COURAGE

"BUT the things courage can do!" Barrie says, "The things even incompetence can do, if it works with singleness of purpose."

The one thing Carleen wanted was a chance to go to college, and yet there had never been anyone to encourage him. His people were illiterate and unambitious, he had no money he had never even been to high school for he was forced to go to work before he was fourteen—hard work, too, that left him bruised and exhausted and yet always there burned in him the one desire, the one purpose of getting a college degree.

"You cannot meet the entrance requirements," the college officials always replied when he tried through interviews or correspondence to find a way within the academic circle.

"Give me a chance," he begged, and finally, after he was twenty-one and had saved a few dollars, he was given an opportunity as a special student to take up college work.

No one ever knew how he got on. He came and went every day across the campus; he earned his living as other eager students did, washing dishes or waiting tables, or in the performance of simple tasks about the town. He was cheerful and happy in the thought that he was having a chance to accomplish the impossible.

And all the time he was getting on. He was making up his entrance credits, he was passing studies with credit to himself, he was getting nearer and nearer to a degree. He reached his ideal, he got his diploma, and now he is out in the world an honored and a successful engineer. It was singleness of purpose that brought him success in spite of his ill-training and incompetence. It was courage that helped him to accomplish the impossible.

Today Strong was in my office. He has plenty of money, he has a good body, he has a normal brain, and he has an excellent high school training as a boy can get. Yet he had been gone five hours. He doesn't like his work, he says. If he could just get into something interesting he is sure he would get on.

"But the things courage can do!"

DEATH TOLL BY ACCIDENTS IN U. S. LAST YEAR 94,000

Automobile Accidents Lead the List with 15,714 deaths.

The average American is more ready to take a chance than his British brother, according to a comparison of the numbers of accidents, which happen to Americans and to the average Britisher.

The accidents statistics committee publishes a study of fatal accidents which give the death rate for Americans as 698 for each million of population as against 321 for each million in England and Wales.

The greater number of automobiles in this country may account for the difference in part, but the figures or accidents of other types show a similar unfavorable comparison. Out of groups of equal numbers in both countries 64 were drowned in this country where 40 were drowned in England. In America 121 died at falls as compared with 71 in England.

The greatest difference has to do with deaths from firearms where the ratio is 27 for America against two for England.

"Reflection on this disparaging comparison should lead every citizen interested in the welfare of his country, to support vigorously every movement for the prevention of accidents," according to Dr. Louis I. Dublin, the statistician of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company, and chairman of the committee. He attributes the high accident rate to "carelessness, apathy, and deficient knowledge."

Of the 94,000 persons killed in this country accidentally last year, automobile accidents lead the list with 15,714. This means a death toll of 1,462 a week or 209 a day. Accidents by falls accounted 15,382 deaths. Railway accidents, accidental burns and drownings folow in order, each accounting for about half as many of the deaths as the first two causes. Traumatism by machines with 2,224 accidental deaths and 1,771 deaths resulting from street car accidents, complete the list.

The Secretary said the board contemplates several additional inquiries dealing with other angles, such as production, distribution and utilization. It was announced by the board that many letters have been received commending its efforts towards stabilization of the petroleum industry.

COURT FINDS FAMOUS TEXAS RANGERS ILLEGAL FORCE

After 90 Years of Glory, Renowned Constabulary in New Existence.

Austin, Tex., Jan. 17.—(By The Associated Press)—The Texas Rangers credited with being one of the most fearless law enforcing organizations found anywhere in the world, and America's first constabulary force, today is threatened with elimination. A district court yesterday ruled that the law creating the ranger force was unconstitutional and enjoined the organization from further ranger activities.

For more than 90 years, this group of men, originally numbering 150, never more than 200 members, and at present but fifty, has had a record of enforcing the law to the utmost. Organized first to protect homesteaders in the wilderness of southwestern Texas, its work has been changed to suit the times, and of recent years it has been apprehending law violators and criminals. For the first time since its inception its work was at a standstill today. The history of the ranger forces extends into the provincial days after Texas had declared its independance from Mexico, and before the Republic of Texas was organized, when the land between the Sabine and Rio Grande rivers was considered "no man's land."

Constabularies in Pennsylvania, New York, and other states were patterned after Texas Rangers, who have a motto of "Get your man." The royal Northwest Mounted police of Canada also is said to have had its inception as the result of the Texas force.

NEW PLASTER MILL TO OPERATE AT PHOENIX

The latest step in the development of Arizona's natural resources is represented by the construction of the new Phoenix Plaster Mill, which will utilize the great deposit of high-grade gypsum near Winkelman, Arizona, about 95 miles east of Phoenix on the Southern Pacific Railroad. This gypsum has been analyzed by a nationally known gypsum expert and declared to be one of the largest and purest deposits in the country, ranking with Nova Scotia gypsum.

Gypsum building plaster and blocks because of their light weight, durability, ease of handling and temperature non-conductivity, have displaced tile and cement in many ways. There is no delay while waiting for the wall to "ripen" or cure, as in the case of old-fashioned lime plaster. The gypsum plaster tile, because of their light weight are easy to lay and in steel structures, save immensely in the cost of structural steel.

The new mill, which will have a capacity of 100 tons of plaster daily will be in ful operation by January 15. The plant has been completed at a cost of $100,000.

The organization operating the business is headed by Gilmore Goddland of Phoenix and a group of London, England, associates. Will V. Shoemaker, for many years connected with the United States Gypsum Company, will be superintendent of the mill.

BALL LIGHTNING IS KNOWN TO METEOROLOGICAL SCIENCE

What is known as "ball lightning" is described by the meteorologists of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture. Although science is not yet able to explain ball lightning, and all attempts to reproduce it in the laboratory have thus far failed, its existence is generally admitted by scientific men, and quite a large fund of knowledge has been gathered concerning its characteristics. There are apparently two distinct types of ball lightning. One type floats freely throught the air, while the other moves along terrestrial objects no if attached to them. Ball lightning occurs during thunderstorms, and in some cases its appearance is preceded by an ordinary flash of lightning. Ball lightning is generally only a few inches in diameter, and in the majority of cases remains visible only a few seconds, though it has been known to last for several minutes.

PRESS CONDEMNED FOR FALSE MOODS ABOUT MEDICINE

Editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association Tells the Newspaper Editors About Inaccuracies in Medical Stories

Washington, D. C., Jan. 18.—Inaccuracies and even falsehoods in medical stories published in the newspapers and the attitude of the press in giving almost unlimited space to the sensational, though untrue, news of alleged discoveries of cures for tuberculosis and cancer were denounced here today by Dr. Moris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, in an address before the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Mr. Fishbein said that five alleged cures for tuberculosis and as many for cancer have been announced in the public press during the last year.

There was not the slightest scientific evidence that any one of them is a specific treatment or cure of the cure of the disease concerned in anything even remotely resembling the degree to which diptheria antitoxin as a cure, he declared.

"Of the five cures for tuberculosis, one was carbon dioxide gas, such as used for soda water," said Dr. Fisrbein, "one was the inhaling of a certain amount of mixed soot and of lime, one was a vaccine designed by a Swiss named Spahlinger, one a vaccine designed by and Englishman named Dreyer and then there was Professor Moellegaard's gold cure of only a few days ago.

Notable Year for Consumptive.

"It was a notable year for the poor consumptive, but there he lies just about as bad as before."

The same situation existed concerning cancer, he said, and it is enough to say that there is not an iota of really scientific evidence that any one of them is a specific treatment.

Rigid Ethical Code.

A rigid ethical code for guidance of newspaper editors in dealing with questions affecting the private life of individuals was urged by Grove Patterson, of the Toledo Blade, at the opening session.

IMPROVED MAIL AIR SHIP DESCRIBED BY AN EXPERT

Plane With Capacity Seven Times That of Vehicles Now In Use Has Completed Successful Tests.

New York, Jan. 17.—An air mail plane with a capacity of seven times that of vehicles now in use has just completed successful night flying tests at the hands of the post office department, Clarence D. Chamberlain, president of an express company at Hasbrouck Heights, N. J., testified before the congressional subcommittee investigating the nation's military and commercial air resources.

The new craft, said Mr. Chamberlain, uses a standard Liberty Motor and with an improved body and wing structure, promises to cut the cost of air mail transport from $2.83 per ton mile to 35 cents per ton mile as compared with an estimated cost of about 25 cents for similar service by land truck.

The witness described the improved mail ship as a combination of features which enabled it to descend at low speeds and by steep anges; to glide great distances in case of motor failure; and do maintain a speed of 125 miles an hour. It has a safety factor higher than craft now in use, said Chamberlain.

