ALONG LIFE'S TRAIL

By THOMAS A. CLARK

THE ROLLING STONE

WHEN Erwin was twenty-four he married and his father settled him on a little farm...

The boy had a good mind and a strong healthy body; he was somewhat better educated than the fellows of his acquaintance...

He decided to give up farming and bought a little store in the village near which he had lived...

This was not a bad venture. He had a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, he was a practical machinist and he soon began to prosper...

That was twenty years ago, when he was past fifty. He has tried a dozen ventures since then—always working hard, always hopeful, always changing at a loss with the expectation that the next move would put him on his feet...

It takes courage to stick to a task that is difficult and unaccomplish, no matter what it is; adjacent pastures often seem greener than our own.

Aviation Committee Will Give Big Dance

On the night of Saturday, April 18, the Air Committee of the Chamber of Commerce will give a rousing Spring Dance for the benefit of the fund for the purpose of erecting an airplane landing...

Music has enlivened the hearts in the Easter season this year as usual.

Wonder why they didn't let the 'Saint' continue his stay up at the State building? We'll bet a new hat that he was the only one up there!

Quite a few of the Nogal citizens and their families attended the Easter picnic on Bonito last Sunday, and report a sumptuous dinner, spread under the pines.

On Monday afternoon, the Fine Arts Club entertained in the Amusement Hall for the benefit of a large number of patients with an excellent program of music and refreshments.

Wonder why they didn't let the 'Saint' continue his stay up at the State building? We'll bet a new hat that he was the only one up there!

Wallace Ferguson, youngest son of Billy Ferguson, who has been almost blind the past few weeks, is reported much improved at this writing.

Quite a few of the Nogal citizens and their families attended the Easter picnic on Bonito last Sunday, and report a sumptuous dinner, spread under the pines.

Hal Young ran his car into O. C. Davis' fence the other day; no, swore he hadn't taken a drop for weeks, but that doesn't necessarily clear him; for we have seen it around here with a kick in it that lasts for weeks.

E. M. Tabor made a business trip to Roswell the latter part of the week, returning home Tuesday. Mr. Tabor reports that section of our fair State very dry, outside of the irrigated district.

Wonder what's become of Commissioner Richard Hust? we haven't seen him since he wrote that poetry the other week; maybe he is writing some more. We sure hope so.

We would like to do a little spring white washing on some of our politicians; but seems like Texas has just about exhausted the surplus lime supply trying to white wash Jim Ferguson, and we don't think they done a very good job of that.

No, hasn't rained yet, still pretty dry. About the only kind of seed to plant right now and expect much harvest, is seeds of kindness.

O. C. Davis is up and 'servin' 'em over the counter again, Davis Glad to see you out again, Davis

Had you noticed the wind has not blown but very little this spring. Now if we can just cut out a few more of our sinful habits and 'bear down' on that bed-time prayer it might rain.

Several years past, while two of our worthy ranchers (no names mentioned) were traveling thru

Texas, they saw a cyclone, coming their way. While one pushed himself with staking the wagon on cover down, the other fell on his knees and began praying a prayer that would do credit to one of the disciples.

We notice this headline in a Texas paper: "Texas crop hit by Moisture Lack." Now, that's what we call camouflaging a condition that here in New Mexico is called 'blamed dry weather.'

Branching Out

The City Garage received a shipment of five Chevrolet cars of the latest model on Wednesday. Mr. Riel has purchased the Garage formerly operated by the Taylor Brothers and Bryce Duggar, who returned last week from Los Angeles.

Railroad News of the S.P.

The S. P. has equipped a number of their passenger engines with sprinklers which will be used where portions of the track is dusty. This will make traveling more pleasant, as in the past, much discomfort has been experienced from dust, so much that at certain times, windows would have to be closed at certain points, where with the sprinklers, this discomfort will be eliminated.

Owing to the continued dry weather several lookout men have already been placed on duty and unless moisture fell it will be necessary for several more to take up their duties in the near future.

The week of Apr. 27-May 3 has been designated as "American Forest Week" by the President. This week formerly has been designated as 'Forest Protection Week' with the main idea to secure the prevention of forest fires and forest devastation from other sources, but it is now planned to put before the forestry in a broader scope with the idea of securing along with the above, interest in re-forestation, stream control, irrigation, general agriculture, prevention of erosion, recreation and climatic effects, all of which are directly tied with forestry.

TALES OF THE OLD FRONTIER

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE TRUTH ABOUT THAT COON INTERVIEW

ONE of the favorite stories of the frontier, when the subject of great feats of marksmanship was under discussion, was the yarn about Davy Crockett and the coon. When the coon saw the hunter approaching it is said to have exclaimed "Is that you, Crockett? Then don't shoot—I'll come down!" As a matter of fact Crockett was not the hunter about whom this tale was originally told.

The celebrated interview with the coon is said to have taken place near Lake Bonaparte in the foothills of the Adirondacks and the yarn was started by some of the soldiers in the company of which Scott was captain. The story appeared first in a Utica newspaper in 1837, was reprinted in the New York Sun and soon gained wide currency. How Crockett's name came to be substituted for Scott's in it is unknown.

Although Captain Scott is doubtless a rightful place in the coon story, he is the hero of a great many other tales of wonderful marksmanship. Once a coon of this size was tracked up on a tree and in one minute and 30 seconds, taking drop shot and firing instantaneously, he had fired three shots at it with his rifle, an old-fashioned muzzle loader. A brother officer examined the target and announced one hit and two misses. Whereupon Scott dug into the tree and showed all three bullets in the one hole.

Captain Scott served in the Mexican war and, after winning promotion for gallant conduct at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma and Monterrey, was killed in the battle of Molino del Rey, September 8, 1847.

Mrs. Strauss, wife of fireman Geo. Strauss, daughter, Helen, and son, Geo. Jr., left Thursday for Albion, Cal., where they will visit Mrs. Strauss' mother and will also visit her brother at Tipton. They will spend the summer months along the coast.

Frank Maxwell shipped a big herd of breeding ewes to pastures and lambing quarters near Beaumont, Kansas, Wednesday night. Mr. Maxwell accompanied the shipment.

Last Friday evening, the members of the Domestic Science Class of the High School, under the direction of Miss Noda May Igo, entertained the members of the Board of Directors and faculties of the Grade and High School at a six o'clock dinner in the High School building.

A delightful six-course dinner was served by the girls and a better cooked, more nicely served banquet could not have been spread. Miss Igo, as hostess and toastmistress, called on the various members for talks and musical numbers to which they readily responded.

