

HOWE ABOUT—

By ED HOWE

There is no higher morality than that practiced in the great majority of business establishments. There are no more useful men than business men.

When a man refuses to marry a girl because he "is not worthy of her," there is something else the matter.

I never knew a man with proper appreciation of saving for a rainy day that a lot of people were not trying to induce him to change his habits and become a spendthrift.

My contention about dishonesty is that it is universal, and that all who engage in it make a mistake.

I know a man who is a great talker; but his stories are so long he is never able to tell more than two or three a day.

A good many girl children, instead of being brought up to become useful and worthy women are being trained for an all-mindy career.

Masons Perform Dangerous Stunts

At Fresno, Calif., recently, says the Scottish Rite News Bureau, interest in the activity of Las Palmas Lodge caused Alec McLeod, formerly of Fresno, to devise a quick way to get to a Masonic meeting from Portland, where he now resides.

When McLeod finished his work for the day, he jumped into his airplane and made the journey from Portland to Fresno in time for the meeting, which was the annual roll call.

At Elmira, N. Y., according to the Square and Compass, several hundred Masons gathered in Elmira Temple, chose to remain until the degree work was completed in spite of the fact that they were advised that the Temple was on fire.

Returns From Sad Mission

Walter LaFleur, Sr., arrived here Wednesday on 11 from Union City, Indiana, to which place he accompanied the remains of the late S. L. Northlane last week for burial.

Later advices from the Fort Stanton Hospital are that Carol Hightower, victim of the shooting near Alto Wednesday morning, died yesterday morning. The parents have the sympathy of our entire community.

To Make Men Think

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

I'd rather make men think than rule a nation! I'd rather touch their hearts with sentiment than govern all the peoples in creation.

To make men think and, thinking, reach decisions That lift them from the dust toward better things-- Here surely is a program whose provisions Outweigh the might of presidents and kings!

If I can stimulate a man's emotions And so appeal to natural desire, Then can I sway his thoughts and his devotions Or thrill his very soul with ardent fire.

If I can make men think--if I may guide them Along the only way to happiness-- If, as their friend, I walk and talk beside them, My life will be a genuine success.

The State Teachers' Convention which was held at Santa Fe on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of last week was well attended by all of the High School teachers and most of the grade teachers.

The Junior and Senior classes have organized and elected their officers, as follows: Junior class--Raymond Lackland, president; Vera Richard, vice-president; secretary and treasurer. Senior class--Velma Estes, president; Don English, vice-president; Ethel Johnson, secretary-treasurer.

The Seniors received their class pins this week and the members of the Junior class have ordered their class pins.

Miss Delp of Burdett, Kans., is an addition to our high school faculty. She has been with us a month, is well liked and is satisfactory in every way.

There is to be a basketball game between our boys' team and the Corona team in the Community Hall Saturday night. This promises to be a good game and we want every one to come and boost for our home team.

We are glad to have Lahoma and Tennis Bigelow with us again. They have just returned from Tracy, California where they have been attending school.

LOOT!

The Pirate Hero of a Novel ALTHOUGH Capt. John Gow, alias Smith, alias Goffe, had the honor of having an account of his piratical career written by Defoe and ninety years later, as "Captain Cleveland," he was made the hero of a novel by Sir Walter Scott, there was in reality little in his life to justify so much attention.

Gow's career of piracy began with the usual mutiny and he, the second mate, was chosen leader by the mutineers after they had murdered the officers of their ship, the George. Next they renamed the vessel, the Revenge--a favorite name for a pirate ship. It seems--and began a cruise off the coast of Spain, but plundering the shipping of their own country, England, and of Gow's native Scotland.

Then they sailed for Madiera where Gow established friendly relations with the governor by presenting him with a box of Scotch herring. Their next port of call was the Orkney Islands where they sold most of the cargoes of the ships they had robbed.

At Carrizozo Gow landed his men and began plundering the houses of the gentry, after which, in a spirit of bravado, he marched back to his ship with a baggage leading the parade.

After a series of raids along the Scottish coast, Gow and his men were finally captured by his aroused countrymen and taken to London on the British frigate Greyhound for trial. The trial opened at the famous Newgate prison on May 8, 1725. Gow was sullen in behavior and refused to enter any plea, so it was ordered that he be "pressed," the only form of torture allowed at that time.

At the last moment the pirate leader yielded and entered a plea of not guilty. He was found guilty, however, and hanged on June 11. An old chronicle gives the following naive account of the manner of his dying: "As he was turned off, he fell down from the gibbet, the rope breaking by the weight of some that pulled his leg. Although he had been hanging for four minutes, he was able to climb up the ladder a second time, which seemed to concern him very little, and he was hanged again. His body was then taken to Greenwich and there hanged in chains to warn others."

Victim of Cowardly Pot Hunter

In order to make an early start for the first day of deer hunting season, Carrol Hightower, aged 14, son of Wm. Hightower of Alto, saddled his horse and started out at daybreak, but when about four miles from home in the rough mountain country, he was fired on by some fool, who mistook him for a deer. The ball entered the back, tore away a portion of the liver and punctured the intestines. He saw the man who shot him and called to him for help, but instead of coming to his assistance, the shooter vanished into the woods.

Badly wounded as he was, young Hightower managed to get home, after which Dr. Johnson was called and hastened to his side, but the case was such that the Doctor phoned to Fort Stanton and taking the sufferer in his car, drove to the Fort, where medical attention was given him, but according to a statement from Dr. Johnson and attending physicians, there is no hope for his recovery. If the man who shot this boy and then cowardly ran away instead of helping him could be apprehended, he should be made to play ping-pong in the penitentiary for the balance of his days.

Judge Wm. Kimbrell was here this week conducting probate court, returning home yesterday.

STORY FROM THE START

Laurie Devon, successful playwright, but somewhat inclined to wildness, attends the wedding of his sister, Barbara, to whom has been left the great Devon fortune. Laurie had been a gay young chap, but for the last year he has been losing the mark, through the efforts of Barbara.

Bangs nodded, vaguely. His brown eyes were alternately on the bride and on his chum and partner, her brother. He was conscious of an odd depression, of an emotion, new and poignant, that made him understand the tears of Barbara's woman friends. Under the influence of this, he spoke oracularly:

"Weddings are heavily depressing things. What the public wants to see is something cheerful!"

Epstein nodded in his turn. His thoughts, too, were busy. Like many of those around him, he was mentally reducing the spectacle he was watching to terms that he could understand. A wedding conducted on this scale, he estimated, probably represented a total cost of about ten thousand dollars. But what was that to a bride of thirty or forty millions? It was strange her family had left them all to her and none to the boy, even if the boy had been a little wild. But the boy was all right now. He'd make his own fortune if life and woman and the devil would let him alone. He had made a good start already. A few more successes like "The Man Above" would make Epstein forget several failures he had already and uninvitedly produced this season. If he could get Bangs and Devon to start work at once, on another good play—

A little later, in the automobile that whirled him and Epstein out to the wedding reception at Devon house, Rodney Bangs briefly developed the wedding theme.

"I suppose the reason why women cry at weddings and men feel glum is that they know what the bride's in for," he remarked gloomily.

Epstein granted, "You an' me is bachelors," he reminded the momentarily cynical youth. "Ve should vorry."

"What I'm worrying about is Laurie," Bangs admitted.

Epstein turned to him with weakened interest.

"Well," he demanded, "what about Laurie? He's all right, ain't he?"

"His sister has always kept a collar and leash on Laurie," Bangs reminded him, "and Laurie has needed them both. Now she's off for Japan on a four-months' honeymoon. The leash and collar are off, too. It's going to be mighty interesting and rather anxious business for us to see what a chap like Laurie does with his new freedom. His nature hasn't changed in a year, you see, though his circumstances have," he added, slowly. "And all his promises to Barbara are off. His year of probation is over."