GASOLINE TAX NEXT BILL FOR LEGISLATURE

Reconvening of the State House of Representatives Tomorrow Will Mean Action on Administration's Measures, Indicated.

Santa Fe, N. M., Jan. 19.—More administration measures are expected to be introduced when the House reconvenes tomorrow afternoon, among them a bill increasing the gasoline tax to three cents and possible one carrying out at least some of Governor A. T. Hannett's recommendations in regard to revision of the banking law, although due to the fact that a lot of work is required on the latter it may not be ready by Tuesday afternoon.

The three cent gasoline tax is practically certain of passage, both party platforms pledging it.

Governor Hannett signed his first bill, H. B. 1, to pay the per diem and mileage of the legislators, and the lawmakers were lined up at State Auditor Juan N. Vigil's office in a file extending into the corridor Saturday afternoon for their first "pay day."

Cut in Mileage.

The bill carries slightly less than the 1923 legislature's pay. The cut sustained a motion to quash the writ.

Governor Hannett also signed the joint memorial urging the lower house of Congress to act favorably upon the Gooding long and short haul bill.

Santa Fe, N. M., Jan. 19.—Judge Reed Holloman of the district court Armstrong and was grounded on the issued in J. W. Chapman's contest for the office of Attorney General. The motion to quash was filed by counsel for Attorney General J. W. resources would be pooled and the fact that Chapman had failed to file bond to cover costs.

Santa Fe, Jan. 17.—A summary for the year of preventable disease is reported to the Bureau of Public health shows a large drop in the amount of smallpox, diptheria, and scarlet fever, brot about chiefly by improved sanitary conditions and strict quarantine, according to Dr. G. Production of most feed continued light. Output of gluten feed and oil meals in excess of present demand. Transit gluten offered at $1 per ton less than January shipment prices. Hominy feed offerings and demand light. Stocks generally ample and about normal for this season of the year.

DENVER MARKETS

Cattle

One load of beef steers averaging 1,230 pounds brought $8 and several lots cleared at $7.50. Sales were made generally from $5 to $6 with a good many in that range. Some odd rough head sold as low as $3. Beef cows were plentiful offerings and a good activity was shown on this class, one lone heifer topped the best price of $6 with several lots clearing at $5.50. Other sales ranged from $3.50 to $5. California purchases were made chiefly in the $4.40 to $5 range with several carload lots at those prices. Heifers sold at a $6.35 top and down to $4 for the good to choice kinds, and the medium to good sold from $4 to $5.60. Veals were high at $11, equal to the best price this season. Other choice lots sold at $10.50 and $10 with the good to choice selling from $9 to $10, fair to good sold mostly from $8 to $8.75 and the poorer offerings sold from $4 to $7. Beef bulls brought $4.50 for the choice and others sold evenly around $3.75. Bolognas cleared by the pen lot at $3.65 and down to $3.25 for the better kinds, and as low as $2.75 for the rougher head. U. S. WAR CLAIMS WILL BE PAID

AMERICA WILL RECEIVE DAWES PLAN PAYMENTS UNTIL CLAIMS ARE MET

ALLIES SIGN PACT

LIMIT IS REMOVED AND CLAUSES APPEAR TO SATISFY ALL CONFEREES

Paris, preceded by an eleventh-hour victory for the American delegation, the international financial conference closed with the signing of the agreement for distribution among the various powers of the reparation annuities received from Germany under the Dawes plan. At almost the last moment the Americans obtained the elimination from the text of the clause limiting to $350,000,000 the amount of the American war damage claims to be paid from the Dawes receipts. As the revised text stands the United States will receive 2½ per cent of the annuities until its entire claims are paid.

The agreement as signed constitutes a mass of detail which gathers up the scattered ends of the back accounts among the allies, liquidates the Ruhr occupation, limits the future outlay for the military occupation of the Rhineland; fixes the running expenses of the reparation organizations, including the Dawes plan commissions and determines the proportion of Germany's payments each and all are entitled to under the Dawes arrangement, besides admitting the United States to participation and assuring the payment of its war damage claims as well as the cost of the occupation of the Coblenz bridgehead.

During the next two years the allies will be allowed a maximum of 140,000,000 gold marks ($40,000,000) for the maintenance of their troops on the Rhine.

For the Rhineland commission 10,000,000 gold marks ($2,500,000) is allowed and to the military control commission in Germany for the ensuing year the sum of 8,000,000 gold marks ($2,000,000). The occupation of the Rhineland will come up again in September for revision once more with reference to future years.

The Wadsworth agreement for the payment of the American army costs being abrogated, payment of those costs will begin in September, 1928, at the rate of 55,000,000 gold marks ($13,750,000) annually.

In the sale of any railroad or industrial obligations issued under the Dawes plan the United States will have the same proportionate interest as in the payments.

As concessions were necessary among the allies to admit American participation in the Dawes receipts, these concessions were made on as even a basis as possible.

France temporarily sacrificed 1 1-3 per cent, Great Britain also reduced her percentage in this ratio for the ensuing two years, while after 1926 Belgium, having received her priority payments in full, the reduction of her percentage from 8 per cent down to 4½ per cent will provide the sum necessary to meet American claims.

Submarine Crew Rescued

Chatham, Mass.—The crew of the submarine S-19, which was stranded on the outer bar of Orleans harbor in a dense fog, was removed to waiting coast guard cutters after efforts to haul the undersea boat from the bar had resulted in a heavy list to port.

Yeast Employees Divert Alcohol

Washington.—A pile of smashed alcohol cans found in the back yard of the K street home of a Washington bootlegger led to the disclosure of the alleged diversion of 434,274 gallons of alcohol from industrial purposes through agents of the Fleischmann Yeast Company in Philadelphia, New York, Jersey City and other cities within a few months during 1921. This was disclosed by officials testifying before the Senate committee investigating the prohibition enforcement unit. The cans bore the number and address of the Philadelphia agency.

Crowds Pass Bier of Archbishop

Radio Idol Leaves Prison

Jefferson City, Mo.—Harry M. Snodgrass, the king of the ivories and idol of the country's radio fans, has made his farewell speech. A few days ago at Boston Walt, which for him underlined the doors to fame and wealth, Snodgrass bid his invisible audience good-by. He played the favorite pieces and then signed off permanently. He also signed off with the prison orchestra, for a new life has started for him. It will be the life of a highly paid artist.

The annual banquet of the Gallup Kiwanis Club, which was held last week, was one of the most successful affairs of the kind ever given in that city.

Hunted by federal authorities for thirteen years, during which time he was a fugitive, Roman Bachicha, former postmaster at Encino, N. M., surrendered to the United States marshal at Salt Lake City.

The Hagen Power and Electric Company has asked the city commission for a franchise to furnish electric current to consumers in Albuquerque. The power will be furnished from a plant at the Hagan coal mines, forty miles north of Albuquerque.

The Senate has accepted an amendment to the Interior appropriation bill carrying $46,900, of which $25,000 will be available for the improvement of the Carlsbad cave when the state surrenders title to it, according to a wire from Senator A. A. Jones to Governor Hannett.

The new board of directors of the Deming Chamber of Commerce held a meeting last week to discuss the plans for the coming year. The committee to make up the budget for the new year gave its report and a drive will be started at once to raise $6,000 to carry on the work.

The First State Bank of Grenville, Union county, has closed its doors. Its capital was $30,000. The amount of the bank's deposits at the time of closing could not be learned. Its report of Oct. 10, however, showed more than $38,000. The chief officers were W. T. Jungbluth, president, and C. H. Moore, cashier.

Postoffice inspectors have been in Albuquerque investigating a series of three postoffice robberies during the holidays in which several hundred dollars in cash was taken. The postoffices robbed were at Willard, Loving, and Tome, New Mexico. Stamps were not molested, the robbers evidently wanting only cash.

According to City Manager Calkins, of Albuquerque, the work of putting the aerial landing field, east of the city in shape will be started at once. As soon as the field is graded and the telephone installed the National Aeronautic Association will be advised. The field is to be one of the finest of the kind in the state.

Frederick Luna, of Denver, Colo., was arrested in that city on request of the sheriff at Raton, N. M., where Luna is charged with having shot a fellow miner with intent to commit murder. Following his arrest Luna is said to have admitted to Assistant Captain of Detectives Harry Lane that he shot the man after a quarrel.

One of the largest real estate deals in that part of the state for some time was closed recently when the Santo Tomas land grant was sold to parties from El Paso for $100,000. The grant consists of 3,000 acres of fine land lying on the west side of the Rio Grande below the Mesilla diversion dam and will be made one of the finest farms in the southwest according to Mr. Stahlmann.