VON HINDENBURG IS NOMINATED

FIELD MARSHAL VON HINDENBURG NAMED FOR PRESIDENCY BY CONVENTION

TO RUN AGAINST MARX

BITTER BATTLE PREDICTED AS MOVE OPENS WOUNDS OF WORLD WAR

Berlin.—Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg and von Hinderburg, whose fame during the World-war was emblazoned over the battle front that reached from Riga to Bagdad and from the Alps to the Belgian coast, was nominated for the German presidency by the national conservative Bourgeois bloc in place of Karl Jures, who was the candidate of the United Right parties in the preliminary election on March 29.

Field Marshal von Hindenburg accepted the nomination and will oppose ex-Chancellor William Marx, candidate of the Weimar coalition, and Ernst Thaelman, the Communist nominee, in the first decisive popular balloting for a German president on April 20, when the highest individual poll will determine the victor.

That Von Hindenburg is possessed of a strong popular appeal is freely conceded even in liberal quarters. To many he continues to be the national idol of Germany. He was popular with the soldiers at the front and his post-war attitude toward the various regimes which succeeded the monarchy has been one of rigid objectivity and impartiality. His aloofness from party bickerings and his steadfast refusal to be drawn into politics are cited as qualities which fit him for the post of president.

Despite these personal virtues, this venerable army leader doubtless will shortly find himself enveloped in the smoke of political battle, the social, political, and economic ramifications of which cannot yet be foreseen. While the active campaign for the presidency will last only two weeks, it will be marked by passion which the man who captained the field marshal into running probably failed to contemplate.

Thus far only the editorial comment of the organs of the Weimar coalition is available. Vorwärts says: "The nomination of Von Hindenburg represents a foreign political catastrophe, for which the reich government is responsible."

"Von Hindenburg to the whole world typifies the old imperial beligerency. His nomination reopens all the wounds of the world war—externally and internally. Foreign countries will consider every vote cast for Von Hindenburg as an unequivocal confession of a monarchy and a war of revenge."

The Vostscho Zeitung says: "The battle between the German people's party and the Nationalists concluded with a Stresemann defeat. The press of the Right in the last few days has repeatedly emphasized the injustice of imposing on the almost 50-year-old Hindenburg the heavy burden of conducting for which he, on an utterly unpolitical person, is unequal."

Burglar Chloroforms Sheriff Sidney, Neb.—Scorning the majesty of the law, Nebraska's most daring burglar forced his way into the home of Sheriff J. W. McDaniel here, chloroformed the sheriff, his wife and his watchdog, and then escaped with $140 extracted from the sheriff's pants pockets.

Liquor Syndicate Raided Chicago.—Evidence of a liquor and vice syndicate which the police said has been doing a business of probably $10,000,000 a year was found here in a raid on its headquarters at 2140 South Michigan avenue, where eight men, alleged to be minor heads of the organization, were arrested. Records of wealthy liquor customers, names of bribed prohibition enforcement officers, accounts of beer deliveries and details of the channels whereby liquor was brought from rum fleets off New York, Miami, Fla., and New Orleans were confiscated.

Jurists to Consider Territorial Sea Washington.—Decision of the Geneva commission of international jurists to take up the question of territorial waters as one of four projects of international law codification to be considered at its present session attaches new importance to the similar plan worked out by the American international law institute for the coming American law codification conference in Rio de Janeiro.

Chicago Will Not Buy Tram Lines Chicago.—Tabulation of votes showed the proposal for municipal acquisition of the street railways, elevated lines and the building of a subway to be defeated by the election by more than 100,000 votes. The plan sponsored by Mayor William E. Dever and said to be the largest municipal ownership project ever attempted, would have involved an expenditure of $200,000,000 with a forty-year period provided for payment for the property out of savings of the line.

SICK WOMEN ATTENTION!

Read this Remarkable Testimony Regarding Results from Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Norfolk, Virginia.—"If you only know how many women and girls have taken your medicine by hearing my testimony, it would seem wonderful to you. Every day and every chance I have I advise some one to try it. It was in June, 1904, when I had great trouble to get well, that I wrote to you. My husband went to the drug store and brought the Vegetable Compound home to me. In a few days I began to improve and I have often taken it since. I am now passing through the Change of Life and still stick by it and am enjoying wonderful health. When I first started with your medicine I was a mere shadow. My health seemed to be gone. The last doctor I had said he would give me no more local treatments unless I went to the Hospital and was operated on. That was when I gave the doctors up. Now I am a healthy robust woman. I wish I could tell the world what a wonderful medicine Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is. I will be only too glad to answer letters from anywhere. I wish all sick women would take it."—Mrs. J. A. Jones, 317 College Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia.

Queer Thing Father William E. Cashin, who has resigned his chaplaincy of Sing Sing prison after 12 years' service, takes a deep interest in prisons and reformatories. Talking about a reformatory of rather antiquated pattern, Father Cashin said the other day: "A queer thing happened to a man in that reformatory in 1902?" "Yes? What happened?" said the reporter. "He reformed," said Father Cashin.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN

With only the birds for witness, the sound of the surf for choir, the radiance of the eastern sky for altar, simply and from their hearts' depths these two pledged their troth. The few chief sentences from the marriage service were chosen by Barbara for their only rites.

There would be many, away in the world, to scoff, many to condemn. But so outward consecration of ground, no army of ordained priests, could have rendered more sacred that moment when the hush was broken by their low-voiced avowals. Perchance the "Destiny that shapes our ends," seeing all things, reading all hearts, who had sung these two together upon this far garden of His own creation, and given them there the one supreme gift which is part of Himself, would understand and accept their vows:

"To love and to cherish till death us do part. And thereto I plight thee my troth."

Their voices did not falter. The small tin ring encircled the girl's finger; they stood silent a while, with locked hands. Then he drew her toward him, and very gently their lips met.

"My wife!" he breathed.

Barbara bathed, dressed, and got breakfast, with no thought of fatigue after a sleepless night. Her heart seemed almost unbearably full. As she watched the smoke curl up from her own fire, and that rising from Meama's hut, she resembled the primitive woman glorying in this life shorn of all false trappings. Was not Meama likewise cooking food for her man? In the south, too, the native women were so employed. Man and his mate—in palace or hovel, in mansion or hut! All the artificiality hiding the big realities faded away with the worlds beyond the blue horizon.

It was the same with Alan. Like some fine, strong, wild thing, he dived, swam and splashed in the river; then returned for breakfast, ravenously hungry, singing as he swung down the bay.

"I have a great surprise!" Barbara announced. "Here is a tin of bully beef. I saved it for any emergency. Shall we have it for our wedding feast, as a special treat?"

He shouted with laughter. "Lord! To think of 'bully' becoming a special treat for a wedding feast! Bring it along, O wise and thrifty woman."

They ate their "wedding feast" in a mossy shady dell; and even the memory of Aunt Dolly, who unconsciously had provided it, faded to cast more than a momentary shadow across their joy.

Alan lay along the bottom of the boat, his head pillowed in Barbara's lap, as the sun began to sink.

"Well," he asked, "Have you found a desert island honeymoon very irksome? What about the big cities where you expected to 'feel life'?"