Epstein granted again. He was fond of saying that he loved Bangs and Laurie as if they were the sons he had never had; but he was not given to analysis of himself or others, and he had little patience with it. His reply showed a tolerance unusual in him.

"Well, we keep an eye on him, don't we?" he predicted.

Bangs frowned.

"We'll have to do it mighty carefully," he muttered. "If Devon catches us at it, he won't leave us an eye to keep on anything!"

Epstein granted again.

"Ve keep him busy," he suggested, eagerly. "Start him right away on another play. Eh? That's the idea!"

Bangs shook his head.

"That's it," he conceded. "But Laurie has decided that he won't work again, just yet. He says he's tired and wants a few months' rest. Besides, he thinks America will declare war before the winter's over. He's going to volunteer as soon as it does, and he doesn't want any loose ends dragging here, any half-finished plays, for example."

Epstein looked worried. This was serious news. Without allowing him time to recover from it, Bangs administered a second jolt.

"And of course, in that case," he added simply, "I'd volunteer, too."

Under the double blow Epstein's head and shoulders went down. He knew in that moment what even he himself had sometimes doubted, that his boasted love for the boys was deep and sincere.

"Oh, well," he said vaguely, "I guess we meet all that if it comes, eh? Ve needn't go to it today."

At Devon house they found the congestion characteristic of wedding-receptions. A certain line had been drawn at the church. Seemingly no one at all had been drawn in the matter of guests at the reception. All Barbara Devon's proteges were there, and they were many; all the young folks to her clubs; all the old and new friends of her crowded life. Each of the great and beautiful rooms on the main floor of Devon house held a human frieze as a background for the throng of newcomers that grew rather than lessened as the hours passed.

As Bangs and Epstein entered the main hall Laurie Devon saw them over the heads of the crowd and hurried to meet them, throwing an arm across the shoulder of each. He was in a mood both men loved and feared, a mood of high and reckless exaltation.

tion. He liked and approved of his new brother-in-law. The memory of his own New York triumph was still fresh enough to give him a thrill. He was devoted to his partners, and proud of his association with them and their work. But most of all, and this he himself would loyally have denied, deep in his heart he was exulting fiercely over his coming freedom. Laurie loved his sister, but he was weary of the leading strings. Henceforth he could live his own life. It should be a life worth while, on that he had decided, and 't should continue free from the vices of gambling and drinking, of which he was sure he had cured himself in the past year. He had come into a full realization of the folly of these and of the glory of the work one loves. He hadn't the least notion what he was going to do with his independence, but a boundless delight filled him in the prospect of it. Whatever life held he was convinced would be good. Looking down from his slender height on the plump Epstein and the stocky Bangs, he smiled into the sober face of each, and under the influence of that smile their momentary solemnity fell from them like dropped veils.

"Come and see Barbara," Laurie buoyantly suggested. "She wants to say good-by to you, and to tell you how to tuck me into my crib every night. She's going to slip away pretty soon, you know. Bob and I have got her off in an alcove to get a few minutes' rest."

He led them to this haven, of which only fifty or sixty other guests seemed aware, for the room was but comfortably filled. They found Barbara sitting in a high-backed Spanish chair, against which, in her bridal array and her extraordinary beauty, she made a picture that unaccountably deepened the new depression in Rodney's soul. On her train by the side of the chair, the infant Samuel slumbered in peace, like an exhausted puppy.

Warren, hovering near his wife, shook hands with the newcomers and responded to their congratulations. Then, slipping his arm through Laurie's, he drew him across the room to where his sister, Mrs. Ordway, was languidly talking to several of the bride's old friends. He knew that Barbara wanted a final and serious word with her brother's partner. Laurie knew it, too, and winked at the pair like an implacable child as he permitted himself to be led away.

Young Mrs. Warren, whose title was still so new that she looked startled when they addressed her by it, greeted them warmly and indicated the sleeping Samuel with an apologetic smile.

"His mother is lost somewhere in the crowd," she explained. "He has had two glasses of milk, four fat cakes and three plates of ice cream; and he's either asleep or unconscious, I'm not sure which." Her manner sobered. "I'm so glad to have a moment with you two," she said gently. "You know what I want to talk about."

"We can guess it," Bangs smiled at her with the odd wickedness his smile always took on when he spoke to Barbara. To Bangs, Barbara had become a temple at whose portal he removed his earth-stained shoes. "You want us to look after Laurie," he added quietly. "Well, you bet we're going to do it."

She smiled again, this time the rare smile that warmed her face like a light from within.

"Then I shall go away happy," she told them. "And there's nothing more to be said; for of course you both understand that I don't distrust Laurie. How could I, after he has been so wonderful all this year. It's only—" she hesitated—"I suppose it's a life I'm afraid of," she confessed. "I never used to be. But—well, I learned in New York how helpless we are, sometimes."

Rodney's nod was understanding.

"I know," he robustly agreed. "But it's going to be absolutely all right. Be sure of that."

Epstein added his well-meant but none too happily chosen bit.

"Laurie can't get into no scrape we can't get him out of," he earnestly assured Laurie's sister.

Barbara laughed. A circle of newcomers was forming around them.

"We'll let it go at that," she said, and extended a hand to each man. "Good-by. I won't try to thank you. But—God bless you both!"

Under the influence of this final benediction, Epstein waddled over to the corner where Warren, very pale, and Louise Ordway, very much bored, stood surrounded by a group that included Sonya Orloff. Firmly detaching the bridegroom from this congenial assemblage, Epstein led him to one side.

"Warren," he said solemnly. "I got to congratulate you all over again. You got von woman in a million—No, you got von woman in eighty million!"

Warren laughed, rather shakily. Over the heads of the crowd his eyes caught his wife's and held them for an instant.

"Make it a million million," he suggested joyously, and led Epstein to the supper room.

Laurie was there with Bangs and a group of friends, who, having patronized young Devon a year ago, were endeavoring to wipe out the memory of this indiscretion by an excess of friendly attention.

"No," Warren and Epstein heard him say to Mrs. Lytton and Mrs. Kenway. "There's nothing I'd like better than to come—thank you. But I'm going back to New York tomorrow. You see," he added, "this business of marrying off a sister, and attending to all the details and seeing that she conducts herself properly as long as she's in my care, is a bit of a strain. I've got to get back to town and recuperate."

"I suppose you will rest your mind by writing another play?" gushed Mrs. Kenway.

Laurie shook his black head.

"Not a bit of it!" he asserted. "Don't even suggest such a thing before Epstein, there. It sounds abhorrently like work."

Mrs. Kenway's curiosity had a brief and losing struggle with her good breeding.

"Then what are you going to do?" she demanded coquettishly.

The young man pondered, as if considering the question for the first time.

"Well," he said at last, "between you and me, I'm going in for adventure. I intend to devote the next four months to discovering how much excitement a worthy youth can crowd into his life if he makes a business of going after the gay bird of adventure, and finding it, and putting suit on its tail!"

The puzzled countenance of Mrs. Kenway cleared.

"Oh, I see," she said brightly. "You're joking."

Laurie smiled and turned to greet a late guest who had come up behind him. In the little group that had overheard him three pairs of eyes met in startled glances.

"Humph!" said Warren. "Hear that?"

"Nice prospect for us!" muttered Rodney Bangs.

Jacob Epstein looked harassed. A little later he joined the throng in the main hall, and watched the showers of rice fall harmlessly from the polished sides of Barbara's limousine as the bride and groom were whirled away from the brilliant entrance of Devon house.

"She's gone," he said to Bangs as the two men turned and re-entered the still crowded yet suddenly empty house. And he added solemnly, "Believe me, Bangs, on that job she's left us you an' me've got our hands full!"

CHAPTER II

Rodney Loses a Battle

Rodney Bangs, author of "The Black Pearl" and co-author of "The Man Above," was annoyed. When Mr. Bangs was annoyed, he usually betrayed the fact, for his was an open nature.

