RETRIBUTION

EVERYONE liked Norton. He was courteous, well-mannered, and generous to a fault.

There's a discipline, Frank, his teachers used to say, "in submitting to authority, in obedience to rules, in doing the thing that is required, that you need and that some day you will miss if you evade these things."

When he went to college, as he ultimately did, he found that every student was required to take a year's training in the gymnasium and no one could get credit for this course unless he could demonstrate the fact that he could swim at least fifty yards, and no one could graduate without the credit.

He did not like gymnasium exercises and he did not want to put forth the effort to learn to swim, but his report card that went home at the end of the freshman year indicated that he had passed the swimming test and had credit in the course. It seemed as if he had changed his viewpoint.

Then the war came on and Norton called almost at the very outset and was almost immediately sent to the front in France. Then the news came that he was dead—drowned, the report said.

"Tell me about Norton," I said months afterward to one of his college friends who was with him at the time of the accident. "How did it all happen?"

"He was drowned in the Marne while bathing," was his reply. "But he could swim," I said; "he learned in college."

"That was the trouble," was his answer. "He couldn't swim a stroke. When he was in college he got one of the fellows to impersonate him and swim off his credit. If he had been able to swim ten yards he could have saved himself."

One night in the latter part of last week, Detective Ralph Dow of the S. P., noticed a man walking hastily through the yards, acting in a suspicious manner and decided to ascertain the cause for his actions.

On accosting him, the thief, which he proved to be, fired at the officer and beat a hasty retreat. Ralph fired two shots in return, but instead of stopping, the thief fled after dropping a bag which on investigation was found to contain a number of physician's instruments.

Dr. Johnson, it seems, had not made as careful investigation as Dr. Shaver, for Monday morning of this week, in going to his case, he found some of his valuable instruments missing.

Without a doubt, these were taken either before or after the thief's visit to Dr. Shaver and may yet be located if the thief attempts to sell them in any of our neighboring towns.

Attention, Masons! There will be a Special Communication of Carrizozo Lodge No. 41, A. F. & A. M., at Masonic Hall June 5, to which all Master Masons are cordially invited.

Fore!

By "Dad Gum"

The world is surely On the bum The days are dark And drear and glum. My wife to her Mother has sped And swears she's sorry To me she's wed. My landlord is a hollerin' For his rent. I'm sure he knows I haven't a cent. My days are full Of sorrow too. Each morn I rise A feelin' blue, My fliv won't run, And folks say I've Been on an awful bun. A few do say 'He's off his nut,' But they don't know I'm off my putt.

Today's Shortest Story Keep your head down!

A Birdie's wife says that on a golf course he is a hundred per cent go-getter and has more energy than a steam engine, but just as soon as the screen door at home bangs behind him, he could easily take the prize for the peepless wonder and do her best it is all she can do to get him to put on a clean shirt before he eats supper.

Other day I was out to the Golf course ganderin' around as the feller says. And I see a portly old gent ahead of me, who looked as though he were the president of a bank or somethin' dignified like that. Well, sir, he teed up his ball for one of these short holes, kind you shoot with a mashie. He took a swat at the lil' old ball, watched it a minute and then began dancin' arou'd like he were plum nutty with the sun, or had stepped on a snake. I went tearin' over to see if I could do any thing for him, he hollers at me "c'mon," and went tearin' off across country to the green with me right after him. Got over there and he derved if he hadn't made it in one.

City Market Under New Management

The latter part of last week, the management of the City Market changed hands, Mrs. R. G. Skinner assuming the control of affairs. In beginning, Mrs. Skinner adopted the cash-and-carry system as announced in our last issue. She will have no free delivery and states that this saving will be shown in the cheapness of prices which she will announce her ad in this issue. The City Market will carry a full line of choice groceries, as well as a line of fresh and salt meats of the very best. She asks the public to call and investigate her cash prices and be convinced of the saving.

Memorial Day

"Cities That Died of Fear"

The Archaeological Society of El Paso, has planned one of the most interesting motor trips to this part of New Mexico, ever known, from the fact that it will be for the purpose of becoming better acquainted with our people and also to obtain a view of our historic ruins known as the "Gran Quivira."

There will be a barbecue under the direction of Mr. Sweet at the ruins of the ancient city and Mr. Paul F. Walter, author of the "Cities that Died of Fear," will deliver a lecture on the history of the place, as far as is known, and will conduct the study of specimens that may be found during the day.

The party will return to Carrizozo about 6 p. m., for dinner at the Eating House and on Monday, the members of the party may visit the crater of the volcano a short distance from Carrizozo after which they will return to their homes, stopping over at Three Rivers to view the Indian Hieroglyphics at the Fall ranch.

This event will be a big one for Carrizozo and is looked forward to with greatest interest.

Ft. Stanton News

(Fort Stanton Correspondent)

In baseball the Fort was winner in last Sunday's game with Mesalero, with a score of 18 to 5. This should presage a series of victories. On Sunday and Monday, May 30-31, the Clerks of the First National Bank of El Paso are to be with us and both games are expected to be worth seeing. On Saturday night, May 29, the ball team is giving another of their series of dances. The Fort Orchestra, which has attracted so many of late, will play and a good time is assured everyone. A group of ladies from Roswell filled every vase in the hospital on Tuesday with flowers, for which everyone is most grateful.

Appropriate Decoration Day exercises are to be held Sunday the 30th, at which all churches unite and the graves are decorated bountifully.

Dr. Rasmussen, who has been such a factor, both in athletics and the orchestra, as well in every interest at the Fort has received preliminary orders for transfer to Ellis Island Station much to the sorrow of his many friends and to the many activities in which he has taken a most energetic part. Mrs. Rasmussen, also, leaves many friends most sorry to have her go.

Dr. and Mrs. Warner are leaving for Albuquerque on Tuesday. It would be difficult to have had more friends express sadness at their departure and well wishes for them wherever they may go in the years to come. Receptions in their honor have been continuous starting with a community tea and card party at which a beautiful silver bouquet holder was presented them by all at the Fort.

Over the 30th, many are leaving for the three day's outing, among them Mesdames Berry, Jean and the Misses Green Diener and possibly Miss Rice, for a trip to Carlsbad Cave.

Beginning Tuesday, June 1st, Dr. Tappan will be Commanding Officer. During their short stay here both Dr. and Mrs. Tappan have become so cordially received by everyone and have entered so earnestly into every interest and welfare at the Fort that we look forward to a most delightful and valuable time for everyone, patients and personnel alike.

Jones-Crouch

On May 21, at Frederick, Okla., Eb. K. Jones and Miss Helen C. Crouch were united in marriage, at the home of the bride.

The bride taught school here for one term several years ago, and during her stay among us, gained many lasting friends, and incidentally, it was here that the groom became acquainted with Miss Crouch, said acquaintances being a fore-runner of the above life contract.

The groom is a Carrizozo boy, was at one time fireman for the E. P. & S. W., now the S. P. Not long before leaving here, Eb. stood a splendid examination for engineer. His sisters, Mrs. R. R. Sale and Miss Grace Jones are still residents of this place.

Mr. Jones is now in the employ of the Cameron Company in the lumber business, where he is, as he was with the railroad company, a trusted and reliable employee, in Vernon, Tex., where the happy couple will make their future home. The best wishes of their many Carrizozo friends are extended.

Pirate and Socialist

CAPT. CHARLES BELLAMY was a man of socialistic views who put in practice his belief, that all wealth should be equally divided, by engaging in piracy. He began his career as a wrecker in the West Indies, but finding that this means of amassing wealth was a slow one, he turned to piracy on the high seas.

He obtained a ship—history does not record by what means—and began plundering shipping along the New England and Carolina coasts with an occasional cruise off Newfoundland when the weather and the pursuit by the forces of the law became too hot. Bellamy considered himself a natural orator and never passed up an opportunity to exhibit his gifts, especially when there was the added opportunity of preaching socialism.

Upon one occasion he captured a sloop and when its commander, Captain Beer, pleaded for its return after its cargo had been seized by the pirates, Bellamy harangued him thus: "I am sorry that you can't have your sloop again, for I scorn to do anyone any mischief—when it is not to my advantage—though you are a sneaking puppy, and so are all those who will submit to be governed by laws which rich men have made for their own security. For the cowardly whelps have not the courage to defend otherwise what they got by their knavery. But don't go altogether for a pack of crafty rascals, and you, who serve them, for a parcel of hen-hearted numskulls! They vilify us, the scoundrels do, when there is the only difference that they rob the poor under the cover of the law, forsooth, and we plunder the rich under the protection of our own courage. Had you not better join us than sneak after those villains?"

IN THE spring of 1867, only two years after the war between the states was ended, there was published in a New York newspaper a short paragraph which reported that "the women of Columbus, Miss., have shown themselves impartial in their offerings made to the memory of the dead. They strewed flowers alike on the graves of the Confederate and of the National soldiers."

The heart of the whole country thrilled to this brief announcement, says the New York Times. For, as far as we can ascertain now, it was probably the first unselfish effort of the kind toward healing the wounds of a nation which for four years had been fiercely engaged in one of the most terrible conflicts known to history.

