NEW MEXICO MUST GROW HER OWN FOOD, MEN. SAGE OF PRESIDENT KENT

Says State College Chief, Home Products Help Prosperity. It is up to the people who live in New Mexico to see that New Mexico raises enough food to feed herself...

"Eat more sweet potatoes," he urged, pointing out that New Mexico grows large amounts of the best sweet potatoes known around Portales, the McAllister Valley and elsewhere...

GROWING PLANTS FOR SPRING PLANTING

Extension Service Bulletin. Persons expecting to grow plants such as chile, tomatoes, eggplant and sweet potatoes for transplanting in the spring, should get their coldframes or hotbeds ready at once...

The time for planting varies with the locality, variety of vegetable and method of growing. The seed is planted earlier in the warm districts than in the higher, colder sections, as the plants are set in the field earlier in warmer localities.

Some vegetables are planted earlier because they grow more slowly and require more time to produce good, stocky plants than do others. At the college experiment station the cabbage seed was planted about the first of December; chile seed is usually planted in the coldframe from January 10 to 15, and tomatoes about January 20 to 30, while eggplant is sown about the last of February and sweet potatoes are bedded near the first of March.

In the southern part of the state where the season is long and hot many of the tomato growers do not practice transplanting, but plant the seed directly in the field. It is generally believed that the field tomatoes do not suffer so much from blight as the transplanted ones, and except for a few of the very early varieties there is probably not a great deal of difference in the time that they will begin to ripen, nor in yields, between the field seeded and the transplanted tomatoes.

EXTENSION WORKERS MEET FOR ANNUAL CONFERENCE

During the week of February 2-7, the Extension workers of New Mexico are meeting for their annual conference at State College. At this time plans are made for the carrying on of the work of the coming year. Committees are appointed to consider the different phases of work to be taken up and to outline the plans of work. These plans are later considered by the conference as a whole and adopted or sent back to the committee for further changes.

One feature of the conference is the message brought to the state from the Department of Agriculture this year Miss Reese, who has charge of the work with women and girls in the western states for the Department, will discuss among other subjects, "A Woman's County Extension Organization," and "A Balanced Program in Home Economics Extension."

Mr. Merritt will discuss "The Function of the Demonstration in Extension Work." He will also outline the plan of organizing a sound economic program in agriculture, as has been done in some of the other states. The Department will also be represented by Dr. E. L. Schneider of the Bureau of Animal Industry, who will present the plan for tuberculosis eradication during 1925. Mr. E. E. Piper, of the Biological Survey, will tell of new developments in rodent poisoning.

Wednesday morning the men workers will go out to the Jornada Range to see some experimental work which is being carried on by the Forest Service in cooperation with the department of animal husbandry at the College. This work is for the purpose of arriving at the most profitable winter maintenance ration for feeding herds in case of shortage of range feed.

At this time Mr. Wallace of the Department will give a cattle grading demonstration the purpose of which is to show the classes into which commercial cattle ordinarily go in larger markets. It is planned to hold such demonstrations at a number of places in the state immediately following the conference of Extension agents.

ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

GETTING AWAY FROM ONE'S PAST

"THIS atrocious," an old English writer says, though I am not at all sure that he is correct in this, "that with all amplification of travel both by sea and land, a man can never separate himself from his past history."

We are accustomed ordinarily in making such reflections, to apply the principle only to those things in our past that are unwholesome or questionable, and to emphasize the permanent influence of evil things, but it is equally true of our contact with healthy or noble or beautiful things. No experience of life, when it is past, leaves a man quite the same as he was before. One man has climbed Long's peak, or crossed the ocean, or heard a great musician, or seen a beautiful picture, or been under the influence, even for a brief time, of a fine character, comes away from the experience with a little different view of life, a broader outlook, a higher conception of duty. He can never sink quite to the level he occupied before.

Isaiah Harding, one of our neighbors when I was a child, had never been outside of the state. He had ploughed and sown and reaped his crops and had known no other outlook than the broad prairie that stretched endlessly before him. Then he visited the Centennial exposition in Philadelphia. The trip cost him one hundred and fifty dollars, he confessed after he came back. It seemed a small fortune in 1876, but it was worth it all. He was a new man for the experience, he had seen a new world, he had had an unexpected vision and he never tired of telling of it; he never got away from it.

It was a trifling experience which sent me to college—an irritating stimulating criticism of my appearance and my ignorance which I could not quite forget or ignore. The young fellow who was responsible for the remark had no thought of the effect of his words. I imagine, but his words bored into my consciousness and I could never get away from them. Ultimately they changed the whole current of my life and thought.

It is true of all of us. Every emotion we feel, every noble generous word we utter or thought we have, every experience that is ours, good or bad, leaves a permanent impression upon our lives and characters. No one can ever get away from his past.

Notice to School Directors

It may be that Local Boards are not taking any action concerning poll taxes in view of the fact that the Legislature will likely repeal that provision of law, but at the present time it has not been repealed and if repealed it may be that the law will not become effective until the close of this school year.

This being true, it is your duty, so long as the law is effective, to comply with same by posting notices and going ahead with the collection of poll taxes for the districts under your jurisdiction.

There is another reason for this and that is that in making the budgets for the present year, we took credit for a certain amount of poll taxes to be collected in the various counties and unless these taxes are collected, your budgets will be short just that amount, which I am sure you do not want to happen.

Mary Fritz, Co. School Supt.

MUCH ROAD WORK DONE BY FOREST SERVICE

More than 1,800 miles of road and nearly 5,000 miles of trails were constructed within or adjacent to the 147 national forests during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, according to the annual report made by the Chief of the Forest Service to the secretary of Agriculture. In addition maintenance work was performed on 7,423 miles of road and 32,105 miles of trails.

Including the construction work completed within the last year, the total mileage of national forest roads constructed by June 30 of this year stood at 8,707 and the total mileage of trails at 15,855.

The sum of $3,351,142 was expended on the road and trail work of the Forest Service during the last fiscal year, the report says. This sum was augmented by funds from cooperative agencies, such as States, counties, and local organizations.

ROAD SYSTEM EPOCHAL EVENT

The final designation and approval of the federal-aid highway system in all the states is an event that will be recognized as time goes on as one of the milestones of progress in the improvement of the highways of the country, according to the annual report of the Bureau of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The map of the system presents a definite plan for the improvement of main highways of the Nation—a plan that is possible to carry out in a period of not more than 10 years, and which, in that limited period, will result in a connected system of arterial highways that will permit unobstructed highway transportation between all duty of constructing the connecting roads which are needed to give access to the main system roads with the States and counties.

SCORES COMMISSION MEN

President Kent scored certain unscrupulous commission men, who he says, victimize the shipper. After a long haul of perishable stuff, he said, the shipper is often at the mercy of the commission man, and "often they steal the shipment bodily," added the speaker. "The farmer must learn with whom he is dealing, and above all learn to pack properly."

Stockmen of western grazing states will hold with joy a joint resolution now before Congress for the suspension of all forestry department grazing fees for the year 1925. The resolution was introduced by Senator Ralph H. Cameron of Arizona, as a retort measure for the livestock industry, and it is said to be gaining adherents daily in Congress. Early passage of the resolution seems assured, according to Senator Cameron.

The annual salary of members of the president's cabinet would be $17,500 instead of $12,000 under a bill introduced by Representative Fish, Republican, New York. In a statement Mr. Fish said that frequently cabinet officials, obliged to entertain extensively, have found their salaries inadequate and have been forced to resign to rehabilitate their finances.

Further reduction in the taxpayers' burden through reduced government expenditures will be a guiding policy of the four years of administration upon which President Coolidge enters on March 4. Addressing the regular annual meeting of executive and administrative officials of the government, the President placed upon them and Congress the responsibility for so measuring disbursements that a further step in this program may be taken next fall.

Invitations have been sent out by the inaugural committee to all state governors to participate in the parade and other inaugural ceremonies in Washington on March 4. Attendance of the governors has long been a tradition in the inaugural program and their absence in the past have lent much of the color to inaugural processions.

The humble taxpayer was given an unaccustomed thrill a few days ago by the Internal Revenue Bureau just as the solar eclipse was turning the usual signs of nature topsy turvy. In a formal statement the bureau gave the country this advice: "Do not pay more income tax than you owe." The unusual warning was caused by the fact that the first of the income tax returns to come to hand revealed a widespread failure to deduct the 25 per cent deduction credited under the Without discussion or a record vote, the Senate accepted an amendment to the naval bill requesting President Coolidge to call another arms conference.

The administration's stand in favor of American participation in the World Court was reaffirmed by President Coolidge in an address delivered at the White House to delegates attending the national conference on the causes and cure of war.

The entire problem of adjusting official American relations with the League of Nations has been opened anew in League circles by the decision of the leaders of the International Opium conference in Geneva to make the League Council, together with the United States, the official body which will appoint a central board of control to supervise international traffic in narcotic drugs.