She laughed low, passing caressing fingers through his hair. "I have no other heart's desire. You are 'life' itself to me now, Alan. That's why—"

"You came to me last night!" he suggested softly, as she stopped.

She nodded. "The boat drifted idly, caressed by the soft breeze, rocking gently with the tide."

"Thank God you did," he murmured, after a pause. "Everything was becoming unbearable."

She trailed her fingers in the water, lost in thought.

"It was strange," she observed presently, "that the day on which I first began to feel—what you had become to me—should have been my wedding day!"

"Those first months here nearly drove me mad—until I was sure the sea was clean," he replied. "Then I meant to win!"

"Oh, Alan!" With sudden passion she drew his head back against her breast. "If I lost you—my husband—I should die."

He turned in her arms, and pressed his lips to her soft neck.

"Barbara! I mean—all that—do you, at last?"

ears he had fashioned, and paddled back to land.

Silence fell upon them as they neared the shore. It was the hour when exterior things diminished to nothingness, and the Big Things were too vast for conversation. He beached the boat, then slipped his arm around the girl and drew her toward the hut.

"Our wedding night, Barbara," he whispered.

Her feet lingered a little, and she paused now and then to admire beauties of scent or sound; the rising moon showed her face tremulous. Outside the dark hut, she drew herself free, turning toward the sea as though loath to leave it. It seemed as though she were silently bidding farewell to some part of her life; and the man behind her stood motionless, his eyes on her averted head, silently waiting, making no attempt to touch her.

At last, slowly, she turned and held out her hands. He took them close in his.

"Come, my dearest," he said.

V

Six months, when you live in an earthly paradise, are but a flash of vivid light in a sky which is always blue. These two had crossed their looming mountains and arrived at the valley upon the other side; and they found it fair and shining, full of the songs of birds.

The days sped by, each seeming to exceed in beauty its predecessor. There was no need now to fill each moment with arduous, thankless toil. All walls and divisions were down. When Alan, with a few slashing cuts, severed the bamboo partition in their sleeping hut, it had been symbolic.

"There!" he exclaimed, his foot upon the canes striding the floor. "No more two. Everything's one."

"One!" she breathed, renouncing, with the outward surrender of her only privacy, all the private strongholds of her nature. But the look she gave him was no longer elusive. It was steadfast, shining, exultant.

In the wilderness Barbara had found the "hidden want"; the love which, with all its many far-reaching subkeys, can alone tune the extraordinary cosmology, called life into any semblance of a harmonious whole.

Sometimes they played ridiculous games upon the sand, gambling with the money lying useless in their luggage.

They hunted, fished, worked, bathed together. And, during these months, each learned much, which was accumulated and stored, within their hearts.

Their clothes were in rags, but they made fun of the matter. Alan clung to his old razor, and Barbara to her scissors.

"After all," she said, "we can cover ourselves in reed matting. Provided you don't grow a beard, I can face anything."

Six months of perfect happiness! It was against all the rules of fate; but even fate seemed to have cast off these two for a time. For some reason the world was made passing beautiful, and human beings placed in it without any choice. But the attainment, much less the possession, of permanent bliss therein has not been decreed.

At the end of six months, the first ominous cloud appeared. Chimabohol the native chief, fell ill and died. Baboona became head of the tribe.

No care or pity for his fellows permeated the hide of brutality encasing Baboona. All the worst instincts of the savage, held in check by the old chief under Croft's influence, now rose to the surface. His own adherents, impatient of restraints, hailed him with joy. The division in the settlement became at once more evident: murmuring dissatisfaction upon one side, threats and tortures upon the other.

The white man's popularity had increased with the increase of health, cleanliness and industry among the natives. Now he took full advantage of it, and only his continuous intervention maintained order. The position, however, was fraught with danger. To continue to inspire a semi-superstitious fear after more than eighteen months was in itself a precarious task, only achieved by the weight of his own personality. Furthermore, he was confronted by Baboona's personal hatred. From Croft's he had learned of the chief's mania for women, and women were scarce in the tribe. White women no longer offended the black men's instincts.

At present vivid memories of a wounded shoulder, blue devils hissing from round Croft's hut, the supposition of a hidden white tribe ever at hand, restrained Baboona from distance of a safe tabu. But familiarity and the scraps of education imparted by the white people were gaining upon superstition. It was only a matter of time.

Barbara had quickly perceived that her man was seriously troubled concerning the tribe. Daily aware herself of the first faint clouds in the brightness of their sky, heralding a possible storm, she sought to hide them, to keep their happiness untroubled.

During the following months the cloud grew ever more menacing. These natives who, fundamentally brutal and idle, had not appreciated their own good life of industry, quality deteriorated under Baboona's leadership. His adherents increased in number, as did his cruelties. There being insufficient grown women, he seized young girls, almost children, made them the toys of his lusts, and afterward they disappeared—sometimes, under cloak of religious fanaticism, upon the sacrificial altar to Bahuhaka; sometimes to satiate his own appetite for human flesh.

Many times Croft was on the point of utilizing that last bullet. But with it his influence would have vanished. Natives regard their own chief with extraordinary superstition. To them he is permanently tabu. The next in rank was one of Baboona's followers. Only more danger would have resulted for Barbara and himself, and probably civil war in the settlement. These people were, insisting on making their own hell, and nobody could save them short of exterminating half their number.

After a time Alan refused to allow Barbara near the settlement. She said little. She passed long hours with Meama and her children, banishing the mental torture during his absence in the radiance of her welcome upon his return.

One night he returned, after a stormy day's battling in the south, with his own optimism gravely shaken. It was, he knew, but a question of days before the threatening mine should burst. The division had widened to an extent which only blood and explosion would, eventually, bridge; it needed but a match to the fuse, and that explosion would come.

Barbara did not meet him as usual. He wondered a little, making his way quickly down to their hut. Supper was ready, but she was not there. He looked into the sleeping hut, but that also was empty. Anxiously he turned his steps toward Baboona's abode. Meama sat outside, suckling a new addition to her family, crooning softly over the little dark form.

She waved an arm toward the east. "The great chief's wife went up to the heights long, long ago! Meama still watching for her," she said.

He strode off up the slope, and the native woman continued her crooning song.

Barbara was seated upon the rocks where, nearly a year before, the dawn had witnessed their simple marriage ceremony. Her elbows were propped on her knees, her chin was sunk in her hands.

Alan approached noiselessly, but she became instinctively aware of his presence. He noticed a strange expression in her eyes as she turned to greet him; a far-seeing wonder blended with a tenderness which seemed reflected in the smiling, tremulous lines of her mouth.

She silently stretched out her hands, and he took them in his, mystified.

"I wondered what had become of you—" he began.

"I felt I must come here. This always seems a kind of sacred temple, our own. . . . Oh, Alan!"

