in a healthy condition they may cause the other organs to become diseased. You may suffer pain in the back, headache and loss of ambition. Poor health makes you nervous, irritable and may be dependent; it makes any one so. But hundreds of women claim that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, by restoring health to the kidneys, proved to be just the remedy needed to overcome such conditions. Many send for a sample bottle to see what Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder medicine will do for them. By enclosing ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may receive a sample size bottle by parcel post. You can purchase medium and large size bottles at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

DELINQUENT TAXES A PROBLEM

If any county, municipality, or school district finds itself short as to funds, the reason will probably be found in "delinquent taxes." The Taxpayers' Association of New Mexico estimates that the amount of unpaid taxes in New Mexico amount to approximately $5,000,000. This is the tax rolls for the past ten years will show that almost unpaid. It is probable that only a portion of such taxes will ever be collected. For this there are two principal reasons. The original assessment is faulty and taxes, especially personal taxes, have not been promptly collected.

AN APOLOGY DUE FALL

(From San Bernardino (Cal.) Sun.) Evidence adduced in the government's suit to cancel the Debeny oil leases in the naval reserve in the Elk Hills district begins to suggest that something like 100,000,000 people may as well get ready to apologize to former Secretary of the Interior Fall. The prosecution's case seems to have been torpedoed, or perhaps a better simile would be to say that it behaves much like a "dud," which will not require explanation to the boys who were in the trenches but for the benefit of others, it was a shell that failed to explode. By this prosecution's own witnesses, the defense established that Fall was not in Washington when the bids on the contracts were opened, that the bids were considered by representatives of the navy and interior departments, that they recommended acceptance of the Pan-American corporation's bid and so wired Fall at his ranch in New Mexico, and Fall wired back that if they thought it the best bid and Secretary Debeny was satisfied to accept it and "give fullest publicity."

ESTANCIA BANK CLOSED THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 20TH

The Farmers' and Stockmen's Bank at Estancia, closed Thursday, Nov. 20th, not only unexpectedly to the public, but to the officers themselves, it is stated. The direct cause of the closing has not yet been reported. Generally cropping and stock conditions in the Estancia Valley are again poor this year although in August a bumper bean crop was expected as the crop was highly promising at that time. There were few or no late rains in the valley and crops dried up before maturing. The Estancia bank was the only one left in the county of Torrance. The Farmers' & Stockmen's bank was organized May 14, 1917. Deposits totaled $189,171.55, according to the last statement published Oct. 19. The bank's capital was $20,000 and surplus $4,000. The officers were Willie Zigler, president; John Burton, active vice president; and Leo Douglas, cashier. The Farmers' & Stockmen's is the first bank reported closed since the Farmers State Bank of Moriarty, filed in Torrance County, which suspended business Aug. 27.

SCATTER SUNSHINE WITH GREETING CARDS

We Have Them for All Occasions

A big forest fire has been raging in the northern portion of the Capitan mountains for the past few days seven miles long and latest reports are that the fire is far from being under control. The supposition is that the fire was started by reckless hunters, who in their feverish haste for game, left a smouldering camp-fire to the mercy of the mountain winds, heedless of the warning issued by Forest Supervisor O. Fred Arthur in this paper last week.

yielding citrus trees with records of high performance, secured by propagating from parent trees with records of high performance just as dairy cattle are improved by selecting breeding animals of high production records.

The records of some of the progeny trees now extend over several crops. They show that the peculiarities of the parent tree or branch are perpetuated by the buds taken from them. Time of ripening is a characteristic that can be transmitted, as well as productiveness and type of fruit, by propagating from variations having the desired characteristic in this particular.

Improvement on this basis is being extended year by year by the commercial growers in California and Arizona. By keeping performance records it is possible to locate the dromo or otherwise undesirable trees for top working and to find superior parent trees for use as sources of budwood to graft on the low producers. It was during the course of this work that a superior strain of grapefruit was located in 1910. It has been propagated commercially and records of the strain kept for several seasons have brought to light individual trees outstanding in yield and grade of product. These trees have been again selected as sources of budwood for further propagation.

In Alabama this improvement work consists in using growers and nurserymen in keeping performance records in Satsuma orange groves and in the extensive groves which are prospective sources of budwood. The work is carried on in cooperation with the State Board of Horticulture, which administers a law requiring that citrus nurseries in that state use only budwood from trees of known performance and character.

In Florida the work is carried on in cooperation with the agricultural experiment station. A "progeny grove," consisting of progenies of bud-type has been established. Budwood from these trees will be supplied to growers and nurserymen for commercial planting. Growers are being assisted in inaugurating tree performance records and already a number of growers have taken up this work.

END OF GEARSHIFT MOTOR AIM OF FRENCH ENGINEERS New Complicated Machinery to Take Its Place—Has Neither Differential Nor Gearshift and Driver Has Only to Start Motor.

Paris, Nov. 19.—The death of the gearshift in automobiles often has been announced, but the funeral has never taken place. The latest advance notice of the passing of the gearshift and the differential is a complicated mechanism shown first last year's auto salon, and exhibited again in perfect form this year by one of the best makers of France.

It has been tried for two years on trucks and some test cars, but probably won't get on the market until next year. It is a series of ratchets which automatically throw into action progressively as the car gains speed so that the motor, continuing to turn at a normal speed, applies its power at what corresponds to a very low gear at the start, and an increasingly higher gear as the speed increases, until direct drive is reached.

No Differential. As there is neither differential nor gearshift the driver has only to start, let in his clutch and step on the accelerator. The amount of gas alone determines the power applied, and the speed is dependent upon the power required to move the car.

Besides simplifying a car, this mechanism is intended to obviate shock to the engine and prevent stalling the motor. If a heavy load were put suddenly on the engine the mechanism would automatically adjust itself, changing the gear to a lower one and would allow the engine to maintain an efficient speed while protecting the car at a slower rate.

NEW SOURCES OF SUGAR; ARTICHOKE MAY UPSET WHOLE SWEET INDUSTRY

Washington, D. C., Nov. 15.—Experts of the department of agriculture are studying results of experiments in extraction of sugar and say they have evolved a process that may revolutionize the entire sugar growing and refining industry.

The new process discovered in the researches of Dr. R. F. Jackson of the Bureau of Standards, makes possible, they say, the crystallization of sugar extracted from such vegetables as the artichoke and thus its production for the first time is made and in commercial form. Lack of a process for crystallizing sugar from such plants has been the one bar to their utilization for this purpose.

The sugar derived by this process from the artichoke, which is said to promise the cheapest source of production, is in the levulose form and is one and one-half times as sweet as the sugar taken from cane and sugar beet. Its production, it was said, promises to be both simpler and cheaper than that of cane and beet sugar.