Reduced bag limits on game and fish are among the recommendations made by Mrs. Grace B. Melaven, state game and fish warden, in her report to the governor. The cuts she advises are: Turkey—from three to two; quail—from twenty to fifteen; game fish—from fifty to twenty-five. Mrs. Melaven believes the "daily possession limit" should be made to coincide to the bag limit on protected game.

The annual meeting of the Chaves County Farm and Livestock Bureau, held recently in Dexter, was one of the most successful sessions of the kind ever held in the valley. The poultry show, one of the big features of the meeting, drew large crowds.

Quo warranto proceedings were filed by Attorney General Armstrong in the District Court in Albuquerque contesting the election of A. T. Hannett as governor. The action came as a surprise as Republican attorneys had believed that the attorney general would refuse to file the suit and permit them to file it on behalf of Manuel B. Otero, Republican candidate for governor in the election last fall.

Governor Hannett granted his first pardon to Paul Lewis who was committed to the Santa Fe county jail on Dec. 15, by the justice of the peace in Precinct No. 7, Rio Arriba county, to serve a sentence of 30 days plus 25 days on account of a fine of $25. "It appears that the defendant was convicted on evidence given by an escaped patient from the New Mexico state insane asylum," says the governor.

The Hope country may be the next oil field in the southeastern part of the state. A well known oil company has offered to place a $10,000 rig on the ground if the citizens of the district will "put up" 10,000 acres in leases. It is believed that the deal will go through.

The resolution in the inventory proposed to be lopped by the Gallinas and later the Pecos—the definite decision of the New Mexico Central was "beyond comprehension" says President E. C. Manser of the Central in a letter read before the Albuquerque Kiwanis Club

Made Heaven Sacred

In Arabia, as in many other countries, salt is the symbol of hospitality, and among the Arabs hospitality is almost a sacred thing. They tell of a thief who broke into a house one night and, in looting the place, came upon a small gold box. He opened it and inside it found another box, also of gold. That in turn held a third box, which was partly filled with a fine white powder. The thief tasted the powder and found that it was salt. Immediately he restored to their places all the valuables that he had gathered to carry off. He could not rob a house in which he had "eaten salt."—Youth's Companion.

Lives Long Without Food

To have lived without food or drink for four years is the startling claim made by an invalid woman in Madrid, Spain. Two doctors have examined her and made a report to the Academy of Medicine. As yet there is no hint of the nature of their verdict. The woman had gastritis four years ago, and can take nothing by the mouth. She has had injections of phosphorus and various narcotics, but declares that she had nothing more. She is weak, but able to speak.

Chains in Old Watches

The fusee chain used in the old English watches was manufactured by hand. The little blanks for each side of the links and the connecting pieces from link to link were knocked out with a punch and die. The pins for rivets, the riveting and the finishing of the finished chain by stoning and polishing, were all done by hand. The use of fuses and chain as an equalizer of motive power is now limited to marine chronometers.

SIR FREEZING-IS-FUN

Sir Freezing-Is-Fun was ready for a good time. He was feeling in the best of health. The good cold air, the talk he had had with Old Man Winter, the races which he had judged which had been run by the Icicle Girls—all made him feel in excellent spirits.

The Icicle Girls.

The Icicle Girls had started at the top of some very high rocks and they had tried to see which one could go down the furthest, and so be the longest icicle.

They had had a very thrilling time doing this and they had had their races during the night.

Now it was daytime but it was very cold and though the sun had come out and had looked upon everything in his warm way to see what was happening, still he did not melt any of Old Man Winter's work.

Sir Freezing-Is-Fun had the best idea in the world. It was not a new idea.

He had had it before but he was very fond of it, so he said it was the best idea in the world.

"I'm going to have some fun with mustaches, today," he said.

"What?" asked Old Man Winter. He did not understand at all.

"Yes," said Sir Freezing-Is-Fun, "I'm going to have a good time.

"I'm going calling on all the gentlemen in town and along the countryside."

"Pray, why are you going to do that?" asked Old Man Winter. "You're not going to freeze their noses or their toes—I wish I could say toeses. It would sound so nice—or anything like that, are you?"

"No," said Sir Freezing-Is-Fun, but I said I was going to have some fun with mustaches, you know.

"Now of course I won't be calling on all the gentlemen in town, nor will I be calling on all the gentlemen along the countryside.

"I will pay no attention to gentlemen without mustaches.

"If they see me and look at me eagerly I shall wave a cold hand, and they will feel that their ears and noses are cold and the tips of their fingers feel dreadfully cold—but they won't receive any real attention from me.

"I will say to them—though they may not hear me—but I will say it just the same,

"'Go on, Mustache-less ones, Sir Freezing-Is-Fun does not care about you.'

"I will go to all the gentlemen with mustaches though and when they speak and the cold air makes it look as though they were smoking I will settle my dainty, dear little self (for I can make myself extremely small) on their mustaches and I will freeze them.

"Of course they will thaw out again but what fun I will have freezing mustaches.

"It will be such a jolly day.

"Especially for Sir Freezing-Is-Fun," he added, as he winked at Old Man Winter.

And then he started in.

He called on all the gentlemen with mustaches—those in the town and those along the countryside.

He did just what he had said he would do, so that people said to each other,

"It's a Very Cold Day."

"It's a very cold day. Every man you see has a partly frozen mustache—that is, if he has a mustache at all."

Sir Freezing-Is-Fun did his job very thoroughly and late that afternoon he went back and told Old Man Winter and the Icicle Girls all about it.

He ended off his account of the day's fun with this little song:

Sir Freezing-Is-Fun
Went after the men
And froze their mustaches, haigh-ho!
Sir Freezing-Is-Fun
Does this now and then,
When he feels a mischievous glow.

Poor Johnny!

U. S. to Keep Eye on Fur Supply

Some of the Valuable Fur-Bearing Animals Almost Killed Off.

Washington.—A new division of fur resources was established in the Department of Agriculture recently. This means that the government is going to take a special interest in conserving the country's fur supply.

Some of the valuable fur-bearing animals of the United States have been almost entirely killed off or driven far back into the wilderness as civilization turned swamps and forests into farms and towns. Yet the industry is growing, because more people than ever before are wearing furs. Fur has become an everyday staple commodity, in demand not only for warmth but for trimming and decorative purposes.

More extensive use of fur has been made possible, in the face of a dwindling natural supply, by the changes in the kind of furs worn. Once the market was most keenly interested in rare and precious pelts. A trapper would hunt for an entire winter in the wilderness country and think the time well spent if he came back with a single silver fox. If it was a fine pelt his catch would bring from $1,000 to $5,000. If he could get a well-matched pair of silver foxes he was assured of around $10,000.

This sort of adventurous hunting for rare skins still goes on, but the fur market does the profitable bulk of its business in muskrat, skunk, the less valuable foxes, raccoon, squirrel and other moderately priced and plentiful furs.

These small native fur bearers represent a great source of national wealth. Furs trapped and produced on farms in a single state like New York are valued at several million dollars a year.

The difficulty is that most of the states are not protecting their fur resources so as to get the most out of them in the long run. In many states, laws do not protect certain fur bearers at all. The muskrat, for instance, which is the most valuable fur producer in the United States, is not protected in 11 states. Most of the state trapping laws are defective in that they do not protect the animals over a sufficient period of the year. And in some cases the laws are not rigidly enforced.

There are no general statistics showing how rapidly the fur bearers are being killed off. There are no figures showing exactly how many animals are being killed off. There are no figures showing exactly how many animals are taken in the breeding season or in warm weather when their fur is poor in quality—though the government's estimate is that from 45 to 65 per cent of the pelts put on the raw fur market are taken when the fur is almost valueless.

Experts in the Department of Agriculture have for the last 12 years been experimenting with fur problems and urging protective legislation. The new division is pushing the work ahead. It is trying to demonstrate the advantages of limiting the fur hunting season to a very few months of winter and very early spring, when hunting is really profitable. Short seasons for most of the fur animals are economical in every way, as the fur industry itself realizes.

Fur Bearers Are Assets.

Every one realizes that farmers should be permitted to destroy troublesome predatory animals and that when a species becomes too numerous the restrictions on killing should be lessened. Mostly, however, the need is for greater protection for these animals. Many of the small fur animals have reputations for destroying crops and doing other damage, whereas they are really economic assets, because they prey on pests considered more destructive than themselves.

When a valuable fur bearer becomes rare in a section, the fur division advocates that trapping be entirely prohibited for several years, so that the species may re-establish itself.

Perhaps the most interesting work done by the division is in connection with the breeding of fur animals. For some years the government experts have been experimenting with fur-farming methods but they say that comparatively little is yet known regarding the habits and the handling of fur bearers in captivity.