She gazed into his face half-smiling, yet with a suspicion of tears dimming the soft light in her eyes.

"What, dear?" he asked, more puzzled.

She made no reply; but the glory in her face seemed to deepen, radiating toward him. . . . Loozing his hands, her arms crept up to his shoulders, round his neck, drawing his head down to her own.

A sudden, vague realization of some stupendous happening caused him to draw her close. "What is it, Barbara?" he murmured. "What are you trying to tell me?"

She tilted her head back a little, and saw the dawning comprehension in his face. A faint smile flickered again across her own.

"Can't you guess—my husband?"

Instantly he was conscious of the same inimitable tenderness in her regard which he had just seen in the eyes of the woman suckling her child. The same mysterious essence of motherhood seemed to emanate from both. With a muttered cry, his lips sought hers; he caught her close, pressing her to his heart as if daring all the forces of nature, all the venom of savage humanity, to take her from him now.

Suddenly, impulsively, she looked up into his eyes.

"Shall you love—it?" she whispered.

A reflection of her own tenderness showed in the smile which answered her. The glory of the sinking sun illuminated his face.

"Shall I?" he breathed. "My dear—what a question!"

VI

Hand in hand they descended the hill, full of this fresh wonder. After supper they sat on the shore in the moonlight, talking in low tones of the future, making wonderful plans. . . .

Both possessed that curious sensitiveness to nature which compels one, in any crisis, to make for open spaces, limitless horizons of ocean. . . .

It was after midnight when at last they went to bed. The night breeze had died down, and a peculiar sense of aloneness pervaded the island; the water became calm to stillness.

Barbara was restless, and lay long awake. The strange stillness with its suggestion of false calm heralding approaching tempest, revived her premonitions of disaster. When at last she fell asleep, it was only to be tortured with the same premonitions manifested into nightmare realities. She awoke gasping and sobbing in Alan's arms, and clung to him feverishly. "I dreamed you had disappeared," she cried, in bewildered explanation. "How could that happen?" He soothed her. "How could my bulk disappear? Don't talk nonsense!"

They breakfasted later than usual, and had barely finished when the noise of many agitated voices reached their ears.

Glancing apprehensively at each other, they hurried out of the hut. The sky was leaden, hues of angry orange suffusing the horizon, the air oppressive. From the direction of the palm grove streamed a hurrying, chattering crowd of black figures—men, women and children.

Croft's brow contracted, and his lips set. The mine had evidently exploded even sooner than he expected.

Seeing him, a wailing cry arose from the advancing crowd. Weary and terrified, they stumbled forward to the palisade, where the women fell upon the ground, moaning, weeping, waving wild arms, sometimes adding their voices to the unintelligible babble of the men. To comprehend their meaning was at present impossible.

Presently their talk grew more coherent; he was able to make out its drift.

"We will serve thee, O Great White Chief! . . . Thou art merciful! Thou art wise beyond the wisdom of our men! . . . We will work for thee, O Chief! Thou carest not to torture and kill. . . . A-a-a! Thou hast done much for our tribe. Under thee it will become strong. If thou wilt be our chief. The fruits of the earth will grow, the fish leap up from the water! . . . We love thee, O Mighty Friend of the Gods! We will serve thee! . . . Thus, and much more with a similar burden, did they babble in their eagerness. Commanding silence, he bade one of them explain the cause of this visitation.

Baboona, it transpired, soon after Croft's departure the previous evening, had worked himself into a passion. Expressing contempt for the white man and his gods, he raised the tabu. Encouraged by his own adherents, he then declared war upon the white chief with instant death to all who thwarted his designs. This set the fuse alight. An outburst of murmuring disloyalty to Baboona warred with the usual superstitious fear of him as their god-ordained chief; while their genuine affection for Croft flared up to white heat. To prove his words, maddened by opposition, Baboona seized and strangled one of the men who dared openly to rebel.

This was too much for the peaceful faction. Secretly and swiftly, they conspired together, under cover of night. While the rest of the tribe slept, they stole out—some eighty-odd, including women and children—and sped through the woods to the north.

This drastic move meant a tremendous decision, bound around as they were with age-old superstitions. It was a forlorn, terror-stricken little band which Croft presently addressed. He spoke kindly, trying to allay their fear, feeling a certain relief that the anticipated trouble had occurred so soon. Most of the men, he noticed, were fully armed; therefore it should not be impossible to overthrow Baboona and, once for all, quell the savage element.

"Whether I can be your chief or not is in the hands of my gods," he concluded with prudent piety; "but rest assured of my protection. Your women and children are tired from the long walk through the forest. Let them come inside our garden for safety and food."

He opened the entrance in the palisade. Awestruck into silence, they filed through; their minds full of the "little blue devils," experienced here by their menfolk. Might these not spring up and burn them even now at the great white chief's command? They squatted in one close group, hungry and grateful for all they received, following Barbara's movements with adoring, wondering eyes, as she distributed food. Their faith in Croft equalled their faith in their god, Bahuhaka; once within the palisade, their fears of Baboona's men. Then men, looking outside, kept a sharp watch for any daylight attack. Croft was sent to his store of native weapons.

Presently the excited visitors in the garden, tired and satisfied, fell asleep.

Mining—Great Cash Distributor

No industry pays a greater proportion of its receipts for labor and food, right at the place of its inception, than does mining.

The farm community that can help develop any mining industry close at hand, is putting money in its own pocket.

During the past 30 years, the Coeur d'Alene silver lead mines of Idaho have distributed approximately $112,000,000; and recent rich strikes indicate that the development is only fairly begun.

Will not the general public derive more benefit from allowing our great mining and oil companies to operate profitably, so they will have the needed capital for developing now oil and mineral lands, than it will by levying exorbitant taxes or passing radical laws against these industries.

"BLUE" vs. "BLACK"

U.S. Battle Fleet and Land Forces Wage Mimic War for Possession of Naval Base in Hawaiian Islands

By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN
NILE HAWAII'S Hawaiian Islands, at the cross roads of the Pacific ocean, are a sort of earthly paradise—Honolulu means "Abundant Calm and Peace."

Soon this calm and peace are to be shattered by a great battle fleet's sweep upon the islands. The guns of its battleships will belch broadside. Land cannon will roar their defiance in reply. The sea will be torn by cruiser, submarine and destroyer. The sky will be filled with warring aircraft.

War? Yes; but mimic war only and waged between the "Blue" and "Black" of our own army and navy—the much discussed Hawaiian maneuvers tentatively ordered three years ago and now formally authorized by President Coolidge. The American people are united in the hope that the nation will never have to take part in another war—so hope also the veteran land and sea fighters—but it is the business of the army and navy to be prepared. The island of Oahu is the American naval base in the Pacific and as such presents military problems to be solved only through the experience gained in this "war game."