He was betraying it now. His clear, red-brown eyes were clouded. The

Only Weak Can Find "Refuge" in Suicide

Accounts of suicide in the news are almost always depressing. They lessen one's confidence in the strength of the human spirit. They may arouse pity, it is true, but except in unusual circumstances this is pity based upon a recognition of weakness.

For suicide, speaking generally, is an abject confession of defeat, of complete failure of courage. And it signifies so narrow a vision, so limited an interest, for any man to say that in all the wide world nothing is left for him.

Consider the words Jasper Penitengro, the Norfolk spy, spoke to George Borrow:

"Life is sweet, brother."

"Do you think so?"

"Think not! There's night and day, brother, both sweet things; sun, moon and stars, brother, all sweet things; there's likewise the wind on the health. Life is very sweet, brother; who would wish to die?"

"I would wish to die—"

"You talk like a gargoyle—which is the same as talking like a fool—were you a gargoyle that you would talk wish to die, indeed! A Romanoys chaf would wish to live forever!"

"In sickness, Jasper?"

"There's the sun and stars, brother."

healthy pink of his youthful cheeks had deepened to an unbecoming flush. His wide, engaging grin, the grin of a friendly bulldog, was lacking, and his lips were set tight.

Sitting on a low chair in the dressing room of the bachelor apartment and Lawrence Devon occupied together, Rodney drew on a shoe and stamped his foot down into it with an emphasis that shook the floor. Devon, fastening his tie before the full-length mirror set in the door leading to their common bathroom, started at the sound, like a high-strung prima donna. This was one of Laurie's temperamental mornings.

"What the devil's the matter with you, Bangs?" he demanded, but without ill humor. "Can't you get on a shoe without imitating the recoil of a seventy-five centimeter gun?"

Bangs grunted, drew on the other shoe, and drove his foot into it with increased energy. Laurie looked at him, and this time there was a spark in his black eyes. Very quietly he turned, crossed the small room, and, planting himself in front of his chum, resolutely stared down at the dynamic youth.

"What's the idea?" he demanded. "Are you deliberately trying to be annoying?"

Rodney did not raise his head. His fingers were busy with a complicated knot.

"Oh, shut up!" he muttered.

Laurie's hands in his pockets, remained where he was. Under his continued inspection the fingers of Bangs grew clumsy. He fumbled with the knot, and, having unfastened it, prolonged to the utmost the process of lacing his shoes. He knew what must come as soon as he settled back in his chair. It had been coming for days. He was in for an unpleasant ten minutes. But the situation was one he had deliberately created as the only possible way of bringing about a serious talk with his friend. Now that it was here he was anxious to make the most of it. With head bent and thoughts busy he played for time.

At last, the shoes laced and his campaign mapped out, he sat up and met Laurie's eyes. Their expression of antagonism, temporary though he knew it to be, hurt him. Devon, when he had his own way, and he usually had it, was a singularly sweet-tempered chap. Never before, throughout their year of close association, had he looked at Bangs like that. Rodney knew that he deserved the look. For days past he had deliberately subjected his companion to a series of annoyances, small but intensely irritating.

"Well?" demanded Laurie. "What's the answer?"

"What answer?" Rodney was in the position of a small boy challenged to combat in cold blood. He was experiencing some difficulty in working himself up to the necessary heat for an engagement. But Laurie's next words helped him out.

"You've been making a d-d nuisance of yourself for the last week," he said deliberately. "I want to know why."

Bangs squared his stocky shoulders and rose to his feet. His brown eyes were below the level of his chum's black ones, but the two glances met sharply and a flash passed between them. Under the force of his rising excitement the voice of Rodney shook.

"The reason I've been a d-d nuisance," he said curtly, "is because you've been acting like an infernal fool, and I'm sick of it."

Laurie's lips tightened, but the other rushed on without giving him a chance to reply. The moment was his. He must crowd into it all he had not dared to say before and might not be given a chance to say again.

"Oh, I know what you'll say!" he cried. "It's none of my business, and you're your own master, and all that sort of rot. And I know you're not drinking, and God knows I'm not ass enough to take on any high moral tone and try to preach to you, whatever you do. What gets my goat, Devon, and the only thing I'm worrying about, is this infernal waste of your time and mine."

The girl in the mirror makes her first appearance. Watch for her.

AS TO "button, button, who's got the button," there are none missing this season within fashion's domain. The stylist is not losing sight of a button of any description, employing myriads of them either in a useful or an ornamental way. In consequence, button counters present a scene of unusual animation, for choosing buttons for one's new frock or coat has become a matter of outstanding importance.

The mode smiles approvingly on the practical yet smartly styled cloth frock which buttons up the front like the one shown in the picture. For the eccentric. The picturesque African draped headress happens to be the inspiration of one of the noted French modistes. Another leading designer adopts the Russian effects. All are charming, and are proving popular with lovers of charming millinery this season.

In materials no less of novelty is expressed. Flat furs, notably shaved lamb and spotted calfskin as supple as any fabric, supply another sensation in the millinery story for this season.

Then, too, the prevalence of exquisite beige velours helps turn the tailored twill, flannel or crepe wool frock, self-colored bone buttons are considered good form, or cloth-covered ones if so preferred.

Fashion, however, does not expect one to be unmercifully practical when it comes to the buttons we sew on our frocks and our coats. At the sight of the adorable jeweled buttons which are making their appearance in such great numbers this season, one loses zest for things too utilitarian and prosaic. That is why so many of the pretty crepe and silken frocks fairly sparkle with buttons set in rhinestones. At throat and at girdle link jeweled buttons prove a beautifying touch to many a costume. The velvet frock, which leads all others this sea-attention of the world of fashion into a new trend of thought.

Often velours and flat fur are combined in the newest models in a manner illustrated in two of the hats in this group. Spotted beige and white unborn calf are so interworked as to appear not as a trimming but rather as an intrinsic part of the shape itself.

Each of the hats in this picture feature the fashionable beige color. The smartly styled turban in the upper right corner shows a clever manipulation of the velours. Of course it boasts a rhinestone ornament as do the majority of hats this season.

Draping at its intricate best is accentuated in the high crown of the rib-son, in black or in color, needs no other embellishment to lend to its enchantment if there be link rhinestone buttons positioned advantageously at neck and at waistline.

From buttons to buckles is not a far cry, and if the one does not perform the act of fastening the belt or girdle, the other does. Especially is this true in regard to the popular redingote dress models which are clasped together at the front waistline.

Millinery, ever capricious and always doing the unexpected thing, is giving some extra thrills this season. There is, for instance, the matter of draping which is truly extraordinary. Especially do close-fitting turban styles emphasize the curious and the bon-trimmed hat pictured in the lower left corner of the group shown above.

Concluding this group of stylish hats is a turban most cunningly draped with a drop-side effect and two smart-looking spikes piercing the felt flap most effectively.

Among other imported models using flat fur is a striking African draped model made of alternating rows of black and gray shaved lamb.

Need Standards for Live Stock

Complete Set of Names and Terms to Describe Groups Desirable.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The need for standard market classes and grades of live stock is emphasized by the United States Department of Agriculture in a bulletin which sets forth a standardization program.

"Even since the establishment of central live stock markets," says the bulletin, "there has been considerable confusion, much disappointment, and untold loss and waste, because of the difficulty in describing market transactions in such a way that the producer on the farm or on the range, the slaughterer at some distant packing center, the trader on another market, and the student in his classroom, may understand exactly what happened on the market."

Have Own Standards.

"Practically every live stock market has its own standards, its individual preferences, and its own methods of doing business. All these matters are thoroughly understood by those on the market daily, but when an attempt is made to describe market transactions to some one at a distance, or to one who is unfamiliar with practices prevailing at that particular market, difficulties are encountered."