While little has been written or published regarding the origin and development of Memorial Day, this small newspaper item, reporting the action of this group of Southern women, at least should have some mention in any history of this holiday. For a year it had no direct results, but in May, 1868, Adj. Gen. N. S. Chipman took up the matter with Gen. John A. Logan, then national commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, suggesting that this organization should undertake as a body to have flowers strown on the graves of soldiers at some definite date.

Immediately the value of this suggestion was appreciated. Through their legislatures a large number of states set aside May 30 as a legal holiday. So great was the response of the North to the unselfish action of the women of Columbus, Miss., that it struck fire in the heart of a young Ithaca (N. Y.) lawyer named Francis M. Finch, who wrote a poem entitled "The Blue and the Gray," which since has become closely identified with the day. Not long afterward Chauncey M. Depew, in one of his famous addresses, said:

"When the war was over in the South, where with warmer skies and more poetic temperaments symbols and emblems are better understood than in the practical North, the widows, mothers and children of the Confederate dead went out and strewed their graves with flowers; at many places the women scattered them impartially also, over the unknown and unmarked resting places of the Union soldiers. As the news of this touching tribute flashed over the North it roused, as nothing else could have done, national amity and love and obliterated sectional animosity and passion. Thus out of sorrow common alike to North and South came this beautiful custom."

At the first formal exercises, held at Arlington, Va., May 30, 1868, following General Logan's order to the G. A. R., the principal address was delivered by James A. Garfield, 12 years later elected President of the United States. As yet the term Memorial Day, or Decoration Day, had not been linked with the observance, and his address, afterward printed in pamphlet form in Cleveland, Ohio, was simply entitled:

"Oration of Hon. James A. Garfield, delivered at Arlington, Va., May 30, 1868, on the Occasion of Strewing Flowers on the Graves of Union Soldiers."

His Adventure

"That fellow, Hawney, over in Dooper Holler, says he killed 65 rattlesnakes while plowing tither day." At the Mount Pisgah post office stated Tobe King of Sandy Beach.

"Sixty-five rattlesnakes!" exclaimed somebody.

come a national custom." Even in a short ten years after Appomattox, time was doing much to heal old wounds, assuage old enmities. And on the eve of Decoration Day, May 30, 1877, a throng assembled in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, to greet as chief speaker Judge Roger A. Pryor, formerly brigadier general in the Confederate army. Then and there this learned jurist declared to the American people that war, with all the horrors it entails, is made not by soldiers but by politicians.

"In soliciting the participation of Confederate soldiers in the solemnities of this day," he began, "you mean to tender them an overture of reconciliation, to avow your goodwill toward your recent adversaries, and to proclaim your desire for the provocation of peace and fraternal feeling between the belligerent sections."

"By no token more touching and impressive could you make manifest those liberal and patriotic sentiments. To proffer your former foes a share in the simple but pathetic ceremonial by which, on this hallowed anniversary, you symbolize the perennial bloom and fragrance associated with the memory of your departed comrades, and allow us to unite in the homage you render to the fallen heroes of the Union, is indeed so affecting a testimonial of your kindness and magnanimity that we unreservedly yield ourselves to its benign influences and reciprocate, with all the warmth of our ardent Southern natures, the inarticulate but heartfelt aspiration for the reign of peace and good-will over our agitated and afflicted land."

"The bloody business of secession, with all its disastrous consequences, was wholly the act of the professed men of peace—the politicians. They nullified the Constitution, they obstructed the presence of the Supreme court with their factious clamor, they lashed the popular mind into fury over imaginary wrongs. To vindicate the abstract theory of potential secession they challenged an encounter which issued in the irresistible aggrandizement of federal power. To preserve the ideal existence of slavery in the territories they provoked a war which ended in the annihilation of slavery in the states."

The crowds in Brooklyn's Academy of Music could hardly believe their ears when Pryor, with commanding gesture, declared:

the tendency was to engender ill-feeling between the states or impair the stability of the Union. Call the roll of fighting men, whether in the army or the navy, and mark one known to fame who was not the friend of peace, the advocate of conciliation! No blame for that stupendous folly, the war of secession, attaches to the men who bore its brunt."

The former Confederate general paused for an instant, then took a step forward on the great stage of the academy, and with upraised hand placed full blame, as he saw it, for the four years of conflict, using these words: "The politician began it. The soldier ended it."

Pryor lived for 42 years after delivering this address, dying March 14, 1919, at the age of ninety-one. He had seen much of men and of the world at home and abroad. As time passed he became more than ever convinced that great wars are caused by politicians; that the World War of 1914-18 was brought on by self-seeking politicians and selfish traders; and that in this instance, as in others, after such gentry had provoked conflict, it took the soldier and the naval man to end hostilities and re-establish peace.

The Spanish war with its loss of life caused an increase in the numbers of those who observed Memorial Day. And when May 30, 1918, rolled around, with the first harvest of American lives gathered by the Grim Reaper because of the World War, the observance again swung to its full height as a ceremonial of honor, personal sorrow and national gratitude.

In many of the older parts of the country are decorated not only the graves of those who fell in the war between the states, the Spanish war and the World War, but, owing to the influence of patriotic societies, graves are decorated, and reverent mention is made of those who died in other conflicts—the Revolutionary war, in which about 310,000 Americans were engaged; the War of 1812, with 576,223 Americans on land and sea. It is possible, also, that graves are decorated of some who were engaged in the naval war with France when 4,500 Americans manned warships in hostilities lasting from July 9, 1798, until September 30, 1800.

In brief, one historian says, days particularly set apart for ceremonies in honor of the dead, are common to mankind and are well-nigh as old as history itself.

This present year, and probably for many years to come, Memorial Day in every part of the United States will be rededicated to the purposes which hallow it.

Simplicity Marks New Sports Frock

Novel Fabrics Individualize Latest Golf and Tennis Outfits.

A few years ago we should have carefully apologized before presenting sports clothes that were only models from Paris. Indeed, says a fashion writer in the New York Herald-Tribune, it is well known that Paris' original sally into the sports field was undertaken in answer to a demand that came from without—there was no inner urge toward such clothes as far as the Frenchwoman was concerned. But times have changed—the city which once ran far behind New York and London in athletic prowess has now produced a Lenglen, a Borotra and a Lacoste—the French sports frocks, which were once almost pathetic with their awkward frills and furbelows, have now become smart, chic and quite as utilitarian as the most meticulous British sportsman could wish.

There was a lot of early season curiosity over the new spring sports clothes. So much had been said and written about the return of feminine fashions that nobody was quite certain as to just what type the sports frock would follow. In some quarters it was thought that, save for the fair athlete herself, the costume would be eclipsed—others temporized the question by sponsoring a modified sports costume—a hybrid affair that was faintly reminiscent of the genteel late Victorian. Each of these solutions is equally in error.

It is a fact that the sports costume had over-reached itself. Swept into a tremendous popularity in a single season, its vogue increased so spontaneously that it trod in paths which were clearly beyond its province. Smart demoiselles at Nice and Palm Beach wore the same costume for tennis as for the dance. The Coconut Grove might have been a golf link a year ago, as far as costume was concerned; even the impeccable Riviera lost its sense of clothes balance. Indeed, you may trace the present jumper influence in the evening mode directly to the tremendous sports flare of last year.

Reaction Has Come. Again such an unnatural fashion, a reaction was inevitable, and it has come. It affects, however, not the sports costume itself, but merely the extent of its vogue. Introducing the strictly sports frock into an afternoon dress will not be considered smart this spring. As an indispensable item of every woman's wardrobe, it has also passed out of the picture—passed out amid the plaudits of many matrons who heartily disliked the style. It is no longer a prescribed item—its provinces are reduced, and yet in essence Poels has made the sports dress for the new season more appealing, more smart, more tasteful than ever before.

The few frills that are in evidence are necessary concessions to the fair for details so characteristic of the new spring mode. Yet for the most part the frocks are simple—perhaps trig, an excessive word found in no dictionary, better describes them. Interesting Lanvin models are arrayed for tennis—the costumes are a little more elaborate than those worn by Suzanne and Helen at Nice, but for the more casual and social racquet wielder they are in excellent taste. On one model the skirt is of platted crepe de chine, and the jumper is of Jersey kasha in the same shade. This particular outfit is green, but it would be equally attractive in any pastel hue. Another figure adds a striking landscape motif which would be so much appreciated in the galleries as in the courts. Indeed, we should prefer it in the role of spectator. The background of the frock is white crepe de chine, the polka dots are black and the solar streamers and cuffs are of almond green crepe de chine.

golfing suit and a coat. While at first glance they may appear a little too elaborate for the ardent golfer, a closer analysis places them clearly within the pale. Striking they are, each developed in an unusual fabric, but they are entirely too tailored in atmosphere to be classed as of the new feminine variety.

One characteristic is shared by the majority of the French models—the short skirt. Whatever the tendencies to lengthen the skirt in other realms of fashion, for sportswear, be you player or spectator, you must insist on a hemline that goes no farther than the knees.

To the Parisienne, Chanel leads wherever sports clothes are worn. Crepe and jersey cloth are favorite fabrics with her. She has some delectable jumper frocks for the golf links in beige, wine red and lacquer red, besides some in attractive shades of blue. They are made with a plain jumper blouse and platted skirt and worn with a little straight leather jacket of a contrasting shade bound with the fabric of the dress.