And after the cruel war is over the battle fleet will transform itself into a peace fleet and steam lazily off into the South seas for a social call on New Zealand and Australia to present assurances of Uncle Sam's most distinguished consideration in July and August. Auckland, Wellington, Sydney and Melbourne will extend a warm welcome to Old Glory. In September Hawaii will greet the returning fleet. October will see its arrival at San Pedro.

Can Oahu defend itself against an attacking enemy fleet? To answer this question is the main purpose of these Hawaiian maneuvers. With our fleet in the Pacific, Oahu is believed to be practically impregnable. But suppose an emergency forces us to keep our fleet in the Atlantic?

The military value of Oahu is thus summarized by Maj. Gen. P. Sumner in "Strategic Importance of the Hawaiian Islands," an article in the Coast Artillery Journal of July, 1924:

Our strategy in the Pacific is centered in the Hawaiian Islands. Since the abandonment of all defensive measures for the Philippines and Guam by the Washington conference, Hawaii has become the sole point of support in the Pacific for operations involving the more distant islands as well as for the defense of the continental coast line. The possession of the Hawaiian Islands denies to an enemy the use of Hawaii as a base for operating against the American coast and thus forces him to advance from a distance which, even under modern conditions, would be hazardous, if not prohibitive.

The Hawaiian maneuvers are officially known as problem number three of the army and navy grand joint exercises. Problems one and two in 1923 and 1924 had to do with the defense of the Panama canal. The War and Navy departments are not making official statements which give every detail. But here are the main arrangements as obtained from a responsible military source:

For the purpose of the third joint exercises it is assumed that the Hawaiian Islands belong to another power (Black); that the United States (Blue) attacks for the purpose of capture; that the islands are defended as at present, and that the attack is made by naval forces composed essentially of the United States fleet.

The purpose is: (1) To train army and navy in joint operations, history teaching that most joint army and navy operations failed because of lack of co-operation and of teamwork, the latter being the result of lack of training; (2) to test the defensive arrangements of a locality; (3) to try out methods of attack against a defended locality.

Fourteen admirals and 400 other naval officers, sitting in a critique at San Diego, have selected the analysis of preliminary maneuvers of the Mexican coast between attacking and defending fleets of about 30 vessels each. The findings are not for publication.

April 15 will see the sailing of the United States fleet from San Francisco on the first leg of the Pacific cruise. Wireless will order the capture of Oahu and notify Oahu of the impending attack. Thereupon the attacking naval force becomes "Blue" and the defending army and navy force "Black." The third grand joint exercises are thenceforth in the hands of the umpire. The actual "hostilities" are scheduled for April 25-May 1.

The chief of staff of the army, Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, and the commander in chief of the United States fleet, Admiral H. E. Coontz, jointly occupy the post of chief umpire. Presumably they will be together on the cruiser Seattle, the admiral's flagship. There is also a senior umpire (Blue) and a senior umpire (Black).

Ships notified by the umpire that they have been put out of action by coast defenses will hoist a special "Sun" flag and proceed to an "Out of Action" station. Coast defenses will be silenced when they are outranged or their defenders outnumbered and adjudged overcome. Airplanes will be similarly eliminated from the contending forces.

The attacking fleet (Blue) is composed of eleven battleships, six light cruisers and fifty-six destroyers and aircraft carriers, aircraft tenders, submarines, minelayers and vessels of the train—an approximate total of 100 vessels of all kinds.

Admiral S. S. Robinson commands the battle fleet; his flagship is the California. Vice Admiral H. A. Wiley on the West Virginia is commander of battleship divisions. The other battleships include: (Division 3) Pennsylvania, flagship of Rear Admiral H. J. Ziegemeier; Nevada, Capt. D. W. Todd, and Oklahoma; (4) New Mexico, flagship of Rear Admiral W. F. Pratt, and Mississippi; (5) Tennessee, Capt. F. B. Upham, Maryland and Colorado. There are 16-inch guns on the Maryland, West Virginia and Colorado.

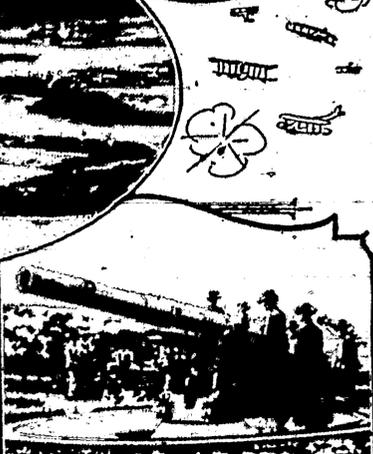

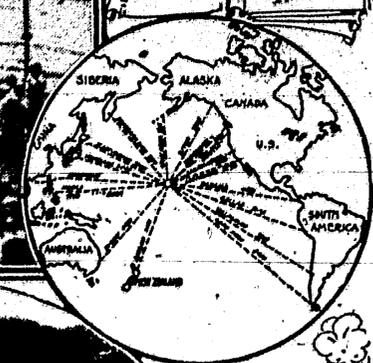

Vice Admiral J. S. McKean commands the scouting fleet; he flies his flag on the battleship Wyoming. The cruisers of the scouting fleet include: Richmond, Trenton, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Detroit, Raleigh and Memphis.

The battleships of the Blue fleet each carry from 70 to 80 "Leathrockets" of the United States Marine corps. This force of approximately 800 marines is as 1 to 7 compared with full war strength. It is to be noted that the Blue fleet carries no army forces.

Now as to the Hawaiian Islands and the defending forces: The islands lie in a 300-mile northwest-southeast curve, the five largest in this order: Kauai, Oahu, Molokai, Maui and Hawaii. They are 2,650 miles southwest of San Francisco and 3,440 miles southeast of Yokohama. It is 2,000 miles from them to Sitka and 3,720 to Vladivostok; 4,660 to the Panama canal and 4,760 to the Philippines. Sidney, Australia, is 4,420 miles distant and Auckland, New Zealand, 3,550 miles. The total population is about 500,000, made up of more than twelve racial groups. The fact that a person born in Hawaii has all the rights of American citizenship both simplifies and complicates whatever amalgamating process may be going on. The citizens number about 100,000. The alien number about 110,000, of whom 68,000 are Japanese. The 40,000 Filipinos are included, although they owe allegiance to the United States. It is believed that the alien population of the islands is of no value whatever to the defense except as labor and that much of it is positively detrimental.

Oahu is second largest, contains 508 square miles and has a population of 142,000. It alone possesses the qualifications for a naval base and is the one island defended by land, sea and air forces. Kauai is 70 miles away and Molokai 90. Oahu, in shape, strongly suggests a butcher's cleaver, with a head 20 miles square and a handle 10 miles square. The cutting edge of the head is to the west. A practically impassable mountain range forms the entire east coast. The whole island is rough country. Honolulu, the seat of government of the territory, with 37,000 people, is on the west side of the handle. Around the right angle between handle and head is Pearl Harbor, with its long narrow entrance and its spacious landlocked harbor. Here dredging and fortifying have been done with this view to making it the safest and deepest harbor in the Pacific.