"Much of the confusion," the department continues, "arises from the fact that a certain set of names and trade terms are rather generally used to describe live stock at all markets. The meaning of the names and terms, however, varies between markets, between individuals on the same market, and frequently with the same individual on the same market at different times and different seasons."

"One result of this variety of definitions of terms and shifting of standards is that producers having shipped live stock to a certain market in the belief that prices were highest there, frequently are disappointed to find that prices actually are higher at some other market which they might have patronized. Frequently live stock is forwarded from one market to another because the shippers believe the second market is higher than the first, when subsequent events show the opposite to be the case. In most instances of this kind the difficulty is due, not to any intention to deceive on the part of anyone, but merely to the fact that the same or similar terms carry different meanings on different markets and when used by different individuals."

Desirable Conditions.

"In view of such conditions it would seem highly desirable to have a complete set of terms and names with which to describe the various groups into which live stock is sorted at central markets and, for such names, definite and fixed definitions which can be understood and interpreted in the same way by producers, shippers, commission men, traders, packer buyers, or anyone else connected with the industry. Such an arrangement must facilitate live stock marketing and tend to eliminate disappointment, loss, and waste."

"The set of standards and definitions for the leading kinds of live stock are published in full in Department Bulletin 1390-D, 'Market Classes and Grades of Live Stock,' copies of which may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C."

Soy Beans Prove Great Value as Swine Forage

Ten years ago soy beans were little grown in Missouri. At that time the college of agriculture was experimenting with hundreds of strains and varieties, trying to determine the economic possibilities of the crop for Missouri farmers and trying to select out of this large number the best strains and varieties.

Today Missouri farmers grow 350,000 acres of soy beans for seed and forage and 500,000 acres in corn for hogging down and for silage. Eighty-five per cent of this great acreage is seeded with four varieties determined by the experiment station to be the best among the hundreds tested.

Man likes a variety of foods and a change in the menu. This applies also to pigs. Change to fresh pasture occasionally.

Farm Hints

- Fire buckets should be kept handy for emergencies.
- Silos should be tight enough to keep the juice in and the air out.
- A good rotation of crops is necessary to maintain soil fertility economically.
- Cement makes a good floor for the chicken house. It is economical, easy to clean, rat proof and durable.
- It is desirable to thoroughly renovate and disinfect the laying pens in the fall before pullets are transferred to them.
- A good way to store seed corn so it will dry well is to nail woven wire fencing on the studding in the barn and tie the corn by the husks to it.

Use Acid Phosphate to Increase Alfalfa

Tried With Satisfactory Results in All Cases.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Farmers visiting the Yuma reclamation project near Bard, Calif., have been impressed with the results obtained by the United States Department of Agriculture in its investigations to determine the causes of the apparent decline in yield of alfalfa hay during the last few years. Simple fertilizer experiments indicated that where alfalfa was making unsatisfactory growth on the Yuma project acid phosphates could be used to very good advantage. Furthermore, preliminary tests indicate that seed production may be materially increased through the application of acid phosphate.

The farmers have tried acid phosphate on their own fields with such satisfactory results in practically all cases that the demand for the fertilizer has increased each year. Approximately 250 tons of 16 per cent acid phosphate was sold to the project farmers in 1924. This is equivalent to 250 pounds per acre on 2,000 acres.

All the tests showed a marked improvement in the growth of alfalfa from applications of acid phosphate. There seemed to be little preference between 16 per cent and 44 per cent acid phosphate, providing equivalent quantities of phosphoric acid were applied. This being the case, says the department, it would appear that the farmer should use whichever over form is the cheaper, based upon the relative proportions of this element.

Great Preventable Loss in Using Common Sires

A great preventable loss in American animal production is in the low quality of the sires used, says the United States Department of Agriculture. In no other phase of animal husbandry is it possible to make such direct, such marked, and such profitable improvement at such slight cost as in the use of superior pure-bred sires.

Records of the beef-cattle breeding work at Sni-a-Bar farms, Jackson county, Mo., furnish examples of the value of a good bull. Common cows to calf to common bulls were purchased as foundation stock for the demonstration farm. These cows were later bred to pure-bred beef bulls. The first-class steers brought $2 a hundredweight more than the common steers.

Since the dams of the two lots were essentially the same and the methods of feeding and marketing were identical, the difference of $2 a hundredweight in their value may be fairly attributed to the superiority of the pure-bred sires used for the first cross as compared to those used on the farm from which the foundation cows were purchased.

At the average of 1,000 pounds live weight for the animals, an increase of $2 a hundredweight in the value at marketing time of the offspring of a pure-bred bull brings an increased value of $240 a year on a crop of 12 calves if it is assumed that the heifers improved equally with the steers.

Lack of Potash Cause of Poor Clover Crops

Investigations in Wisconsin have shown that one of the causes for the decline in various clover crops is lack of sufficient potash. Alfalfa and all of the clovers use large quantities of potash, and cannot do their best when there is a shortage of this element. One of the indications of potash starvation in alfalfa is tiny white spots the size of small pin heads appearing on the leaves, while the same thing in clover is indicated by similar yellow and brown spots.

The Wisconsin College of Agriculture, pointing out that it takes four tons of farm manure to supply the potash needed by one ton of alfalfa or clover, says that it is more economical to use a potash fertilizer than to depend upon farm manure to keep up the supply of this element. From one hundred to two hundred pounds per acre of a potash fertilizer is sufficient for clover; alfalfa requires three hundred to five hundred pounds per acre. This may be applied as a top dressing in the spring or fall after the crop is started.

Manure Allowed to Pile Up Loses Its Fertility

There is always a loss when manure is permitted to pile up—be it summer or winter. The loss in the warm months is apt to be heavier than in the case of winter-stored manure except where the latter is held with no protection from the weather. But in summer, whether manure is kept under cover or not, it is certain to lose considerable of its fertility through heating. This is a purely bacterial and chemical change. The most effective way to check it is to keep the waste slightly moistened. But better than this is to get it to the fields if possible. It is no failure in economy to fertilize grass plots which one plans to plow in the fall or following spring. If manure be applied directly to the grasses in small amounts and thinly spread no loss of fertility elements will occur. Distribution is always better than allowing the waste to pile up, although if properly protected it can be held for short periods without serious loss.

A WOMAN'S LOGIC

Mrs. Jones cast an entirely new light—and, it may be, a wholly reasonable one—on the problem of woman's dress the other night. She and Mr. Jones were awaiting callers, and Mr. Jones surveyed her new gown rather critically. "Isn't it a little extreme?" he suggested. "A little short and low cut?"

"Well, I don't know," said Mrs. Jones, "they are coming to see me, aren't they—not the dress?"—Argonaut.

Sense of Superiority

"Why don't you go into politics?" "I am in politics," answered Miss Cayenne. "I cast a vote every time I have the opportunity."

"Why don't you run for office?" "I cling to the idea of feminine superiority. I prefer having a man requesting me to vote for him to being in a position where I would have to request him to vote for me."—Washington-Star.

THROUGH ADVICE OF NEIGHBOR

Woman Tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"A neighbor advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which she said had helped her so much. So I bought a few bottles and tried it out. It sure helped me wonderfully. I felt much better. My work was no longer a dread to me. If I hear of any one who is troubled in the way I was, I will gladly recommend the Vegetable Compound to them and I will answer any letters in regard to the same."—Mrs. BEATRICE MACHAM, 910 Center St., Lansing, Mich.

"I had been sickly ever since I was fifteen years old. After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I got so I could do all my housework and I am in good health."—Miss MAUDE K. WILLIAMS, Ketchikan, Alaska.

From Michigan to Alaska, from Maine to Oregon and from Connecticut to California letters are continually being written by grateful women recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The Compound is made from roots and herbs and for more than fifty years has been helping to restore run-down, over-worked women to health.

Are you on the 1,411st Road to Better Health?