The breeding of foxes is very well understood, and of all the animals raised for fur the fox has so far most generously repaid the breeders. Almost sixty years ago, Canadians had the idea of breeding silver foxes. The silver fox, which was then so much sought and so valuable, was a color phase of the red fox, a black animal with silver hairs intermixed and with a white tip to the tail. About 1887 successful results were reported. Some breeders succeeded in producing silver foxes by mating red with silver. Other men started with a pair of silver foxes. The main trouble experienced by the pioneers in the business was that the habits of the wild foxes were unknown. In many cases, fine, valuable young silver pups were ruthlessly killed by old foxes, through the ignorance of the men who handled them.

Fox Farming Stabilized.

Once the breeding problems were solved, fox farming became a wildly speculative business. Breeding stock sold as high as $34,000 a pair, and farmers were more interested in raising foxes to sell to other breeders than in the business of supplying the fur market with pelts.

Gradually fox farming became stable and now it is being carried on profitably by more than 500 individuals in the United States. The silver fox is the most popular with the farmers because it brings a higher price than the commoner red and cross foxes. But the day of extravagant prices for silver pelts is over. They are now rated at hundreds, rather than thousands, of dollars in the market.

The government has specialized in fox farming at its experimental farm and it has developed practical methods of ranch planning, feeding, sanitation, treatment of diseases and general management, all of which are described in government publications.

Other animals have been experimented with less extensively. Minks, which were probably the first wild fur-bearing animals to be commercially farmed in this country, and also skunks, martens, fishers, muskrats and raccoons, have been bred by the government with varying degrees of practical success.

In the case of some of these small animals, such as the muskrat, skunk and raccoon, it is quite possible to raise stock in close captivity, but the market conditions are such that raising them in pens does not pay very well.

Fur farming will probably attract an increasing number of specialist farmers as government experts and other investigators learn more about practical methods in this new business. Farming is a more expensive method of producing fur than trapping, and so it will probably never replace trapping entirely, but, at any rate, if the states protect their natural supply of fur bearers.

F. G. Ashbrook, head of the government fur division, makes the point that the government might well adopt the policy of restocking depleted lands with suitable fur bearers.

Ladybug Has Cleared Citrus Groves of Pests

Los Angeles.—The little brown insect that for countless years has heard the children of the country singing "ladybug, ladybug, fly away home," now is free to follow this bit of juvenile advice.

The ladybug may turn its thoughts toward home because it has about completed its work in southern California by wiping out the mealy bug, a citrus fruit pest which for years has preyed on the orange orchards of this territory, according to citrus entomologists here.

The pest, a coccid or scale insect, especially of the genus dactylolus, accumulates on the fruit trees, forming a scale of flour-like substances.

Losses of fruit growers in southern California through this pest ran into thousands of dollars. Through discoveries by entomologists, it was found that the ladybug proved the most successful foe of the pest. Ladybugs were introduced into orchards scourged with the bug. They did their work of extermination. Now they may have their holiday.

STATE MAY GET FORMER CONVICT'S $2,700 ESTATE

"The Man Who Came Back" Died Recently in Tennessee, Leaving No Known Relatives.

Nashville, Tenn.—This is a story of the man who came back; the story of friends, a funeral, an ex-convict who died here and has left $2,700 to the state that kept him confined for 15 years.

It came to light when funeral services were being held for William Hartley, seventy-nine years old, mysterious recluse who was found dead in his room at a downtown hotel. Rev. R. M. Jennings, a local pastor, told the story.

Thirty-two years ago William Hartley, then forty-seven, killed a woman in Memphis in a drunken brawl. The crime climaxed a career of nine usual in a misspent life, and the jury, extending mercy, sentenced him to 20 years in the penitentiary at Nashville.

For 15 years the name of William Hartley was blotted from the affairs of the world. Seventeen years ago he stepped through the outer gate of the prison, free and alone. If he had relatives, nobody knew of them. He came out, sixty-two years of age, and into a future of suspicion, detection and friendlessness. He knew the ways of crime, but he chose the straight road and followed it with an unfaltering footstep down the remaining years of his life. They found him dead here in his hotel room, and at his funeral flowers banked as high as the coffin which held his body.

In his eulogy, the minister read: "I have fought a good fight. I have finished the course. Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Scores of his friends, his employers and workmen, were there to do him a last homage, yet none except his one employer ever knew the secret of his life until the minister's words revealed it.

He had left the penitentiary and found employment in a large foundry here. For 17 years he remained there, as night watchman, shipping clerk, messenger, and he never broke the faith. Outside of working hours, he confined himself to his hotel room. None knew. Then the hotel clerk found him dead in his room. There was a bank book showing that he had saved $2,700 since he left the prison. That money, unless some hitherto unknown relative claims it, will go to the state.

They buried him here in a respectable grave, and the epitaph to go over the little stone marker will be, "William Hartley, the man who came back."

"Hugh Manity"

Lynn, Mass.—Shakespeare's question, "What's in a name?" has been answered by William J. Shanahan, a health instructor and physical culturist. For business reasons, he applied to a judge and obtained permission to change his name to "Hugh Manity."

THE ECLIPSE

Youth's Companion:

A total eclipse of the sun occurs almost every year, but for some reason total eclipse seems to have special affinity for polar regions or wide wastes of ocean or savage and inaccessible lands where they are greeted with the beating of propitiatory tom toms rather than with the inquisitive stare of a thousand telescopes.

But on next Saturday there will be a total eclipse visible over a considerable part of the United States and Canada. It is a long time since the "path of totality" has passed over a thickly populated a part of the earth. If the weather is propitious,—and unfortunately at this time of year the chances for a clear day are no better than one in three,—several millions people will observe the remarkable phenomenon. Many millions more will see it as a partial eclipse only a little less than total.

The path of totality begins about a hundred and twenty miles west of Duluth, Minnesota. Then the sun will rise already obscured. Thence the path lies in a gently curving line through Iron mountain and Bellaire, Michigan Stratford, Ontario; Buffalo, Warsaw, Ithaca and Poughkeepsie, the tip of Long Island and Montauk Point. At all those places the total phase begins a few minutes after nine o'clock, eastern time. The path then sweeps out to sea, curves gently northward and ends somewhere northwest of Scotland at sunset. It is about one hundred miles of the line that we have indicated the eclipse will be total. Outside that zone it will be a partial eclipse that narrows by minutes totality.

Those who are privileged to see the eclipse as total should be on the watch for several extremely interesting phenomena that can be seen only when every part of the disk is covered. One is the corona, the outer luminous envelope of the sun, which is invisible both to telescope and to spectroscope except at moments of total eclipse. It appears as an irregular, softly glowing band of light from behind the dark mass of the moon. Another is the shadow bands described in an article on the Miscellany page of this issue of The Companion. Still another, which you can see only if raised well above the general surface of the earth on a hill or a tower, is the actual black shadow of the moon, which as totality approaches can be seen rushing across the country toward the observer at tremendous speed. It is amusing too to watch the conduct of birds and domestic animals. They are completely puzzled by the darkness, and it is not unusual for domestic fowls to go to roost, although as on this occasion the eclipse occurs in the early morning.

If the air is clear and other conditions are right, amateurs can get interesting photographs of the eclipse with ordinary cameras. Of course the larger the lens and the greater the focal lenght of the camera the better the results will be. The most important thing to get is a picture of the corona that will show its size and shape at the place where the picture was taken. The National Research Council in Washington, D. C., will be glad to have prints, or still better, the negatives, of any successful picture of the eclipse. There is still much to be learned about the corona, and it often happens that conditions will permit an amateur at one place to get an excellent picture of an eclipse when clouds hide the sun from professional astronomers elsewhere.

That's just the INSIDE installation. It doesn't include pole lines, cables and all the buildings that are being erected and added to from month to month. Just the exchange equipment.

On a railway journey from Santa Fe to El Paso, you see the locomotive, the tracks and yards, the cars and stations and bridges. But to talk from Santa Fe to El Paso you see only the telephone instrument before you. Great exchange buildings house millions of dollars worth of switchboards, intermediate and terminal frames, batteries and power plants—the intricate and highly sensitive mechanisms which make Long Distance communication a valuable service for every citizen.

LOVE FINDS A WAY

This is one of the many "Two-on-an-Island" stories that have been popular ever since Charles Reade's classic, "Foul Play," was published in 1869. So, of course, it is a story of adventure, love—and sex. Briefly, a young man and a young woman are wrecked in an airplane, land on an out-of-way island inhabited by cannibals, and fall in love. The situation is still further complicated by the fact that the girl is engaged to a man in England and has been brought up among people who are strait-laced and narrow-minded beyond belief. But love finds a way—as it usually does—even on cannibal-infested islands.