Hawaii is a military department. Maj. Gen. Edward M. Lewis is its commander. Its defending troops number about 35,000. Honolulu is the department headquarters. There are six military posts. Schofield barracks, the largest, is at the approximate center of the island. Fort Shafter, Fort Armstrong and Fort de Russy are close to Honolulu. Fort Ruger is behind Diamond Head, the famous rocky headland about five miles to the south of Honolulu and just beyond Waikiki beach. Fort Kamehameha is the coast defense of Pearl Harbor. A railroad runs from Honolulu around the west coast to the northeast corner of the island, with a branch to Schofield barracks.

At Schofield barracks is the Hawaiian division, Maj. Gen. William R. Smith commanding; Ninth Infantry, Twenty-first Infantry, Twenty-seventh Infantry and Thirty-fifth Infantry; Eighth field artillery and Thirteenth field artillery (75 m. m., motorized) and Eleventh field artillery (105 m. m., motorized), and Eleventh field artillery (105 m. m., motorized). Also stationed here are Company C, First gas regiment, and ordnance and chemical warfare detachments.

At Fort Shafter are the Fourth observation squadron, air service; Fifty-fourth coast artillery (Heavy Tractor) and Sixty-fourth coast artillery (anti-aircraft). Fort Armstrong has a mine-control station. The other forts are stations of the coast artillery.

There are 14-inch guns on Oahu. There are no records available to civilians showing that there are 16-inch guns there.

Rear Admiral John D. McDonald is commandant of the Fourteenth naval district (Black). His forces include twenty submarines, two mine layers, two mine sweepers and miscellaneous craft. He is to be reinforced by submarine divisions Nine and Fourteen. There are two National Guard infantry regiments.

Now as to the respective air forces of the Blue and Black:

The aircraft forces of the battle fleet (Blue) are in command of Capt. S. E. Mosca. They consist of four squadrons: one of scout planes, two of fighting planes and one of observation planes. Capt. H. G. Yarnell commands the three squadrons of the scouting fleet (Blue); one each of scout planes, of torpedo and bombing planes and of observation planes. These seven squadrons of the Blue fleet theoretically contain from 84 to 120 airplanes.

Civilian information as to Black air forces of Oahu is incomplete and estimates are guesswork. According to the "Army List and Directory" the air troops of the Hawaii military department include the Fourth observation squadron at Fort Shafter (previously mentioned) and at Luke field near Honolulu; Fifth observation squadron; Sixth and Nineteenth pursuit squadrons; Twenty-third and Seventy-second bombardment squadrons; Sixty-sixth service squadron; Eleventh photo section and Forty-first intelligence section. Theoretically the six first-named squadrons should contain between 72 and 108 airplanes of various types.

According to press accounts of "Confidential Information" given recently to the house aircraft committee "behind closed doors" by General Hines the figures on the ratio of planes specified for initial war strength for Hawaii and the number in service are: specified observation planes 13, in service, none; bombing 23, in service, 9; pursuit 50, in service, none.

It is stated on the authority of a responsible military source that the defenses of Pearl harbor include about twenty naval planes under Commander John Rodgers.

Are these third grand exercises, under these conditions, a fair test of the defense capacity of our Pacific naval base? Do they approximate a war test? The authorized answer to these questions is this:

"The exercises are considered a fair test under conditions approximating those of war as closely as is possible. It is regrettable that army forces, due to lack of funds, could not be used in co-operation with the fleet attack. In that respect and in that respect only the conditions are likely to fall short of a real war test."

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

THE THINKING CAP

Little Mahalia had been having a holiday. She had been doing nothing but play.

She hadn't studied, nor had she thought, nor had she worked. She had been having a beautiful time. The holiday had begun on a Friday and had kept up all through the next week—until the Monday following so that she had had really ten days of pleasure.

She looked at the lessons.

But now she had to go back to school and think about lessons and studying once more and when she began she couldn't seem to think.

She had had a far longer time playing in the summer and though it had been a little hard when she had begun school again in the autumn she had never known it to be as hard as it was now.

Even after the Christmas holidays it had never been so hard. For some reason, or other, it just seemed impossible to think.

She just couldn't get started on her lessons. How dreadful it was.

She sat bending over her books wondering, wondering, wondering. Her mind went over the games she had played, the new friends she had made—a whole new family had come to live at a farm half a mile down the road.

She thought of them and how many of them there were and what grades they were in and how many animals they had.

It was so easy to think of everything but the lessons.

She looked at the lessons that must be done. She wished she had done them at once—that Friday night instead of waiting until the very end to do them. It wouldn't have been so hard then.

But at that time she had thought it would be so easy to wait until the end of the holiday time. She had wanted to begin playing at once.

As she was thinking of what she had been doing—and wishing she could get her mind on studying she heard a rap, rap, rap under the table where her books were.

"What's that?" asked Mahalia.

"It is I," said a voice. "Don't ask 'What's that?' Ask 'Who are you?'"

"All right, I ask it," said little Mahalia.

There came climbing up the table leg a little creature about the size of a very enormous pencil. Upon his head was a long, long cap.

At first Mahalia thought perhaps it was a dunce cap but there was something about it quite different from a dunce cap. It looked like a superior cap somehow.

Then Mahalia noticed that the cap was covered with little pockets and out of the pockets stuck little packages upon which were written:

"School Thoughts, Special Arithmetic Thoughts, Special Composition Thoughts, Special Grammar Thoughts, Special Spelling Thoughts, Special History Thoughts," and some others which she couldn't see.

"I'm the Thinking Cap Gentleman," said the little creature. "I go around and supply thoughts to people who're running low on them."

"When people have got out of the habit of thinking I give them a fresh supply of thoughts to start in with once more."

"Very often I'm around when no one sees me but that is when they don't need me as badly as you do."

"Sometimes people will say:

"Dear me, I'd better put my thinking cap on." That means they haven't been cogitating, or thinking hard on one subject, but have let their minds wander.

"Well, just having me wave my cap over them is enough. They don't see me but their minds are made up to think, and one wave of my cap starts them off."

"But you are really dreadful. You need a visit from me just to start you a-thinking again."

"See, I've brought packages of thoughts for you. Each package is filled with thoughts. Sprinkle them over you—they are quite dry enough not to get you wet but they're not so dry as to be dull and dusty. Then you'll have the right thoughts for the right subject and you'll think of one subject at a time instead of a dozen."

"See, I wave the Arithmetic Thoughts over you now."

He disappeared but as Mahalia opened her arithmetic book and made up her mind to use the Thinking Cap Gentleman's Arithmetic Thoughts she found it was easy once more to study.