Marjorie—"What do you think John said, daddy, when he told him that when we were married I wanted a city residence, a country place, three autos and a lot of servants?"
Daddy—"Well, what did the paragon say?"
Marjorie—"He said that if I would sleep more on my right side, I wouldn't have such dreams."
Sad dreams are a good sign of poor digestion; when hard-worked stomach begins to complain, the whole system suffers and we have constipation, dyspepsia, offensive breath and similar disorders.

Young Pueblo Mother of 3 Children Relieved of Nervousness, Gastritis, Sluggish Liver.

As Mrs. Anna Stanko, 836 E. Evans Ave., Pueblo, recently said: "Without good health a mother's life is unbearable. Sooner or later she breaks down. I narrowly escaped this plight. For many years I neglected my health. Headaches caused by poisons in my system, due to a sluggish liver, almost drove me mad. I suffered from fainting spells. Everything I ate caused me pain."

"I read what Taniae had done for others and tried it. It cleaned my system, toned up my liver. Now I eat everything without trouble and sleep well. I feel stronger than I have in years. Taniae is a wonderful tonic. It helps build strength, relieves pain and provides good health."

Standard of Cheapness Means Individual Poverty And National Decay

The underlying philosophy of free-trade is fallacious and dangerous and whenever applied in the United States it has proved destructive of national and individual prosperity and has retarded human progress. It sets up cheapness as a standard of perfection in the economic world. No nation ever prospered or progressed with such a standard. Cheapness destroys initiative and prevents development. Benjamin Harrison said "A cheap coat makes a cheap man." The primitive agricultural methods of cutting wheat with a sickle and separating the grain with a flail or by the tromping of animals are cheap, but no progressive nation indulges in those agricultural methods. Handmade goods by old women and little children are cheap. Sweat shop labor is cheap. Coolie labor is cheap. Peon labor is cheap.

Cheap products inevitably mean cheap labor — sweated labor, peonage, ignorant, illiterate labor. Cheap labor means cheap homes and low standards of living. No nation which clings to and false economic standard of cheapness has made any progress during the last 100 years. There are some in Europe, some in Asia, and some in the Central and South America. They are not the abode of prosperity or the dwelling place of contentment. The standards are not those which the American worker and the American farmer choose to follow. Every time the Democratic party persuades the American people to adopt a low tariff, the free-trader's ideal is realized. Everything is cheap under a Democratic tariff and nothing is cheaper than human labor, for millions then vainly seek employment. Farm products are cheap under a Democratic tariff, because they cannot find a market for them at any price. Imported goods are cheap under a Democratic tariff, but the worker without a job and the farmer unable to market his crops has no money, so the bargains of cheaply-made foreign goods are enjoyed only by the rich. Nothing is cheap to the individual who has no money and no source of income.

In his address before members of the Government's Business Organization in January, 1925, President Coolidge said:

"In 1913, the average salary of government employees in the District of Columbia was $1,134. On July 1, 1924, the average salary was $1,749. This shows an increase in the average salary of $615 within this period. This is more than a 54 per cent advance."

Would the Democratic Party economize by reducing the salaries of federal employees to their pre-war Democratic basis? If not, then it has no just criticism of the increased expenditures under this administration and it has no ground for indictment of the present Republican policy of economy.

Route From Grand Canyon to Carlsbad Cave Ready Soon

(St. Louis Post Dispatch) With completion this year of a highway from Grand Canyon National Park, in Arizona, to Carlsbad Cavern, in New Mexico, 730 miles southeast, a new scenic route easily accessible from the main transcontinental highways of the southwest, will be opened to tourists, according to John W. Becker of Springerville, Arizona, vice president of the National Old Trails Association. The new trail, of which approximately 650 miles is graded and the balance of sand-dirt, will provide a direct line of travel through the most picturesque points of Arizona and New Mexico.

Among the points of interest on this route are the Grand Canyon; the Painted Desert; the Petrified Forest National Monument, near Holbrook, Ariz; the Apache Indian Reservation and the White Mountain resort country, the lava beds near Carrizozo, N. M., the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation near Hondo, N. M., and the Carlsbad Cavern, the largest partially explored cave in the world, containing the largest stalagmites and stalactite formations in any known cave.

The Department of the Interior, through the First Assistant Secretary and The Commissioner of the General Land Office has directed the following changes in connection with cancellation of oil and gas prospecting permits and drawings held for such cancellations:

"Hereafter parties desiring to file applications for participation in drawings of this kind be required to allege that they are filing in their own interest and not in the interest of any other person or persons, association, or corporation; or to show clearly in whose interest if not in their own exclusive interest."

It must be stated in each application that the applicant files the same in good faith for his or its own benefit, and not directly or indirectly in whole or in part in behalf of any other person or persons, or if made in the interest of any other person or persons, association, or corporation, a full disclosure thereof must be made, accompanied by a showing of the qualifications of all the interested parties.

Any such application filed that does not meet the above requirements will not be allowed to participate in the drawings when held. Any applicant who fails to disclose any and all interests other than his own which shall tend to give an advantage in the drawing, will forfeit any claim to a return or repayment of moneys tendered with his application, and subject to permit, in the event that one is awarded to him, to cancellation for fraud.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys if Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, get sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, acid stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help keep the kidneys and urinary organs clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

Mary Graham Bonner

THE EMPTY MIND

Now Mahalla hadn't a thought in her head. Not one. At least that was what she said. She was sure she couldn't think up anything to write for her composition class, and she was sure she couldn't think what she had learned in school the day before about kings and queens and presidents and other important personages.

"I've just got an empty head," she said half aloud as she leaned over the table upon which were her school books, her composition book, her pad and her box of pencils.

"Ha, ha, ha," said a little creature, and there before her stood a funny looking little object who quite closely resembled a pencil and yet she felt sure must be a brownie.

He was dressed in brown and his feet looked like lead and his cap was made of red rubber. Down the front of his brown suit were the words: "Use me when you think."

"But the trouble is, I don't," said Mahalla.

"Well, you can read, at any rate," said the little brownie. "You read the words I have upon my suit."

"Oh, yes," said Mahalla. "I can read."

"You must have thought a little just then," said the brownie, "for you evidently came to the conclusion that there was some trouble about your thinking. And you could not even have decided that without at least a little bit of a thought."

"Well," said Mahalla, "very, very little."

"I don't believe your head can be quite empty," said the brownie.

"Would you like me to shake it and find out? I can tell if it feels empty."

"Oh, I don't believe you could do that with my head," said Mahalla.

"For my head isn't like a coffee tin," "Coffee tin?" asked the brownie.

"Yes," said Mahalla, "my mother shakes the coffee tin to see if it is getting empty, and if she should order more coffee."

"If you go about your head in just the same way," said the brownie. "Shall I try? I won't hurt."

"All right," laughed Mahalla.

Then the brownie came and shook her head.

"It's not empty," he said. "If it were even getting close to being empty, I could hear the few last re-maintaining thoughts rattling around. And if it were quite empty it would be so fearfully light.

A Funny Looking Little Object

"In fact, it's quite well filled."

"I don't see how it's possible," said Mahalla.

"Not only possible but so," said the brownie. "Now let me see, you have to write a composition?"

"Yes, but I can't think of anything to write about. You see it can be about anything, and I just can't think of anything."

"Well," said the brownie, "don't bother to think of anything. Anything is always fearfully, dreadfully annoying. I have trouble with anything myself sometimes."

"Just think of something. Think of your favorite games, your best friends, your favorite season—maybe it's the spring time or the winter or the autumn or the summer, or all four, and if it's one or even all four, you must have your reasons."

"Or think of the dog you would like to have and how you would enjoy him and how you would take care of him if you had him."

"Or think of the day your father put up the old automobile tire as a swing and how you felt swinging in such a new kind of swing."