Germany has been forbidden to manufacture warlike material even for a foreign nation. It was announced in London a few days ago, by the foreign office. The ambassador's council has sent a note to Germany, the foreign office said, notifying it that the proposed contract of Krupp with the Argentine government to make bombers for the new Argentine warships would be considered a breach of the Versailles treaty. The council holds, it was stated, that Germany is not permitted to make any "warlike material" and that the proposed bombers would come under this heading.

GENERAL

Dreams of astronomers of seeing a total eclipse of the sun under ideal conditions were realized in New York and New England. In Michigan and Ontario and at Niagara Falls, however, clouds and low visibility frustrated scientific texts. Especially in New York City, witnessing its first total eclipse in 110 years, was the spectacle magnificent.

Emile Dueschler, the new French ambassador, arriving in New York a few days ago declared France has always paid her debts, and the impression is that she "is to pay her debts." "But," he added, "the only question is the way to do it." He indicated that much of the discussion of the issue in Paris represents "personal opinions" and does not reflect the government position.

HERRIOT SAYS FRANCE WILL PAY

REPUDIATION OF OBLIGATIONS NEVER THOUGHT OF, SAYS PREMIER OF FRANCE

STANDS BEHIND DEBTS

SECURITY IS KEYNOTE OF ADDRESS MADE IN CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

Paris.—Security was the main theme of Premier Herriot's long awaited speech of France's foreign policy delivered before a great gathering in the Chamber of Deputies. The premier occupied two hours of his three and a half hours' address in drawing up a vivid but dark picture of Germany's activities in armaments which he disposed of the problem of interrelated debts in a brief, but nevertheless emblematic manner.

On the subject of interrelated debts the premier said: "It comes to the question of interrelated debts. I shall speak very briefly thereon, for you have remarked how great is the susceptibility of our friends and allies on this subject and you know how even the subtlest words and best sentiments risk at times being interpreted in a regrettable way."

"What I can do is solemnly repeat once more what M. Viviani has said, what M. Poincare has said—France does not intend to repudiate her debts. It is not the government over which I preside, attached as it is to respect for treaties and conventions, that will disavow the principle of debts which France has contracted."

"Seen from a commercial and practical viewpoint it is impossible that the allies cannot see the terrible difficulties there would be in asking France to transfer to England and America sums corresponding to their debts. These sums have not increased our means of action, while the loan of 500,000,000 franc marks provided by the Dawes plan—to which I continue to think we have done well in subscribing—have given Germany fresh economic force."

"The money lent us prevented us from perishing, but our substance is, nevertheless, diminished. I hope as much good will be brought to this problem as we ourselves are putting in it. France has always been true to her word. She will be again here as everywhere."

The premier concluded his address with the declaration that he was animated by only one purpose—universal peace, the beginning of which is France's security.

"My greatest desire is to see the dawn of the United States of Europe arise under the aegis of the League of Nations. I seek to work for the peace of Europe and the world, but as a basis for that peace I seek the security of my country."

C., authorities on a fugitive warrant, was shot and killed in a corridor of the federal building here after he had thrown ammonia into the face of Deputy United States Marshal Jack Donnelly and attempted to escape. Who shot and killed Eggers is a mystery. At first it was reported that Donnelly shot him. This Donnelly denied. It was reported that an accomplice of Eggers shot him.

Silver Production Decreased Washington.—Silver production in 1924 amounted to only 61,000,000 ounces, a decrease of 10,000,000 ounces from the previous year, according to preliminary reports received by the Senate commission on the gold and silver inquiry. The domestic output of gold was reported as 51,000,000 ounces, or about half the output of 1915, the last year set by the commission as giving normal comparison. A report was submitted by Fletcher Hamilton, metallurgist expert of the commission upon results of hearings conducted in several western states.

Gloria Swanson Marries Marquis Paris.—Gloria Swanson, the celebrated American film actress, was married here to Marquis Henri de la Falaise de la Condry. Bank Collapses, Eighteen Dead Santiago, Chile.—Eighteen persons are believed to have been killed when the roof of the Popular Credit Bank suddenly collapsed, burying under it the employees and several clients. Firemen and police immediately began working to rescue persons imprisoned and recover the bodies of the dead. The bank, which was opened in 1912, was a state pawn shop created to protect the people against the enormous interest rates charged by private banks of money.

About 77,630 acres of timber land in New Mexico were added to the Carson National forest in an executive order issued in Washington on the recommendation of Secretaries Work and Gore. Most of the area is in the patented Los Trampas and Santa Barbara grants. A recent act of Congress authorized the exchange of land, chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, for an equal value of National forest timber in New Mexico with the provision that upon them the acceptance of timber reconveyed lands shall become part of the Carson forest. The Continental Gas, Light and Power Company, the new owners of the Silver City electric plant, took over the management of the plant the last of the week. The new owners are making plans for many improvements among which are a new addition to the plant and a new 500-horsepower engine.

J. H. Meyer, of the American Company of Cisco, Texas, arrived in Artesia recently to make arrangements for the building of a magazine to store the glycerine for use in the Artesia oil fields.

Avoided by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Cal.—"I cannot give too much praise to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me. My mother gave it to me when I was a girl 14 years old, and since then I have taken it when I feel run down or tired. I took it for three months before my two babies were born for I suffered with my back and with my legs. It helped me when my heart was affected and it helped me when I thought I would try Pinkham's, as I call it, first. In two months I was all right and had no operation. I firmly believe Pinkham's cured me. Everyone who saw me after that remarked that I looked so well. I only have to take medicine occasionally, not but I always keep a couple of bottles by me. I recommend it to women who speak to me about their health. I have also used your Sensitive Wash and like it very much."—Mrs. E. GOTT, 4600 East Side Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal.

"OH, HUGHIE!"

SYNOPSIS.—Living in the small English village of Darbury, old-fashioned and sedate place, Barbara Stockley, daughter of a widowed mother, is soon to celebrate her marriage to Hugh Croft, rich and well-connected. Barbara is adventurous, and has planned, with an aunt, an airplane trip to Australia. Major Alan Croft, famous as an aviator, is to be the pilot. At her first meeting with Croft Barbara is attracted by his manner and conversation, different from the cut-and-dried conventions of her small town. They set out, Barbara, her aunt, Croft, and a mechanic, to Darbury in a few days' time. Word in a few days comes to Barbara that the plane is missing and its occupants believed lost. Croft and Barbara, after the wreck of the airplane in a furious storm, reach an apparently uninhabited island in the Pacific ocean. The other two members of the party had perished.

"Let me do that. Shall I?" she asked.

"Don't you mind blood?"

"Of course not!" she answered indignantly.

He handed her the blood-stained wet handkerchief without a word, inclining his head toward her. In a few minutes he rose to his feet, all traces of blood washed away, his head bandaged adroitly with her own handkerchief twisted in his.

"I'm going up that hill, to view the land," he said, with abrupt decision, proceeding toward it as if oblivious of her presence.

"I'm coming too!" she exclaimed, hastening after him. "I'm not going to be left alone down here! There may be alligators and things!"

He gave an impatient smile. "Come along, then; I'll help you up."

"Oh, no, thanks! I can manage quite well," she replied rather coldly, nettled by his tone and manner.

He said no more, but began to climb the rugged rock-strewn hillside with the agility of a mountain goat.

Barbara struggled after him, slipping, bruising herself, panting for breath. The shock had left her weak and unnerved. She sank upon the ground, drawing hard sobbing breaths. Croft, without a backward glance, was disappearing among the larger boulders at the summit. Fearful of being left, she rose again and scrambled on. Her aching head throbbled wildly now; sudden dizziness caused everything to swim around her. . . . Stumbling over a half-concealed rock, she fell prone upon the ground. . . . There she lay, conscious of a terrible silence. No other sentient being seemed to move within a world so full of awful loneliness that it appalled her; it was almost tangible. A great wave of fear, grief, loss, homesickness, wild-almost childlike—longing for Hugh, swept her away. For the first time since the horror began, she found relief in tears. She lay there alone, sobbing weakly. . . .

she would have struggled free, but his grip tightened.

"Keep still! It's a rough climb." He spoke abruptly, ever his way in moments of stress. The tears of weakness rose again in her eyes. She closed them, but too late to hide what she felt he would despise. She turned her face away into his wet shoulder; and he strode along in silence.

Stray rocks lay about the ridge; small shrubs, interspersed with ferns and club mosses, made progress difficult; but he never paused until they were among the tall trees of the palm grove. Then he set the girl upon her feet.

"Where are we going?" she asked.

"Listen!" he commanded, without answering her question.

From near at hand came the noise of rushing water. He turned farther inland, amid tall avenues of bamboo, toward the sound, Barbara closely following. Presently a pleased exclamation escaped his lips, and he halted.

From the high ground the river tumbled down, a sheer waterfall of dancing crystals splashing from great boulders high up among the forest trees to smaller ones on the lower level; thence hurrying and gurgling over little rocks, which encircled small pools of translucent green, into a clear, softly flowing stream some six feet deep. This after a time spread out and grew shallow, finally disappearing between rustling walls of bamboo canes toward the cove where it joined the lagoon. From the nature of this deeper stretch of water and the comparative clearing of undergrowth on the banks, Croft judged it to be partly the work of man's hand, not entirely the result of nature. But he forbore to suggest this to the girl.