JUMPER FROCK FOR WOMEN AND GIRLS

Popular Garment May Be Constructed of Any Kind of Material.

What is a jumper frock? There is no confusion in the minds of Paris designers over the term jumper frock. Chanel's introduced the jumper frock, consisting of a middie slipover or loose jacket of hip length or longer, buttoned up to the chin, long and tight-fitting sleeves worn with a skirt plaited all around or plaited only in front. The buttoned-jumper resembles the short loose jacket worn by workmen to protect their clothing. That's where the jumper frock got its name. That's what Paris means by "jumper frock."

But the term itself, observes a fashion writer in the Kansas City Star, has more than one interpretation. A jumper, by no less authority than the Webster Unabridged dictionary, now being paved over by cross-word puzzle fans, is also a decorative sleeveless jacket or short-sleeved, low-necked waist worn with a guimpe. Webster sanctions the word jumper for the one-piece garment of waist and trousers familiarly known in the wardrobe of childhood as rompers.

But nowhere in the strictest interpretation of the term does it mean a skirt with a suspenderlike attachment, yet from the confusion of the sleeveless jumper and the popular suspender dress has come about a babble of voices when referring to two of the most popular costumes of the season, the jumper frock and the suspender dress. The latter is a triumph in schoolgirls' attire for sheer jauntness. A style that belongs to youth alone, the skirt with broad suspender cut away to form a deep bosom front, is worn with a plain white blouse or one of bright printed crepe. These suspender dresses are shown in red, light beige, cheerful yellow and rich browns. It is the schoolgirl's own costume and any older person who attempts to wear it looks ridiculous and richly deserves it for daring to don an outfit that belongs to the 'teen age.

As for the jumper frock, it becomes any woman of any age who is slender enough to wear it. The lines become thirteen or thirty; it is made in almost every fabric—kasha, wool reps, jersey, ottoman, bengaline, crepes and even chiffon. Neither is there a color line drawn on the jumper frock; pink crepes are offered by Paris, sea greens as well as every tone of brown, beige, lovely blues and brilliant reds.

The jumper frock by any name would be popular. After all, woman-kind never has quibbled over the name of any particular frock. Get the frock to her problem. The simple, middie blouse above the more or less plaited skirt is the jumper frock of no, clarity in Paris, London and America.

In Effect of Old-Time Indian Hunting Shirt

The lining, cuffs and waist hem of this smart windbreaker of rose suede are knitted of wool in an Indian wampum pattern, to give the effect of an old-time hunting shirt.

Trend of Fashion With Bright Days of Spring

The interest in gloves continues to lie in details. The short-fare cuff takes the lead, with the fancy slip-on gaining all the time. The wrist-fitted, two-clasp glove with trimmed top has won increased representation. For sports and tailored wear, the one-button or one-clasp glove leads in point of fashion. In the novelty gloves, embroidery takes first place for decoration, with perforated effects losing a little of their early appeal. The turn-down cuff is considered by some to be better than the flare cuff.

Fashion this season lays on her colors with the greatest subtlety and in interpreting the mode for spring and summer calls into play all the varied tones and shadings that come under the heading of neutral and natural shades—brilliant tones that are distinctly Spanish in their appeal, and faint, delicate, pastel colors that call to mind the lovely Pompadour and DuBarry of the days of Louis XV.

Today the keynote of fashion is simplicity and harmony. From the crown of her soft little peaked hat of felt to the tips of one-strap shoes, guileless of any ornamentation, the smart woman of the present day is a charming exponent of the vogue for simplicity and for color-harmony.

Women have learned the value of accessories as contributing factors to smartness, and their shoes, their stockings and their gloves express their knowledge of the importance of harmony and their realization that subtle tones and a quiet distinction, indefinable but instantly recognized, make for chic in the highest degree.

The trend in daytime fashion is to

Raffia Is Favored for Smart Envelope Bags

Envelope lines still govern the bag situation. There is an envelope of antelope leather or red disco calf which, when opened, reveals two envelope compartments compactly and conveniently fitted. Two flaps are twice as smart as one. If of lizard grain calfskin, each flap containing new compartments and conveniences.

Raffia bags were carried last season at Deauville, and this season have been at Palm Beach. They come in red or green raffia, boasting a leather border and gray cretonne lining. Crotonne embroidered in silk makes a smart envelope.

Red hand-loomed silks from the Dutch East Indies fashion other envelope bags bound with gold leather and fitted with enamel accessories. The very large monogram is as smart as it is large—in a hexagonal center panel of a black silk envelope, lined with red silk in a de luxe and commodious manner.

The straw pouch in finest Minotta straw, combined with silk, is one of the newest bag notes.

Mexican in Design

For every designer who gives birth to a new idea there are fifty who secure a design by adoption. The latest fashion child of this nature was adopted from the slashed trousers of the Mexican hacendado. The costume consists of a two-piece sports frock with the skirt slashed from knee to hem with the flaps falling over accordion-plaited crepe de chine. These slashes may be buttoned up if desired, completely hiding the contrasting silk.

Pillow Made of Black Taffeta

The woman who seeks the unusual in her decorative scheme will choose a long, fairly narrow pillow made of black taffeta with triangular pieces of metal cloth at each end and in the center an applied design made of satin and taffeta with triangular pieces of metal cloth at each end and in the center an applied design made of satin and taffeta in different colors.

Kimono's With Quilting

In place of the usual embroideries, a lovely kimono of broad-cord crew which shades from white to deep rose has a border design formed by padding the material on the under side and attaching a design after the manner of old-time quilting. The effect is charming and rather different.

Improving Live Stock Breeding

Reports and Comments From Stockmen in Various Parts of Country.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An unusual amount of sound counsel on questions of live stock breeding is contained in recent reports received by the United States Department of Agriculture from stockmen throughout the country. The reports and comments were invited by a questionnaire on methods of improving farm live stock. The following terse statements seem suitable for consideration by farmers seeking to improve their herds and flocks:

Terse Statements.

"The choice of a herd sire will likely make or break you in the dairy game. If you pick a good one, the price you pay is of little consequence; if you pick a poor one, you will pay too much even if you get him for nothing."

"Pure bred are better sellers and make more meat for the amount of feed and length of time."

"When young, untested stock is sold, the breeder should keep in touch with the purchaser, so that if the stock does not turn out as it should through no fault of the purchaser, the breeder can make the deal right. It pays directly and indirectly, aside from the fact that it is the fair way to do."

"Fresh individuals first and pedigree second."

"None but high-producing cows are profitable and the use of pure bred sires is the shortest road."

High Utility Value.

The detailed report to which the foregoing comments were incidental shows briefly that pure bred live stock has high utility value from a production and market standpoint, and that it costs but little more to produce high-class animals than the ordinary kind. The investment and other factors which appear sometimes to increase production costs are offset by early maturity and other important savings due to improved breeding.