"Just think of something and you'll be all right. For I find that your head isn't empty at all, and I'm really, in my own quiet way, a bit of a student of heads. It has come from my experience in belonging to the pencil family."

"Then you are a pencil? And not a brownie after all?" asked Mahalla.

But the brownie had disappeared and she was picking up a brown pencil with a rubber at the end, and suddenly she was writing, not only of something, but of many things.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Coolidge Links American High Wages and Prosperity.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, addressing the American Association of Advertising Agencies, and, through the radio, many millions of other citizens, declared that our system of high wages is one of the chief factors in the nation's prosperity. He said it has brought about the "greatest distribution of wealth that the world has ever seen and provides the enormous capacity for the consumption of all kinds of commodities which characterizes our country."

"If we proceed under our present system," he added, "there would appear to be little reason to doubt that we can continue to maintain all of these high standards in wages, in output and in consumption indefinitely and, with our home markets as a foundation, increase our foreign commerce by a greater exchange of those commodities in which we are peculiarly favored for the commodities of other nations in which they have a special advantage. But nothing would appear to be plainer than that this all depends upon the maintenance of our American scale of wages, which is the main support of our home market."

The Chief Executive made an appeal for exact truth in advertising, and complimented the advertising profession for its contribution to a happy and prosperous country, adding that without constant publicity modern business could not be conducted on its present gigantic scale.

SALE of the Chemical Foundation, Inc., of German patents seized during the war, is declared by the United States Supreme court to have been in accordance with the law, authorized by acts of congress and of President Wilson, and therefore valid. The government in its suit had alleged that the price paid for the patents—$271,000—was wholly inadequate and should have been at least $7,000,000. The court finds the Chemical Foundation was properly formed as in effect a public trust for those whom the patents would benefit and for the promotion of American industries and that in the sale of the patents no conspiracy, fraud or deception was established by the government.

IF THE federal trade commission does not object, one of the biggest industrial combinations of recent years probably will be consummated soon. This is the merger of Sears, Roebuck & Co. and Montgomery Ward & Co., the huge Chicago mail-order houses. It is understood an outline of the plan already has been laid before Secretary of Commerce Hoover and that he said his opinion was that the government would consent to the merger. The tentative plan is said to be the formation of a new corporation to absorb the present companies and an exchange of stock of the concern for that of the old ones. The proposed corporation would have assets of about $230,000,000, and an annual business volume approximating $450,000,000. It is estimated the merger would effect a saving of ten to fifteen millions a year in operating expenses. The largest interest in Sears, Roebuck & Co. is held by Julius Roebuck of Chicago and in Montgomery Ward & Co. by the J. P. Morgan-First National bank group of New York.

SENATOR REED was not satisfied with the information concerning the Klan and Indiana's senatorial campaign which he obtained in Chicago and Indianapolis, so in St. Louis he resumed the inquiry, seeking especially more facts concerning a conference of high Klan officials in Washington last January which, it has been asserted, was attended by Senator Watson. It was at this meeting that Walter F. Bossert resigned as grand dragon of Indiana because, according to several witnesses, he would not support Watson.

D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon who is serving a life term for the murder of Madge Oberholtzer, has not yet made public the alleged proofs of political corruption and Klan control in Indiana, but his appeal from his sentence has been filed and his attorney says there will shortly be developments in the case of a startling nature.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI is not having things all his own way in Italy, as has been generally supposed. The opposition to reform the senate which was a part of his plan for a "Fascist state" is so strong that it has been abandoned and the senate will be left unchanged. Instead labor and capital will have representation in the legislative branch through appointments to the chamber of deputies. Three hundred such deputies will be chosen, and the rest of the chamber will be elected by a plurality system. The voters will be given two lists of candidates; one from the Fascist party and one from the united opposition. Representatives of the Fascist corporations as they become experienced in government would become eligible to appointment to the senate.

AS FURTHER information comes concerning the recent earthquake in Armenia the disaster stands out as one of the worst of recent times. The death list increases steadily and may run into the thousands. The city of Leninakan and numerous smaller towns were ruined and probably 100,000 persons were rendered homeless. The Near East relief forces in the Caucasus under the direction of Dr. Joseph Beach are caring for many of the destitute, and the government of Russia has sent a large sum of money for relief purposes. None of the Americans there were killed or injured, and the thousands of orphans for whom they care also escaped unhurt.

PROSPECTS for international reduction of armaments in the near future are mighty poor, and it may be the proposed plenary conference for that purpose will not be held. In the preparatory conference at Geneva last week the delegations of nine of the seventeen nations represented made an official declaration that commercial fleets, trained reserves of armies, navies and air services, and war materials in reserve belong to "war potentials" and therefore are incapable of limitation or disarmament. The nine nations are France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia, Rumania and Argentina. Opposed to them, but in a minority, are Great Britain, the United States, Spain, Germany, Chile, Finland, Sweden and Holland. Both views will be presented to the plenary preparatory committee which is expected to meet in February or March.

EFFORTS of Lawrence Dennis, American charge d'affaires in Nicaragua, to bring peace to that country seem of no avail. The conference of leaders which he called broke up when the Liberals walked out with the declaration that they would continue their revolutionary movement with the aid of Mexico. The United States naval men returned from Corinto to the warship Denver, having been assured that there would be no reprisals against the Liberals there. A permanent neutral zone was established at Bluefields and El Bluff to protect American business. Meanwhile there were several "battles" at as many places between the opposing factions. Mr. Dennis is said to have demanded that General Chamorro, de facto president, quit immediately and that congress be called to install a new president, probably Adolfo Diaz.

REvolutionists in Honduras released a lot of penitentiary convicts and with their aid seized the town of Salva from government forces and burned the courthouse.

BELGIAN money went on a gold basis last week with the creation of a new monetary standard, the belga, which is equal to five paper francs. Supporting the Belgian stabilization program, the United States absorbed half of a $100,000,000 international loan, and, through the federal reserve banks, participated in a credit of $35,000,000.

QUEEN MARIE of Rumania, denying the repeated rumors that her royal husband had ordered her to return home, continued on her way through America. After reviewing the cadets at West Point and admiring Niagara Falls, she moved on into Canada and was enthusiastically received by Toronto, Montreal, Quebec and other cities. One discordant feature was the attitude of the Ukrainians who are numerous in the Dominion. In Toronto they presented a petition protesting against the treatment accorded Ukrainians in Rumania, and in Winnipeg they made formal objection to participation by the Manitoba government in the reception to the queen.

ONE long standing dispute between the executive and the legislative branches of the government was ended last week when the United States Supreme court in a majority opinion upheld the authority of the President to remove executive appointees without the consent of the senate. The court ruled that federal statutes cited to the contrary are void and denied to congress the constitutional right to restrict the President in the removal of officers from posts it created.

The opinion is the result of a suit brought by Frank S. Myers, former postmaster at Portland Ore., who was removed by President Wilson and who sought to recover back salary on the ground that his removal was illegal without the consent of the senate, which had ratified his appointment. Justices Holmes, Brandeis and McReynolds took radical exceptions to the opinion of their colleagues, and in a separate opinion Justice McReynolds declared that the majority views are "revolutionary."

GREAT BRITAIN announced new regulations restricting the export of rubber from Ceylon and Malaya for next year, to go into effect on November 1. By these regulations it appears probable that the coming quarter will see a reduction of the exportable allowance from the present 100 per cent to 80 per cent. The average price of rubber for the current quarter up to October 20 was 20.149 pence (about 40 cents) and the average must exceed 21 pence to justify continuance of the 100 per cent standard of exports.

It is recognized in the rubber market in London that the situation still is dominated largely by the United States and depends to some extent on the growth of the motor industry in America, and that, although in the current year production exceeded consumption by roughly 40,000 tons, such surplus would be none too high if the American motor industry developed as expected.