Croft led the way back to the grove, then on to the clearing beyond.

Suddenly Barbara stood still, with a little cry.

"What's that?"

He stopped, looking aside in the direction indicated. Scooping swiftly, he lifted a queer bleached object and examined it closely. She drew near, glancing curiously at the hideous thing.

"Let Me Do That, Shall I?"

"It's a skull! Isn't it?"

"Yes," he replied, "and—of the negro type!"

She looked up, startled. Until then it had not occurred to her to wonder concerning the island. The past with its tragedy had expunged all else from her mind.

He continued to examine the skull, with puzzled brows.

"There are some curious holes which I cannot understand," he said. "They might have been caused by bullets. But it is doubtful if natives would possess bullets here."

"Do you think there are any here now—any natives?"

He met the eyes raised in trepidation to his own. "I can't tell, yet. But they are friendly enough to white people."

Throwing away the skull, he went on toward the open space.

The apparent caves proved to be moss-covered ruins of bamboo huts. Many had fallen into rough heaps upon the ground; of others, bits of all remained standing, guarding like sentinels the broken portions resting wearily against their heads. Lying about, half-buried in undergrowth, were oddly shaped household utensils made of wood or rough kind of pottery; also large shells, rude cups fashioned from coconut shells, broken spears.

The scene was desolate, giving the impression of death, of the relentless hand of Time sweeping away its victims.

tion what once had seemed strong and full of life.

"It's quite possible," he said, "that the whole colony which lived here has died out. Populations dwindle very much in the Pacific Islands."

She gave a little shudder.

"It's horrible here—I don't know why! Let's go down to the shore. There seems to be a hut standing down here." She pointed toward a small, sheltered structure half-way down the lower slope, sheltered beneath the hill which they had climbed. Croft hurried in its direction.

It consisted of one small room. The bamboo walls were intact, but the thatch forming the roof showed large rents; on the ground within, amid musty, dead leaves, were scattered utensils similar to those which they had already seen.

Croft glanced round critically, then at the girl, who had followed him, then out through the opening seaward.

"We can make this sufficiently habitable to carry on with," he observed.

His words went out into silence. They brought instantly a vivid realization of the immediate present to her mind, followed quickly by thoughts of the future. A new fear shot up, clutching her heart with a horrible, clammy hand. She looked with sudden dread at her companion's profile, and something about his tense lips seemed to confirm the awful foreboding. The faint color revived in her cheeks by exercise ebbed away, leaving her white. She clenched her teeth and her hands; then, with an effort, put her head to the test.

"We—shall, soon be rescued? Ships are certain to—call here? It will only mean a few hours—or days?"

The moment which Croft had dreaded, yet known to be inevitable, was at hand; and he felt the utter inadequacy of his sex in dealing with delicate situations.

From his prolonged silence Barbara guessed the truth of his convictions; words were unnecessary. She clasped her hands in agony, uttering a little moaning cry like some dumb animal receiving its death-wound.

Croft turned quickly. He looked down at the quivering, girlish form, meeting the frightened eyes turned to him, trusting in his judgment and resource. And all at once he realized that, in this ghastly predicament, her very life lay in his hands. He leaned forward and took her clasped hands in both of his.

"Don't give up hope," he said earnestly. "It's very doubtful if ships call; but they may pass this way. We will do all we can."

She clung to his hands, breathing hard, seeming to find the old magnetism of his personality draw her up, deriving mental as well as physical support from his grip. Her eyes fixed upon his, as if searching for help. . . .

Suddenly, like a plucky ray of sunshine in a stormy sky, a faint smile flickered tremulously across her pale lips.

"We must—as you said—buck up," she whispered, the trembling words scarcely audible.

At mid-day the heat became excessive. Mercilessly the sun, like a quivering mass of molten steel, beat down upon the shore; no breath of wind stirred the hot air; the lagoon, with its almost indigo blue, assumed an oily, sluggish appearance, as if sinking to sleep with the lowering tide.

Within the shade of the angle formed by one side of the hut and the hill behind, Barbara lay inert upon a soft, if simple, couch of sun-dried coats. Finding that the ground awayed and rolled like a mountainous sea if she endeavored to rise, she gave up the attempt, and lay motionless, with closed eyes.

Nearby were some untouched bananas and a broken coconut, the shell of which was filled with water and placed upright between three stones. From within the hut came the noise of splintering sticks, as if somebody were breaking the bamboo canes which crossed and interlaced, formed its structure.

The girl listened, wondering dully at the endurance of her companion, full of a miserable sense of shame at her own weakness. Without pausing for rest, after fetching their coats and procuring food, he had begun clearing and improving this dreary abode—carrying down broken portions from the ruins above for a door, fetching other canes and palm-leaves for mending the thatched roof.

Presently, hot and disheveled, he appeared. He had shed all his clothes except breeches and shirt, and looked, she thought, strangely in keeping with the scene around them. This was her first experience of a man whose life had been spent chiefly in wild surroundings, open upon but the fringe of civilization; whose abundant vitality responded to the call of untamed nature in a way that proved he had not been shackled by chains of convention closing around him, fetter by fetter, as the years passed.

"That's done!" he said briefly. He sat down and proceeded to peel and eat bananas with considerable relish. "I feel so useless!" she exclaimed, miserably. "Such a hindrance instead of a help. It would have been wiser to have left me in the water. You would get on better alone. We shall only die lingering deaths here, if rescue doesn't come."

"Dashed if I mean to die!" he protested, between two large mouthfuls of fruit. "Nor shall you!"

Throwing away his banana-skins, he rose and surveyed the water; then he came close to her, lowering over her, as it seemed to her excited fancy.

"I'm going to try to reach the machine. I may be able to rescue our baggage and provisions."

"Oh! no, no, no!" she cried wildly. "Suppose you get drowned? Never mind luggage! What does that matter? Oh! don't leave me all alone—!"

Terrified, she tried to reach some part of him; to restrain him by force. He caught her arms, raising her to her feet and supporting her.

"Listen!" he commanded in a tone which checked her agitation. "It's not only luggage! I want to save the wireless transmitting set—"

"Wireless!" radiant relief overspread her face. "Why—then—we can soon get rescued after all? I forgot about that."

"You mustn't rely too much on it. It will be only the 'short range' set. The long range used on board obtained its electrical energy from a generator run from one of the engines, and is therefore useless now."

Her eagerness for this new hope to be tested was still modified by fears concerning the risks of his venture. He pointed out the shallowness of the water and the scattered little coral islands. "The tide's low enough now for me to wade to that one nearest the reef. From there it's quite a short distance, if swimming is necessary."

"I will wade with you—"

"The devil you won't!" He suddenly wheeled round upon her. "Look here! You're never to go in the lagoon! Bathe in the river, but don't ever go in the lagoon. Swear to me!"

She gazed at him in stupefied amazement and anger.

"Why not? If—if you go in—"

"—I understand these waters. They're treacherous. Promise me—"

"Oh!" she interrupted impatiently. "I don't want to bathe—ever—anywhere! I'll sit and watch you go."

"In this blazing sun? No, indeed! You must lie down in the hut and sleep."

Vainly she remonstrated, fearing a recurrence of the tangible loneliness

she had experienced upon the hillside. His jaw set in a way she was to know well. With a viselike grip he drew her toward the hut.

The interior was cleared now of rubbish, and a rough aperture for window had been made at the end facing inland. The shade was cool and welcome. Croft fetched the coats and spread them upon the ground.

"Now," he said, "stay here until I return."

"You understand? You promise to remain? Or must I barricade the door?"

She pulled her hand away, and let her aching head fall back upon the fleece lining of the coat.

"Oh, don't bully me!" she protested irritably, trying to control the quaver in her voice. "I won't endure it. Please—go."

He looked down at her in silence for a moment, his brows knit in perplexity. Then he turned and went out, setting up the improvised door behind him.

Lying motionless in the comparative gloom, a prey to rising fever, new fears assailed her. Shrinkings in horror, she faced the fact of her isolation. Sundered from all the sure harbors of civilization with this man of uncertain moods—a man whom she neither liked nor understood! . . .

A care for her physical welfare had certainly been shown today. But in everything her will had been overpowered, even to the extent of physical force.

It was not to be borne! What might not happen? . . . The fears, accumulating, grew into feverish terror. She struggled to her feet, and hurled herself weakly at the door, with some frenzied idea of escape. . . .

The door was barricaded on the outside!

As a caged beast, half-mad with terror and impotence, she staggered up and down the little hut, her brow clammy, her clenched hands shaking. . . . With a rush of hysterical tears, she flung herself upon the ground. "Hugh!" she sobbed, distraught. "Oh, Hughie! Hughie!"

"The man intends to live. The girl is hysterical. Is he strong enough for both?"