A feature of the story, of course, is the study of the girl's mind and heart in her struggle between love and duty, with Mrs. Grundy thrown in for good measure. So it is a story that a woman could write better than a man. The author is a Englishwoman, Clive Arden. Her story is not only her first novel, but a prize novel. It caused a sensation last year in England, has duplicated that success here and is now being shown in moving pictures in various parts of the country, the picture rights having been purchased for a very large price.

Quite an interesting problem, isn't it—two people in love, rescue improbable and no minister handy to tie the knot and transform sorrow to happiness!

Little Notes

I

Darbury was a small parish possessing an old church, a combined post office and sweet shop, but no actual village street.

As often happens with isolated people and places, the little parish was very self-important. The war and motor traffic had tended to modernize the community; and the new freedom rather went to its head. It was as yet not quite sure of its line, though painfully anxious to appear assured—one half shocked at the other half's doings, and altogether rather mixed.

This had been apparent, a year ago, when divorce had raised its ominous head for the first time within the memory of living inhabitants. Divorces took place elsewhere, of course, and Darburyites read and discussed the newspaper accounts with avidity; but that such things should happen within their own fold, between people known and even liked by everybody else, was an unheard-of idea. The topic, thrilling in the press, appeared indecent in these circumstances. Although it was Major Randall who had obtained the decree; and although his wife, instead of offering a defense, had brazenly gone away with another man, yet most people shrank from his society. As Mrs. Stockley, the widow of the late vicar, sagely remarked: "There are often two sides to these things; you never know."

Even the squire and Mrs. Rochdale, kindliest of the "old order," began to show a slight coldness. They placed the hospitable doors of Darbury house ajar, so to speak, instead of wide open, hinting to their only son that a little less golf with the major might be wise. But Hugh laughed at the hint, in his easy-going way. "That's all his funeral, not mine"; thus he waived responsibility for the morals of the house of Randall.

A wholesome young Briton, Hugh would abominate shady actions, if brought actually into contact with them; but he lacked the imagination to visualize what failed to interest him. His own purpose was single, his own heart fixed. Barbara Stockley, only child of the late vicar, had filled it entirely, since the days of frocks and perambulators. Growing up together, inseparable, their engagement was a foregone conclusion. Nobody therefore had been surprised at its public announcement upon Hugh's return from the war.

The wedding had been fixed for the following December. The happy pair were to live in one of the pretty modern houses at Hillbank during the old squire's lifetime, continuing all their activities in Darbury as usual. Everybody would call upon them; and everything would be nice, respectable and conventional.

But while everybody purred contentedly over this satisfactory romance, a bombshell exploded in their midst, launched by the heroine herself. Instead of spending the next four months amid dainty needlework, her united ambitions as all save the prospective bridegroom and the dressmaker, she shattered all traditions by announcing her intention to accompany an aunt, Mrs. Stockley's half-sister, to Australia. Darbury gasped. But it gasped yet more upon discovering that the journey was to be made, in ultra-modern style, by airplane. An ordinary ship would have seemed at least respectable.

The ostensible reason given was mainly a visit to the aunt's colonial relatives. But, of course, everybody knew better than to believe that; a deeper motive was needed to inspire such a risky undertaking. Could there be private trouble between the engaged couple? But the girl herself went about as usual, only a suppressed excitement deepening the already deep blue of her eyes, bubbling out occasionally into scraps of confidential speech which yet were no confidences at all.

"Such an adventure!" she exclaimed, when Miss Brown sought to probe to the soul of this problem. "The only one I have ever had. There will never be such another chance."

This from one who should have been deep in the adventure of marriage! Miss Brown was rather shocked. Hugh, she learned, had been averse to the idea at first. Quite right and proper! He had also steadfastly refused to go too; and Darbury had agreed with the decision. That a man should give up the routine of autumn pursuits was unheard of. . . . Besides, he managed his father's extensive property, and the harvest would soon be in full swing. Darbury, like Hugh, was essentially practical.

Great difficulty, it transpired over the tea cups, had been experienced in overcoming Mrs. Stockley's objections. But as she, like many weak women, usually took refuge in tears when thwarted, little direct information was obtained.

However, Darbury persevered in its ferreting tactics, at last gaining a little more light. Mrs. Field paid one of her brief visits to her pretty house; and it became known that she had arranged everything. Everybody said "Oh-h!" in a drawn-out syllable which expressed volumes; for Mrs. Field was accustomed to doing extraordinary things, without bowing to convention. The aviator proved to be her cousin, Alan Croft, a man well known in aviation and in the engineering circles of many lands. After having swooped down upon England from Australia in a super-machine of his own design—brilliantly achieving the long test trip with two passengers in addition to his crew—an influential firm had cabled agreement of purchase, pending an immediate, equally successful, return journey. So much they gleaned. But why or how Mrs. Field had maneuvered for Barbara Stockley and her aunt, Miss Dolly Davies, to be his passengers on the return journey, Darbury was left to conjecture. Mrs. Field being a woman who kept her own counsel.

A rumor soon arose that the aviator might be expected at the "House on the Moor," Mrs. Field's home, for the week-end. This, clashing with a country fete at which most of the Darburyites were entering, raised them to a state of unusual excitement. He might be there. . . .

"That Won't Matter. He Is Only the Pilot."

II

The Darbury fete, being in aid of a hospital fund, was held in the grounds of a neighboring mansion, the winter garden of which was utilized for dancing.

Barbara and Miss Brown were in charge of the sweets and tobacco stall. After a morning spent in preparations for the fete, said an afternoon behind the stall, Barbara was feeling unutterably bored.

Then, suddenly, she was aware of a man's figure standing near; and knew, without looking up, that she was being intently scrutinized.

"I think you are so brave to fly to Australia!" Miss Brown ejaculated. "And with a strange man, too! Doesn't Mr. Hugh mind?"

Barbara [illegible] this question Darbury resented.

"No! Of course not."

"But suppose you don't like him?"

"That won't matter. He is only the pilot."

Cheering up at this point, the [illegible] an involuntary start at hearing a [illegible] rest, piercing look fastened upon her. It was not the rude stare of a man who appraises women as if they were horses; rather did it seem to scatter nonessentials and to probe to the spirit within. For a moment her own eyes seemed held by a curious compulsion.

At the same instant Mrs. Field came briskly round the corner of the tent. "Ah!" she cried. "You are here first, Alan." Then, turning to Barbara, "I want to introduce you both," she said, taking an arm of each.

And Barbara, feeling uncomfortably self-conscious, too bewildered to do more than stammer a conventional greeting, was forced to lift her eyes to his. They were deep-set and gray like those of his cousin, but lacking the tenderness which lurked in hers; the little lines at their corners, surely betokening humor, appeared out of place. In her rapid glance she was dimly aware of great height, broad shoulders and a lean, deeply tanned, clean-shaven face.

"Alan borrowed a car and turned up last night," Mrs. Field smoothed over the impending awkwardness; but at that moment some one called her away.

There fell a silence, which the girl racked her brains in vain to break. She was somehow conscious of feeling acutely disappointed. This was the man who, to her inexperienced mind, had seemed a dim, unreal figure crowned by a halo of glorious achievement! This the heaven-sent deliverer, who, unknowingly, had offered that hidden self the one chance of stretching its cramped wings! Even if, as she had told Miss Brown, it did not matter, it was, nevertheless, very disappointing.

Before the pause became too uncomfortable, Mrs. Field returned and insisted upon having tea. On these occasions tea suggests a gathering of the clans. All the little cliques of the neighborhood meet in the large marquee and discuss the news they have gleaned.

Barbara was detained at the entrance; and Mrs. Field looked at her cousin with kindly enthusiasm, when they found a vacant table.

"Well, Alan? Isn't she a dear girl? And pretty?"

He responded indifferently; stooped down to tuck his panama hat under the seat; then sat up and ran his fingers through his thick dark hair.

"I—I got in here, Madge!"

She glanced round apprehensively; then leaned toward him. "Alan, for heaven's sake don't upset any of these good people, or she may not be allowed to go, after all!"

A smile of extraordinary infectiousness lit up his face, transfiguring it; the likes of humor proved that they were not, after all, misplaced.

"Try a muzzle, Madge! How the dickens do I know what may upset the old darlings—"

"Hush! Here is Mrs. Stockley."

The Darburyites, hearing that the stranger had at last arrived, soon clustered round for introductions; anxious to impress him with their own intelligence. But, with Barbara, they were doomed to bitter disappointment; for this hero refused to be lionized, and declined to talk "shop." Their intelligent overtures left him unimpressed; no pumping draw other than the briefest trickle in reply.