A very pretty suit by Paton has a jumper in natural colored jersey wool, made with a small plastron and narrow bow cravat. The plaid skirt is in beige, tomato red and brown, and is platted, the platts being attached to within six inches of the hem.

Low Bottler Heel. No costume is smarter than its slightest detail, and as you fare forth these spring days do not neglect the never more important incidentals of the mode. Purse, bag, gloves, shoes, all are necessary elements of chic, and while fashion is rather liberal as to silhouette, color and material this season, with the lesser details it is showing some decided inclinations.

One or two-strap shoes of kid and the simple pump in the same leather are worn by the majority of French women. The platted kid shoe, so attractive because of pattern and color, is also popular. Sport shoes are fashionable among women of all ages for the morning promenade. On morning and afternoon shoes fully two-thirds of the heels are low, a sign that the "bottler" type of medium height is gradually replacing the Louis XV. As regards evening wear, gold and silver are still to the fore, while some very pretty new brocades in crayon colors have been seen. In the case of day wear, colors must as a rule be discreet; but for evening footwear one may revel in brilliant color schemes.

The handbag the Parisienne carries in the morning hours now, to do her shopping or for a simple walk, may be made of leather and rather big. Some are made of buck leather and are as big as small travelling bags, and they are worn under the arm as a napkin is carried by a waiter. While handbags for morning are enormous, the bags worn with evening frocks are diminutive. They are just big enough to contain the most indispensable thing—a silk handkerchief, or the rouge, powder and lipstick.

Gloves, Turnover Cuffs. Gloves are worn with turnover cuffs. The cuff one really can decorate at home, simply putting a stripe of bright silk on it or a strip of leather of a different shade. Walking shoes have always a sports character, with a low heel and a strong strap, with a buckle at the side.

Umbrellas, sadly needed so often in Paris, are very fanciful at present. The handles are made of ivory or wood, sometimes palated, sometimes carved in the shape of an animal's head. The handkerchiefs which a little while ago were so exceedingly tiny, go now to the other extreme and become huge.

The only evening costume one sees in these days is the classical bandeau which goes straight around the head. For young girls who dance a set, a velvet ribbon with a bit of jewelry on it makes a simple and very tasteful headwear.

Bracelets are more than ever the fashion. You must wear quite a series of them, nearly from the wrist to the elbow. The smartest are shaded rings made of the same stone, or, in instances, of various shades of jade.

Also Represented People

Congressman Sol Bloom was forcibly impressed with the fact that a public official is the servant of the people at a recent gathering in New York city.

"Mr. Bloom was scheduled as principal speaker, but when he arrived a surging crowd blocked the path to the entrance of the building. The representative gently asked the nearest shoulder if he could get through.

"Who're you?" asked the owner of the shoulder.

"I represent the people and am supposed to speak here tonight," explained Mr. Bloom.

"What of it?" growled the would-be member of Mr. Bloom's audience. "I am 'the people.'"—New York Evening Post.

Tired, Lame, Achy?

Are you dragging around with a constant backache? Feel weak, worn and achy; so miserable you can't enjoy a moment's comfort? How about your kidneys? Well kidneys filter off body poisons. But when the kidneys slow up, poisons accumulate and upset the system. Backache is apt to follow, with sharp pains, dizziness and annoying kidney irregularities. Don't delay! If you suspect faulty kidney action, use Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands—are recommended the world over. Ask your neighbor!

A Colorado Case

Mrs. Bert Smart, 1007 La Due Ave., A. I. A. M. O. S. Colo., says: "My kidneys became disordered. I had pain through my back and I was often so dizzy I could not walk. I saw a doctor and he would have me sit down to keep from falling. Doan's Pills and my kidneys became strong and I was rid of the trouble."

Famous Old Timepiece

Said to be the oldest working timepiece in England, the famous old clock of Iye parish church has been repaired by the generosity of golfers all over the world. One of the finest golf courses in England is at Iye, and many Americans who have played there answered an appeal for money to restore the old timepiece. It was erected in 1515. The pendulum, which may be seen swinging within the church, is 20 feet long. Cannon balls are used for weights.

The TALE of KIDDIE KATYDD

By Arthur Scott Bailey

A QUARREL

KIDDIE KATYDD and Leaper the Locust quarreled so loudly over a message marked "For Mr. Grasshopper" that they soon drew a crowd around them.

"That message for 'Mr. Grasshopper' is certainly meant for me," Kiddie insisted. "You know yourself how you have objected to being called by the name of 'Grasshopper.' Why, only last night you refused to stop when Freddie Firefly shouted it after you."

"I Promise You That I Shall Make Trouble for You."

"You paid no attention when Chirpy Cricket went up to you just as the moon rose this evening and said, 'How-dy do, Mr. Grasshopper!' right in your ear. You have no right to open the message. And I promise you that I shall make trouble for you if you don't mind your own affairs."

"Well, well—what's all this row about, anyhow?" asked a strange voice. It was a newcomer in Pleasant Valley who had just spoken. He elbowed his way briskly through the throng until he reached the center of it, where Kiddie and Leaper the Locust faced each other angrily.

People noticed that the stranger looked as if he had traveled a long distance. And he had a mail-pouch slung over his back. Furthermore, he was enough like Kiddie and Leaper to be a cousin of either one of them.

A person couldn't see his horns, on account of the hat that he wore. When this traveler asked about the dispute, everybody hastened to explain the quarrel to him.

He listened carefully, and when he had heard the whole story he said: "This message—do you know where it is? Do you know who has it now?"

"No!" Leaper, the Locust cried, while Kiddie Katydid echoed the word. "Ah! I thought not!" said the stranger. "I thought not, because I have it in this mail-bag. And now I must confess that I'm puzzled myself; for I don't know which one it's intended for." And he pulled off his hat and began fanning himself with it.

It was perfectly plain to everyone that he was sadly perplexed.

Then Leaper the Locust gave a great shout.

"You're a Short-horn!" he exclaimed. "It can't be that you would have a message for a person with horns like his!" He pointed a scornful finger at poor Kiddie Katydid.

One glance at the stranger's head—now that he had removed his hat—told everybody that Leaper the Locust was not mistaken.

The stranger's horns were short. There was no denying that fact.

"I believe you must be the Mr. Grasshopper I'm looking for," said the stranger.

Then he put his hand inside his mail-pouch and pulled out a letter.

Leaper the Locust made a sudden jump for the message. But he was so eager that he sprang too far. He sailed far over the stranger's head and landed some distance away.

"Hullo! He doesn't want it!" said the stranger. "It must be for you!" And he shoved the message into Kiddie Katydid's willing hands.

Almost immediately Leaper the Locust jumped back again.

But, of course, he was too late.

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At Twenty-one Senator Edge of New Jersey Was a Journal Clerk.

AT THE age of twenty-one I was about to graduate to the position of journal clerk in the New Jersey senate. I served two years in that position, and two years later I was made secretary of that body. For the next three years I held that post.

WALTER E. EDGE.

TODAY—Mr. Edge is the Republican leader of New Jersey as well as being the senator from that state. In 1910 Senator Edge was elected governor of New Jersey with a plurality of nearly 70,000, and 1,500 over this number was the plurality given him when he was elected senator.

As Told by Irvin S. Cobb

AN ECHO FROM 1865

I RATHER guess they have been telling this one ever since the war between the states. Indeed for all I know to the contrary it may date back as far as the first and second Punic wars. For a good story never really dies. It merely goes into retirement for a season or a decade or a century and rises up again when occasion suits with its youth miraculously restored.

Now this present story may be of any age you please, but to the best of my personal knowledge and belief it belongs to our own Civil war period.

I know I first heard it years ago from an old gentleman who had served in a Texas regiment from 1861 to 1865. I had almost forgotten it when here the other day a friend wrote me telling the same yarn and saying that he had it from his father.

The narrative runs that in the last days of the war a ragged, wornout, hungry, half-dead Confederate straggler was limping along a Virginia highway striving to catch up with his command. Where there was a puddle in the ruts he stopped to bathe his bruised and bleeding feet. As he sat at the roadside dabbling his swollen toes in the water a Union skirmisher, well fed and lusty, stepped from behind a tree with his musket raised to his shoulder and yelled out exultantly:

"Now I got you!" "Yas," drawled the Southerner, "an' I'm full of a git you got!"

Great Personages of the Bible

By REV. LEONARD A. BARRETT

Naboth

A HAH was the name of a wealthy king of Samaria, whose palace was built upon land which adjoined the property belonging to one named Naboth. Upon this property there was a very wonderful vineyard which the King Ahab greatly desired. He endeavored to negotiate with Naboth for the sale of the vineyard. Naboth refused to sell it because he prized it very highly, having come into its possession through an inheritance from his father. The refusal of Naboth to sell the vineyard greatly angered the king. He was so angry that he would neither eat nor sleep. Jezebel, his wife, thinking the condition of the king rather serious, and wishing to please him, promised that she would secure the vineyard for him. She secretly sent messengers to the men in positions of political authority, requesting that a fast day be proclaimed, on which occasion Naboth was to be highly honored by having a place near the front line of march. But there were also two messengers especially engaged for the purpose, who were to go before Naboth and at the appointed time were to bear false witness against him. The charge was to be that he cursed the king; therefore had committed treason. Further instructions were given, that as a punishment for his crime he was to be stoned to death. The plan of Jezebel was carried through exactly as she had commanded, for the communications she sent were signed in her husband's name and were sealed with the royal seal. Having succeeded in her vicious scheme she hastened to make known to the king that Naboth was dead and that the way was clear for him to take the vineyard he so much desired.