EXCUSE-US TWINS

This is the story of two strange children who lived in the land of Not At All, and who were called the Excuse-Us Twins. They were given these names because they were always begging to be excused, and everything that was said to them they took just exactly as it was said—or at least they acted that way.

And this is also to be the story of six of their adventures—all packed into one story!

One fine day the Excuse-Us twins, a boy and a girl they were, by the way, came home with a ragged, dirty, most untidy, miserable small child.

The child's shoes were covered with mud and his coat seemed to shake the dust as he breathed.

"Why, children!" exclaimed the mother. "What in the world have you done? Who is this strange child?"

"Excuse us, mother," said the Excuse-Us Twins, "but you know you said the other day we didn't half appreciate what you did for us, and that you wished you had a poor little child to do for as you do for us. You said a poor little child would be grateful."

"And so we made this one come with us."

And the mother of the Excuse-Us twins had to get the child back to his home as soon as she could, and gave him some of the twins' suits and sweaters and explained to his mother as best she could that she hadn't meant to kidnap the child.

But the very next day the twins were found covering themselves with silver polish.

They were smeared with it—all over—covered!

"What in the world have you done now?" said their mother with horror, and you can hardly blame her for that.

"Excuse us, mother," they said, "but you know you told us you wished we could be brighter, and we saw this silver polish down at the store, and it said on the outside of the bottle that it was guaranteed to make the dulliest object bright."

"So we tried it."

Time passed by a little more quietly for awhile, but one day the mother had a child who loved "natural" children. She liked children to romp and use slang and she hated children who were too polite and too well-behaved.

The mother of the Excuse-Us twins knew that her children would just suit this caller. So she called them in. But didn't those wretched twins just behave so unnaturally well?

They said, "Yes, please," every few moments, and, "Yes, mother dear, whatever you wish, and whatever you think is best for us."

And of all the times, this was the one time when their mother did not wish to have them so polite!

Afterward, of course, they said: "Excuse us, mother, but we thought you wanted us to have nice manners."

A while after this they came home with a lot of starving, moth-eaten-looking cats, and when their mother asked them what they had done this for, they said:

"Excuse us, mother, but you said we must be kind in creatures helpless and less fortunate than ourselves, and these cats surely are less fortunate."

A good while passed by without anything happening until one afternoon they stayed out much too late, and as usual had an excuse.

"Excuse us, mother," they said, but you told us fresh air made us grow, and so we stayed out to get taller."

But the sixth adventure or prank of theirs—and their mother said she surely hoped it would be the last—was when they came in one afternoon looking very dirty. There were streaks of dirt everywhere.

Their faces and hands were smeared with mud and dirt.

And when their mother exclaimed with horror, they said:

"Excuse us, mother, but you know you said the least we could do was to scrub behind our ears. And behind our ears we are beautifully clean."

And this was true. While the rest of their faces were dirty, behind the ears they had washed most carefully. But the Excuse-Us twins had certainly not failed in having excuses!

"New, Stay Here Until I Return."

she had experienced upon the hillside. His jaw set in a way she was to know well. With a viselike grip he drew her toward the hut.

"So we tried it."

Time passed by a little more quietly for awhile, but one day the mother had a child who loved "natural" children. She liked children to romp and use slang and she hated children who were too polite and too well-behaved.

"We Must Be Kind."

Stepped on Her Tongue

Thinks, aged four, suddenly burst into tears at the dinner table. "Why, Emma, what is the matter?" asked her mother.

"Oh," sobbed the little miss, "my t-tooth stepped on my t-tongue!"

FORREST SERVICE MEN WILL STUDY RANGE PROBLEMS AT TUCSON MEET

Albuquerque, Jan. 22.—How to handle livestock on national forest ranges so that there will be the best economic utilization of the forage with the least damage to the forests, will be the general theme for consideration when the fourteen national forest supervisors of Arizona and New Mexico assemble for annual meeting February 2-5, states District Forester Frank C. W. Pooler. The meeting will be held in Tucson to enable supervisors to observe first hand the results of grazing experiments on the Santa Rita Range which is close to the place.

A delicate balance between forces must be maintained according to forestry experts, if the same land is used for the grazing of livestock, the growing of timber, and watershed protection for irrigation works. Overgrazing on the forest ranges kills out the forage plants so that the binding power of the roots and stems on the humus soil is lost. When heavy rains occur millions of tons of the top soil are washed down the mountain sides. Besides burdening creeks with silt, the soil on the mineral soil that is left does not have sufficient nutriment to support rapid tree growth.

The problem of growing timber maintaining watershed cover, and grazing livestock on the same land, the District Forester states, has perplexed the Forest Service ever since the creation of the forests, but it has become especially difficult of solution with increase demand for national forest grazing permits due to scarcity of outside range. It is believed the Tucson meeting will afford the supervisors an opportunity to arrive at definite conclusions regarding reductions in the numbers of livestock that it is generally recognized will have to be made on certain forests in order to safeguard growing timber and prevent erosion of the surface soil.

Holding the meeting at Tucson will give the supervisors a chance to study the result of grazing experiments that have been going on for ten years on the Santa Rita Range Reserve, an experimental grazing area containing 40,000 acres situated 38 miles southwest of Tucson. These experiments include natural revegetation and carrying capacity of forage, distributing of stock, increase of soil crop, together with the reduction of stock losses through preventable diseases, poverty poisonous plants and predatory animals.

By the practice of scientific range management, the stockmen who use the Santa Rita Range Reserve have been able to improve the grade of their breeding herds and to raise the percentage of calf crop substantially over that obtained by the majority of stockmen using uncontrolled range. This has been accomplished without greatly increasing the cost of handling the stock or the per head investment in range improvements. Young cattle offered for sale by Range Reserve co-operators find ready market and generally weigh from twenty five to fifty pounds more per head than the usual run of out-side stuff. Buyers make practically no cut in Range Reserve offerings while the cut back on sales by other stockmen in the same regions run from ten to forty per cent.

BIG KILL BIKED IN NEW MEX. YOU HAVE BY PROHIB. M.F.N

Santa Fe, N. M., Jan. 23.—A still of 100 gallons capacity which evidently had just been abandoned, was found by prohibition officers in a cave in the Abiqui mountains, 65 miles from here. The fire was still going, and the jar under the coil had run over.

The officers had a map of the location, but so effectively was the still hidden, they spent four hours tramping around in the snow within a short distance of the cave before they found it.

Operator Pleas. They supposed the operator discovered their presence and fled just a little while before they found the entrance to the cave.

Later the officers arrested Manuel Sandoz, who, they said, is to be charged with the manufacture of whiskey, possession of whiskey and possession of a still.

Easter Island Statues Prides of Archeologists

The world's most ancient statues is to be found outside, not inside, the British museum.

It is said that it took 200 men from the crew of his majesty's ship Topaz, and 300 natives to drag the statue from its original site, although it weighs only four tons. It is the work of a race of huge builders and was one of many similar colossal statues, some of them weighing as much as a hundred tons, scattered over Easter Island in the Pacific, London Tit-Bits says.

These hideous images were originally supplied with hats, in some cases weighing another five or six tons, which were red because they were made of tufa or volcanic rock. All the hats have fallen off now and are found lying around the huge statues as though there had been a high wind. This race of ancient builders left traces in the shape of immense stone monuments right across the Pacific and many archeologists think that the islands on which these monuments are found are the last remnants left above the surface of a vast submerged continent. There is nothing which fixes the exact period of this achievement, but it is possible that the statues are at least as old as the pyramids of Egypt.

Common Phrase Once Had Distinct Meaning

In olden times in many parts of England, particularly during the feudal period, the poor living on a lord's manor or estate were allowed to go into the manor woods or forest with a hook and crook to get wood for fuel. What they could reach they might pull down with their crook. This was a precarious way of procuring fuel, but the privilege was eagerly sought. Boundary stones, beyond which the "hook and crook folk" might not pass, were to be seen of late years in some old forests. However, this custom does not satisfy the present use of the phrase, "hook and crook," which does not simply mean to a precarious manner, but at all hazards, ill or well. The custom referred to is described in the Bodmin Register of 1525, in which is this statement: "Dymure Wood was ever open and common to the inhabitants of Bodmin to bear away upon their backs a burden of lop, crop, hook, crook and bag wood."

World's Oldest Poem

Homer, the Greek poet, is credited with being a composer of the oldest and most famous poem in existence, "The Illiad." Homer lived about 1000 B. C. and in his immortal epic describes in 24 books, certain important events that occurred in the tenth and last year of the siege of Troy. Agamemnon, the commander-in-chief of the allied Greeks, having quarreled with Achilles, the latter retires in anger from the contest and sulks in his tent. As a result of this defection the Trojans are victorious and Achilles, accordingly sends his friend, Patroclus, to turn the tide of battle. Patroclus, however, is slain by Hector, whereupon Achilles, rushing forth in rage to avenge the death of his friend, kills Hector and drags his body—fastened to his chariot—towards the Grecian ships. The poem of the Illiad closes with the restoration of the body of Hector to Priam, and the funeral ceremonies in honor of the Trojan hero.