Slowly, to Barbara, the time wore on. More and more weary of the monotony, sick of the smell of chocolate, she became consumed with restlessness.

All the social world had left long ago. From the glass walls of the winter garden came the exhilarating, if garish, strains of dance music, tantalizing in their infectious rhythm. Barbara hummed the tune, tapping her foot in unison, occasionally surprising her companions by performing a few revolutions round the tent. In the middle of one of these she halted abruptly, for a shadow had fallen across the rays of the sun streaming athwart the stall.

"Come and dance with me," said Croft.

Her face expressed blank astonishment.

"Oh!" she exclaimed, confusedly. "I—we—only the villagers usually dance here."

"Oh, good lord!"

The amused contempt in his voice made her flush. Then, conscious of having given a wrong impression of detestable snobbery, she felt furious with herself.

"You never swerve from convention, I suppose?" he asked, watching her sensitive face in his disconcerting manner.

She turned away, uncomfortably self-conscious.

"I—Oh—" She gave an embarrassed laugh. An opening door brought a sudden rise of music floating in with the escaping occupiers. "I—really don't know."

Then some sheer, perverse, psychological [illegible] enough to pass across his countenance. It brought a strange ascent of all from the great Dalmorra without, from revolving merriment and deep seas supreme detachment of its pretty system of subsidiary. And it emphasized [illegible] the figure standing motionless before her, whose very [illegible] seemed symbolical of freedom—the freedom of mind and freedom from petty tyrannies, which is only gained by depth of vision, breadth of outlook, contact with the forces whose existence was beginning to stir faint echoes within her soul.

"Come!" he exclaimed suddenly, an undertone of impatience sounding in his word.

"Very well," she said in a low voice, "I will come."

He threw back his head a little, and smiled again.

No modern affectation showed in Croft's dancing. He abandoned himself to the rhythm of the music, with an ease which swept the girl along in sympathetic exhilaration. She forgot the imperfect hour, the clumsy couples, the staring eyes, mere instinctive dislike of this strange man, and surrendered herself to the rare joy of perfect harmony in movement. When, for an instant, she glanced up at her partner, she saw in his face a corresponding light which filled her with a momentary sense of fellowship.

Afterward, they strolled out on the terrace, flooded in the red gold of the setting sun. Barbara sat upon the low parapet, Croft flung his long legs over and drew out his cigarettes. Presently she found his glance fixed upon her.

"Well?" he asked, without preliminaries. "What about our little trip? Have you counted all the risks?"

"Risks? No! Or I might never get there!"

His quick look of approval was lost on the girl, as she glanced away with a laugh.

"When there is a chance of getting your heart's desire, would you count risks?"

"No!" he ejaculated warmly. "That's my creed."

From the determined lines of his well-cut lips, she judged this to be the truth.

"But your 'heart's desire'?" he went on; "what do you mean by that?"

She flushed faintly; the shy reserve in her nature ever made personal talk difficult.

"Surely you have that?" he suggested boldly, waving his cigarette toward the diamond scintillating on her finger.

"Oh, yes. Yes. I have, of course in that way," she replied hurriedly.

The band struck up a stirring jazz tune, a medley bringing hints of tom-toms, drums, rattling castanets, the uncouth music of the East.

"Oh!" she cried involuntarily, starting up; then sitting down again. "But you could never understand," she muttered.

"What?" He watched her closely, his cigarette burning, forgotten, between his fingers.

"The craving to live—really live!—for a time! To get out into the world; to—to experience everything instead of just reading about it all; to—feel life itself! In huge cities, among vast crowds. I want to find out—". She hesitated, looking away over the meadows, with a puzzled frown. "Something seems lost, missing in some way. I—I can't explain." She turned back to him, the color in her face heightened. But he did not laugh as Hugh would have done.

"Huge cities?" he queried slowly. "You think you will find it in them? Why not in remote villages?"

"Oh, no!" she cried. "Nothing ever happens in them! Villages are only full of little obscurities. I want to sample bigger things—"

"They will be but 'little obscurities' in fresh places," he interrupted. "The whole world is only composed of little notes, you know, and their reverberations."

She listened in surprise. In her experience, talk like this, especially from a man, was unusual; but from one famed for a life of action it seemed little short of miraculous.

"Well," she said, enjoying the novelty of metaphor, "I want to feel the big 'reverberations'—to get among deep chords, in fact!"

"They might be rather overpowering. It's having some sort of right keynote that counts."

> "Naturally you begin such a story with ideas of your own about such a situation. See if you stick to them.

English Laws a Paradox

One may be fined for stopping a dog fight or not stopping a dog fight. But the post office can reward something even better, the Manchester Guardian relates. At a seaside town a man walked into a post office followed by a huge dog. A woman was already at the public counter, and she also had a dog. The two dogs began to fight.

The man did not attempt to interfere. He suggested to the girl assistant, who was on the inside side of the counter, to duck over and part the combatants. She declined, very nervously. Presently the turmoil ceased, and then the dog owner bought a sixpenny stamp with the pennyworth that his subscription had purchased sunshine in the office and upset the public.

LITTLE CHANGE IN MID-WINTER FROCKS

Present-Day Line and Silhouette Satisfactory to Designers.

The Paris mid-winter showings have come and gone and not even the most minute, microscopic examination could reveal any ideas or themes that were really new. Apparently, observes a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune, the great dress creators are so complacently satisfied with the present-day line and silhouette that, except for slight variations in detail sufficient to lure the lover of pretty things to add to her wardrobe, the fashions are exactly like those that were seen earlier in the season.

The bellless tunic appearing again, is sponsored by Premet, Patou and Doeuillet, to name only a few. Molyneux makes no departure from his accustomed straightline effects with great bead embroideries in the richest Oriental designs on the skirts of his plain-corsaged sheath gowns. Vionnet has saucy little short jumpers that leave off at a much higher line than did those of last season. These are a distinct feature of her midseason collection of sports clothes which are seen in variety of interesting Redler fabrics and woolen mixtures in light colorings—chiefly shades of light beige mixed with brown, red and black in uneven masses without any distinct pattern.

Leopard skin continues to be one of the fashionable furs of the winter and fabrics that imitate the markings of this fur are very much in vogue. Molyneux used a printed crepe de chine in a leopard design for the model illustrated in the upper right corner. It is in tunic form with a very low waistline indicated by a plaited flounce and a ribbon-threaded girdle. There is no collar, the neck being cut in a deep point at the front, and in square effect at the back.

Almost every other Parisienne is wearing a Paquin topcoat. The favorite model is in navy blue cloth with two straight-cut edges down the center front that stand out like the flaps of a booklet de luxe. This coat fits in slightly at the waistline and has a full godet skirt edged with wide bands of light Tibetan lynx that taper up either side of the front to the waistline. Another popular Paquin model is in black cloth and has a high collar of beige fox divided in the center back by a knot of the cloth. This coat is straight and wraps around the figure just below the hips, where it is bordered with a wide band of the fox. The two fronts are finished with long, tapering handkerchief points that can be wrapped across, held to one side or else left dangling in the center front.

Fur Trimming Adds to Charm of Winsome Frock

Leather Trimmings Are Phase of Present Modes

Last year leather trimmings were something of a fashion novelty but this season they are recognized as an important phase of the present modes. And the use of leather as decoration is not confined as formerly to sports clothes but both suede and leather with a polished surface appear on costumes that are rather formal in character.

An earlier model that was introduced at the beginning of the season had wide cavalier collar and cuffs of perforated leather, the design resembling that of eyelet embroidery. It was most effective and in red or white leather trimmed frocks of dark blue, red cloth or twill.

One or two of the best French houses employ leather in the form of tiny pipings in a contrasting color, or as an appliqued design on a sheer background. Bands made of narrow strips of leather interwoven to make a checked design trim an interesting little sports dress of natural color kasha, and a wide band of Chinese red leather simulates a belt.

Almost every other Parisienne is

How to Care for Hair and Nurse Its Beauty

"Beautiful hair in most cases is not a gift—it is an art! And the art lies in knowing how to take care of it. For no matter how beautiful your hair may naturally be, unless you know how to care for it and nurse its beauty, it will soon lose its healthy sheen and luster, without which hair can never be beautiful. On the other hand, says the Detroit News, there are many girls who are not naturally blessed with lovely tresses, but who know so well how to take care of what nature gave them that their hair is their "crowning glory" indeed.

The foundation for a beautiful head of hair first of all is a healthy body. When the general health is run down the first place from which it draws the strength and nutrition it needs is from the oil glands of the hair. Plenty of air, exercise in the open air, enough sleep and a regular and healthy diet will do more for the beauty of your hair, since it takes care of the general health, than treatments from the most expensive hair-dressing establishments.