Convinced of the death of Naboth, Ahab, in the spirit of triumph, went to the vineyard to claim it. As he opened the garden gate he met a man he had not seen for many years. He was a man strange in appearance, ascetic in bearing, and possessed a wonderful power and peace, which was expressed in his face. It was the prophet Elijah. Looking into the face of Ahab, Elijah spoke: "In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine." This was too much for Ahab. His conscience smote him as with a sword at his heart. He lifted up his hands and cried in despair to the aged prophet: "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" Ahab thought he could take possession of the vineyard, but instead he met at the gate of the vineyard an incarnate conscience, which, pointing its finger of condemnation at him, cried: "Thou art a murderer, thou canst not take the vineyard with murderous hands."

There is a story related of a certain king who wore a very valuable ring which gave his finger a sharp prick whenever he was tempted to do something wrong. For a long time he heeded the warning given by the ring, but one day when he desired to commit a very great crime the ring gave him an unusually sharp prick which drew blood to the finger. This so enraged the king that he drew the ring from his finger and threw it away.

It is an easy matter to throw away a mere ring, but it is not so easy to cast aside the warnings and convictions of conscience. Conscience, which George Washington called "A little spark of celestial fire," burns inside the human heart. It is a great beacon light which no one can escape and from which it is impossible for any person to run away. The inner voice of conscience will give us no rest until we have heeded its warning or made amends, to the best of our ability, for our misdeeds. No person can forgive himself.

Expressive Slang Not Found in Dictionary

Picture the kindly Boswell quizzing the Sage of Fleet Street in this wise:

"What sir, may a finale hopper be?"

"Sir, a finale hopper is, not may be, one of the most despised of men. He it is who arrives to partake of an entertainment after all the expenses of the entertainment have been paid."

Such is the definition taken from the vocabulary of the flapperocracy of the day. Here are a few more: Alredale, commonly known as a breed of dog, is to the sophisticated young miss of flapperdom an ugly, unprepossessing man, and an alarm clock is a chaperon; a dimbo, one who patches up quarrels or tries to remove friction; a shifter, one given to grafting; a snuggle-pup, one who frequents petting parties.

What are we to do with such "idiomatic phrases" as the cuckoo's chin, the bullfrog's beard, the butterfly's boots and the pig's wings? There are people simple enough to think that these and more should find place in the dictionary.

Well, who knows but they may some day. Yet, so far we cannot take it seriously. So, in common with hundreds of other words, terms like these are kept on file, and as the years roll on note is taken of the frequency or recurrence of use, and these notes of usage determine whether or not the word shall be admitted to the dictionary.—F. H. Westcott in American Speech.

If you want to buy a car on time

IT is to your advantage to buy the car that you can comfortably afford, on a payment plan that gives you a sure margin of safety.

General Motors has its own finance company, the General Motors Acceptance Corporation, operating the GMAC Plan. Through its service more than 1,000,000 families have purchased cars comfortably out of income.

On August 1 last, the price of this service, which had always been low, was further reduced. And the automobile-buying public is now saving millions of dollars annually as a result of this reduction and the influence of General Motors' leadership.

The purchase of automobiles on time is a universally accepted practice. The car is a utility and it is sound business to conserve capital and use credit. But buy on sound terms and at low rates. Any General Motors dealer will explain the advantages of the GMAC Plan.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

AN ITCHING NOSE

THE idea that an itching nose means that "company is coming," or "a stranger is coming" is now merely a common and widespread superstition. But it was not always thus. There was a time when the nose actually announced the coming of company or a stranger, not by itching, it is true, but by the exercise of those keen olfactory powers which it possessed in the days of our primitive ancestors.

Scientists tell us that primitive man's organs of smell were so well developed in acuteness and kept sharp by constant use, that his olfactory powers were equal, if not superior, to those possessed today by the lower animals remarkable for their gift of scent. Many tribes of savages retain to this day extraordinary powers in this respect. Mr. Caveman was, in all probability, a rather high-scented creature and when he went with a party of friends to visit the dwelling of Mr. Cliffdeweller, if the wind was right, that gentleman could smell him coming a long way off, just as many of the lower animals today "snuff the tainted gale" and become aware of the approach of their enemies before they can see them. Civilization has caused the sense of smell to become atrophied in modern man but though the nose has lost its power it has retained its reputation by means of a popular superstition.

GIRLIGAGS

"Being a man of convictions is nothing to brag about," says prominent Polly, "the rogues' galleries is full of them."

The Hotel Stenographer

Explains the House Detective.

"That's Henry Hammond's son," explained the House Detective. "That's why I do not like him," answered the Hotel Stenographer, looking after a young man who had just given her some dictation. "I have no use for a 'boy who is celebrated because he is somebody's son."

"A lot of sons of famous men loaf around Peacock Alley here in this hotel and several of them have tried to make me. I turn them all down promptly."

"I play with a lot of boys whose fathers I never heard of. Some of them were hod carriers and some of them were preachers; some of them were small-town merchants and some of them were farmers. I never care. I am interested in their jobs, not their ancestry. I never loved a dog because its papa and mama were registered and had been in a bench show. It's the dog I like and nobody can pick out their ancestors, anyway."

"A lot of boys think they can get by in the world because of what their papas did. They may be able to get their shoney that way, but they can't get me."

"I would rather know a boy who had taken a half-nelson on the world and twisted a living out of it for himself. When I am with him I may have to ride in a silver but with good roads everywhere a silver is good enough. I may have to go to the 'movies' instead of having orchestra chairs in a swell theater but the 'movies' are often better than the theater, anyway. I wonder what certain rich boys would have done if they had gone to public school and had a paper route? Would they spend so freely if they knew how hard a dollar is to get? Every boy I play with is a possible husband and I always wonder what father's son would do to make a living if papa's money ran out and I was married to him. Nix! Give me a boy with a union card and a good trade."

Game Commission Making Survey

Santa Fe, May 27 - That mountain sheep, as well as other forms of wild life indigenous to New Mexico can be successfully introduced in the Sandia mountains east of Albuquerque, is the belief of J. Stokley Ligon, game expert who is making a survey of fish and game conditions in New Mexico for the state game department.

According to Mr. Ligon, the Sandia area is already a favorable abode for deer, resident and migratory birds of many species and of smaller wild life, but as a wild life sanctuary is not running true form. To make it function as it should, adequate ground covering in the form of grass and plant life must be restored.

These are needs which the state game department, the U. S. forest service and the state game protective association are aware of and are making an effort to fill.

The New Mexico State Game Commission at a recent meeting went on record unanimously in favor of the passage of the Migratory Bird refuge and Marsh Land Conservation Bill now before Congress, which a majority of the sportsmen of the country, declare demands personal action on the part of every man and woman who values bird life in America. New Mexico national legislators have been asked to support the bill.

The bill provides for acquiring tracts of land or water as game refuges and public shooting grounds by purchase and lease and for the maintenance and improvement of such grounds. Funds for this purpose will be obtained by the sale of federal hunting licenses at one dollar each to hunters of migratory aquatic game birds. Not over 40 per cent of the funds will be used for administration and to enforce this and other federal laws concerning migratory birds, for conducting surveys of proposed reservation sites, for investigating duck sickness and for other essential requirements. Not less than 60 per cent will be used for acquiring refuges.

The law will be administered by the U. S. Biological survey. Provision is made for concurrent administration of refuges and public shooting grounds by the several states whenever so authorized by the state legislature, and no land or water can be acquired in a state without the consent of its legislature.

Farm Home Needs Electric Help Too

Rural homes have suffered somewhat in plans discussed for farm electrification, in the opinion of the Smithsonian Institution of Washington, D. C. The greater emphasis has been placed on applying electric power to farm operations, according to the bulletin of the institution. The great social issue of a home-like farm home has been comparatively neglected.

"On the average farm," says the Smithsonian Institution, "the use of either electric power or of mechanical equipment for replacing animal and human muscular labor in the fields, around the barns, and on the road is growing. The man's effective work by this multiplication of muscular effort is greatly increased, his working hours lessened and the tedium of his labor reduced."

"Usually with the rural woman it has not been thus. She still frequently uses coal oil lamps. By muscle's brawn she still wields the broom, treads the sewing machine, rubs the clothes on a wash-board or hand-operated washing machine, turns the clothes wringer and churn; washes the dishes, carries out the refuse and fetches the water and fuel."

"The house where the wife and mother are drooped can never be a home in the highest sense."

"The only open question in this matter are how the rural consumer can meet the installation costs of the electric equipment and the operating costs of the service; and whether it is better to extend high tension lines or generate electric current on the farm in a small isolated plant."

Tells Best Sizes of Lamps
 The O-E Farm Book, which has been compiled by electrical experts who have carefully studied farmers' problems, recommends the following sizes of electric lamps on the farm:

Horse barn or cow stable, 35-watt Mazda lamps, behind each stall or not more than twelve feet apart.

Hay mow, a 100-watt Mazda lamp.

Stable and granary, a 75 or 100-watt Mazda lamp with a 25-watt lamp near the chute.