"Fishing" for Coal

A quaint occupation is that of the "drudger," who, with the aid of long staves called "hitchers" saves coal dropped overboard during the process of coaling ship.

The "drudging" fleet, a collection of queer little broad-beamed boats, is to be seen at work at all waterside places where ships take in coal or discharge it, says London Tit-Bits.

A certain amount of coal falls overboard into the river or harbor mud, from which it is retrieved by the "drudgers," who wash it, take it ashore and sell it to householders at a low price.

Coal "drudging" is a skilled occupation, and one that is handed down from father to son.

Brain Works in Hot Bath

When you have some particularly knotty problem to solve, try a steaming hot bath. Nothing is so conducive to clear thinking as a hot tub, asserts Dr. L. Hubbard of Washington, D. C. in Hygeia, health magazine published by the American Medical Association.

Have the water as hot as can be borne, and then a little hotter, advises Doctor Hubbard, and be sure to have a paper and pencil within reach so that you will not lose the brilliant ideas that are sure to come.

Such a bath is weakening and would be exhausting to some people, but used in an emergency, it will be found well worth while.

Not Acquainted

In an influential parish church it had been found necessary to provide the minister with an assistant. Some difficulty was evidently experienced. Ultimately it appeared that a suitable candidate had been found.

Following the Sunday war which he preached, a woman member of the congregation met a church officer, whom she proceeded to congratulate on their having secured such a timely young man as a prospective assistant. "Oh, well," he said, "it's just a case of Helen's choice." "Indeed," was the reply, "but who is Helen?"

KING COTTON THEN FERTILIZER

When King Cotton comes, the use of fertilizer must follow, says H. W. Tins of the New Mexico Agricultural College. Any experienced cotton grower will verify the statement. The truth of it is also borne out by the fact that the bulk purchased fertilizer is used in the states east of the Mississippi River, and particularly in those states along the Atlantic coast where much cotton is raised. In general, it is also true that more fertilizer is used in the older agricultural states than in the new.

The amount of purchased fertilizer used depends to a large extent upon the type of farming, but it also depends somewhat upon the acreage of improved land. In 1909 only 327 farms in New Mexico reported the use of fertilizer, while in 1919 its use was reported by 1,458 farms; in 1909 the value of the purchased fertilizer used was $25,271, while in 1919 the value was $113,483. Taking various factors into consideration, it is estimated that more than $250,000 was spent for fertilizer by New Mexico farmers during 1924. Within the next six years it is probable that the amount of money spent for fertilizer in this state will be close to a million dollars.

With these facts staring us in the face it is obvious that the fertilizer situation demands more than passing attention at the present time. If land is to produce cotton, or almost any crop, year after year, the use of fertilizer becomes a necessity if the land is to return a worth-while profit. It is clear, then, that an increase in the rapid increase in the amount of fertilizer used in New Mexico is to be expected.

In the use of fertilizer the two following warnings are given the farmer: be sure that you use the proper kind of fertilizer for the crops you sow, and be sure that you get the kind and quality of fertilizer you need. You lose money when you fail to get the quality of fertilizer which you pay for. However, at the present time New Mexico has no law making provisions for the inspection and analysis of commercial fertilizer, and there is no assurance that the purchaser gets what he pays for. Until such laws are passed, the best the farmer can do is to place his faith in standard brands and in the products of older and better known manufacturers of fertilizer.

"CZAR CYRIL?"

Will Russia Again See a Romanoff on the Throne?

The very latest form of the stock question, "What next in Russia?" is this: "Czar Cyril?"

When Alexander Kerensky, who headed the revolution that forced the late Czar Nicholas II from the throne of the Romanoffs, was tottering to his fall the question was, "What next after Kerensky?" Its next form was, "What next after Lenin?" Now the question seems to be, "What next after Trotsky?"—with "Czar Cyril" thrown in for good measure.

The Russian situation has as many complications as a cross-word puzzle. At this writing Leon Trotsky, the war minister, may be alive or dead, in power or a prisoner or in exile—press reports from Russia agree only in omitting to say that he is dead. While the news from Russia is utterly unreliable because of a strict Soviet censorship, it is presumably true that Trotsky is at odds with the other Soviet leaders and is the center of what appears to be a cyclonic storm.

Grand Duke Cyril, from his place of exile in Coburg, Bavaria, has proclaimed himself Cyril I, czar of all the Russias. The Grand Duchess Cyril has recently paid us a visit of more or less mysterious purpose—which may have been for publicity only.

The dowager empress of Russia—to give her her former title—does not admit that Nicholas II is dead and denounces Cyril. Grand Duke Nicholas, uncle of Nicholas II and oldest of the Romanoffs, supports her.

General Wrangel and the exiled remnants of his anti-Bolshevik "White Army" are loyal to the claim of Grand Duke Nicholas to the Romanoff throne. Kerensky, also in exile, is as strongly against Wrangel as he is against the Soviet government.

And, finally, the Soviet government appears to be having difficulty in holding down the peasants and making them say they like the ruin and chaos that everywhere prevails in Russia.

On the other hand, although the Soviet government may be having hard going in Russia, Europe appears to be badly scared over Communist activities outside of Russia. The British government, for more than a month, has been working hard in a campaign to organize a crusade of great and little powers, including the Vatican, against the Communist activities for a world revolution. It is frightened by the progress of revolutionary propaganda in India, Egypt, Persia, Afghanistan, and Mesopotamia. The Communist Internationale of Moscow reorted by ordering a general Bolshevik uprising in the Balkans the second week of March and the establishment of Soviet republics in Albania, Rumania, Bulgaria, Croatia, Galicia and Macedonia. The British foreign office has brought about a coalition of Rumania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia against Soviet Russia. The French have also felt the scare and have turned and are giving support against Russia.

As to Russian chronology, it will be remembered that the World war broke out in 1914, with the declaration of war by Austria against Serbia, July 28. Germany declared war against Russia August 1 because the latter had begun to mobilize its armies. September 1, 1915, Czar Nicholas II took over the supreme command from Grand Duke Nicholas, his uncle. March 12, 1917, the Kerensky revolution was accomplished and Nicholas abdicated. September, 1917, Provisional President Kerensky declared a republic. November the Lenin coup at Petrograd overthrew the Kerensky government and established Communism. July 10, 1918, the Fifth All-Russian congress adopted a constitution. (The congress of 1922 established the Union of Socialist Soviet Republics under the Communist Party.) February 19, 1918, Lenin and Trotsky announced the surrender of Russia to the Central Powers. March 20, 1922, the Russian Soviet Supreme court executed Archbishop Zenkoff. January 21 occurred the death of Nikolai Lenin (Vladimir Ilyich Ulanov), head of the Russian Communist party and Soviet republic. The United States has refused to recognize the Soviet government. The British Labor government recognized it February 1, 1924.

"Czar Cyril I" is Grand Duke Cyril Vladimirovich. Grand Duchess Cyril is Victoria Feodorovna. Her father was the Grand Duke Alfred of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. She is a granddaughter of Queen Victoria, a cousin of King George V of England and a sister of Queen Marie of Rumania. Her first husband was her first cousin, the grand duke of Hesse, a brother of the czarina of Russia. She divorced him in 1901. In 1905 she married Grand Duke Cyril, in spite of the fact that Czar Nicholas II forbade the marriage. They were banished and it was not until 1900 that they were allowed to return. Here is the proclamation in part of Cyril:

Let the Russian army, although called Red, but whose ranks have largely been forcibly enrolled, say its final word and come to the aid of the downtrodden, rights of the Russian people and revive the historical tradition, standing for the faith, the czar and the fatherland, and restore law and order to Russia.

In conjunction with the army, let the masses of people arise and call for the rightful czar of the country, who will be the loving, forgiving and thoughtful father and ruler of the great Russian country, who will be feared alone by the enemies and by the willful wreckers and destroyers of the nation. The czar will restore the churches, forgive those who have misled and give to the peasants the legal ownership of land they possess. Then Russia will receive ample relief from famine and salvation from final destruction, and later will be able to restore its destroyed households and will regain peace and happiness.

The task of the czar will be a painful and difficult one in a Russia impoverished and shaken to its foundation. Not for personal glory and not for vain honors nor for attainment of power shall the czar assume the throne of his ancestors, but for the accomplishment of his duty before God, before his conscience and his country.

Impulsively calling for the accomplishment of his holy task of liberating our native land from the humiliating and ruinous yoke, I first of all consider myself obligated to uphold the law and follow my duty, ignoring any hesitation and disregarding the fact of my unwilling absence from my country.

Grand Duke Cyril's proclamation was received with anger by Marie Feodorovna, dowager empress of Russia, mother of the murdered Czar Nicholas II. She wrote the following letter of protest from Vindisvaer, near Copenhagen, to Grand Duke Nicholas:

Your Imperial Highness: My heart was painfully depressed by reading the manifesto of the Grand Duke Cyril Vladimirovich who declared himself emperor of all Russia. There is no definite news up to now about the fate of my beloved son and grandson, I, therefore, consider the act of Grand Duke Cyril's proclamation as premature. Nobody is in a position to deprive me of the last gleam of hope.