Everett G. Holt, chief of the rubber division of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in Washington, says in his annual report that defensive measures in the United States against British rubber control have resulted in large savings to the American people.

AROUSED by repeated robberies of the mails, accompanied often by the killing or wounding of postal employees, the government has again put the mails under guard of the marines, who have orders to shoot to kill whenever they see any bandits. Furthermore the "devil dogs" have been armed with the new Thompson machine gun that already has been adopted by the gunmen of Chicago in their gang warfare. It is a formidable weapon, easily handled and capable of firing 400 aimed shots a minute.

REPRESENTATIVES of the United Spanish War Veterans of the Middle West met in Chicago and made plans for a unified legislative program to be presented to the state governments of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri. The legislatures are to be asked for payment of a bonus to every living veteran of the Spanish war and the expeditious to the Philippines and China on the same terms as the bonus to veterans of the World War; the appointment of state commissions of war veterans to administer state institutions caring for war veterans, and the establishment of state military cemeteries. Tax exemption up to $2,500 for veterans will be asked.

APPETIZING DISHES

A Dainty little appetizer which may be used as a garnish to a platter of sliced cold meat is prepared thus: Chop equal parts of apple and celery; to this add half as much chopped pickled beets also finely cut, and a small quantity of chili pepper, with a very little minced onion. Serve on a curled leaf of lettuce and serve one leaf to each. Sprinkle with chopped parsley if liked.

Beef Olives: Cut thin slices from cold roast of beef, chop the trimmings and fat, allowing a tablespoonful of the mixture to each slice of the beef; season lightly with salt and pepper, and pour over the meat, adding a sprinkling of herbs; mix with one-fourth as much crumbs as meat.

Purée of Peas: Cook a pint of tender green peas and put through a sieve; add a tablespoonful of butter mixed with two of flour, cook, add one cupful of milk, heat and whip with a Dover egg beater. Serve at once with a spoonful of whipped cream on top of each bouillon cup.

Roquefort Salad: A most delicious salad is prepared from head lettuce well washed, dried and chilled. Arrange the lettuce carefully in a bowl, sprinkle with broken bits of roquefort cheese. Rub the bowl before adding the lettuce, with a cut clove of garlic, add half a teaspoonful of salt, a few dashes of cayenne, a tablespoonful of chili sauce and one of vinegar, four of olive oil. Mix well and pour over the lettuce, adding more of the dressing if this seems not enough. Serve cold.

Date Soufflé: Wash, stone and chop one-half pound of dates, simmer in one-half cupful of orange juice until very soft, mash and add the whites of four eggs beaten stiff, to which a quarter of a cupful of sugar has been added, with a tablespoonful of lemon juice and a pinch of salt. Pour into a buttered baking dish and bake until well puffed—about thirty-five minutes. Serve hot or cold, with creamy sauce.

A FRIENDLY TAIL

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'D LIKE to be as friendly as— Well, as I'd like to be; I'd like to be the friendly kind. The way folks are to me. I always try to be, and yet a fellow sometimes will forget; I'd like to be as friendly—well As lots of things that I could tell.

I'd like to be as friendly as The friendliest of things. I've really thought about them all. And to my memory clings One friendly thing the friendliest, Yes, friendlier than all the rest; A dog, a friend to never fail— Not all the dog, but just his tail.

I'd like to be as friendly as The wig-wag of delight He gives you when upon the walk He hears your step at night. One short, inquiring sort of bark May greet you first from out the dark; And then he sees you! Then I guess You know what's really friendliness.

I'd like to be as friendly as That friendly bit of fuss. I'd like to greet folks on the road The way a puppy does. Though millions I may never own, For friendliness I would be known, As quick to give a friendly hail As—nor the dog, but just his tail. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

By JOSEPH KAYE

At 21—Lucius M. Boomer, famous hotel man, was juggling packing cases.

"AT ABOUT this time I got a job which has made its debut in Atkin county, its first appearance in Minnesota. This tick should not be confused with the common Minnesota wood tick or the fowl tick of the Southern states. It has the same general appearance, but is a distinct species.

"Later I was offered a job as bookkeeper in a hotel in Florida. I didn't know one thing about bookkeeping, but I accepted the job at once. Then I went out and bought a book and studied like the dickens—days and nights—any time I could get. "It must have been a good book, for I made a fair bookkeeper. Eventually I became the head bookkeeper and cashier for a hotel at St. Augustine.—Lucius M. Boomer."

TODAY—Mr. Boomer is one of the most prominent men in the hotel business. He is the general manager of the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York, the Bellevue-Stratford in Philadelphia, and the New Willard in Washington. Besides this, he is the head of the companies that own these hotels and of companies which own restaurants and hotel supplies firms. One of the latter does a business of $12,000,000 a year. In his youth it was thought that Boomer would be a concert violinist, his playing of that instrument showing exceptional talent. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

CALLING HIM "PARSON"

IN THE word "parson" for the minister or the preacher we have a curious example of the strange working of words. For "parson" is a corruption of "person," and in its application to the minister we find a story of theological principle which has been lost sight of in the modern use of the word.

The word "person," as corrupted to "parson," and applied to the preacher, had its origin in the belief that in the person of the priest the church is represented. Among Trinitarians the word "person" had the theological significance of being one of the three modes of being in the Godhead (the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost).

In its early use the term signified a Catholic priest as well as a Protestant minister. But today we find its use restricted, usually, to the latter. As a matter of fact, the term is employed more in a sense of levity, the man speaking seriously of his pastor being more likely to refer to him as the preacher or the minister than as the "parson." It is in country districts that the term persists, "Parson Brown" being a provincialism with which we are all familiar. (Copyright.)

He'd Had One

In one of the Indianapolis high schools an English instructor was discussing with a literature class the author's ideals as judged from his book. Wishing to bring the idea closely home, she said: "All of us have our ideals, and our ideals are the best part of us. They bring out the best there is in us. Now, John," she asked, "what is your conception of an ideal?" John blushed to the roots of his hair and stammered: "Well, er—I had one last year, but she left school."—Indianapolis News.

POULTRY

SELECT BREEDING STOCK FOR 1927

Early fall is none too early for poultry keepers to make plans for the 1926 breeding stock, says Cora Cooke, poultry specialist with the department of agriculture, University of Minnesota. A Wisconsin authority has said that the selection of breeders should begin as soon as the chicks are hatched.

Miss Cooke says the following requirements should be kept in mind when breeders are being selected: 1. of a pure breed; 2. high vitality; 3. high producing ability as shown by records or examination; 4. right size and type; 5. conforming as nearly as possible to the proper breed and variety characteristics. "Further information, such as may be obtained by trap-nesting and pedigree, is very valuable," says the specialist. "Absolute knowledge as to how many eggs a hen has laid in her pullet year, how many times she has been broody, and what kind of eggs she lays is a distinct help in selection. But when trap-nesting is not practicable, ordinary examination will achieve results, though in a somewhat smaller degree.

"After selecting the breeders it is important to keep them in the best physical condition for breeding. This calls for comfortable quarters with plenty of room, fresh air and sunshine. The birds should have an ordinary laying ration which will keep them in good flesh without their getting too fat."

Bird Tick Very Serious Menace to Turkey Grower

Dr. W. A. Billings of the agricultural extension service, University of Minnesota, warns turkey growers to be on the lookout for the bird tick which has made its debut in Atkin county, its first appearance in Minnesota. This tick should not be confused with the common Minnesota wood tick or the fowl tick of the Southern states. It has the same general appearance, but is a distinct species.

"The ticks are seen most around the eyes and necks of the young turkeys," says Doctor Billings. "They are very destructive and in one outbreak killed 40 out of 46 poult. There is no successful treatment. The only thing that can be done is to go over the birds once or twice a week by hand and pick off the ticks.

"It is possible these parasites were introduced into Minnesota from wild fowl or through the interchange of breeding stock from other states. The tick appeared in Vermont in 1909."