Dairy, garage or carpenter shop, a 75 or 100-watt lamp; if used infrequently, a 25-watt lamp.

Sheds or out-buildings, 25-watt lamps.

A REAL HEROINE

Edith May Adams of Barrington, N. J., the first American School girl to be entered as a candidate for the American Youth Award. The American Youth and Teacher Award was established by the Board of Directors of the Sequi-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia as a tribute to the youth and teachers of the nation. Miss Adams is a candidate for the Golden Eaglette, the highest gift in the hands of the Girl Scouts. She was cited recently for exceptional bravery for remaining inside a burning building helping physicians to give first aid treatment to injured firemen.

AMERICAN YOUTH

Elizabeth ('Botty') Clark, 13, of Cedars, Delaware, is one of that state's girl candidates for the American Youth Award, established by the directors of the Sequi-Centennial International Exposition, to be held at Philadelphia from June 1 to December 1 in observance of 150 years of American Independence. If 'Botty' is finally chosen to represent Delaware she will be given a week's trip to the Exposition and to Washington and the White House, where she will receive a medal from the hands of President Coolidge.

Auditors Report

Village of Carrizozo, N. M.
May 1, 1926.

Mr. G. T. McQuillen, Mayor,
Dear Sir:-

In accordance with our engagement we have audited the books and records of the Village of Carrizozo for the period from February 28, 1922 to April 30, 1926 and herewith present our report consisting of a statement of the balances on hand in the various funds at the late of the last audit, February 28, 1922, all receipts and disbursements, by years, up to April 30, 1926 and the balances in the various funds as of this date.

The Post Office Money Orders, the Postal Certificates and currency was verified by personal inspection, and the Bank Balance was reconciled and, allowing for outstanding checks, was found to be in agreement with the book balance.

The receipt stubs of occupation tax, dog tax, water receipts, water and sewer connections, and deposits were all checked as well as all disbursements by warrants and all funds appear to be accounted for, with the exception of 60 cents.

The books seem to have been kept in good order and an accurate account kept of all receipts and disbursements. We would suggest that the Village adopt and use the State form and system for keeping all accounts.

We would also suggest that the Clerk be required to present at each Monthly Meeting of the Board, a report showing the receipts for the month and also the details of all disbursements, together with the balances remaining on hand in each fund.

Exhibit "B" shows in detail the source of all income for each year and also the funds and amounts of all disbursements.

Exhibit "C" shows the balance on hand on February 28, 1922, a summary of the Receipts up to April 30, 1926.

From this is deducted the total disbursements for this period, plus the amount lost in the Bank failure, the remainder being the balance on hand in the various funds on April 30, 1926.

We desire to express our appreciation of the courtesies and assistance extended us in the course of this audit.

Yours very truly,
Palothorpe, Jones & Co.

The figures in detail showing receipts and disbursements and disposition of funds are given with above reports, but the expense required to publish so many figures prevents publication. These detailed reports may be inspected by anyone who will call at the clerk's office for them.

Golf

The following address was delivered at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce held last night at the Wetmore building by Dr. F. H. Johnson, President of the Carrizozo Golf Club and will be published in two installments.

I am very, very happy, my friends, to be able to express to you my enthusiasm for the game of golf, for our golf club organized less than a year ago and for the spirit of friendliness in this town toward the ancient game.

Just how far back the game of golf traces, is not exactly known. It became very popular in Scotland, in the fifteenth century, but it was known and played long before that in some form, though practically, if not officially, the national game of Scotland, it is believed that it did not originate in that country.

The word 'golf' is believed to have been derived from the Teutonic word 'kolbe,' meaning club. Whatever may have been the origin of the name and the play, it still is a great British game. In the Low Dutch language 'kolf' also means club.

In the fifteenth century, golf burst into great popularity in Scotland. The nobles played it, and there are entries showing expenditures for golf equipment for the King in 1503 and on. In fact, in the middle of the fifteenth century, the government had to legislate three different times against the game, though the statutes were openly defied. It was argued that archery was being neglected, and archery was necessary for the defense of the country, while golf did no one good. What military necessity demanded, was not heeded in this case, and the game of golf went merrily on.

Mary, the lovely Queen of the Scots, played golf a few days after the murder of Darnley, which prompted her enemies to accuse her of heartlessness.

Charles I of England, while detained at Newcastle was given a great amount of liberty, and he and his retinue went into the fields and played golf. The clergy and its bishops played the game as well as the nobility and royalty.

In the seventeenth century, legislation was again directed against golf because it interfered with proper observance of the Sabbath. As the legislation did not stop Sunday playing, the King proclaimed that if a man went to church he had a right to proper recreation after, such as dancing, archery, golf, and so forth. If the man had not been to church in the morning, and he was found indulging in recreation afterwards, he was guilty of breaking the law. If such law prevailed in this country today, we should certainly need some enormous jails.

Golf has been sung in verse and prose. Songs, short poems and long ones have been written to and about the game. Thomas Mathison, in 1743, wrote "The Goff," a very long piece of poetry dealing with golf.

In order to enjoy the vogue which it always has in whatever country introduced, or time, there must be some good, clean foundation upon which the game is based. It is well known that nothing that is not essentially and fundamentally good can endure, and its popularity will die quickly. Certainly golf has endured for a long, long period, so protracted that no one can tell when it first was conceived.

It has enjoyed unrivaled popularity always. There must be some reason for this. It must have some basic quality of good which gives it life.

(Concluded next week)

Judging from the way everybody wants to do something for him, the American farmer must be nearly as popular right now as Santa Claus.

THE CLINTONS

Synopsis—Idly fishing Hermans creek, in California, Caleb Warner, civil engineer, and a New Englander, is witness of the end of a coyote pulled down by two whistlers, urged on by a girl rider. Admiring the hounds, he introduces himself, and learns her name is Clinton. With western hospitality she invites him to the ranch to meet her father.

CHAPTER II

El Nido and Padilla

The Rancho El Nido, which means The Nest, was well named. Behind the lee of the tall eucalypts, planted in two rows at right angles, nestled the building of the ranch-house, built in old Californian fashion of adobe brick, red tiled, in the shape of a hollow square inclosing a patio-garden. It was on a rising ground above the stream that ran between trees heavily mantled with wild grapevines.

and goaties, had one sleeve tucked in the side pocket of his coat. "I shall put the formal interrogation, sir," he said to Caleb. "How do you find the West?" "I find it eager. And I like it. We bustle in the East but our ways and means are settled."

"Eager? I like your term. And I am glad you like the West. We shall hope to see more of you." "You have lived here long?" asked Caleb.

"My grandfather settled here in eighteen-forty. He was one of Fremont's cavalry legion. He helped to take California from Pico. He was on the shores of Monterey bay when the British landed from their frigates and found they were too late. My father was then ten years old. I was one when he went back to Virginia and fought in the War of the Secession. For the South. I beg your pardon, sir."

Caleb caught Betty Clinton smiling at him. "Not at all, sir," he answered. "My own grandfather fought for the North. But that was two generations ago. Now I know," he added with an answering smile, "why you, Miss Clinton, called me 'Yank' with suchunction."

"My grandfather used to say," said Clinton, "that he was always cautious when he fought the Yanks but that he downright feared them when it came to business. But you are right, sir. That is all past. I fought in the Spanish war side by side with many gallant gentlemen from New England. One of them was major in my company. If it had not been for him I might have lost more than this." He touched his empty sleeve.

"You held rank, sir?" "I was a captain. It was a volunteer rank. I do not use it now. My sword is a plowshare. I have sufficient souvenirs."

Caleb thought he detected a little bitterness in the reference to the missing limb.

Caleb noticed that Clinton refrained from any query as to his guest's status in the war. Nor did he mention it himself. He was tired of talking about it. The states were full of men who had done as much as he had.

"What are you going to do in California?" asked the girl. "The term civil engineer is a wide one. What does it mean to you? Bridges? Railroads?"

"It was predestined," said Caleb. He struck a match and showed her a seal at the end of his watch chain. On the green stone two parallel zigzags were graven.

"The Zodiac sign of Aquarius, the Water Bearer. It is the eleventh sign and the sun enters it about the twenty-first of January, the day that I was born. So I am a water engineer, both by choice and by predestination."

She gave a little cry as she bent forward to look at the seal. The light of the swift-burning match brought her face out of the darkness like a cameo.

"Isn't that altogether curious and delightful?" she said. "I wonder."

"I don't know what will offer," Caleb said. "I cannot wait too long. I have neither the means nor the inclination to stay idle. I have not had very much practical experience—as such things go—but I should rather tie up with a new enterprise than work with a completed project. Of course, I should like above everything to be able to inaugurate some scheme, plan it, develop it. I must look for my opportunity."

"That is what I should prefer. If I were a man," said the girl, and Caleb sensed a growing approval of him in her tone, and warmed to it. "To create something, to be a Water Bearer, to the thirsty earth or to thirsty people. To make a city grow where none has been, or render dry lands fertile."

"Do you expect to settle out West?" asked Clinton. "To make your home here?" "I hadn't gone quite as far as that," answered Caleb with a smile. "It depends upon whether I get the chance to settle—I mean by that it works opens up. I like the West. I should like to make a home here, I think. I have none elsewhere," he added simply. "I have relatives in the East, and I even own a house out there—but it isn't a home any longer, since both my father and mother are dead."