Brushing the hair is one of beauty's best aids. Nothing contributes so much to the natural sheen and gloss of pretty hair than regular brushing, especially if the hair is inclined to be dry. How often has this been said, yet how many women neglect this simple beauty treatment!

Brushing the hair does many things, both for the beauty of the hair and the health of the scalp. It stimulates the blood vessels of the head, thus the scalp of any tendency towards dandruff or, even this disease has already set in, helps to eliminate it; takes away the dead hair that is constantly being shed, keeps the hair clean and gives it the healthy gloss and vigor that makes it beautiful.

High, Pointed Crown Is Featured in Millinery

High, pointed, cottopaxie crowns at the greatest suppleness, tiny roll brimmed shapes, and a profuse use of beaver felts replacing the wool felts features the winter millinery in Paris.

The clocks at last is dead, this time hopelessly so, says a fashion writer in the Kansas City Star, and in its place appears a new array of tiny, soft, topple shapes in velvet, felt or satin, and a multitude of novel draped turbans attaining the most fantastic heights at the back.

Due to the prevailing and ever increasing vogue for cropped hair, small shapes with little or no brim at the back must continue to be the favorites and are likely for many days yet to hold the center of the stage. Large hats have been repeatedly and consistently shown at the start of each season, but with the present length of skirts a good 12 to 14 inches off the ground, and in many cases even 16, no woman with any sense of proportion dare take to a wide brim.

Combination Rival Comedies

Combine in song duets some patent pink to deep red and you quite as popular as the gardenia-orchids and add a timid touch of the simplest street costume.

Just a Little Smile

CURIOUS

"Yes, even the hairs of our heads are numbered!" thundered the minister.

After the sermon a small boy came up to the pulpit. "I thought I would ask you a question," he said meekly, pulling a hair from his head. "You said all the hairs of our heads are numbered, so I thought you would tell me the number of this one."

Her Answer

First Teacher—So you proposed to Nellie by letter, did you?

Second Teller—Not exactly. You know, she runs the 5 to 2 book. Well, after the checks were sorted I wrote her a letter on the back of a check and slipped it into her stack. Yes, I proposed to her in it—

First Teller—What did she do?

Second Teller (sighing)—She returned it marked, "Insufficient funds!"—Bank Notes.

WHAT HE DIED OF

Insurance Man—You seem a good risk, Mr. Brown, but please tell me what your father died of?

Mr. Brown—I was very young when that happened, Mr. Jones, but he died of a Tuesday, they say.

How Often!

How often in this world we meet
These resignation rumors!
A few of them bear fruit complete,
But most are only bloomers.

Universal Favorite

"Yes, my friends," said the theological lecturer, "some admire Moses, who instituted the old law; some, Paul, who spread the new. But after all, which character in the Bible has had the largest following?"

As he paused, a voice from the back bench shouted: "Ananias!"

That's Different

"I want to show you the famous flexible ivorine comb, an absolutely unbreakable comb, ladies and gentlemen, that will stand anything. You can bend it—so, or twist it—so, or you can—"

"Can you comb your hair with it?" interrupted a practical member of the audience.

Reason in His Attitude

Judge—You don't know whether you're guilty or not?

Defendant—No, your honor.

Judge—Preposterous!

Defendant—Your honor, how could I when I haven't heard yet what a single witness has got to say?

What He Wanted

Dealer—This engine will develop sixty horse power without a vibration.

Customer—And how much will one? I want the best money can buy.

NATURALLY

First Bug—You got the best of Mr. Worm in your little run in.

Second Bug—Yes, I made him squirm.

But He Didn't

A mile in a minute
Thundered the lightning express,
And he said, "I shan beat it"—
But he missed his guess.

Trained

May—I can't drive our old car at all any more.

Naine—Hownat?

"Jack has driven it so much lately that every time it goes on a dark and snowy road it skids automatically."

Lady Luck

"Ah wins."

"What yuh got?"

"Three aces."

"No yuh don't. Ah wins."

"What yuh got?"

"Two kings an' a queen."

"Yuh shuh do. How come you so lucky?"

War Stops Auto Business

One effect of the war in China was the practical paralyzing of the automobile and motorcycle business.

Renovating Old Orchards Urged

Give Neglected Trees Chance to Produce Better and Profitable Crops.

Start renovating the old orchards at once in order to give the trees a chance to produce some profitable crops. An old orchard should be given a fair chance, and then the trees that fail to deliver the goods should be removed. If the orchard cannot be made a paying proposition, why let it occupy land on which profitable crops can be grown? Furthermore, the old trees in a dead and dying condition harbor disease and insects, and the unsightly appearance of a neglected orchard is a bad advertisement for the owner, points out A. E. Schilletter, extension horticulturist, at Clemson college.

If there is a 40 per cent stand of trees that can be brought back into bearing by renovation, it will pay to undertake the work. If this is not the case, it will pay better to plant anew. The grower should know the varieties before the work is begun, so that he can determine which trees will be profitable.

According to Mr. Schilletter, work on the old orchard should begin at once, and should consist of thorough and careful spraying, pruning, worming and cultivating.

Pruning.—This preserves the life, health and vigor of the tree by removing dead, diseased and interfering branches, concentrates the growth into the fruit-forming branches, and encourages new wood growth in support of the next crop of fruit.

Spraying.—Spraying safeguards and prolongs the life of the trees by repelling insect and disease attacks, and decreases the percentage of decayed and wormy fruit. However, it must be clearly understood that different pests require different sprays, and that the winter application of spray is mainly for preserving the life of the tree.

Worming.—This rids the trees of worms that bore into the roots of the trees. The presence of worms is indicated by sap exudation or jelly near the ground in the peach and plum, and by yellowing of the apple and pear. These worms must be dug and cut out, for spraying does not control this insect.

Cultivation.—This operation aids in destroying weeds and grass, reduces the harboring places for insects, makes plant food available, and encourages tree growth.

Thinning.—Remove all the worthless or diseased trees, and thin out the remaining trees to proper distances.

Ashes on the Garden

Ashes in small quantities benefit rather than harm most gardens. Especially where the ground is inclined to be clayey, ashes will prove helpful. Wood ashes, better than coal ashes, have a tendency to sweeten the soil. Much garden soil is sour. If it were sweet it would produce better vegetables. Practically all swampy or poorly drained soil is sour.

Easy to Keep Weeds Down

The time to kill weeds is when they are just coming through the ground, or before they come through, says the United States Department of Agriculture. If allowed to become established it is much more difficult to get rid of them. If the top two inches of soil is kept continuously and thoroughly loosened, there will be no serious difficulty in keeping out weeds.

Water Fountains in Winter Are Needed

Hen Must Be Comfortable and Well Fed.

It is very important that the hens have warm water to drink in winter. When we take a drink of ice water on a winter morning and feel the chills go up and down our spine, then we know how the hen feels when she must quench her thirst with ice water. When we take a warm drink we feel a warm glow that is comforting in cold weather, and so it is with the hen that we want to lay high-priced eggs for us during the winter.

Many breeders make the mistake of thinking hens do not need much water in cold weather, but when it is remembered that an egg is largely water it will be understood that a hen must have water to be a layer of many eggs. The hen resents water with ice in it on a cold morning and will not drink as much as she needs. A hen must be comfortable and well fed and watered if she is to make a profitable layer, and warmed water goes a long way toward making her comfortable and contented.

There are now on the market many types of water fountains for winter use and the wise poultry raiser is providing some sort of fountain that will keep the water warm during the day. The type built with an insulated jacket is proving very successful and we advise our poultry friends to study the subject of winter water fountains now before the severe winter weather comes on. There is much in being ready for winter with the poultry flocks. If one postpones this work, he is liable to find himself unprepared for the first wintry blasts.

Manure Carrier Is Good Investment in Any Barn

The manure carrier is a good investment in any barn where labor is an item of expense. Of course, if one's time is worth no more than its use for exercise, the manure carrier is a liability. Good equipment in the barn and a good manure pit will go far toward helping to save a large percentage of the annual manure production. Its use will help explain why communities where live stock is kept seem to be prosperous in spite of the fact that its farmers will say they are feeding their live stock at a loss. They forget to include the value of the manure which keeps their soils not only fertile but in good physical condition. The better this manure is conserved and applied to the fields the greater will be its value.

World's Champion Holstein Cow

Canary Snowball Gettie, Junior Champion.