How to Get Most Value From a Good Male Bird

The male is more than half the poultry flock. An inferior hen will produce poor chicks from only her own eggs, but an inferior male will produce inferior chicks from all eggs laid by every hen in the pen, says D. J. Taylor, poultry specialist, Kansas State Agricultural college.

The selection of a male to head a flock of pullets requires a knowledge of what his ancestors did in egg production. He should be a good standard-bred male from a high-producing family. It is preferable to select a male whose mother, grandmother, great-grandmother and older ancestors have been tramped and have shown a high percentage of yearly egg production records of over 200 eggs. A male having consistently high records in all ancestors with high-producing sisters is better than a male with a much higher record mother, but records of sisters and others poorer, according to Taylor.

Look to the male bird to furnish a higher degree of excellence than the females. Any improvement is largely the result of his superior qualities. Only one male need be kept to each ten or fifteen hens.

Good Silage Keeps Well

When It Is Transferred

That good silage can be successfully transferred to another silo if necessary was proved at the Ohio experiment station as an outcome of a fire which burned a large live-stock barn and two wooden silos in connection with it, leaving the silage unprotected. The silage thus exposed was transferred to empty and partially filled silos, being blown into them through a silage cutter. Three men in the silo did a thorough job of tramping.

In filling one of the silos water was added at the rate of one pound to every thirteen pounds of silage; no water was added to the silage in the other. The silage from both silos, which has since been fed, was of excellent quality.

It appears from observing these tests that, if the original silage was put up in good condition, that is, not too mature or dry, it may be transferred without additional water to another silo when occasion demands.

Best Feed for Pullets

Pullets at Cornell University college of agriculture say best when fed three parts of hard grain to two parts of mash by weight. It is very necessary to feed green food in some form, such as sprouted oats, beets or cabbage. A small amount of milk is a valuable addition to the ration, and helps to keep the birds in good condition. The birds should never be starved, but on the other hand they should be hungry at feeding time.

The secret of long and continuous laying with a well-bred flock is to keep the birds always reasonably fat.

Geese Thrive on Grass

Geese will thrive on almost any kind of pasture grass that a cow will eat. An orchard in clover sod makes an ideal range. Any meadow composed of red clover and alsike mixed, will make a good pasture for geese. If you have low land pasture it is probably abundantly needed by nature with the grasses that thrive on such land and that will be good for geese.

Poultry and Swine Tuberculosis Cure

Infected Fowls and Animals Were Disposed of.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

With the widening knowledge concerning the nature of tuberculosis, live stock owners are rapidly putting methods of eradication into practical use. The close relationship between fowl and swine tuberculosis is illustrated by a recent occurrence in Michigan. The facts were obtained by the Michigan Agricultural college in cooperation with the United States Department of Agriculture.

A shipment of hogs from a certain farm proved to be badly infected with tuberculosis. An inspector who visited the farm applied the tuberculin test to the remaining hogs and found practically all of them tuberculous. He also found the chicken flock on the farm badly affected. Acting on the inspector's advice, the owner disposed of the entire flock of chickens, restocking with day-old chicks in the spring. Meanwhile he had also disposed of the tuberculous hogs and cleaned and disinfected the premises, especially the poultry buildings and yards.

After a period of time the owner sold 32 hogs which went to the same market as before. A report covering the postmortem examination of 27 of these animals showed that none was infected. With the source of infection gone the introduction of healthy stock naturally resulted in continued freedom from the disease.

New Pest of Bees Found in a Maryland County

A new pest of bees, Braula coeca Nitzsch, popularly called the bee-house, has been found present in considerable numbers in Carroll county, Maryland, and in a few other places in the United States. It is undoubtedly imported from Europe with queen bees, and while it is not, so far, to be regarded as a serious menace, beekeepers will do well to take steps to eradicate it from their colonies when discovered.

Braula is not a true parasite, according to the bureau of entomology, but it is capable of weakening a bee colony by taking its food and by tormenting the queen bee. It lives on the honey carried by the bees, not on their blood, as was at one time supposed. It is found singly on the workers, and in numbers on the queen bee, but seldom on drones.

United States Department of Agriculture Circular 334, "The Bee House, Braula coeca, in the United States," by E. F. Phillips, apiculturist, contains a description of the species, its distribution, feeding habits and methods of control. This circular may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington.

Rotation Will Cut Loss Due to Soil Erosion

Prof. M. F. Miller, head of the department of soils, college of agriculture of the University of Missouri, presented interesting figures on losses due to soil erosion in a talk made at the annual meeting of the Kansas Crop Improvement association at the Kansas State Agricultural college. Professor Miller and his associates in the Missouri agricultural experiment station have found that on an average Missouri soil having a slope of about 3 1/2 per cent, the entire surface soil to a depth of 7 inches would be lost in 50 years of continuous cultivation of corn, in about 150 years under continuous wheat culture, and in about 250 years in fields rotated to corn, wheat, and oats. Sod land, that is, land in permanent pasture or native sod, would require 3,400 years for the same loss to take place, according to the Missourians' estimates.

FARM NOTES

Greens in the garden are better than greenbacks in the pocket.

It costs more to do without good farm machinery than to buy it.

"Feed your soil and your soil will feed you," say the soil fertility men.

Weed seeds are costly to the farm in price paid for them and in loss of value to the crop-grown.

The good farmer lays his battle plans for the insect and disease war of the approaching summer.

An indoor pump might deprive one of some outdoor exercise, but where is the farmer who would miss that?

The bull in the China shop has nothing on the scrub bull in the good herd when it comes to destroying profits.

He saves 53 cents a ton who hauls his manure direct to the fields, the Ohio agricultural experiment station has found.

Better gardens and home butchering and canning may save more money for the farmer than raising food to sell cheap.

The best way to meet the dairy cow's mineral needs is to apply lime and phosphorus, in the form of ground limestone and acid phosphate, to the soil, and thereby grow more high mineral roughages, such as clover and alfalfa.

Claims Sure Cure for Scarlet Fever

A serum for scarlet fever has been found, which will cure the most hopeless cases in 24 hours, according to Dr. Francis G. Blake, professor of medicine at the Yale Medical school, the discoverer. The serum is prepared from immunized horses, and 72 cases have been treated at the New Haven hospital, an adjunct of the Yale Medical school. The cases were classified as 43 without complications, and the remainder complicated with measles, typhoid and other diseases. In the first classification, with treatment and single serum injections, before the third day the entire group was cured, he said. In most cases within 12 hours temperature subsided to normal, the rash disappeared and an excess of anti-toxin circulated in the blood. Only one death resulted in the remaining 20 cases, all complicated and treated on various days from the third to the ninth. A child, in coma, and having typhoid and scarlet fever simultaneously, treated on the eighth day, recovered.