There are silences that create an atmosphere more sympathetic than the finest choice of phrase. Caleb found himself talking of his plans in greater extension than he would have considered possible to chance-meet, recent acquaintances. He had, he told them, a little money, he had a chance to sell his Massachusetts house that held open indefinitely. This, with his training, and his youth, constituted his capital. At the end of the evening, in his room, the windows open, admitting the fragrance of the patio garden, the subdued chuckle of the overflow from the spring basin, he realized that he had done little but talk about himself and his own affairs.

He wondered whether he had not been a bit of a prig, even a bore. He had shown no appreciation of the girl's femininity, had surely been lacking in even conventional gallantry. Girls, Caleb believed, liked that sort of thing—expected it. Yet, talking to her in the dusk of the veranda had been a good deal like talking to another man. Her intelligence was keen, her interest had not seemed feigned.

Meanwhile, in her own chamber, Betty Clinton came to a favorable conclusion in the same matter. "For a Yank," she told herself, as she arranged her hair for the night in two great, shining braids, "he is quite agreeable—so far. I think I am going to like Caleb Warner."

Caleb decided not to outstay his welcome. He announced his intention at breakfast.

"We shall have to see you again," said Clinton and Betty backed his invitation.

She seemed a little older this morning, appearing, the well-poised hostess in her houseworn. To Caleb, still new to western ways, it was hard to reconcile this housewife person presiding over the silver coffee urn with the rider on the pinto, galloping hard after her hounds to the kill. Yet there was no real discrepancy, no loss of dignity, of sex. And she made the girls that Caleb had grown up with seem suddenly constricted in his recollection.

"You are not to walk down to the train," she told him. "I am sorry that I cannot drive you but I have a lot to do. You shall ride the Don. Padilla will go with you and bring him back. And we are to see you again. Soon."

Caleb was not at all certain of his prowess in the saddle. To his relief the horse turned out to be a natural single-footer, racking along with a smooth motion that left him almost motionless in the saddle. The selection was, he felt, another indication of kindly tact.

Padilla, swarthy, bow-legged, agile, bore signs of battle that had come close to maiming him. The left side of his face was marked with a puckered scar, purple against his brown skin. It ran from eye to chin, a ragged welt that showed where the flesh must have been laid open by a frightful blow. He wore no coat and his sleeves were rolled high. His left forearm was scored with cicatrices. His left side seemed shrunken between hip and shoulder. Caleb was conscious that all down the canyon, Padilla subjected him to a close scrutiny. When directly in front of him he could almost feel Padilla's black eyes boring between his shoulder blades. Despite the unworried recommendation that the Mexican held from his employment at El Nido, Caleb fancied him a better companion for high noon than a dark night.

The trail dipped down towards water level, fording the stream. Caleb reined in to let the Don drink the bright water and Padilla followed example. As they sat side by side the Mexican spoke for the first time.

"Est was here, senior," he said, "that I got these."

He touched his cheek, his left ribs, and tapped his left forearm with a swift gesture.

"Est was a puma, senior. A cougar, a lion of the mountains. Carrajol! Almost eat keel me, Luis Padilla. Knife against claws an' teeth, senior. And the knife ween. Thees knife."

With the same swift deftness he half drew a shining blade from a sheath that was tucked inside the belt of his trousers, then replaced it. The speedy excitation of the Latin convulsed his features. They twisted in a ferocious snarl, they looked as they must have appeared in the actual conflict, Caleb thought.

This Padilla seems to be an intense sort of person. What's his purpose with Warner?

(TO BE CONTINUED.) Early Actresses Actresses appear to have been unknown to the ancients in earliest times, female parts in dramatic performances being taken by males. Actresses appeared on the stage under the Roman empire. The first English actress is said to have been Mrs. Coleman, who performed the part of "Isabella" in De Witt's "Steps of Rhodes" in 1586.

LEAN MIXTURE IS CAUSE OF FIRES

Carburetor Gets Out of Adjustment and Then Mischief Is Done.

"How did your car take fire?" "I don't know, I heard it pop back at the carburetor, and suddenly discovered that it was on fire." "What made it backfire in the carburetor?" "I don't know. We can't find out because the car is a total loss."

This is no imaginary conversation because cars have burned in the past and will again in the future due to backfiring in the carburetor. Cause is Lean Mixture. The most frequent cause is a lean mixture. This means more air in the mixture than usual. The carburetor gets out of adjustment in some way and the mischief is done. A lean mixture is slow-burning. It burns all during the power stroke, all during the exhaust stroke, and it is still burning when the inlet valve opens, admitting the fresh mixture. This takes fire and the flame runs back to the carburetor. If there is any gasoline dripping from the carburetor a heavy vapor is formed, extending under the engine, where it is held by the mud pan. The flame spreads under the engine and soon reaches the tank, melting the connections and releasing a flood of gasoline.

Lean mixture may be due to derangement of the carburetor or a leaky inlet manifold. Spray nozzle too far closed, auxiliary air valve spring too weak or valve stuck open or clogged fuel line are a few carburetor causes. A leaky inlet manifold may be detected by running the engine and injecting oil around the joints. Oil will be sucked in at the leak where the bolts must be tightened or a new gasket installed in place of the leaky one.

Inlet Valve Defects. We now come to troubles of the inlet valve, which indeed are very rare. The valve lifter may be out of adjustment, leaving no clearance, or actually pushing the valve off its seat. If there is little or no clearance the valve will hold compression when the engine is cold, but will leak when the engine warms up, due to lengthening of valve stem, and, of course, popping in the carburetor occurs immediately. Set the clearance at about two thicknesses of newspaper. Occasionally this valve may become stuck, so that it cannot close. This may be seen from the outside, as there will be an unusually large space between the valve stem and lifter.

Electrical troubles now engage our attention. With a single coil and distributor system such as used on the majority of cars there would be some distributor trouble or a short circuit of the distributor wires. See that all wires are properly insulated and wipe all dust from distributor head. If you know how to open the distributor you should wipe out the inside occasionally, using a cloth dipped in gasoline. This will remove all accumulations of dust, which will cause short circuit if allowed to remain.

Sticker on Windshields

One Cause of Accidents Windshield stickers are made the object of the latest campaign conducted by the accident prevention department of the Chicago Motor club. "Chambers of commerce and trail associations, especially in the West, induce tourists to plaster stickers all over their windshields with the result that visibility is decreased and the driver is likely to cause an accident. The collecting of stickers from various sources has become a fad, and should be discouraged. Organizations using this form of advertising should discontinue it for the sake of safety."

The bulletin also condemns the use of stickers on rear windows, for the reason that these stickers disconcert the drivers following, and because unobstructed rear vision is needed by the driver in backing.

CAR GOES 50 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS

R. M. Rapelle and T. C. Copson of London have arrived in this country bringing with them their 7 horse power "Austin" motor car. It is claimed that the motor car will travel 50 miles on a gallon of gas and is capable of a speed of 50 miles per hour. The car carries only 5 gallons of gasoline and is reputed to be the smallest two-passenger car in the world.

Good Way to Sling Hammock for Baby

The county agent in Walsh county, North Dakota, has found a solution for a problem that has perplexed many a mother—what to do with the baby when the family is taking an automobile ride. He describes his apparatus as follows:

"Take two pieces of three-eighth-inch rope, each long enough to reach from one top bow around back of the seat to the other. Into these splice two short pieces to make a rectangle about a foot wide and nearly as long as the car body is wide. Leave ends of rope at the four corners to tie to the four bows on the top.

"Over this rectangle fit a denim basket about two feet long. This will make a very satisfactory hammock and one that can be used at any time of the year. The baby carried in it will be happier than in the mother's lap and the mother will have a pleasant trip."

Adjustable Arm Support Rests Driver of Motor

Most drivers of closed-model cars rest the left elbow on the sash sill to lessen the fatigue incidental to long-distance driving. However, the sill is usually located just a little too high, and is too hard for comfort, and the adjustable padded arm rest shown in the drawing will be found much better. It is made of a piece of sheet metal, bent as shown, with a pad top and a slot in the support. A sheet-metal bracket attached to the side of the body holds a bolt, which keeps the arm rest in position by turning down the wing-nut on the slotted part of the rest. This arrangement allows the rest to be raised or lowered to suit the driver.—G. A. Luera, Washington, D. C., in Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Loose and Rusty Rims Cause of Much Trouble

Loose, demountable rims cause a lot of tire trouble, if not watched carefully. When one of the wedges becomes loose, the rim starts "working" and gradually the other wedges become loose. A "creeping" rim is the result and the valve stem bears the whole strain until it is finally pulled off. Furthermore, these wedges are often tightened up unevenly. This ends in what is referred to as a "wobbly" tire and the tread is worn down prematurely. At other times, motorists pound both the rim and the tire with a hammer to get the rim off or on. The pounding of the rim doesn't do any particular harm, unless it bends the rim, but every blow on the tire may cause a fabric break, and that is very serious. Rusty rims are dangerous, because they corrode tubes, make it hard to change tires and sometimes result in freezing on the tire. Rims should be cleaned at least once every six months. Ordinary paint sometimes placed on the rims after the cleaning process is not good practice, inasmuch as the heat generated by the tires melts the paint and the tire sticks to the rim.