Another world's champion record was broken recently by a junior three-year-old Holstein cow for production of butter in a ten-months' test period in the herd of the Western State hospital at Fort Steilacoom, Washington. Canary Snowball Gettie, completed her 305-day test after carrying a calf 195 days with a record of 22,182 pounds milk and 787.75 pounds butter fat, equivalent to 984.7 pounds butter. As a consequence of this record she displaces the former Holstein champion in this class, Onyx Lillith. Immediately after qualifying for the 305-day record by dropping a splendid bull calf she was started on official test and in seven consecutive days produced 818.1 pounds milk containing 40.2 pounds butter, as a junior four-year-old. The making of two outstanding advanced registry records while on continuous test is an accomplishment never before achieved by cows of any breed. This cow's records were supervised also as a member of the Thurston County Cow-Testing association.

The care and feeding program of Canary Snowball Gettie is similar to that generally followed by all cows on test in the Western State hospital herd. Two months previous to freshening she was dried up and placed in a sitting pen. Here she received ordinary care and was fed never more than 30 pounds daily of a grain ration made up of ground corn, ground oats, wheat bran, linseed oil meal, coconut meal and cottonseed meal. When she was started on her ten-months' test she received the same grain ration supplemented with all the alfalfa hay she would consume with a liberal amount of mangels and green corn that had been run through an ensilage cutter. Mangels were used exclusively as succulence for eight months of the test and corn silage during the remaining two. She received exercise for one and one-half hours in a barn lot every day when weather conditions were favorable.

Nervous? Back Ache?

Fort Smith, Ark.—"I had been all rundown in health for a long time when I started taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I had tried many medicines, but they did me no permanent good. The 'Favorite Prescription' was the only thing that gave me any relief. Internal cleanliness protects against disease

IN CONSTIPATION, say intestinal specialists, lies the primary cause of more than three-quarters of all illness, including the gravest diseases of life.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

Nujol is used in leading hospitals and is prescribed by physicians throughout the world. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Feel Stiff and Achy After Every Cold?

Do You Have Constant Backache? Feel Old and Lame and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!

DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you worn-out and utterly miserable? Do you feel old and lame, stiff and rheumatic? Does your back ache with a dull, unceasing throb, until it seems you just can't stand it any longer?

Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills are mighty hard on the kidneys. They fill the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys must filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold leaves you with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.

Don't delay! Get a box of Doan's Pills. Give your weakened kidneys the help they need. Assist them, also, by drinking pure water freely, eating lightly and getting plenty of fresh air and rest. Doan's Pills have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

MRS. M. L. JOHNSON, 3241 Lawrence St., Denver, Colo., says: "My back was lame and weak. There was a continual soreness in the small of my back. Dizzy spells were frequent and it seemed everything whirled before my eyes. I was nervous. I started using Doan's Pills. One box relieved me so I haven't had a sign of the trouble since."

J. F. WEBER, prop. of shoe repair shop, 1368 Santa Fe Drive, residence 1222 Mariposa St., Denver, Colo., says: "My back was lame and weak and there was a distressing feeling in the small of it. Sharp pains cut into my back when I leaned over and I had to gradually move myself up. My back was so weak and sore I couldn't rest properly at night, and mornings my muscles felt drawn and taut. Doan's Pills relieved the attack."

Carrizozo School Notes

J. M. Helm, Superintendent

One of the most pleasant surprises of the school year came to us in the following form:

Carrizozo, N. M.
Dec. 14, 1924.

Mr. J. H. Helm,
Supt. Carrizozo Public Schools,
Carrizozo, N. M.

Dear Sir:

The following named individuals desire to present throub you, one set of The Pictorial History of the Civil War in ten volumes as edited by Review of Reviews, and one set Stoddard Library in twelve volumes, by John L. Stoddard, to the Public School Library, of The Carrizozo Public Schools. We hope the students will derive as much pleasure in reading these books as it gives us in making such a donation.

S. G. Allen, O. L. Blanchard, T. A. Bigelow, Mrs. H. M. Belknap, J. D. Chandler, S. E. Clark, Pat Collins, J. R. Green, H. J. P. Rourke, Henry Hatcher, J. A. Hooper, F. E. Hedrick, D. A. MacKenzie, C. A. Mc Cammon, F. F. Mudge, A. R. Mousier, J. P. Nash, J. E. Quirk, Miss Alma Roberts, S. O. Sproles, O. S. Stearns, N. A. Smith, A. V. Swearingen, R. R. Sale, D. D. Tiffany, R. T. Vaughn, C. B. Wells.

The letter was read, the books presented, and a letter of thanks and appreciation prepared and sent to the donars by Superintendent Helm. We are enjoying these books and will certainly remember the donars as our very best friends. Several pupils have been out of school lately on account of illness. The Spanish and Latin classes are doing double work in an effort to catch up with the two weeks which were lost on account of the absence of the teacher. This is quite a task added to the regular studies, but the classes are equal to the task.

A letter has been received from Miss Higanson, our former Spanish and Latin teacher to the effect that she is improving nicely and hopes to be out of the Sanatorium soon. Mid-term exams [illegible] this week and some of us are trembling in our boots, wondering what the harvest will be.

Prof. Birney, our new high school teacher, has taken hold of the work in a business like manner and causing some of us to do the same. We are glad to have Wayne Zumwalt back with us after an absence of one week on account of sickness. Charles Pfingsten of Lincoln, has enrolled with our school for the remainder of the term and we are glad to have him with us as he adds one more to the Senior Class.

Prof. S. G. Hester spent Sunday and Monday in El Paso.

The Flying Squadron of the Eighth Grade is doing some strenous advertising for the picture, "Back to the Shrine" which will be shown at the Crystal Theatre Feb. 9 and 10.

Mrs. Otho Lowe of Corona, was a guest of her sister, Miss Mary Fritz, Co. Supt. of Schools the first of this week.

Miss Juell Miller left Wednesday for Tempe, Arizona, where she will enter college with her sister, Audrey, who has been attending college at that place since last summer.

Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Skinner and daughter, Mrs. A. R. Duggar, are on a motor trip to Silver City and will be absent two weeks.

The Ladies' Guild of the Episcopal Church will give a Valentine Card Party at the Widenore building Friday, Feb. 13. The regular meeting of the Guild will be held on Wednesday, Jan. 28.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Reily were here from El Paso last Sunday and Monday. Morgan now has this territory for the American Tobacco Company and while here, placed some nice orders with our business houses for Lucky Strike cigarettes on which article, the company is making a vigorous campaign. It is not generally known, but is nevertheless the fact that 50 cents of every dollar spent for cigarettes goes to the government for income taxes. Last year, out of $509,014,050,84, this industry paid the sum of $182,715,735,98, in income taxes, or two-thirds of the entire volume of money.

They are now offering a 75 cent tin of Lucky Strikes for 45 cents, but only one will be allowed to each customer and each tin contains 100 cigarettes. We predict for Morgan a good business on his home territory. He deserves it.

T. J. Simer was over from Capitan Tuesday, attending the big meeting at Odd Fellows Hall and staying over until Wednesday morning to meet his niece, Mrs. Seldon Burks, who had been to visit her sister, who was ill near Antioch, Oklahoma.

Odd Fellows Hold Big Meeting

Tuesday night, Carrizozo Lodge No. 30, I. O. O. F., held a bumper meeting which was attended by Grand Master A. J Newsome of Alamogordo. Messrs. Friiby and Meadows of Tularosa and Ray Armstrong of Tracey, California. Initiatory work was performed in the First Degree, the candidate being Wm. E. Kahler, clerk at the local postoffice. Grand Master Newsome gave a splendid address in which he set forth the aims and objects of the order and gave an outline of the work that is being accomplished. After the meeting, Refreshments were served. Alamogordo will have a big meeting next Monday night and a number of local Three-Linkers from here will attend.

Capitan School Notes

(Superintendent F. S. Copeland)

This week ends the first semester, making the eighteenth week in this year's school life. Our state legislature is in session and we hope they will not forget the pre-election promises in regard to the schools of New Mexico, wherein they so blandly pledged themselves to a cash basis. It is noticed that the governor's message contained strong support of meeting the demands of the federal aid roads projects, but did not say much about schools. A commonwealth, especially when the legislature is in session, can take emergency measures to meet any existing situation and the people should demand that the state keep the schools going the remainder of this term with real money. The reimbursement for Smith-Hughes home economics this year is only one-fourth of the teacher's salary when it should be one-half of the entire amount.

"A Wild Rose," the large operetta that is to be presented by the Carrizozo Woman's Club at the Crystal Theatre Feb. 19 and 20, is being directed by Mrs. F. S. Copeland, who sings one of the mezzo-soprano parts. One of the soprano roles is sung by Mrs. Carolyn Rohde and one of the solo dancers will be Helene Tilsworth.

Some of the boys in the general science class do creditable work in setting up experimental apparatus, one of which was an excellent working model of a geyser which portrayed the idiosyncrasies of "Old Faithful".