Teach Chicks to Roost as Early as Possible

As soon as possible chicks should be taught to roost. After they roost the dangers of crowding or piling in the corners is eliminated and a great problem of the poultry keeper is nearing solution. At the earliest opportunity roosts should be installed a foot or eighteen inches above the floor along the back of the house so as to encourage roosting. One should carefully observe the chicks and always provide an abundance of roosting space. The brooder house should be supplied with fresh air so as to afford comfort to the chicks. This discourages their roosting in trees. A good rule is to get the chicks on the roost at the earliest age possible.

Discrimination Against Eggs in Cold Storage

An interesting argument has been going on recently over the question, "When is an Egg Fresh?" Undue discrimination against eggs that have been kept in cold storage has aroused butter and egg dealers to an effort to change the public attitude. One suggestion is that storage eggs should be labeled "Kept Fresh in Cold Storage." It is pointed out that eggs which are placed in cold storage are of the finest quality, being produced in the spring, and may actually be better after several months of keeping than others which are fresh in the present use of that term.

Roosts for Turkeys

A great many of the turkey growers build the roosts about 10 or 12 feet high for the large turkeys and about 5 or 6 feet high for the young ones; around these roosts is built a 3-foot fence with a large gate. When the turkeys get their feed and drink on return from the fields they are driven into this enclosure and the gate shut; in this way dogs, coyotes and other animals are kept away and the turkeys are amply protected against thieves.

Spray for Mites

Mites live in the house, laying low in the daytime, and swarming over the hens at night, sucking their blood and poisoning their sleep with evil dreams. The best way to put a crimp in their game is, first, to scrub the house out thoroughly with strong soap-suds, then spray the walls, roosts and everything else in the house, with a 5 per cent solution of some good caustic disinfectant. Repeat the spraying in three or four days and keep the house clean.

Beyond Him

It was during a tennis match a year or so ago at Chevy Chase, Big Bill Tilden had been running into very poor luck all morning and things seemed to be going from bad to worse when a little old lady stepped up to Mr. Tilden between sets and asked him anxiously, "Will you please tell me when Mr. William Tilden, the great champion, is going to begin to play tennis?" "God only knows, ma'am," replied that gentleman, as he walked sadly back to the court.—New Yorker.

"Best" Manners Always

"Manners," it has been said, "are not like clothes; it is a bad thing to have two suits of them—one for best and one for every day. Wear your best manners all the time; they suffer more from being put away than by constant use. If you keep your best manners for company, they will fit you badly, and your visitor will suspect they were put on for him. Wear your second-best clothes at home if you will, but when it is worth while to be courteous, if not to the people you love best?" Helen S. Dyer.

FLORIDA LEADS RELIEF RECORDS

Heads Major Disasters of 1926. Red Cross Active in 62 Emergencies in Year.

ALSO SERVES FOREIGN LANDS

Preparedness to Cope with Great Disturbances Gives Good Results in Action.

Facing one of the largest rehabilitation efforts of its whole history, as a result of the Florida hurricane, the American Red Cross already had behind it a record of service in 62 disasters at home, up to the close of the fiscal year, June 30, 1926.

When the hurricane struck Florida with such devastation and loss of life, the Red Cross National Headquarters was just congratulating itself that a year had passed without a major disaster within the borders of the country. The destruction in Florida has been tentatively estimated by Director of Disaster Relief Henry L. Baker, of the American Red Cross, in terms of relief work ahead of the organization. This takes into account all sufferers who must be cared for.

Careful surveys by experienced authorities place the injured at 4,000, exclusive of the stricken Gulf Coast cities of Moorshaven and Cloviston. Of the 1,200 injured sent to Miami hospitals, 500 were suffering with major fractures. In two other east coast communities the injured numbered nearly 1,000. The homeless were conservatively estimated at 50,000. Such figures sketch only vaguely the human and material problem which the American Red Cross is still doing its utmost to solve.

For comparison the other outstanding recent disaster, the Midwest tornado of March 18, 1925, can be described in more detail. In that catastrophe the final check showed 800 dead, 3,000 injured and 6,847 families of approximately 30,000 men, women and children rendered homeless. The final relief operations of the Red Cross were brought to a close March 18, 1926, exactly a year from the day the tornado struck five states.

So terrible did the death and destruction impress itself on the experienced Red Cross forces rushed into Florida that Chairman John Barton Payne did not hesitate to call for a relief fund from the whole country of $5,000,000. The Red Cross concentrated every resource in trained personnel on the stricken region.

The New Jersey munitions explosion, in July, while terrible as a spectacle, could not compare with either of these other two disasters in final destructiveness. It gave the Red Cross an opportunity for service in which Red Cross nurses treated 86 injured, and during the height of the emergency fed between 700 and 800 people driven from their homes. More than 400 cases were registered with the Red Cross after the explosion for assistance in regaining their hold on life through rehabilitation work. This latter is a regular part of the Red Cross relief operations in all disasters, and means a task continued long after the country has ceased to think of the occurrence itself.

The year has seen a new measure of disaster relief preparedness inaugurated by the Red Cross, under which a trained reserve of medical and other relief experts is constantly on call for any service. This preparedness justified itself in both the New Jersey explosion, and in the Florida hurricane. In the latter the Red Cross had at call more than 300 experienced disaster workers with a network of prepared Chapters all over the country. This preparedness, constantly demonstrated, is cited as material assurance that the country is better protected today than ever before from the recurring such misfortunes engender.

Had as were domestic disasters in both the last fiscal year and recent months, some of those abroad in the same time have been comparable, especially a flood in Mexico. Altogether the American Red Cross served in the name of the American people to more than 15 foreign catastrophes.

The Tenth Annual Roll Call for membership to maintain such activities will be held from November 11 to 15, and is an opportunity for all to enroll themselves in the American Red Cross.

The GIRL IN THE MIRROR
by Elizabeth Jordan

The graceful writer, Elizabeth Jordan, who has utilized the experiences and observations of her long career as a newspaper woman in New York as a source for fiction plots, is never better than when dealing with romance and adventure in a setting of mystery. Here is one of her most pleasant and satisfactory stories. The characters are delightful, there is a thrill on almost every page and an absolutely unguessable mystery that is not cleared up until the very end.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life Is bound in shallows and in miseries." —Julius Caesar.

Modern writers speak of this "tide in the affairs of men" as the psychological moment. Anything attempted is sure to succeed; that which is attempted at any other moment is likely to fail.

Solomon spoke of the "tide" as a time or season—"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven." No man would plant potatoes in frozen ground and expect them to grow, for winter is not the season for planting potatoes. It is just as hopeless to start a venture at the wrong season as to plant potatoes at the wrong time.

Our inventions show the importance of the "tide in the affairs of men"—whether we call it that or the psychological moment or the right time. It has often been pointed out, that the people of antiquity knew the principle of the printing press, because they stamped coins with a die. There was no need of a printing press during the time when the only material men had for writing on was parchment or vellum or papyrus. When the discovery of a way of making paper afforded the psychological moment, the printing press was invented.

Similarly with aircraft, Leonardo is said to have known the principles of the airplane four centuries ago; but he did not bother building aircraft because there was no development of commerce and industry sufficient to make his century the psychological time for such an invention.

The martyrs to science and to religion were those who attempted to popularize beliefs for which the psychological moment had not yet arrived. How much their deaths had to do with creating the psychological moment we have no means of knowing.

Usually, a man fails to achieve fortune not so much because he cannot recognize the "tide in the affairs of men" as because he is not ready to take advantage of it.

Every twenty years or less we have a financial depression in our country. During this depression stocks and bonds and property usually sell for a fraction of their real value, and the man who has savings has his opportunity to launch forth on the tide that will carry him to fortune. As the Scotch express it, however, "When it rains, the porridge, one seldom has a spoon."