LIVES ON FARM IN OKLAHOMA

Happy Woman Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

In a sunny pasture in Oklahoma, a herd of sleek cows was grazing. They made a pretty picture. But the thin woman in the blue checkered apron sighed as she looked at them. She was tired of cow work in the dairy. She was tired of cooking for a household of boarders, besides caring for her own family. The burdens of life seemed too heavy for her falling health. She had lost confidence in herself.

One day she began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and her general health began to improve. She took it faithfully. Now she can do her work without any trouble, sleep well and is no longer blue and timid. This woman, Mrs. Clara Short, R. R. 9, Box 39, Oklahoma City, Okla., writes: "Everybody now says: 'Mrs. Short, what are you doing to yourself?' I weigh 135 and my weight before I took it was 115. I have taken seven bottles of the Vegetable Compound." Other women who have to work hard and keep things going may find the road to better health as Mrs. Short did, through the faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Ask your neighbor.

Hondurasian

British Honduras, to which Baron Biles has bequeathed 25,000 pounds per annum, is one of the most backward of colonies, and has a long-standing reputation for free-and-easy ways, even in the administration of justice. Some years ago, the story goes, a man whose wife eloped with another, shot his rival and was sentenced to a term of imprisonment for murder. A friend in Jamaica, hearing of his plight, went to Honduras to see what could be done. He found the prisoner, accompanied by a gaoler, transacting his ordinary business at his office. On the friend explaining that he hoped to obtain his release because he had acted within the "unwritten law," the criminal became violently excited and exclaimed: "But no, that is impossible, I have let my house."—Pierre Van Paassen, in Atlanta Constitution.

SUNSET FLAG OVER HEROES

Shot with speckled shadow and gold in the setting sun the Stars and Stripes flies over the myriad graves of America's heroic soldier and sailor dead in the Arlington National cemetery, just outside of Washington. The gnappie, towering over the white gravestones, stands just a few feet from the tomb of the Unknown Soldier with the steel skeletons of Arlington's radio towers in the background.

SPLENDID PLACE OF REPOSE FOR PATRIOTIC DEAD

Great Arlington Cemetery Dear to the Hearts of All Americans.

Since the burial of William Jennings Bryan at Arlington a new public interest has been awakened in that famous national cemetery. The Pathfinder Magazine says it has received hundreds of questions respecting Arlington and its history, the answers to which may well be repeated. Arlington was originally the estate of John Parke Custis, the only son of Martha Washington. When John Custis died, soon after the capture of Yorktown, Washington adopted two of his four children—George Washington Parke Custis and Elizabeth, who is known in history as Nellie Custis. It was George Custis who built the present house known as Arlington house—on the estate inherited from his father. The mansion stands on the Virginia side of the Potomac river directly opposite Washington and commands one of the finest views obtainable of that magnificent city. When the house was built it was in the District of Columbia, but the Virginia portion of the District was ceded to the state in 1846. When George Custis died—in 1857—the estate passed to his only daughter, the wife of Col. Robert E. Lee, who left the place never to return when he took command of the Virginia troops in 1861. Soon after the Lees left federal troops took possession and converted the estate into a camp, using the mansion as headquarters. Later a hospital was established at Arlington. Upon the suggestion of Quartermaster-General Meigs the place was finally converted into a national military cemetery, the first grave prepared being for a Confederate soldier who had died in the hospital. In 1877 George Washington Custis Lee, heir under the Custis will, established legal title to the property; the claim was finally adjusted when the government paid the heirs $100, 000 for the estate. Near the front entrance of the amphitheater is the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

The memorial amphitheater was built under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic. Its double purpose was to commemorate our soldier dead and at the same time provide a fitting assembly place for the thousands who attend services at the cemetery on Decoration day. It has a normal seating capacity of 5,000. There is room for a couple of thousand more in the colonnades, which makes the total capacity 7,000. Inside the amphitheater, just above the speaker's platform, is an inscription which has attracted much attention among visitors at Arlington. It reads: "When we assumed the soldier we did not lay aside the citizen." This sentence was taken from a speech made by George Washington on June 20, 1775, in reply to an address to him from the provincial assembly of New York. He meant, of course, that in becoming soldiers the American patriots had not forgotten their duties and obligations as citizens.

At the end of August, 1925, there were 33,965 persons buried at Arlington. This includes everybody buried in the cemetery. The great majority of them are the dead of the Civil war, although the number includes a few Revolutionary soldiers and many of the Mexican, Spanish-American and World wars. One section of the cemetery is called the "post section"; it is the section where men stationed at an army post are buried. The regular rules do not apply to them. They are each given a lot on which all members of their families may be buried in separate graves irrespective of the number. Another section of the cemetery at Arlington is set aside for colored enlisted men. The graves of colored officers and white officers are not segregated.

Southern Tribute

My home is far from Arlington,
A thousand miles or more;
And born beneath a Southern sun,
I'm Southern to the core;
But when I went to Washington
There seemed to come to me
A nobler love for all the land
From center to the sea.

The mast and anchor of the Maine,
Which seas could never keep;
The hosts of tombs to fire the brain
With love for those who sleep;
The monument to those who died
On blood-soaked fields of France—
Escape a love that shall abide
Through time and circumstance.

The unknown soldier resting there
Beneath a massive tomb
Had fought to lift the world's despair
And break the shadow'd gloom.
They did not ask from whence he came—
Nor seek his past to scan—
They only saw his wounds and scars
And knew he was a man!

They buried him at Arlington
Mid pomp of high degree,
A mile or two from Washington,
Beside the home of Lee.
From North or South, from East or West—
They cared not whence he came;
They only knew he strove the best
Through shot and shell and flame.

So when I went to Arlington
There seemed to come to me
A nobler love for all the land
Than I had thought could be.
And now I weep at Arlington,
And now I smile or pray,
For I at last see Arlington
Was born again today!
—Ben Hunt, in Houston Chronicle.

ROAD BUILDING

SURFACED ROADS BEING EXTENDED

Motorists will have about fifty-nine hundred more miles of hard surfaced road to travel over during 1926 than they had in 1925. Added to the 31,700 miles built in previous years, there are now approximately thirty-seven thousand six hundred miles of concrete on the highways in the United States outside the limits of incorporated cities and villages.

The building of 5,000 miles of concrete highway in a single year establishes a new record and along with the improvement of many other miles of gravel and grading was no small job for the road builders. It involved the use of tremendous quantities of materials and the employment of a great army of workers.

The tendency has been to close the gaps in pavement along the heavily traveled routes in practically every state. Many unpaved sections of important highways were covered with concrete last year and the motorist now will find long stretches of perfect road all the way between the beginning and the end of his trip.

Another feature of the 1925 road construction season was the great amount of highway widening undertaken. Every motorist knows of the congestion of the highways in the vicinity of every large city. A large portion of the work during 1925 was aimed at relieving this condition by widening existing highways or by building new wide roads. Much more work of this nature has been planned for the coming year. It is now the avowed policy of many highway departments to concentrate their efforts at relieving the impossible traffic conditions near our larger cities. The building of four-track and even eight-track roads between some of the larger centers of population is already under way and the time is not far off when traffic will demand wider roads on a great many of the heavily traveled main rural highways.

Every state in the Union contributed to the new mileage of improved roads. Pennsylvania led them all with about eleven hundred miles of new pavement. Illinois lived up to her reputation of being a leader in highway development by completing about eight hundred and fifty miles of concrete.

In the southwest road improvement was exceptionally active. North Carolina has long been known for its highway activities, but the last year has seen practically every other state in Dixie come to the fore with real highway programs.

The East and the Middle West have continued with their progressive highway activities. Missouri and Oklahoma came forward during last year with larger programs than they had ever attempted before.

In the Rocky mountain states and on the Pacific coast highway improvement has proceeded steadily.

Up to County to Obtain Right of Way for Roads

According to state highway officials, there is a distinct tendency of late years for counties to shift the burden of road building and maintenance to the state.

The severance never can be complete because there are certain duties in connection with road creation which counties must perform. It is for the counties to furnish right of way for roads. This is becoming more and more a complicated task because the movement to build highways along the shortest possible line between points is gaining headway.

A third factor in creating new roads is the government. Federal aid will not be given in interstate highway projects where the right of way is not at least sixty feet wide.

Good Roads Notes

Uncle Sam is delivering mail each day on nearly one and a quarter million miles of these highways.

Paved roads are an index to a community's degree of progressive spirit and bespeak active, wideawake and energetic citizenship.

Utah will build 110 miles of road in 1926, according to the state road commission. This construction will cost nearly $1,000,000. The money is largely from the counties supplemented by federal aid.

Maryland's highway signs are regarded by tourists as among the best in the country. Their clarity and simplicity are in marked contrast to those of some states, which resemble medieval maps.

With lower silver prices the problem of widening the highways becomes even more pressing.

The road bond question may be in politics as charged and it would be the first thing that didn't get there, if it wasn't.

More than $26,000,000 was spent on state highway work in Missouri during 1925. Reports show that 822 miles of road were hard surfaced and 286 miles were graded.

Lesson for May 30 JACOB AT BETHEL

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 28:10-22.
GOLDEN TEXT—I am with thee and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest.—Gen. 28:15.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jacob Dreams at Bethel.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jacob's Vision at Bethel.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Young Man's Dreams and Visions.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Place of Vision in Human Lives.