I am afraid that this manifesto may create division and instead of improving will render still worse the state of tormented Russia. If it were the Almighty, in His unknown ways, to take unto Himself my beloved son and grandson, I believe, without any forecast of the future and with firm hope in Divine Grace, that the future emperor will be designated by our fundamental laws in union with the orthodox church and altogether with the Russian people.

I pray the Almighty to spare us His anger and to save us by those ways known only to Him. I am sure that you, as the oldest member of the house of Romanoff, share my views. MARIE.

At the banquet General Wrangel asserted that his old "White Army" was by no means dead, declaring it would continue its organization "until the blot upon Russia's honor placed there by the Bolsheviks" had been wiped out. Other speakers were Bishop Tikhon of the Berlin diocese of the Greek-Russian church, representatives of the Union of Naval Officers, the Invalids' organization, the National Federation of Russian Emigres, the Russian Monarchists Students' federation and Russian emigre lawyers. A communique issued by the colony to the German press, which asserted that it is "heads of the Russian emigre societies and Russian anti-Bolshevik organizations" welcomed General Wrangel as hotly repented by the Kerensky adherents, the ex-emperors' friends, also having a flourishing society. They declared the Wrangel group did not reflect the real feelings of the Russian emigres, representing only an insignificant fraction of them.

"Hell will freeze over before I become a Bolshevik. Not in this life or hereafter will any one be able to call me a Bolshevik." Thus Kerensky, who made the revolution which overthrew Nicholas and who was defeated by the Bolsheviks and fled to Czechoslovakia and Germany, answered reports that he had joined the Soviets.

At this writing the latest news concerning Trotsky, the war minister, is that the Bolshevik commissar of finance, Sokolnikov, has denounced him in the Moscow Pravda as a Menshevik, saying: "We have decided quietly to remove M. Trotsky from the Soviet activities without further explaining the differences between his policies and our own. Our party faces a great crisis to fulfill M. Lenin's policy, which is a successful world revolution."

All sorts of stories continue to come out of Russia, indicating a bitter struggle between Trotsky and the ruling triumvirate; some even tell of bloody conflicts in the streets of Moscow between the factions.

That the Soviet government is having trouble with the peasants is shown by an epidemic of assassinations of Communist officials in the villages which has been raging since September. Said M. Zinoviev, dictator of the Leningrad district, in a public speech in Moscow:

We must be careful how we treat the peasants. The peasant question is more dangerous for us than the combined forces of Trotsky, 100 Wrangels, 100 Chamberlains, and 50 Huskies. The question is developing in Communist villages into a Gordian knot, which we must solve if our dictatorship is to continue. Should we fail, our excellent managers in international politics will not help us. The revolution will take into consideration the chaos now proceeding in the attitude of the peasants towards us and making a monstrous mistake which will mean our collapse.

The Soviet government has consistently warded off religion. It may or may not be significant that the Russian peasants almost universally this year celebrated Christmas. Even in Moscow the chapel of the Iberian Virgin, the most famous Christian shrine in all Russia, was crowded all day—while almost next door to it is the Bolshevik shrine, the tomb of Lenin.

The Russian peasant has again burst forth into song and knife in the form of rhymes of four lines each, their old-time "chastushki." Where the Communist dares not even whisper, they are boldly singing anything that comes into their heads about Soviet officials and policies. Here's a pitiable sample:

Yesterday a cook was I, Stewing beans and peas— Now I am a Commissar Signing my decrees.

What was the purpose of the visit here of Grand Duchess Cyril? Nobody seems to have reliable information on the subject—or information that is accepted as reliable. Victoria Feodorovna herself gave out this statement upon her arrival in New York:

The Grand Duchess Cyril has learned of reports appearing in the public press which have variously intimated that her visit to this country is for political purposes, to help restore the Russian monarchy, to sell a chateau, etc. The grand duchess wishes to invoke the courtesy of your newspapers in publication of a complete and unequivocal denial of these statements and reports. They are without any foundation in fact. Her visit is purely social in its nature and at the invitation of American friends whose invitations she accepted in Paris last summer. The cordial invitation which was then extended to her furnished an opportunity which the grand duchess has long desired, to visit a country bound to her own land by ties of traditional friendship, and which has so frequently and generously befriended her countrymen. She is looking forward with the greatest interest and pleasure to her short stay here; but beyond her acceptance of meeting her American friends and visiting some of the places of interest she has visited in the past.

Grand Duchess Cyril was made much of socially in New York and Washington. But it was evident that social recognition was all she got; if diplomatic attention the Russians they want as private citizens. She departed after a stay of ten days, her parting word being this:

"All Russian factions will be united against the Soviet when the time comes."

TO PRESERVE CABIN OCCUPIED BY TWAINE

Reno Park to Have Abode of Famous Humorist.

It is in the ghost city of Aurora, Nev., that Mark Twain wrote "Roughing It." The cabin that he occupied still stands just about as he left it. "N. N. R." writes in the Kansas City Times. Here and there can be seen the marks of souvenir hunters, but in most respects the cabin is in a good state of preservation. The stove upon which he did his own cooking, covered with rust and grime, is just as it was when he took the stage that carried him on the first lap of his journey to the East and world fame.

In one corner of the cabin is the wooden bunk upon which one can imagine Mark Twain lay weaving in his mind many of his western romances. As he watched the smoke rings from his old pipe floating lazily upward to join the cobwebs on the ceiling. As I sit here on the edge of Mark Twain's old bunk writing these brief notes I have a feeling that his spirit is hovering near.

When word was received recently that citizens of Mono Lake, Cal., were starting a movement to remove the Mark Twain cabin to that place, a few Nevada old-timers suddenly awoke to a realization of the value of this early-day treasure and hastened themselves to keep it within the borders of the state that has a greater claim on this man who made the whole world smile with his quaint humor and sunny philosophy. Arrangements have now been completed to transport the cabin and its historic contents to the Wingfield park at Reno. The surprising thing is that this was not done long ago.

Walking through the streets of this most interesting of Nevada's ghost cities, a vision comes to one of its past hectic days, the days when daytime and nighttime in Aurora were one and the same, when the merry click of the roulette wheels could be heard at all hours of the night or day when the doors of its many dance halls were never closed, and one can understand whence came the inspiration for Mark Twain's unrivaled tales of those pioneer days, the like of which will never be seen again.

It is truly a deserted village. Not a human being in sight. No sign of animal life. Nothing but empty and deserted buildings. Along the main street stands a three-story brick hotel, several two-story bricks, others of one story, all still in very good condition. Many of these buildings compare favorably with similar structures in such cities as Reno. The doors of most of these buildings are open for all who wish to enter; a few have iron bars across the doors, but with windows broken one can easily see all within. In one of these is a bear, upon which it is said the absent owner still pays taxes, just why no one knows; it may be he thinks the bear will some day stage a "come-back" a trick that Nevada ghost cities have.

The building once used as a courtroom, where justice was dispensed in the true and easy pioneer style, has its jail doors wide open, swinging back and forth with every breeze that sweeps down the once-busy street. In one of the cells is a chain shackled to the floor, indicating the strenuous character of some of its former occupants. In another cell are four dusty coffin lids, gruesome evidence of the old days when men were wont to shoot first and talk afterward.

In one of the one-story bricks stands a long bar and back of it a bevel glass mirror, and in front the shattered evidence of the familiar brass rail upon which later became prominent in the business and financial affairs of San Francisco and other Pacific coast cities. With feet on this rail, and with the tinkling of glasses, men made deals involving thousands of dollars. Those were free and easy days, as the old-timers will tell you with many a sigh and lonesome look.

It was amidst such scenes and such environment as this that America's foremost humorist spent his young manhood days.

Kidd's Treasure Again

When the Westchester county park commission opened bids at White Plains, N. Y., for the removal of Money Hill, on the Hudson river at Croton, it inserted a clause in the contract that if any of Captain Kidd's treasure was unearthed from the hill it was to be turned over to the commission. Money hill was so named owing to a legend that Captain Kidd buried some of his treasure there. Residents thereabout have frequently reported finding Spanish pieces of eight and other coins of ancient mintage.

Useful Glue

Here is a glue any housewife can make. It's so simple and will serve many household purposes. Just dissolve one tablespoonful of ordinary cooking gelatin in from two to two and a half tablespoonfuls of boiling water. Boil a few seconds and add a little sugar while still hot.

A woman who uses it says it will effectively stick paper or cloth to metal, wood or glass and do this without leaving a stain.

Just So

"How did the accident happen?" "Why, I slumped my lighter and was sucking the cigar."

Guessing

Just a Little Smile

LACKING IN FAITH

The prisoner came before the court on a charge of murder. Many distinguished legal lights had assembled to hear the case.