I. Jacob's Flight to Haran.
He fled from an outraged brother. His deceit and cunning got him into trouble. His long exile from home was the result of his selfish ambition. "Whoever a man saveth that shall he also reap." Rebekah made her plea before Isaac for sending Jacob away, stating her fear of Jacob's probable marriage with a daughter of Canaan, when in reality she feared that Esau would kill him. Isaac at once recognized the wisdom of her suggestion. He knew that the success or failure of one's life is largely determined by his marriage. It was clear that if Jacob were to continue in the line of the covenant blessing care must be exercised in his marriage. Besides, it is a parental duty to see that children are well married. Among Christians only marriage in the "Lord is allowable (1 Cor. 7:39). Isaac, alive to Jacob's destiny, issued his command and bestowed upon him the covenant blessing which had come from God Almighty to Abraham (Gen. 17:1). The elements embraced in this blessing are:

- (1) A numerous offspring (v. 3).
- (2) Possession of the promised land (v. 4).
- (3) And everything that is included in the Abrahamic covenant (Gen. 12:1-3 and Gen. 15:1-8).

We should learn from the experience of Jacob.

1. Be sure your sin will find you out.
Jacob deceived his father. He in turn was deceived by his children.

2. That wrong home life has its perils.
Isaac knew that the blessing was to be Jacob's, yet he planned for Esau to have the place of prominence. He was willing for the sake of a little venison to give to Esau that which God had planned for Jacob.

II. Jacob at Bethel.
1. The Lord meets Jacob at Bethel (vv. 10-15).

With a spirit clouded by homesickness on the one hand and by fear on the other, he had a dream that night in which God appeared to him. In this dream Jacob beheld a ladder or stair reaching from earth to heaven, upon which angels were ascending and descending. Above the ladder stood the Lord who spoke to him. This ladder suggests a means of communication between earth and heaven, between man and God. Jesus Christ is the ladder which provides us a means of communication with heaven (John 1:51; 14:6; Heb. 10:19-20). Jesus became a real ladder to us, bridging the chasm between earth and heaven. He was a real man that He might identify himself with the race. He is very God, really divine, that He might lift us up to God and secure a reconciliation with Him. Earth and heaven, man and God, were separated by the introduction of sin, but through Christ a means of intercourse is re-established. This vision suggested to Jacob that the only approach to God was through a mediator. The angels ascending and descending are heavenly messengers which are sent to minister to man through the mediatory work of Christ (Heb. 1:14). God spoke to him from the top of the ladder and assured him that He is the God who entered into covenant with Abraham and renewed the same unto his father Isaac (v. 13). This assurance embraced the following:

- (1) The possession of the land (v. 13).
- (2) A numerous offspring (v. 14).
- (3) The promise of His personal presence and preservation (v. 15).

This promise was fulfilled in a marvelous way with Jacob and is still being fulfilled with his seed.

III. Jacob's Vow to the Lord (vv. 16-22).

He set up as a monument the stone which he had had for a pillow. He named the place Bethel, which means the house of God. Jacob now vowed that since God had so graciously obligated himself to perform all this for him, he would enthrone God as the Lord of his life and give back to Him one-tenth of all that was given to him.

THE KITCHEN CABINET

People have to live first before they can see, and they don't think until they are fed, and one needs always to have had enough turnips to eat in them anything—except food.—Mrs. Wilkins.

FOOD FOR THE DAY

The French are wonderful cooks, but they look with dismay upon our huge, juicy roasts and steaks. Mark Twain said: "There is here and there an American who will say he can remember rising from a European table d'hôte perfectly satisfied; but we must not overlook the fact that there is here and there an American who will lie."

Onion Soup With Eggs and Cream.—Cut up six white onions (thin and fry in a tablespoonful of butter until a light brown. Add a quart of water and a pint of milk. Season with a teaspoonful each of salt and sugar, a dash of red pepper and a pinch of mace. Cook slowly for an hour and strain; beat four eggs until light, add a cupful of cream and a tablespoonful of cornstarch, mixed with a little cold water; cook until the starch is well cooked before adding the eggs, as the soup must not be boiled after adding the eggs or it will curdle.

Jellied Chicken.—Dress, clean and cut up a four-pound fowl. Put in a saucepan with two slices of onion; cover with boiling water and cook slowly until the meat falls from the bones. When partly cooked add half a teaspoonful of salt. Remove the chicken, reduce the stock to three-fourths of a cupful, strain and skim off the fat. Decorate the bottom of the mold with parsley and hard-cooked eggs cut into slices. Pack in the meat, freed from skin and bones, and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Pour over the stock and place the mold under a heavy weight. Keep in a cold place until firm. In warm weather add a teaspoonful of gelatin to the stock.

Merridale Pie.—Take two cupfuls of drained crushed pineapple, one-half cupful of red currant jelly, one tablespoonful of confectioner's sugar, and one stiffly beaten egg white. Mix the pineapple, jelly and sugar and beat vigorously with an egg beater, then fold in the beaten egg white and turn into a baked pastry shell. Sprinkle with one-half cupful of grated coconut and place in the oven until brown.

Baked Chicken With Bananas.—Melt one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add one large onion thinly sliced, cut two young chickens into pieces for serving, cover and cook slowly, turning often; after cooking ten minutes add one cupful of chicken stock and cook until the meat is tender. Remove the chicken, put stock and onion through a sieve and add one and one-half tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour cooked together until smooth. Season with salt, pepper and a bit of cayenne. Arrange the chicken on a platter, pour the sauce around it and garnish the rim of the platter with sliced bananas which have been fried in butter. A teaspoonful of lemon juice and one-half teaspoonful of sugar may be used to taste the bananas while cooking.

Choice Cakes.
When mixing and careful baking are important points in successful cake-making. If the cake is to bake an hour, watch the oven the first quarter or twenty-five minutes to see that it begins to rise; the second quarter it should finish rising and begin to brown; the third quarter it should finish browning and begin to shrink from the sides of the pan; the last quarter finishes the baking. If the cake begins to brown in the first quarter, it will not rise sufficiently, so careful following of this rule will insure a good cake, provided it has been well prepared.

A cake filled with large holes has too much of the rising agency—baking powder or soda and cream of tartar—or it has not been well blended. Careful mixing to thoroughly blend all the ingredients is vital in good cake-making. If a cake cracks open in the middle, humping itself up into an unsightly shaped loaf, it may be caused from too hot an oven or too much flour. The first five minutes in the oven a cake may be turned and shifted without injury, but after that leave it until it has fully risen before moving it.

Wedding Cake.—Take one cupful each of white sugar, brown sugar, molasses, coffee and butter. Six eggs, one teaspoonful of soda, two pounds of raisins, one pound of currants, one-half pound each of finely sliced citron and chopped dates, the same of figs, one pound of walnut meats chopped, one-half ounce each of orange and lemon extract, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, nutmeg and allspice. Two cupfuls of chopped apples and salt to taste. Add four cupfuls of flour and steam three hours, then bake one. This fruit cake will keep for months and is better made at least two months before it will be served. Storing the cake first insures a moist, good-flavored cake.

Fox Neatly Changed Places With Hunter

A resident of Middletown, Conn., while driving over a mountain saw a fox near the road. Parking his car the man got out with his gun and started on a long chase. Strangely enough the fox did not stop for the man to catch up to him and after a while the fox was nowhere to be seen. Disappointed and foot weary, the man returned to his auto.

What do you suppose the hunter found on his return to the auto? Something had fallen clean through the top of his car. On the front seat, looking intently at the dashboard with all its "finxins" was Mr. Fox himself. The hunter was so stupefied at the sight that he dropped his gun and ran down the road as fast as his legs could carry him. When he got back with reinforcements the fox had left for parts unknown.—Pathfinder Magazine.

11—"Oh Days" in Putting.
Now comes a point in the mechanics of putting that will cause all kinds of doubt, especially to the beginner. He will find that one day he is putting well and the very next day, apparently using exactly the same methods, he is putting poorly. That must be considered as no fault of the methods which have obtained good results the previous day, but requires some very studious practice.

It is more than probable that the trouble is caused by a change of methods not readily noticed. Begin at the beginning and get the stance you have found most effective. Keep your mental picture of every part of the swing and go through it slowly. Take your stance so that the eyes are directly over the line and try to find just what prevents the club being at right angles to the line throughout the whole swing. It may be you have transferred more of your weight to your right leg. Your right arm may not touch your right thigh and your elbows are akimbo; a position that lets the body sway. The cause may be that the left elbow is held in to the side instead of pointing out toward the hole.

If all these points are looked over carefully and finally found to be correct, there should be a very careful observation of the position of the putter during the back stroke and when it hits the ball. Have a friend watch it, if possible. The putter must be kept low on the back swing. It should barely leave the surface of the ground and should go straight back on this level as far as the wrists will permit. If the practice is indoors, there is no necessity of going back more than a few inches. It being understood that the length of the back swing is regulated to the force necessary in getting the ball up to the hole. The ball must not be hit above the middle of the back in the putt. Theoretically, the right point of contact is just below the middle. This will start the ball with direct overspin and should not start it with any loft.

If this does not locate the trouble, it may come from the eyes or billow condition. If not, it almost certainly is the grip, the subject of another article.