The charges were read out, and the judge, as is usual, asked the man in the dock if he would like to be defended by an attorney.

"No, my lord," came the reply, "this is too serious a matter."

Good as a Scarecrow

Said a woman to her neighbor over the suburban garden wall, "I hope my daughter's singing does not annoy you."

"On the contrary," came the sweet reply, "my husband and I appreciate it very much. It keeps the birds away from our berry bushes."

Rather Curious

One of those pests known to every one met Florence Flinn hastening from rehearsal.

"You didn't know who I was when I called you up yesterday, did you?" he inquired.

"No," Miss Flinn answered, absently. "Who were you?"

Fond of Fishes

A negro was offered a job feeding sharks.

"Now, sah, boss, me and sharks ain't friends."

"Why, boy, sharks don't eat black meat?"

"Ah know, but it's just mah luck to meet wid one dat's blind."

TOO REALISTIC

"Did you enjoy the amateur dramatic show last night?"

"Well, I thought it was too realistic."

"Really?"

"Yes, it said on the program, 'One hour is supposed to elapse between the first and second acts,' and it actually did."—Windsor Magazine.

Language on the Loose

Good diction is of little use in work, however skilled; but when profanity turns loose, the audience is terrified.

In Other Words

First Boot—I hear that the drill sergeant called you a blockhead.

Second Boot—No. He didn't make it that strong.

First Boot—What did he actually say?

Second Boot—Put on your hat, here comes a woodpecker.

Guarding His Reputation

Eminent Author—You bought a story of mine ten years ago for $25.

Editor—Yes, but we haven't printed it yet.

Eminent Author—Well, let me have it back for $250. I've got a reputation now and don't want to spoil it.

THE LUCKY STONE

Son—Dad, what's the luckiest stone to have about you?

Dad—The grindstone, my son.

Willie got a little gun. Shot his uncle's eye out. Vowed that it was nearly gone for a first-time tryout.

Deep Enough

"Beauty is only skin deep, you know."

"Yes, and I consider that a wise provision of nature."

"How so?"

"With that limitation the girls are kept busy enough."

Fret Work

Mrs. 'Awkins—What is your husband's trade, Mrs. 'Arms?

Mrs. 'Arms—Oh, calls himself a fret-worker, he does. One of them, you know, that frets all the week if he works half a day.

Guessing

House—Let's have a hand at bridge. You play, don't you, Miss O'Leary?

Miss O'Leary—Well, I hardly know. You see, I've never tried."

OSTRICH FEATHERS POPULAR TRIMMING

Decoration Adds to Beauty of Costume; Hand-Painting Is Fashionable.

New ideas in the use of ostrich feathers are constantly devised. For though feathers for accessories and trimming have been used for more than two seasons, observes a fashion writer in the New York Times, they possess so many possibilities of charm and chic that they carry on in millinery ostrich, the new "willow" kind is used on many of the more dressy hats. Even on the stiff beavers and felts some milliners have introduced ostrich feather pompons and the longer ostrich feathers. In one extreme novelty from a smart Parisian house a black silk smooth beaver of the director's type, made of black and white feather, ostrich, is fastened at one side and hangs to the point of the lip.

Some unusually pretty, dressy collars or short boas are made of this way. Willow ostrich, very full and fluffy, to be with ribbons in front, at one side or at the back of the neck. They are shown in many colors, and one that is thought uncommonly smart is of black and white, marked to resemble the old-fashioned Shetland wool yarn. Any of these feather things for the neck adds a soft touch to a plain frock, and one sees them worn by fashionable women in the smart restaurants and in theaters.

Hand-painting, a manner of embellishing many articles in the wardrobe of a fashionably dressed woman, has been so long out of style as to have seemed lately like a lost art. But this season some of the best things of many types are hand-painted—gowns, negligees, scarfs, stockings, lingerie, gloves and even handkerchiefs. Among the frocks is a white chiffon painted in garlands of flowers—willow roses and feathery ferns—though it would have found no favor a few seasons ago. In the up-to-date adaptation the painted things appear to be in perfect harmony with the mode of the day and are regarded as very smart.

The scarfs are perhaps the most decorative of all the hand-painted dress novelties. Those of silk, crepe or cotton in the new "dainty" colors, some very long, are painted on the ends with designs of many kinds, graceful floral and conventional motifs being equally popular. The variants in these are many, and some are startlingly picturesque. A long, straight scarf of white crepe has a big flamingo painted on each end. Another, in yellow, forms a background for clusters of large golden roses, and a scarf of vermilion silk has end designs in large black plumes.

This charming sports frock was recently exhibited at the skating rink performance in Paris. It is also seen at all the leading French winter sports resorts.

No colors are quite so popular as black and white, shown in many striking combinations. Of all the styles in design, those of Russian character are perhaps the most successful. Hand-painted nightgowns, lingerie and other practical apparel are a passing fad and are not seriously considered this side of the water.

Motor Bags Must Be Smart

The bags one carries on a motor trip must be as smart as they are serviceable. For this purpose there are the most stunning bags of red leather. They are of all sizes, from the small vanity to a large dressing bag almost as big as a medium-sized suitcase, and are beautifully fitted with all the necessary toilet requisites. Small flat envelope bags are carried with a costume of black or dark blue and add a touch of brilliancy so essential to chic.

Beads Match Scarf

Nowadays one matches one's beads to the scarf. A pretty striped scarf made on a handloom has a string of wooden beads that exactly matches the tones of the scarf.

Turquoise Blue Beaver Hat, Silver Cloth Trim

Chic and in keeping with the mode of the season is this attractive little turquoise blue beaver hat with silver cloth trim to accentuate its beauty.

Accessories Should Be in Harmony With Suit

It is not enough to have one's frock or suit or hat the most becoming to be worn and the smartest from a fashion point of view. There are a dozen and one things to be considered before one attains the superlative quality of chic so much to be desired, and even the most trivial accessory has its proper place in the sartorial scheme.

The woman of fashion has always made a point of having each detail of her costume in perfect harmony but it is doubtful if she has ever displayed quite such meticulous care in the choice of her accessories as she does this season.

Sophisticated simplicity is the dominant note of modern fashions and an unwise selection in the matter of bag, gloves or a handkerchief, an ornament that is a bit too much or too little, stockings that are not the correct shade or a scarf that is not appropriate will ruin a costume that in other respects is perfect.

Time was when bags were divided into two types, those for daytime and those to carry in the evening. Today these types are multiplied until there

Variable Coiffure

One can have either a bob or a formal coiffure today, if not for the asking, at least for the paying. One hairdresser makes a specialty of transformations. Each is fitted to the shape of the head and in the exact tone of the customer's hair. One braid, which encircles the back of the head, changes an afternoon bob to an evening coiffure.

Bizarre Headdress Sponsored

Headdresses and antique jewelry are interesting details of the toilette for formal affairs. Some of the headdresses are really hats, although worn with evening gowns. They consist of turbans of soft white fabric, resembling the headdress of Indian women, seen in Paris, or of metal brocade that closely swathe the head. Others are antique metal, and made with brims.

Gray Is Chic

The woman who follows closely the modes of the moment will choose gray for her ensemble. A gray suit, a gray hat, a coat of gray trimmed with silver-toned fur, and stockings of gray make up an ensemble that has infinite chic and is well in advance of fashion.

Steel Beads Adorn Motte Bags

Bags to carry with the tailored suit are of black moire with intricate designs of steel beads. They are large square envelopes and contain the necessary fittings.

Use Hard Water in Mixing Spray

Government Bulletin Tells of Methods for Preparing Solutions.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
More than half of the citrus groves are located in arid and semi-arid districts. A large proportion of the finer grades of fruit are grown in groves that are dependent, wholly or in part upon deep-well water for spraying purposes. The water from these wells is known as hard water, containing minerals in such proportions that the ordinary or unstabilized oil emulsions will not mix with it unless the water has been previously treated.

Mix With Well Water.
It has been found that oil emulsions stabilized with any one of a number of different colloidal substances will mix with practically all deep-well waters even when untreated. These stabilized oil emulsions will also mix with lime-sulphur solutions, making a highly effective combination spray for white flies, scale insects, and rust mites. When a combination of this kind is properly made by a competent grove manager it is a reasonably safe spray for either citrus foliage, branches or fruit. The stabilized oil emulsions have met with much favor among many of the largest citrus growers, who no longer find any difficulty in using the untreated water from deep wells.

Methods for Treating Water.
A new United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin No. 1217, "Mixing Emulsified Mineral Lubricating Oils with Deep-Well Waters and Lime-Sulphur Solutions," by W. W. Yothers, entomologist, and J. R. Winston, pathologist, discusses the best methods for treating deep-well water, but also recommends using stabilized oil emulsions with untreated water.

Directions and formulae are given for stabilizing oil emulsions by applying various colloidal substances, such as casein, milk, skimmed milk powder, gelatin, cornmeal, wheat flour, cornstarch, and laundry starch, as well as glue. Those interested may obtain the bulletin, as long as the supply lasts, by applying to the Division of Publications, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Crop Production Behind

Increase in Population

Crop production in the United States is not keeping pace with the annual increase in population, according to figures just released by the United States Department of Agriculture. Total crop production has increased 13 per cent during the past twelve years, but production per capita has decreased about 5 per cent.

The mass of crop production in 1924 as measured by an index number is 113 per cent of the average for the five-year period 1910-14, and in 1923 the figure was 110 per cent. The index of crop production per capita in 1924 is 95 per cent of the average for the five-year period, and in 1923 the index figure was 94 per cent. There was a decrease of about one-fifth of 1 per cent in acreage of crops from 1923 to 1924 but production in this period increased 1.3 per cent. The trend of crop production per capita has been lagging since about 1915, with the exception of 1920, the department says.

Kansas Potato Growers

Are Treating More Seed

In the Kaw valley of Kansas, seed potato treatment for control of tuber-borne diseases has been found to bring increased yield.

When agricultural extension workers began demonstrating approved methods of treating the seed in the potato-growing communities, very few farmers in this section used this preventive measure. Method demonstrations were followed by the growing of test plots in which treated and untreated seed was planted by farmers under the direction of extension workers. These test plots gave such farmers and their neighbors an opportunity to compare the results from the use of treated and untreated seed. The number of Kaw valley acres on which treated seed potatoes were planted has increased each year, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, from practically none in 1918 to more than 6,000 acres in 1924.

Crop Production in 1924

Estimates made by the United States Department of Agriculture show that the 19 truck crops produced in this country this past year for table use and manufacture had a gross value to the growers of $315,000,000. This is $12,000,000 less than in 1923. Tomatoes were first in gross value, showing a total of $55,000,000. Also the largest acreage was devoted to this crop. Irish potatoes were valued at $44,000,000; strawberries, $35,000,000 and cantaloupes, $20,000,000.

Useful Litter Carrier

It is best to provide a good manure and litter carrier when one is making preparations to take care of a manure. It is one of the greatest labor-savers that can be found about the modern farm. The manure can be forked into the carrier easier than it can be thrown from the windows, and once the carrier is filled, it takes but a few moments to roll it out to the pit and dump the contents by the release of a mechanical lever.

Grain Temperature Reduced to Normal

Necessary to Destroy Any Insects Present.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)
Grain infested with insects may heat—due to their presence, until it becomes favorable to the breeding and development of large numbers of destructive weevils and beetles of various species. If the temperature of the grain continues to rise, it reaches a point where spoilage occurs. Insects have been known to raise the temperature of grain to 88 degrees Fahrenheit and 95 degrees Fahrenheit when the outside or room temperature was below 50 degrees. It is highly necessary, therefore, in warehouses where large quantities of grain are stored to keep the temperature of the grain low and particularly to destroy any insects which may be present.

A study of the effect of fumigation upon heating grain has been made by the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture. This has demonstrated that when heating is a result of insect infestation the insects can be killed and the temperature of the grain reduced to normal by fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas or carbon disulphide. Even grain and beans heating to 108 degrees Fahrenheit have been reduced to normal temperatures by fumigation. Such reduction in temperature prevents the continued destruction of grain to cold weather, when owners, not understanding the ability of insects to raise grain temperatures, believe they are enjoying protection due to insect inactivity resulting from temperatures of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or lower.

Secret of Storing Ice for Use During Summer

When putting up ice it is important that it be well stored in the ice house. Put the cakes or pieces as closely together as possible, and fill in the cracks and holes between pieces of ice. The whole secret of storing ice is to prevent any circulation of air between the cakes.

Leave about one foot or more of space between the wall and the pile of ice. This space should be filled with sawdust, shavings, or chopped straw which prevents the rapid melting of the ice, and also prevents the water from keeping the ice house wall wet, so that it decays rapidly. There must be a passageway between the pile of ice and the roof to where the air is to pass through freely.

An electric power is becoming more common in country districts there is greatly increasing interest in the use of artificial ice and electric refrigerating units, which are a great deal more convenient, and in the long run probably as economical as natural stored ice.

Certified Potato Seed

Is First Large Factor

Gottlieb Pfeifer, living northeast of Lafayette in Tippecanoe county, Ind., grew 85 bushels of real potatoes from 3 bushels of certified early Ohio and demonstrated to his own satisfaction that good seed stock pays.

Pfeifer secured 3 bushels of certified potato seed from the Tippecanoe county farm bureau last spring. The Ohio cost $1.31 a bushel. These he planted on a rich barn lot and gave them good care throughout the growing season. At digging time he harvested 85 bushels or the largest and best crop he had ever grown. Certified potato seed is the first big factor in bringing the farm potato patch back, Purdue potato specialists say.—Purdue Experiment Station.

Plan to Kill Quack Grass

If you want to try killing quack grass this year, here is one method that is recommended. Plow just deep enough to cut under the soil and turn the mat of roots to the surface. This will expose the underground stems to freezing and thawing and drying out, which will reduce their vitality. If it does not destroy them entirely, then in the spring plow the field deep enough to bury the mass of roots at the bottom of the furrow.

FARM NOTES

- Is the tractor radiator drained?
- Publicity never made a cow give more milk.
- Be sure that the poultry breeding house is clean and sanitary.
- Cover crops are safe fertility and provide humus, so why not grow them?
- Save and apply to fields, especially on thin spots, as much stable manure as is possible.
- Finding four-leaf clovers may be lucky, but planting the three-leaf kind is more profitable.
- The registered live stock business is as sound and practical as the growing of a crop from improved seed.
- Waste leaves from vegetables should be thrown into the chicken yard, if the chickens are kept in the pen all the time. Greens of most any kind are enjoyed by the poultry and it is claimed add to the egg production. Much can be grown in the home yard.

HE WILL tell you that the first results of constipation—headache, sleepless nights, biliousness, backache, etc.—warn that the body is flooded with intestinal poisons. In time these poisons may cause the breakdown of health and lead to serious disease.

Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition and often lead to permanent injury.

Why Physicians Favour Lubrication

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Thus, Nujol brings internal cleanliness.

(Supt. M. I. Hunt)

With the coming of more congenial weather for outdoor athletics, the interest of the girls in basket ball has been revived and two teams are now strenuously active in competition for selection of a team of "sure winners."

We understand a ladies team of adults is planning an organization. All members of the agriculture class have selected their individual projects and are getting them well in hand.

Three members have poultry projects, Nell Pfingsten, Edward Penfield and Herbert Traylor, two have garden projects, Juan Zamora and Eugene Dow, and one, Fritz Pfingsten has a dairy project. Fritz was fortunate enough last Monday night to listen in, on their home radio to a lecture given in Manhattan, Kansas, by the State Agricultural College on the Business Side of Dairying. He took copious notes, and will try out suggestions offered.

Why not bring our own State College in touch with our high schools; equip every high school with a receiving outfit and have a course of lectures open in every high school community, to students and public, for one night each week as an experiment?

Lincoln Day—February 12 will be observed by appropriate exercises in both school buildings. Among other parts of the program the prize essay on "The Life of Lincoln" will be read and the prize awarded. Following the exercises a basket ball game will be played between the high school and the town team.

Many local people have been ill of late with ailments of the "flu" nature and a few cases of pneumonia have been reported. Little Lela Joyce has recovered and others who were like afflicted are doing nicely. Our physicians have been responding to frequent calls from out-of-town patients which shows that the epidemic has been general over the county.

Capitan School Notes

(Superintendent F. S. Copeland)

The sincere sympathy of the faculty and student body is extended to the Dean family in the recent loss of their son and brother, James Dean, who was laid to rest at Capitan last Friday evening. James was a promising youngster, well liked by all, and his untimely taking off is mourned by the entire community.

The recent issue of the New Mexico Educational Directory lists only eleven Vocational Home Economics high schools in the State, Capitan being one of them and the sole school of its kind in this county.

Mr. Cummins has begun an excellent practice in the eighth grade of requiring the children to occasionally give talks before the entire school, entirely from memory, on some subject not too difficult and still of interest to all.

The course in personal hygiene that has been running in first year Home Economics would prove of everlasting benefit to every girl taking it.

It is hoped that as many as can will attend the great drama of patriotism that will be shown in our neighboring city next week. The criticisms of the press and theatrical editors are highly commendatory of "America" as a really great educational feature.

"We need education that fits the boy to earn a living, creates a desire for further education, for more consideration of the rights of others and implants ideals of service; and lastly—education in a rational manner. Then we can get along with fewer laws and fewer penal institutions."

The following from the last issue of the Literary Digest should prove of interest to those who have the welfare of the young at heart. "Regular attendance upon Sunday School during the period of character formation would cause the criminal courts and jails to close, for there would be no 'raw material' to work upon." This comes from a Judge Fawcett of Brooklyn, who in his eighteen years of judiciary experience has had more than four thousand boys arraigned before him for varying degrees of crime. Of this large number, only three were members of a Sunday School at the time the crime was committed. This affords us, at least, some of the proverbial "food for thought."
